 And find nought but pride and scorn:
 I have learn'd thy arts, and now
 Can disdain as much as thou.
 Some pow'r, in my revenge, convey
 That love to her I cast away.

SONG.

TO ONE WHO, WHEN I PRAISED MY MISTRESS'S BEAUTY, SAID I WAS BLIND.

Wonder not though I am blind,
 For you must be
 Dark in your eyes, or in your mind;
 If, when you see
 Her face, you prove not blind like me:
 If the pow'rful beams that fly
 From her eye,
 And those amorous sweets that lie
 Scatter'd in each neighbouring part,
 Find a passage to your heart,
 Then you'll confess your mortal sight
 Too weak for such a glorious light:
 For if her graces you discover,
 You grow like me a dazzled lover;
 But if those beauties you not spy,
 Then are you blinder far than I.

A DEPOSITION FROM LOVE.

I WAS foretold, your rebel sex
Nor love nor pity knew ;
And with what scorn you use to vex
Poor hearts that humbly sue ;
Yet I believ'd, to crown our pain,
Could we the fortress win,
The happy lover sure should gain
A paradise within :
I thought love's plagues like dragons sate,
Only to fright us at the gate.

But I did enter, and enjoy
What happy lovers prove ;
For I could kiss, and sport, and toy,
And taste those sweets of love,
Which, had they but a lasting state,
Or if in Celia's breast
The force of love might not abate,
Jove were too mean a guest.
But now her breach of faith far more
Afflicts, than did her scorn before.

Hard fate! to have been once possess'd,
As victor, of a heart
Achiev'd with labour and unrest,
And then forc'd to depart !
If the stout foe will not resign
When I besiege a town,
I lose but what was never mine :
But he that is cast down
From enjoy'd beauty, feels a woe,
Only deposed kings can know.

THE ENQUIRY.

AMONGST the myrtles as I walk'd,
Love and my sighs thus intertalk'd :
" Tell me, (said I in deep distress)
Where may I find my shepherdess ?"

" Thou fool," (said Love) " know'st thou not this,
In every thing that's good she is ?
In yonder tulip go and seek,
There thou mayst find her lip, her cheek.

" In yon enamel'd pansy by,
There thou shalt have her curious eye.
In bloom of peach, in rosy bud,
There wave the streamers of her blood.

" In brightest lilies that there stand,
The emblems of her whiter hand.
In yonder rising hill there smell
Such sweets as in her bosom dwell."

" 'Tis true" (said I) : and thereupon
I went to pluck them one by one,
To make of parts a union ;
But on a sudden all was gone.

With that I stop : said Love, " These be,
Fond man, resemblances of thee :

And, as these flow'rs, thy joys shall die,
Ev'n in the twinkling of an eye :
And all thy hopes of her shall wither,
Like these short sweets thus knit together.'

TO A. L.

PERSUASIONS TO LOVE*.

LET not brittle beauty make
You your wiser thoughts forsake :
For that lovely face will fail ;
Beauty's sweet, but beauty's frail ;
'Tis sooner past, 'tis sooner done,
Than summer's rain, or winter's sun :
Most fleeting, when it is most dear ;
'Tis gone, while we but say 'tis here.
These curious locks so aptly twin'd,
Whose every hair a soul doth bind,
Will change their auburn hue, and grow
White, and cold as winter's snow.
That eye which now is Cupid's nest
Will prove his grave, and all the rest
Will follow : in the cheek, chin, nose,
Nor lily shall be found, nor rose ;
And what will then become of all
Those, whom now you servants call ?
Like swallows, when your summer's done
They'll fly, and seek some warmer sun.
Then wisely choose one to your friend,
Whose love may (when your beauties end)
Remain still firm ; be provident.
And think before the summer's spent
Of following winter ; like the ant
In plenty hoard for time of scant,
Cull out amongst the multitude
Of lovers, that seek to intrude
Into your favour, one that may
Love for an age, not for a day.

* * * * *

For when the storms of time have mov'd
Waves on that cheek which was belov'd ;
When a fair lady's face is pin'd,
And yellow spread where red once shin'd ;
When beauty, youth, and all sweets leave her,
Love may return, but lovers never.

* * * * *

Oh love me then, and now begin it,
Let us not lose this present minute :
For time and age will work that wrack
Which time or age shall ne'er call back.
The snake each year fresh skin resumes,
And eagles change their aged plumes ;
The faded rose each spring receives
A fresh red tincture on her leaves :
But if your beauties once decay,
You never know a second May.
Oh, then be wise, and whilst your season
Affords you days for sport, do reason ;
Spend not in vain your life's short hour,
But crop in time your beauty's flow'r :
Which will away, and doth together
Both bud and fade, both blow and wither.

* I have omitted some lines in the commencement of this poem, as well as in the places marked with stars.—Compiler.

EPITAPH ON THE LADY MARY VILLIERS.

THE Lady Mary Villiers lies
Under this stone: With weeping eyes
The parents that first gave her breath,
And their sad friends, laid her in earth.
If any of them, reader, were Known unto thee, shed a tear:
Or if thyself possess a gem,
As dear to thee as this to them;
Though a stranger to this place,
Bewail in their's thine own hard case;
For thou perhaps at thy return
May'st find thy darling in an urn.

LIPS AND EYES.

In Celia's face a question did arise,
Which were more beautiful, her Lips or Eyes;
"We," said the Eyes, "send forth those pointed darts
Which pierce the hardest adamantine hearts."
"From us," reply'd the Lips, "proceed those blisses,
Which lovers reap by kind words and sweet kisses."
Then wept the Eyes, and from their springs did pour
Of liquid oriental pearl a show'r.
Whereat the Lips, mov'd with delight and pleasure,
Through a sweet smile unlock'd their pearly treasure;
And bade Love judge, whether did add more
grace,
Weeping or smiling pearls in Celia's face.

SONG.

Ask me no more where Jove bestows,
When June is past, the fading rose;
For in your beauties orient deep
These flowers, as in their causes, sleep.

Ask me no more, whither do stray
The golden atoms of the day;
For, in pure love, heaven did prepare
Those powders to enrich your hair.

Ask me no more, whither doth haste
The nightingale, when May is past;
For in your sweet dividing throat
She winters, and keeps warm her note.

Ask me no more, where those stars light,
That downwards fall in dead of night;
For in your eyes they sit, and there
Fixed become, as in their sphere.

Ask me no more, if east or west,
The phoenix builds her spicy nest;
For unto you at last she flies,
And in your fragrant bosom dies.

SIR HENRY WOTTON.

Born 1568.—Died 1639.

A FAREWELL TO THE VANITIES OF THE WORLD.

FAREWELL, ye gilded follies, pleasing troubles;
Farewell, ye honour'd rags, ye glorious bubbles;
Fame's but a hollow echo; gold, pure clay;
Honour, the darling but of one short day;
Beauty, th' eye's idol, but a damask'd skin;
State, but a golden prison to live in,
And torture free-born minds; embroider'd trains,
Merely but pageants for proud swelling veins;
And blood ally'd to greatness, is alone
Inherited, not purchas'd, nor our own:
Fame, honour, beauty, state, train, blood, and birth,
Are but the fading blossoms of the earth.

I would be great, but that the Sun doth still Level his rays against the rising hill:
I would be high, but see the proudest oak
Most subject to the rending thunder-stroke:
I would be rich, but see men, too unkind,
Dig in the bowels of the richest mind:
I would be wise, but that I often see
The fox suspected, whilst the ass goes free:
I would be fair, but see the fair and proud,
Like the bright Sun, oft setting in a cloud:
I would be poor, but know the humble grass
Still trampled on by each unworthy ass:
Rich, hated: wise, suspected: scorn'd, if poor.
Great, fear'd: fair, tempted: high, still envy'd
more:
I have wish'd all: but now I wish for neither Great, high, rich, wise, nor fair; poor I'll be rather.

Would the world now adopt me for her heir,
Would beauty's queen entitle me The Fair,
Fame speak me Fortune's minion, could I vie
Angels with India; with a speaking eye Command bare heads, bow'd knees, strike Justice dumb,

As well as blind and lame, or give a tongue
To stones by epitaphs: be call'd great master
In the loose rhymes of every poetaster;
Could I be more than any man that lives,
Great, fair, rich, wise, all in superlatives;
Yet I more freely would these gifts resign,
Than ever fortune would have made them mine,
And hold one minute of this holy leisure
Beyond the riches of this empty pleasure.

Welcome, pure thoughts, welcome, ye silent
groves,
These guests, these courts, my soul most dearly
loves!

Now the wing'd people of the sky shall sing
My cheerful anthems to the glad some spring:
A Prayer-book now shall be my looking-glass,
In which I will adore sweet Virtue's face.

* An angel is a coin, of the value of ten shillings.

Here dwell no hateful looks, no palace-cares,
 No broken vows dwell here, nor pale-fac'd fears:
 Then here I'll sit, and sigh my hot love's folly,
 And learn t' affect an holy melancholy;
 And if Contentment be a stranger then,
 I'll ne'er look for it, but in Heaven, again.

THE HAPPY MAN.

How happy is he born or taught,
 That serveth not another's will;
 Whose armour is his honest thought,
 And simple truth his highest skill:

Whose passions not his masters are;
 Whose soul is still prepar'd for death,
 Not tied unto the world with care
 Of princes' ear, or vulgar breath:

Who hath his life from rumours freed;
 Whose conscience is his strong retreat;
 Whose state can neither flatterers feed,
 Nor ruin makes oppressors great:

Who envies none, whom chance doth raise,
 Or vice; who never understood
 How deepest wounds are given with praise;
 Nor rules of state, but rules of good:

Who God doth late and early pray,
 More of his grace than gifts to lend;
 And entertains the harmless day
 With a well-chosen book or friend.

This man is freed from servile bands
 Of hope to rise, or fear to fall;
 Lord of himself, though not of lands;
 And having nothing, yet hath all.

ON HIS MISTRESS, THE QUEEN OF BOHEMIA.
 You meaner beauties of the night,
 That poorly satisfy our eyes
 More by your number than your light!
 You common people of the skies!
 What are you, when the sun shall rise?

You curious chanters of the wood,
 That warble forth dame Nature's lays,
 Thinking your voices understood
 By your weak accents! what's your praise
 When Philomel her voice shall raise?

You violets that first appear,
 By your pure purple mantles known,
 Like the proud virgins of the year,
 As if the spring were all your own!
 What are you, when the rose is blown?

So, when my mistress shall be seen
 In form and beauty of her mind;
 By virtue first, then choice, a Queen!
 Tell me, if she were not design'd
 Th' eclipse and glory of her kind?

ACT I.

SCENE I.

Before Tapwell's House.

Enter Wellborn in tattered apparel, Tapwell, and Froth.

Well. No house? nor no tobacco?

Tap. Not a suck, sir;
 Nor the remainder of a single can
 Left by a drunken porter, all night pall'd too.

Froth. Not the dropping of the tap for your morning's draught, sir:

'Tis verity, I assure you.

Well. Verity, you brache*!

The devil turn'd precisian! Rogue, what am I?

Tap. Troth, durst I trust you with a looking-glass,

To let you see your trim shape, you would quit me,
 And take the name yourself.

Well. How, dog!

Tap. Even so, sir,
 And I must tell you, if you but advance
 Your Plymouth cloak†, you shall be soon instructed

There dwells, and within call, if it please your worship,

A potent monarch, call'd a constable,
 That does command a citadel call'd the stocks:
 Whose guards are certain files of rusty billmen,
 Such as with great dexterity will haul

Your tatter'd, lousy—

Well. Rascal! slave!

Froth. No rage, sir.

Tap. At his own peril: Do not put yourself

In too much heat, there being no water near
 To quench your thirst; and, sure, for other liquor,

* Well. Verity, you brache!

The devil turn'd precisian! A brache is a female hound. A precisian is a puritan: a very general object of dislike in those times.—Gifford.

† That a staff was anciently called a Plymouth cloak may be proved by many instances; but the following will be sufficient:
 "Whose cloak, at Plymouth spun, was crab-tree wood."

DAVENANT, Fol. p. 229.—Gifford.

As mighty ale, or beer, they are things, I take it,
You must no more remember; not in a dream, sir.

Well. Why, thou unthankful villain, dar'st thou talk thus!

Is not thy house, and all thou hast, my gift?

Tap. I find it not in chalk; and Timothy Tapwell

Does keep no other register.

Well. Am not I he

Whose riots fed and clothed thee? wert thou not

Born on my father's land, and proud to be

A drudge in his house?

Tap. What I was, sir, it skills not;

What you are, is apparent: now, for a farewell, Since you talk of father, in my hope it will torment you,

I'll briefly tell your story. Your dead father, My quondam master, was a man of worship, Old Sir John Wellborn, justice of peace and quorum,

And stood fair to be custos rotularum;

Bore the whole sway of the shire, kept a great house,

Relieved the poor, and so forth; but he dying, And the twelve hundred a year coming to you, Late master Francis, but now forlorn Wellborn—

Well. Slave, stop! or I shall lose myself.

Froth. Very hardly;

You cannot out of your way.

Tap. But to my story:

You were then a lord of acres, the prime galandant,

And I your under butler; note the change now: You had a merry time of't; hawks and hounds, With cloice of running horses: mistresses Of all sorts and all sizes, yet so hot

As their embraces made your lordships melt; Which your uncle, Sir Giles Overreach, observing,

(Resolving not to lose a drop of them,)

On foolish mortgages, statutes, and bonds,

For a while supplied your looseness, and then left you.

Well. Some curate hath penn'd this invective, mongrel,

And you have studied it.

Tap. I have not done yet:

Your land gone, and your credit not worth a token*,

You grew the common borrower; no man scaped Your paper-pellets, from the gentleman To the beggars on highways, that sold you switches

* Your land gone, and your credit not worth a token,] "During the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and from thenceforward to that of Charles the Second, very little brass or copper money was coined by authority. For the convenience of the public, therefore, tradesmen were permitted to coin small money, or tokens, as they were called, which were used for change." Old Plays, Vol. III. p. 267. These little pieces are mentioned by most of our old writers; their value is not ascertained, but seems to have been about a farthing.—Gifford.

In your gallantry.

Well. I shall switch your brains out.

Tap. Where poor Tim Tapwell, with a little stock,

Some forty pounds or so, bought a small cottage; Humbled myself to marriage with my Froth here,

Gave entertainment——

Well. Yes, to whores and canters, Clubbers by night.

Tap. True, but they brought in profit, And had a gift to pay for what they called for; And stuck not like your mastership. The poor income

I glean'd from them hath made me in my parish

Thought worthy to be scavenger, and in time May rise to be overseer of the poor;

Which if I do, on your petition, Wellborn, I may allow you thirteen-pence a quarter, And you shall thank my worship.

Well. Thus, you dog-bolt,

And thus—— [Beats and kicks him.]

Tap. Cry out for help!

Well. Stir, and thou diest:

Your potent prince, the constable, shall not save you.

Hear me, ungrateful hound! say, did not I

Make purses for you? then you lick'd my boots, And thought your holiday cloak too coarse to clean them.

'Twas I that, when I heard thee swear if ever Thou couldst arrive at forty pounds, thou wouldst Live like an emperor; 'twas I that gave it In ready gold. Deny this, wretch!

Tap. I must, sir;

For, from the tavern to the taphouse, all, On forfeiture of their licenses, stand bound Ne'er to remember who their best guests were, If they grew poor like you.

Well. They are well rewarded

That beggar themselves to make such cuckolds rich.

Thou viper, thankless viper! impudent bawd!—

But since you are grown forgetful, I will help Your memory, and tread thee into mortar;

Not leave one bone unbroken. [Beats him again.]

Tap. Oh!

Froth. Ask mercy.

Enter Allworth.

Well. 'Twill not be granted.

All. Hold, for my sake hold.

Deny me, Frank! they are not worth your anger.

Well. For once thou hast redeem'd them from this sceptre*;

But let them vanish, creeping on their knees, And, if they grumble, I revoke my pardon.

Froth. This comes of your prating, husband; you presumed

On your ambling wit, and must use your glib tongue,

Though you are beaten lame for't.

* Well. For once thou hast redeem'd them from this sceptre:] The Plymouth cloak mentioned in a former page.—Gifford.

Tap. Patience, Froth ;
There's law to cure our bruises.

[They go off on their hands and knees.]

Well. Sent to your mother ?

All. My lady, Frank, my patroness, my all !
She's such a mourner for my father's death,
And, in her love to him, so favours me,
That I cannot pay too much observance to her :
There are few such stepdames.

Well. 'Tis a noble widow,
And keeps her reputation pure, and clear
From the least taint of infamy ; her life,
With the splendour of her actions, leaves no
tongue

To envy or detraction. Prithee tell me,
Has she no suitors ?

All. Even the best of the shire, Frank,
My lord, excepted ; such as sue, and send,
And send, and sue again, but to no purpose ;
Their frequent visits have not gain'd her presence.

Yet she's so far from sullenness and pride,
That I dare undertake you shall meet from her
A liberal entertainment : I can give you
A catalogue of her suitors' names.

Well. Forbear it,
While I give you good counsel : I am bound to
it.

Thy father was my friend ; and that affection
I bore to him, in right descends to thee ;
Thou art a handsome and a hopeful youth,
Nor will I have the least affront stick on thee,
If I with any danger can prevent it.

All. I thank your noble care ; but, pray you,
in what
Do I run the hazard ?

Well. Art thou not in love ?
Put it not off with wonder.

All. In love, at my years !

Well. You think you walk in clouds, but are transparent.

I have heard all, and the choice that you have made ;

And, with my finger, can point out the north star

By which the loadstone of your folly's guided ;
And, to confirm this true, what think you of Fair Margaret, the only child and heir
Of Cormorant Overreach ? Does it blush and start,

To hear her only named ? blush at your want
Of wit and reason.

All. You are too bitter, sir.

Well. Wounds of this nature are not to be
With balms, but corrosives. I must be plain :
Art thou scarce manumised from the porter's lodge,

And yet sworn servant to the pantofle,
And dar'st thou dream of marriage ? I fear
'Twill be concluded for impossible,
That there is now, or e'er shall be hereafter,
A handsome page, or player's boy of fourteen,
But either loves a wench, or drabs love him ;
Court-waiters not exempted.

All. This is madness.

Howe'er you have discover'd my intents,
You know my aims are lawful ; and if ever
The queen of flowers, the glory of the spring,
The sweetest comfort to our smell, the rose,
Sprang from an envious briar, I may infer
There's such disparity in their conditions,
Between the goddess of my soul, the daughter,
And the base churl her father.

Well. Grant this true,
As I believe it, canst thou ever hope
To enjoy a quiet bed with her, whose father
Ruin'd thy state ?

All. And your's too.

Well. I confess it.
True ; I must tell you as a friend, and freely.
That, where impossibilities are apparent,
'Tis indiscretion to nourish hopes.
Canst thou imagine (let not self-love blind
thee)

That Sir Giles Overreach, that, to make her great

In swelling titles, without touch of conscience,
Will cut his neighbour's throat, and I hope his own too,—

Will e'er consent to make her thine ? Give o'er,
And think of some course suitable to thy rank,
And prosper in it.

All. You have well advised me.
But, in the mean time, you, that are so studious
Of my affairs, wholly neglect your own :
Remember yourself, and in what plight you are.

Well. No matter, no matter.

All. Yes, 'tis much material :
You know my fortune, and my means ; yet something

I can spare from myself, to help your wants.

Well. How's this ?

All. Nay, be not angry ; there's eight pieces,
To put you in better fashion.

Well. Money from thee !
From a boy ! a stipendiary ! one that lives
At the devotion of a stepmother,
And the uncertain favour of a lord !

I'll eat my arms first. Howsое'er blind Fortune
Hath spent the utmost of her malice on me ;
Though I am vomited out of an alehouse,
And thus accoutred ; know not where to eat,
Or drink, or sleep, but underneath this canopy ;
Although I thank thee, I despise thy offer ;
And as I, in my madness, broke my state,
Without the assistance of another's brain,
In my right wits I'll piece it ; at the worst,
Die thus, and be forgotten.

All. A strange humour ! [Exit.

SCENE II.

A Room in Lady Allworth's House.

Enter Order, Amble, Furnace and Watchall.

Ord. Set all things right, or, as my name is Order,

And by this staff of office, that commands you,
This chain and double ruff symbols of power,
Whoever misses in his function,

For one whole week makes forfeiture of his breakfast,
And privilege in the wine-cellar.

Amb. You are merry,
Good master steward.

Furn. Let him; I'll be angry.

Amb. Why, fellow Furnace, 'tis not twelve o'clock yet,

Nor dinner taking up; then 'tis allow'd
Cooks, by their places, may be cholerick.

Furn. You think you have spoke wisely, goodman Amble,
My lady's go-before!

Ord. Nay, nay, no wrangling.

Furn. 'Twit me with the authority of the kitchen!

At all hours, and all places, I'll be angry;
And thus provoked, when I am at my prayers
I will be angry.

Amb. There was no hurt meant.

Furn. I am friends with thee, and yet I will be angry.

Ord. With whom?

Furn. No matter whom: yet, now I think on it,

I am angry with my lady.

Watch. Heaven forbid, man!

Ord. What cause has she given thee?

Furn. Cause enough, master steward.

I was entertained by her to please her palate,
And, till she forswore eating, I perform'd it.
Now, since our master, noble Allworth, died,
Though I crack my brains to find out tempting sauces,

And raise fortifications* in the pastry,
Such as might serve for models in the Low Countries;

Which, if they had been practised at Breda, Spinola might have thrown his cap at it, and ne'er took it—

Amb. But you had wanted matter there to work on.

Furn. Matter! with six eggs, and a strike of rye meal,

I had kept the town till doomsday, perhaps longer.

Ord. But what's this to your pet against my lady?

Furn. What's this? marry this; when I am three parts roasted,
And the fourth part parboil'd, to prepare her viands,

She keeps her chamber, dines with a panada,
Or water-gruel, my sweat never thought on.

Ord. But your art is seen in the dining-room.

Furn. By whom?

By such as pretend love to her; but come
To feed upon her. Yet, of all the harpies
That do devour her, I am out of charity
With none so much as the thin-gutted squire
That's stolen into commission.

Ord. Justice Greedy?

Furn. The same, the same: meat's cast away upon him,
It never thrives; he holds this paradox,
Who eats not well, can ne'er do justice well:
His stomach's as insatiate as the grave,
Or strumpets' ravenous appetites.

[Knocking within.

Watch. One knocks.

[Exit.

Ord. Our late young master!

Re-enter Watchall with Allworth.

Amb. Welcome, sir.

Furn. Your hand;

If you have a stomach, a cold bake-meat's ready.

Ord. His father's picture in little.

Furn. We are all your servants.

Amb. In you he lives.

All. At once, my thanks to all;

This is yet some comfort. Is my lady stirring?

Enter Lady Allworth, Waiting Woman, and Chambermaid.

Ord. Her presence answers for us.

Lady All. Sort those silks well.

I'll take the air alone.

[Exit Waiting Woman and Chambermaid.

Furn. You air and air;

But will you never taste but spoon-meat more?
To what use serve I?

L. All. Prithee, be not angry;

I shall ere long; i' the mean time, there is gold
To buy thee aprons, and a summer suit.

Furn. I am appeased, and Furnace now grows cool.

L. All. And, as I gave directions, if this morning

I am visited by any, entertain them

As heretofore; but say, in my excuse,

I am indisposed.

Ord. I shall, madam.

L. All. Do, and leave me.

Nay, stay you, Allworth.

[Exit Order, Amble, Furnace and Watchall.

All. I shall gladly grow here,

To wait on your commands.

L. All. So soon turn'd courtier! [is duty

All. Style not that courtship, madam, which Purchased on your part.

L. All. Well, you shall o'ercome;

I'll not contend in words. How is it with Your noble master?

* And raise fortifications in the pastry—

Which, if they had been practised at Breda, Spinola, &c.] This was one of the most celebrated sieges of the time, and is frequently mentioned by our old dramatists. Spinola sat down before Breda on the 26th of August, 1624, and the town did not surrender until the 1st of July in the following year. The besieged suffered incredible hardships: "butter," says the historian, Herman Hugo, "was sold for six florins a pound: a calf of 17 days old, for forty-eight; a hog, for one hundred and fifteen; and tobacco, for one hundred florins the lb.:" this was after they had consumed most of the horses. A few days after, the narrator adds, that "as much tobacco as in other places might have been had for ten florins, was sold in Breda for twelve hundred!" It appears that this tobacco was used as "physick, it being the only remedy they had against the scurvy."

The raising of fortifications in pastry seems to have been a fashionable practice, since I scarcely recollect the details of any great entertainment in the reigns of Elizabeth and James, where the fortifications of the cook or the confectioner are not duly commemorated.—Gifford.

All. Ever like himself;
No scruple lessen'd in the full weight of honour:
He did command me, pardon my presumption,
As his unworthy deputy, to kiss
Your ladyship's fair hands.

L. All. I am honour'd in His favour to me. Does he hold his purpose
For the Low Countries?

All. Constantly, good madam;
But he will in person first present his service.

L. All. And how approve you of his course?
you are yet

Like virgin parchment, capable of any Inscription, vicious or honourable.
I will not force your will, but leave you free
To your own election.

All. Any form, you please,
I will put on; but, might I make my choice,
With humble emulation I would follow
The path my lord marks to me.

L. All. 'Tis well answer'd,
And I commend your spirit: you had a father,
Bless'd be his memory! that some few hours
Before the will of heaven took him from me,
Who did commend you, by the dearest ties
Of perfect love between us, to my charge;
And, therefore, what I speak you are bound to hear

With such respect as if he lived in me.
He was my husband, and howe'er you are not
Son of my womb, you may be of my love,
Provided you deserve it.

All. I have found you,
Most honour'd madam, the best mother to me;
And, with my utmost strengths of care and service,

Will labour that you never may repent
Your bounties shower'd upon me.

L. All. I much hope it.
These were your father's words: *If e'er my son
Follow the war, tell him it is a school
Where all the principles tending to honour
Are taught, if truly follow'd: but for such
As repair thither, as a place in which
They do presume they may with license practise
Their lusts and riots, they shall never merit
The noble name of soldiers. To dare boldly
In a fair cause, and, for their country's safety,
To run upon the cannon's mouth undaunted;
To obey their leaders, and shun mutinies;
To bear with patience the winter's cold,
And summer's scorching heat, and not to faint,
When plenty of provision fails, with hunger;
Are the essential parts make up a soldier,
Not swearing, dice, or drinking.*

All. There's no syllable
You speak, but is to me an oracle,
Which but to doubt were impious.

L. All. To conclude:
Beware ill company, for often men
Are like to those with whom they do converse;
And, from one man I warn you, and that's Wellborn: [pity;
Not 'cause he's poor, that rather claims your

But that he's in his manners so debauch'd,
And hath to vicious courses sold himself.
'Tis true your father loved him, while he was Worthy the loving; but if he had lived
To have seen him as he is, he had cast him off,
As you must do.

All. I shall obey in all things.

L. All. Follow me to my chamber, you shall have gold
To furnish you like my son, and still supplied,
As I hear from you.

All. I am still your creature. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.

A Hall in the same.

Enter Overreach, Greedy, Order, Amble, Furnace, Watchall, and Marrall.

Greedy. Not to be seen!

Over. Still cloister'd up! Her reason,
I hope, assures her, though she make herself
Close prisoner ever for her husband's loss,
'Twill not recover him.

Ord. Sir, it is her will,
Which we, that are her servants, ought to serve
And not dispute: howe'er, you are nobly welcome;

And if you please to stay, that you may think so,
There came, not six days since, from Hull, a pipe

Of rich Canary, which shall spend itself
For my lady's honour.

Greedy. Is it of the right race?

Ord. Yes, master Greedy.

Amb. How his mouth runs o'er!

Furn. I'll make it run, and run. Save your good worship!

Greedy. Honest master cook, thy hand;
again: how I love thee!

Are the good dishes still in being? speak, boy.

Furn. If you have a mind to feed, there is a chine

Of beef, well seasoned.

Greedy. Good!

Furn. A pheasant, larded.

Greedy. That I might now give thanks for't!

Furn. Other kickshaws.

Besides, there came last night, from the forest of Sherwood,

The fattest stag I ever cook'd.

Greedy. A stag, man!

Furn. A stag, sir; part of it prepared for dinner,

And baked in puff-paste.

Greedy. Puff-paste too! Sir Giles,
A ponderous chine of beef! a pheasant larded!
And red deer too, sir Giles, and baked in puffpaste!

All business set aside, let us give thanks here.

Furn. How the lean skeleton's rapt!

Over. You know we cannot.

Mar. Your worships are to sit on a commission,
And if you fail to come, you lose the cause.

Greedy. Cause me no causes. I'll prove't for such a dinner,
We may put off a commission: you shall find it Henrici decimo quarto.

Over. Fie, master Greedy!
Will you lose me a thousand pounds for a dinner?
No more, for shame! we must forget the belly
When we think of profit.

Greedy. Well, you shall o'er-rule me;
I could e'en cry now. Do you hear, master cook,

Send but a corner of that immortal pasty,
And I, in thankfulness, will, by your boy,
Send you—a brace of three-pences.

Furn. Will you be so prodigal?

[Enter Wellborn.]

Over. Remember me to your lady. Who have we here?

Well. You know me.

Over. I did once, but now I will not;
Thou art no blood of mine. Avaunt, thou beggar;

If ever thou presume to own me more,
I'll have thee caged, and whipt.

Greedy. I'll grant the warrant.
Think of pie-corner, Furnace!

[Exeunt Overreach, Greedy, and Marfall.]

Watch. Will you out, sir?

I wonder how you durst creep in.

Ord. This is rudeness,
And saucy impudence.

Amb. Cannot you stay
To be served, among your fellows, from the basket?

But you must press into the hall?

Furn. Prithee, vanish
Into some outhouse, though it be the pigstie,
My scullion shall come to thee.

[Enter Allworth.]

Well. This is rare:

Oh, here's Tom Allworth. Tom!

All. We must be strangers;

Nor would I have you seen here for a million.

[Exit.]

Well. Better and better. He contemns me too!

[Enter Waiting Woman and Chambermaid.]

Woman. Foh, what a smell's here! what thing's this?

Cham. Let us hence, for love's sake, or I shall swoon.

Woman. I begin to faint already.

[Exeunt Waiting Woman and Chambermaid.]

Watch. Will you know your way?

Amb. Or shall we teach it you
By the head and shoulders?

Well. No; I will not stir;
Do you mark, I will not: let me see the wretch

That dares attempt to force me. Why, you slaves,

Created only to make legs, and cringe;
To carry in a dish, and shift a trencher;
That have not souls only to hope a blessing
Beyond black jacks or flagons; you that were born

Only to consume meat and drink, and batten
Upon reversions!—who advances? who Shews me the way?

Ord. My lady!

Chambermaid.*

Cham. Here's the monster.

Woman. Sweet madam, keep your glove to your nose.

Cham. Or let me
Fetch some perfumes may be predominant;
You wrong yourself else.

Well. Madam, my designs
Bear me to you.

L. All. To me!

Well. And though I have met with
But ragged entertainment from your grooms here,
I hope from you to receive that noble usage
As may become the true friend of your husband,

And then I shall forget these.

L. All. I am amazed
To see, and hear this rudeness. Darest thou think,

Though sworn, that it can ever find belief,
That I, who to the best men of this country
Denied my presence, since my husband's death,
Can fall so low, as to change words with thee?
Thou son of infamy! forbear my house,
And know, and keep the distance that's between
us;

Or, though it be against my gentler temper,
I shall take order you no more shall be
An eyesore to me.

Well. Scorn me not, good lady;
But, as in form you are angelical,
Imitate the heavenly natures, and vouchsafe
At the least awhile to hear me. You will grant
The blood that runs in this arm is as noble
As that which feeds your veins; those costly
jewels,

And those rich clothes you wear, your men's observance,

And women's flattery, are in you no virtues;
Nor these rags, with my poverty, in me vices.
You have a fair fame, and, I know, deserve it;
Yet, lady, I must say, in nothing more
Than in the pious sorrow you have shewn
For your late noble husband.

Ord. How she starts!

Furn. And hardly can keep finger from the eye,

To hear him named.

L. All. Have you aught else to say?

Well. That husband, madam, was once in his fortune

Almost as low as I; want, debts, and quarrels

* To be served among your fellows, from the basket,] i. e. from the broken bread and meat which, in great houses, was distributed to the poor at the porter's lodge, or reserved to be carried every night to the prisons for debtors and other necessitous persons. Hence, perhaps, the allusion of Ambie. Thus Shirley: "I'll have you clapt up again, where you shall howl all day at the grate for a meal at night from the basket." Bird in a Cage.—Gifford.

Lay heavy on him : let it not be thought
A hoast in me, though I say, I relieved him.
'Twas I that gave him fashion ; mine the sword
That did on all occasions second his ;
I brought him on and off with honour, lady ;
And when in all men's judgments he was sunk,
And in his own hopes not to be buoy'd up,
I stepp'd unto him, took him by the hand,
And set him upright.

Furn. Are not we base rogues
That could forget this ?

Well. I confess, you made him
Master of your estate ; nor could your friends,
Though he brought no wealth with him, blame
you for it ;

For he had a shape, and to that shape a mind
Made up of all parts, either great or noble ;
So winning a behaviour, not to be Resisted, madam.

L. All. 'Tis most true, he had.

Well. For his sake, then, in that I was his friend,

Do not condemn me.

L. All. For what's past excuse me,
I will redeem it. Order, give the gentleman
A hundred pounds.

Well. No, madam, on no terms :
I will nor beg nor borrow sixpence of you,
But be supplied elsewhere, or want thus ever.
Only one suit I make, which you deny not
To strangers ; 'tis this. [Whispers to her.]

L. All. Fie ! nothing else ?

Well. Nothing unless you please to charge
your servants,

To throw away a little respect upon me.

L. All. What you demand is yours. [Exit.]

Well. I thank you, lady.

Now what can be wrought out of such a suit
Is yet in supposition : I have said all ;
When you please, you may retire :—nay, all's forgotten ;

And, for a lucky omen to my project,
Shake hands, and end all quarrels in the cellar.

Ord. Agreed, agreed.

Furn. Still merry master Wellborn. [Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.

A Room in Overreach's House.

Enter Overreach and Marrall.

Over. He's gone, I warrant thee : this commission crush'd him.

Mar. Your worships have the way on't and ne'er miss.

To squeeze these unthrifths into air : and yet
The chapfall'n justice did his part, returning,
For your advantage, the certificate,
Against his conscience, and his knowledge too,
With your good favour, to the utter ruin
Of the poor farmer.

Over. 'Twas for these good ends
I made him a justice : he that bribes his belly
Is certain to command his soul.

Mar. I wonder,
Still with your license, why, your worship having

The power to put this thin-gut in commission,
You are not in't yourself ?

Over. Thou art a fool :

In being out of office I am out of danger ;
Where, if I were a justice, besides the trouble,
I might or out of wilfulness, or error,
Run myself finely into a premunire,
And so become a prey to the informer.
No, I'll have none of t ; 'tis enough I keep Greedy at my devotion : so he serve
My purposes, let him hang, or save, I care not ;
Friendship is but a word.

Mar. You are all wisdom.

Over. I would be worldly wise ; for the other wisdom,

That does prescribe us a well-govern'd life,
And to do right to others, as ourselves,
I value not an atom.

Mar. What course take you,
With your good patience, to hedge in the manor
Of your neighbour, master Frugal ? as 'tis said
He will nor sell, nor borrow, nor exchange ;
And his land lying in the midst of your many lordships

Is a foul blemish.

Over. I have thought on't, Marrall,
And it shall take. I must have all men sellers,
And I the only purchaser.

Mar. 'Tis most fit, sir.

Over. I'll therefore buy some cottage near his manor, [fences,]

Which done, I'll make my men break ope his Ride o'er his standing corn, and in the night
Set fire on his barns, or break his cattle's legs ;
These trespasses draw on suits, and suits expenses,
Which I can spare, but will soon beggar him.
When I have harried him thus two or three years,
Though he sue in forma pauperis, in spite
Of all his thrift and care, he'll grow behind hand.

Mar. The best I ever heard : I could adore
you.

Over. Then, with the favour of my man of law,

I will pretend some title : want will force him
To put it to arbitrement ; then, if he sell
For half the value, he shall have ready money,
And I possess his land.

Mar. 'Tis above wonder !

Wellborn was apt to sell, and needed not
These fine arts, sir, to hook him in.

Over. Well thought on.

This varlet, Marrall, lives too long, to upbraid me
With my close cheat put upon him. Will nor cold

Nor hunger kill him ?

Mar. I know not what to think on't.
I have used all means ; and the last night I caused
His host the tapster to turn him out of doors ;
And have been since with all your friends and tenants,

And, on the forfeit of your favour, charged them,
Though a crust of mouldy bread would keep him
from starving,

Yet they should not relieve him. This is done,
sir.

Over. That was something, Marrall; but thou must go further,
And suddenly, Marrall.

Mar. Where, and when you please, sir.

Over. I would have thee seek him out, and,
if thou canst,
Persuade him that 'tis better steal than beg;
Then, if I prove he has but robb'd a henroost,
Not all the world shall save him from the gallows.
Do any thing to work him to despair,
And 'tis thy masterpiece.

Mar. I will do my best, sir.

Over. I am now on my main work with the lord Lovell,

The gallant-minded, popular lord Lovell,
The minion of the people's love. I hear
He's come into the country, and my aims are
To insinuate myself into his knowledge,
And then invite him to my house.

Mar. I have you:
This points at my young mistress.

Over. She must part with
That humble title, and write honourable,
Right honourable, Marrall, my right honourable daughter;

If all I have, or e'er shall get, will do it!
I'll have her well attended; there are ladies
Of errant knights decay'd, and brought so low,
That for cast clothes and meat will gladly serve
her.

And 'tis my glory, though I come from the city,
To save their issue whom I have undone
To kneel to mine, as bond-slaves.

Mar. 'Tis fit state, sir.

Over. And, therefore, I'll not have a cham-bermaid

That ties her shoes, or any meaner office,
But such whose fathers were right worshipful.
'Tis a rich man's pride! there having ever been
More than a feud, a strange antipathy,
Between us and true gentry.

Enter Wellborn.

Mar. See, who's here, sir.

Over. Hence monster! prodigy!

Well. Sir, your wife's nephew;
She and my father tumbled in one belly.

Over. Avoid my sight! thy breath's infectious, rogue!

I shun thee as a leprosy, or the plague.
Come hither, Marrall—this is the time to work him. [Exit.

Mar. I warrant you, sir.

Well. By this light, I think he's mad.

Mar. Mad! had you ta'en compassion on yourself,

You long since had been mad.

Well. You have ta'en a course
Between you and my venerable uncle,
To make me so.

Mar. The more pale-spirited you,
That would not be instructed. I swear deeply—

Well. By what?

Mar. By my religion.

Well. Thy religion!

The devil's creed!—but what would you have done?

Mar. Had there been but one tree in all the shire,

Nor any hope to compass a penny halter,
Before, like you, I had outlived my fortunes,
A withe had served my turn to hang myself.
I am zealous in your cause; pray you hang
yourself,

And presently, as you love your credit.

Well. I thank you.

Mar. Will you stay till you die in a ditch, or lice devour you?—

Or, if you dare not do the feat yourself,
But that you'll put the state to charge and trouble,

Is there no purse to be cut, house to be broken,
Or market-woman with eggs, that you may murder,

And so dispatch the business?

Well. Here's variety,

I must confess; but I'll accept of none
Of all your gentle offers, I assure you.

Mar. Why, have you hope ever to eat again,
Or drink? or be the master of three farthings?
If you like not hanging, drown yourself; take some course

For your reputation.

Well. 'Twill not do, dear tempter,

With all the rhetorick the fiend hath taught you.

I am as far as thou art from despair;

Nay, I have confidence, which is more than hope,
To live, and suddenly, better than ever. [air

Mar. Ha! ha! these castles you build in the
Will not persuade me or to give or lend
A token to you.

Well. I'll be more kind to thee:

Come, thou shalt dine with me.

Mar. With you!

Well. Nay more, dine gratis.

Mar. Under what hedge, I pray you? or at whose cost?

Are they padders, or abram-men* that are your consorts? [dine

Well. Thou art incredulous; but thou shalt
Not alone at her house, but with a gallant lady;
With me, and with a lady.

Mar. Lady! what lady?

With the lady of the lake†, or queen of fairies?
For I know it must be an enchanted dinner.

* Are they padders, or abram-men that are your consorts? An abram-man was an impudent impostor, who, under the garb and appearance of a lunatick, rambled about the country, and compelled, as Decker says, the servants of small families "to give him, through fear, what ever he demanded." A paddar (a term still in use) is a lurker in the highways, a footpad.—Gifford.

† The abraham-man calls himself, says Decker, by the name of Poor Tom, and coming near any body cries out, Poor Tom is cold.

Edgar, in King Lear, personates the character.—Compter.
† With the lady of the lake,] This is a very prominent character in Morte Arthur, and in many of our old romances. She seems to be the Circe of the dark ages; and is frequently mentioned by our old dramatists.—Gifford.

Well. With the lady Allworth, knave.

Mar. Nay, now there's hope
Thy brain is crack'd.

Well. Mark there with what respect
I am entertain'd.

Mar. With choice, no doubt, of dog-whips.
Why, dost thou ever hope to pass her porter?

Well. 'Tis not far off, go with me: trust thine own eyes.

Mar. Troth, in my hope, or my assurance rather,

To see the curvet, and mount like a dog in a blanket,

If ever thou presume to pass her threshold,
I will endure thy company.

Well. Come along then. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.

A Room in Lady Allworth's House.

Enter Allworth, Waiting Woman, Chambermaid, Order, Amble, Furnace, and Watchall.

Woman. Could you not command your leisure one hour longer?

Cham. Or half an hour?

All. I have told you what my haste is:
Besides, being now another's not mine own,
How'er I much desire to enjoy you longer,
My duty suffers, if, to please myself,
I should neglect my lord.

Woman. Pray you do me the favour
To put these few quince-cakes into your pocket,
They are of mine own preserving.

Cham. And this marmalade;
'Tis comfortable for your stomach.

Woman. And, at parting,

Excuse me if I beg a farewell from you.

Cham. You are still before me. I move the same suit, sir.

[Allworth kisses them severally.]

Fur. How greedy these chamberers are of a beardless chin!

I think the tits will ravish him.

All. My service

To both.

Woman. Ours waits on you.

Cham. And shall do ever.

Ord. You are my lady's charge, be therefore careful

That you sustain your parts.

Woman. We can bear, I warrant you.

[Exeunt Waiting Woman and Chambermaid.]

Fur. Here drink it off; the ingredients are cordial,

And this the true elixir; it hath boil'd
Since midnight for you. 'Tis the quintessence
Of five cocks of the game, ten dozen of sparrows,
Knuckles of veal, potatoe-roots, and marrow,
Coral, and ambergris; you need not bait
After this, I warrant you, though your journey's
long;

You may ride on the strength of this till to morrow morning.

All. Your courtesies overwhelm me: I much grieve

To part from such true friends; and yet find comfort,

My attendance on my honourable lord,
Whose resolution holds to visit my lady,
Will speedily bring me back.

[Knocking within. Exit Watchall.]

Mar. [within] Dar'st thou venture further?

Well. [within] Yes, yes, and knock again.

Ord. 'Tis he; disperse!

Amb. Perform it bravely.

Furn. I know my cue, ne'er doubt me.

[Exeunt all but Allworth.]

Re-enter Watchall, introducing Wellborn and Marrall.

Watch. Beast that I was, to make you stay!
most welcome;

You were long since expected.

Well. Say so much

To my friend, I pray you.

Watch. For your sake, I will, sir.

Mar. For his sake!

Well. Mum; this is nothing.

Mar. More than ever

I would have believed, though I had found it in my primer.

All. When I have given you reasons for my late harshness,
You'll pardon and excuse me; for, believe me,
Though now I part abruptly, in my service
I will deserve it.

Mar. Service! with a vengeance!

Well. I am satisfied: farewell, Tom.

All. All joy stay with you! [Exit.]

[Re-enter Amble.]

Amb. You are happily encounter'd; I yet never

Presented one so welcome as, I know,

You will be to my lady.

Mar. This is some vision; [hail];
Or, sure, these men are mad, to worship a dung-
It cannot be a truth.

Well. Be still a pagan,

An unbelieving infidel; be so, miscreant,
And meditate on blankets, and on dog-whips!

[Re-enter Furnace.]

Furn. I am glad you are come; until I know your pleasure,

I knew not how to serve up my lady's dinner.

Mar. His pleasure! is it possible?

Well. What's thy will?

Furn. Marry, sir, I have some growse, and turkey chicken,
Some rails and quails, and my lady will'd me
ask you

What kind of sauces best affect your palate,

That I may use my utmost skill to please it.

Mar. The devil's enter'd this cook: sauce for his palate,

That on my knowledge, for almost this twelve-
month,

Durst wish but cheese-parings and brown bread on Sundays!

Well. That way I like them best.

Furn. It shall be done, sir. [Exit.]

Well. What think you of the hedge we shall dine under?

Shall we feed gratis?

Mar. I know not what to think;
Pray you make me not mad.

Re-enter Order.

Ord. This place becomes you not;
Pray you walk, sir, to the dining-room.

Well. I am well here
Till her ladyship quits her chamber.

Mar. Well here, say you?
'Tis a rare change! but yesterday you thought Yourself well in a barn, wrapp'd up in pease-straw.

Re-enter Waiting Woman and Chambermaid.

Woman. O! sir, you are wish'd for.

Cham. My lady dreamt, sir, of you.

Woman. And the first command she gave, after she rose,
Was, (her devotions done,) to give her notice
When you approach'd here.

Cham. Which is done, on my virtue.

Mar. I shall be converted; I begin to grow
Into a new belief, which saints nor angels
Could have won me to have faith in.

Woman. Sir, my lady!

Enter Lady Allworth.

L. All. I come to meet you, and languish'd till I saw you.
This first kiss is for form; I allow a second
To such a friend. [Kisses Wellborn.]

Mar. To such a friend! heaven bless me!

Well. I am wholly yours; yet, madam, if you please

To grace this gentleman with a salute——

Mar. Salute me at his bidding!

Well. I shall receive it

As a most high favour.

L. All. Sir, you may command me.

[Advances to salute Marrall.]

Well. Run backward from a lady! and such a lady!

Mar. To kiss her foot is, to poor me, a favour
I am unworthy of. [Offers to kiss her foot.]

L. All. Nay, pray you rise;
And since you are so humble, I'll exalt you:
You shall dine with me to day, at mine own table.

Mar. Your ladyship's table! I am not good enough

To sit at your steward's board.

L. All. You are too modest:
I will not be denied.

Re-enter Furnace.

Furn. Will you still be babbling
Till your meat freeze on the table? the old trick still;

My art ne'er thought on!

L. All. Your arm, master Wellborn:——
Nay, keep us company. [To Marrall]

Mar. I was ne'er so graced.

[Exeunt Wellborn, Lady Allworth, Amble, Marrall, Waiting Woman, and Chambermaid.]

Ord. So! we have play'd our parts, and are come off well;

But if I know the mystery why my lady
Consented to it, or why master Wellborn
Desired it, may I perish!

Furn. Would I had

The roasting of his heart that cheated him,
And forces the poor gentleman to these shifts!
By fire! for cooks are Persians, and swear by it
Of all the griping and extorting tyrants
I ever heard or read of, I ne'er met
A match to sir Giles Overreach.

Watch. What will you take
To tell him so, fellow Furnace?

Furn. Just as much

As my throat is worth, for that would be the price on't.

To have a usurer that starves himself,
And wears a cloak of one and twenty years
On a suit of fourteen groats bought of the hangman,

To grow rich, and then purchase, is too common:

But this sir Giles feeds high, keeps many servants,

Who must at his command do any outrage;

Rich in his habit, vast in his expenses;

Yet he to admiration still increases

In wealth, and lordships.

Ord. He frights men out of their estates,
And breaks through all law-nets, made to curb ill men,

As they were cobwebs. No man dares reprove
him.

Such a spirit to dare, and power to do, were never

Lodged so unluckily.

Re-enter Amble.

Amb. Ha! ha! I shall burst.

Ord. Contain thyself, man.

Furn. Or make us partakers

Of your sudden mirth.

Amb. Ha! ha! my lady has got

Such a guest at her table!—this term-driver,
Marrall,

This snip of an attorney——

Furn. What of him, man?

Amb. The knave thinks still he's at the cook's shop in Ram Alley,

Where the clerks divide, and the elder is to choose;

And feeds so slovenly!

Furn. Is this all?

Amb. My lady

Drank to him for fashion sake, or to please master Wellborn;

As I live, he rises, and taks up a dish

In which there were some remnants of a boil'd capon,

And pledges her in white broth!

Furn. Nay, 'tis like

The rest of his tribe.

Amb. And when I brought him wine,
He leaves his stool, and, after a leg or two,
Most humbly thanks my worship.

Ord. Risen already!

Amb. I shall be chid.

Re-enter Lady Allworth, Wellborn, and Marrall.

Furn. My lady frowns.

L. All. You wait well:

Let me have no more of this; I observed your jeering:

Sirrah, I'll have you know, whom I think worthy
To sit at my table, be he ne'er so mean,
When I am present, is not your companion.

Ord. Nay, she'll preserve what's due to her.

Furn. This refreshing
Follows your flux of laughter.

L. All. [To Wellborn.] You are master
Of your own will. I know so much of manners,
As not to enquire your purposes; in a word,
To me you are ever welcome, as to a house
That is your own.

Well. Mark that.

Mar. With reverence, sir,
An it like your worship.

Well. Trouble yourself no further;
Dear madam, my heart's full of zeal and service,
However in my language I am sparing.
Come, master Marrall.

Mar. I attend your worship.

[Exeunt Wellborn and Marrall.]

L. All. I see in your looks you are sorry, and you know me
An easy mistress: be merry; I have forgot all.
Order and Furnace, come with me; I must give
you

Further directions.

Ord. What you please.

Furn. We are ready. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.

The Country near Lady Allworth's House.

Enter Wellborn and Marrall.

Well. I think I am in a good way.

Mar. Good! sir; the best way,

The certain best way.

Well. There are casualties

That men are subject to.

Mar. You are above them;
And as you are already worshipful,
I hope ere long you will increase in worship,
And be, right worshipful.

Well. Prithee do not flout me:

What I shall be, I shall be. Is't for your ease
You keep your hat off?

Mar. Ease, an it like your worship!
I hope Jack Marrall shall not live so long,
To prove himself such an unmannerly beast,
Though it hail hazel nuts, as to be cover'd
When your worship's present.

Well. Is not this a true rogue,
That out of mere hope of a future cozenage,
Can turn thus suddenly? 'tis rank already.

[Aside.]

Mar. I know your worship's wise, and needs
no counsel:

Yet if, in my desire to do you service,
I humbly offer my advice, (but still Under correction,) I hope I shall not Incur your high displeasure.

Well. No; speak freely.

Mar. Then, in my judgment, sir, my simple judgment
(Still with your worship's favour,) I could wish
you

A better habit, for this cannot be
But much distasteful to the noble lady
(I say no more) that loves you: for, this morning,

To me, and I am but a swine to her,
Before the assurance of her wealth perfumed
you,

You savour'd not of amber.

Well. I do now then!

Mar. This your baton hath got a touch of
it. — [Kisses the end of his cudgel.]

Yet if you please, for change, I have twenty pounds here,

Which, out of my true love, I'll presently Lay down at your worship's feet; 'twill serve to buy you

A riding suit.

Well. But where's the horse?

Mar. My gelding
Is at your service: nay, you shall ride me,
Before your worship shall be put to the trouble
To walk afoot. Alas! when you are lord
Of this lady's manor, as I know you will be,
You may with the lease of glebe land, call'd
Knave's-acre,

A place I would manure, requite your vassal.

Well. I thank thy love, but must make no use of it;

What's twenty pounds?

Mar. 'Tis all that I can make, sir.

Well. Dost thou think, though I want clothes,
I could not have them,

For one word to my lady?

Mar. As I know not that!

Well. Come, I'll tell thee a secret, and so leave thee.

I'll not give her the advantage, though she be
A gallant-minded lady, after we are married,
(There being no woman, but is sometimes fro-ward,)

To hit me in the teeth, and say, she was forced
To buy my wedding-clothes, and took me on
With a plain riding-suit, and an ambling nag.
No, I'll be furnish'd something like myself,
And so farewell: for thy suit touching Knave'sacre,

When it is mine, 'tis thine. [Exit.]

Mar. I thank your worship.

How was I cozen'd in the calculation
Of this man's fortune! my master cozen'd too,
Whose pupil I am in the art of undoing men;
For that is our profession! Well, well, master
Wellborn,

You are of a sweet nature, and fit again to be cheated :

Which, if the Fates please, when you are possessed

Of the land and lady, you, sans question, shall be.

I'll presently think of the means.

[Walks by, musing.]

Enter Overreach, speaking to a servant within.

Over. Sirrah, take my horse.

I'll walk to get me an appetite; 'tis but a mile,

And exercise will keep me from being pursesey.

Ha! Marrall! is he conjuring? perhaps

The knave has wrought the prodigal to do

Some outrage on himself, and now he feels

Compunction in his conscience for't: no matter,

So it be done. Marrall!

Mar. Sir.

Over. How succeed we

In our plot on Wellborn?

Mar. Never better, sir.

Over. Has he hang'd or drown'd himself?

Mar. No, sir, he lives;

Lives once more to be made a prey to you,

A greater prey than ever.

Over. Art thou in thy wits?

If thou art, reveal this miracle, and briefly.

Mar. A lady, sir, is fall'n in love with him.

Over. With him! what lady?

Mar. The rich lady Allworth.

Over. Thou dolt! how dar'st thou speak this?

Mar. I speak truth,

And I do so but once a year, unless

It be to you, sir: we dined with her ladyship,

I thank his worship.

Over. His worship!

Mar. As I live, sir,

I dined with him, at the great lady's table, Simple as I stand here; and saw when she kiss'd him,

And would, at his request, have kiss'd me too; But I was not so audacious, as some youths are, That dare do any thing, be it ne'er so absurd, And sad after performance.

Over. Why, thou rascal!

To tell me these impossibilities. Dine at her table! and kiss him! or thee!—Impudent varlet, have not I myself, To whom great countesses' doors have oft flew open,

Ten times attempted, since her husband's death, In vain, to see her, though I came—a suitor? And yet your good solicitorship, and rogue Wellborn,

Were brought into her presence, feasted with her!—

But that I know thee a dog that cannot blush, This most incredible lie would call up one On thy butter-milk cheeks.

Mar. Shall I not trust my eyes, sir, Or taste? I feel her good cheer in my belly.

Over. You shall feel me, if you give not over, sirrah:

Recover your brains again, and be no more gull'd With a beggar's plot, assisted by the aids Of serving-men and chambermaids, for beyond these

Thou never saw'st a woman, or I'll quit you From my employments.

Mar. Will you credit this yet?

On my confidence of their marriage, I offer'd Wellborn—

I would give a crown now I durst say his worship— [Aside.]

My nag, and twenty pounds.

Over. Did you so, idiot! [Strikes him down.]

Was this the way to work him to despair, Or rather to cross me?

Mar. Will your worship kill me?

Over. No, no; but drive the lying spirit out of you.

Mar. He's gone.

Over. I have done then: now, forgetting Your late imaginary feast and lady, Know, my lord Lovell dines with me to-morrow.

Be careful nought be wanting to receive him;

And bid my daughter's women trim her up,

Though they paint her, so she catch the lord,

I'll thank them:

There's a piece for my late blows.

Mar. I must yet suffer:

But there may be a time—

[Aside.]

Over. Do you grumble?

Mar. No, sir.

[Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.

The Country near Overreach's House.

Enter Lord Lovell, Allworth, and Servants.

Lor. Walk the horses down the hill: something in private

I must impart to Allworth. [Exeunt Servants.]

All. O, my lord,

What sacrifice of reverence, duty, watching, Although I could put off the use of sleep, And ever wait on your commands to serve them; What dangers, though in ne'er so horrid shapes, Nay, death itself, though I should run to meet it, Can I, and with a thankful willingness, suffer; But still the retribution will fall short Of your bounties shower'd upon me?

Lor. Loving youth;

Till what I purpose be put into act, Do not o'erprize it; since you have trusted me With your soul's nearest, nay, her dearest secret, Rest confident 'tis in a cabinet lock'd Treachery shall never open. I have found you (For so much to your face I must profess, Howe'er you guard your modesty with a blush for't)

More zealous in your love and service to me, Than I have been in my rewards.

All. Still great ones,
Above my merit.

Lov. Such your gratitude calls them:
Nor am I of that harsh and rugged temper
As some great men are tax'd with, who imagine
They part from the respect due to their honours,
If they use not all such as follow them,
Without distinction of their births, like slaves.
I am not so condition'd: I can make
A fitting difference between my footboy,
And a gentleman by want compell'd to serve me.

All. 'Tis thankfully acknowledged; you have been

More like a father to me than a master:
Pray you, pardon the comparison.

Lov. I allow it;
And to give you assurance I am pleas'd in't,
My carriage and demeanour to your mistress,
Fair Margaret, shall truly witness for me,
I can command my passions.

All. 'Tis a conquest
Few lords can boast of when they are tempted,
—Oh!

Lov. Why do you sigh? can you be doubtful of me?

By that fair name I in the wars have purchased,

And all my actions, hitherto untainted,
I will not be more true to mine own honour,
Than to my Allworth!

All. As you are the brave lord Lovell,
Your bare word only given is an assurance
Of more validity and weight to me,
Than all the oaths, bound up with imprecations,
Which, when they would deceive, most courtiers practise:

Yet being a man (for, sure, to style you more
Would relish of gross flattery) I am forced,
Against my confidence of your worth and virtues,
To doubt, nay more, to fear.

Lov. So young, and jealous!

All. Were you to encounter with a single foe,

The victory were certain; but to stand
The charge of two such potent enemies,
At once assaulting you, as wealth and beauty,
And those too seconded with power, is odds
Too great for Hercules.

Lov. Speak your doubts and fears,
Since you will nourish them, in plainer language,

That I may understand them.

All. What's your will,
Though I lend arms against myself, (provided
They may advantage you,) must be obey'd.
My much-loved lord, were Margaret only fair,
The cannon of her more than earthly form,
Though mounted high, commanding all beneath
it,

And ramm'd with bullets of her sparkling eyes,
Of all the bulwarks that defend your senses
Could batter none, but that which guards your sight.

But when the well-tuned accents of her tongue

Make musick to you, and with numerous sounds Assault your hearing, (such as Ulysses, if [he]
Now lived again, how'er he stood the Syrens,
Could not resist,) the combat must grow doubtful

Between your reason and rebellious passions.
And this too; when you feel her touch, and breath

Like a soft western wind, when it glides o'er
Arabia, creating gums and spices;
And in the van, the nectar of her lips,
Which you must taste, bring the battalia on,
Well arm'd, and strongly lined with her discourse,
And knowing manners, to give entertainment;—
Hippolytus himself would leave Diana,
To follow such a Venus.

Lov. Love hath made you
Poetical. Allworth.

All. Grant all these beat off,
Which if it be in man to do, you'll do it,
Mammon, in sir Giles Overreach, steps in
With heaps of ill-got gold, and so much land,
To make her more remarkable, as would tire
A falcon's wings in one day to fly over.
O my good lord! these powerful aids, which would

Make a mis-shapen negro beautiful,
(Yet are but ornaments to give her lustre,
That in herself is all perfection,) must Prevail for her: I here release your trust;
'Tis happiness, enough, for me to serve you,
And sometimes, with chaste eyes, to look upon
her.

Lov. Why, shall I swear?

All. O, by no means, my lord;
And wrong not so your judgment to the world,
As from your fond indulgence to a boy,
Your page, your servant, to refuse a blessing
Divers great men are rivals for.

Lov. Suspend
Your judgment till the trial. How far is it
To Overreach' house?

All. At the most some half hour's riding;
You'll soon be there.

Lov. And you the sooner freed
From your jealous fears.

All. O that I durst but hope it! [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.

A Room in Overreach's House.

Enter Overreach, Greedy, and Marrall.

Over. Spare for no cost; let my dressers crack with the weight
Of curious viands.

Greedy. Store indeed's no sore, sir.

Over. That proverb fits your stomach, master Greedy.

And let no plate be seen but what's pure gold,
Or such whose workmanship exceeds the matter
That it is made of; let my choicest linen Perfume the room, and, when we wash, the water,

With precious powders mix'd, so please my lord
That he may, with envy wish to bathe so ever.

Mar. 'Twill be very chargeable.

Over. Avaunt, you drudge!

Now all my labour'd ends are at the stake,
Is't a time to think of thrift? Call in my daughter,

And, master justice, since you love choice dishes,
And plenty of them——

Greedy. As I do, indeed, sir,
Almost as much as to give thanks for them.

Over. I do confer that providence, with my power
Of absolute command to have abundance,
To your best care.

Greedy. I'll punctually discharge it,
And give the best directions. Now am I
In mine own conceit a monarch, at the least
Arch-president of the boil'd, the roast, the baked,
For which I will eat often; and give thanks
When my belly's braced up like a drum, and that's pure justice. [Exit.]

Over. It must be so:—should the foolish girl prove modest,

She may spoil all; she had it not from me,
But from her mother; I was ever forward,
As she must be, and therefore I'll prepare her.

Enter Margaret.

Alone—and let your women wait without.

Marg. Your pleasure, sir?

Over. Ha! this is a neat dressing!
These orient pearls and diamonds well placed
too!

The gown affects me not, it should have been Embroi'der'd o'er and o'er with flowers of gold;
But these rich jewels, and quaint fashion help
it.

And how below? since oft the wanton eye,
The face observed, descends unto the foot,
Which being well proportion'd, as yours is,
Invites as much as perfect white and red,
Though without art. How like you your new woman,

The lady Downfallen?

Marg. Well, for a companion;
Not as a servant.

Over. Is she humble, Meg,
And careful too, her ladyship forgotten?

Marg. I pity her fortune.

Over. Pity her! trample on her.
I took her up in an old amin gown, (Even starved for want of twopenny chops,) to serve thee,

And if I understand she but repines
To do thee any duty, though ne'er so servile,
I'll pack her to her knight, where I have lodged him, [ther.]

Into the counter, and there let them howl toge-
Marg. You know your own ways, but for me,
I blush

When I command her, that was once attended
With persons not inferiour to myself
In birth. [ter.]

Over. In birth! why, art thou not my daugh-

* Linseywoolsey.

The blest child of my industry and wealth?
Why, foolish girl, was't not to make thee great,
That I have run, and still pursue, those ways
That hale down curses on me, which I mind not!

Part with these humble thoughts, and apt thyself

To the noble state I labour to advance thee;
Or, by my hopes to see thee honourable,
I will adopt a stranger to my heir,
And throw thee from my care: do not provoke
me.

Marg. I will not, sir; mould me which way you please.

Re-enter Greedy.

Over. How! interrupted!

Greedy. 'Tis matter of importance.
The cook, sir, is self-will'd, and will not learn From my experience; there's a fawn brought in, sir,

And, for my life, I cannot make him roast it
With a Norfolk dumpling in the belly of it;
And, sir, we wise men know, without the dumpling

'Tis not worth three-pence.

Over. Would it were whole in thy belly,
To stuff it out! cook it any way; prithee, leave
me.

Greedy. Without order for the dumpling?

Over. Let it be dumped
Which way thou wilt; or tell him, I will scald
him

In his own caldron.

Greedy. I had lost my stomach
Had I lost my mistress dumpling; I'll give thanks for't. [Exit.]

Over. But to our business, Meg; you have heard who dines here?

Marg. I have, sir.

Over. 'Tis an honourable man;
A lord, Meg, and commands a regiment
Of soldiers, and, what's rare, is one himself,
A bold and understanding one: and to be
A lord, and a good leader, in one volume,
Is granted unto few but such as rise up
The kingdom's glory.

Re-enter Greedy.

Greedy. I'll resign my office,
If I be not better obey'd.

Over. 'Slight, art thou frantick?

Greedy. Frantick! 'twould make me fran-tick, and stark mad,

Were I not a justice of peace and quorum too,
Which this rebellious cook cares not a straw for.
There are a dozen of woodcocks——

Over. Make thyself

Thirteen, the baker's dozen.

Greedy. I am contented,
So they may be dress'd to my mind; he has found out

A new device for sauce, and will not dish them
With toasts and butter; my father was a tri-lor, [cock;]

And my name, though a justice, Greedy Wood-

And, ere I'll see my lineage so abused,
I'll give up my commission.

Over. Cook!—Rogue, obey him!

I have given the word, pray you now remove yourself
To a collar of brawn, and trouble me no further.

Greedy. I will, and meditate what to eat at dinner. [Exit.

Over. And as I said, Meg, when this gull disturb'd us,

This honourable lord, this colonel,
I would have thy husband.

Marg. There's too much disparity
Between his quality and mine. to hope it.

Over. I more than hope, and doubt not to effect it,

Be thou no enemy to thyself; my wealth
Shall weigh his titles down, and make you equals. [me;

Now for the means to assure him thine, observe
Remember he's a courtier, and a soldier,
And not to be trifled with; and, therefore, when
He comes to woo you, see you do not coy it:
This mincing modesty has spoil'd many a match
By a first refusal, in vain after hoped for.

Marg. You'll have me, sir, preserve the distance that Confines a virgin?

Over. Virgin me no virgins!

I must have you lose that name, or you lose me.
I will have you private—start not—I say, private:

If thou art my true daughter, not a bastard,
Thou wilt venture alone with one man, though he came

Like Jupiter to Semele, and come off too;
And therefore, when he kisses you, kiss close.

Marg. I have heard this is the strumpets' fashion, sir,

Which I must never learn.

Over. Learn any thing,

And from any creature that may make thee
great;

From the devil himself.

Marg. This is but devilish doctrine!

Over. Or, if his blood grow hot, suppose he offer

Beyond this, do not you stay till it cool,
But meet his ardour; if a couch be near,
Sit down on't, and invite him.

Marg. In your house,

Your own house, sir! for heaven's sake, what are you then?

Or what shall I be, sir?

Over. Stand not on form;

Words are no substances.

Marg. Though you could dispense

With your own honour, cast aside religion,
The hopes of heaven, or fear of hell; excuse
me,

In worldly policy this is not the way
To make me his wife; his whore, I grant it may do.

My maiden honour so soon yielded up,
Nay, prostituted, cannot but assure him
I, that am light to him, will not hold weight
Whene'er tempted by others: so, in judgment,
When to his lust I have given up my honour,
He must and will forsake me.

Over. How! forsake thee!

Do I wear a sword for fashion? or is this arm
Shrunk up, or wither'd? does there live a man
Of that large list I have encounter'd with,
Can truly say I e'er gave inch of ground
Not purchased with his blood that did oppose
me?

Forsake thee when the thing is done! he dares
not.

Give me but proof he has enjoy'd thy person,
Though all his captains, echoes to his will,
Stood arm'd by his side to justify the wrong,
And he himself in the head of his bold troop,
Spite of his lordship, and his colonelship,
Or the judge's favour, I will make him render
A bloody and a strict account, and force him,
By marrying thee, to cure thy wounded honour!
I have said it.

Enter Marrall.

Mar. Sir, the man of honour's come,
Newly alighted.

Over. In, without reply;
And do as I command, or thou art lost.

[Exit Margaret.

Is the loud musick I gave order for Ready to receive him?

Mar. 'Tis, sir.

Over. Let them sound

A princely welcome. Roughness awhile leave
me;

For fawning now, a stranger to my nature,
Must make way for me.

Loud musick. Enter Lord Lovell, Greedy,

Albworth and Marrall.

Lov. Sir, you meet your trouble.

Over. What you are pleased to style so, is an honour

Above my worth and fortunes.

All. Strange! so humble.

Over. A justice of peace, my lord.

[Presents Greedy to him.

Lov. Your hand, good sir.

Greedy. This is a lord, and some think this a favour;

But I had rather have my hand in my dumpling.

Over. Room for my lord.

Lov. I miss, sir, your fair daughter

To crown my welcome.

Over. May it please my lord

To taste a glass of Greek wine first, and suddenly

She shall attend my lord.

Lov. You'll be obey'd, sir.

[Exeunt all but Overreach.

Over. 'Tis to my wish: as soon as come, ask for her!

Why, Meg! Meg Overreach!—

Re-enter Margaret.

How ! tears in your eyes !

Hah ! dry them quickly, or I'll dig them out.
Is this a time to whimper ? meet that greatness
That flies into thy bosom, think what 'tis
For me to say, My honourable daughter ;
And thou, when I stand bare, to say, Put on ;
Or, Father, you forget yourself. No more,
But be instructed, or expect—he comes !

Re-enter Lord Lovell, Greedy, Allworth, and Marrall.

A black-brow'd girl, my lord.

[Lord Lovell salutes Margaret.]

Lov. As I live, a rare one.

All. He's ta'en already : I am lost.

Over. That kiss

Came twanging off, I like it ; quit the room.

[Exeunt all but Over. Lov. and Marg.]

A little bashful, my good lord, but you,
I hope, will teach her boldness.

Lov. I am happy

In such a scholar : but——

Over. I am past learning,

And therefore leave you to yourselves : remember. [Exit.]

Lov. You see, fair lady, your father is solicitous

To have you change the barren name of virgin
Into a hopeful wife.

Marg. His haste, my lord,

Holds no power o'er my will.

Lov. But o'er your duty.

Marg. Which, forced too much, may break.

Lov. Bend rather, sweetest :

Think of your years.

Marg. Too few to match with yours ;

And choicest fruits too soon plucked, rot and wither.

Lov. Do you think I am old ?

Marg. I am sure I am too young.

Lov. I can advance you.

Marg. To a hill of sorrow ;

Where every hour I may expect to fall,
But never hope firm footing. You are noble,

I of a low descent, however rich ;

And tissues match'd with scarlet suit but ill.

O, my good lord, I could say more, but that
I dare not trust these walls.

Lov. Pray you, trust my ear then.

Re-enter Overreach behind listening.

Over. Close at it ! whispering ! this is excellent !

And, by their postures, a consent on both parts.

Re-enter Greedy behind.

Greedy. Sir Giles, sir Giles !

Over. The great fiend stop that clapper !

Greedy. It must ring out, sir, when my belly rings noon.

The baked-meats are run out, the roast turn'd powder.

Over. I shall powder you.

Greedy. Beat me to dust, I care not ;
In such a cause as this I'll die a martyr.

Over. Marry, and shall, you barathrum of the shambles* ! [Strikes him.]

Greedy. How ! strike a justice of peace ! 'tis petty treason

Edwardi quinto : but that you are my friend,
I could commit you without bail or mainprize.

Over. Leave your bawling, sir, or I shall commit you

Where you shall not dine to-day ; disturb my lord,

When he is in discourse !

Greedy. Is't a time to talk

When we should be munching ?

Lov. Hah ! I heard some noise.

Over. Mum, villain : vanish ! shall we break a bargain

Almost made up ? [Thrusts Greedy off.]

Lov. Lady, I understand you,

And rest most happy in your choice, believe it ;
I'll be a careful pilot to direct

Your yet uncertain bark to a port of safety.

Marg. So shall your honour save two lives, and bind us

Your slaves for ever.

Lov. I am in the act rewarded,

Since it is good ; howe'er, you must put on
An amorous carriage towards me, to delude
Your subtle father.

Marg. I am prone to that.

Lov. Now break we off our conference.—Sir Giles !

Where is sir Giles ? [Overreach comes forward.]

Re-enter Allworth, Marrall, and Greedy.

Over. My noble lord ; and how Does your lordship find her ?

Lov. Apt, sir Giles, and coming ;

And I like her the better.

Over. So do I too.

Lov. Yet should we take forts at the first assault,

'Twere poor in the defendant ; I must confirm
her

With a love-letter or two, which I must have Deliver'd by my page, and you give way to't.

Over. With all my soul :—a towardly gentleman !

Your hand, good master Allworth ; know my house

Is ever open to you.

All. 'Twas shut till now.

Over. Well done, well done, my honourable daughter !

Thou'rt so already : know this gentle youth,
And cherish him, my honourable daughter.

Marg. I shall, with my best care.

[Noise within as of a coach.]

* Over. Marry, and shall, you barathrum of the shambles !
Literally from Horace :

Prenus et tempestas, barathrumque macelli !

Barathrum is frequently used by our old poets in the classical sense of an abyss, or devouring gulf : Thus Shirley,

" You come to scour your maw with the good cheer

Which will be lost in your lean barathrum,

You kitchen-stuff devourer "

The Wedding.

I have not heard it observed that Massinger has taken a few traits of the character of his justice from Paulipho, in the old comedy of the Supplices.—Gifford.

Over. A coach!

Greedy. More stops
Before we go to dinner!

Enter Lady Allworth and Wellborn.

L. All. If I find welcome,
You share in it; if not, I'll back again,
Now I know your ends; for I come arm'd for all
Can be objected.

Lov. How! the lady Allworth!

Over. And thus attended!

[Lovell salutes Lady Allworth, Lady Allworth salutes Murgaret.]

Mar. No, I am a dolt,
The spirit of lies hath enter'd me.

Over. Peace, Patch;
'Tis more than wonder! an astonishment
That does possess me wholly!

Lov. Noble lady,
This is a favour, to prevent my visit,
The service of my life can never equal.

L. All. My lord, I laid wait for you, and much hoped
You would have made my poor house your first inn:

And therefore doubting that you might forget
me,
Or too long dwell here, having such ample
cause,

In this unequall'd beauty, for your stay;
And fearing to trust any but myself
With the relation of my service to you,
I borrow'd so much from my long restraint,
And took the air in person to invite you.

Lov. Your bounties are so great, they rob me, madam,
Of words to give you thanks.

L. All. Good sir Giles Overreach. [Salutes him]
—How dost thou, Marrall? liked you my meat
so ill,

You'll dine no more with me?

Greedy. I will, when you please,
An it like your ladyship.

L. All. When you please, master Greedy;
If meat can do it, you shall be satisfied.
And now, my lord, pray take into your knowledge

This gentleman; howe'er his outside's coarse,
[Presents Wellborn.]

His inward linings are as fine and fair
As any man's; wonder not I speak at large:
And howsoe'er his humour carries him
To be thus accoutred, or what taint soever
For his wild life hath stuck upon his fame,
He may, ere long, with boldness, rank himself
With some that have condemn'd him. Sir Giles

Overreach,

If I am welcome, bid him so.

Over. My nephew!
He has been too long a stranger: faith you have,

Pray let it be mended.

[Lovell conferring aside with Wellborn.]

Mar. Why, sir, what do you mean?
This is rogue Wellborn, monster, prodigy,
That should hang or drown himself; no man of worship,
Much less your nephew.

Over. Well, sirrah, we shall reckon
For this hereafter.

Mar. I'll not lose my jeer,
Though I be beaten dead for't.

Well. Let my silence plead
In my excuse, my lord, till better leisure
Offer itself to hear a full relation
Of my poor fortunes.

Lov. I would hear, and help them.

Over. Your dinner waits you.

Lov. Pray you lead, we follow.

L. All. Nay, you are my guest; come, dear master Wellborn. [Exeunt all but Greedy.]

Greedy. Dear master Wellborn! So she said;
heaven! heaven!

If my belly would give me leave, I could ruminate

All day on this: I have granted twenty warrants

To have him committed, from all prisons in the shire,

To Nottingham gaol; and now, Dear master
Wellborn!

And, My good Nephew!—but I play the fool
To stand here prating, and forget my dinner.

Re-enter Marrall.

Are they set, Marrall?

Mar. Long since; pray you a word, sir.

Greedy. No wording now.

Mar. In troth, I must; my master
Knowing you are his good friend, makes bold with you,

And does entreat you, more guests being come in

Than he expected, especially his nephew,
The table being full too, you would excuse
him,

And sup with him on the cold meat.

Greedy. How! no dinner,

After all my care?

Mar. 'Tis but a penance for
A meal; besides, you broke your fast.

Greedy. That was
But a bit to stay my stomach: a man in commission

Give place to a tatterdemalion!

Mar. No bug words, sir:
Should his worship hear you—

Greedy. Lose my dumpling too,
And butter'd toasts, and woodcocks!

Mar. Come, have patience.
If you will dispense a little with your worship,
And sit with the waiting women, you'll have dumpling,

Woodcock, and butter'd toasts too.

Greedy. This revives me:

I will gorge there sufficiently.

Mar. This is the way, sir.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.

Another Room in Overreach's House.

Enter Overreach, as from dinner.

Over. She's caught! O women!—she neglects my lord,

And all her compliments applied to Wellborn!
The garments of her widowhood laid by,
She now appears as glorious as the spring.
Her eyes fix'd on him, in the wine she drinks,
He being her pledge, she sends him burning kisses.

And sits on thorns, till she be private with him.
She leaves my meat to feed upon his looks;
And if in our discourse he be but named,
From her a deep sigh follows. But why grieve I
At this? it makes for me; if she prove his,
All that is her's is mine, as I will work him.

Enter Marrall.

Mar. Sir, the whole board is troubled at your rising.

Over. No matter, I'll excuse it: prithee, Marrall,

Watch an occasion to invite my nephew
To speak with me in private.

Mar. Who! the rogue

The lady scorn'd to look on?

Over. You are a wag.

Enter Lady Allworth and Wellborn.

Mar. See, sir, she's come, and cannot be without him.

L. All. With your favour, sir, after a plentiful dinner,

I shall make bold to walk a turn or two
In your rare garden

Over. There's an arbour too,

If your ladyship please to use it.

L. All. Come, master Wellborn.

[Exit Lady Allworth and Wellborn.]

Over. Grosser and grosser! now I believe the poet

feign'd not, but was historical, when he wrote
Pasiphaë was enamour'd of a bull:
This lady's lust's more monstrous. My good lord.

Enter Lord Lovell, Margaret, and the rest.
Excuse my manners.

Lov. There needs none, sir Giles,
I may ere long say Father, when it pleases
My dearest mistress to give warrant to it.

Over. She shall seal to it, my lord, and make me happy.

Re-enter Wellborn and Lady Allworth.

Marg. My lady is return'd.

L. All. Provide my coach,
I'll instantly away; my thanks, sir Giles,
For my entertainment.

Over. 'Tis your nobleness
To think it such.

L. All. I must do you a further wrong,
In taking away your honourable guest.

Lov. I wait on you, madam; farewell, good sir Giles.

L. All. Good mistress Margaret; nay, come, master Wellborn,

I must not leave you behind; in sooth, I must not.

Over. Rob me not, madam, of all joys at once;

Let my nephew stay behind: he shall have my coach,

And, after some small conference between us,
Soon overtake your ladyship.

L. All. Stay not long, sir.

Lov. This parting kiss: [Kisses Margaret.] you shall every day hear from me

By my faithful page.

All. 'Tis a service I am proud of.

[Exit Lord Lovell, Lady Allworth, Alworth and Marrall.]

Over. Daughter, to your chamber.

[Exit Margaret.]

You may wonder, nephew,
After so long an enmity between us,
I should desire your friendship.

Well. So I do, sir;

'Tis strange to me.

Over. But I'll make it no wonder;

And what is more, unfold my nature to you.

We worldly men, when we see friends, and kinsmen,

Past hope sunk in their fortunes, lend no hand
To lift them up, but rather set our feet

Upon their heads, to press them to the bottom;

As, I must yield, with you I practised it:

But, now I see you in a way to rise,
I can and will assist you; this rich lady
(And I am glad of't) is enamour'd of you;

'Tis too apparent, nephew.

Well. No such thing:

Compassion rather, sir.

Over. Well, in a word,

Because your stay is short, I'll have you seen
No more in this base shape; nor shall she say,

She married you like a beggar, or in debt.

Well. He'll run into the noose, and save my labour. [Aside.]

Over. You have a trunk of rich clothes, not far hence,

In pawn; I will redeem them; and that no clamour

May taint your credit for your petty debts,
You shall have a thousand pounds to cut them
off,

And go a free man to the wealthy lady.

Well. This done, sir, out of love, and no ends else—

Over. As it is, nephew.

Well. Binds me still your servant.

Over. No compliments, you are staid for:
ere you have sup'd

You shall hear from me. My coach, knaves, for my nephew!

To-morrow I will visit you.

Well. Here's an uncle
In a man's extremes! how much they do belie
you,

That say you are hard-hearted!

Over. My deeds, nephew, Shall speak my love; what men report I weigh not. [Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

SCENE 1.

A Room in Lady Allworth's House.

Enter Lord Lovell and Allworth.

Lov. 'Tis well; give me my cloak; I now discharge you

From further service: mind your own affairs,
I hope they will prove successful.

All. What is blest

With your good wish, my lord, cannot but prosper.
Let aftertimes report, and to your honour,
How much I stand engaged, for I want language
To speak my debt; yet if a tear or two
Of joy, for your much goodness, can supply
My tongue's defects, I could——

Lov. Nay, do not melt:

This ceremonial thanks to me's superfluous.

Over. [within.] Is my lord stirring?

Lov. 'Tis he! oh, here's your letter: let him in.

Enter Overreach, Greedy, and Marraill.

Over. A good day to my lord!

Lov. You are an early riser,
Sir Giles.

Over. And reason, to attend your lordship.

Lov. And you, too, master Greedy, up so soon!

Greedy. In troth, my lord, after the sun is up

I cannot sleep, for I have a foolish stomach
That croaks for breakfast. With your lordship's favour,

I have a serious question to demand
Of my worthy friend sir Giles.

Lov. Pray you use your pleasure.

Greedy. How far, sir Giles, and pray you answer me

Upon your credit, hold you it to be
From your manor-house, to this of my lady Allworth's?

Over. Why, some four mile.

Greedy. How! four mile, good sir Giles——

Upon your reputation, think better;
For if you do abate but one half quarter
Of five, you do yourself the greatest wrong
That can be in the world; for four miles riding

Could not have raised so huge an appetite
As I feel gnawing on me.

Mar. Whether you ride,

Or go afoot, you are that way still provided,
An it please your worship.

Over. How now, sirrah? prating

Before my lord! no difference! Go to my nephew, [ship]
See all his debts discharged, and help his wor-
To fit on his rich suit.

Mar. I may fit you too.

Toss'd like a dog still. [Eat.]

Lov. I have writ this morning

A few lines to my mistress, your fair daughter.

Over. 'Twill fire her, for she's wholly your's already:——

Sweet master Allworth, take my ring; 'twill carry you

To her presence, I dare warrant you; and there plead

For my good lord, if you shall find occasion.

That done, pray ride to Nottingham, get a license,

Still by this token. I'll have it dispatch'd,

And suddenly, my lord, that I may say,

My honourable, nay, right honourable daughter.

Greedy. Take my advice, young gentleman,
get your breakfast;

'Tis unwholesome to ride fasting: I'll eat with
you,

And eat to purpose.

Over. Hungry again! did you not devour
this morning

A shield of brawn, and a barrel of Colchester oysters?

Greedy. Why, that was, sir, only to scour my stomach.

A kind of a preparative. Come, gentleman,
I will not have you feed like the hangman of Flushing,

Alone, while I am here.

Lov. Haste your return.

All. I will not fail, my lord.

Greedy. Nor I to line

My Christmas coffer.

[Exeunt Greedy and Allworth.]

Over. To my wish; we are private.

I come not to make offer with my daughter

A certain portion, that were poor and trivial:

In one word, I pronounce all that is mine,

In lands or leases, ready coin or goods,

With her, my lord, comes to you; nor shall you have

One motive to induce you to believe

I live too long, since every year I'll add

Something unto the heap, which shall be your's
too.

Lov. You are a right kind father.

Over. You shall have reason

To think me such. How do you like this seat?

It is well wooded, and well water'd, the acres

Fertile and rich; would it not serve for change

To entertain your friends in a summer progress?

What thinks my noble lord?

Lov. 'Tis a wholesome air,

And well built pile; and she that's mistress
of it

Worthy the large revenue.

Over. She the mistress!

It may be so for a time: but let my lord

Say only that he likes it, and would have it,

I say, ere long 'tis his.

Lov. Impossible.

Over. You do conclude too fast, not knowing
me,

Nor the engines that I work by. 'Tis not alone

The lady Allworth's lands, for those once Well-born's

(As by her dotage on him I know they will be,) Shall soon be mine; but point out any man's In all the shire, and say they lie convenient And useful for your lordship, and once more I say aloud, they are your's.

Lov. I dare not own
What's by unjust and cruel means extorted;
My fame and credit are more dear to me,
Than so to expose them to be censured by
The publick voice.

Over. You run, my lord, no hazard.
Your reputation shall stand as fair
In all good men's opinions as now;
Nor can my actions, though condemn'd for ill,
Cast any foul aspersion upon your's.
For, though I do condemn report myself,
As a mere sound, I still will be so tender
Of what concerns you, in all points of honour,
That the immaculate whiteness of your fame,
Nor your unquestioned integrity,
Shall e'er be sullied with one taint or spot
That may take from your innocence and candour.
All my ambition is to have my daughter
Right honourable, which my lord can make her:
And might I live to dance upon my knee
A young lord Lovell, born by her unto you,
I write nil ultra to my proudest hopes.
As for possessions, and annual rents,
Equivalent to maintain you in the port
Your noble birth and present state requires,
I do remove that burthen from your shoulders,
And take it on mine own: for, though I ruin
The country to supply your riotous waste,
The scourge of prodigals, want, shall never find
you.

Lov. Are you not frighted with the imprecations
And curses of whole families, made wretched
By your sinister practices?

Over. Yes, as rocks are,
When foamy billows split themselves against
Their flinty ribs; or as the moon is moved,
When wolves, with hunger pined, howl at her brightness.

I am of a solid temper, and, like these,
Steer on a constant course: with mine own
sword,

If call'd into the field, I can make that right
Which fearful enemies murmur'd at as wrong.
Now, for these other piddling complaints
Breath'd out in bitterness; as when they call
me

Extortioner, tyrant, cormorant, or intruder
On my poor neighbour's right, or grand incloser
Of what was common, to my private use;
Nay, when my ears are pierced with widows'
cries,

[old,
And undone orphans wash with tears my thresh-
I only think what 'tis to have my daughter
Right honourable; and 'tis a powerful charm
Makes me insensible of remorse, or pity,
Or the least sting of conscience.

Lov. I admire

The toughness of your nature.

Over. 'Tis for you,
My lord, and for my daughter, I am marble;
Nay more, if you will have my character
In little, I enjoy more true delight
In my arrival to my wealth these dark
And crooked ways, than you shall e'er take pleasure

In spending what my industry hath compass'd.
My haste commands me hence; in one word,
therefore,

Is it a match?

Lov. I hope, that is past doubt now.

Over. Then rest secure; not the hate of all mankind here,
Nor fear of what can fall on me hereafter,
Shall make me study aught but your advancement

One story higher: an earl! if gold can do it.
Dispute not my religion, nor my faith;
Though I am borne thus headlong by my will,
You may make choice of what belief you please,
To me they are equal; so, my lord, good morrow.

[Exit.

Lov. He's gone—I wonder how the earth can bear

Such a portent! I, that have lived a soldier,
And stood the enemy's violent charge undaunted,
To hear this blasphemous beast am bath'd all over

In a cold sweat: yet, like a mountain, he (Confirm'd in atheistical assertions)
Is no more shaken than Olympus is
When angry Boreas loads his double head*
With sudden drifts of snow.

Amble.*

L. All. Save you, my lord!
Disturb I not your privacy?

Lov. No, good madam;
For your own sake I am glad you came no sooner:

Since this bold bad man, Sir Giles Overreach,
Made such a plain discovery of himself,
And read this morning such a devilish matins,
That I should think it a sin next to his
But to repeat it.

L. All. I ne'er press'd, my lord,
On others privacies; yet, against my will,
Walking, for health sake, in the gallery
Adjoining to your lodgings, I was made
(So vehement and loud he was) partaker
Of his tempting offers.

Lov. Please you to command
Your servants hence, and I shall gladly hear
Your wiser counsel.

-than Olympus is

*When angry Boreas loads his double head
With sudden drifts of snow.]* Either Massinger, or his transcriber, has mistaken Olympus for Parnassus; it may be the former, for, in trusting to their memory, such slips are not unusual in our old writers, who were indeed little solicitous of accuracy in these trivial matters.—Gifford.

L. All. 'Tis, my lord, a woman's,
But true and hearty;—wait in the next room,
But be within call; yet not so near to force me
To whisper my intents.

Amb. We are taught better
By you, good madam.

Woman. And well know our distance.

L. All. Do so, and talk not; 'twill become your breeding. [Exeunt Ambie and Woman.]
Now, my good lord: if I may use my freedom,
As to an honour'd friend—

Lov. You lessen else
Your favour to me.

L. All. I dare then say thus;
As you are noble (howe'er common men
Make sordid wealth the object and sole end
Of their industrious aims) 'twill not agree
With those of eminent blood, who are engaged
More to prefer their honours, than to increase
The state left to them by their ancestors,
To study large additions to their fortunes,
And quite neglect their births:—though I must grant,
Riches, well got, to be a useful servant,
But a bad master.

Lov. Madam, 'tis confess'd;
But what infer you from it?

L. All. This, my lord;
That as all wrongs, though thrust into one scale,
Slide of themselves off, when right fills the other,
And cannot bide the trial; so all wealth,
I mean if ill acquired, cemented to honour
By virtuous ways achieved, and bravely purchased,

Is but as rubbish pour'd into a river,
(Howe'er intended to make good the bank,)
Rendering the water, that was pure before,
Polluted and unwholesome. I allow
The heir of Sir Giles Overreach, Margaret,
A maid well qualified, and the richest match
Our north part can make boast of; yet she cannot,

With all that she brings with her, fill their mouths,
That never will forget who was her father;
Or that my husband Allworth's lands, and Wellborn's,

(How wrong from both needs now no repetition,)
Were real motives that more work'd your lordship

To join your families, than her form and virtues:
You may conceive the rest.

Lov. I do, sweet madam,
And long since have considered it. I know,
The sum of all that makes a just man happy
Consists in the well choosing of his wife:
And there, well to discharge it, does require
Equality of years, of birth, of fortune;
For beauty being poor, and not cried up
By birth or wealth, can truly mix with neither.
And wealth, where there's such difference in years,

And fair descent, must make the yoke uneasy:—
But I come nearer.

L. All. Pray you do, my lord.

Lov. Were Overreach's states thrice centupled, his daughter
Millions of degrees much fairer than she is,
Howe'er I might urge precedents to excuse me,
I would not so adulterate my blood
By marrying Margaret, and so leave my issue
Made up of several pieces, one part scarlet
And the other London blue. In my own tomb
I will inter my name first.

L. All. I am glad to hear this,— [Aside.]
Why then, my lord, pretend your marriage to
her?

Dissimulation but ties false knots
On that straight line by which you hitherto
Have measured all you actions.

Lov. I make answer,
And aptly, with a question. Wherefore have
you,
That, since your husband's death, have lived a strict
And chaste nun's life, on the sudden given yourself

To visits and entertainments? think you, madam,
'Tis not grown publick conference? or the favours

Which you too prodigally have thrown on Well-
born,
Being too reserved before, incur not censure?

L. All. I am innocent here, and, on my life,
I swear

My ends are good.

Lov. On my soul, so are mine
To Margaret; but leave both to the event:
And since this friendly privacy does serve
But as an offer'd means unto ourselves
To search each other further, you having shewn
Your care of me, I, my respect to you;
Deny me not, but still in chaste words, madam,
An afternoon's discourse.

L. All. So I shall hear you. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.

Before Tapwell's House.

Enter Tapwell and Froth.

Tap. Undone, undone! this was your counsel, Froth.

Froth. Mine! I defy thee: did not master
Marrall

(He has marr'd all, I am sure) strictly command us,

On pain of sir Giles Overreach's displeasure,
To turn the gentleman out of doors?

Tap. 'Tis true;

But now he's his uncle's darling, and has got Master justice Greedy, since he fill'd his belly,
At his commandment, to do any thing;
Woe, woe to us!

Froth. He may prove merciful.

Tap. Troth, we do not deserve it at his hands.
Though he knew all the passages of our house,
As the receiving of stolen goods, and bawdry,

When he was rogue Wellborn no man would believe him,

And then his information could not hurt us ;

But now he is right worshipful again,

Who dares but doubt his testimony ? methinks

I see thee, Froth, already in a cart

For a close bawd, thine eyes even pelted out

With dirt and rotten eggs ; and my hand hissing,

If I escape the halter, with the letter R

Printed upon it.

Froth. Would that were the worst !

That were but nine days' wonder : as for credit

We have none to lose, but we shall lose the money [on't.

He owes us, and his custom ; there's the worst

Tap. He has summon'd all his creditors by the drum,

And they swarm about him like so many soldiers

On the pay day ; and has found out such a NEW WAY

TO PAY HIS OLD DEBTS, as 'tis very likely

He shall be chronicled for it !

Froth. He deserves it

More than ten pageants*. But are you sure his worship

Comes this way to my lady's ?

[A cry within : Brave master Wellborn !

Tap. Yes :—I hear him.

Froth. Be ready with your petition, and present it

To his good grace.

Enter : Wellborn in a rich habit, followed by Marrall, Greedy, Order, Furnace, and Creditors ; Tapwell kneeling, delivers his petition.

Well. How's this ! petition'd too ?—

But note what miracles the payment of

A little trash, and a rich suit of clothes

Can work upon these rascals ! I shall be,

I think, prince Wellborn.

Mar. When your worship's married

You may be :—I know what I hope to see you.

Well. Then look thou for advancement.

Mar. To be known

Your worship's bailiff is the mark I shoot at.

Well. And shou shalt hit it.

Mar. Pray you, sir, dispatch

These needy followers, and for my admittance, Provided you'll defend me from sir Giles,

*———'tis very likely

He shal' be chronicled for it !

Froth. He deserves it

More than ten pageants.] This is a pleasant allusion to the minute industry with which Holingshead, Stowe, Baker, and the other chroniclers of those times, collected every unimportant event and individual history, to swell their useful but desultory pages.

"I more voluminous should grow
Chiefly if I, like them, should tell
All kind of weather that befel,
Than Holingshead or Stowe."

Cowley.

The reply of Froth is sarcastically aimed at the perverse pains bestowed by the former of these writers on the ridiculous mummery, under the name of pageants, which the city was in the habit of exhibiting on every publick occasion.—Gifford.

Whose service I am weary of, I'll say something You shall give thanks for.

Well. Fear me not sir Giles.

Greedy. Who, Tapwell ? I remember thy wife brought me,

Last new-year's tide, a couple of fat turkies.

Tap. And shall do every Christmass, let your worship

But stand my friend now.

Greedy. How ! with master Wellborn ?

I can do any thing with him on such terms.—

See you this honest couple, they are good souls

As ever drew out fosset ; have they not

A pair of honest faces ?

Well. I o'erheard you,

And the bribe he promised. You are cozen'd in them ;

For, of all the scum that grew rich by my riots,

This, for a most unthankful knave, and this,

For a base bawd and whore, have worst deserved me,

And therefore speak not for them : by your place

You are rather to do me justice ; lend me your ear :

—Forget his turkies, and call in his license,

And, at the next fair, I'll give you a yoke of oxen

Worth all his poultry.

Greedy. I am changed on the sudden

In my opinion ! come near ; nearer, rascal.

And, now I view him better, did you e'er see

One look so like an archknave ? his very countenance,

Should an understanding judge but look upon him,

Would hang him, though he were innocent.

Tap. Froth. Worshipful sir.

Greedy. No, though the Great Turk came, instead of turkies,

To beg my favour, I am inexorable.

Thou hast an ill name : besides thy musty ale,

That hath destroy'd many of the king's liege people,

Thou never hadst in thy house, to stay men's stomachs,

A piece of Suffolk cheese, or gammon of bacon,

Or any esculent, as the learned call it,

For their emolument, but sheer drink only.

For which gross fault I here do damn thy license,

Forbidding thee ever to tap or draw ;

For, instantly, I will in mine own person

Command the constable to pull down thy sign, And do it before I eat.

Froth. No mercy !

Greedy. Vanish !

If I shew any, may my promised oxen gore me !

Tap. Unthankful knaves are ever so rewarded.

[Exeunt Greedy, Tapwell, and Froth.

Well. Speak ; what are you ?

I Cred. A decay'd vintner, sir,

That might have thrived, but that your worship broke me

With trusting you with muskadine and eggs,
And five-pound suppers, with your after drink-
ings,

When you lodged upon the Bankside.

Well. I remember.

1 Cred. I have not been hasty, nor e'er laid to arrest you ;

And therefore, sir—

Well. Thou art an honest fellow,
I'll set thee up again ; see his bill paid.
What are you ?

2 Cred. A tailor once, but now mere botcher.
I gave you credit for a suit of clothes,
Which was all my stock, but you failing in payment,
I was removed from the shop-board, and confined

Under a stall.

Well. See him paid ; and botch no more.

2 Cred. I ask no interest, sir.

Well. Such tailors need not ;
If their bills are paid in one and twenty year
They are seldom losers.—O, I know thy face,
Thou wert my surgeon : you must tell no tales :
Those days are done. I will pay you in private.

Ord. A royal gentleman !

Furn. Royal as an emperor !

He'll prove a brave master ; my good lady knew
To choose a man.

Well. See all men else discharg'd ;
And since old debts are clear'd by a new way,
A little bounty will not misbecome me ;
There's something, honest cook, for thy good breakfasts,

And this for your respect ; take't, 'tis good gold,
And I able to spare it.

Ord. You are too munificent.

Furn. He was ever so.

Well. Pray you, on before.

3 Cred. Heaven bless you !

Mar. At four o'clock the rest know where to meet me.

[Exeunt Order, Furnace, and Creditors.]

Well. Now, master Marrall, what's the weighty secret

You promised to impart ?

Mar. Sir, time nor place

Allow me to relate each circumstance,
This only in a word ; I know Sir Giles

Will come upon you for security
For his thousand pounds, which you must not consent to.

As he grows in heat, as I am sure he will,
Be you but rough, and say he's in your debt
Ten times the sum, upon sale of your land ;
I had a hand in't (I speak it to my shame)
When you were defeated of it.

Well. That's forgiven.

Mar. I shall deserve it : then urge him to produce

The deed in which you pass'd it over to him,
Which I know he'll have about him to deliver
To the lord Lovell, with many other writings,
And present monies : I'll instruct you further,

As I wait on your worship : if I play not my prize

To your full content, and your uncle's much vexation,

Hang up Jack Marrall.

Well. I rely upon thee.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.

A Room in Overreach's House.

Enter Allworth and Margaret.

All. Whether to yield the first praise to my lord's

Unequall'd temperance, or your constant sweetness,

That I yet live, my weak hands fasten'd on Hope's anchor, spite of all storms of despair,
I yet rest doubtful.

Marg. Give it to lord Lovell ;
For what in him was bounty, in me's duty.
I make but payment of a debt to which
My vows, in that high office register'd,
Are faithful witnesses.

All. 'Tis true, my dearest ;
Yet, when I call to mind how many fair ones
Make wilful shipwreck of their faiths, and oaths

To God and man, to fill the arms of greatness ;
And you rise up no less than a glorious star
To the amazement of the world,—that hold ou
Against the stern authority of a father,
And spurn at honour, when it comes to court
you ;

I am so tender of your good, that faintly,
With your wrong, I can wish myself that right
You yet are pleased to do me.

Marg. Yet, and ever.

To me what's title, when content is wanting ?
Or wealth, raked up together with much care,
And to be kept with more, when the heart pines,
In being dispossess'd of what it longs for
Beyond the Indian mines ? or the smooth brow
Of a pleased sire, that slaves me to his will ;
And so his ravenous humour may be feasted
By my obedience, and he see me great,
Leaves to my soul nor faculties nor power
To make her own election ?

All. But the dangers
That follow the repulse—

Marg. To me they are nothing :
Let Allworth love, I cannot be unhappy.
Suppose the worst, that in his rage, he kill me ;
A tear or two, by you dropt on my horse,
In sorrow for my fate, will call back life
So far as but to say, that I die yours ;
I then shall rest in peace : or should he prove
So cruel, as one death would not suffice
His thirst of vengeance, but with lingering tor-
ments,

In mind and body, I must waste to air,
In poverty join'd with banishment ; so you share
In my afflictions, which I dare not wish you,
So high I prize you, I could undergo them
With such a patience as should look down
With scorn on his worst malice.

All. Heaven avert

Such trials of your true affection to me !
Nor will it unto you that are all mercy,
Shew so much rigour : but since we must run
Such desperate hazards, let us do our best
To steer between them.

Marg. Your lord's ours, and sure ;
And though but a young actor, second me
In doing to the life what he has plotted,

Enter Overreach behind.

The end may yet prove happy : now my All-worth.

All. To your letter, and put on a seeming anger.

Marg. I'll pay my lord all debts due to his title ;
And when with terms, not taking from his honour,

He does solicit me, I shall gladly hear him.
But in this peremptory, nay, commanding way,
T' appoint a meeting, and, without my knowledge,

A priest to tie the knot can ne'er be undone
Till death unloose it, is a confidence
In his lordship will deceive him.

All. I hope better,
Good lady.

Marg. Hope, sir, what you please : for me
I must take a safe and secure course ; I have
A father, and without his full consent,
Though all lords of the land kneel'd for my favour,

I can grant nothing.

Over. I like this obedience : [Comes forward.
But whoso'er my lord writes, must and shall be Accepted and embraced. Sweet master Allworth,
You shew yourself a true and faithful servant
To your good lord ; he has a jewel of you.
How ! frowning, Meg ? are these looks to receive
A messenger from my lord ? what's this ? give me it.

Marg. A piece of arrogant paper, like the inscriptions.

Over. [Reads.] Fair mistress, from your servant learn, all joys

*That we can hope for, if deferr'd, prove toys ;
Therefore this instant, and in private meet
A husband that will gladly, at your feet
Lay down his honours, tendering them to you
With all content, the church being paid her due.*
—Is this the arrogant piece of paper ? fool !
Will you still be one ? in the name of madness, what

Could his good honour write more to content
you ?

Is there aught else to be wish'd after these two,
That are already offer'd ; marriage first,
And lawful pleasure after : what would you
more ?

Marg. Why, I would be married like your daughter ; [ther,
Not hurried away i' the night I know not whi-
Without all ceremony ; no friends invited
To honour the solemnity.

All. An't please your honour,

For so before to-morrow I must style you,
My lord desires this privacy in respect
His honourable kinsmen are far off,
And his desires to have it done brook not
So long delay as to expect their coming ;
And yet he stands resolved, with all due pomp,
As running at the ring, plays, masks, and tilting
To have his marriage at court celebrated
When he has brought your honour up to London.

Over. He tells you true ; 'tis the fashion, on my knowledge :

Yet the good lord, to please your peevishness*,
Must put it off, forsooth ! and lose a night.
Tempt me no further ; if you do, this goad
Shall prick you to him.

Marg. I could be contented,
Were you but by, to do a father's part,
And give me in the church.

Over. So my lord have you,
What do I care who gives you ? since my lord
Does purpose to be private, I'll not cross him.
I know not, master Allworth, how my lord
May be provided, and therefore there's a purse
Of gold, 'twill serve this night's expense ; tomorrow

I'll furnish him with any sums : in the mean time,

Use my ring to my chaplain ; he is beneficed
At my manor of Got'em, and call'd parson Will-
do :

'Tis no matter for a license, I'll bear him out in't.

Marg. With your favour, sir, what warrant is your ring ?

He may suppose I got that twenty ways,
Without your knowledge ; and then to be refused,

Were such a stain upon me !—if you pleased, sir,
Your presence would do better.

Over. Still perverse !
I say again, I will not cross my lord ;
Yet I'll prevent you too.—Paper and ink, there !

All. I can furnish you.

Over. I thank you, I can write then. [Writes.

All. You may, if you please, put out the name of my lord,

In respect he comes disguised, and only write,
Marry her to this gentleman.

Over. Well advised.

'Tis done ; away !—[Margaret kneels.] my blessing girl ? thou hast it.

Nay, no reply, be gone :—good master All-
worth,

This shall be the best night's work you ever made.

All. I hope so, sir.

[Exeunt Allworth and Margaret.

* Yet the good lord, to please your peevishness, i. e. you ; his daughter, to whom he gives the title. I have sometimes thought that this mode of expression, which is more common than cur-tury readers, perhaps, imagine, is not sufficiently attended to by the commentators. Many difficulties would vanish if these appellations were duly noted, and applied.—Gifford.

Over. Farewell!—Now all's cocksure:
Methinks I hear already knights and ladies
Say, sir Giles Overreach, how is it with
Your honourable daughter? has her honour
Slept well to-night? or, Will her honour please
To accept this monkey, dog, or paroqueto,
(This is state in ladies) or my eldest son
To be her page, and wait upon her trencher?
My ends, my ends are compass'd!—then for
Wellborn
And the lands; where he once married to the widow—
I have him here—I can scarce contain myself,
I am so full of joy, nay, joy all over. [Exit.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.

A Room in Lady Allworth's House.

Enter Lord Lovell, Lady Allworth, and Amble.

L. All. By this you know how strong the motives were

That did, my lord, induce me to dispense
A little with my gravity, to advance,
In personating some few favours to him,
The plots and projects of the down-trod Well-
born.

Nor shall I e'er repent, although I suffer
In some few men's opinions for't, the action;
For he that ventured all for my dear husband,
Might justly claim an obligation from me,
To pay him such a courtesy; which had I
Coyly, or over-curiously denied,
It might have argued me of little love
To the deceased.

Lov. What you intended, madam,
For the poor gentleman, hath found good success;

For, as I understand, his debts are paid,
And he once more furnish'd for fair employment:
But all the arts that I have used to raise
The fortunes of your joy and mine, young All-
worth,

Stand yet in supposition, though I hope well.
For the young lovers are in wit more pregnant Than their years can promise; and for their desires,

On my knowledge, they are equal.

L. All. As my wishes

Are with yours, my lord; yet give me leave to fear

The building, though well grounded: to deceive
Sir Giles, that's both a lion and a fox
In his proceedings, were a work beyond
The strongest undertakers; not the trial
Of two weak innocents.

Lov. Despair not, madam:

Hard things are compass'd oft by easy means;
And judgment, being a gift derived from heaven,
Though sometimes lodged in the hearts of worldly men,

That ne'er consider from whom they receive it,
Forsakes such as abuse the giver of it.
Which is the reason, that the politick

And cunning statesman, that believes he fathoms
The counsels of all kingdoms on the earth,
Is by simplicity oft over-reach'd.

L. All. May he be so! yet, in his name to express it

Is a good omen.

Lov. May it to myself

Prove so, good lady, in my suit to you!

What think you of the motion?

L. All. Troth, my lord,

My own unworthiness may answer for me;
For had you, when that I was in my prime,
My virgin flower uncropp'd, presented me
With this great favour; looking on my low-
ness

Not in a glass of self-love, but of truth,
I could not but have thought it, as a blessing
Far, far beyond my merit.

Lov. You are too modest,
And undervalue that which is above
My title, or whatever I call mine.
I grant, were I a Spaniard, to marry
A widow might disparage me; but being
A true-born Englishman, I cannot find
How it can taint my honour: nay, what's more,
That which you think a blemish, is to me
The fairest lustre. You already, madam,
Have given sure proofs how dearly you can cherish

A husband that deserves you; which confirms
me,

That, if I am not wanting in my care
To do you service, you'll be still the same
That you were to your Allworth: in a word,
Our years, our states, our births are not unequal,
You being descended nobly, and allied so;
If then you may be won to make me happy,
But join your lips to mine, and that shall be
A solemn contract.

L. All. I were blind to my own good,
Should I refuse it; yet, my lord, receive me
As such a one, the study of whose whole life
Shall know no other object but to please you.

Lov. If I return not, with all tenderness,
Equal respect to you, may I die wretched!

L. All. There needs no protestation, my lord,
To her that cannot doubt.

Enter Wellborn.

You are welcome, Sir.

Now you look like yourself.

Well. And will continue

Such in my free acknowledgment, that I am
Your creature, madam, and will never hold
My life mine own, when you please to command
it. [you;

Lov. It is a thankfulness that well becomes
You could not make choice of a better shape
To dress your mind in.

L. All. For me, I am happy
That my endeavours prosper'd. Saw you of late Sir Giles, your uncle?

Well. I heard of him, madam,
By his minister, Marrall: he's grown into strange passions

About his daughter : this last night he look'd for
Your lordship at his house, but missing you,
And she not yet appearing, his wise head
Is much perplex'd and troubled.

Lov. It may be,
Sweetheart, my project took.

L. All. I strongly hope.

Over. [within] Ha! find her, booby, thou huge lump of nothing,
I'll bore thine eyes out else.

Well. May it please your lordship,
For some ends of mine own, but to withdraw
A little out of sight, though not of hearing,
You may, perhaps, have sport.

Lov. You shall direct me. [Steps aside.]

Enter Overreach, with distracted looks, driving in Marrall before him, with a box.

Over. I shall sol fa you, rogue!

Mar. Sir, for what cause
Do you use me thus?

Over. Cause, slave! why I am angry,
And thou a subject only fit for beating,
And so to cool my choler. Look to the writ-

Let but the seal be broke upon the box,
That has slept in my cabinet these three years,
I'll rack thy soul for't.

Mar. I may yet cry quittance,
Though now I suffer, and dare not resist. [Aside.]

Over. Lady, by your leave, did you see my daughter, lady?
And the lord her husband? are they in your house?

If they are, discover, that I may bid them joy;
And, as an entrance to her place of honour,
See your ladyship on her left hand, and make courtsies

When she nods on you; which you must receive
As a special favour.

L. All. When I know, sir Giles,
Her state requires such ceremony, I shall pay
it;

But, in the mean time, as I am myself,
I give you to understand, I neither know
Nor care where her honour is.

Over. When you once see her
Supported, and led by the lord her husband,
You'll be taught better.—Nephew.

Well. Sir.

Over. No more!

Well. 'Tis all I owe you.

Over. Have your redeem'd rags
Made you thus insolent?

Well. Insolent to you!

Why, what are you, sir unless in your years,
At the best, more than myself?

Over. His fortune swells him:
'Tis rank, he's married.

L. All. This is excellent! [use it,

Over. Sir, in calm language, though I seldom
I am familiar with the cause that makes you
Bear up thus bravely; there's a certain buzz
Of a stolen marriage, do you hear? of a stolen marriage,

In which 'tis said there's somebody hath been cozen'd;

I name no parties.

Well. Well, sir, and what follows?

Over. Marry, this; since you are peremp-tory: remember,

Upon mere hope of your great match, I lent
you

A thousand pounds: put me in good security,
And suddenly, by mortgage or by statute,
Of some of your new possessions, or I'll have
you

Dragg'd in your lavender robes* to the gaol:
you know me,

And therefore do not trifle.

Well. Can you be

So cruel to your nephew, now he's in
The way to rise? was this the courtesy
You did me in pure love, and no ends else?

Over. End me no ends! engage the whole estate,

And force your spouse to sign it, you shall have Three or four thousand more, to roar and swag-
ger,

And revel in bawdy taverns.

Well. And beg after;

Mean you not so?

Over. My thoughts are mine, and free.
Shall I have security?

Well. No, indeed you shall not,
Nor bond, nor bill, nor bare acknowledgment;
Your great looks fright not me.

Over. But my deeds shall.

Outbraved! [Both draw.]

L. All. Help, murder! murder!

Enter Servants.

Well. Let him come on,
With all his wrongs and injuries about him.
Arm'd with his cut-throat practises to guard
him;

The right that I bring with me will defend me,
And punish his extortion.

Over. That I had thee
But single in the field!

L. All. You may; but make not
My house your quarrelling scene.

Over. Where't in a church,
By heaven and hell, I'll do't.

Mar. Now put him to
The shewing of the deed.

Well. This rage is vain, sir;
For fighting, fear not, you shall have your hands full

Upon the least incitement; and whereas
You charge me with a debt of a thousand pounds,
If there be law, (how'er you have no conscience,)
Either restore my land, or I'll recover

* Dragg'd in your lavender robes to the gaol:——— i. e. your clothes which have been just redeemed out of pawn. To lay a thing in lavender was a cant phrase for pawning it. Thus, in Green's Quippe for an upstart Courtier, c. 3.—"There is he ready to lend the looser money upon rings and chains, apparel, or any good paune, but the poorer gentleman paises so deare for the lavender it is laid up in, that if it lie long at the broker's house, he seems to buy his apparel twice." The expression is also used by Jonson, and indeed by most of our old poets.—Gifford.

A debt, that's truly due to me from you,
Is value ten times more than what you challenge.

Over. I in thy debt! O impudence! did I not purchase

The land left by thy father, that rich land,
That had continued in Wellborn's name
Twenty descents; which, like a riotous fool,
Thou didst make sale of? Is not here inclosed
The deed that does confirm it mine?

Mar. Now, now!

Well. I do acknowledge none; I ne'er pass'd
over

Any such land; I grant, for a year or two
You had it in trust; which if you do discharge,
Surrendering the possession, you shall ease
Yourself and me of chargeable suits in law,
Which, if you prove not honest, as I doubt it,
Must of necessity follow.

L. All. In my judgment
He does advise you well.

Over. Good! good! conspire
With your new husband, lady; second him
In his dishonest practices; but when
This manor is extended to my use*, You'll speak in an humbler key, and sue for favour.

L. All. Never: do not hope it.

Well. Let despair first seize me.

Over. Yet, to shut up thy mouth, and make thee give

Thyself the lie, the loud lie, I draw out
The precious evidence; if thou canst forswear
Thy hand and seal, and make a forfeit of [Opens the box, and displays the bond.]

Thy ears to the pillory, see! here's that will make
My interest clear—ha!

L. All. A fair skin of parchment.

Well. Indented, I confess, and labels too;
But neither wax nor words. How! thunderstruck?

Not a syllable to insult with? my wise uncle,
Is this your precious evidence, this that makes
Your interest clear?

Over. I am o'erwhelm'd with wonder!
What prodigy is this? what subtle devil
Hath razed out the inscription? the wax
Turn'd into dust!—the rest of my deeds whole,
As when they were deliver'd, and this only Made nothing! do you deal with witches, rascal?

There is a statute for you, which will bring†
Your neck in an hempen circle; yes, there is;
And now 'tis better thought for, cheater, know
This juggling shall not save you.

Well. To save thee
Would beggar the stock of mercy.

* —————but when

This manor is extended to my use,] i. e. seized. It is a legal phrase, and occurs continually.—Gifford.

† There is a statute for you, &c.] This statute, which unfortunately brought many a neck into a hempen circle, was made in the first year of James. It decreed the punishment of death for a variety of impossible crimes; which yet were fully proved upon a number of poor ignorant superannuated wretches, who were cajoled or terrified into a full confession of them. This diabolical law was repealed about the middle of the last century.—Gifford.

Over. Marrall!

Mar. Sir.

Over. Though the witnesses are dead, your testimony

Help with an oath or two: and for thy master,
Thy liberal master, my good honest servant,
I know thou wilt swear anything to dash
This cunning sleight: besides I know thou art
A publick notary, and such stand in law
For a dozen witnesses: the deed being drawn
too

By thee, my careful Marrall, and deliver'd
When thou wert present, will make good for my title.

Wilt thou not swear this?

Mar. I! no, I assure you:

I have a conscience not sear'd up like yours;
I know no deeds.

Over. Wilt thou betray me?

Mar. Keep him

From using of his hands, I'll use my tongue
To his no little torment.

Over. Mine own varlet

Rebel against me!

Mar. Yes, and uncase you too.

The idiot, the Patch, the slave, the booby,
The property fit only to be beaten
For your morning exercise, your football, or
The unprofitable lump of flesh, your drudge;
Can now anatomize you, and lay open
All your black plots, and level with the earth
Your hill of pride: and with these gabions guarded,

Unload my great artillery, and shake,
Nay pulverize, the walls you think defend you.

L. All. How he foams at the mouth with rage!

Well. To him again.

Over. O that I had thee in my gripe, I would, tear thee

Joint after joint!

Mar. I know you are a tearer.

But I'll have first your fangs pared off, and then

Come nearer to you; when I have discover'd,
And made it good before the judge, what ways,
And devilish practices, you used to cozen with
An army of whole families, who yet live,
And but enroll'd for soldiers, were able To take in Dunkirk*.

Well. All will come out.

L. All. The better.

Over. But that I will live, rogue, to torture
thee,

And make thee wish, and kneel in vain, to die,
These swords, that keep thee from me should fix here,

Although they made my body but one wound,
But I would reach thee.

Lov. Heaven's hand is in this;

One bandog worry the other! [Aside.]

Over. I play the fool,
And make my anger but ridiculous:

* To take in, means to subdue, to seize.—Gifford.

There will be a time and place, there will be,
cowards,

When you shall feel what I dare do.

Well. I think so:

You dare do any ill, yet want true valour
To be honest, and repent.

Over. They are words I know not,
Nor e'er will learn. Patience, the beggar's virtue,

Enter Greedy and Parson Willdo.

Shall find no harbour here:—after these storms
At length a calm appears. Welcome, most welcome!

There's comfort in thy looks; is the deed done?
Is my daughter married? say but so, my chaplain,

And I am tame.

Willdo. Married! yes, I assure you.

Over. Then vanish all sad thoughts! there's more gold for thee.

My doubts and fears are in the titles drown'd
(Of my honourable, my right honourable daughter.

Greedy. Here will be feasting; at least for a month

I am provided: stomach, croak no more,
You shall be stuffed like bagpipes, not with wind.
But bearing dishes*.

Over. Instantly be here?

[Whispering to Willdo.

To my wish! to my wish! Now you that plot against me, [me,
And hoped to trip my heels up, that contemn'd Think on't and tremble:—[Loud musick.—they come! I hear the musick.

A lane there for my lord!

Will. This sudden heat

May yet be cool'd, sir.

Over. Make way there for my lord!

Enter Allworth and Margaret.

Marg. Sir, first your pardon, then your blessing, with

Your full allowance of the choice I have made.
As ever you could make use of your reason,

[Kneeling.

Grow not in passion; since you may as well
Call back the day that's past, as untie the knot
Which is too strongly fasten'd: not to dwell
Too long on words, this is my husband.

Over. How!

All. So I assure you; all the rites of marriage

With every circumstance are past. Alas! sir,
Although I am no lord, but a lord's page,
Your daughter and my loved wife mourns not for it; [say
And for right honourable son-in-law, you may
Your dutiful daughter.

* But bearing dishes.] i. e. solid, substantial dishes; or what the steward (in the Unnatural Combat) calls portly viands. I mention this because the word is frequently mistaken:

"Cloudeale with a bearyng arrowe Clave the wande in two."

Old Ballad.

"A bearyng arrow," says Strutt, "is an arrow shot compass, i. e. so as the arrow in its flight formed a segment of a circle." And so we get the prize of accuracy! A bearyng arrow is, in three words, a strong and weighty arrow.—Gifford.

Over. Devil! are they married?

Willdo. Do a father's part, and say, Heaven give them joy!

Over. Confusion and ruin! speak, and speak quickly,

Or thou art dead.

Willdo. They are married.

Over. Thou hadst better
Have made a contract with the king of fiends,
Than these:—my brain turns!

Willdo. Why this rage to me?

Is not this your letter, sir, and these the words?
Marry her to this gentleman.

Over. It cannot:

Nor will I e'er believe it, 'sdeath! I will not;
That I, that, in all passages I touch'd
At worldly profit, have not left a print

Where I have trod for the most curious search
To trace my footsteps, should be gull'd by children,

Baffled and fool'd, and all my hopes and labours
Defeated, and made void.

Well. As it appears,
You are so, my grave uncle.

Over. Village nurses

Revenge their wrongs with curses; I'll not waste

A syllable, but thus I take the life

Which wretched I gave to thee.

[Attempts to kill Margaret.

Lor. [coming forward.] Hold, for your own sake!

Though charity to your daughter hath quite left you,

Will you do an act, though in your hopes lost
here,

Can leave no hope for peace or rest hereafter?

Consider; at the best you are but a man,
And cannot so create your aims, but that

They may be cross'd.

Over. Lord! thus I spit at thee,
And at thy counsel; and again desire thee,
And as thou art a soldier, if the valour
Dares shew itself, where multitude and example Lead not the way, let's quit the house, and change

Six words in private.

Lor. I am ready.

L. All. Stay, sir,

Contest with one distracted!

Well. You'll grow like him,
Should you answer his vain challenge.

Over. Are you pale?

Borrow his help, though Hercules call it odds,
I'll stand against both as I am, hemm'd in thus.—

Since, like a Libyan lion in the toil,
My fury cannot reach the coward hunters,
And only spends itself, I'll quit the place:
Alone I can do nothing, but I have servants
And friends to second me; and if I make not
This house a heap of ashes (by my wrongs, What I have spoke I will make good!) or leave

One throat uncut,—if it be possible,
Hell, add to my afflictions!

Mar. Is't not brave sport?

Greedy. Brave sport! I am sure it has ta'en away my stomach;
I do not like the sauce.

All. Nay, weep not, dearest,
Though it express your pity; what's decreed
Above we cannot alter.

L. All. His threats move me
No scruple, madam.

Mar. Was it not a rare trick,
An it please your worship, to make the deed nothing?

I can do twenty neater, if you please
To purchase and grow rich; for I will be Such a solicitor and steward for you,
As never worshipful had.

Well. I do believe thee;
But first discover the quaint means you used
To raze out the conveyance?

Mar. They are mysteries
Not to be spoke in public: certain minerals Incorporated in the ink and wax.—
Besides, he gave me nothing, but still fed me
With hopes and blows; and that was the inducement

To this conundrum. If it please your worship
To call to memory, this mad beast once caused
me

To urge you or to drown or hang yourself;
I'll do the like to him, if you command me.

Well. You are a rascal! he that dares be false

To a master, though unjust, will ne'er be true
To any other. Look not for reward
Or favour from me; I will shun thy sight
As I would do a basilisk's: thank my pity,
If thou keep thy ears; howe'er, I will take order

Your practice shall be silenced.

Greedy. I'll commit him,
If you will have me, sir.

Well. That were to little purpose;
His conscience be his prison. Not a word,
But instantly be gone.

Ord. Take this kick with you.

Amb. And this.

Furn. If that I had my cleaver here,
I would divide your knave's head.

Mar. This is the haven
False servants still arrive at.

[Exit.]

Re-enter Overreach.

L. All. Come again!

Loc. Fear not, I am your guard.

Well. His looks are ghastly.

Willdo. Some little time I have spent, under your favours,
In physical studies, and if my judgment err not,
He's mad beyond recovery: but observe him,
And look to yourselves.

Over. Why, is not the whole world
Included in myself? to what use then

Are friends and servants? Say there were a squadron

Of pikes, lined through with shot, when I am mounted

Upon my injuries, shall I fear to charge them?

No: I'll through the battalia, and that routed,
[Flourishing his sword sheathed.]

I'll fall to execution.—Ha! I am feeble:

Some undone widow sits upon mine arm,
And takes away the use of't; and my sword,
Glued to my scabbard with wrong'd orphans'
tears.

Will not be drawn. Ha! what are these? sure,
hangmen,

That come to bind my hands, and then to drag
Before the judgment-seat: now they are new shapes,

And do appear like Furies, with steel whips
To scourge my ulcerous soul. Shall I then fall
Ingloriously, and yield? no; spite of Fate
I will be forced to hell like to myself.

Though you were legions of accursed spirits,
Thus would I fly among you. [Rushes forward.]

Well. There's no help;
Disarm him first, then bind him.

Greedy. Take a mittimus,
And carry him to Bedlam.

Lor. How he foams!

Well. And bites the earth!

Willdo. Carry him to some dark room,
There try what art can do for his recovery.

Marg. O my dear father!

[They force Overreach off.]

All. You must be patient, mistress.

Loc. Here is a precedent to teach wicked
men,

That when they leave religion, and turn atheists,
Their own abilities leave them. Pray you take comfort,

I will endeavour you shall be his guardians
In his distractions: and for your land, master
Wellborn,

Be it good or ill in law, I'll be an umpire
Between you, and this, the undoubted heir
Of sir Giles Overreach; for me, here's the anchor

That I must fix on.

All. What you shall determine,
My lord, I will allow of.

Well. 'Tis the language
That I speak too; but there is something else
Beside the repossession of my land,
And payment of my debts, that I must practise.
I had a reputation, but 'twas lost
In my loose course; and until I redeem it
Some noble way, I am but half made up.
It is a time of action; if your lordship
Will please to confer a company upon me
In your command, I doubt not, in my service
To my king, and country, but I shall do something

That may make me right again.

Loc. Your suit is granted,
And you loved for the motion.

Well. Nothing wants then
But your allowance— [To the Spectators.]

EPILOGUE.

BUT your allowance—and in that our all
Is comprehended; it being known, nor we,
Nor he that wrote the comedy, can be free
Without your manumission; which if you
Grant willingly, as a fair favour due
To the poet's, and our labours, (as you may,)
For we despair not, gentlemen, of the play:
We jointly shall profess your grace hath might
To teach us action, and him how to write.

DESCRIPTION OF RIOT.

(From the 4th Song, Book I.)

SOMETHING appear'd, which seem'd, farre off a man,
In stature, habit, gate, proportion:
But when the eyes their object's masters were,
And it for stricter censure came more neere,
By all his properties one well might ghesse,
Than of a man he sure had nothing lesse.
For verily since olde Deucalion's flood
Earth's lime did ne'er produce a viler brood.
Upon the various earth's embroderea gowne
There is a weed, upon whose head growes downe;
Sow-thistle 'tis ycleep'd, whose downy wreath,
If any one can blow off at a breath,
We deeme her for a maid: such was his haire,
Ready to shed at any stirring aire.
His eares were stricken deafe when he came nie,
To hear the widow's or the orphan's crie.
His eyes encircled with a bloody chaine,
With poaring in the bloud of bodies slaine.
His mouth exceeding wide, from whence did flie
Vollies of execrable blasphemie;
Banning the Heavens, and he that rideth on them,
Dar'd vengeance to the teeth to fall upon him:
Like Scythian wolves, or men* of wit bereaven,
Which howle and shoote against the lights of Heaven.
His hands, (if hands they were) like some dead
corse,
With digging up his buried ancestors;
Making his father's tombe and sacred shrine
The trough wherein the hog-herd fed his swine.
And as that beast hath legs (which shepherds
feare,
Ycleep'd a badger, which our lambs doth teare)
One long, the other short, that when he runnes
Upon the plaines, he halts; but when he wounes
On craggy rocks, or steepy hills, we see

* Men of Scirum shoote against the starrs.

None runnes more swift, nor easier, than he:
Such legs the monster had, one sinew shrunk,
That in the plaines he reel'd, as being drunk;
And halted in the paths to virtue tending;
And therefore never durst be that way bending:
But when he came on carved monuments,
Spiring colosses, and high raised rents,
He pass'd them o'er, quick, as the easterne winde
Sweeps through a meadow; or a nimble hinde;
Or satyre on a lawne; or skipping roe;
Or well-wing'd shaft forth of a Parthian bowe.
His body made (still in consumptions rife)
A miserable prison for a life.

Riot he hight; whom some curs'd fiend did raise,
When like a chaos were the nights and dayes;
Got and brought up in the Cimmerian clime,
Where sunne nor moone, nor daies nor nights do
time:
As who should say, they scorn'd to show their faces
To such a fiend, should seeke to spoil the graces.

THE PROGRESS OF RIOT IN THE PATH OF RE-PENTANCE.

(From the 5th Song, Book I.)

As when a maide, taught from her mother's wing
To tune her voyce unto a silver string,
When she should run, she rests; rests, when should run,
And ends her lesson, having now begun:
Now misseth she her stop, then in her song,
And, doing of her best, she still is wrong:
Begins againe, and yet againe strikes false,
Then in a chafe forsakes her virginals;
And yet within an hour she tries a-new,
That with her daily paines (art's chiefest due)
She gaines that charming skill: and can no lesse
Tame the fierce walkers of the wilderness,
Than that Cægrian harpist*, for whose lay
Tigers with hunger pinde and left their pray.
So Riot, when he gan to climbe the hill,
Here maketh haste, and there long standeth still,
Now getteth up a step, then falls againe,
Yet not despairing, all his nerves doth straine
To clamber up a-new, then slide his feet,
And downe he comes; but gives not over yet,
For (with the maide) he hopes, a time will be
When merit shall be linckt with industrie.

Now as an angler melancholy standing,
Upon a greene bancke yeelding roome for landing,
A wrigling yealow worrne thrust on his hooke,
Now in the midst he throwes, then in a nooke:
Here pulls his line, there throws it in againe,
Mending his croke and baite, but all in vaine,
He long stands viewing of the curled stream;
At last a hungry pike, or well-growne bream,
Snatch at the worrne, and hasting fast away
He, knowing it a fish of stubborn sway,

* Orpheus, the son of Cægrus and Calliope, according to Plato, in Conv. Apollon. Argonaut. l. i. and himself, if the Argonautics be hist. of Apollo and Calliope, by some; of other. by others.

Puls up his rod, but soft ; (as having skill)
 Wherewith the hooke fast holds the fishe's gill.
 Then all his line he freely yeeldeth him,
 Whilst furiously all up and downe doth swimme
 Th' insnar'd fish, here on the toppe doth scud,
 There underneath the banckes, then in the mud ;
 And with his franticke fits so scares the shole,
 That each one takes his hyde or starting hole :
 By this the pike, cleane wearied, underneath
 A willow lyes, and pants (if fishes breathe) ;
 Wherewith the angler gently puls him to him,
 And, leaste his haste might happen to undoe him,
 Layes downe his rod, then takes his line in hand,
 And by degrees getting the fish to land,
 Walkes to another poole : at length is winner
 Of such a dish as serves him for his dinner :
 So when the climber halfe the way had got,
 Musing he stood, and busily gan plot,
 How (since the mount did always steeper tend)
 He might with steps secure his journey end.
 At last (as wand'ring boyes to gather nuts)
 A hooked pole he from a hasell cuts ;
 Now throws it here, then there, to take some hold,

But bootlesse and in vaine, the rocky molde
 Admits no cranny, where his ha-ell hooke
 Might promise him a step, till in a nooke
 Somewhat above his reach he hath espide
 A little oake, and having often tride
 To catch a bough with standing on his toe,
 Or leaping up, yet not prevailing so ;
 He rols a stone towards the little tree,
 Then gets upon it, fastens warily
 His pole unto a bough, and at his drawing
 The early rising crow with clam'rous kawing,
 Leaving the greene bough flies about the rocke,
 Whilst twentie twentie couples to him flocke :
 And now within his reach the thinne leaves wave,
 With one hand onely then he holds his stave,
 And with the other grasping first the leaves,
 A pretty bough he in his fist receives ;
 Then to his girdle making fast the hooke,
 His other hand another bough hath tooke ;
 His first, a third, and that, another gives,
 To bring him to the place where his roote lives.

Then, as a nimble squirrill from the wood,
 Ranging the hedges for his filberd-food,
 Sits partly on a bough his browne nuts cracking,
 And from the shell the sweet white kernell taking,
 Till (with their crookes and bags) a sort of boyes
 (To share with him) come with so great a noyse,
 That he is forc'd to leave a nut nigh broke,
 And for his life leape to a neighbour oake ;
 Thence to a beech, thence to a row of ashes ;
 Whilst thro' the quagmires and red water plashes,
 The boyes runne dabling thro' thicke and thin,
 One teares his hose, another breakes his shin ;
 'This, torne and tatter'd, hath with much adoe
 Got by the bryers ; and that hath lost his shooe :
 This drops his band ; that head-long fells for haste ;
 Another cryes behinde for being last :
 With stickes and stones, and many a sounding hollow,

The little foole, with no small sport, they follow,

Whilst he, from tree to tree, from spray to spray,
 Gets to the wood, and hides him in his dray :
 Such shift made Riot, ere he could get up,
 And so from bough to bough he wonne the toppe,
 Though hind'rances, from ever coming there
 Were often thrust upon him by Despaire.

ADDRESS TO A LOVELY LADY.

(From the 4th Song, Book 1.)

THE highest synode of the glorious skye,
 (I heard a wood-nymph sing) sent Mercurie
 To take a survey of the fairest faces,
 And to describe to them all women's graces :
 Who long time wand'ring in a serious quest,
 Noting what parts by beauty were possess :
 At last he saw this maide, then thinking fit
 To end his journey, here, Nil ultra, writ.

Fida in adoration kiss'd her knee,
 And thus bespake : " Hayle glorious Deitie !
 (If such thou art, and who can deeme you lesse ?)
 Whether thou reign'st queene of the wilderness,
 Or art that goddesse ('tis unknowne to me)
 Which from the ocean draws her pettigree :
 Or one of those, who by the mossie banckes
 Of drisling Helicon, in airie ranckes
 Tread rounde-layes upon the silver sands,
 While shaggy satyres tripping o'er the strands,
 Stand still at gaze, and yeeld their sences thralls
 To the sweet cadence of your madrigals :
 Or of the fairy troop which nimbly play,
 And by the springs daunce out the summer's
 day ;

Teaching the little birds to build their nests,
 And in their singing how to keepeen rests :
 Or one of those, who watching where a spring
 Out of our graudame Earth hath issuing,
 With your attractive musicke wooe the streame
 (As men by faeries led, false in a dreame)
 To follow you, which sweetly trilling wanders
 In many mazes, intricate meanders ;
 Till at the last, to mocke th' enamour'd rill,
 Ye bend your traces up some shady hill ;
 And laugh to see the wave no further treade ;
 But in a chafe runne foaming on his head,
 Being enforc'd a channell new to frame,
 Leaving the other destitute of name.
 If thou be one of these, or all, or more,
 Succour a seely maid, that doth impleore
 Aide, on a bended heart, unfain'd and meeke,
 As true as blushes of a maiden cheek."

THE ADVENTURES OF TRUTH.

(From the same.)

IN winter's time when hardly fed the flockes,
 And isicles hung dangling on the rockes ;
 When Hyems bound the floods in silver chaines,
 And hoary frosts had candy'd all the plaines ;
 When every barne rung with the threshing flailles,
 And shepherds' boyes for cold gan blow their nailes :

(Wearied with toyle in seeking out some one
 That had a sparke of true devotion ;)

It was my chance, (chance onely helpeth neede)
To find an house ybuilt for holy deede,
With goodly architect, and cloisters wide,
With groves and walkes along a river's side;
The place itself afforded admiration,
And every spray a theme of contemplation.
But (woe is me) when knocking at the gate,
I gan intreat an entrance thereat:
The porter askt my name: I told; he swell'd,
And bad me thence: wherewith in grieve repell'd,
I sought for shelter to a ruin'd house,
Harb'ring the weasell, and the dust-dropp mouse;
And others none, except the two-kinde bat,
Which all the day there melancholy sate:
Here sate I downe with winde and raine ybeate;
Grief sate my minde, and did my body eate.
Yet Idlenesse I saw (lam'd with the gout)
Had entrance when poor Truth was kept without.

There saw I Drunkenesse with dropsies swolne;
And pamp'rd Lust that many a night had stolne
Over the abby-wall when gates were lock'd,
To be in Venus' wanton bosom rock'd:
And Gluttony that surfetting had bin,
Knocke at the gate and straight-way taken in:
Sadly I sate, and sighing griev'd to see
Their happinesse, my infelicitie.
At last came Envy by, who having spide
Where I was sadly seated, inward hide,
And to the convent eagerly she cries,
'Why sit you here, when with these cares and eies

I heard and saw a strumpet dares to say,
She is the true faire Aletheia,
Which you have boasted long to live among you?
Yet suffer not a peevish girl to wrong you.
With this provok'd, all rose, and in a rout
Run to the gate, strove who should first get out,
Bad me begone, and then (in terms uncivil)
Did call me counterfait, witch, hag, whore, divell;
Then like a strumpet drove me from their cels,
With tinkling paws, and with the noise of hels.
And he that lov'd me, or but moan'd my case,
Had heapes of fire-brands banded at his face.

'Thus beaten thence (distrest, forsaken wight)
Infor'd in fields to sleepe, or wake all night;
A seely sheepe seeing me straying by,
Forsooke the shrub where once she meant to lie;
As if she in her kinde (unhurting elfe)
Did bid me take such lodging as herselfe:
Gladly I took the place the sheepe had given,
Uncanopy'd of any thing but Heaven.

By this had Chanticleere, the village-cocke,
Bidden the good-wife for her maides to knocke:
And the swart plow-man for his breakfast staid,
That he might till those lands were fallow laid;
The hills and vallies here and there resound
With the re-echoes of the deepe-mouth'd hound,
Each shepheard's daughter with her cleanly peale,
Was come a field to milke the morning's meale,
And ere the Sunne had clym'd the easterne hils,
To guild the mutt'ring bournes, and pritty rils,
Before the lab'ring bee had left the hive,

And nimble fishes which in rivers dive,
Began to leape, and catch the drowned fie,
I rose from rest, not infelicitie.
Seeking the place of Charitie's resort,
Unware I hap'ned on a prince's court;
Where meeting Greatnesse, I requir'd reliefe,
(O happy undelayed) she said in brieve,
'To small effect thine oratorie tends,
How can I keepe thee and so many friends?
If of my household I should make thee one,
Farewell my servant Adulation:

I know she will not stay when thou art there:
But seeke some great man's service other-where.
Darkenesse and light, summer and winter's weather
May be at once, ere you two live together.'
Thus with a nod she left me cloath'd in woe.

Thence to the citie once I thought to goe,
But somewhat in my mind this thought had throwne,
'It was a place wherein I was not knowne.'
And therefore went unto these homely townes,
Sweetly environ'd with the dazied downes.

THE FATE OF ALL THINGS.

(From the same.)

And as the yeere hath first his jocund spring,
Wherein the leaves, to birds' sweet carolling,
Dance with the winde: then sees the summer's
day

Perfect the embriom blossome of each spray:
Next commeth autumn, when the threshed sheafe
Looseth his graine, and every tree his leafe:
Lastly cold winter's rage, with many a storme,
Threats the proud pines which Ida's toppe adorne,
And makes the sappe leave succourlesse the shoote,

Shrinking to comfort his decaying roote.
Or as a quaint musitian being won,
To run a point of sweet division,
Gets by degrees unto the highest key;
Then, with like order falleth in his play
Into a deeper tone; and lastly, throwes
His period in a diapazon close:
So every humane thing terrestriall,
His utmost height attain'd, bends to his fall.

NIGHT.

(From the 1st Song, Book II.)

Now great Hyperion left his golden throne
That on the dancing waves in glory shone,
For whose declining on the western shore
The orientall hils blacke mantles wore,
And thence apace the gentle twi-light fled,
That had from hideous caverns ushered
Ail-drowsie night; who in a carre of jet,
By steeds of iron-gray (which mainly swet Moist drops on all the world) drawne through the skye,
The helmes of darknesse waited orderly.
First, thicke clouds rose from all the liquid
plaines:

Then mists from marishes, and grounds whose veynes
Were conduit pipes to many a christall spring :
From standing pooles and fens were following
Unhealthy fogs : each river, every rill
Sent up their vapours to attend her will.
These pitchy curtains drew 'twixt Earth and
Heaven,
And as night's chariot through the aire was driven,
Clamour grew dumb, unheard was shepherd's
song,
And silence girt the woods ; no warbling tongue
Talk'd to the echo ; satyres broke their dance,
And all the upper world lay in a trance.
Onely the curled streams soft chidings kept ;
And little gales that from the greene leafe swept
Dry summer's dust, in feareful whisp'rings stir'd,
As loath to waken any singing bird.

MORNING.

(From the 2nd Song, Book II.)

THE Muse's friend (gray-eyde Aurora) yet
Held all the meadows in a cooling sweat,
The milk-white gossamores not upwards snow'd,
Nor was the sharp and usefull steering goad
Laid on the strong-neckt ox ; no gentle bud
The Sun had dryde ; the cattle chew'd the cud
Low level'd on the grasse ; no flye's quicke sting
Inforc'd the stonehorse in a furious ring
To teare the passive earth, nor lash his taile
About his buttockes broad ; the slimy snayle
Might on the wainscot (by his many mazes Winding meanders and selfe-knitting traces)
Be follow'd, where he stucke, his glittering slime
Not yet wipt off. It was so earely time
The carefull smith had in his sooty forge
Kindled no coale ; nor did his hammers urge
His neighbour's patience : owles abroad did flye,
And day as then might plead his infancy.
Yet of faire Albion all the western swaines
Were long since up, attending on the plaines
When Nereus' daughter with her mirthfull hoast
Should summon them, on their declining coast.
But since her stay was long : for feare the Sunne
Should find them idle, some of them begunne
To leape and wrastle, others threw the barre,
Some from the company removed are
To meditate the songs they meant to play,
Or make a new round for next holiday ;
Some tales of love their love sicke fellows told :
Others were seeking stakes to pitch their fold.
This, all alone was mending of his pipe :
That, for his lasse sought fruits most sweet,
most ripe.
Here, (from the rest) a lovely shepherd's boy
Sits piping on a hill, as if his joy
Would still endure, or else that age's frost
Should never make him thinke what he had lost.
Yonder a shepheardesse knits by the springs,
Her hands still keeping time to what she sings :

Or seeming, by her song, those fairest hands
Were comforted working. Neere the sands
Of some sweet river sits a musing lad,
That moanes the losse of what he sometimes had,
His love by death bereft : when fast by him
An aged swaine takes place, as neere the brim
Of's grave as of the river ; showing how
That as those floods, which passe along right now,
Are follow'd still by others from their spring,
" And in the sea have all their burying :"
Right so our times are knowne, our ages found,
(Nothing is permanent within this round :)
One age is now, another that succedes,
Extirping all things which the former breeds :
Another followes that, doth new times raise,
New yeers, new months, new weeks, new hours,
new days.
Mankinde thus go like rivers from their spring
" And in the earth have all their burying."
Thus sate the olde man counselling the yong ;
Whilst, underneath a tree which over-hung
The silver streame, (as, some delight it tooke
To trim his thick boughes in the chrystall brooke)
Were set a jocund crew of youthfull swaines
Wooving their sweetings with dilicious straynes.

SIR JOHN SUCKLING.

Born 1608.—Died 1641.

SONG.

Why so pale and wan, fond lover ?
Prythee why so pale ?
Will, when looking well can't move her,
Looking ill prevail ?
Prythee why so pale ?

Why so dull and mute, young sinner ?
Prythee why so mute ?
Will, when speaking well can't win her,
Saying nothing do't ?
Prythee why so mute ?

Quit, quit for shame ! this will not move,
This cannot take her ;
If of herself she will not love,
Nothing can make her :—
The devil take her.

SONG.

Of thee, kind boy, I ask no red and white
To make up my delight,
No odd becoming graces,
Black eyes, or little know-not-whats, in faces ;
Make me but mad enough, give me good store
Of love, for her I court,
I ask no more ;
'Tis love in love that makes the sport.

There's no such thing as that we beauty call,
 It is mere cozenage all;
 For though some long ago
 Lik'd certain colours mingl'd so and so,
 That does not tie me now from choosing new,
 If I a fancy take

To black and blue,
 That fancy doth it beauty make.

'Tis not the meat, but 'tis the appetite
 Makes eating a delight,
 And if I like one dish
 More than another, that a pheasant is;
 What in our watches, that in us is found,
 So to the height and nick
 We up be wound.
 No matter by what hand or trick.

SONG.

'Tis now, since I sat down before
 That foolish fort, a heart;
 (Time strangely spent) a year and more,
 And still I did my part:

Made my approaches, from her hand
 Unto her lip did rise,
 And did already understand
 The language of her eyes.

Proceeded on with no less art,
 My tongue was engineer;
 I thought to undermine the heart
 By whispering in the ear.

When this did nothing, I brought down
 Great cannon oaths, and shot
 A thousand thousand to the town,
 And still it yielded not.

I then resolv'd to starve the place
 By cutting off all kisses,
 Praising and gazing on her face,
 And all such little blisses.

To draw her out, and from her strength,
 I drew all batteries in:
 And brought myself to lie at length
 As if no siege had been.

When I had done what man could do,
 And thought the place mine own,
 The enemy lay quiet too,
 And smil'd at all was done.

I sent to know from whence and were,
 These hopes, and this relief?
 A spy inform'd, honour was there,
 And did command in chief.

March, march, (quoth I) the word straight give,
 Let's lose no time, but leave her;
 That giant upon air will leave,
 And hold it out for ever.

To such a place our camp remove
 As will not siege abide;
 I hate a fool that starves her love
 Only to feed her pride.

A BALLAD UPON A WEDDING.

I TELL thee, Dick, where I have been,
 Where I the rarest things have seen:
 Oh things without compare!
 Such sights again cannot be found
 In any place on English ground,
 Be it at wake, or fair.

At Charing-Cross, hard by the way
 Where we (thou know'st) do sell our hay,
 There is a house with stairs;
 And there did I see coming down
 Such folks as are not in our town,
 Vorty at least, in pairs.

Among'st the rest, one pest'lent fine,
 (His beard no bigger though than thine)
 Walk'd on before the rest:
 Our landlord looks like nothing to him:
 The king (God bless him) 'twou'd undo him;
 Shou'd he go still so drest.

At Course-a-park, without all doubt,
 He should have first been taken out
 By all the maids i' th' town:
 Though lusty Roger there had been,
 Or little George upon the green,
 Or Vincent of the crown.

But wot you what? the youth was going
 To make an end of all his wooing;
 The parson for him staid:
 Yet by his leave, for all his haste,
 He did not so much wish all past
 (Perchance) as did the maid.

The maid—and thereby hangs a tale—
 For such a maid no Whitson ale
 Could ever yet produce:
 No grape that's kindly ripe, could be
 So round, so plump, so soft as she,
 Nor half so full of juice.

Her finger was so small, the ring
 Wou'd not stay on which they did bring,
 It was too wide a peck:
 And to say truth (for out it must)
 It look'd like the great collar (just)
 About our young colt's neck.

Her feet beneath her petticoat,
 Like little mice stole in and out,
 As if they fear'd the light:
 But oh! she dances such a way!
 No sun upon an Easter Day,
 Is half so fine a sight.

He wou'd have kiss'd her once or twice,
 But she wou'd not, she was so nice,
 She wou'd not do't in sight;
 And then she look'd as who shou'd say
 I will do what I list to day;
 And you shall do't at night.

Her cheeks so rare a white was on,
 No daizy makes comparison,
 (Who sees them is undone)
 For streaks of red were mingled there,
 Such as are on a Katherine pear,
 The side that's next the sun.

Her lips were red, and one was thin
 Compar'd to that was next her chin,
 Some bee had stung it newly.
 But (Dick) her eyes so guard her face,
 I durst no more upon them gaze,
 Than on the sun in July.

Her mouth so small when she does speak,
 Thoud'st swear her teeth her words did break,
 That they might passage get,
 But she so handled still the matter,
 They came as good as ours, or better,
 And are not spent a whit.

* * * * *

Passion o'me! how I run on!
 There's that that wou'd be thought upon,
 I trow; besides the bride.
 The bus'ness of the kitchen's great,
 For it is fit that men should eat;
 Nor was it there deny'd.

Just in the nick the cock knock'd thrice,
 And all the waiters in a trice
 His summons did obey,
 Each serving-man with dish in hand,
 March'd boldly up, like our train'd band,
 Presented and away.

When all the meat was on the table,
 What man of knife, or teeth, was able
 To stay to be entreated:
 And this the very reason was,
 Before the parson could say grace,
 The company was seated.

Now hats fly off, and youths carouse;
 Healths first go round, and then the house,
 The bride's came thick and thick;
 And when 'twas nam'd another's health,
 Perhaps he made it her's by stealth,
 And who could help it, Dick?

O th' sudden up they rise and dance;
 Then sit again, and sigh and glance:
 Then dance again and kiss.
 Thus sev'ral ways the time did pass,
 Whilst ev'ry woman wish'd her place,
 And ev'ry man wish'd his.

SONNETS.

I know that all beneath the Moon decays,
 And what by mortals in this world is brought
 In time's great periods shall return to nought;
 That fairest states have fatal nights and days.
 I know that all the Muses' heavenly lays,
 With toil of sprite, which are so dearly bought,
 As idle sounds, of few, or none are sought;
 That there is nothing lighter than vain praise.
 I know frail beauty's like the purple flow'r,
 To which one morn oft birth and death affords;
 That love a jarring is of mind's accords,
 Where sense and will bring under reason's
 power:
 Know what I list, this all cannot me move,
 But that, alas! I both must write and love.

SLEEP, silence' child, sweet father of soft rest,
 Prince whose approach peace to all mortals brings.

Indifferent host to shepherds and to kings,
 Sole comforter of minds which are oppress'd;
 Lo, by thy charming rod, all breathing things
 Lie slumb'ring, with forgetfulness possess'd,
 And yet o'er me to spread thy drowsy wings
 Thou spar'st, alas! who cannot be thy guest.
 Since I am thine, O come, but with that face
 To inward light, which thou art wont to show,
 With feigned solace ease a true felt woe;
 Or if, deaf god, thou do deny that grace,
 Come as thou wilt, and what thou wilt bequeath,
 I long to kiss the image of my death.

An burning thoughts, now let me take some rest,
 And your tumultuous broils awhile appease:
 Is't not enough, stars, fortune, love molest
 Me all at once, but ye must too displease?
 Let hope (though false) yet lodge within my breast,

My high attempt (though dangerous) yet praise:
 What though I trace not right Heaven's steepy
 ways,

It doth suffice my fall doth make me blest.
 I do not doat on days, I fear not death,
 So that my life be good, I wish't not long;
 Let me renown'd live from the worldly throng,
 And when Heaven lists, recal this borrow'd
 breath.

Men but like visions are, time all doth claim,
 He lives who dies to win a lasting name.

If crost with all mishaps be my poor life,
 If one short day I never spent in mirth,
 If my sp'rit with itself holds lasting strife,
 If sorrows death is but new sorrows birth;
 If this vain world be but a mournful stage,
 Where slave-born man plays to the laughing stars,
 If youth be toss'd with love, with weakness age,
 If knowledge serves to hold our thoughts in wars,

If time can close the hundred mouths of Fame,
And make what's long since past, like that'stobe,
If virtue only be an idle name,
If being born I was but born to die;
Why seek I to prolong these loathsome days?
The fairest rose in shortest time decays.

SLIDE soft, fair Forth, and make a crystal plain,
Cut your white locks, and on your foamy face
Let not a wrinkle be, when you embrace
The boat that Earth's perfections doth contain.
Winds wonder, and through wond'ring hold your pace;

Or if that ye your hearts cannot restrain
From sending sighs, feeling a lover's case,
Sigh, and in her fair hair yourselves enchain.
Or take these sighs which absence makes arise
From my oppressed breast, and fill the sails,
Or some sweet breath new brought from paradise:
The floods do smile, love o'er the winds prevails,
And yet huge waves arise; the cause is this,
The ocean strives with Forth the boat to kiss.

TRUST not, sweet soul, those curled waves of gold
With gentle tides that on your temples flow,
Nor temples spread with flakes of virgin snow,
Nor snow of cheeks with Tyrian grain enroll'd;
Trust not those shining lights which wrought
my woe,

When first I did their azure rays behold,
Nor voice, whose sounds more strange effects do show

Than of the Thracian harper have been told:
Look to this dying lily, fading rose,
Darl. hyacinth, of late whose blushing beams
Made all the neighbouring herbs and grass rejoice,

And think how little is 'twixt life's extremes;
The cruel tyrant that did kill those flow'rs
Shall once, ah me! not spare that spring of yours.

A good that never satisfies the mind,
A beauty fading like the April show'rs,
A sweet with floods of gall that runs combin'd,
A pleasure passing ere in thought made ours,
A honour that more fickle is than wind,
A glory at opinion's frown that low'rs,
A treasury which bankrupt time devours,
A knowledge than grave ignorance more blind,
A vain delight our equals to command,
A style of greatness, in effect a dream,
A swelling thought of holding sea and land,
A servile lot, deck'd with a pompous name:
Are the strange ends we toil for here below,
Till wisest death make us our errors know.

Look as the flow'r, which ling'ringly doth fade,
The morning's darling late, the summer's queen, Spoil'd of that juice which kept it fresh and
green,

As high as it did raise, bows low the head:
Just so the pleasures of my life being dead,
Or in their contraries but only seen,
With swifter speed declines than erst it spread.
And, blasted, scarce now shows what it hath been Therefore, as doth the pilgrim, whom the night
Hastes darkly to imprison on his way,
Think on thy home, my soul, and think aright
Of what's yet left thee of life's wasting day:
Thy sun posts westward, passed is thy morn,
And twice it is not given thee to be born.

THE weary mariner so far not flies
An howling tempest, harbour to attain;
Nor shepherd hastes, when frays of wolves arise,
So fast to fold, to save his bleating train,
As I (wing'd with contempt and just disdain)
Now fly the world, and what it most doth prize,
And sanctuary seek, free to remain
From wounds of abject times, and envy's eyes:
To me this world did once seem sweet and fair,
While sense's slight mind's perspective kept blind;
Now like imagin'd landscape in the air,
And weeping rainbows, her best joys I find:
Or if aught here is had that praise should have,
It is an obscure life and silent grave.

WHY, worldlings, do ye trust frail honour's
dreams,

And lean to gilded glories which decay;
Why do ye toil to register your names
On icy pillars, which soon melt away?
True honour is not here, that place it claims
Where black-brow'd night doth not exile the day,
Nor no far-shining lamp dives in the sea,
But an eternal Sun spreads lasting beams;
There it attendeth you, where spotless bands
Of sp'rits stand gazing on their sovereign bliss,
Where years not hold it in their cank'ring hands,
But who once noble, ever noble is.

Look home, lest he your weaken'd wit make thrall,
Who Eden's foolish gard'ner erst made fall.

As are those apples, pleasant to the eye,
But full of smoke within, which use to grow
Near that strange lake where God pour'd from the sky
Huge show'rs of flames, worse flames to overthrow:
Such are their works that with a glaring show
Of humble holiness in virtue's dye
Would colour mischief, while within they glow
With coals of sin, though none the smoke descrie.
Bad is that angel that erst fell from Heaven;
But not so bad as he, nor in worse case,
Who hides a trait'rous mind with smiling face,
And with a dove's white feathers clothes a raven.
Each sin some colour hath it to adorn.
Hypocrisy Almighty God doth scorn.

THrice happy he who by some shady grove,
Far from the clamorous world, doth live his own,
Though solitary, who is not alone,
But doth converse with that eternal love.
O how more sweet is birds' harmonious moan,
Or the hoarse sobbings of the widow'd dove,
Than those smooth whisp'rings near a prince's
throne,

Which good make doubtful, do the evil approve!
O! how more sweet is zephyrs' wholesome breath,
And sighs embalm'd, which new-born flow'rs unfold,

Than that applause vain honour doth bequeath!
How sweet are streams to poison drank in gold!
The world is full of horrors, troubles, slights:
Woods' harmless shades have only true delights.

SWEET bird, that sing'st away the early hours
Of winters past, or coming, void of care,
Well pleased with delights which present are,
Fair seasons, budding sprays, sweet-smelling
flow'rs:

To rocks, to springs, to rills, from leavy bow'rs
Thou thy Creator's goodness dost declare,
And what dear gifts on thee he did not spare,
A stain to human sense in sin that low'rs.
What soul can be so sick, which by thy songs
(Attir'd in sweetness) sweetly is not driven Quite to forget Earth's tumults, spites, and wrongs,

And lift a reverend eye and thought to Heaven?
Sweet, artless songster, thou my mind dost raise
To airs of spheres, yes, and to angels' lays.

LET us each day inure ourselves to die,
If this, and not our fears, be truly death,
Above the circles both of hope and faith
With fair immortal pinions to fly;
If this be death, our best part to untie
(By ruining the jail) from lust and wrath,
And every drowsy languor here beneath,
To be made deniz'd citizen of sky;
To have more knowledge than all books contain
All pleasures even surmounting wishing pow'r,
The fellowship of God's immortal train,
And these that time nor force shall e'er devour:
If this be death, what joy, what golden care
Of life, can with death's ugliness compare?

MORE oft than once Death whisper'd in mine ear,
"Grave what thou hear'st in diamond and gold;
I am that monarch whom all monarchs fear.
Who have in dust their far-stretch'd pride up-roll'd.

All, all is mine beneath Moon's silver sphere;
And nought, save virtue, can my power withhold:
This, not believ'd, experience true thee told,
By danger late when I to thee came near.
As bugbear then my visage I did show,
That of my horrors thou right use might'st make,
And a more sacred path of living take:
Now still walk armed for my ruthless blow;
Trust flattering life no more, redeem time past,
And live each day, as if it were thy last."

THE WORLD.

THIS world a hunting is,
The prey, poor man; the Nimrod fierce, is Death;

His speedy greyhounds are,
Lust, Sickness, Envy, Care;
Strife that ne'er falls amiss,
With all those ills which haunt us while we breathe.

Now, if by chance we fly
Of these the eager chase,
Old age with stealing pace
Casts on his nets, and there we panting die.

SPRING.

NEW doth the Sun appear,
The mountains' snows decay,
Crown'd with frail flower's forth comes the infant year;

My soul, time posts away,
And thou, yet in that frost
Which flow'r and fruit hath lost,
As if all here immortal were, dost stay:
For shame! thy powers awake,
Look to that Heaven which never night makes black,

And there at that immortal Sun's bright rays,
Deck thee with flow'rs, which fear not rage of days.

LIFE.

LIFE a right shadow is;
For if it long appear,
Then is it spent, and death's long night draws near;
Shadows are moving, light,
And is there ought so moving as is this?
When it is most in sight,
It steals away, and none knows how or where,
So near our cradles to our coffins are.

A TRANSLATION OF SIR JOHN SCOT'S VERSES,

Beginning, Quod vitæ sectabor iter?

WHAT course of life should wretched mortals
take?

In books hard questions large contention make.
Care dwells in houses, labour in the field;
Tumultuous seas affrighting dangers yield.
In foreign lands thou never canst be blest:
If rich, thou art in fear; if poor, distress'd.
In wedlock frequent discontentments swell;
Unmarried persons as in deserts dwell.
How many troubles are with children born!
Yet he that wants them counts himself forlorn.
Young men are wanton, and of wisdom void;
Grey hairs are cold, unfit to be employ'd.
Who would not one of these two offers try,
Not to be born; or, being born, to die?

MUSICK'S DUEL*.

Now westward Sol had spent the richest beams
Of noon's high glory, when hard by the streams
Of Tiber, on the scene of a green plat,
Under protection of an oak ; there sat
A sweet lute's master : in whose gentle airs
He lost the day's heat, and his own hot cares.

Close in the covert of the leaves there stood
A nightingale, come from the neighbouring wood :
(The sweet inhabitant of each glad tree,
Their muse, their Syren, harmless Syren she)
There stood she listening and did entertain
The music's soft report ; and mould the same
In her own murmurs, that what ever mood
His curious fingers lent, her voice made good.
The man perceiv'd his rival, and her art,
Dispos'd to give the light-foot lady sport,
Awakes his lute, and 'gainst the fight to come
Informs it, in a sweet prelude
Of closer strains, and ere the war begin,
He lightly skirmishes on every string
Charg'd with a flying touch ; and straightway she Carves out her dainty voice as readily,
Into a thousand sweet distinguish'd tones,
And reckons up in soft divisions
Quick volumes of wild notes : to let him know
By that shrill taste she could do something too.
His nimble hands' instinct then 'aught each string

A cap'ring cheerfulness, and made them sing
To their own dance ; now negligently rash
He throws his arm and with a long drawn dash
Blends all together, then distinctly trips
From this to that, then quick returning skips
And snatches this again, and pauses there.
She measures every measure, every where
Meets art with art ; sometimes, as if in doubt,
Not perfect yet, and fearing to be out,
Trails he. plain ditty in one long spun note,
Through the sleek passage of her open throat :
A clear unwrinkled song ; then doth she point it
With tender accents, and severely joint it
By short diminutives, that being rear'd
In controverting warbles evenly shar'd,
With her sweet self she wrangles ; he amaz'd
That from so small a channel should be rais'd
The torrent of a voice, whose melody
Could melt into such sweet variety,
Strains higher yet, that tickled with rare art
The tatling strings (each breathing in his part)
Most kindly do fall out, the grumbling base
In surly groans disdains the treble's grace ;
The high-perch'd treble chirps at this, and chides,
Until his finger (moderator) hides
And closes the sweet quarrel, rousing all
Hoarse, shrill at once ; as when the trumpets call

* From Strada.

Hot Mars to th' harvest of death's field, and woo
Men's hearts into their hands ; this lesson too
She gives him back, her supple breast thrills out
Sharp airs, and staggers in a warbling doubt
Of dallying sweetness, hovers o'er her skill,
And folds in wav'd notes with a trembling bill,
The pliant series of her slippery song ;
Then starts she suddenly into a throng
Of short thick sobs, whose thund'ring volleys float,
And roul themselves over her lubric throat
In panting murmurs, still'd out of her breast,
That ever-bubbling spring, the sugar'd nest
Of her delicious soul, that there does lie
Bathing in streams of liquid melody ;
Music's best seed-plot ; when in ripen'd airs
A golden-headed harvest fairly rears
His honey-dropping tops, plough'd by her breath
Which there reciprocally laboureth.
In that sweet soil it seems a holy quire
Founded to th' name of great Apollo's lyre ;
Whose silver-roof rings with the sprightly notes
Of sweet-lipp'd angel-imps, that swill their throats
In cream of morning Helicon, and then
Preferr soft anthems to the ears of men,
To woo them from their beds, still murmuring
That men can sleep while they their mattens
sing :

(Most divine service) whose so early lay
Prevents the eye-lids of the blushing day.
There might you hear her kindle her soft voice,
In the close murmur of a sparkling noise ;
And lay the ground-work of her hopeful song,
Still keeping in the forward stream, so long
Till a sweet whirlwind (striving to get out)
Heaves her soft bosom, wanders round about,
And makes a pretty earthquake in her breast,
Till the fledg'd notes at length forsake their nest ;

Fluttering in wanton shoals, and to the sky,
Wing'd with their own wild echoes, prattling fly.
She opes the floodgate, and lets loose a tide
Of streaming sweetness, which in state doth ride
On the wav'd back of every swelling strain,
Rising and falling in a pompous train ;
And while she thus discharges a shrill peal
Of flashing airs, she qualifies their zeal
With the cool epode of a graver note,
Thus high, thus low, as if her silver throat
Would reach the brazen voice of war's hoarse bird ;

Her little soul is ravish'd ; and so pour'd
Into loose ecstasies, that she is plac'd
Above her self, music's enthusiast.

Shame now and anger mix'd a double stain
In the musician's face ; " Yet once again
(Mistress) I come ; now reach a strain, my lute,
Above her mock, or be for ever mute.
Or tune a song of victory to me,
Or to thyself sing thine own obsequy ;"
So said, his hands sprightly as fire he flings,
And with a quavering coyness tastes the strings :
The sweet-lip'd sisters musically frighted,
Singing their fears, are fearfully delighted :
Trembling as when Apollo's golden hairs

Are fann'd and frizzled in the wanton airs
Of his own breath, which married to his lyre
Doth tune the spheres and make Heaven's self look higher;

From this to that, from that to this he flies,
Feels music's pulse in all her arteries,
Caught in a net which there Apollo spreads,
His fingers struggle with the vocal threads,
Following those little rills, he sinks into
A sea of Helicon; his hand does go
Those parts of sweetness which with nectar drop,

Softer than that which pants in Hebe's cup:
The humourous strings expound his learned touch

By various glosses; now they seem to grutch,
And murmur in a buzzing din, then gingle
In shrill-tongu'd accents, striving to be single;
Every smooth turn, every delicious stroke,
Gives life to some new grace: thus doth he invoke

Sweetness by all her names; thus, bravely
thus,

(Fraught with a fury so harmonious)
The lute's light genius now does proudly rise,
Heav'd on the surges of swoll rapsodies,
Whose flourish (meteor-like) doth curl the air
With flash of high-born fancies, here and there Dancing in lofty measures, and anon
Creeps on the soft touch of a tender tone,
Whose trembling murmurs melting in wide
airs,

Runs to and fro, complaining his sweet cares;
Because those precious mysteries that dwell
In music's ravish'd soul he dare not tell,
But whisper to the world: thus do they vary,
Each string his note, as if they meant to carry Their master's blest soul (snatcht out at his ears

By a strong ecstasy) through all the spheres
Of music's heaven; and seat it there on high
In th' empyreum of pure harmony.
At length, (after so long, so loud a strife
Of all the strings, still breathing the best
life

Of blest variety attending on
His fingers' fairest revolution,
In many a sweet rise, many as sweet a fall)
A full-mouth'd diapason swallows all.

This done, he lists what she would say to this,
And she, although her breath's late exercise
Had dealt too roughly with her tender throat,

Yet summons all her sweet powers for a note;
Alas! in vain! for while (sweet soul) she tries

To measure all those wild diversities,
Of chatt'ring strings, by the small size of one
Poor simple voice, rais'd in a natural tone;
She fails, and failing grieves, and grieving
dies;

She dies, and leaves her life the victor's prize,
Falling upon his lute; O fit to have,
(That liv'd so sweetly) dead, so sweet a grave!

A DIALOGUE, BETWEEN ARAPHILL AND CASTARA.

Araphill.

Dost not thou, Castara, read
Am'rous volumes in my eyes?
Doth not every motion plead
What I'de shew, and yet disguise?
Sences act each other's part,
Eyes, as tongues, reveale the heart.

Castara.

I saw love as lightning breake
From thy eyes, and was content
Oft to heare thy silence speak.
Silent love is eloquent.
So the sence of learning heares
The dumbe musicke of the spheares.

Araphill.

Then there's mercy in your kinde,
Listning to an unfain'd love.
Or strives he to tame the wind,
Who would your compassion move?
No y'are pittious as y're faire,
Heaven relents, o'ercome by prayer.

Castara.

But loose man too prodigall
Is in the expence of vowes;
And thinks to him kingdoms fall
When the heart of woman bowes;
Frailty to your armes may yeeld;
Who resists you wins the field.

Araphill.

Triumph not to see me bleed,
Let the bore chafed from his den,
On the wounds of mankind feede.
Your softe sexe should pittie men.
Malice well may practise art,
Love hath a transparent heart.

Castara.

Yet is love all one deceit,
A warme frost, a frozen fire.
She within her selfe is great,
Who is slave to no desire.
Let youth act, and age advise,
And then Love may finde his eyes.

Araphill.

Hymen's torch yeelds a dim light,
When ambition joynes our hands,
A proud day, but mournfull night,
She sustaines, who marries lands.
Wealth slaves man; but for their ore,
Th' Indians had beene free, though poore.

Castara.

And yet wealth the fuell is
Which maintaines the nuptiall fire.
And in honour there's a blisse,
Th' are immortall who aspire.
But truth sayes no joyes are sweete,
But where hearts united meete.

Araphill.

Roses breathe not such a sent,
 To perfume the neighb'ring groves;
 As when you affirme content,
 In no speare of glory moves.
 Glory narrow soules combines:
 Noble hearts Love onely joynes.

THE DESCRIPTION OF CASTARA.

LIKE the violet which alone
 Prospers in some happy shade:
 My Castara lives unknowne,
 To no looser eye betray'd,
 For shee's to her selfe untrue,
 Who delights i' th' publicke view.

Such is her beauty, as no arts
 Have enricht with borrowed grace.
 Her high birth no pride imparts,
 For she blushes in her place.
 Folly boasts a glorious blood.
 She is noblest being good.

Cautious she knew never yet
 What a wanton courtship meant;
 Not speaks loud to boast her wit,
 In her silence eloquent.
 Of her self survey she takes,
 But 'twene men no difference makes.

She obeyes with speedy will
 Her grave parents' wise commands.
 And so innocent, that ill,
 She nor acts, nor understands.
 Women's feet runne still astray,
 If once to ill they know the way.

She sailes by that rocke, the court,
 Where oft honour splits her mast:
 And retir'dnesse thinks the port,
 Where her fame may anchor cast.
 Vertue safely cannot sit,
 Where vice is enthron'd for wit.

She holds that daye's pleasure best,
 Where sinne waits not on delight,
 Without maske, or ball, or feast,
 Sweetly spends a winter's night.
 O're that darknesse, whence is thrust,
 Prayer and sleepe, oft governs lust.

She her throne makes reason climbe,
 While wild passions captive lie.
 And each article of time,
 Her pure thoughts to Heaven fie:
 All her vowes religious be,
 All her love she vowes to me.

SONG.

TO ALTHEA, FROM PRISON.

WHEN Love, with unconfined wings,
 Hovers within my gates,
 And my divine Althea brings
 To whisper at the grates;
 When I lie tangled in her hair,
 And fetter'd to her eye,—
 The birds, that wanton in the air,
 Know no such liberty.

When flowing cups run swiftly round
 With no allaying Thames,
 Our careless heads with roses bound,
 Our hearts with loyal flames;
 When thirsty grief in wine we steep,
 When healths and draughts go free,—
 Fishes, that tippie in the deep,
 Know no such liberty.

When, like committed linnets, I
 With shriller throat shall sing
 The sweetness, mercy, majesty,
 And glories of my king;
 When I shall voice aloud how good
 He is, how great should be,— Enlarged winds, that curl the flood,
 Know no such liberty.

Stone walls do not a prison make,
 Nor iron bars a cage;
 Minds innocent and quiet take
 That for an hermitage.
 If I have freedom in my love,
 And in my soul am free,—
 Angels alone, that soar above,
 Enjoy such liberty.

THE CHEAT OF CUPID, OR THE UNGENTLE GUEST.

ONE silent night, of late,
 When ev'ry creature rested,
 Came one unto my gate,
 And, knocking, me molested.

Who's that, said I, beats there,
 And troubles thus the sleepy?
 Cast off, said he, all fear,
 And let not locks thus keep ye;

For I a boy am, who
 By moonless nights have swerved,
 And all with show'rs wet through,
 And e'en with cold half starved.

I pitiful arose,
And soon a taper lighted,
And did myself disclose
Unto the lad benighted :

I saw he had a bow,
And wings too which did shiver ;
And, looking down below
I spy'd he had a quiver.

I to my chimney's shine
Brought him, as Love professes,
And chaff'd his hands with mine,
And dried his dropping tresses.

But when he felt him warm'd ;
Let's try this bow of our's,
And string, if they be harm'd,
Said he, with these late show'rs.

Forthwith his bow he bent.
And wedded string and arrow,
And struck me, that it went
Quite through my heart and marrow.

Then, laughing loud, he flew
Away, and thus said, flying,
Adieu, mine host, adieu !
I'll leave thy heart a-dying.

TO THE VIRGINS, TO MAKE MUCH OF TIME.

GATHER ye rose-buds while ye may,
Old Time is still a flying ;
And this same flow'r, that smiles to-day,
To-morrow will be dying.

The glorious lamp of heav'n, the sun,
The higher he's a getting ;
The sooner will his race be run,
And nearer he's to setting.

That age is best which is the first,
When youth and blood are warmer ;
But being spent, the worse ; and worst
Times still succeed the former.

Then be not coy, but use your time ;
And while ye may, go marry :
For, having lost but once your prime,
You may for ever tarry.

TO ANTHEA, WHO MAY COMMAND HIM ANY THING.

Bid me to live, and I will live
Thy protestant to be ;
Or bid me love, and I will give
A loving heart to thee.

A heart as soft, a heart as kind,
A heart as sound and free,
As in the whole world thou canst find,
That heart I'll give to thee.

Bid that heart stay, and it will stay,
To honor thy decree ;
Or bid it languish quite away,
And 't shall do so for thee.

Bid me to weep, and I will weep,
While I have eyes to see ;
And having none, yet I will keep
A heart to weep for thee.

Bid me despair, and I'll despair,
Under that cypress tree ;
Or bid me die, and I will dare
E'en death, to die for thee.

Thou art my life, my love, my heart,
The very eyes of me ;
And hast command of every part,
To live and die for thee.

TO DAFFODILS.

FAIR daffodils, we weep to see
You haste away so soon ;
As yet the early-rising sun
Has not attain'd his noon :
Stay, stay,
Until the last'ning day
Has run
But to the even-song ;
And, having pray'd together, we
Will go with you along !

We have short time to stay, as you ;
We have as short a spring,
As quick a growth to meet decay,
As you, or any thing :
We die,
As your hours do ; and dry
Away
Like to the summer's rain,
Or as the pearls of morning dew
Ne'er to be found again.

TO BLOSSOMS.

FAIR pledges of a fruitful tree,
Why do ye fall so fast ?
Your date is not so past,
But you may stay yet here awhile
To blush, and gently smile,
And go at last.

What, were ye born to be
An hour or half's delight,
And so to bid good night ?
'Twas pity nature brought ye forth
Merely to shew your worth,
And lose you quite.

But you are lovely leaves, where we
May read how soon things have
Their end, though ne'er so brave :
And after they have shown their pride,
Like you, awhile ; they glide
Into the grave.

THE CHRONICLE, A BALLAD.

MARGARITA first possess'd,
If I remember well my breast,
Margarita first of all;
But when a while the wanton maid
With my restless heart had play'd,
Martha took the flying ball.

Martha soon did it resign
To the beauteous Catharine:
Beauteous Catharine gave place
(Though loth and angry she to part
With the possession of my heart)
To Eliza's conquering face.

Eliza till this hour might reign,
Had she not evil counsels ta'en:
Fundamental laws she broke,
And still new favourites she chose,
Till up in arms my passions rose,
And cast away her yoke.

Mary then, and gentle Anne,
Both to reign at once began;
Alternately they sway'd,
And sometimes Mary was the fair,
And sometimes Anne the crown did wear,
And sometimes both I obey'd.

Another Mary then arose,
And did rigorous laws impose;
A mighty tyrant she!
Long, alas! should I have been Under that iron-sceptred queen
Had not Rebecca set me free.

When fair Rebecca set me free,
'Twas then a golden time with me:
But soon those pleasures fled;
For the gracious princess dy'd
In her youth and beauty's pride,
And Judith reigned in her stead.

One month, three days, and half-an-hour,
Judith held the sov'reign pow'r.
Wondrous beautiful her face,
But so weak and small her wit
That she to govern was unfit,
And so Susanna took her place.

But when Isabella came
Arm'd with a resistless flame;
And th' artillery of her eye
Whilst she proudly march'd about,
Greater conquests to find out,
She beat out Susan by the bye.

But in her place I then obey'd
Black-ey'd Bess, her viceroy maid,
To whom ensu'd a vacancy.
Thousand worst passions then possess'd
The interregnum of my breast,
Bless me from such an anarchy!

Gentle Henrietta then,
And a third Mary, next began:
Then Joan, and Jane, and Audria;
And then a pretty Thomasine,
And then another Catharine,
And then a long et cætera.

But I should now to you relate
The strength and riches of their state,
The powder, patches, and the pins,
The ribands, jewels, and the rings,
The lace, the paint, and warlike things,
That make up all their magazines:

If I should tell the politic arts
To take and keep men's hearts,
The letters, embassies, and spies,
The frowns, and smiles, and flatteries,
The quarrels, tears, and perjuries,
Numberless, nameless mysteries!

And all the little lime-twigs laid
By Mach'avel the waiting-maid;
I more voluminous should grow
(Chiefly if I like them should tell,
All change of weathers that befel)
Than Hollingshed or Stow.

But I will briefer with them be,
Since few of them were long with me.
An higher and a nobler strain
My present emperess does claim,
Heleonora! first o' the name,
Whom God grant long to reign.

ON THE PRAISE OF POETRY.

'Tis not a pyramid of marble stone,
Though high as our ambition;
'Tis not a tomb cut out in brass, which can Give life to th' ashes of a man,
But verses only; they shall fresh appear,
Whilst there are men to read or hear,
When time shall make the lasting brass decay,
And eat the pyramid away,
Turning that monument wherein men trust
Their names, to what it keeps, poor dust;
Then shall the epitaph remain, and be
New graven in eternity.
Poets by death are conquer'd, but the wit
Of poets triumph over it.
What cannot verse? When Thracian Orpheus took
His lyre, and gently on it strook,
The learned stones came dancing all along,
And kept time to the charming song.

With artificial pace the warlike pine,
 The elm and his wife the ivy twine,
 With all the better trees which erst had stood
 Unmov'd, forsook their native wood.
 The laurel to the poet's hand did bow,
 Craving the honour of his brow;
 And ev'ry loving arm embrac'd, and made
 With their officious leaves a shade.
 The beasts, too, strove his auditors to be,
 Forgetting their old tyranny.
 The fearful hart next to the lion came,
 And wolf was shepherd to the lamb.
 Nightingales, harmless Syrens of the air,
 And Muses of the place, were there;
 Who, when their little windpipes they had found
 Unequal to so strange a sound,
 O'ercome by art and grief, they did expire,
 And fell upon the conqu'ring lyre.
 Happy, O happy they! whose tomb might be,
 Mausolus! envied by thee!

THE COMPLAINT.

In a deep vision's intellectual scene,
 Beneath a bow'r for sorrow made,
 Th' uncomfortable shade
 Of the black ewe's unlucky green,
 Mix'd with the mourning willow's careful gray,
 Where rev'rend Cam cut out his famous way,
 The melancholy Cowley lay;
 And, lo! a muse appear'd to his clos'd sight,
 (The Muses oft' in lands of vision play)
 Body'd, array'd, and seen by an internal light:
 A golden harp with silver strings she bore,
 A wondrous hieroglyphic robe she wore,
 In which all colours and all figures were,
 That Nature or that Fancy can create,
 That Art can never imitate,
 And with loose pride it wanton'd in the air,
 In such a dress, in such a well-cloth'd dream,
 She us'd of old, near fair Ismenus' stream
 Pindar, her Theban favourite, to meet;
 A crown was on her head, and wings were on her feet.

She touch'd him with her harp and rais'd him
 from the ground;
 The shaken strings melodiously resound.
 "Art thou return'd at last," said she,
 "To this forsaken place and me?
 Thou Prodigal! who didst so loosely waste,
 Of all thy youthful years the good estate;
 Art thou return'd here to repent too late?
 And gather husks of learning up at last,
 Now the rich harvest-time of life is past,
 And Winter marches on so fast?
 But when I meant t' adopt thee for my son,
 And did as learn'd a portion assign
 As ever any of the mighty Nine
 Had to their dearest children done;
 When I resolv'd t' exalt thy anointed name,
 Among the spiritual lords of peaceful fame;
 Thou changeling! thou, bewitch'd with noise and
 shew,

Wouldst into courts and cities. From me go;
 Wouldst see the world abroad, and have a share
 In all the follies and the tumults there;
 Thou would'st, forsooth! be something in a state,
 And bus'ness thou wouldst find, and would'st create:

Business! the frivolous pretence
 Of human lusts, to shake off innocence;
 Business! the grave impertinence;
 Business! the thing which I of all things hate;
 Business! the contradiction of thy fate.

Go, Renegado! cast up thy account,
 And see to what amount
 Thy foolish gains by quitting me:
 The sale of knowledge, fame, and liberty,
 The fruits of thy unlearn'd apostasy.
 Thou thought'st, if once the public storm were past,
 All thy remaining life should sunshine be:
 Behold the public storm is spent at last,
 The Sovereign is toss'd at sea no more,
 And thou, with all the noble company,
 Art got at last to shore:
 But whilst thy fellow-voyagers I see,
 All march'd up to possess the promis'd land,
 Thou still alone, alas! dost gaping stand,
 Upon the naked beach, upon the barren sand.

As a fair morning of the blessed spring,
 After a tedious stormy night,
 Such was the glorious entry of our King;
 Enriching moisture dropp'd on every thing:
 Plenty he sow'd below, and cast about him light.
 But then, alas! to thee alone,
 One of Old Gideon's miracles was shewn,
 For ev'ry tree and ev'ry hand around,
 With pearly dew was crown'd,
 And upon all the quicken'd ground
 The fruitful seed of heav'n did brooding lie,
 And nothing but the Muse's fleece was dry.
 It did all other threats surpass,
 When God to his own people said,
 (The men whom thro' long wand'rings he had led)
 That he would give them ev'n a heav'n of brass;
 They look'd up to that heav'n in vain,
 That bounteous heav'n! which God did not restrain
 Upon the most unjust to shine and rain.

The Rachel, for which twice seven years, and
 more,
 Thou didst with faith and labour serve,
 And didst (if faith and labour can) deserve,
 Tho' she contracted was to thee,
 Giv'n to another, thou didst see,
 Giv'n to another, who had store
 Of fairer and of richer wives before,
 And not a Leah left, thy recompense to be.
 Go on, twice sev'n years more, thy fortune try,
 Twice sev'n years more God in his bounty may Give thee to fling away
 Into the Court's deceitful lottery;

But think how likely 'tis that thou,
With the dull work of thy unwieldy plough
Shouldst in a hard and barren season thrive,
Shouldst even able be to live;
Thou! to whose share so little bread did fall
In the miraculous year, when manna rain'd on
all."

Thus spake the Muse, and spake it with a smile,
That seem'd at once to pity and revile:
And to her thus, raising his thoughtful head,
The melancholy Cowley said:
"Ah! wanton Foe! dost thou upbraid
The ills which thou thyself hast made?
When in the cradle innocent I lay,
Thou, wicked Spirit! stolest me away,
And my abused soul didst bear
Into thy new-found worlds, I know not where,
Thy golden Indies in the air;
And ever since I strive in vain
My ravish'd freedom to regain;
Still I rebel, still thou dost reign;
Lo, still in verse, against thee I complain.
There is a sort of stubborn weeds,
Which, if the earth but once it ever breeds,
No wholesome herb can near them thrive,
No useful plant can keep alive:
The foolish sports I did on thee bestow
Make all my art and labour fruitless now;
Where once such fairies dance, no grass doth ever grow.

When my new mind had no infusion known,
Thou gav'st so deep a tincture of thine own,
That ever since I vainly try
To wash away th' inherent dye:
Long work, perhaps, may spoil thy colours quite,
But never will reduce the native white.
To all the ports of honour and of gain,
I often steer my course in vain;
Thy gale comes cross, and drives me back again.
Thou slacken'st all my nerves of industry,
By making them so oft to be
The tinkling string of thy loose minstrelsy.
Whoever this world's happiness would see,
Must as entirely cast off thee,
As they who only heav'n desire
Do from the world retire.
This was my error, this my gross mistake,
Myself a demi-votary to make.
Thus with Sapphira and her husband's fate,
(A fault which I, like them, am taught too late)
For all that I gave up, I nothing gain,
And perish for the part which I retain.

Teach me not then, O thou fallacious Muse!
The court and better king t' accuse;
The heav'n under which I live is fair,
The fertile soil will a full harvest bear:
Thine, thine is all the barrenness, if thou
Mak'st me sit still and sing when I should plough.
When I but think how many a tedious year
Our patient Sovereign did attend
His long misfortunes' fatal end;

2 A

How cheerfully, and how exempt from fear,
On the Great Sovereign's will he did depend,
I ought to be accus'd if I refuse
To wait on his, O thou fallacious Muse!
Kings have long hands, they say, and tho' I be
So distant, they may reach at length to me.
However, of all princes thou Shouldst not reproach rewards for being small or slow;
Thou! who rewardest but with pop'lar breath,
And that, too, after death!

TO THE ROYAL SOCIETY.

PHILOSOPHY! the great and only heir
Of all that human knowledge which has been Unforfeited by man's rebellious sin,
Though full of years he do appear, (Philosophy! I say, and call it he,
For whatsoever the painter's fancy be,
It a male virtue seems to me)
Has still been kept in nonage till of late,
Nor manag'd or enjoy'd his vast estate.
Three or four thousand years, one would have thought,
To ripeness and perfection might have brought
A science so well bred and nurs'd,
And of such hopeful parts, too, at the first;
But, oh! the guardians and the tutors then,
(Some negligent, and some ambitious men)
Would ne'er consent to set him free,
Or his own nat'ral pow'rs to let him see,
Lest that should put an end to their authority.

That his own bus'ness he might quite forget,
They amus'd him with the sports of wanton
Wit;
With the deserts of poetry they fed him,
Instead of solid meats t' increase his force;
Instead of vig'rous exercise they led him
Into the pleasant labyrinths of ever-fresh discourse:
Instead of carrying him to see
The riches which do hoarded for him lie
In Nature's endless treasury,
They chose his eye, to entertain
(His curious, but not cov'tous, eye)
With painted scenes and pageants of the brain.
Some few exalted sp'rits this latter age has shewn,
That labour'd to assert the liberty
(From guardians who were now usurpers grown)
Of this old minor still, captiv'd Philosophy;
But 'twas rebellion call'd, to fight
For such a long-oppressed right.
Bacon, at last, a mighty man! arose,
Whom a wise King and Nature chose
Lord chancellor of both their laws,
And boldly undertook the injur'd pupil's cause.

Authority, which did a body boast,
Though 'twas but air condens'd, and stalk'd about
Like some old giant's more gigantic ghost,
To terrify the learned rout
With the plain magic of true reason's light,

He chas'd out of our sight,
Nor suffer'd living men to be misled
By the vain shadows of the dead :
To graves, from whence it rose, the conquer'd phantom fled.

He broke that monstrous god which stood,
In midst of th' orchard, and the whole did claim,
Which with a useless scythe of wood,
And something else not worth a name,
(Both vast for shew, yet neither fit
Or to defend or to beget,
Ridiculous and senseless terrors !) made
Children and superstitious men afraid.
The orchard's open now, and free ;
Bacon has broke that scarecrow deity :
Come, enter all that will,
Behold the ripen'd fruit, come, gather now your fill !

Yet still, methinks, we fain would be
Catching at the forbidden tree ;
We would be like the Deity ;
When truth and falsehood, good and evil, we Without the senses' aid within ourselves would see ;
For 'tis God only who can find
All nature in his mind.

From words, which are but pictures of the
thought,

(Though we our thoughts from them perversely drew)

To things, the mind's right object, he it brought ;
Like foolish birds to painted grapes we flew.
He sought and gather'd for our use the true ;
And when on heaps the chosen bunches lay,
He press'd them wisely the mechanic way,
Till all their juice did in one vessel join.
Ferment into a nourishment divine,
The thirsty soul's refreshing wine.
Who to the life an exact piece would make,
Must not from other's work a copy take ;
No, not from Rubens or Vandyck ;
Much less content himself to make it like
Th' ideas and the images which lie
In his own fancy or his memory :
No, he before his sight must place
The natural and living face ;
The real object must command
Each judgment of his eye and motion of his hand.

From these, and all long errors of the way,
In which our wand'ring predecessors went,
And, like th' old Hebrews, many years did stray
In deserts, but of small extent,
Bacon ! like Moses, led us forth at last ;
The barren wilderness he pass'd,
Did on the very border stand
Of the bless'd Promis'd land,
And from the mountain's top of his exalted wit,
Saw it himself, and shew'd us it.
But life did never to one man allow
Time to discover worlds, and conquer too ;
Nor can so short a line sufficient be
To fathom the vast deeps of Nature's sea :

The work he did we ought t' admire,
And were unjust if we should more require
From his few years, divided 'twixt th' excess
Of low affliction and high happiness :
For who on things remote can fix his sight,
That's always in a triumph or a fight !

From you, great champions ! we expect to get
These spacious countries but discover'd yet ;
Countries where yet, instead of Nature, we
Her image and her idols worship'd see :
These large and wealthy regions to subdue,
Tho' Learning has whole armies at command,
Quarter'd about in every land,
A better troop she ne'er together drew.
Methinks, like Gideon's little band,
God with design has pick'd out you,
To do these noble wonders by a few.
When the whole host he saw, They are, said he ;
Too many to o'ercome for me :
And now he chooses out his men,
Much in the way that he did then :
Not those many, whom he found
Idly extended on the ground
To drink, with their dejected head,
The stream, just so as by their mouths it fled :
No ; but those few who took the waters up,
And made of their laborious hands the cup.

Thus you prepar'd, and in the glorious fight
Their wondrous pattern too, you take :
Their old and empty pitchers first they brake,
And with their hands then lifted up the light.
Lo ! sound too the trumpets here !
Already your victorious lights appear ;
New scenes of heav'n already we espy,
And crowds of golden worlds on high,
Which from the spacious plains of earth and sea
Could never yet discover'd be
By sailor's or Chaldean's watchful eye.
Nature's great works no distance can obscure,
No smallness her near objects can secure :
Ye 'ave taught the curious sight to press
Into the privatest recess
Of her imperceptible littleness :
Ye 'ave learn'd to read her smallest hand,
And well begun her deepest sense to understand.

Mischief and true dishonour fall on those
Who would to laughter or to scorn expose
So virtuous and so noble a design,
So human for its use, for knowledge so divine.
The things which these proud men despise, and call
Impertinent, and vain, and small,
Those smallest things of nature let me know,
Rather than all their greatest actions do.
Whoever would deposed Truth advance
Into the throne usurp'd from it,
Must feel at first the blows of ignorance,
And the sharp points of envious Wit.
So when, by various turns of the celestial dance,
In many thousand years
A star, so long unknown, appears,

Though heav'n itself more beauteous by it grow,
It troubles and alarms the world below,
Does to the wise a star, to fools a meteor, shew.

With courage and success you the bold work begin;

Your cradle has not idle been :
None e'er but Hercules and you could be
At five years' age worthy a history :
And ne'er did Fortune better yet
Th' historian to the story fit.
As you from all old errors free
And purge the body of Philosophy,
So from all modern follies he
Has vindicated eloquence and wit :
His candid style like a clean stream does slide,
And his bright fancy all the way
Does, like the sunshine, in it play ;
It does like Thames, the best of rivers, glide,
Where the god does not rudely overturn,
But gently pour, the crystal urn,
And with judicious hands does the whole current guide.

It has all the beauties Nature can impart,
And all the comely dress, without the paint, of Art.

THE EPICURE.

[From the Anacreonticks.]

UNDERNEATH this myrtle shade,
On flow'ry beds supinely laid,
With od'rous oils my head o'erflowing,
And around it roses growing,
What should I do but drink away
The heat and troubles of the day ?
In this more than kingly state,
Love himself shall on me wait.
Fill to me, Love ! nay, fill it up ;
And, mingled, cast into the cup
Wit and mirth, and noble fires,
Vigorous health, and gay desires.
The wheel of life no less will stay
In a smooth than rugged way :
Since it equally doth flee,
Let the motion pleasant be.
Why do we precious ointments show'r,
Nobler wines why do we pour ?
Beauteous flow'rs why do we spread,
Upon the mon'uments of the dead ?
Nothing they but dust can shew,
Or bones that hasten to be so.
Crown me with roses whilst I live,
Now your wines and ointments give ;
After death, I nothing crave,
Let me alive my pleasures have,
All are Stoicks in the grave.

THE GRASSHOPPER.

[From the Anacreonticks.]

HAPPY insect ! what can be
In happiness compar'd to thee ?
Fed with nourishment divine,
The dewy morning's gentle wine !

Nature waits upon thee still,
And thy verdant cup does fill ;
'Tis fill'd wherever thou dost tread,
Nature's self's thy Ganymede.
Thou dost drink, and dance, and sing,
Happier than the happiest king !
All the fields which thou dost see,
All the plants, belong to thee ;
All that summer-hours produce,
Fertile made with early juice :
Man for thee does sow and plough ;
Farmer he, and landlord thou !
Thou dost innocently joy,
Nor does thy luxury destroy.
The shepherd gladly heareth thee,
More harmonious than he.
Thee country hinds with gladness hear
Prophet of the ripen'd year !
Thee Phœbus loves, and does inspire ;
Phœbus is himself thy sire.
To thee, of all things upon earth,
Life is no longer than thy mirth.
Happy Insect ! happy thou
Dost neither age nor winter know ;
But when thou'st drunk, and danc'd, and sung
Thy fill, the flow'ry leaves among, (Voluptuous, and wise withal, Epicurean animal !)
Sated with thy summer feast,
Thou retir'st to endless rest.

THE INFERNAL REGIONS.

[From the Davide's.]

BENEATH the silent chambers of the earth,
Where the Sun's fruitful beams give metals
birth,
Where he the growth of fatal gold does see,
Gold, which, above, more influence has than he ;
Beneath the dens where unfedged tempests lie,
And infant winds their tender voices try ;
Beneath the mighty ocean's wealthy caves,
Beneath th' eternal fountain of all waves,—
Where their vast court the mother-waters keep,
And, undisturb'd by moons, in silence sleep ;
There is a place, (deep, wond'rous deep, below,)
Which genuine Night, and Horror does o'erflow ;
No bound controuls th' unwearied space ; but
Hell,

Endless,—as those dire pains that in it dwell.
Here no dear glimpse of the sun's lovely face
Strikes thro' the solid darkness of the place ;
No dawning morn does her kind reds display ;
One slight, weak beam would, here, be thought the day :

No gentle stars, with their fair gems of light,
Offend the tyrannous and unquesti'd Night ;
Here Lucifer, the mighty captive, reigns,
Proud 'midst his woes, and tyrant in his chains ;
Once general of a gilded host of sprites,
Like Hesper, leading forth the spangled Nights ;
But down, like light'ning, which him struck, he came ;

And roar'd at his first plunge into the flame :

Myriads of sp'rits fell, wounded, round him,
 there ;
 With dropping lights thick shone the singed air ;
 Since when, the dismal solace of their woe
 Has only been, weak mankind to undo ;
 Themselves, at first, against themselves, they
 'excite,
 (Their dearest conquest, and most proud delight)
 And if those mines of secret treason fail,
 With open force man's virtue they assail ;
 Unable to corrupt, seek to destroy,
 And, where their poisons miss, the sword employ.

HEAVEN.

[From the Davidels.]

ABOVE the subtle foldings of the sky ;
 Above the well-set orbs' soft harmony ;
 Above those petty lamps that gild the night ;
 There is a place o'erflown with hallow'd light ;
 Where heav'n, as if it left itself behind,
 Is stretch'd-out far, nor its own bounds can find :
 Here peaceful flames swell up the sacred place,
 Nor can the glory contain itself in th' endless
 space ;
 For, there, no twilight of the sun's dull ray
 Glimmers upon the pure and native day ;
 No pale-fac'd moon, does, in stol'n beams, appear,
 Or, with dim taper, scatters darkness there :
 On a smooth sphere, the restless seasons slide ;
 No circling motion doth swift time divide :
 Nothing is there to come, and nothing past,
 But an eternal Now does always last :
 There sits THE ALMIGHTY, First of All, and End,
 Whom nothing, but Himself, can comprehend ;
 Who, with His Word, commanded all to be,
 And all obey'd Him, for That Word was HE.

SIR WILLIAM DAVENANT.

Born 1605.—Died 1668.

SONG.

THE lark now leaves his wat'ry nest,
 And climbing, shakes his dewy wings ;
 He takes this window for the east ;
 And to implore your light, he sings,
 Awake, awake, the morn will never rise,
 Till she can dress her beauty at your eyes.

The merchant bows unto the seaman's star,
 The ploughman from the sun his season takes ;
 But still the lover wonders what they are,
 Who look for day before his mistress wakes.
 Awake, awake, break through your vails of lawn !
 Then draw your curtains, and begin the dawn.

SONG.

THE SOLDIER GOING TO THE FIELD.

PRESERVE thy sighs, unthrifty girl !
 To purify the air ;
 Thy tears to thread instead of pearl,
 On bracelets of thy hair.

The trumpet makes the echo hoarse,
 And wakes the louder drum ;
 Exence of grief gains no remorse,
 When sorrow should be dumb.

For I must go where lazy peace,
 Will hide her drowsy head ;
 And, for the sport of kings, increase
 The number of the dead.

But first I'll chide thy cruel theft :
 Can I in war delight,
 Who being of my heart bereft,
 Can have no heart to fight ?

Thou know'st the sacred laws of old,
 Ordain'd a thief should pay,
 To quit him of his theft, sevenfold
 What he had stol'n away.

Thy payment shall but double be ;
 O then with speed resign
 My own seduced heart to me,
 Accompany'd with thine.

SIR JOHN DENHAM.

Born 1615.—Died 1668.

COOPER'S HILL.

SURE there are poets which did never dream
 Upon Parnassus, nor did taste the stream
 Of Helicon ; we therefore may suppose
 Those made not poets, but the poets those.
 And as courts make not kings, but kings the
 court,

So where the Muses and their train resort
 Parnassus stands ; if I can be to thee
 A poet, thou Parnassus art to me.
 Nor wonder if (advantag'd in my flight,
 By taking wing from thy auspicious height)
 Thro' untrac'd ways and airy paths I fly,
 More boundless in my fancy than my eye ;
 My eye, which swift as thought contracts the space

That lies between, and first salutes the place
 Crown'd with that sacred pile, so vast, so high,
 That whether 'tis a part of earth or sky
 Uncertain seems, and may be thought a proud
 Aspiring mountain, or descending cloud ;
 Paul's, the late theme of such a Muse*, whose flight

* Waller.

Has bravely reach'd and soar'd above thy height ;
 Now shalt thou stand, tho' sword, or time, or fire,
 Or zeal, more fierce than they, thy fall conspire,
 Secure, whilst thee the best of poets sings,
 Preserv'd from ruin by the best of kings.
 Under his proud survey the City lies,
 And like a mist beneath a hill doth rise,
 Whose state and wealth, the bus'ness and the crowd,
 Seems at this distance but a darker cloud,
 And is, to him who rightly things esteems,
 No other in effect than what it seems ;
 Where with like haste, tho' several ways, they
 run,
 Some to undo, and some to be undone ;
 While luxury and wealth, like war and peace,
 Are each the other's ruin and increase ;
 As rivers lost in seas, some secret vein
 Thence reconveys, there to be lost again.
 Oh ! happiness of sweet retir'd content !
 To be at once secure and innocent.
 Windsor the next (where Mars with Venus
 dwells,
 Beauty with strength) above the valley swells
 Into my eye, and doth itself present
 With such an easy and unforc'd ascent,
 That no stupendous precipice denies
 Access, no horror turns away our eyes ;
 But such a rise as doth at once invite
 A pleasure and a rev'rence from the sight :
 Thy mighty master's emblem, in whose face
 Sat meekness, heighten'd with majestic grace ;
 Such seems thy gentle height, made only proud
 To be the basis of that pompous load.
 Than which a nobler weight no mountain bears,
 But Atlas only, which supports the spheres.
 When Nature's hand this ground did thus advance,
 'Twas guided by a wiser pow'r than Chance ;
 Mark'd out for such an use, as if 't were meant
 T' invite the builder, and his choice prevent.
 Nor can we call it choice, when what we choose
 Folly or blindness only could refuse.
 A crown of such majestic towers doth grace
 The gods' great mother, when her heavenly race
 Do homage to her ; yet she cannot boast,
 Among that num'rous and celestial host,
 More heroes than can Windsor, nor doth Fame's
 Immortal book record more noble names.
 Not to look back so far, to whom this isle
 Owes the first glory of so brave a pile,
 Whether to Cæsar, Albanact, or Brute,
 The British Arthur, or the Danish C'nute ;
 (Tho' this of old no less contest did move
 Than when for Homer's birth seven cities strove ;) (Like him in birth, thou should'st be like in fame,
 As thine his fate, if mine had been his flame :)
 But whoso'er it was, Nature design'd
 First a brave place, and then as brave a mind.
 Not to recount those sev'ral kings to whom
 It gave a cradle, or to whom a tomb ;
 But thee, great Edward ! and thy greater son*,

(The Lilies which his father wore he won,)
 And thy Bellona*, who the consort came
 Not only to thy bed but to thy fame,
 She to thy triumph led one captive king†,
 And brought that son which did the second
 bring† ;
 Then didst thou found that Order (whether love
 Or victory thy royal thoughts did move :)
 Each was a noble cause, and nothing less
 Than the design has been the great success,
 Which foreign kings and emperors esteem
 The second honour to their diadem.
 Had thy great Destiny but given thee skill
 To know, as well as pow'r to act her will,
 That from those kings who then thy captives
 were,
 In after-times should spring a royal pair,
 Who should possess all that thy mighty pow'r,
 Or thy desires more mighty, did devour ;
 To whom their better fate reserves whate'er
 The victor hopes for, or the vanquish'd fear :
 That blood which thou and thy great grandsire
 shed,
 And all that since these sister nations bled,
 Had been unspilt, had happy Edward known
 That all the blood he spilt had been his own.
 When he that patron chose to whom are join'd
 Soldier and martyr, and his arms confin'd
 Within the azure circles, he did seem
 But to foretel and prophesy of him,
 Who to his realms that azure round hath join'd,
 Which Nature for their bound at first design'd ;
 That bound which to the world's extremest ends ;
 Endless itself, its liquid arms extends.
 Nor doth he need those emblems which we paint,
 But is himself the soldier and the saint.
 Here should my wonder dwell, and here my
 praise,
 But my fix'd thoughts my wand'ring eye betrays,
 Viewing a neighb'ring hill, whose top of late
 A chapel crown'd, till in the common fate
 Th' adjoining abbey fell. (May no such storm Fall on our times, where ruin must reform !)
 Tell me, my Muse ! what monstrous dire offence,
 What crime, could any Christian king incense
 To such a rage ? Was't luxury or lust ?
 Was he so temperate, so chaste, so just ?
 Were these their crimes ! they were his own much more ;
 But wealth is crime enough to him that's poor,
 Who having spent the treasures of his crown,
 Condemns their luxury to feed his own ;
 And yet this act, to varnish o'er the shame
 Of sacrilege, must bear Devotion's name.
 No crime so bold but would be understood
 A real, or at least, a seeming good.
 Who fears not to do ill yet fears the name,
 And, free from conscience, is a slave to fame.
 Thus he the church at once protects and spoils ;
 But princes' swords are sharper than their styles :

* Edward III. and the Black Prince.

† Queen Philippa.

† The Kings of France and Scotland.

And thus to th' ages past he makes amends,
 Their charity destroys, their faith defends.
 Then did Religion in a lazy cell,
 In empty airy contemplations dwell,
 And like the block unmoved lay; but ours,
 As much too active, like the stork devours.
 Is there no temp'rate region can be known
 Betwixt their Frigid and our Torrid zone?
 Could we not wake from that lethargic dream,
 But to be restless in a worse extreme?
 And for that lethargy was there no cure
 But to be cast into a calenture?
 Can knowledge have no bound, but must advance

So far, to make us wish for ignorance,
 And rather in the dark to grope our way,
 Than, led by a false guide, to err by day?
 Who sees these dismal heaps but would demand
 What barbarous invader sack'd the land?
 But when he hears no Goth, no Turk, did bring
 This desolation, but a Christian king;
 When nothing but the name of zeal appears
 'Twixt our best actions and the worst of theirs;
 What does he think our sacrilege would spare,
 When such th' effects of our devotions are?
 Parting from thence 'twixt anger, shame, and fear,

Those for what's past, and this for what's too near,

My eye descending from the Hill, surveys
 Where Thames among the wanton vallies strays.
 Thames! the most lov'd of all the Ocean's sons
 By his old sire, to his embraces runs,
 Hasting to pay his tribute to the sea,
 Like mortal life to meet eternity;
 Tho' with those streams he no resemblance hold
 Whose foam is amber, and their gravel gold:
 His genuine and less guilty wealth t' explore,
 Search not his bottom, but survey his shore,
 O'er which he kindly spreads his spacious wing,
 And hatches plenty for th' ensuing spring;
 Nor then destroys it with too fond a stay,
 Like mothers which their infants overlay;
 Nor with a sudden and impetuous wave,
 Like profuse kings, resumes the wealth he gave.
 No unexpected inundations spoil
 The mower's hopes, nor mock the ploughman's toil;

But godlike his unweary'd bounty flows;
 First loves to do, then loves the good he does.
 Nor are his blessings to his banks confin'd,
 But free and common as the sea or wind;
 When he, to boast or to disperse his stores,
 Full of the tributes of his grateful shores,
 Visits the world, and in his flying tow'rs
 Brings home to us, and makes both Indies ours;
 Finds wealth where 'tis, bestows it where it wants,

Cities in deserts, woods in cities plants.
 So that to us no thing, no place is strange,
 While his fair bosom is the world's exchange.
 O could I flow like thee! and make thy stream
 My great example, as it is my theme;
 Tho' deep yet clear, tho' gentle yet not dull.

Strong without rage, without o'erflowing full;
 Heav'n her Eridanus no more shall boast,
 Whose fame is thine, like lesser current, 's lost:
 Thy nobler streams shall visit Jove's abodes,
 To shine among the stars, and bathe the gods.
 Here Nature, whether more intent to please
 Us for herself with strange varieties,
 (For things of wonder give no less delight
 To the wise Maker's than beholder's sight;
 Tho' these delights from sev'ral causes move,
 For so our children, thus our friends, we love;) Wisely she knew the harmony of things,
 As well as that of sounds, from discord springs.
 Such was the discord which did first disperse
 Form, order, beauty, thro' the universe;
 While dryness moisture, coldness heat resists,
 All that we have, and that we are, subsists;
 While the steep horrid roughness of the wood
 Strives with the gentle calmness of the flood.
 Such huge extremes when Nature doth unite,
 Wonder from thence results, from thence delight.
 The stream is so transparent, pure, and clear,
 That had the self-enamour'd* youth gaz'd here,
 So fatally deceiv'd he had not been,
 While he the bottom, not his face, had seen.
 But his proud head the airy mountain hides
 Among the clouds; his shoulders and his sides
 A shady mantle clothes; his curled brows
 Frown on the gentle stream, which calmly flows,
 While winds and storms his lofty forehead beat;
 The common fate of all that's high or great.
 Low at his foot a spacious plain is plac'd,
 Between the mountain and the stream embrac'd,
 Which shade and shelter from the Hill derives,
 While the kind river wealth and beauty gives.
 And in the mixture of all these appears
 Variety, which all the rest endears.
 This scene had some bold Greek or British bard
 Beheld of old, what stories had we heard
 Of Fairies, Satyrs, and the Nymphs their dames,
 Their feasts, their revels, and their am'rous flames!

'Tis still the same, altho' their airy shape
 All but a quick poetic sight escape.
 There, Faunus and Sylvanus keep their courts.
 And thither all the horned host resorts
 To graze the ranker mead; that noble herd
 On whose sublime and shady fronts is rear'd
 Nature's great master-piece, to show how soon
 Great things are made, but sooner are undone.
 Here have I seen the king, when great affairs
 Gave leave to slacken and unbend his cares,
 Attended to the chase by all the flow'r
 Of youth, whose hopes a nobler prey devour;
 Pleasure with praise and danger they would buy,
 And wish a foe that would not only fly.
 The stag now conscious of his fatal growth,
 At once indulgent to his fear and sloth,
 To some dark covert his retreat had made,
 Where nor man's eye, nor heaven's, should invade

His soft repose; when th' unexpected sound
 Of dogs and men his wakeful ear does wound.

Rous'd with the noise, he scarce believes his ear,
Willing to think th' illusions of his fear
Had giv'n this false alarm, but straight his view

Confirms that more than all he fears is true.
Betray'd in all his strengths, the wood beset,
All instruments, all arts of ruin met,
He calls to mind his strength, and then his speed,

His winged heels, and then his armed head ;
With these t' avoid, with that his fate to meet,
But fear prevails, and bids him trust his feet.
So fast he flies, that his reviewing eye
Has lost the chasers, and his ear the cry ;
Exulting, till he finds their nobler sense
Their disproportion'd speed doth recompence ;
Then curses his conspiring feet, whose scent
Betrays that safety which their swiftness lent :
Then tries his friends ; among the baser herd,
Where he so lately was obey'd and fear'd,
His safety seeks : the herd, unkindly wise,
Or chases him from thence, or from him flies.
Like a declining statesman, left forlorn
To his friends' pity, and pursuers' scorn,
With shame remembers while himself was one
Of the same herd, himself the same had done.
Thence to the coverts and the conscious groves,
The scenes of his past triumphs and his loves,
Sadly surveying where he rang'd alone,
Prince of the soil, and all the herd his own,
And like a bold knight-errant did proclaim
Combat to all, and bore away the dame,
And taught the woods to echo to the stream
His dreadful challenge and his clashing beam ;
Yet faintly now declines the fatal strife,
So much his love was dearer than his life.
Now ev'ry leaf, and ev'ry moving breath
Presents a foe, and ev'ry foe a death.
Weary'd, forsaken, and pursu'd, at last
All safety in despair of safety plac'd,
Courage he thence resumes, resolv'd to bear
All their assaults, since 'tis in vain to fear.
And now, too late, he wishes for the fight
That strength he wasted in ignoble flight :
But when he sees the eager chase renew'd,
Himself by dogs, the dogs by men pursu'd,
He straight revokes his bold resolve, and more
Repents his courage than his fear before ;
Finds that uncertain ways unsafe are,
And doubt a greater mischief than despair.
Then to the stream, when neither friends, nor force,

Nor speed, nor art, avail, he shapes his course ;
Thinks not their rage so desperate to essay
An element more merciless than they.
But fearless they pursue, nor can the flood Quench their dire thirst : alas ! they thirst for blood.

So 'twards a ship the oar-finn'd gallies ply,
Which wanting sea to ride, or wind to fly,
Stands but to fall reveng'd on those that dare
Tempt the last fury of extreme despair.
So fares the stag ; among th' enraged hounds

Repels their force, and wounds returns for wounds :

And as a hero, whom his baser foes
In troops surround, now these assaults, now those,
Tho' prodigal of life, disdains to die
By common hands ; but if he can descry
Some nobler foe approach, to him he calls,
And begs his fate, and then contented falls.
So when the King a mortal shaft lets fly
From his unerring hand, then glad to die,
Proud of the wound, to it resigns his blood,
And stains the crystal with a purple flood.
This a more innocent and happy chase
Than when of old, but in the self-same place,
Fair Liberty pursu'd*, and meant a prey
To lawless Power, here turn'd and stood at bay ;
When in that remedy all hope was plac'd
Which was, or should have been at least, the last.

Here was that Charter seal'd wherein the crown
All marks of arbitrary power lays down :
Tyrant and slave, those names of hate and fear,
The happier style of king and subject bear :
Happy when both to the same centre move,
When kings give liberty and subjects love.
Therefore not long in force this Charter stood ;
Wanting that seal, it must be seal'd in blood.
The subjects arm'd, the more their princes gave,
Th' advantage only took the more to crave :
Till kings, by giving, gave themselves away,
And ev'n that power that should deny betray.
'Who gives constrain'd, but his own fear reviles,
Not thank'd, but scorn'd ; nor are they gifts,
but spoils.' [hold,

Thus kings, by grasping more than they could
First made their subjects by oppression bold ;
And popular sway, by forcing kings to give
More than was fit for subjects to receive,
Ran to the same extremes ; and one excess
Made both, by striving to be greater, less.
When a calm river, rais'd with sudden rains,
Or snows dissolv'd, o'erflows th' adjoining plains,
The husbandmen with high-rais'd banks secure
Their greedy hopes, and this he can endure ;
But if with bays and dams they strive to force
His channel to a new or narrow course,
No longer then within his banks he dwells,
First to a torrent, then a deluge, swells ;
Stronger and fiercer by restraint, he roars,
And knows no bound, but makes his pow'r his shores.

ON THE EARL OF STRAFFORD'S TRIAL AND DEATH.

GREAT Strafford ! worthy of that name, tho' all
Of thee could be forgotten but thy fall,
Crush'd by imaginary treason's weight,
Which too much merit did accumulate.
As chymists gold from brass by fire would draw,
Pretexts are into treason forg'd by law.
His wisdom such, at once it did appear
Three kingdoms' wonder, and three kingdoms'
fear,

Whilst single he stood forth, and seem'd altho'

* Runny Mead, where the Magna Charta was first sealed.

Each had an army, as an equal foe.
 Such was his force of eloquence, to make
 The hearers more concern'd than he that spake.
 Each seem'd to act that part he came to see,
 And none was more a looker-on than he.
 So did he move our passions, some were known
 To wish, for the defence, the crime their own.
 Now private pity strove with public hate,
 Reason with rage, and eloquence with fate,
 Now they could him if he could them forgive;
 He's not too guilty, but too wise to live: [bore
 Less seem those facts which Treason's nickname
 Than such a fear'd ability for more.
 They after death their fears of him express,
 His innocence and their own guilt confess.
 Their legislative frenzy they repent,
 Enacting it should make no precedent. [lose
 This fate he could have 'scap'd, but would not Honour for life, but rather nobly chose
 Death from their fears than safety from his own,
 That his last action all the rest might crown.

ON COWLEY.

[Extract from the verses "On Mr. Abraham Cowley's death, and burial amongst the ancient Poets."]

OLD Chaucer, like the morning star,
 To us discovers day from far;
 His light those mists and clouds dissolv'd
 Which our dark nation long involv'd;
 But he descending to the shades,
 Darkness again the age invades.
 Next (like Aurora) Spenser rose,
 Whose purple blush the day foreshows;
 The other three with his own fires
 Phœbus, the poet's god, inspires;
 By Shakspeare's, Johnson's, Fletcher's lines
 Our stage's lustrè Rome's outshines,
 These poets near our princes sleep,
 And in one grave their mansion keep.
 They liv'd to see so many days.
 'Till time had blasted all their bays:
 But curs'd be the fatal hour
 That pluck'd the fairest, sweetest flower
 That in the Muses' garden grew,
 And amongst wither'd laurels threw!
 Time, which made them their fame outlive,
 To Cowley scarce did ripeness give.
 Old mother Wit, and Nature, gave Shakspeare and Fletcher all they have:
 In Spenser, and in Johnson, Art
 Of slower Nature got the start;
 But both in him so equal are,
 None knows which bears the happier share.
 To him no author was unknown,
 Yet what he wrote was all his own:
 He melted not the ancient gold,
 Nor, with Ben Jonson, did make bold
 To plunder all the Roman stores
 Of poets and of orators.
 Horace's wit and Virgil's state
 He did not steal but emulate,
 And when he would like them appear,
 Their garb but not their clothes did wear.

THE PRAISE OF POETRY.

[From "The Shepherd's Hunting."]

SHE doth tell me where to borrow
 Comfort in the midst of sorrow;
 Makes the desolatest place
 To her presence be a grace,
 And the blackest discontents
 Be her fairest ornaments.
 In my former days of bliss,
 Her divine skill taught me this,
 That from every thing I saw,
 I could some invention draw;
 And raise pleasure to her height
 Through the meanest object's sight:
 By the murmur of a spring,
 Or the least bough's rustling;
 By a daisy, whose leaves spread,
 Shut when Titan goes to bed;
 Or a shady bush or tree,
 She could more infuse in me,
 Than all Nature's beauties can,
 In some other wiser man.
 By her help I also now
 Make this churlish place* allow
 Some things that may sweeten gladness
 In the very gall of sadness:
 The dull loanness, the black shade
 That these hanging vaults have made,
 The strange music of the waves,
 Beating on these hollow caves,
 This black den, which rocks emboss,
 Overgrown with eldest moss;
 The rude portals, that give light
 More to terror than delight,
 This my chamber of neglect,
 Wall'd about with disrespect,
 From all these, and this dull air,
 A fit object for despair,
 She hath taught me by her might
 To draw comfort and delight.
 Therefore then, best earthly bliss,
 I will cherish thee for this!
 Poesy, thou sweet'st content
 That e'er heav'n to mortals lent;
 Though they as a trifle leave thee,
 Whose dull thoughts cannot conceive thee,
 Though thou be to them a scorn,
 That to nought but earth are born;
 Let my life no longer be,
 Than I am in love with thee!
 Though our wise ones call it madness,
 Let me never taste of gladness
 If I love not thy mad'st fits
 Above all their greatest wits!
 And though some, too seeming holy,
 Do account thy raptures folly,
 Thou dost teach me to contemn,
 What makes knaves and fools of them!

PARADISE LOST.

BOOK I.

THE ARGUMENT.

The first Book proposes, first in brief, the whole subject, Man's disobedience, and the loss thereupon of Paradise wherein he was placed: Then touches the prime cause of his fall, the serpent, or rather Satan in the serpent; who, revolting from God, and drawing to his side many legions of angels, was, by the command of God, driven out of heaven, with all his crew, into the great deep. Which action passed over, the Poem hastens into the midst of things, presenting Satan with his angels now falling into Hell described here, not in the centre (for Heaven and Earth may be supposed as yet not made, certainly not yet accursed), but in a place of utter darkness, fittest called Chaos: Here Satan with his angels lying on the burning lake, thunder-struck and astonished, after a certain space recovers, as from confusion, calls up him who next in order and dignity lay by him: they confer of their miserable fall. Satan awakens all his legions, who lay till then in the same manner confounded. They rise; their numbers; array of battle; their chief leaders named, according to the idols known afterwards in Canaan and the countries adjoining. To these Satan directs his speech, comforts them with hope yet of regaining Heaven, but tells them lastly of a new world and new kind of creature to be created, according to an ancient prophecy or report in Heaven: for, that angels were long before this visible creation, was the opinion of many ancient Fathers. To find out the truth of this prophecy, and what to determine thereon, he refers to a full council. What his associates thence attempt. Pandemonium, the palace of Satan, rises, suddenly built out of the deep: The infernal peers there sit in council.

O! Man's first disobedience, and the fruit
Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal taste
Brought death into the world, and all our woe,
With loss of Eden, till one greater Man
Restore us, and regain the blissful seat,
Sing heavenly Muse! that on the secret top
Of Oreb, or of Sinai, didst inspire
That shepherd, who first taught the chosen seed,
In the beginning how the Heavens and Earth
Rose out of Chaos: or if Sion hill
Delight thee more, and Siloa's brook that flow'd Fast by the oracle of God: I thence Invoke thy aid to my adventurous song,
That with no middle flight intends to soar
Above the Aonian mount, while it pursues
Things unattempted yet in prose or rhyme.
And chiefly Thou, O Spirit! that dost prefer
Before all temples the upright heart and pure, Instruct me, for Thou know'st; Thou from the first

Wast present, and, with mighty wings outspread,
Dove-like sat'st brooding on the vast abyss,
And madest it pregnant: what in me is dark
Illumine; what is low raise and support;
That to the height of this great argument
I may assert eternal providence,
And justify the ways of God to men.

Say first, for Heaven hides nothing from thy
view,

Nor the deep tract of Hell; say first, what cause
Moved our grand Parents, in that happy state,
Favour'd of Heaven so highly, to fall off
From their Creator, and transgress his will
For one restraint, lords of the world besides?
Who first seduced them to that foul revolt?

2 B

The infernal serpent; he it was, whose guile,
Stirr'd up with envy and revenge, deceived
The mother of mankind, what time his pride
Had cast him out from heaven, with all his host
Of rebel angels; by whose aid, aspiring
To set himself in glory above his peers,
He trusted to have equall'd the Most High,
If he opposed; and, with ambitious aim
Against the throne and monarchy of God,
Raised impious war in heaven, and battle proud,
With vain attempt. Him the Almighty Power
Hurl'd headlong flaming from the ethereal sky,
With hideous ruin and combustion, down
To bottomless perdition; there to dwell
In adamant chain and penal fire,
Who durst defy the Omnipotent to arms.
Nine times the space that measures day and
night

To mortal men, he with his horrid crew
Lay vanquish'd, rolling in the fiery gulf,
Confounded, though immortal: but his doom
Reserved him to more wrath; for now the thought
Both of lost happiness, and lasting pain,
Torments him: round he throws his baleful eyes,
That witness'd huge affliction and dismay
Mix'd with obdurate pride and steadfast hate:
At once, as far as angels' ken, he views
The dismal situation waste and wild:
A dungeon horrible on all sides round,
As one great furnace flamed; yet from those flames

No light; but rather darkness visible
Served only to discover sights of woe,
Regions of sorrow, doleful shades, where peace
And rest can never dwell; hope never comes
That comes to all; but torture without end
Still urges, and a fiery deluge, fed
With everburning sulphur unconsumed:
Such place Eternal Justice had prepared
For those rebellious; here their prison ordain'd
In utter darkness, and their portion set
As far removed from God and light of heaven
As from the centre thrice to the utmost pole.
O, how unlike the place from whence they fell!
There the companions of his fall, o'erwhelm'd
With floods and whirlwinds of tempestuous fire,
He soon discerns; and weltering by his side
One next himself in power, and next in crime,
Long after known in Palestine, and named
Beelzebub. To whom the arch-enemy,
And thence in Heaven call'd Satan, with bold words

Breaking the horrid silence, thus began.
If thou beest he; but O, how fallen! how changed
From him, who, in the happy realms of light, Clothed with transcendent brightness, didst outshine

Myriads though bright! If he whom mutual league,
United thoughts and counsels, equal hope
And hazard in the glorious enterprise,
Join'd with me once, now misery hath join'd
In equal ruin! Into what pit thou seest,

From what height fallen ; so much the stronger proved

He with his thunder : and till then who knew
The force of those dire arms ? Yet not for those,
Nor what the potent Victor in his rage
Can else inflict, do I repent or change,
Though changed in outward lustre, that fix'd
mind,

And high disdain from sense of injured merit,
That with the Mightiest raised me to contend,
And to the fierce contention brought along
Innumerable force of spirits arm'd,
That durst dislike his reign, and, me preferring,
His utmost power with adverse power opposed
In dubious battle on the plains of heaven,
And shook his throne. What though the field be lost ?

All is not lost ; the unconquerable will,
And study of revenge, immortal hate,
And courage never to submit or yield,
And what is else not to be overcome ;
That glory never shall his wrath or might Extort from me. To bow and sue for grace
With suppliant knee, and deify his power,
Who from the terror of this arm so late
Doubted his empire ; that were low indeed,
That were an ignominy, and shame beneath
This downfall ; since, by fate, the strength of gods

And this empyreal substance cannot fail ;
Since through experience of this great event
In arms not worse, in foresight much advanced,
We may with more successful hope resolve
To wage, by force or guile, eternal war,
Irreconcilable to our grand Foe,
Who now triumphs, and, in the excess of joy
Sole reigning, holds the tyranny of heaven.

So spake the apostate Angel, though in pain,
Vaunting aloud, but rack'd with deep despair :
And him thus answer'd soon his bold compeer.

O prince, O Chief of many throned powers,
That led the embattled Seraphim to war
Under thy conduct, and, in dreadful deeds
Fearless, endanger'd heaven's perpetual King,
And put to proof his high supremacy,
Whether upheld by strength, or chance, or fate ;
Too well I see and rue the dire event,
That with sad overthrow, and foul defeat,
Hath lost us heaven, and all this mighty host
In horrible destruction laid thus low,
As far as gods and heavenly essences
Can perish : for the mind and spirit remains
Invincible, and vigour soon returns,
Though all our glory extinct, and happy state
Here swallow'd up in endless misery.
But what if He our Conqueror (whom I now
Of force believe Almighty, since no less Than such could have o'erpower'd such force as ours)

Have lost us this our spirit and strength entire Straitly to suffer and support our pains,
That we may so suffice his vengeful ire,
Or do him mightier service as his thralls
By right of war, what'er his business be,

Here in the heart of hell to work in fire,
Or do his errands in the gloomy deep ;
What can it then avail, though yet we feel
Strength undiminish'd, or eternal being,
To undergo eternal punishment ?
Whereto with speedy words the arch-fiend replied.

Fallen Cherub ! to be weak is miserable
Doing or suffering : but of this be sure,
To do aught good never will be our task,
But ever to do ill our sole delight,
As being the contrary to his high will
Whom we resist. If then his providence
Out of our evil seek to bring forth good,
Our labour must be to pervert that end,
And out of good still to find means of evil ;
Which oft-times may succeed, so as perhaps Shall grieve him, if I fail not, and disturb
His inmost counsels from their destined aim.
But see ! the angry Victor hath recall'd
His ministers of vengeance and pursuit
Back to the gates of heaven : the sulphurous
hail,

Shot after us in storm, o'erblown, hath laid
The fiery surge, that from the precipice
Of heaven received us falling ; and the thunder,
Wing'd with red lightning and impetuous rage,
Perhaps hath spent his shafts, and ceases now
To bellow through the vast and boundless deep.
Let us not slip the occasion, whether scorn,
Or satiate fury, yield it from our Foe.
Seest thou yon dreary plain, forlorn and wild,
The seat of desolation, void of light,
Save what the glimmering of these livid flames
Casts pale and dreadful ? Thither let us tend
From off the tossing of these fiery waves ;
There rest, if any rest can harbour there ;
And, re-assembling our afflicted powers,
Consult how we may henceforth most offend
Our enemy ; our own loss how repair ;
How overcome this dire calamity ;
What reinforcement we may gain from hope ;
If not, what resolution from despair.

Thus Satan talking to his nearest mate
With head uplift above the wave, and eyes
That sparkling blazed ; his other parts besides
Prone on the flood, extended long and large,
Lay floating many a rood ; in bulk as huge
As whom the fables name of monstrous size,
Titanian, or Earth-born, that warr'd on Jove ;
Briarëos or Typhon, whom the den
By ancient Tarsus held ; or that sea-beast
Leviathan, which God of all his works
Created hugest that swim the ocean stream :
Him, haply, slumbering on the Norway foam
The pilot of some small night-founder'd skiff
Deeming some island, oft, as seamen tell,
With fixed anchor in his scaly rind
Moors by his side under the lee, while night
Invests the sea, and wished morn delays :
So stretch'd out huge in length the arch-fiend
lay,

Chain'd on the burning lake : nor ever thence
Had risen, or heaved his head ; but that the will

And high permission of all-ruling Heaven
Left him at large to his own dark designs;
That with reiterated crimes he might
Heap on himself damnation, while he sought
Evil to others; and, enraged, might see
How all his malice served but to bring forth
Infinite goodness, grace, and mercy, shown
On Man by him seduced; but on himself
Treble confusion, wrath, and vengeance, pour'd,
Forthwith upright he rears from off the pool
His mighty stature; on each hand the flames,
Driven backward, slope their pointing spires,
and, roll'd,

In billows, leave the midst a horrid vale.
Then with expanded wings he steers his flight
Aloft, incumbent on the dusky air
That felt unusual weight; till on dry land
He lights, if it were land that ever burn'd
With solid, as the lake with liquid, fire:
And such appear'd in hue, as when the force
Of subterranean wind transports a hill
Torn from Pelorus, or the shatter'd side
Of thundering Ætna, whose combustible
And fuel'd entrails thence conceiving fire,
Sublimed with mineral fury, aid the winds,
And leave a singed bottom all involved
With stench and smoke: such resting found the sole

Of unblest'd feet. Him follow'd his next mate:
Both glorying to have scaped the Stygian flood
As gods, and by their own recover'd strength,
Not by the sufferance of supernal Power.

Is this the region, this the soil, the clime,
Said then the lost arch-angel, this the seat
That we must change for heaven; this mournful gloom

For that celestial light? Be it so! since he,
Who now is Sov'reign, can dispose and bid
What shall be right: furthest from him is best,
Whom reason hath equal'd, force hath made supreme

Above his equals. Farewell, happy fields,
Where joy for ever dwells! Hail, horrors! hail,
Infernal world! And thou, profoundest Hell,
Receive thy new possessor! one who brings
A mind not to be changed by place or time:
The mind is its own place, and in itself
Can make a heaven of hell, a hell of heaven.
What matter where, if I be still the same,
And what I should be; all but less than he Whom thunder hath made greater? Here at least

We shall be free; the Almighty hath not built
Here for his envy; will not drive us hence:
Here we may reign secure, and, in my choice,
To reign is worth ambition, though in Hell:
Better to reign in Hell, than serve in Heaven!
But wherefore let we then our faithful friends,
The associates and companions of our loss,
Lie thus astonish'd on the oblit'rous pool,
And call them not to share with us their part
In this unhappy mansion; or once more
With rallied arms to try what may be yet
Regain'd in heaven, or what more lost in Hell?

So Satan spake; and him Beelzebub
Thus answer'd. Leader of those armies bright,
Which but the Omnipotent ~~none~~ could have foil'd!

If once they hear that voice, their liveliest pledge
Of hope in fears and dangers, heard so oft
In worst extremes, and on the perilous edge
Of battle when it raged, in all assaults,
Their surest signal, they will soon resume
New courage and revive; though now they lie
Groveling and prostrate on yon lake of fire,
As we erewhile, astounded and amazed;
No wonder, fallen such a pernicious height.

He scarce had ceased, when the superior Fiend
Was moving towards the shore: his ponderous shield,

Ethereal temper, massy, large, and round,
Behind him cast; the broad circumference
Hung on his shoulders like the moon, whose orb
Through optic glass the Tuscan artist views
At evening from the top of Fesolè,
Or in Valdarno, to descry new lands,
Rivers, or mountains, in her spotty globe.
His spear, to equal which the tallest pine
Hewn on Norwegian hills, to be the mast
Of some great admiral, were but a wand,
He walk'd with, to support uneasy steps
Over the burning marle, not like those steps
On heaven's azure; and the torrid clime
Smote on him sore besides, vaulted with fire:
Nathless he so endured, till on the beach
Of that inflamed sea he stood, and call'd
His legions, angel forms, who lay entranced
Thick as autumnal leaves that strow the brooks
In Vallombrosa, where the Etrurian shades,
High over-arch'd, imbower; or scatter'd sedge
Afloat, when with fierce winds Orion arm'd Hath vex'd the Red-Sea coast, whose waves o'erthrew

Busiris and his Memphian chivalry,
While with perfidious hatred they pursued
The sojourners of Goshen, who beheld
From the safe shore their floating carcasses
And broken chariot wheels: so thick bestrown,
Abject and lost lay these, covering the flood,
Under amazement of their hideous change.
He call'd so loud, that all the hollow deep
Of Hell resounded! Princes, Potentates,
Warriors, the flower of heaven! once yours,
now lost,

If such astonishment as this can seize
Eternal spirits; or have ye chosen this place
After the toil of battle to repose
Your wearied virtue, for the ease you find
To slumber here, as in the vales of heaven?
Or in this abject posture have ye sworn
To adore the Conqueror? who now beholds
Cherub and seraph rolling in the flood,
With scatter'd arms and ensigns; till anon
His swift pursuers from heaven's gates discern
The advantage, and, descending, tread us down
Thus drooping, or with linked thunderbolts
Transfix us to the bottom of this gulf.
Awake, arise, or be for ever fallen!

They heard, and where abash'd, and up they sprung
 Upon the wings, as when men wont to watch
 On duty, sleeping found by whom they dread,
 Rouse and bestir themselves ere well awake.
 Nor did they not perceive the evil plight
 In which they were, or the fierce pains not feel;
 Yet to their General's voice they soon obey'd;
 Innumerable. As when the potent rod
 Of Amram's son, in Egypt's evil day,
 Waved round the coast, up call'd a pitchy cloud
 Of locusts, warping on the eastern wind,
 That o'er the realm of impious Pharaoh hung
 Like night, and darken'd all the land of Nile;
 So numberless were those bad angels seen
 Hovering on wing under the cope of Hell,
 'Twixt upper, nether, and surrounding fires
 Till, as a signal given, the uplifted spear
 Of their great Sultan waving to direct
 Their course, in even balance down they light
 On the firm brimstone, and fill all the plain;
 A multitude, like which the populous North
 Pour'd never from her frozen loins, to pass
 Rhene or the Danaw, when her barbarous sons
 Came like a deluge on the South, and spread Beneath Gibraltar to the Libyan sands.
 Forthwith from every squadron, and each band,
 The heads and leaders thither haste, where stood
 Their great Commander; god-like shapes, and forms
 Excelling human, princely Dignities,
 And Powers that erst in Heaven sat on thrones;
 Though of their names in heavenly records now
 Be no memorial; blotted out and ras'd
 By their rebellion from the books of life.
 Nor had they yet among the sons of Eve Got them new names; till, wandering o'er the earth,
 Through God's high sufferance for the trial of
 man,
 By falsities and lies the greatest part
 Of mankind they corrupted to forsake
 God their Creator, and the invisible
 Glory of him that made them to transform
 Oft to the image of a brute, adorn'd
 With gay religions full of pomp and gold
 And devils to adore for deities:
 Then were they known to men by various names,
 And various idols through the heathen world.
 Say, Muse, their names then known; who first,
 who last,
 Roused from the slumber, on that fiery couch.
 At their great Emperor's call, as next in worth
 Came singly where he stood on the bare strand,
 While the promiscuous crowd stood yet aloof.
 The chief were those, who, from the pit of hell
 Roaming to seek their prey on earth, durst fix
 Their seats long after next the seat of God,
 Their altars by his altar; gods adored
 Among the nations round; and durst abide
 Jehovah thundering out of Zion, throned
 Between the Cherubim; yea, often placed Within his sanctuary itself their shrines,
 Abominations; and with cursed things

His holy rites and solemn feasts profaned,
 And with their darkness durst affront his light.
 First, Moloch, horrid king, besmear'd with blood
 Of human sacrifice, and parents' tears;
 Though, for the noise of drums and timbrels
 loud,
 Their children's cries unheard, that pass'd
 through fire
 To his grim idol. Him the Ammonite
 Worship'd in Rabba and her watery plain,
 In Argob and in Basan, to the stream
 Of utmost Arnon. Nor content with such Audacious neighbourhood, the wisest heart
 Of Solomon he led by fraud to build
 His temple right against the temple of God
 On that opprobrious hill; and made his grove
 The pleasant valley of Hinnom, Tophet thence
 And black Gehenna call'd, the type of Hell.
 Next, Chemos, the obscene dread of Moab's sons,
 From Aroer to Nebo, and the wild
 Of southmost Abarim; in Hesebon
 And Horonaim, Seon's realm, beyond
 The flowery dale of Sibma clad with vines;
 And Eleale to the Asphaltic pool.
 Peor his other name, when he enticed
 Israel in Sittim, on their march from Nile,
 To do him wanton rites, which cost them woe.
 Yet thence his lustful orgies he enlarged
 Even to that hill of scandal, by the grove
 Of Moloch homicide; lust hard by hate;
 Till good Josiah drove them thence to hell.
 With these came they, who, from the bordering flood
 Of old Euphrates to the brook that parts
 Egypt from Syrian ground, had general names
 Of Baalim and Ashtaroth; those male,
 These feminine. For spirits, when they please,
 Can either sex assume, or both; so soft
 And uncompounded is their essence pure;
 Not tied or manacled with joint or limb,
 Nor founded on the brittle strength of bones,
 Like cumbrous flesh; but, in what shape they
 choose,
 Dilated or condensed, bright or obscure,
 Can execute their airy purposes,
 And works of love or enmity fulfil.
 For those the race of Israel oft forsook
 Their living strength, and unfrequented left
 His righteous altar, bowing lowly down
 To bestial gods; for which their heads as low
 Bow'd down in battle, sunk before the spear
 Of despicable foes. With these in troop
 Came Astoreth, whom the Phenicians call'd
 Astarte, queen of heaven, with crescent horns;
 To whose bright image nightly by the moon
 Sidonian virgins paid their vows and songs;
 In Sion also not unsung, where stood
 Her temple on the offensive mountain, built
 By that uxorious king, whose heart, though large,
 Beguiled by fair idolatresses, fell
 To idols foul. Thammuz came next behind,
 Whose annual wound in Lebanon allured
 The Syrian damsels to lament his fate
 In amorous ditties all a summer's day;

While smooth Adonis from his native rock,
Ran purple to the sea, supposed with blood
Of Thammuz yearly wounded: the love-tale
Infected Sion's daughters with like heat;
Whose wanton passions in the sacred porch
Ezekiel saw, when, by the vision led,
His eye survey'd the dark idolatries
Of alienated Judah. Next came one
Who mourn'd in earnest, when the captive ark
Maim'd his brute image, head and hands lopp'd
off

In his own temple, on the grundsel edge,
Where he fell flat, and shamed his worshippers:

Dagon his name, sea-monster, upward man
And downward fish: yet had his temple high
Rear'd in Azotus, dreaded through the coast
Of Palestine, in Gath and Ascalon,
And Accaron and Gaza's frontier bounds.
Him follow'd Rimmon, whose delightful seat
Was fair Damascus, on the fertile banks
Of Abbana and Pharpar, lucid streams.
He also against the house of God was bold:
A leper once he lost, and gain'd a king;
Ahaz, his sottish conqueror, whom he drew
God's altar to disparage and displace,
For one of Syrian mode, whereon to burn
His odious offerings, and adore the gods
Whom he had vanquish'd. After these appear'd
A crew, who, under names of old renown,
Osiris, Isis, Orus, and their train,
With monstrous shapes and sorceries abused
Fanatic Egypt, and her priests, to seek
Their wandering gods disguised in brutish forms
Rather than human. Nor did Israel scape
The infection, when their borrow'd gold composed
The calf in Oreb; and the rebel king
Doubled that sin in Bethel and in Dan,
Likening his Maker to the grazed ox;
Jehovah, who in one night, when he pass'd
From Egypt marching, equal'd with one stroke
Both her first-born and all her bleating gods.
Belial came last, than whom a spirit more lewd
Fell not from heaven, or more gross to love
Vice for itself: to him no temple stood
Or altar smoked: yet who more oft than he
In temples and at altars, when the priest
Turns atheist, as did Eli's sons, who fill'd
With lust and violence the house of God?
In courts and palaces he also reigns,
And in luxurious cities, where the noise
Of riot ascends above their loftiest towers,
And injury, and outrage: and when night
Darkens the streets, then wander forth the sons
Of Belial, flown with insolence and wine.
Witness the streets of Sodom, and that night
In Gibeah, when the hospitable door
Exposed a matron, to avoid worse rape.
These were the prime in order and in might;
The rest were long to tell, though far renown'd,
The Ionian gods, of Javan's issue; held
Gods, yet confess'd later than Heaven and Earth,
Their boasted parents: Titan Heaven's first-born,
With his enormous brood, and birthright misd

By younger Saturn; he from mightier Jove,
His own and Rhea's son, like measure found;
So Jove usurping reign'd: these first in Crete
And Ida known, thence on the snowy top
Of cold Olympus ruled the middle air,
Their highest heaven; or on the Delphian cliff,
Or in Dodona, and through all the bounds
Of Doric land; or who with Saturn old
Fled over Adria to the Hesperian fields,
And o'er the Celtic roam'd the utmost isles.

All these and more came flocking; but with looks

Downcast and damp; yet such wherein appear'd
Obscure some glimpse of joy, to have found their chief

Not in despair, to have found themselves not lost

In loss itself: which on his countenance cast
Like double hue: but he, his wonted pride
Soon recollecting, with high words, that bore
Semblance of worth, not substance, gently raised
Their fainting courage, and dispell'd their fears.
Then straight commands, that at the warlike
sound

Of trumpets loud and clarions be uprear'd
His mighty standard: that proud honour claim'd
Azazel as his right, a cherub tall;
Who forthwith from the glittering staff unfurl'd
The imperial ensign; which, full high advanced,
Shone like a meteor streaming to the wind,
With gems and golden lustre rich emblazed,
Seraphic arms and trophies; all the while
Sonorous metal blowing martial sounds:

At which the universal host up sent
A shout, that tore Hell's concave, and beyond
Frighted the reign of Chaos and old Night.
All in a moment through the gloom were seen
Ten thousand banners rise into the air
With orient colours waving: with them rose
A forest huge of spears; and thronging helms
Appear'd, and serried shields in thick array
Of depth immeasurable: anon they move
In perfect phalanx to the Dorian mood
Of flutes and soft recorders; such as raised
To height and noblest temper heroes old
Arming to battle; and instead of rage
Deliberate valour breathed, firm and unmoved
With dread of death to fight or foul retreat;
Nor wanting power to mitigate and swage
With solemn touches troubled thoughts, and chase

Anguish, and doubt, and fear, and sorrow, and
pain,

From mortal or immortal minds. Thus they,
Breathing united force, with fixed thought,
Moved on in silence to soft pipes, that charm'd
Their painful steps o'er the burnt soil: and now
Advanced in view they stand, a horrid front
Of dreadful length and dazzling arms, in guise
Of warriors old with order'd spear and shield,
Awaiting what command their mighty chief
Had to impose: he through the armed files
Darts his experienced eye, and soon traverse
The whole battalion views; their order due;

Their visages and stature as of gods;
 Their number last he sums. And now his heart
 Distends with pride, and hardening in his strength
 Glories: for never, since created man,
 Met such imbodied force, as named with these Could merit more than that small infantry
 Warr'd on by cranes; though all the giant brood
 Of Phlegra with the heroic race were join'd
 That fought at Thebes and Ilium, on each side
 Mix'd with auxiliar gods; and what resounds
 In fable or romance of Uther's son
 Begirt with British and Armoric knights;
 And all who since, baptized or infidel,
 Jousted in Aspramont, or Montalban,
 Damasco, or Marocco, or Trebisonde,
 Or whom Biserta sent from Afric shore,
 When Charlemain with all his peerage fell
 By Fontarabbia. Thus far these beyond
 Compare of mortal prowess, yet observed
 Their dread Commander: he, above the rest
 In shape and gesture proudly eminent,
 Stood like a tower: his form had yet not lost
 All her original brightness; nor appear'd
 Less than Arch-angel ruin'd, and the excess
 Of glory obscured: as when the sun, new risen,
 Looks through the horizontal misty air
 Shorn of his beams; or from behind the moon,
 In dim eclipse, disastrous twilight sheds
 On half the nations, and with fear of change
 Perplexes monarchs. Darken'd so, yet shone
 Above them all the Arch-angel: but his face
 Deep scars of thunder had intrench'd; and care
 Sat on his faded cheek, but under brows
 Of dauntless courage, and considerate pride
 Waiting revenge: cruel his eye, but cast
 Signs of remorse and passion, to behold
 The fellows of his crime, the followers rather (Far other once beheld in bliss), condemn'd
 For ever now to have their lot in pain;
 Millions of spirits for his fault amerced
 Of Heaven, and from eternal splendours flung
 For his revolt; yet faithful how they stood,
 Their glory wither'd: as when Heaven's fire
 Hath scathed the forest oaks, or mountain pines
 With singed top their stately growth, though bare,

Stands on the blasted heath. He now prepared
 To speak; whereat their doubled ranks they bend
 From wing to wing, and half enclose him round
 With all his peers: attention held them mute.
 Thrice he assay'd, and thrice, in spite of scorn,
 Tears, such as angels weep, burst forth: at last Words, interwove with sighs, found out their way.

O myriads of immortal spirits! O Powers
 Matchless, but with the Almighty! and that strife

Was not inglorious, though the event was dire,
 As this place testifies, and this dire change
 hateful to utter: but what power of mind,
 Foreseeing or presaging, from the depth
 Of knowledge past or present, could have fear'd,
 How such united force of gods, how such
 As stood like these, could ever know repulse?

For who can yet believe, though after loss,
 That all these puissant legions, whose exile
 Hath emptied heaven, shall fail to reascend
 Self-raised, and repossess their native seat?
 For me, be witness all the host of heaven,
 If counsels different, or dangers ahunn'd
 By me, have lost our hopes. But he, who reigns Monarch in heaven, till then as one secure
 Sat on his throne, upheld by old repute,
 Consent or custom; and his regal state
 Put forth at full, but still his strength conceal'd Which tempted our attempt, and wrought our fall.

Henceforth his might we know, and know our
 own;

So as not either to provoke, or dread
 New war, provoked: our better part remains
 To work in close design, by fraud or guile,
 What force effected not: that he no less
 At length from us may find, who overcomes
 By force, hath overcome but half his foe.
 Space may produce new worlds; whereof so rife

There went a fame in heaven that he ere long
 Intended to create, and therein plant
 A generation, whom his choice regard
 Should favour equal to the sons of Heaven:
 Thither, if but to pry, shall be perhaps
 Our first eruption; thither or elsewhere
 For this infernal pit shall never hold
 Celestial spirits in bondage, nor the abyss
 Long under darkness cover. But these thoughts
 Full counsel must mature: peace is despair'd;
 For who can think submission? War then,
 War,

Open or understood, must be resolved.

He spake: and, to confirm his words, out-flew
 Millions of flaming swords, drawn from the thighs
 Of mighty cherubim; the sudden blaze
 Far round illumined hell: highly they raged
 Against the Highest, and fierce with grasped arms Clash'd on their sounding shields the din of
 war,

Hurling defiance toward the vault of heaven.

There stood a hill not far, whose grisly top
 Belch'd fire and rolling smoke; the rest entire Shone with a glossy scurf; undoubted sign
 That in his womb was hid metallic ore,
 The work of sulphur. Thither, wing'd with speed,
 A numerous brigade hasten'd: as when bands
 Of pioneers, with spade and pickaxe arm'd,
 Forerun the royal camp, to trench a field,
 Or cast a rampart. Mammon led them on;
 Mammon, the least erected spirit that fell
 From heaven; for e'en in heaven his looks and thoughts

Were always downward bent, admiring more
 The riches of heaven's pavement, trodden gold,
 Than aught, divine or holy, else enjoy'd
 In vision beatific: by him first
 Men also, and by his suggestion, taught,
 Ramack'd the centre, and with impious hands
 Rifled the bowels of their mother Earth
 For treasures, better hid. Soon had his crew

Open'd into the hill a spacious wound,
And digg'd out ribs of gold. Let none admire
That riches grow in hell; that soil may best Deserve the precious bane. And here let those,
Who boast in mortal things, and wondering tell

Of Babel, and the works of Memphian kings,
Learn how their greatest monuments of fame,
And strength, and art, are easily outdone
By spirits reprobate, and in an hour,
What in an age they with incessant toil
And hands innumerable scarce perform.
Nigh on the plain, in many cells prepared,
That underneath had veins of liquid fire
Sluic'd from the lake, a second multitude
With wondrous art founded the massy ore,
Severing each kind, and scumm'd the bullion
dross:

A third as soon had form'd within the ground
A various mould, and from the boiling cells
By strange conveyance fill'd each hollow nook;
As in an organ, from one blast of wind,
To many a row of pipes the soundboard breathes.
Anon, out of the earth, a fabric huge
Rose like an exhalation, with the sound
Of dulcet symphonies and voices sweet,
Built like a temple, where pilasters round
Were set, and Doric pillars overlaid
With golden architrave; nor did there want
Cornice or freeze, with bossy sculptures graven:
The roof was fretted gold. Not Babylon,
Nor great Alcairo, such magnificence
Equal'd in all their glories, to enshrine
Belus or Serapis, their gods; or seat
Their kings, when Egypt with Assyria strove
In wealth and luxury. The ascending pile Stood fix'd her stately highth: and straight the doors

Opening their brazen folds, discover, wide
Within, her ample spaces, o'er the smooth
And level pavement: from the arched roof
Pendant by subtile magic many a row
Of starry lamps and blazing cressets, fed
With Naphtha and Asphaltus, yielded light
As from a sky. The hasty multitude
Admiring enter'd; and the work some praise,
And some the architect: his hand was known
In heaven by many a tower'd structure high,
Where sceptred Angels held their residence
And sat as princes; whom the supreme King,
Exalted to such power, and gave to rule,
Each in his hierarchy, the orders bright.
Nor was his name unheard, or unadored,
In ancient Greece; and in Ausonian land
Men call'd him Mulciber; and how he fell
From heaven, they fabled, thrown by angry
Jove

Sheer o'er the crystal battlements: from morn
To noon he fell, from noon to dewy eve,
A summer's day; and with the setting sun
Dropp'd from the zenith like a falling star,
On Lemnos the Ægean isle: thus they relate,
Erring; for he with this rebellious rout
Fell long before; nor aught avail'd him now

To have built in heaven high towers; nor did he scape

By all his engines, but was headlong sent
With his industrious crew to build in hell.

Mean while, the winged heralds, by command

Of sov'reign power, with awful ceremony
And trumpet's sound, throughout the host proclaim

A solemn council, forthwith to be held
At Pandemonium; the high capital
Of Satan and his peers: their summons call'd
From every band and squared regiment
By place or choice the worthiest; they anon,
With hundreds and with thousands, trooping
came,

Attended: all access was throng'd; the gates
And porches wide, but chief the spacious hall

(Though like a cover'd field, where champions
bold

Wont ride in arm'd, and at the Soldan's chair
Defied the best of Panim chivalry
To mortal combat, or career with lance),
Thick swarm'd, both on the ground and in the air

Brush'd with the hiss of rustling wings. As bees

In spring time, when the sun with Taurus rides,

Pour forth their populous youth about the hive

In clusters: they among fresh dews and flowers
Fly to and fro, or on the smoothed plank,
The suburb of their straw-built citadel,
New rubb'd with balm, expatiate and confer
Their state affairs. So thick the airy crowd Swarm'd and were straiten'd; till, the signal given,

Behold a wonder! They but now who seem'd
In bigness to surpass earth's giant sons,
Now less than smallest dwarfs, in narrow
room

Throng numberless, like that Pygmean race
Beyond the Indian mount; or fairy elves,
Whose midnight revels, by a forest side
Or fountain, some belated peasant sees,
Or dreams he sees, while overhead the moon
Sits arbitress, and nearer to the earth
Wheels her pale course; they, on their mirth and dance

Intent, with jocund music charm his ear;
At once with joy and fear his heart rebounds,
Thus incorporeal spirits to smallest forms Reduced their shapes immense, and were at large,

Though without number still, amidst the hall
Of that infernal court. But far within,
And in their own dimensions, like themselves,
The great seraphic lords and cherubim
In close recess and secret conclave sat;
A thousand demi-gods on golden seats,
Frequent and fall. After short silence then,
And summons read, the great consult began.

BOOK II.

THE ARGUMENT.

The consultation begun, Satan debates whether another battle is to be hazarded for the recovery of Heaven; some advise it, others dissuade. A third proposal is preferred, mentioned before by Satan, to search the truth of that prophecy or tradition in Heaven concerning another world, and another kind of creature, equal or not much inferior to themselves, about this time to be created: their doubt, who shall be sent on this difficult search; Satan their chief, undertakes alone the voyage, is honoured and applauded. The council thus ended, the rest betake them several ways, and to several employments, as their inclinations lead them, to entertain the time till Satan return. He passes on his journey to Hell gates; finds them shut, and who sat there to guard them; by whom at length they are opened, and discover to him the great gulf between Hell and Heaven; with what difficulty he passes through, directed by Chaos, the Power of that place, to the sight of this new world which he sought.

High on a throne of royal state, which far
Outshone the wealth of Ormus and of Ind,
Or where the gorgeous east with richest hand
Showers on her kings barbaric pearl and gold,
Satan exalted sat, by merit raised
To that bad eminence; and, from despair
Thus high uplifted beyond hope, aspires
Beyond thus high, insatiate to pursue
Vain war with Heaven; and, by success, untaught,
His proud imaginations thus display'd.

Powers and dominions, deities of heaven!
For since no deep within her gulf can hold
Immortal vigour, though oppress'd and fallen,
I give not heaven for lost. From this descent
Celestial virtues rising, will appear
More glorious and more dread than from no fall,
And trust themselves to fear no second fate.
Me though just right, and the fix'd laws of
Heaven,

Did first create your leader; next, free choice,
With what besides, in counsel or in fight,
Hath been achiev'd of merit; yet this loss,
Thus far at least recover'd, hath much more
Establish'd in a safe unenvied throne,
Yielded with full consent. The happier state
In heaven, which follows dignity, might draw
Envy from each inferior; but who here
Will envy whom the highest place exposes
Foremost to stand against the Thunderer's aim
Your bulwark, and condemns to greatest share
Of endless pain? Where there is then no good
For which to strive, no strife can grow up there
From faction; for none sure will claim in hell
Precedence; none, whose portion is so small
Of present pain, that with ambitious mind
Will covet more. With this advantage then
To union, and firm faith, and firm accord,
More than can be in heaven, we now return
To claim our just inheritance of old,
Surer to prosper than prosperity
Could have assured us; and by what best way,
Whether of open war or covert guile,
We now debate: who can advise, may speak.

He ceased; and next him Moloch, sceptred
king,
Stood up, the strongest and the fiercest spirit
That fought in heaven, now fiercer by despair:
His trust was with the Eternal to be deem'd
Equal in strength, and rather than be less

Cared not to be at all; with that care lost
Went all his fear: of God, or hell, or worse
He reck'd not; and these words thereafter spake.

My sentence is for open war: of wiles,
More unexpert, I boast not: them let those Contrive who need, or when they need; not now.
For while they sit contriving, shall the rest,
Millions that stand in arms, and longing wait
The signal to ascend, sit lingering here
Heaven's fugitives, and for their dwelling-place
Accept this dark opprobrious den of shame,
The prison of his tyranny who reigns
By our delay? No, let us rather chuse,
Arm'd with hell flames and fury, all at once
O'er heaven's high towers to force resistless way.
Turning our tortures into horrid arms
Against the Torturer; what to meet the noise
Of his almighty engine he shall hear
Infernal thunder; and, for lightning see
Black fire and horror shot with equal rage
Among his angels; and his throne itself
Mix'd with Tartarean sulphur, and strange fire,
His own invented torments. But, perhaps,
The way seems difficult and steep to scale
With upright wing against a higher foe.
Let such bethink them, if the sleepy drench
Of that forgetful lake benumb not still,
That in our proper motion we ascend
Up to our native seat: descent and fall
To us is adverse. Who but felt of late,
When the fierce Foe hung on our broken rear
Insulting, and pursued us through the deep,
With what compulsion and laborious flight
We sunk thus low? The ascent is easy then;
The event is fear'd; should we again provoke
Our stronger, some worse way his wrath may find
To our destruction; if there be in hell
Fear to be worse destroy'd: what can be worse
Than to dwell here, driven out from bliss, condemn'd

In this abhorred deep to utter woe;
Where pain of unextinguishable fire
Must exercise us without hope of end,
The vassals of his anger, when the scourge
Inexorably, and the torturing hour,
Calls us to penance? More destroy'd than thus,
We should be quite abolish'd, and expire.
What fear we then? what doubt we to incense
His utmost ire? which, to the height enraged,
Will either quite consume us, and reduce
To nothing this essential, happier far
Than miserable to have eternal being:
Or if our substance be indeed divine,
And cannot cease to be, we are at worst
On this side nothing; and by proof we feel
Our power sufficient to disturb his heaven,
And with perpetual inroads to alarm,
Though inaccessible, his fatal throne:
Which, if not victory, is yet revenge.

He ended frowning, and his look denounced
Desperate revenge, and battle dangerous
To less than gods. On the other side up rose Belial, in act more graceful and humane:

A fairer person lost not heaven ; he seem'd
For dignity compos'd, and high exploit :
But all was false and hollow ; though his tongue
Dropp'd manna, and could make the worse appear

The better reason, to perplex and dash
Maturest counsels : for his thoughts were low ;
To vice industrious, but to nobler deeds
Timorous and slothful : yet he pleased the ear,
And with persuasive accent thus began.

I should be much for open war, O peers,
As not behind in hate ; if what was urged
Main reason to persuade immediate war,
Did not dissuade me most, and seem to cast
Ominous conjecture on the whole success ;
When he, who most excels in fact of arms,
In what he counsels, and in what excels,
Mistrustful, grounds his courage on despair
And utter dissolution, as the scope
Of all his aim, after some dire revenge.
First, what revenge ? The towers of heaven are fill'd

With armed watch, that render all access
Impregnable : oft on the bordering deep
Encamp their legions ; or, with obscure wing,
Scout far and wide into the realm of night,
Scorning surprise. Or could we break our way
By force, and at our heels all hell should rise
With blackest insurrection, to confound
Heaven's purest light ; yet our great Enemy,
All incorruptible, would on his throne
Sit unpolled ; and the ethereal mould,
Incapable of stain, would soon expel
Her mischief, and purge off the baser fire,
Victorious. Thus repulsed, our final hope
Is flat despair : we must exasperate
The Almighty Victor to spend all his rage,
And that must end us ; that must be our cure,
To be no more. Sad cure ! for who would lose,
Though full of pain, this intellectual being,
Those thoughts that wander through eternity,
To perish rather, swallow'd up and lost
In the wide womb of uncreated night,
Devoid of sense and motion ? And who knows,
Let this be good, whether our angry Foe
Can give it, or will ever ? how he can,
Is doubtful ; that he never will, is sure.
Will he, so wise, let loose at once his ire,
Belike through impotence, or unaware,
To give his enemies their wish, and end
Them in his anger, whom his anger saves
To punish endless ? Wherefore cease we then ?
Say they who counsel war ; we are decreed,
Reserved, and destined to eternal woe ;
Whatever doing, what can we suffer more,
What can we suffer worse ? Is this then worst,
Thus sitting, thus consulting, thus in arms ?
What ! when we fled again, pursued, and struck
With heaven's afflicting thunder, and besought
The deep to shelter us ? This hell then seem'd
A refuge from those wounds : or when we lay Chain'd on the burning lake ? That sure was worse.

What if the breath, that kindled those grim

2 c

Awaked, should blow them into sevenfold rage,
And plunge us in the flames ? or, from above,
Should intermitted vengeance arm again
His red right hand to plague us ? What if all
Her stores were open'd, and this firmament
Of hell should spout her cataracts of fire,
Impendent horrors, threatening hideous fall -
One day upon our heads ; while we perhaps,
Designing or exhorting glorious war,
Caught in a fiery tempest shall be hurl'd
Each on his rock transfix'd, the sport and prey
Of wracking whirlwinds ; or for ever sunk
Under yon boiling ocean, wrapt in chains ;
There to converse with everlasting groans,
Unrespited, unpitied, unreprieved,
Ages of hopeless end ? This would be worse.
War therefore, open or conceal'd, alike
My voice dissuades ; for what can force or guile
With him, or who deceive his mind, whose eye Views all things at one view ? He from heaven's height

All these our motions vain sees, and derides ;
Not more almighty to resist our might
Than wise to frustrate all our plots and wiles.
Shall we then live thus vile, the race of heaven
Thus trampled, thus expell'd to suffer here Chains and these torments ? Better these than worse,

By my advice ; since fate inevitable
Subdues us, and omnipotent decree,
The Victor's will. To suffer, as to do,
Our strength is equal, nor the law unjust
That so ordains : this was at first resolv'd,
If we were wise, against so great a Foe
Contending, and so doubtful what might fall.
I laugh, when those who at the spear are bold
And venturous, if that fail them, shrink and fear
What yet they know must follow, to endure
Exile, or ignominy, or bonds, or pain,
The sentence of their Conqueror : this is now
Our doom ; which if we can sustain and bear,
Our Supreme Foe in time may much remit
His anger ; and perhaps, thus far removed,
Not mind us not offending, satisfied
With what is punish'd ; whence these raging fires

Will slacken, if his breath stir not their flames.
Our purer essence then will overcome
Their noxious vapour ; or, inured, not feel ;
Or changed at length, and to the place conform'd
In temper and in nature, will receive
Familiar the fierce heat, and void of pain ;
This horror will grow mild, this darkness light ;
Besides what hope the never-ending fight
Of future days may bring, what chance, what change

Worth waiting ; since our present lot appears
For happy, though but ill ; for ill, not worst ;
If we procure not to ourselves more woe.
Thus Belial, with words clothed in reason's garb,
Counsel'd ignoble ease, and peaceful sloth,
Not peace : and after him thus Mammon spake.
Either to disenthroned the King of heaven

We war, if war be best, or to regain
Our own right lost : Him to unthrone we then
May hope, when everlasting Fate shall yield
To fickle Chance, and Chaos judge the strife :
The former, vain to hope, argues as vain
The latter : for what place can be for us
Within heaven's bound, unless heaven's Lord
supreme

We overpower ? Suppose he should relent,
And publish grace to all, on promise made
Of new subjection ; with what eyes could we Stand in his presence humble, and receive
Strict laws imposed, to celebrate his throne
With warbled hymns, and to his Godhead sing
Forced Hallelujahs ; while he lordly sits
Our envied Sov'reign, and his altar breathes
Ambrosial odours and ambrosial flowers,
Our servile offerings ? This must be our task
In heaven, this our delight ; how wearisome
Eternity so spent, in worship paid
To whom we hate ! Let us not then pursue,
By force impossible, by leave obtain'd,
Unacceptable, though in heaven, our state
Of splendid vassalage ; but rather seek
Our own good from ourselves, and from our own
Live to ourselves, though in this vast recess,
Free, and to none accountable, preferring
Hard liberty before the easy yoke
Of servile pomp. Our greatness will appear Then most conspicuous, when great things of small,

Useful of hurtful, prosperous of adverse,
We can create ; and in what place so e'er
Thrive under evil, and work ease out of pain,
Through labour and endurance. This deep world

Of darkness do we dread ? How oft amidst Thick clouds and dark doth heaven's all-ruling
Sire

Choose to reside, his glory unobscured,
And with the majesty of darkness round
Covers his throne ; from whence deep thunders
roar

Mustering their rage, and heaven resembles
hell ?

As he our darkness, cannot we his light
Imitate when we please ? This desert soil
Wants not her hidden lustre, gems and gold ;
Nor want we skill or art, from whence to raise Magnificence ; and what can Heaven show
more ?

Our torments also may in length of time
Become our elements ; these piercing fires
As soft as now severe, our temper changed
Into their temper ; which must needs remove
The sensible of pain. All things invite
To peaceful counsels, and the settled state
Of order, how in safety best we may
Compose our present evils, with regard

Of what we are, and where ; dismissing quite
All thoughts of war. Ye have what I advise.
He scarce had finish'd, when such murmur
His train'd
Equal assembly, as when hollow rocks retain

The sound of blustering winds, which all night
long

Had roused the sea, now with hoarse cadence lull

Seafaring men o'erwatch'd, whose bark by chance,

Or pinnace, anchors in a craggy bay
After the tempest : such applause was heard
As Mammon ended, and his sentence pleased,
Advising peace : for such another field
They dreaded worse than hell : so much the fear

Of thunder and the sword of Michael
Wrought still within them ; and no less desire
To found this nether empire, which might rise
By policy, and long process of time
In emulation opposite to Heaven.

Which when Beëlzebub perceived, than whom Satan except, none higher sat, with grave
Aspect he rose, and in his rising seem'd
A pillar of state : deep on his front engraven
Deliberation sat, and public care ;
And princely counsel in his face yet shone,
Majestic, though in ruin : sage he stood
With Atlantean shoulders fit to bear
The weight of mightiest monarchies ; his look
Drew audience and attention still as night
Or summer's noontide air, while thus he spake.

Thrones and imperial powers, offspring of
heaven,

Ethereal virtues ! or these titles now
Must we renounce, and, changing style, be call'd
Princes of hell ? for so the popular vote
Inclines, here to continue, and build up here
A growing empire ; doubtless ! while we dream,
And know not that the King of heaven hath doom'd

This place our dungeon ; not our safe retreat
Beyond his potent arm, to live exempt
From heaven's high jurisdiction, in new league
Banded against his throne, but to remain
In strictest bondage, though thus far removed
Under the inevitable curb, reserved

His captive multitude : for he, be sure
In height or depth, still first and last will reign
Sole king, and of his kingdom lose no part
By our revolt ; but over hell extend

His empire, and with iron sceptre rule
Us here, as with his golden those in heaven.
What sit we then projecting peace and war ?

War hath determined us, and foil'd with loss
Irreparable ; terms of peace yet none Vouchsafed or sought ; for what peace will be given

To us enslaved, but custody severe,
And stripes, and arbitrary punishment
Inflicted ? and what peace can we return,
But, to our power, hostility and hate,
Untamed reluctance, and revenge, though slow,
Yet ever plotting how the conqueror least
May reap his conquest, and may least rejoice
In doing what we most in suffering feel ?
Nor will occasion want, nor shall we need
With dangerous expedition to invade

Heaven, whose high walls fear no assault or siege,
Or ambush from the deep. What if we find
Some easier enterprise? There is a place,
(If ancient and prophetic fame in heaven
Err not,) another world, the happy seat
Of some new race call'd Man, about this time
To be created like to us, though less
In power and excellence, but favour'd more
Of Him who rules above; so was his will Pronounced among the gods, and by an oath,
That shook heaven's whole circumference, con-firm'd.

Thither let us bend all our thoughts, to learn
What creatures there inhabit, of what mould,
Or substance, how endued, and what their power,
And where their weakness, how attempted best,
By force or subtlety. Though heaven be shut,
And heaven's high Arbitrator sit secure
In his own strength, this place may lie exposed,
The utmost border of his kingdom, left
To their defence who hold it: here perhaps
Some advantageous act may be achieved
By sudden onset; either with hell fire
To waste his whole creation, or possess
All as our own, and drive, as we were driven,
The puny habitants; or, if not drive,
Seduce them to our party, that their God
May prove their foe, and with repenting hand
Abolish his own works. This would surpass
Common revenge, and interrupt his joy
In our confusion, and our joy upraise
In his disturbance; when his darling sons,
Hurl'd headlong to partake with us, shall curse
Their frail original, and faded bliss,
Faded so soon. Advise, if this be worth
Attempting, or to sit in darkness here
Hatching vain empires. Thus Beëlzebub
Pleaded his devilish counsel, first devised
By Satan, and in part proposed: for whence,
But from the author of all ill, could spring
So deep a malice, to confound the race
Of mankind in one root, and earth with hell
To mingle and involve, done all to spite
The great Creator? But their spite still serves
His glory to augment. The bold design
Pleased highly those infernal states, and joy
Sparkled in all their eyes; with full assent
They vote: whereat his speech he thus renews.

Well have ye judged, well ended long debate,
Synod of gods! and, like to what ye are,
Great things resolved, which, from the lowest
deep,

Will once more lift us up, in spite of fate,
Nearer our ancient seat; perhaps in view
Of those bright confines, whence, with neighbouring arms

And opportune excursion, we may chance
Re-enter heaven; or else in some mild zone
Dwell, not unvisited of heaven's fair light,
Secure; and at the brightening orient beam
Purge off this gloom: the soft delicious air,
To heal the scar of these corrosive fires Shall breathe her balm. But first whom shall we send

In search of this new world? whom shall we find

Sufficient? who shall tempt with wandering feet
The dark unbottom'd infinite abyss,
And through the palpable obscure find out
His uncouth way, or spread his airy flight
Upborne with indefatigable wings
Over the vast abrupt, ere he arrive
The happy isle? What strength, what art, can then

Suffice, or what evasion bear him safe
Through the strict sentries and stations thick
Of Angels watching round? Here he had need
All circumspection; and we now no less
Choice in our suffrage; for, on whom we send,
The weight of all, and our last hope, relies.
This said, he sat; and expectation held
His look suspense, awaiting who appear'd
To second, or oppose, or undertake
The perilous attempt: but all sat mute,
Pondering the danger with deep thoughts; and each

In other's countenance read his own dismay,
Astonish'd. None among the choice and prime
Of those heaven-warring champions could be found

So hardy, as to proffer or accept,
Alone, the dreadful voyage; till at last
Satan, whom now transcendent glory raised
Above his fellows, with monarchical pride,
Conscious of highest worth, unmoved thus spake.

O progeny of heaven, empyreal thrones!
With reason hath deep silence and demur
Seized us, though undismay'd: long is the way
And hard, that out of hell leads up to light;
Our prison strong; this huge convex of fire,
Outrageous to devour, immures us round
Ninefold; and gates of burning adamant,
Barr'd over us, prohibit all egress.

These pass'd, if any pass, the void profound
Of unessential night receives him next
Wide gaping, and with utter loss of being
Threatens him, plunged in that abortive gulf
If thence he scape into whatever world,
Or unknown region, what remains him less
Than unknown dangers, and as hard escape?
But I should ill become this throne, O peers
And this imperial sovereignty, adorn'd
With splendour, arm'd with power, if aught proposed

And judg'd of public moment, in the shape
Of difficulty, or danger, could deter
Me from attempting. Wherefore do I assume
These royalties, and not refuse to reign,
Refusing to accept as great a share
Of hazard as of honour, due alike
To him who reigns, and so much to him due
Of hazard more, as he above the rest
High honour'd sits? Go, therefore, mighty powers,

Terror of heaven, though fallen! intend at home,
While here shall be our home, what best may
ease

The present misery, and render hell

More tolerable; if there be cure or charm
 To respite, or deceive, or slack the pain
 Of this ill mansion: intermit no watch
 Against a wakeful foe, while I abroad
 Through all the coasts of dark destruction seek Deliverance for us all: this enterprise
 None shall partake with me. Thus saying rose
 The monarch, and prevented all reply;
 Prudent, lest, from his resolution raised
 Others among the chief might offer now
 (Certain to be refused) what erst they fear'd;
 And, so refused, might in opinion stand
 His rivals; winning cheap the high repute,
 Which he through hazard huge must earn. But they

Dreaded not more the adventure than his voice
 Forbidding; and at once with him they rose:
 Their rising all at once was as the sound
 Of thunder heard remote. Towards him they bend

With awful reverence prone; and as a god
 Extol him equal to the Highest in heaven:
 Nor fail'd they to express how much they praised,
 That for the general safety he despised
 His own: for neither do the spirits damn'd
 Lose all their virtue; lest bad men should boast
 Their specious deeds on earth, which glory excites,

Or close ambition varnish'd o'er with zeal.
 Thus they their doubtful consultations dark
 Ended, rejoicing in their matchless chief:
 As when from mountain tops the dusky clouds
 Ascending, while the north wind sleeps, o'er-spread

Heaven's cheerful face, the lowering element
 Scowls o'er the darken'd landskip snow, or shower;

If chance the radiant sun with farewell sweet
 Extend his evening beam, the fields revive,
 The birds their notes renew, and bleating herds
 Attest their joy, that hill and valley rings.
 O shame to men! devil with devil damn'd
 Firm concord holds; men only disagree
 Of creatures rational, though under hope
 Of heavenly grace: and God proclaiming peace,
 Yet live in hatred, enmity, and strife,
 Among themselves, and levy cruel wars,
 Wasting the earth, each other to destroy:
 As if (which might induce us to accord)
 Man had not hellish foes enough besides,
 That, day and night, for his destruction wait.

The Stygian council thus dissolved; and forth
 In order came the grand infernal peers:
 Midst came their mighty paramount, and seem'd
 Alone the antagonist of heaven, nor less
 Than hell's dread emperor, with pomp supreme,
 And godlike imitated state: him round
 A globe of fiery Seraphim enclosed
 With bright emblazonry, and horrent arms.
 Then of their session ended they bid cry
 With trumpets' regal sound the great result:
 Towards the four winds four speedy Cherubim
 Put to their mouths the sounding alchemy,
 By herald's voice explain'd; the hollow abyss

Heard far and wide, and all the host of Hell
 With deafening shout return'd them loud acclaim.

Thence more at ease their minds, and somewhat raised

By false presumptuous hope, the ranged powers
 Disband; and, wandering, each his several way
 Pursues, as inclination or sad choice
 Leads him perplex'd, where he may likeliest find Truce to his restless thoughts, and entertain
 The irksome hours till his great chief return.
 Part on the plain, or in the air sublime,
 Upon the wing, or in swift race contend,
 As at the Olympian games or Pythian fields;
 Part curb their fiery steeds, or shun the goal
 With rapid wheels, or fronted brigades form.
 As when, to warn proud cities, war appears
 Waged in the troubled sky, and armies rush
 To battle in the clouds, before each van Prick forth the aery knights, and couch their spears

Till thickest legions close; with feats of arms
 From either end of heaven the welkin burns.
 Others, with vast Typhoean rage more fell,
 Rend up both rocks and hills, and ride the air
 In whirlwind; hell scarce holds the wild uproar.
 As when Alcides, from Oechalia crown'd
 With conquest, felt the envenom'd robe, and tore
 Through pain up by the roots Thessalian pines,
 And Lichas from the top of Oeta threw
 Into the Euboic sea. Others more mild,
 Retreated in a silent valley, sing
 With notes angelical to many a harp
 Their own heroic deeds and hapless fall
 By doom of battle; and complain that fate
 Free virtue should enthrall to force or chance.
 Their song was partial; but the harmony
 (What could it less when spirits immortal sing?)
 Suspended hell, and took with ravishment
 The thronging audience. In discourse more sweet

(For eloquence the soul, song charms the sense,)
 Others apart sat on a hill retired,
 In thoughts more elevate, and reason'd high
 Of providence, foreknowledge, will, and fate;
 Fix'd fate, free will, foreknowledge absolute;
 And found no end, in wandering mazes lost.
 Of good and evil much they argued then,
 Of happiness and final misery,
 Passion and apathy, and glory and shame;
 Vain wisdom all, and false philosophy!
 Yet, with a pleasing sorcery, could charm
 Pain for a while or anguish, and excite
 Fallacious hope, or arm the obdured breast
 With stubborn patience, as with triple steel.
 Another part, in squadrons and gross bands,
 On bold adventure to discover wide
 That dismal world, if any clime perhaps
 Might yield them easier habitation, bend
 Four ways their flying march, along the banks
 Of four infernal rivers, that disgorge
 Into the burning lake their baleful streams;
 Abhorred Styx, the flood of deadly hate;
 Sad Acheron, of sorrow, black and deep;
 Cocytus, named of lamentation loud

Heard on the rueful stream ; fierce Phlegethon,
Whose waves of torrent fire inflame with rage.
Far off from these, a slow and silent stream,
Lethe, the river of oblivion, rolls
Her watery labyrinth, whereof who drinks,
Forthwith his former state and being forgets,
Forgets both joy and grief, pleasure and pain.
Beyond this flood a frozen continent
Lies dark and wild, beat with perpetual storms
Of whirlwind and dire hail, which on firm land
Thaws not, but gathers heap, and ruin seems
Of ancient pile ; or else deep snow and ice,
A gulf profound, as that Serbonian bog
Betwixt Damietta and mount Casius old,
Where armies whole have sunk : the parching
air

Burns froze, and cold performs the effect of fire.
Thither by harpy-footed furies haled
At certain revolutions, all the damn'd
Are brought ; and feel by turns the bitter change
Of fierce extremes, extremes by change more fierce,

From beds of raging fire, to starve in ice
Their soft ethereal warmth, and there to pine
Immoveable, infix'd, and frozen round,
Periods of time, thence hurried back to fire.
They ferry over this Lethæan sound
Both to and fro, their sorrow to augment,
And wish and struggle, as they pass, to reach
The tempting stream, with one small drop to lose

In sweet forgetfulness all pain and woe,
All in one moment, and so near the brink ;
But fate withstands, and to oppose the attempt
Medusa with Gorgonian terror guards
The ford, and of itself the water flies
Ali taste of living wight, as once it fled
The lip of Tantalus. Thus roving on
In confused march forlorn, the adventurous bands,

With shuddering horror pale, and eyes aghast,
View'd first their lamentable lot, and found
No rest : through many a dark and dreary vale
They pass'd, and many a region dolorous,
O'er many a frozen, many a fiery Alp,
Rocks, caves, lakes, fens, bogs, dens, and shades
of death,

A universe of death : which God by curse
Created evil, for evil only good,
Where all life dies, death lives, and nature breeds,

Perverse, all monstrous, all prodigious things,
Abominable, inutterable, and worse
Than fables yet have feign'd, or fear conceiv-
ed,

Gorgons, and hydras, and chimeras dire.

Meanwhile, the adversary of God and man,
Satan, with thoughts inflamed of highest design,

Puts on swift wings, and towards the gates of
hell

Explores his solitary flight : sometimes

He scours the right hand coast, sometimes the left ;

Now shaves with level wing the deep, then soars

Up to the fiery concave towering high.
As when far off at sea a fleet descried
Hangs in the clouds, by equinoctial winds
Close sailing from Bengala, or the isles
Of Ternate and Tidore, whence merchants bring
Their spicy drugs ; they, on the trading flood,
Through the wide Ethiopian to the Cape,
Ply stemming nightly toward the pole : so
seem'd

Far off the flying fiend. At last appear
Hell-hounds, high reaching to the horrid roof,
And thrice threefold the gates ; threefolds were brass,

Three iron, three of adamantine rock
Impenetrable, impaled with circling fire,
Yet unconsum'd. Before the gates there sat
On either side a formidable shape ;
The one seem'd woman to the waist, and fair ;
But ended foul in many a scaly fold
Voluminous and vast ; a serpent arm'd
With mortal sting : about her middle round
A cry of hell-hounds never ceasing bark'd
With wide Cerberian mouths full loud, and rung
A hideous peal ; yet, when they list, would creep,

If aught disturb'd their noise, into her womb,
And kennel there ; yet there still bark'd and howl'd,

Within, unseen. Far less abhorr'd than these Vex'd Scylla, bathing in the sea that parts
Calabria from the hoarse Trinacrian shore :
Nor uglier follow the night hag, when, call'd
In secret, riding through the air she comes,
Lured with the smell of infant blood, to dance
With Lapland witches, while the labouring
moon

Eclipses at their charms. The other shape,
If shape it might be call'd that shape had none
Distinguishable in member, joint, or limb ;
Or substance might be call'd that shadow seem'd,
For each seem'd either ; black it stood as night,
Fierce as ten furies, terrible as hell,
And shook a dreadful dart ; what seem'd his head
The likeness of a kingly crown had on.
Satan was now at hand, and from his seat
The monster moving onward came as fast
With horrid strides ; hell trembled as he strode.
The undaunted fiend what this might be admired ;

Admired, not fear'd ; God and his Son except,
Created thing nought valued he, nor shunn'd ;
And with disdainful look thus first began.

Whence and what art thou, execrable shape !
That darest, though grim and terrible, advance

Thy miscreated front athwart my way
To yonder gates ? Through them I mean to pass,

That be assured, without leave ask'd of thee :
Retire, or taste thy folly ; and learn by proof,
Hell-born ! not to contend with spirits of heaven.

To whom the goblin full of wrath replied.
 Art thou that traitor-angel, art thou he,
 Who first broke peace in heaven, and faith,
 till then
 Unbroken; and in proud rebellious arms
 Drew after him the third part of heaven's sons
 Conjured against the Highest; for which both thou
 And they, outcast from God, are here condemn'd
 To waste eternal days in woe and pain?
 And reckon'st thou thyself with spirits of heaven,
 Hell-doom'd! and breath'st defiance here and scorn,

Where I reign king, and to enrage thee more,
 Thy king and lord? Back to thy punishment,
 False fugitive! and to thy speed add wings,
 Lest with a whip of scorpions I pursue
 Thy lingering; or with one stroke of this dart
 Strange horror seize thee, and pangs unfelt
 before.

So spake the grisly terror, and in shape,
 So speaking and so threatening, grew tenfold
 More dreadful and deform. On the other side,
 Incens'd with indignation, Satan stood
 Unterrified, and like a comet burn'd,
 That fires the length of Ophiuchus huge
 In the arctic sky, and from his horrid hair
 Shakes pestilence and war. Each at the head
 Level'd his deadly aim; their fatal hands
 No second stroke intend; and such a frown
 Each cast at the other, as when two black clouds,

With heaven's artillery fraught, come rattling on
 Over the Caspian, then stand front to front,
 Hovering a space, till winds the signal blow
 To join their dark encounter in mid air:
 So frown'd the mighty combatants, that hell Grew darker at their frown; so match'd they stood;

For never but once more was either like
 To meet so great a foe: and now great deeds

Had been achieved, whereof all hell had rung
 Had not the snaky sorceress that sat
 Fast by hell-gate, and kept the fatal key,
 Risen, and with hideous outcry rush'd between.

O father! what intends thy hand, she cried,
 Against thy only son? What fury, O son!
 Possesses thee, to bend that mortal dart Against thy father's head? and know'st for whom;

For him who sits above, and laughs the while
 At thee ordain'd his drudge; to execute What'er his wrath, which he calls justice,
 bids;

His wrath, which one day will destroy ye both!
 She spake, and at her words the hellish pest
 Forbore; then these to her Satan return'd.

So strange thy outcry, and thy words so strange

Thou interposest, that my sudden hand,
 Prevented, spares to tell thee yet by deeds
 What it intends; till first I know of thee,

What thing thou art, thus double-form'd; and
 why,

In this infernal vale first met, thou call'st
 Me father, and that phantasm call'st my son:
 I know thee not, nor ever saw till now
 Sight more detestable than him and thee.

To whom thus the portress of hell-gate replied.

Hast thou forgot me then, and do I seem
 Now in thine eye so foul? once deem'd so fair
 In heaven, when at the assembly, and in sight
 Of all the Seraphim with thee combined
 In bold conspiracy against heaven's King,
 All on a sudden miserable pain
 Surprised thee, dim thine eyes, and dizzy swum
 In darkness, while thy head flames thick and fast

Threw forth; till, on the left side opening wide,
 Likest to thee in shape and countenance bright,
 Then shining heavenly fair, a goddess arm'd,
 Out of thy head I sprung: amazement seized
 All the host of heaven; back they recoild afraid

At first, and call'd me Sin, and for a sign
 Portentous held me; but familiar grown,
 I pleased, and with attractive graces won
 The most averse, thee chiefly, who full oft
 Thyself in me thy perfect image viewing
 Becamest enamour'd, and such joy thou took'st
 With me in secret, that my womb conceived
 A growing burden. Meanwhile war arose,
 And fields were fought in heaven; wherein re-
 main'd

(For what could else?) to our Almighty Foe
 Clear victory; to our part loss and rout,
 Through all the empyrean: down they fell
 Driven headlong from the pitch of heaven, down
 Into this deep; and in the general fall
 I also; at which time, this powerful key
 Into my hand was given, with charge to keep
 These gates for ever shut, which none can pass,
 Without my opening. Pensive here I sat
 Alone; but long I sat not, till my womb,
 Pregnant by thee, and now excessive grown,
 Prodigious motion felt, and rueful throes.
 At last this odious offspring whom thou seest,
 Thine own begotten, breaking violent way
 Tore through my entrails, that, with fear and
 pain

Distorted, all my nether shape thus grew
 Transform'd: but he my inbred enemy
 Forth issued, brandishing his fatal dart
 Made to destroy! I fled, and cried out, Death!
 Hell trembled at the hideous name, and sigh'd
 From all her caves, and back resounded, Death!
 I fled; but he pursued, (though more, it seems,
 Inflamed with lust than rage,) and swifter far,
 Me overtook, his mother, all dismay'd;
 And, in embraces forcible and foul
 Ingendering with me, of that rape begot
 These yelling monsters, that with ceaseless cry
 Surround me, as thou saw'st; hourly conceived
 And hourly born, with sorrow infinite
 To me; for, when they list, into the womb

That bred them they return, and howl and gnaw

My bowels, their repast; then bursting forth
Afresh with conscious terrors vex me round,
That rest or intermission none I find.

Before mine eyes in opposition sits
Grim Death, my son and foe; who sets them on,
And me his parent would full soon devour
For want of other prey, but that he knows
His end with mine involved; and knows that I Should prove a bitter morsel, and his bane,
Whenever that shall be; so Fate pronounced.
But thou, O father! I forewarn thee, shun
His deadly arrow; neither vainly hope
To be invulnerable in those bright arms,
Though temper'd heavenly; for that mortal dint,
Save he who reigns above, none can resist.

She finish'd; and the subtle fiend his lore
Soon learn'd, now milder, and thus answer'd smooth.

Dear daughter! since thou claim'st me for thy sire,
And my fair son here show'st me, (the dear
pledge

Of dalliance had with thee in heaven, and joys
Then sweet, now sad to mention, through dire
change

Befallen us, unforeseen, unthought of) know,
I come no enemy, but to set free
From out this dark and dismal house of pain
Both him and thee, and all the heavenly host
Of spirits, that, in our just pretences arm'd,
Fell with us from on high: from them I go
Thine uncouth errand sole; and one for all Myself expose, with lonely steps to tread
The unfounded deep, and through the void immense

To search with wandering quest a place foretold

Should be, and, by concurring signs, ere now
Created vast and round, a place of bliss
In the purlieus of heaven, and therein placed
A race of upstart creatures, to supply
Perhaps our vacant room; though more removed,

Lest heaven, surcharged with potent multitude,
Might hap to move new broils. Be this, or ought

Than this more secret, now design'd, I haste
To know; and, this once known, shall soon return,

And bring ye to the place where thou and Death
Shall dwell at ease, and up and down unseen
Wing silently the buxom air, embalm'd
With odours; there ye shall be fed and fill'd
Immeasurably, all things shall be your prey.

He ceased, for both seem'd highly pleased; and
Death

Grinn'd horrible a ghastly smile, to hear
His famine should be fill'd; and blest his maw
Destined to that good hour: no less rejoiced
His mother bad, and thus bespake her sire.

The key of this infernal pit by due,
And by command of heaven's all-powerful King,

I keep; by him forbidden to unlock

These adamant gates; against all force
Death ready stands to interpose his dart,
Fearless to be o'ermatch'd by living might.
But what owe I to his commands above
Who hates me, and hath hither thrust me down
Into this gloom of Tartarus profound,
To sit in hateful office here confined,
Inhabitant of heaven, and heavenly born,
Here in perpetual agony and pain,
With terrors and with clamours compass'd round
Of mine own brood, that on my bowels feed?
Thou art my father, thou my author, thou
My being gavest me; whom should I obey
But thee? whom follow? thou wilt bring me
soon

To that new world of light and bliss, among
The gods who live at ease, where I shall reign
At thy right hand voluptuous, as beseems
Thy daughter and thy darling, without end.

Thus saying, from her side the fatal key,
Sad instrument of all our woe, she took;
And towards the gate rolling her bestial train,
Forthwith the huge portcullis high up drew,
Which but herself, not all the Stygian powers
Could once have moved; then in the key-hole turns

The intricate wards, and every bolt and bar
Of massy iron or solid rock with ease
Unfastens: on a sudden open fly,
With impetuous recoil and jarring sound,
The infernal doors, and on their hinges grate
Harsh thunder, that the lowest bottom shook
Of Erebus. She open'd, but to shut
Excell'd her power; the gates wide open stood,
That with extended wings a banner'd host,
Under spread ensigns marching, might pass through

With horse and chariots rank'd in loose array;
So wide they stood, and like a furnace mouth
Cast forth redounding smoke and ruddy flame.
Before their eyes in sudden view appear
The secrets of the hoary deep; a dark
Illimitable ocean, without bound,
Without dimension; where length, breadth, and
height,

And time, and place, are lost; where eldest
Night

And Chaos, ancestors of Nature, hold
Eternal anarchy, amidst the noise
Of endless wars, and by confusion stand.
For hot, cold, moist, and dry, four champions
fierce,

Strive here for mastery, and to battle bring
Their embryon atoms; they around the flag
Of each his faction, in their several clans, Light-arm'd or heavy, sharp, smooth, swift, or slow,

Swarm populous, unnumber'd as the sands
Of Barca or Cyrene's torrid soil,
Levied to side with warring winds, and poise
Their lighter wings. To whom these most adhere,

He rules a moment: Chaos umpire sits,

And by decision more embroils the fray,
 By which he reigns: next him high arbiter
 Chance governs all. Into this wild abyss,
 The womb of nature, and perhaps her grave,
 Of neither sea, nor shore, nor air, nor fire,
 But all these in their pregnant causes mix'd
 Confusedly, and which thus must ever fight,
 Unless the almighty Maker them ordain
 His dark materials to create more worlds;
 Into this wild abyss the wary fiend
 Stood on the brink of hell, and look'd awhile,
 Pondering his voyage; for no narrow frith
 He had to cross. Nor was his ear less peal'd
 With noises loud and ruinous (to compare Great things with small), than when Bellona storms,
 With all her battering engines bent to rase
 Some capital city; or less than if this frame
 Of heaven were falling, and these elements
 In mutiny had from her axle torn
 The steadfast earth. At last his sail-broad vans
 He spreads for flight, and in the surging smoke Uplifted spurns the ground; thence many a
 league,
 As in a cloudy chair, ascending rides
 Audacious; but, that seat soon failing, meets
 A vast vacuity: all unawares
 Fluttering his pennons vain, plumb down he drops
 Ten thousand fathom deep; and to this hour
 Down had been falling, had not by ill chance
 The strong rebuff of some tumultuous cloud,
 Instinct with fire and nitre, hurried him
 As many miles aloft: that fury stay'd,
 Quench'd in a boggy Syrtis, neither sea,
 Nor good dry land: nigh founder'd on he fares,
 Treading the crude consistence, half on foot.
 Half flying; behoves him now both oar and sail.
 As when a grypon, through the wilderness
 With winged course, o'er hill or moory dale,
 Pursues the Arimasian, who by stealth
 Had from his wakeful custody purloin'd
 The guarded gold: so eagerly the fiend
 O'er bog, or steep, through strait, rough, dense,
 or rare,
 With head, hands, wings, feet, pursues his
 way,
 And swims, or sinks, or wades, or creeps, or flies:
 At length a universal hubbub wild
 Of stunning sounds, and voices all confused, Borne through the hollow dark, assaults his
 ear
 With loudest vehemence: thither he plies,
 Undaunted to meet there whatever power
 Or spirit of the nethermost abyss
 Might in that noise reside, of whom to ask
 Which way, the nearest coast of darkness lies Bordering on light; when straight behold the
 throne
 Of Chaos, and his dark pavilion spread
 Wide on the wasteful deep; with him enthroned
 Sat sable-vested Night, eldest of things,

The consort of his reign; and by them stood
 Orcus and Hades, and the dreaded name
 Of Demogorgon; Rumour next and Chance,
 And Tumult and Confusion all embroil'd,
 And Discord with a thousand various mouths.
 To whom Satan turning boldly, thus: Ye powers
 And spirits of this nethermost abyss,
 Chaos and ancient Night, I come no spy,
 With purpose to explore or to disturb
 The secrets of your realm; but, by constraint
 Wandering this darksome desert, as my way
 Lies through your spacious empire up to light,
 Alone, and without guide, half lost, I seek
 What readiest path leads where your gloomy bounds
 Confine with heaven; or if some other place,
 From your dominion won, the ethereal King
 Possesses lately, thither to arrive
 I travel this profound; direct my course;
 Directed, no mean recompense it brings
 To your behoof: if I that region lost,
 All usurpation thence expell'd, reduce
 To her original darkness, and your sway
 (Which is my present journey), and once more Erect the standard there of ancient Night;
 Yours be the advantage all, mine the revenge!
 Thus Satan; and him thus the anarch old,
 With faltering speech and visage incomposed,
 Answer'd. I know thee, stranger, who thou art,
 That mighty leading angel, who of late
 Made head against heaven's King, though overthrown.
 I saw and heard; for such a numerous host
 Fled not in silence through the frighted deep,
 With ruin upon ruin, rout on rout,
 Confusion worse confounded; and heaven-gates
 Pour'd out by millions her victorious bands
 Pursuing. I upon my frontiers here
 Keep residence; if all I can will serve
 That little which is left so to defend,
 Encroach'd on still through your intestine broils
 Weakening the sceptre of old Night: first hell,
 Your dungeon, stretching far and wide beneath;
 Now lately heaven, and earth, another world,
 Hung o'er my realm, link'd in a golden chain
 To that side heaven from whence your legions fell.
 If that way be your walk, you have not far:
 So much the nearer danger; go, and speed!
 Havock, and spoil, and ruin, are my gain.
 He ceased; and Satan stay'd not to reply;
 But, glad that now his sea should find a shore,
 With fresh alacrity, and force renew'd,
 Springs upward, like a pyramid of fire,
 Into the wild expanse; and through the shock
 Of fighting elements, on all sides round
 Environ'd, wins his way; harder beset
 And more endanger'd, than when Argo pass'd
 Through Bosphorus, betwixt the justling rocks:
 Or when Ulysses on the farboard shunn'd
 Charybdis, and by the other whirlpool steer'd.
 So he with difficulty and labour hard
 Moved on: with difficulty and labour he;

But, he once pass'd, soon after, when man fell,
 Strange alteration! Sin and Death amain
 Following his track, such was the will of Heaven,
 Paved after him a broad and beaten way
 Over the dark abyss, whose boiling gulf
 Tamely endured a bridge of wondrous length,
 From hell continued, reaching the utmost orb
 Of this frail world: by which the spirits perverse

With easy intercourse pass to and fro
 To tempt or punish mortals, except whom
 God, and good Angels, guard by special grace.

But now at last the sacred influence
 Of light appears, and from the walls of heaven
 Shoots far into the bosom of dim night
 A glimmering dawn; here Nature first begins
 Her farthest verge, and chaos to retire,
 As from her outmost works a broken foe,
 With tumult less, and with less hostile din;
 That Satan with less toil, and now with ease,
 Wafts on the calmer wave by dubious light;
 And, like a weather-beaten vessel, holds
 Gladly the port, though shrouds and tackle torn;
 Or in the emptier waste, resembling air,
 Weighs his spread wings, at leisure to behold
 Far off the empyreal heaven, extended wide
 In circuit, undetermin'd square or round,
 With opal towers, and battlements adorn'd
 Of living sapphire, once his native seat;
 And fast by, hanging in a golden chain,
 This pendent world, in bigness as a star
 Of smallest magnitude, close by the moon.
 Thither, full fraught with mischievous revenge,
 Accus'd, and in a cursed hour, he lies.

BOOK III.

THE ARGUMENT.

God, sitting on his throne, sees Satan flying towards this world, then newly created; shows him to the Son, who sat at his right hand; foretells the success of Satan in perverting mankind; clears his own justice and wisdom from all imputation, having created man free, and able enough to have withstood his tempter; yet declares his purpose of grace towards him, in regard he fell not of his own malice as did Satan, but by him seduced. The Son of God renders praises to his Father for the manifestation of his gracious purpose towards man; but God again declares, that grace cannot be extended towards man without the satisfaction of divine justice. Man hath offended the majesty of God by aspiring to Godhead, and, therefore, with all his progeny, devoted to death, must die, unless someone can be found sufficient to answer for his offence, and undergo his punishment. The Son of God freely offers himself a ransom for man: the Father accepts him, ordains his incarnation, pronounces his exaltation above all names in heaven and earth; commands all the angels to adore him: they obey, and, hymning to their harps in full choir, celebrate the Father and the Son. Meanwhile Satan alights upon the bare convex of this world's outermost orb; where wandering he first finds a place, since called the Limbo of Vanity; what persons and things fly up thither; thence comes to the gate of heaven, described ascending by stairs, and the waters above the firmament that flow about it: his passage thence to the orb of the sun; he finds there Uriel, the regent of that orb, but first changes himself into the shape of a meaner angel; and, pretending a zealous desire to behold the new creation, and man whom God had plac'd here, inquires of him the place of his habitation, and is directed; alights first on mount Niphates.

HAIL! holy Light! offspring of Heaven, first-born,
 Or of the Eternal coeternal beam
 May I express thee unblamed? since God is light,
 And never but in unapproach'd light
 Dwelt from eternity; dwelt then in thee,

Bright effluence of bright essence increate.
 Or hear'st thou rather pure ethereal stream,
 Whose fountain who shall tell? Before the sun,
 Before the heavens thou wert, and at the voice
 Of God, as with a mantle, didst invest
 The rising world of waters dark and deep,
 Won from the void and formless infinite.
 Thee I revisit now with bolder wing,
 Escaped the Stygian pool, though long detain'd
 In that obscure sojourn, while in my flight
 Through utter and through middle darkness borne,

With other notes than to the Orphéan lyre,
 I sung of chaos and eternal night;
 Taught by the heavenly Muse to venture down
 The dark descent, and up to reascend,
 Though hard and rare. Thee I revisit safe,
 And feel thy sov'reign vital lamp; but thou
 Revisit'st not these eyes, that roll in vain
 To find thy piercing ray, and find no dawn;
 So thick a drop-serene hath quench'd their orbs,
 Or dim suffusion veil'd. Yet not the more
 Cease I to wander, where the muses haunt,
 Clear spring, or shady grove, or sunny hill,
 Smit with the love of sacred song; but chief
 Thee, Sion, and the flowery brooks beneath,
 That wash thy hallow'd feet, and warbling flow,
 Nightly I visit: nor sometimes forget
 Those other two equal'd with me in fate,
 So were I equal'd with them in renown,
 Blind Thamyras, and blind Mæonides,
 And Tiresias, and Phineus, prophets old:
 Then feed on thoughts, that voluntary move
 Harmonious numbers; as the wakeful bird
 Sings darkling, and in shadiest covert hid Tunes her nocturnal note. Thus with the year
 Seasons return; but not to me returns
 Day, or the sweet approach of even or morn,
 Or sight of vernal bloom, or summer's rose,
 Or flocks, or herds, or human face divine;
 But cloud instead, and everduring dark
 Surrounds me, from the cheerful ways of men
 Cut off, and for the book of knowledge fair
 Presented with a universal blank
 Of nature's works to me expunged and rased,
 And wisdom at our entrance quite shut out.
 So much the rather thou, celestial light,
 Shine inward, and the mind through all her powers

Irradiate; there plant eyes, all mist from thence Purge and disperse, that I may see and tell
 Of things invisible to mortal sight.

Now had the almighty Father from above,
 From the pure empyrean where he sits
 High throned above all height, bent down his eye,
 His own works and their works at once to view:
 About him all the sanctities of heaven
 Stood thick as stars, and from his sight receiv'd
 Beatitude past utterance; on his right
 The radiant image of his glory sat,
 His only Son. On earth he first beheld
 Our two first parents, yet the only two
 Of mankind in the happy garden plac'd,
 Reaping immortal fruits of joy and love,

Uninterrupted joy, unrival'd love,
In blissful solitude. He then survey'd
Hell and the gulf between, and Satan there
Coasting the wall of heaven on this side night,
In the dun air sublime, and ready now
To stoop with wearied wings, and willing feet,
On the bare outside of this world, that seem'd
Firm land imbosom'd, without firmament,
Uncertain which, in ocean or in air.
Him God beholding from his prospect high,
Wherein past, present, future, he beholds,
Thus to his only Son foreseeing spake.

Only begotten Son! seest thou what rage
Transports our adversary? whom no bounds
Prescribed, no bars of hell, nor all the chains
Heap'd on him there, nor yet the main abyss
Wide interrupt, can hold; so bent he seems
On desperate revenge, that shall redound
Upon his own rebellious head. And now,
Through all restraint broke loose, he wings his way

Not far off heaven, in the precincts of light,
Directly towards the new created world,
And man there placed, with purpose to assay
If him by force he can destroy, or, worse,
By some false guile pervert; and shall pervert;
For man will hearken to his glozing lies,
And easily transgress the sole command,
Sole pledge of his obedience: so will fall,
He and his faithless progeny. Whose fault?
Whose but his own? Ingrate, he had of me
All he could have; I made him just and right,
Sufficient to have stood, though free to fall.
Such I created all the ethereal powers
And spirits, both them who stood, and them who fail'd;

Freely they stood who stood, and fell who fell.
Not free, what proof could they have given sincere

Of true allegiance, constant faith, or love,
Where only what they needs must do appear'd,
Not that they would? what praise could they receive?

What pleasure I from such obedience paid,
When will and reason (reason also is choice)
Useless and vain, of freedom both despoil'd,
Made passive both, had served necessity,
Not me? They therefore, as to right belong'd,
So were created, nor can justly accuse
Their Maker, or their making, or their fate,
As if predestination over-ruled
Their will, disposed by absolute decree,
Or high foreknowledge; they themselves decreed
Their own revolt, not I; if I foreknew.

Foreknowledge had no influence on their fault,
Which had no less proved certain unforeknown.

So without least impulse or shadow of fate,
Bordering on me immutably foreseen,

thence authors to themselves in all
Of Chaos, and his judge, and what they choose;
Wide on the wasteful

Sat sable-vested Night, and free they must remain themselves; I else must change
the high decree

Unchangeable, eternal, which ordain'd
Their freedom; they themselves ordain'd their fall.

The first sort by their own suggestion fell,
Self-tempted, self-depraved: man falls, deceived
By the other first: man therefore shall find grace,
The other none: in mercy and justice both,
Through heaven and earth, so shall my glory
excel;

But mercy, first and last, shall brightest shine.
Thus while God spake, ambrosial fragrance
fill'd

All heaven, and in the blessed spirits elect
Sense of new joy ineffable diffused.
Beyond compare the Son of God was seen
Most glorious; in him all his Father shone
Substantially express'd; and in his face
Divine compassion visibly appear'd,
Love without end, and without measure grace,
Which uttering, thus he to his Father spake.

O Father! gracious was that word which closed Thy sovereign sentence, that man should find
grace:

For which both heaven and earth shall high extol
Thy praises, with the innumerable sound
Of hymns and sacred songs, wherewith thy throne
Encompass'd shall resound thee ever blest.
For should man finally be lost? should man,
Thy creature late so loved, thy youngest son,
Fall circumvented thus by fraud, though join'd
With his own folly? that he from thee far,
That far be from thee, Father, who art judge
Of all things made, and judgest only right.

Or shall the adversary thus obtain
His end, and frustrate thine? shall he fulfil
His malice, and thy goodness bring to nought;
Or proud return, though to his heavier doom,
Yet with revenge accomplished, and to hell
Draw after him the whole race of mankind,
By him corrupted? or wilt thou thyself
Abolish thy creation, and unmake
For him, what for thy glory thou hast made?
So should thy goodness and thy greatness both
Be question'd and blasphemed without defence.

To whom the great Creator thus replied.
O Son! in whom my soul hath chief delight,
Son of my bosom, Son who art alone
My word, my wisdom, and effectual might,
All hast thou spoken as my thoughts are, all
As my eternal purpose hath decreed:
Man shall not quite be lost, but saved who will;
Yet not of will in him, but grace in me
Freely vouchsafed; once more I will renew
His lapsed powers, though forfeit, and enthrall'd
By sin to foul exorbitant desires;
Upheld by me, yet once more he shall stand
On even ground against his mortal foe;
By me upheld, that he may know how frail
His fallen condition is, and to me owe
All his deliverance, and to none but me.
Some I have chosen of peculiar grace,
Elect above the rest: so is my will:
The rest shall hear me call, and oft be warn'd
Their sinful state, and to appease betimes

The incensed Deity, while offer'd grace
 Invites; for I will clear their senses dark,
 What may suffice, and soften stony hearts
 To pray, repent, and bring obedience due.
 To prayer, repentance, and obedience due,
 Though but endeavour'd with sincere intent,
 Mine ear shall not be slow, mine eye not shut.
 And I will place within them as a guide,
 My umpire conscience; whom if they will hear,
 Light after light, well used, they shall attain,
 And to the end, persisting, safe arrive.
 This my long sufferance, and my day of grace,
 They who neglect and scorn, shall never taste;
 But hard be harden'd, blind be blinded more,
 That they may stumble on, and deeper fall;
 And none but such from mercy I exclude.
 But yet all is not done; man disobeying,
 Disloyal, breaks his fealty, and sins
 Against the high supremacy of heaven,
 Affecting Godhead, and, so losing all,
 To expiate his treason hath nought left,
 But to destruction sacred and devote,
 He, with his whole posterity, must die;
 Die he or justice must; unless for him
 Some other able, and as willing, pay
 The rigid satisfaction, death for death.
 Say, heavenly powers, where shall we find such
 love?

Which of ye will be mortal, to redeem
 Man's mortal crime, and just the unjust to save?
 Dwells in all heaven charity so dear?

He ask'd, but all the heavenly quire stood mute
 And silence was in heaven: on man's behalf
 Patron or intercessor none appear'd,
 Much less that durst upon his own head draw
 The deadly forfeiture, and ransom set.
 And now without redemption all mankind
 Must have been lost, adjudged to death and hell
 By doom severe, had not the Son of God,
 In whom the fulness dwells of love divine,
 His dearest mediation thus renew'd.

Father, thy word is pass'd, man shall find grace;
 And shall grace not find means, that finds her way,
 The speediest of thy winged messengers,
 To visit all thy creatures, and to all
 Comes unprevented, unimplored, unsought?
 Happy for man, so coming; he her aid
 Can never seek, once dead in sins, and lost;
 Atonement for himself, or offering meet,
 Indebted and undone, hath none to bring.
 Behold me then: me for him, life for life
 I offer; on me let thine anger fall;
 Account me man; I for his sake will leave
 Thy bosom, and this glory next to thee
 Freely put off, and for him lastly die
 Well pleased; on me let death wreak all his rage;
 Under his gloomy power I shall not long
 Lie vanquish'd; thou hast given me to possess
 Life in myself for ever; by thee I live,
 Though now to death I yield, and am his due
 All that of me can die; yet, that debt paid,
 Thou wilt not leave me in the loathsome grave
 His prey, nor suffer my unspotted soul
 For ever with corruption there to dwell;

But I shall rise victorious, and subdue
 My vanquisher, spoil'd of his vaunted spoil:
 Death his death's wound shall then receive, and stoop

Inglorious, of his mortal sting disarm'd.
 I through the ample air in triumph high
 Shall lead hell captive, maugre hell, and show
 The powers of darkness bound. Thou, at the sight

Pleased, out of heaven shalt look down and smile;
 While, by thee raised, I ruin all my foes,
 Death last, and with his carcass glut the grave;
 Then, with the multitude of my redeem'd,
 Shall enter heaven, long absent, and return,
 Father, to see thy face, wherein no cloud
 Of anger shall remain, but peace assured
 And reconciliation; wrath shall be no more
 Thenceforth, but in thy presence joy entire.

His words here ended, but his meek aspect
 Silent yet spake, and breathed immortal love
 To mortal men, above which only shone
 Filial obedience: as a sacrifice
 Glad to be offer'd, he attends the will
 Of his great Father. Admiration seized
 All heaven, what this might mean, and whither tend,

Wondering; but soon the Almighty thus replied.

O thou in heaven and earth the only peace
 Found out for mankind under wrath! O thou
 My sole complacence! well thou know'st how dear
 To me are all my works, nor man the least,
 Though last created; that for him I spare
 Thee from my bosom and right hand, to save,
 By losing thee awhile, the whole race lost.
 Thou, therefore, whom thou only canst redeem,
 Their nature also to thy nature join;
 And be thyself Man among men on earth,
 Made flesh, when time shall be, of virgin seed,
 By wondrous birth: be thou in Adam's room
 The head of all mankind, though Adam's son.
 As in him perish all men, so in thee,
 As from a second root, shall be restored
 As many as are restored, without thee none.
 His crime makes all his sons; thy merit,
 Imputed, shall acquit them who renounce
 Their own both righteous and unrighteous deeds,
 And live in thee transplanted, and from thee
 Receive new life. So man, as is most just,
 Shall satisfy for man, be judged and die,
 And dying rise, and rising with him raise
 His brethren, ransom'd with his own dear life.
 So heavenly love shall outdo hellish hate,
 Giving to death, and dying to redeem,
 So dearly to redeem what hellish hate
 So easily destroy'd, and still destroys
 In those who, when they may, accept not grace.
 Nor shalt thou, by descending to assume
 Man's nature, lessen or degrade thine own.
 Because thou hast, though throned in highest bliss

Equal to God, and equally enjoying
 Godlike fruition, quitted all, to save
 A world from utter loss, and hast been found
 By merit more than birthright Son of God,

Found worthiest to be so by being good,
 Far more than great or high ; because in thee
 Love hath abounded more than glory abounds ;
 Therefore thy humiliation shall exalt
 With thee thy manhood also to this throne ;
 Here shalt thou sit incarnate, here shalt reign
 Both God and Man, Son both of God and man,
 Anointed universal King ; all power
 I give thee ; reign for ever, and assume Thy merits ; under thee, as head supreme,
 Thrones, principdoms, powers, dominions, I reduce :

All knees to thee shall bow, of them that hide
 In heaven, or earth, or under earth in hell.
 When thou, attended gloriously from heaven,
 Shalt in the sky appear, and from thee send
 The summoning arch-angels to proclaim
 Thy dread tribunal ; forthwith from all winds,
 The living, and forthwith the cited dead
 Of all past ages, to the general doom
 Shall hasten ; such a peal shall rouse their sleep.
 Then, all thy saints assembled, thou shalt judge
 Bad men and angels ; they, arraign'd, shall sink
 Beneath thy sentence ; hell, her numbers full.
 Thenceforth shall be for ever shut. Meanwhile
 The world shall burn, and from her ashes spring
 New heaven and earth, wherein the just shall dwell,

And, after all their tribulations long,
 See golden days, fruitful of golden deeds,
 With joy and love triumphing, and fair truth.
 Then thou thy regal sceptre shalt lay by,
 For regal sceptre then no more shall need,
 God shall be all in all. But, all ye gods,
 Adore him, who to compass all this dies ;
 Adore the Son, and honour him as me.

No sooner had the Almighty ceased, but all
 The multitude of angels, with a shout
 Loud as from numbers without number, sweet
 As from blest voices, uttering joy, heaven rung
 With jubilee, and loud hosannas fill'd
 The eternal regions : lowly reverent Towards either throne they bow, and to the ground

With solemn adoration they cast
 Their crowns, inwove with amarant and gold ;
 Immortal amarant, a flower which once
 In Paradise, fast by the tree of life,
 Began to bloom ; but soon for man's offence
 To heaven removed, where first it grew, there grows,

And flowers aloft shading the fount of life,
 And where the river of bliss through midst of
 heaven

Rolls o'er Elysian flowers her amber stream ;
 With these that never fade the spirits elect Bind their resplendent locks, inwreathed with beams ;

Now in loose garlands thick thrown off, the bright
 Pavement, that like a sea of jasper shone,
 Impurpled with celestial roses smil'd.

Then, crown'd again, their golden harp- they took Harps ever tun'd, that glittering by their side
 Like quivers hung, and with preamble sweet

Of charming symphony they introduce
 Their sacred song, and waken raptures high ;
 No voice exempt, no voice but well could join
 Melodious part, such concord is in heaven.

Thee, Father, first they sung, omnipotent,
 Immutable, immortal, infinite,
 Eternal King ; the Author of all being,
 Fountain of light, thyself invisible
 Amidst the glorious brightness where thou sit'st
 Throned inaccessible, but when thou shadest
 The full blaze of thy beams, and through a cloud,
 Drawn round about thee like a radiant shrine,
 Dark with excessive bright thy skirts appear ;
 Yet dazzle heaven, that brightest seraphim
 Approach not, but with both wings veil their eyes.
 Thee next they sung of all creation first,
 Begotten Son, divine similitude,
 In whose conspicuous countenance, without cloud
 Made visible, the almighty Father shines,
 Whom else no creature can behold ; on thee
 Impress'd the effulgence of his glory abides,
 Transfused on thee his ample Spirit rests.

He heaven of heavens, and all the powers therein
 By thee created ; and by thee threw down
 The aspiring dominations : thou that day
 Thy Father's dreadful thunder didst not spare,
 Nor stop thy flaming chariot-wheels, that shook Heaven's everlasting frame, while o'er the necks
 Thou drov'st of warring angel-disarray'd.
 Back from pursuit thy powers with loud acclaim
 Thee only extoll'd, Son of thy Father's might,
 To execute fierce vengeance on his foes,
 Not so on man : him through their malice fallen,
 Father of mercy and grace, thou didst not doom
 So strictly, but much more to pity incline :
 No sooner did thy dear and only Son
 Perceive thee purposed not to doom frail man
 So strictly, but much more to pity inclined,
 He to appease thy wrath, and end the strife
 Of mercy and justice in thy face discern'd,
 Regardless of the bliss wherein he sat
 Second to thee, offer'd himself to die
 For man's offence. O unexampled love,
 Love no where to be found less than divine !
 Hail, Son of God ! Saviour of men ! thy name
 Shall be the copious matter of my song
 Henceforth, and never shall my heart thy praise
 Forget, nor from thy Father's praise disjoin.

Thus they in heaven, above the starry sphere,
 Their happy hours in joy and hymning spent.
 Meanwhile upon the firm opacous globe
 Of this round world, whose first convex divides
 The luminous inferior orbs, enclos'd
 From chaos, and the inroad of darkness old,
 Satan alighted walks : a globe far off
 It seem'd, now seems a boundless continent
 Dark, waste, and wild, under the frown of night
 Starless exposed, and ever-threatening storms
 Of chaos blustering round, inclement sky ;
 Save on that side which from the wall of heaven,
 Though distant far, some small reflection gains
 Of glimmering air less vex'd with tempest loud :
 Here walk'd the fiend at large in spacious field.
 As when a vulture on Imaus bred,

Whose snowy ridge the roving Tartar bounds,
Dislodging from a region scarce of prey
To gorge the flesh of lambs or yearling kids,
On hills where flocks are fed, flies toward the
springs

Of Ganges or Hydaspes, Indian streams ;
But in his way lights on the barren plains
Of Sericana, where Chineses drive
With sails and wind their cany waggons light :
So, on this windy sea of land, the fiend
Walk'd up and down alone, bent on his prey ;
Alone, for other creature in this place,
Living or lifeless, to be found was none ;
None yet, but store hereafter from the earth
Up hither like æreal vapours flew
Of all things transitory and vain, when sin
With vanity had fill'd the works of men :
Both all things vain, and all who in vain things
Built their fond hopes of glory or lasting fame,
Or happiness in this or the other life ;
All who have their reward on earth, the fruits
Of painful superstition and blind zeal,
Nought seeking but the praise of men, here find
Fit retribution, empty as their deeds ;
All the unaccomplish'd works of nature's hand,
Abortive, monstrous, or unkindly mix'd,
Disso'lv'd on earth, fleet hither, and in vain,
Till final dissolution, wander here ;
Not in the neighbouring moon as some have dream'd ;

Those argent fields more likely habitants,
Translated saints, or middle spirits hold
Betwixt the angelical and human kind.
Hither of ill-join'd sons and daught'rs born
First from the ancient world those giants came
With many a vain exploit, though then renown'd :
The builders next of Babel on the plain
Of Sennaar, and still with vain design,
New Babels, had they wherewithal, would build :
Others came single ; he, who, to be deem'd
A god, leap'd fondly into Ætna flames,
Empedocles ; and he, who, to enjoy
Plato's Elysium, leap'd into the sea,
Cleombrotus ; and many more too long,
Embryos, and idiots, eremites, and friars
White, black, and gray, with all their trumpery.
Here pilgrims roam, that stray'd so far to seek
In Golgotha him dead, who lives in heaven ;
And they, who to be sure of Paradise,
Dying, put on the weeds of Dominic,
Or in Franciscan think to pass disguis'd ;
They pass the planets seven, and pass the fix'd,
And that crystalline sphere whose balance weighs
The trepidation talk'd, and that first moved ;
And now saint Peter at heaven's wicket seems
To wait them with his keys, and now at foot
Of heaven's ascent they lift their feet, when, lo !
A violent cross-wind from either coast
Blows them transverse, tenthousand leagues awry
Into the devious air : then might ye see
Cows, hoods, and habits, with their wearers, tost
And flutter'd into rags ; then reliques, beads,
Indulgences, dispenses, pardons, bulls,
The sport of winds : all these, up whirl'd aloft,

Fly o'er the backside of the world far off
Into a Limbo large and broad, since call'd
The Paradise of fools, to few unknown
Long after, now unpeopled, and untrod.
All this dark globe the fiend found as he pass'd,
And long he wander'd, till at last a gleam
Of dawning light turn'd thitherward in haste
His travell'd steps : far distant he descries
Ascending by degrees magnificent
Up to the wall of heaven a structure high ;
At top whereof, but far more rich, appear'd
The work as of a kingly palace-gate,
With frontispiece of diamond and gold
Embellish'd ; thick with sparkling orient gems
The portal shone, inimitable on earth
By model, or by shading pencil drawn.
The stairs were such as whereon Jacob saw
Angels ascending and descending, bands
Of guardians bright, when he from Esau fled
To Padan-Aram, in the field of Luz
Dreaming by night under the open sky,
And waking cried, This is the gate of heaven.
Each stair mysteriously was meant, nor stood
There always, but drawn up to heaven sometimes Viewless ; and underneath a bright sea flow'd
Of jasper, or of liquid pearl, whereon
Who after came from earth, sailing arrived
Wafted by angels, or flew o'er the lake
Wrapp'd in a chariot drawn by fiery steeds.
The stairs were then let down, whether to dare
The fiend by easy ascent, or aggravate
His sad exclusion from the doors of bliss :
Direct against which open'd from beneath,
Just o'er the blissful seat of Paradise,
A passage down to the earth, a passage wide,
Wider by far than that of aftertimes
Over mount Sion, and, though that were large,
Over the Promised Land to God so dear ;
By which, to visit oft those happy tribes,
On high behests his angels to and fro
Pass'd frequent, and his eye with choice regard
From Paneas, the fount of Jordan's flood,
To Beërsaba, where the Holy Land
Borders on Egypt and the Arabian shore ;
So wide the opening seem'd, where bounds were set

To darkness, such as bound the ocean wave.
Satan from hence, now on the lower stair,
That scal'd by steps of gold to heaven gate,
Looks down with wonder at the sudden view
Of all this world at once. As when a scout,
Through dark and desert ways with peril gone
All night, at last by break of cheerful dawn
Obtains the brow of some high-climbing hill,
Which to his eyes discover unaware
The goodly prospect of some foreign land
First seen, or some renown'd metropolis
With glistening spires and pinnacles adorn'd,
Which now the rising sun gilds with his beams ;
Such wonder seized, though after heaven seen,
The Spirit malign, but much more envy seized,
At sight of all this world beheld so fair.
Round he surveys (and well might, where he stood

So high above the circling canopy
 Of night's extended shade) from eastern point
 Of Libra, to the fleecy star that bears
Andromeda far off Atlantic seas
 Beyond the horizon; then from pole to pole
 He views in breadth, and without longer pause
 Down right into the world's first region throws
 His flight precipitant, and winds with ease
 Through the pure marble air his oblique way
 Amongst innumerable stars, that shone
 Stars distant, but nigh hand seem'd other worlds;
 Or other worlds they seem'd, or happy isles,
 Like those Hesperian gardens famed of old,
 Fortunate fields, and groves, and flowery vales,
 Thrice happy isles; but who dwelt happy there
 He staid not to inquire. Above them all
 The golden sun, in splendour likest heaven,
 Allured his eye: thither his course he bends
 Through the calm firmament, (but up or down,
 By centre, or eccentric, hard to tell,
 Or longitude,) where the great luminary
 Aloof the vulgar constellations thick,
 That from his lordly eye keep distance due,
 Dispenses light from far; they as they move
 Their starry dance in numbers that compute Days, months, and years, towards his all-cheering lamp

Turn swift their various motions, or are turn'd
 By his magnetic beam, that gently warms
 The universe, and to each inward part
 With gentle penetration, though unseen,
 Shoots invisible virtue even to the deep;
 So wondrously was set his station bright.
 There lands the fiend, a spot like which perhaps Astronomer in the sun's lucent orb
 Through his glazed optic tube yet never saw.
 The place he found beyond expression bright,
 Compared with aught on earth, metal or stone;
 Not all parts like, but all alike inform'd
 With radiant light, as glowing iron with fire;
 If metal, part seem'd gold, part silver clear;
 If stone, carbuncle most or chrysolite,
 Ruby or topaz, to the twelve that shone
 In Aaron's breastplate, and a stone besides
 Imagined rather oft than elsewhere seen,
 That stone, or like to that which here below
 Philosophers in vain so long have sought,
 In vain, though by their powerful art they bind
 Volatile Hermes, and call up unbound
 In various shapes old Proteus from the sea,
 Drain'd through a limbeck to his native form.
 What wonder then if fields and regions here
 Breathe forth elixir pure, and rivers run
 Potable gold, when with one virtuous touch
 The arch-chemic sun, so far from us remote,
 Produces, with terrestrial humour mix'd,
 Here in the dark so many precious things
 Of colour glorious, and effect so rare?
 Here matter new to gaze the devil met
 Undazzled; far and wide his eye commands;
 For sight no obstacle found here, nor shade,
 But all sunshine, as when his beams at noon
 Culminate from the equator, as they now
 Shot upward still direct, whence no way round

Shadow from body opaque can fall, and the air,
 No where so clear, sharpen'd his visual ray
 To objects distant far, whereby he soon
 Saw within ken a glorious angel stand,
 The same whom John saw also in the sun:
 His back was turn'd, but not his brightness hid;

Of beaming sunny rays a golden tiar
 Circled his head, nor less his locks behind
 Illustrious on his shoulders sledge with wings
 Lay waving round: on some great charge employ'd

He seem'd, or fix'd in cogitation deep.
 Glad was the spirit impure, as now in hope
 To find who might direct his wandering flight
 To Paradise, the happy seat of man,
 His journey's end, and our beginning woe.
 But first he casts to change his proper shape,
 Which else might work him danger or delay:
 And now a stripling cherub he appears,
 Not of the prime, yet such as in his face
 Youth smiled celestial, and to every limb
 Suitable grace diffused, so well he feign'd:
 Under a coronet his flowing hair
 In curls on either cheek play'd; wings he wore
 Of many a colour'd plume, sprinkled with gold;
 His habit fit for speed succinct, and held
 Before his decent steps a silver wand.
 He drew not nigh unheard; the angel bright,
 Ere he drew nigh, his radiant visage turn'd,
 Admonish'd by his ear, and strait was known
 The arch-angel Uriel, one of the seven
 Who in God's presence, nearest to his throne,
 Stand ready at command, and are his eyes
 That run through all the heavens, or down to the earth

Bear his swift errands, over moist and dry,
 O'er sea and land: him Satan thus accosts.
 Uriel, for thou of those seven spirits that stand

In sight of God's high throne, gloriously bright,
 The first art wont his great authentic will Interpreter through highest heaven to bring,
 Where all his sons thy embassy attend;
 And here art likeliest by supreme decree
 Like honour to obtain, and as his eye,
 To visit oft this new creation round;
 Unspeakable desire to see, and know
 All these his wondrous works, but chiefly man,
 His chief delight and favour, him for whom
 All these his works so wondrous he ordain'd,
 Hath brought me from the quires of Cherubim
 Alone thus wandering. Brightest Seraph! tell,
 In which of all these shining orbs hath man
 His fixed seat, or fixed seat hath none,
 But all these shining orbs his choice to dwell;
 That I may find him, and with secret gaze
 Or open admiration him behold,
 On whom the great Creator hath bestow'd
 Worlds, and on whom hath all these graces
 pour'd;

That both in him and all things, as is meet,
 The universal Maker we may praise;
 Who justly hath driven out his rebel foes

To deepest hell, and, to repair that loss,
Created this new happy race of men
To serve him better: wise are all his ways.

So spake the false dissembler unperceived;
For neither man nor angel can discern
Hypocrisy, the only evil that walks
Invisible, except to God alone,
By his permissive will, through heaven and earth:
And oft, though wisdom wake, suspicion sleeps
At wisdom's gate, and to simplicity
Resigns her charge, while goodness thinks no ill
Where no ill seems; which now for once beguiled
Uriel, though regent of the sun, and held
The sharpest-sighted spirit of all in heaven;
Who to the fraudulent impostor foul,
In his uprightness, answer thus return'd.

Fair angel, thy desire, which tends to know
The works of God, thereby to glorify
The great Work-master, leads to no excess
That reaches blame, but rather merits praise
The more it seems excess, that led thee hither
From thy empyreal mansion thus alone,
To witness with thine eyes what some perhaps,
Contented with report, hear only in heaven:
For wonderful indeed are all his works,
Pleasant to know, and worthiest to be all
Had in remembrance always with delight;
But what created mind can comprehend
Their number, or the wisdom infinite
That brought them forth, but hid their causes
deep?

I saw when at his word the formless mass,
This world's material mould, came to a heap:
Confusion heard his voice, and wild uproar
Stood ruled, stood vast infinitude confined;
Till at his second bidding darkness fled,
Light shone, and order from disorder sprung:
Swift to their several quarters hasted then
The cumbrous elements, earth, flood, air, fire;
And this ethereal quintessence of heaven
Flew upward, spirited with various forms,
That roll'd orbicular, and turn'd to stars
Numberless, as thou seest, and how they move;
Each had his place appointed, each his course;
The rest in circuit walls this universe.
Look downward on that globe, whose hither side
With light from hence, though but reflected,
shines;

That place is earth, the seat of man; that light
His day, which else, as the other hemisphere,
Night would invade; but there the neighbouring
moon

(So call that opposite fair star) her aid
Timely interposes, and her monthly round
Still ending, still renewing, through mid heaven,
With borrow'd light her countenance triform
Hence fills and empties to enlighten the earth,
And in her pale dominion checks the night.
That spot, to which I point, is Paradise,
Adam's abode; those lofty shades his bower.

Thy way thou canst not miss, me mine requires.
Thus said, he turn'd; and Satan bowing low,
As to superior spirits is wont in heaven,
Where honour due and reverence none neglects,

Took leave, and toward the coast of earth
beneath,
Down from the ecliptic, sped with hoped success,
Throws his steep flight in many an airy wheel;
Nor staid, till on Niphates' top he lights.

BOOK IV.

THE ARGUMENT.

Satan, now in prospect of Eden, and nigh the place where he must now attempt the bold enterprise which he undertook alone against God and Man, falls into many doubts with himself, and many passions, fear, envy, and despair; but at length confirms himself in evil; journeys on to Paradise, whose outward prospect and situation is described; overleaps the bounds; sits in the shape of a cormorant on the tree of life, as highest in the garden, to look about him. The garden described; Satan's first sight of Adam and Eve; his wonder at their excellent form and happy state, but with resolution to work their fall; overhears their discourse; thence gathers that the tree of knowledge was forbidden them to eat of, under penalty of death; and thereon intends to found his temptation by seducing them to transgress: then leaves them awhile to know further of their state by some other means. Meanwhile Uriel descending on a sunbeam warns Gabriel, who had in charge the gate of Paradise that some evil spirit had escaped the deep, and passed at noon by his sphere in the shape of a good angel down to Paradise, discovered after by his furious gestures in the mount. Gabriel promises to find him ere morning. Night coming on, Adam and Eve discourse of going to their rest: their bower described; their evening worship. Gabriel drawing forth his hands of night-watch to walk the round of Paradise, appoints two strong angels to Adam's bower, lest the evil spirit should be there doing some harm to Adam or Eve sleeping; there they find him at the ear of Eve tempting her in a dream, and bring him, though unwilling, to Gabriel: by whom questioned, he scornfully answers; prepares resistance; but, hindered by a sign from heaven, flies out of Paradise.

O, for that warning voice, which he, who saw
The Apocalypse, heard cry in heaven aloud,
Then when the dragon, put to second rout,
Came furious down to be revenged on men,
Woe to the inhabitants on earth! that now,
While time was, our first parents had been warn'd

The coming of their secret foe, and scaped,
Haply, so scaped his mortal snare: for now
Satan, now first inflamed with rage, came down,
The tempter ere the accuser of mankind,
To wreak on innocent frail man his loss
Of that first battle, and his flight to hell:
Yet, not rejoicing in his speed, though bold
Far off and fearless, nor with cause to boast,
Begins his dire attempt; which nigh the birth
Now rolling boils in his tumultuous breast,
And like a devilish engine back recoils
Upon himself; horror and doubt distract
His troubled thoughts, and from the bottom stir
The hell within him; for within him hell
He brings, and round about him, nor from hell
One step, no more than from himself, can fly
By change of place: now conscience wakes despair,

That slumber'd; wakes the bitter memory
Of what he was, what is, and what must be Worse; of worse deeds worse sufferings must ensue.

Sometimes towards Eden, which now in his view
Lay pleasant, his grieved look he fixes sad;
Sometimes towards heaven, and the full-blazing
sun,

Which now sat high in his meridian tower:
Then, much revolving, thus in sighs began.

O thou, that, with surpassing glory crown'd,
 Look'st from thy sole dominion like the god
 Of this new world ; at whose sight all the stars
 Hide their diminish'd heads ; to thee I call,
 But with no friendly voice, and add thy name,
 O sun ! to tell thee how I hate thy beams,
 That bring to my remembrance from what state
 I fell, how glorious once above thy sphere ;
 Till pride and worse ambition threw me down,
 Warring in heaven against heaven's matchless
 King :

Ah, wherefore ! he deserved no such return
 From me, whom he created what I was
 In that bright eminence, and with his good
 Upbraided none ; nor was his service hard.
 What could be less than to afford him praise,
 The easiest recompense, and pay him thanks,
 How due ! yet all his good proved ill in me,
 And wrought but malice ; lifted up so high
 I 'sdeign'd subjection, and thought one step higher

Would set me highest, and in a moment quit
 The debt immense of endless gratitude,
 So burdensome still paying, still to owe,
 Forgetful what from him I still received,
 And understood not that a grateful mind
 By owing owes not, but still pays, at once
 Indebted and discharged ; what burden then ?
 O, had his powerful destiny ordain'd
 Me some inferior angel, I had stood
 Then happy ; no unbounded hope had raised
 Ambition. Yet why not ? some other power
 As great might have aspired, and me, though mean,

Drawn to his part ; but other powers as great Fell not, but stand unshaken, from within
 Or from without, to all temptations arm'd.
 Hadst thou the same free will and power to stand ?

Thou hadst. Whom hast thou then or what to accuse,

But heaven's free love dealt equally to all ?
 Be then his love accursed, since love or hate,
 To me alike, it deals eternal woe.
 Nay, cursed be thou ; since against thy will
 Chose freely what it now so justly rues.
 Me miserable ! which way shall I fly
 Infinite wrath, and infinite despair ?
 Which way I fly is hell ; myself am hell ;
 And, in the lowest deep, a lower deep
 Still threatening to devour me opens wide,
 To which the hell I suffer seems a heaven.
 O, then, at last relent : is there no place
 Left for repentance, none for pardon left ?
 None left but by submission ; and that word
 Disdain forbids me, and my dread of shame
 Among the spirits beneath, whom I seduced
 With other promises and other vaunts
 Than to submit, boasting I could subdue
 The Omnipotent. Ay me, they little know
 How dearly I abide that boast so vain,
 Under what torments inwardly I groan,
 While they adore me on the throne of hell.
 With diadem and sceptre high advanced,

The lower still I fall, only supreme
 In misery : such joy ambition finds.
 But say I could repent, and could obtain,
 By act of grace, my former state ; how soon
 Would height recall high thoughts, how soon unsay

What feign'd submission swore ? ease would recant

Vows made in pain, as violent and void.
 For never can true reconciliation grow,
 Where wounds of deadly hate have pierced so
 deep :

Which would but lead me to a worse relapse
 And heavier fall : so should I purchase dear
 Short intermission bought with double smart.
 This knows my Punisher ; therefore as far
 From granting he, as I from begging, peace :
 All hope excluded thus, behold, instead
 Of us outcast, exiled, his new delight,
 Mankind created, and for him this world.
 So farewell hope ; and with hope farewell, fear :
 Farewell, remorse : all good to me is lost ;
 Evil, be thou my good ; by thee at least Divided empire with heaven's King I hold.
 By thee, and more than half perhaps will reign ;
 As man ere long, and this new world, shall know.

Thus while he spake, each passion dimn'd his face

Thrice changed with pale ire, envy, and despair ;
 Which marr'd his borrow'd visage, and betray'd
 Him counterfeit, if any eye beheld.
 For heavenly minds from such distempers foul
 Are ever clear. Whereof he soon aware,
 Each perturbation smooth'd with outward calm,
 Artificer of fraud ; and was the first
 That practised falsehood under saintly shew,
 Deep malice to conceal, couch'd with revenge :
 Yet not enough had practised to deceive
 Uriel once warn'd ; whose eye pursued him down
 The way he went, and on the Assyrian mount
 Saw him disfigured, more than could befall
 Spirit of happy sort : his gestures fierce
 He mark'd and mad demeanour, then alone,
 As he supposed, all unobserved, unseen.
 So on he fares, and to the border comes
 Of Eden, where delicious Paradise,
 Now nearer, crowns with her inclosure green,
 As with a rural mound, the champion head
 Of a steep wilderness, whose hairy sides
 With thicket overgrown, grotesque and wild,
 Access denied ; and over head up grew
 Insuperable height of loftiest shade,
 Cedar, and pine, and fir, and branching palm,
 A sylvan scene ; and as the ranks ascend
 Shade above shade, a woody theatre
 Of stateliest view. Yet higher than their tops
 The verdurous wall of Paradise up sprung :
 Which to our general sire gave prospect large
 Into his nether empire neighbouring round.
 And higher than that wall a circling row
 Of goodliest trees, loaden with fairest fruit,
 Blossoms and fruits at once of golden hue,
 Appear'd, with gay enamel'd colours mix'd :

On which the sun more glad impress'd his beams
Than in fair evening cloud, or humid bow,
When God hath shower'd the earth; so lovely
seem'd

That landskip: and of pure now purer air
Meets his approach, and to the heart inspires
Vernal delight and joy, able to drive
All sadness but despair: now gentle gales,
Fanning their odoriferous wings, dispense
Native perfumes, and whisper whence they stole
Those balmy spoils. As when to them who sail
Beyond the Cape of Hope, and now are past
Mozambic, off at sea north-east winds blow
Sabeian odours from the spicy shore
Of Araby the bless'd; with such delay
Well pleased they slack their course, and many a league,
Cheer'd with the grateful smell, old Ocean smiles:

So entertain'd those odorous sweets the fiend
Who came their bane, though with them better pleased

Than Asmodeus with the fishy fume
That drove him, though enamour'd, from the spouse

Of Tobit's son, and with a vengeance sent
From Media post to Egypt, there fast bound.

Now to the ascent of that steep savage hill
Satan had journey'd on, pensive and slow;
But further way found none, so thick entwined,
As one continued brake, the undergrowth
Of shrubs and tangling bushes had perplex'd
All path of man or beast that pass'd that way:
On the right there only was, and that look'd east
On the other side: which, when the arch-felon saw,

Due entrance he disdain'd; and, in contempt,
At one slight bound high overleap'd all bound
Of hill or highest wall, and sheer within Lights on his feet. As when a prowling wolf, Whom hunger drives to seek new haunt for prey,

Watching where shepherds pen their flocks at eve

In huddled cotes amid the field secure,
Leaps o'er the fence with ease into the fold:
Or as a thief, bent to unhoard the cash
Of some rich burgher, whose substantial doors,
Cross-barr'd and bolted fast, fear no assault,
In at the window climbs, or o'er the tiles:
So clomb this first grand thief into God's fold;
So since into his church lewd hirelings climb.
Thence up he flew, and on the tree of life,
The middle tree and highest there that grew,
Sat like a cormorant; yet not true life
Thereby regain'd, but sat devising death
To them who lived; nor on the virtue thought
Of that life-giving plant, but only used
For prospect, what, well used, had been the pledge

Of immortality. So little knows
Any, but God alone, to value right
The good before him, but perverts best things
To worst abuse, or to their meanest use.

Beneath him with new wonder now he views,
To all delight of human sense exposed,
In narrow room, nature's whole wealth, yea
more,

A heaven on earth: for blissful Paradise
Of God the garden was, by him in the east
Of Eden planted; Eden stretch'd her line
From Auran eastward to the royal towers
Of great Seleucia, built by Grecian kings,
Or where the sons of Eden long before
Dwelt in Telassar: in this pleasant soil
His far more pleasant garden God ordain'd;
Out of the fertile ground he caused to grow
All trees of noblest kind, for sight, smell, taste;
And all amid them stood the tree of life,
High eminent, blooming ambrosial fruit
Of vegetable gold: and next to life,
Our death, the tree of knowledge grew fast by,
Knowledge of good, bought dear by knowing ill.

Southward through Eden went a river large,
Nor changed his course, but through the shaggy hill

Pass'd underneath ingulf'd; for God had thrown
That mountain as his garden-mould high raised
Upon the rapid current, which through veins
Of porous earth with kindly thirst updrawn,
Rose a fresh fountain, and with many a rill
Water'd the garden; thence united fell
Down the steep glade, and met the nether flood,
Which from his darksome passage now appears,
And now divided into four main streams,
Runs diverse, wandering many a famous realm
And country, whereof here needs no account;
But rather to tell how, if art could tell,
How from that saphir fount the crisped brooks,
Rolling on orient pearl and sands of gold,
With mazy error under pendant shades,
Ran nectar, visiting each plant, and fed
Flowers worthy of Paradise, which not nice art
In beds and curious knots, but nature boon
Pour'd forth profuse on hill, and dale, and plain,
Both where the morning sun first warmly smote
The open field, and where the unpierc'd shade Imbrown'd the noon-tide bowers. Thus was this place

A happy rural seat of various view;
Groves whose rich trees wept odorous gums and balm:

Others, whose fruit burnished with golden rind
Hung amiable, Hesperian fables true,
If true, here only, and of delicious taste.
Betwixt them lawns, or level downs, and flocks
Grazing the tender herb, were interposed:
Or palmy hillock, or the flowery lap
Of some irriguous valley spread her store,
Flowers of all hue, and without thorn the rose:
Another side, umbrageous grots, and caves
Of cool recess, o'er which the mantling vine
Lays forth her purple grape, and gently creeps
Luxuriant: meanwhile murmuring waters fall
Down the slope hills, dispersed, or in a lake,
That to the fringed bank with myrtle crown'd
Her crystal mirror holds, unite their streams.

The birds their quire apply: airs, vernal airs,
Breathing the smell of field and grove, attune
The trembling leaves, while universal Pan,
Knit with the Graces, and the Hours, in dance
Led on the eternal spring. Not that fair field
Of Enna, where Proserpine gathering flowers,
Herself a fairer flower, by gloomy Dis
Was gather'd; which cost Ceres all that pain
To seek her through the world: nor that sweet grove

Of Daphne by Orontes, and the inspired
Castalian spring, might with this Paradise
Of Eden strive: nor that Nyseian isle
Girt with the river Triton, where old Cham,
Whom Gentiles Ammon call, and Libyan Jove,
Hid Amalthea, and her florid son
Young Bacchus, from his stepdame Rhea's eye:
Nor where Abassin kings their issue guard,
Mount Amara, though this by some supposed
True Paradise under the Ethiop line
By Nilus' head, enclosed with shining rock.
A whole day's journey high; but wide remote
From this Assyrian garden, where the fiend
Saw, undelighted, all delight, all kind
Of living creatures, new to sight, and strange.

Two of far nobler shape, erect and tall,
Godlike erect, with native honour clad
In naked majesty, seem'd lords of all,
And worthy seem'd; for in their looks divine
The image of their glorious Maker shone,
Truth, wisdom, sanctitude severe and pure,
(Severe, but in true filial freedom placed,) Whence true authority in men; and though both
Not equal, as their sex not equal seem'd:
For contemplation he, and valour form'd;
For softness she, and sweet attractive grace:
He, for God only, she for God in him.
His fair large front, and eye sublime, declar'd
Absolute rule; and hyacinthin locks
Round from his parted forelock manly hung
Clustering, but not beneath his shoulders broad:
She as a veil, down to the slender waist
Her unadorn'd golden tresses wore
Dishevell'd, but in wanton ringlets waved,
As the vine curls her tendrils, which implied
Subjection, but required with gentle sway,
And by her yielded, by him best receiv'd:
Yielded with coy submission, modest pride,
And sweet, reluctant, amorous delay.
Nor those mysterious parts were then conceal'd,
Then was not guilty shame, dishonest shame
Of nature's works, honour dishonourable,
Sin-bred, how have ye troubled all mankind
With shews instead, where shews of seeming pure,

And banish'd from man's life his happiest life,
Simplicity, and spotless innocence!
So pass'd they naked on, nor shunn'd the sight
Of God or angel, for they thought no ill.
So hand in hand they pass'd, the loveliest pair
That ever since in love's embraces met;
Adam the goodliest man of men since born
His sons; the fairest of her daughters Eve.
Under a tuft of shade, that on a green

Stood whispering soft, by a fresh fountain side
They sat them down; and after no more toil
Of their sweet gardening labour than sufficed
To recommend cool zephyr, and made ease
More easy, wholesome thirst and appetite
More grateful, to their supper fruits they fell,
Nectarine fruits, which the compliant boughs
Yielded them, side-long as they sat reclined
On the soft downy bank damask'd with flowers:
The savoury pulp they chew, and in the rind,
Still as they thirsted, scoop the brimming stream;
Nor gentle purpose, nor endearing smiles
Wanted, nor youthful dalliance, as beseems
Fair couple, link'd in happy nuptial league,
Alone as they. About them frisking play'd
All beasts of the earth, since wild, and of all chase

In wood or wilderness, forest or den;
Sporting the lion ramp'd, and in his paw
Dandled the kid; bears, tigers, ounces, pards,
Gambol'd before them; the unwieldy elephant,
To make them mirth, used all his might, and wreath'd

His lithe proboscis; close the serpent sly
Insinuating, wove with Gordian twine
His braided train, and of his fatal guile
Gave proof unheeded; others on the grass
Couch'd, and now fill'd with pasture, gazing sat,
Or bedward ruminating; for the sun
Declined was hastening now with prone career
To the ocean isles, and in the ascending scale
Of Heaven the stars that usher evening rose:
When Satan, still in gaze, as first he stood,
Scarce thus at length fail'd speech recover'd sad.

O Hell! what do mine eyes with grief behold!
Into our room of bliss thus high advanc'd
Creatures of other mould; earth-born perhaps,
Not spirits; yet to heavenly spirits bright
Little inferior; whom my thoughts pursue
With wonder and could love, so lively shines
In them divine resemblance, and such grace
The hand that form'd them on their shape hath
pour'd.

Ah, gentle pair! ye little think how nigh
Your change approaches, when all these delights
Will vanish, and deliver ye to woe;
More woe, the more your taste is now of joy;
Happy, but for so happy ill secur'd
Long to continue; and this high seat your heav'n
Ill-fenced for heaven to keep out such a foe
As now is enter'd; yet no purposed foe
To you, whom I could pity thus forlorn,
Though I unpitied. League with you I seek,
And mutual amity, so strait, so close,
That I with you must dwell, or you with me
Henceforth: my dwelling haply may not please,
Like this fair Paradise, your sense; yet such Accept, your Maker's work; he gave it me,
Which I as freely give: hell shall unfold,
To entertain you two, her widest gates,
And send forth all her kings; there will be room
(Not like these narrow limits,) to receive
Your numerous offspring; if no better place,
Thank him who puts me loath to this revenge

On you, who wrong me not, for him who wrong'd.
And should I at your harmless innocence
Melt, as I do, yet public reason just,
Honour and empire with revenge enlarged,
By conquering this new world, compels me now
To do, what else, though damn'd, I should abhor.

So spake the fiend, and with necessity,
(The tyrant's plea) excused his devilish deeds:
Then from his lofty stand on that high tree,
Down he alights among the sportful herd
Of those four footed kinds, himself now one,
Now other, as their shape served best his end
Nearer to view his prey, and unespied,
To mark what of their state he more might learn,
By word, or action mark'd : about them round,
A lion now he stalks with fiery glare :
Then as a tiger, who by chance hath spied,
In some purlieu two gentle fawns at play,
Strait couches close, then rising changes oft
His couchant watch, as one who chose his ground, Whence rushing, he might surest seize them
both,

Gripped in each paw ; when Adam, first of men,
To first of women, Eve, thus moving speech,
Turn'd him, all ear, to hear new utterance flow.

Sole partner, and sole part, of all these joys,
Dearer thyself than all ; needs must the Power
That made us, and for us this ample world,
Be infinitely good, and of his good
As liberal and free as infinite ;
That rais'd us from the dust, and placed us here
In all this happiness, who at his hand
Have nothing merited, nor can perform
Aught whereof he hath need : He who requires
From us no other service than to keep
This one, this easy charge, of all the trees
In Paradise, that bear delicious fruit
Of various, not to taste that only tree
Of knowledge, planted by the tree of life ;
So near grows death to life, whate'er death is,
Some dreadful thing no doubt ; for well thou know'st,

God hath pronounced it death to taste that tree,
The only sign of our obedience left
Among so many signs of power and rule
Conferr'd upon us, and dominion given
Over all other creatures that possess
Earth, air, and sea. Then let us not think hard
One easy prohibition, who enjoy
Free leave so large to all things else, and choice
Unlimited of manifold delights :
But let us ever praise him, and extol
His bounty, following our delightful task,
To prune these growing plants, and tend these flowers,
Which were it toilsome, yet with thee were
sweet.

To whom thus Eve replied. O thou for whom
And from whom I was form'd, flesh of thy flesh,
And without whom am to no end, my guide
And head, what thou hast said is just and right.
For we to him indeed all praises owe,
And daily thanks ; I chiefly, who enjoy
So far the happier lot, enjoying thee

Pre-eminent by so much odds, while thou
Like consort to thyself canst no where find.
That day I oft remember, when from sleep
I first awaked, and found myself reposed
Under a shade on flowers, much wondering where
And what I was, whence thither brought, and how.
Not distant far from thence a murmuring sound
Of waters issued from a cave, and spread
Into a liquid plain, then stood unmoved
Pure as the expanse of heaven, I thither went
With unexperienced thought, and laid me down
On the green bank, to look into the clear
Smooth lake, that to me seem'd another sky.
As I bent down to look, just opposite
A shape within the watery gleam appeared,
Bending to look on me : I started back,
It started back ; but pleased I soon return'd ;
Pleased it return'd as soon with answering looks
Of sympathy and love : there I had fix'd
Mine eyes till now, and pined with vain desire,
Had not a voice thus warn'd me : " What thou seest,

What there thou seest, fair creature, is thyself ;
With thee it came and goes : but follow me,
And I will bring thee where no shadow stays
Thy coming, and thy soft embraces, he
Whose image thou art ; him thou shalt enjoy
Inseparably thine, to him shalt bear
Multitudes like thyself, and thence be call'd
Mother of human race." What could I do,
But follow straight, invisibly thus led ?
Till I espied thee, fair indeed and tall,
Under a plantane ; yet methought less fair,
Less winning soft, less amiably mild,
Than that smooth watery image : back I turn'd ;
Thou following criest aloud, " Return, fair
Eve ;

Whom fliest thou ? whom thou fliest, of him thou
art,

His flesh, his bone ; to give thee being I lent
Out of my side to thee, nearest my heart,
Substantial life, to have thee by my side
Henceforth an individual solace dear ;
Part of my soul I seek thee, and thee claim
My other half." With that thy gentle hand
Seized mine : I yielded, and from that time see
How beauty is excell'd by manly grace
And wisdom, which alone is truly fair.

So spake our general mother, and with eyes
Of conjugal attraction unproved,
And meek surrender, half embracing lean'd
On our first father ; half her swelling breast
Naked met his under the flowing gold
Of her loose tresses hid : he in delight
Both of her beauty and submissive charms
Smiled with superior love, as Jupiter
On Juno smiles, when he impregns the clouds
That shed May flowers ; and press'd her matron
With kisses pure : aside the Devil turn'd [lip
For envy ; yet with jealous leer malign
Eyed them askance, and to himself thus plain'd.

Sight hateful, sight tormenting ! thus these two Imparadis'd in one another's arms,
The happier Eden, shall enjoy their fill

Of bliss on bliss ; while I to hell am thrust,
Where neither joy nor love, but fierce desire,
Among our other torments not the least,
Still unfulfill'd with pain of longing pines.
Yet let me not forget what I have gain'd
From their own mouths: all is not theirs it seems;
One fatal tree there stands, of Knowledge call'd, Forbidden them to taste. Knowledge forbidden ?

Suspicious, reasonless. Why should their Lord
Envy them that ? can it be sin to know ?
Can it be death ? and do they only stand
By ignorance ? is that their happy state,
The proof of their obedience and their faith ?
O fair foundation laid whereon to build
Their ruin ! Hence I will excite their minds
With more desire to know, and to reject
Envious commands, invented with design
To keep them low, whom knowledge might exalt
Equal with gods: aspiring to be such,
They taste and die: what likelier can ensue ?
But first with narrow search I must walk round
This garden, and no corner leave unspied ;
A chance, but chance may lead where I may meet
Some wandering spirit of heaven by fountain side,
Or in thick shade retired, from him to draw
What further would be learn'd. Live while ye may,

Yet happy pair ; enjoy, till I return,
Short pleasures, for long woes are to succeed.

So saying, his proud step he scornful turn'd,
But with sly circumspection, and began Through wood, through waste, o'er hill, o'er dale, his roam.

Meanwhile in utmost longitude, where heaven
With earth and ocean meets, the setting 'sun
Slowly descended, and with right aspect
Against the eastern gate of Paradise
Level'd his evening rays: it was a rock
Of alabaster, piled up to the clouds,
Conspicuous far, winding with one ascent Accessible from earth, one entrance high ;
The rest was craggy cliff, that overhung
Still as it rose, impossible to climb.
Betwixt these rocky pillars Gabriel sat,
Chief of the angelic guards, awaiting night ;
About him exercised heroic games
The unarmed youth of heaven, but nigh at hand
Celestial armoury, shields, helms, and spears,
Hung high with diamond flaming, and with gold.
Thither came Uriel, gliding through the even
On a sunbeam, swift as a shooting star
In autumn thwarts the night, when vapours fired
Impress the air, and shows the mariner
From what point of his compass to beware
Impetuous winds: he thus began in haste.

Gabriel, to thee thy course by lot hath given
Charge and strict watch, that to this happy place
No evil thing approach or enter in.
This day at height of noon came to my sphere
A Spirit, zealous, as he seem'd, to know
More of the Almighty's works, and chiefly man,
God's latest image: I described his way
Bent all on speed, and mark'd his aery gait ;

But in the mount that lies from Eden north,
Where he first lighted, soon discern'd his looks
Alien from heaven, with passions foul obscured:
Mine eye pursued him still, but under shade
Lost sight of him: one of the banish'd crew,
I fear, hath ventured from the deep, to raise
New troubles ; him thy care must be to find.

To whom the winged warrior thus return'd.
Uriel, no wonder if thy perfect sight,
Amid the sun's bright circle where thou sitt'st,
See far and wide: in at this gate none pass
The vigilance here placed, but such as come
Well known from heaven ; and since meridian hour

No creature thence: if spirit of other sort,
So minded, have o'erleap'd these earthly bounds
On purpose, hard thou know'st it to exclude Spiritual substance with corporeal bar.

But if within the circuit of these walks,
In whatsoever shape he lurk, of whom
Thou tell'st, by morrow dawning I shall know.

So promised he ; and Uriel to his charge
Return'd on that bright beam, whose point now raised

Bore him slope downward to the sun now fallen
Beneath the Azores ; whether the prime orb,
Incredible how swift, had thither roll'd

Diurnal, on this less volubil earth,
By shorter flight to the east, had left him there
Arraying with reflected purple and gold

The clouds that on his western throne attend.
Now came still evening on, and twilight gray
Had in her sober livery all things clad ;

Silence accompanied ; for beast and bird,
They to their grassy couch, these to their nests,
Were slunk, all but the wakeful nightingale ;

She all night long her amorous descant sung ;
Silence was pleased: now glow'd the firmament
With living sapphires: Hesperus, that led

The starry host, rode brightest, till the moon,
Rising in clouded majesty, at length

Apparent queen unveil'd her peerless light,
And o'er the dark her silver mantle threw.

When Adam thus to Eve. Fair consort, the hour

Of night, and all things now retired to rest,
Mind us of like repose ; since God hath set
Labour and rest, as day and night, to men

Successive ; and the timely dew of sleep,
Now falling with soft slumbrous weight, inclines
Our eyelids: other creatures all day long

Rove idle, unemploy'd, and less need rest ;
Man hath his daily work of body or mind
Appointed, which declares his dignity,

And the regard of heaven on all his ways ;
While other animals unactive range,
And of their doings God takes no account.

To-morrow, ere fresh morning streak the east
With first approach of light, we must be risen,
And at our pleasant labour, to reform

Yon flowery arbours, yonder alleys green,
Our walk at noon, with branches overgrown,
That mock our scant manuring, and require

More hands than ours to lop their wanton growth:

Those blossoms also, and those dropping gums,
That lie bestrown, unsightly and unsmooth,
Ask riddance, if we mean to tread with ease ;
Meanwhile, as nature wills, night bids us rest.

To whom thus Eve, with perfect beauty adorn'd.
My author and disposer, what thou bidd'st
Unargued I obey : so God ordains :
God is thy law, thou mine : to know no more
Is woman's happiest knowledge, and her praise.
With thee conversing, I forget all time ;
All seasons, and their change, all please alike.
Sweet is the breath of morn, her rising sweet,
With charm of earliest birds ; pleasant the sun,
When first on this delightful land he spreads
His orient beams, on herb, tree, fruit, and flower,
Glistening with dew ; fragrant the fertile earth
After soft showers ; and sweet the coming on
Of grateful evening mild ; then silent night,
With this her solemn bird, and this fair moon,
And these the gems of heaven, her starry train :
But neither breath of morn, when she ascends
With charm of earliest birds ; nor rising sun
On this delightful land ; nor herb, fruit, flower,
Glistening with dew ; nor fragrance after showers ;
Nor grateful evening mild ; nor silent night,
With this her solemn bird, nor walk by moon,
Or glittering star-light, without thee is sweet.
But wherefore all night long shine these ? for whom

'Tis his glorious sight, when sleep hath shut all eyes ?

To whom our general ancestor replied.
Daughter of God and man, accomplish'd Eve,
These have their course to finish round the earth,
By morn, evening, and from land to land
In order, though to nations yet unborn,
Ministering light prepared, they set and rise ;
Lest total darkness should by night regain
Her old possession, and extinguish life
In Nature and all things ; which these soft fires
Not only enlighten, but with kindly heat
Of various influence foment and warm,
Temper or nourish, or in part shed down
Their stellar virtue on all kinds that grow
On earth, made hereby apter to receive
Perfection from the sun's more potent ray.
These then, though unbeheld in deep of night,
Shine not in vain ; nor think, though men were none,

That heaven would want spectators, God want
praise :

Millions of spiritual creatures walk the earth
Unseen, both when we wake, and when we sleep :
All these with ceaseless praise his works behold
Both day and night : how often, from the steep
Of echoing hill or thicket, have we heard
Celestial voices to the midnight air,
Sole, or responsive each to other's note,
Singing their great Creator ? oft in bands
While they keep watch, or nightly rounding
walk,

With heavenly touch of instrumental sounds
In full harmonic number join'd, their songs
Divide the night, and lift our thoughts to heaven.

Thus talking, hand in hand alone they pass'd

On to their blissful bower : it was a place
Chosen by the sov'reign Planter, when he framed
All things to man's delightful use : the roof
Of thickest covert was inwoven shade
Laurel and myrtle, and what higher grew
Of firm and fragrant leaf ; on either side
Acanthus, and each odorous bushy shrub,
Fenced up the verdant wall ; each beauteous
flower,

Iris all hues, roses, and jessamine,
Rear'd high their flourish'd heads between, and wrought

Mosaic ; underfoot the violet,
Crocus, and hyacinth, with rich inlay
Broider'd the ground, more colour'd than with stone

Of costliest emblem : other creature here,
Bird, beast, insect, or worm, durst enter none,
Such was their awe of man. In shadier bower
More sacred and sequester'd, though but feign'd,
Pan or Sylvanus never slept, nor Nymph
Nor Faunus haunted. Here, in close recess,
With flowers, garlands, and sweet-smelling herbs,
Espoused Eve deck'd first her nuptial bed ;
And heavenly quires the hymenæan sung,
What day the genial angel to our sire
Brought her, in naked beauty more adorn'd,
More lovely, than Pandora, whom the gods
Endow'd with all their gifts, and O ! too like
In sad event, when to the unwiser son
Of Japhet brought by Hermes, she ensnared
Mankind with her fair looks, to be avenged
On him who had stole Jove's authentic fire.

Thus, at their shady lodge arrived, both stood,
Both turn'd, and under open sky adored
The God that made both sky, air, earth, and heaven,

Which they beheld, the moon's resplendent globe,
And starry pole : Thou also mad'st the night,
Maker Omnipotent, and thou the day,
Which we, in our appointed work employ'd,
Have finish'd, happy in our mutual help
And mutual love, the crown of all our bliss
Ordain'd by thee ; and this delicious place
For us too large, where thy abundance wants
Partakers, and uncropp'd falls to the ground.
But thou hast promised from us two a race
To fill the earth, who shall with us extol
Thy goodness infinite, both when we wake,
And when we seek, as now, thy gift of sleep.

This said unanimous, and other rites
Observing none, but adoration pure,
Which God likes best, into their inmost bower
Handed they went ; and, eased the putting off
These troublesome disguises which we wear,
Straight side by side were laid ; nor turn'd, I ween,
Adam from his fair spouse, nor Eve the rites
Mysterious of connubial love refused :
Whatever hypocrites austere talk
Of purity, and place, and innocence,
Defaming as impure what God declares
Pure, and commands to some, leaves free to all.
Our Maker bids increase ; who bids abstain
But our destroyer, foe to God and man ?

Hail, wedded love, mysterious law, true source
 Of human offspring, sole propriety
 In Paradise of all things common else!
 By thee adulterous lust was driven from men
 Among the bestial herds to range; by thee,
 Founded in reason, loyal, just, and pure,
 Relations dear, and all the charities
 Of father, son, and brother, first were known.
 Far be it, that I should write thee sin or blame,
 Or think thee unbefitting holiest place,
 Perpetual fountain of domestic sweets,
 Whose bed is undefiled and chaste pronounced,
 Present, or past, as saints and patriarchs used.
 Here Love his golden shafts employs, here lights
 His constant lamp, and waves his purple wings,
 Reigns here and revels; not in the blunted smile
 Of harlots, loveless, joyless, unendear'd,
 Casual fruition: nor in court amours,
 Mix'd dance, or wanton mask, or midnight ball,
 Or serenade, which the starved lover sings
 To his proud fair, best quitted with disdain.
 These, full'd by nightingales, embracing slept,
 And on their naked limbs the flowery roof
 Shower'd roses which the morn repair'd. Sleep on,
 Blest pair; and O! yet happiest, if ye seek
 No happier state, and know to know no more.

Now had night measur'd with her shadowy cone
 Half way up hill this vast sublunar vault,
 And from their ivory port the cherubim
 Forth issuing at the accustom'd hour, stood arm'd
 To their night watches in warlike parade;
 When Gabriel to his next in power thus spake:
 Uzziel, half these draw off, and coast the south
 With strictest watch; these other wheel the north;
 Our circuit meets full west. As flame they part,
 Half wheeling to the shield, half to the spear.
 From these, two strong and subtle Spirits he call'd

That near him stood, and gave them thus in charge:

Ithuriel and Zephon, with wing'd speed
 Search through this garden, leave unsearch'd no
 nook;
 But chiefly where those two fair creatures lodge,
 Now laid perhaps asleep, secure of harm.
 This evening from the sun's decline arrived,
 Who tells of some infernal Spirit seen Hitherward bent (who could have thought?) escaped

The bars of hell, on errand bad, no doubt:
 Such, where ye find, seize fast, and hither bring.

So saying, on he led his radiant files,
 Dazzling the moon; these to the bower direct
 In search of whom they sought: him there they found

Squat like a toad, close at the ear of Eve,
 Assaying by his devilish art to reach
 The organs of her fancy, and with them forge
 Illusions, as he list, phantasms and dreams;
 Or if, inspiring venom, he might taint
 The animal spirits that from pure blood arise
 Like gentle breaths from rivers pure, thence raise
 At least distemper'd, discontented thoughts,
 Vain hopes, vain aims, inordinate desires,

Blown up with high conceits ingendering pride.
 Him thus intent Ithuriel with his spear
 Touch'd lightly; for no falsehood can endure
 Touch of celestial temper, but returns
 Of force to its own likeness: up he starts,
 Discover'd and surpris'd. As when a spark Lights on a heap of nitrous powder, laid
 Fit for the tun some magazine to store
 Against a rumour'd war, the smutty grain,
 With sudden blaze diffused, inflames the air;
 So started up, in his own shape, the fiend.
 Back stepp'd those two fair angels, half amazed,
 So sudden to behold the grisly king;
 Yet thus, unmoved with fear, accost him soon.

Which of those rebel spirits adjudg'd to hell
 Com'st thou, escaped thy prison? and, trans-form'd,

Why sat'st thou like an enemy in wait,
 Here watching at the head of these that sleep?

Know ye not then, said Satan, fill'd with scorn,
 Know ye not me? ye knew me once no mate
 For you, there sitting where ye durst not soar?
 Not to know me argues yourselves unknown,
 The lowest of your throng; or, if ye know,
 Why ask ye, and superfluous begin
 Your message, like to end as much in vain?

To whom thus Zephon, answering scorn with scorn.

Think not, revolted Spirit, thy shape the same,
 Or undiminish'd brightness to be known,
 As when thou stood'st in heaven upright and pure;
 That glory then, when thou no more wast good,
 Departed from thee; and thou resemblest now
 Thy sin and place of doom obscure and foul.
 But come; for thou, be sure, shalt give account
 To him who sent us, whose charge is to keep
 This place inviolable, and these from harm.

So spake the cherub; and his grave rebuke
 Severe in youthful beauty, added grace
 Invincible. Abash'd the Devil stood,
 And felt how awful goodness is, and saw
 Virtue in her shape how lovely; saw, and pined
 His loss; but chiefly to find here observed
 His lustre visibly impair'd; yet seem'd
 Undaunted. If I must contend, said he,
 Best with the best, the sender, not the sent,
 Or all at once; more glory will be won,
 Or less be lost. Thy fear, said Zephon bold,
 Will save us trial what the least can do
 Single against thee wicked, and thence weak.

The fiend reply'd not, overcome with rage;
 But, like a proud steed rein'd, went haughtily on,
 Champing his iron curb: to strive or fly
 He held it vain; awe from above had quell'd
 His heart, not else dismay'd. Now drew they nigh

The western point, where those half-rounding guards

Just met, and closing stood in squadron join'd,
 Awaiting next command. To whom their chief,
 Gabriel, from the front thus call'd aloud.

O friends! I hear the tread of nimble feet
 Hastening this way, and now by glimpse discern Ithuriel and Zephon through the shade;

And with them comes a third of regal port,
But faded splendour wan; who by his gait
And fierce demeanour seems the Prince of Hell,
Not likely to part hence without contest;
Stand firm, for in his look defiance lours.

He scarce had ended, when those two approach'd,

And brief related whom they brought, where found,

How busied, in what form and posture couch'd.

To whom with stern regard thus Gabrielspake.
Why hast thou, Satan, broke the bounds prescribed
To thy transgressions, and disturb'd the charge
Of others, who approve not to transgress
By thy example, but have power and right
To question thy bold entrance on this place;
Employ'd, it seems, to violate sleep, and those Whose dwelling God hath planted here in bliss?

To whom thus Satan, with contemptuous brow:
Gabriel, thou hadst in heaven the esteem of wise,
And such I held thee; but this question ask'd Puts me in doubt. Lives there who loves his pain?

Who would not, finding way, break loose from
hell,

Though thither doom'd? thou wouldst thyself,
no doubt,

And boldly venture to whatever place
Farthest from pain, where thou might'st hope to charge

Torment with ease, and soonest recompense
Dole with delight, which in this place I sought:
To thee no reason, who know'st only good,
But evil hast not tried: and wilt object
His will who bound us? Let him surer bar
His iron gates, if he intends our stay
In that dark durance: thus much what was ask'd.

The rest is true; they found me where they say;
But that implies not violence or harm.

Thus he in scorn. The warlike Angel moved,
Disdainfully, half smiling, thus replied.

O loss of one in heaven to judge of wise
Since Satan fell, whom folly overthrew,
And now returns him from his prison 'scap'd,
Gravely in doubt whether to hold them wise
Or not, who ask what boldness brought him hither
Unlicens'd from his bounds in hell prescrib'd;
So wise he judges it to fly from pain
However, and to 'scape his punishment!
So judge thou still, presumptuous! till the wrath,
Which thou incur'st by flying, meet thy flight
Sevenfold, and scourge that wisdom back to hell,
Which taught thee yet no better, that no pain
Can equal anger infinite provoked.

But wherefore thou alone? wherefore with thee
Came not all hell broke loose? is pain to them
Less pain, less to be fled? or thou than they Less hardy to endure? Courageous chief!

The first in flight from pain! hadst thou alleged
To thy deserted host this cause of flight,
Thou surely hadst not come sole fugitive.

To which the fiend thus answer'd, frowning stern:

Not that I less endure, or shrink from pain,
Insulting angel! well thou know'st I stood
Thy fiercest, when in battle to thy aid
The blasting vollied thunder made all speed,
And seconded thy else not dreaded spear.

But still thy words at random, as before,
Argue thy inexperience what behoves

From hard assays and ill successes past
A faithful leader, not to hazard all
Through ways of danger by himself untried:

I therefore, I alone first undertook
To wing the desolate abyss, and spy

This new created world, whereof in hell
Fame is not silent, here in hope to find

Better abode, and my afflicted Powers
To settle here on earth, or in mid air;

Though for possession put to try once more
What thou and thy gay legions dare against;

Whose easier business were to serve their Lord High up in heaven, with songs to hymn his

throne,
And practised distances to cringe, not fight.

To whom the warrior Angel soon replied.
To say and straight unsay, pretending first

Wise to fly pain, professing next the spy,
Argues no leader but a liar trac'd,

Satan, and couldst thou faithful add? O name,
O sacred name of faithfulness profan'd!

Faithful to whom? to thy rebellious crew?
Army of fiends, fit body to fit head.

Was this your discipline and faith engaged,
Your military obedience, to dissolve

Allegiance to the acknowledg'd Power supreme?
And thou, sly hypocrite, who now wouldst seem

Patron of liberty, who more than thou
Once fawn'd, and cring'd, and servilely ador'd

Heaven's awful Monarch? wherefore, but in hope
To dispossess him, and thyself to reign?

But mark what I arreer'd thee now, Avant;
Fly thither whence thou fledst! If from this hour

Within these hallow'd limits thou appear,
Back to th' infernal pit I drag thee chain'd,

And seal thee so, as henceforth not to scorn
The facile gates of hell too slightly barr'd.

So threaten'd he; but Satan to no threats
Gave heed, but waxing more in rage replied.

Then when I am thy captive talk of chains,
Proud liminary cherub! but ere then

Far heavier load thyself expect to feel
From my prevailing arm, though heaven's King

Ride on thy wings, and thou with thy compeers,
Us'd to the yoke, draw'st his triumphant wheels

In progress through the road of heaven star-pav'd.
While thus he spake, the angelic squadron

bright
Turn'd fiery red, sharpening in mooned horns

Their phalanx, and began to hem him round
With ported spears, as thick as when a field

Of Ceres ripe for harvest waving bends
Her bearded grove of ears, which way the wind

Sways them; the careful ploughman doubting stands,

Lest on the threshing floor his hopeful sheaves
Prove chaff. On the other side, Satan, alarm'd,

Collecting all his might, dilated stood,
Like Teneriff or Atlas, unremov'd:
His stature reach'd the sky, and on his crest
Sat horror plum'd; nor wanted in his grasp
What seem'd both spear and shield: now dreadful deeds

Might have ensu'd, nor only Paradise
In this commotion, but the starry cope
Of heaven perhaps, or all the elements
At least had gone to wrack, disturb'd and torn
With violence of this conflict, had not soon
The Eternal, to prevent such horrid fray,
Hung forth in heaven his golden scales, yet seen

Betwixt Astrea and the Scorpián sign,
Wherein all things created first he weigh'd,
The pendulous round earth, with balanced air
In counterpoise, now ponders all events,
Battles and realms: in these he put two weights,
The sequel each of parting and of fight:
The latter quick up flew, and kick'd the beam;
Which Gabriel spying, thus bespake the fiend.

Satan, I know thy strength, and thou know'st mine;

Neither our own, but given: what folly then
To boast what arms can do? since thine no more
Than Heaven permits, nor mine, though doubled now

To trample thee as mire: for proof, look up,
And read thy lot in yon celestial sign,
Where thou art weigh'd, and shewn how light,
how weak,

If thou resist. The fiend look'd up, and knew
His mounted scale aloft: nor more; but fled
Murmuring, and with him fled the shades of night.

THE POWER OF BEAUTY.

[From Paradise Regained, Book II.]

[Belial in the infernal Council proposes to tempt Jesus with female beauty. Satan replies.]

SET women in his eye, and in his walk,
Among the daughters of men the fairest found;
Many are in each region passing fair
As the noon sky; more like to goddesses
Than mortal creatures, graceful and discreet,
Expert in amorous arts, enchanting tongues
Persuasive, virgin majesty with mild
And sweet allay'd, yet terrible t' approach,
Skill'd to retire, and in retiring draw
Hearts after them, tangled in amorous nets.
Such object hath the power to soft'n and tame
Severest temper, smooth the rugged'st brow,
Enerve, and with voluptuous hope dissolve,
Draw out with credulous desire, and lead
At will the manliest, resolute'st breast,
As the magnetic hardest iron draws.
Women, when nothing else, beguile the heart
Of wisest Solomon, and made him build,
And made him bow to the gods of his wives.
To whom quick answer Satan thus return'd:

Belial, in much uneven scale thou weigh'st
All others by thyself; because of old
Thou thyself dost dote on womankind, admiring
Their shape, their colour, and attractive grace,

None are, thou think'st but taken with such toys.

Before the flood, thou with thy lusty crew,
False titled sons of God, roaming the earth,
Cast wanton eyes on the daughters of men,
And coupled with them, and begot a race.
Have we not seen, or by relation heard,
In courts and regal chambers how thou lurk'st
In wood or grove, by mossy fountain side,
In valley or green meadow, to way-lay
Some beauty rare, Calisto, Clymene,
Daphne, or Semele, Antiope,
Or Amymone, Syrinx, many more,
Too long; then lay'st thy scapes on names
ador'd,

Apollo, Neptune, Jupiter, or Pan,
Satyr, or Faun, or Sylvan? But these haunts
Delight not all; among the sons of men,
How many have with a smile made small account

Of beauty and her lures, easily scorn'd
All her assaults, on worthier things intent?
Remember that Pelleas conqueror,
A youth, how all the beauties of the East
He slightly view'd, and slightly overpass'd;
How he surnam'd of Africa dismiss'd
In his prime youth the fair Iberian maid;
For Solomon, he liv'd at ease, and full
Of honour, wealth, high fare, aim'd not beyond

Higher design than to enjoy his state;
Thence to the bait of women lay expos'd:
But he whom we attempt is wiser far
Than Solomon, of more exalted mind,
Made and set wholly on th' accomplishment
Of greatest things; what woman will you find,

Tho' of this age the wonder and the fame,
On whom his leisure will vouchsafe an eye
Of foul desire? Or should she confident,
As sitting queen ador'd on Beauty's throne,
Descend with all her winning charms begirt
T' enamour, as the zone of Venus once
Wrought that effect on Jove, so fables tell;
How would one look from his majestic brow,
Seated as on the top of Virtue's hill,
Discount'nance her despis'd, and put to rout
All her array; her female pride deject,
Or turn to reverent awe; for beauty stands
In th' admiration only of weak minds
Led captive; cease t' admire, and all her plumes

Fall flat and shrink into a trivial toy,
At every sudden slighting quite abash'd:
Therefore with manlier objects we must try
His constancy, with such as have more shew
Of worth, of honour, glory, and popular
praise;

Rocks whereon greatest men have ofttest wreck'd.

DESCRIPTION OF GREECE.

[From Paradise Regained, Book IV.]

[Satan's speech to Jesus on the rejection of his offer of the kingdoms of the world.]

To whom the fiend with fear abash'd reply'd:
 Be not so sore offended, Son of God,
 Though sons of God both angels are and men,
 If I to try whether in higher sort
 Than these thou bear'st that title, have propos'd
 What both from men and angels I receive,
 Tetrarchs of fire, air, flood, and on the earth
 Nations besides from all the quarter'd winds,
 God of this world invok'd and world beneath;
 Who then thou art, whose coming is foretold
 To me so fatal, me it most concerns.
 The trial hath indamag'd thee no way;
 Rather more honour left and more esteem;
 Me nought advantag'd, missing what I aim'd.
 Therefore let pass, as they are transitory,
 The kingdoms of this world; I shall no more
 Advise thee; gain them as thou canst, or not.
 And thou thyself seem'st otherwise inclin'd
 Than to a worldly crown, addicted more
 To contemplation and profound dispute,
 As by that early action may be judg'd,
 When slipping from thy mother's eye thou went'st

Alone into the temple; there wast found
 Among the gravest Rabbies disputant
 On points and questions fitting Moses' chair, Teaching, not taught; the childhood shews the
 man,

As morning shews the day. Be famous then
 By wisdom: as thy empire must extend,
 So let extend thy mind o'er all the world
 In knowledge, all things in it comprehend:
 All knowledge is not couch'd in Moses' law,
 The Pentateuch, or what the Prophets wrote;
 The Gentiles also know, and write, and teach
 To admiration, led by Nature's light;
 And with the Gentiles much thou must converse,
 Ruling them by persuasion as thou mean'st;
 Without their learning, how wilt thou with them,
 Or they with thee hold conversation meet?
 How wilt thou reason with them, how refute
 Their idolisms, traditions, paradoxes?
 Error by his own arms is best evinc'd.
 Look once more, ere we leave this specular
 mount,

Westward, much nearer by southwest, behold
 Where on the Ægean shore a city stands
 Built nobly, pure the air, and light the soil,
 Athens, the eye of Greece, mother of arts
 And eloquence, native to famous wits
 Or hospitable, in her sweet recess,
 City or suburban, studious walks and shades;
 See there the olive grove of Academe,
 Plato's retirement, where the Attic bird
 Thrills her thick-warbled notes the summer
 long;

There flowery hill Hymettus with the sound
 Of bees' industrious murmur oft invites
 To studious musing; there Ægeus rolls
 His whispering stream: within the wall then view

2 F

The schools of ancient sages, his who bred
 Great Alexander to subdue the world,
 Lyceum there, and painted Stoa next:
 There shalt thou hear and learn the secret power
 Of harmony in tones and numbers hit
 By voice or hand, and various-measured verse,
 Æolian charms and Dorian lyric odes,
 And his who gave them breath, but higher sung,
 Blind Melesigenes, thence Homer call'd,
 Whose poem Phœbus challeng'd for his own.
 Thence what the lofty grave tragedians taught
 In chorus or iambic, teachers best
 Of moral prudence, with delight receiv'd
 In brief sententious precepts, while they treat
 Of fate, and chance, and change in human life;
 High actions, and high passions best describing:
 Thence to the famous orators repair,
 Those ancient, whose resistless eloquence
 Wielded at will that fierce democracy,
 Shook th' arsenal, and fulmin'd over Greece,
 To Macedon and Artaxerxes' throne.
 To sage philosophy next lend thine ear,
 From heav'n descended to the low-roof house
 Of Socrates; see there his tenement,
 Whom well inspir'd the oracle pronounc'd
 Wisest of men; from whose mouth issued forth
 Mellifluous streams that water'd all the schools
 Of Academics old and new, with those Surnam'd Peripatetics, and the sect
 Epicurean, and the Stoic severe;
 These here revolve, or, as thou lik'st, at home,
 Till time mature thee to a kingdom's weight;
 These rules will render thee a king complete
 Within thyself, much more with empire join'd.

L'ALLEGRO.

Hence, loathed Melancholy,
 Of Cerberus and blackest Midnight born,
 In Stygian cave forlorn,
 'Mongst horrid shapes, and shrieks, and sights unholy!
 Find out some uncouth cell,
 Where brooding Darkness spreads his jealous
 wings,
 And the night-raven sings;
 There under ebon shades, and low-brow'd rocks,
 As ragged as thy locks,
 In dark Cimmerian desert ever dwell.
 But come, thou goddess fair and free,
 In heaven yclep'd Euphrosyne,
 And by men, heart-easing Mirth;
 Whom lovely Venus, at a birth,
 With two sister Graces more,
 To ivy-crowned Bacchus bore:
 Or whether (as some sager sing)
 The frolic wind, that breathes the spring,
 Zephyr, with Aurora playing,
 As he met her once a-maying,
 There on beds of violets blue,
 And fresh-blown roses wash'd in dew,
 Fill'd her with thee a daughter fair,
 So buxom, blithe, and debonaire.

Haste thee, Nymph, and bring with thee
 Jest and youthful Jollity,
 Quips, and cranks, and wanton wiles,
 Nods, and becks, and wreathed smiles,
 Such as hang on Hebe's cheek,
 And love to live in dimple sleek;
 Sport that wrinkled Care derides,
 And Laughter holding both his sides.
 Come, and trip it, as you go,
 On the light fantastic toe;
 And in thy right hand lead with thee
 The mountain-nymph, sweet Liberty;
 And, if I give thee honour due,
 Mirth, admit me of thy crew,
 To live with her, and live with thee,
 In unreviewed pleasures free;
 To hear the lark begin his flight,
 And singing startle the dull night,
 From his watch-tower in the skies,
 Till the dappled dawn doth rise;
 Then to come, in spite of sorrow,
 And at my window bid good-morrow,
 Through the sweet-brier, or the vine,
 Or the twisted eglantine:
 While the cock, with lively din,
 Scatters the rear of darkness thin,
 And to the stack, or the barn-door
 Stoutly struts his dames before;
 Oft listening how the hounds and horn
 Cheerly rouse the slumbering morn,
 From the side of some hoar hill,
 Through the high wood echoing shrill:
 Some time walking, not unseen,
 By hedge-row elms, on hillocks green,
 Right against the eastern-gate
 Where the great Sun begins his state,
 Rob'd in flames, and amber light,
 The clouds in thousand liveries dight;
 While the plowman, near at hand,
 Whistles o'er the furrow'd land,
 And the milkmaid singeth blithe,
 And the mower whets his sithe,
 And every shepherd tells his tale
 Under the hawthorn in the dale.
 Straight mine eye hath caught new pleasures,
 Whilst the landscape round it measures;
 Russet lawns, and fallows gray,
 Where the nibbling flocks do stray;
 Mountains, on whose barren breast,
 The labouring clouds do often rest;
 Meadows trim with daisies pied,
 Shallow brooks, and rivers wide.
 Towers and battlements it sees
 Bosom'd high in tufted trees,
 Where perhaps some beauty lies,
 The Cynosure of neighbouring eyes.
 Hard by, a cottage chimney smokes,
 From betwixt two aged oaks,
 Where Corydon and Thyrsis met,
 Are at their savory dinner set,
 Of herbs and other country messes,
 Which the neat-handed Phillis dresses;
 And then in haste her bower she leaves,
 With Thelys to bind the sheaves;

Or, if the earlier season lead,
 To the tann'd haycock in the mead.
 Sometimes with secure delight
 The upland hamlets will invite,
 When the merry bells ring round,
 And the jocund rebecks sound
 To many a youth, and many a maid,
 Dancing in the chequer'd shade;
 And young and old come forth to play
 On a sunshine holiday,
 Till the livelong day-light fail:
 Then to the spicy nut-brown ale,
 With stories told of many a feat,
 How fairy Mab the junkets eat;
 She was pinch'd, and pull'd, she said;
 And he, by friar's lantern led,
 Tells how the drudging goblin sweat,
 To earn his cream-bowl duly set,
 When in one night, ere glimpse of morn,
 His shadowy flail hath thresh'd the corn,
 That ten day-laborers could not end;
 Then lies him down the lubbar fiend,
 And stretch'd out all the chimney's length,
 Basks at the fire his hairy strength;
 And crop-full out of doors he flings,
 Ere the first cock his matin rings.
 Thus done the tales, to bed they creep,
 By whispering winds soon lull'd asleep.
 Tower'd cities please us then,
 And the busy hum of men,
 Where throngs of knights and barons bold,
 In weeds of peace, high triumphs hold,
 With store of ladies, whose bright eyes
 Rain influence, and judge the prize
 Of wit, or arms, while both contend
 To win her grace, whom all commend.
 There late Hymen oft appear
 In saffron robe, with taper clear,
 And pomp, and feast, and revelry,
 With mask, and antique pageantry;
 Such sights as youthful poets dream
 On summer eves by haunted stream.
 Then to the well-trod stage anon,
 If Jonson's learned sock be on,
 Or sweetest Shakspeare, Fancy's child,
 Warble his native wood-notes wild.
 And ever, against eating cares,
 Lap me in soft Lydian airs,
 Married to immortal verse;
 Such as the meeting soul may pierce,
 In notes, with many a winding bout
 Of linked sweetness long drawn out,
 With wanton heed and giddy cunning,
 The melting voice through mazes running,
 Untwisting all the chains that tie
 The hidden soul of harmony;
 That Orpheus' self may heave his head
 From golden slumber on a bed
 Of heap'd Elysian flowers, and hear
 Such strains as would have won the ear
 Of Pluto, to have quite set free
 His half-regain'd Eurydice.
 These delights if thou canst give,
 Mirth, with thee I mean to live.

IL PENSEROSO.

HENCE, vain deluding toys,
 The brood of Folly, without father bred,
 How little you bested,
 Or fill the fixed mind with all your toys!
 Dwell in some idle brain,
 And fancies fond with gaudy shapes possess,
 As thick and numberless
 As the gay notes that people the sunbeams;
 Or likest hovering dreams,
 The fickle pensioners of Morpheus' train.
 But hail, thou goddess, sage and holy,
 Hail, divinest Melancholy!
 Whose saintly visage is too bright
 To hit the sense of human sight,
 And therefore to our weaker view
 O'erlaid with black, staid Wisdom's hue;
 Black, but such as in esteem
 Prince Memnon's sister might bescem,
 Or that starr'd Ethiop queen that strove
 To set her beauty's praise above
 The sea-nymphs, and their powers offended:
 Yet thou art higher far descended.
 Thee bright-hair'd Vesta, long of yore,
 To solitary Saturn bore;
 His daughter she (in Saturn's reign,
 Such mixture was not held a stain)
 O't in glimmering bowers and glades
 He met her, and in secret shades
 Of woody Ida's inmost grove
 Whilst yet there was no fear of Jove.
 Come, pensive nun, devout and pure,
 Sober, steadfast, and demure,
 All in a robe of darkest grain,
 Flowing with majestic train,
 And sable stole of Cyprus lawn,
 Over thy decent shoulders drawn.
 Come, but keep thy wonted state,
 With even step, and musing gait;
 And looks commercing with the skies,
 Thy rapt soul sitting in thine eyes;
 There, held in holy passion still,
 Forget thyself to marble, till
 With a sad leaden downward cast
 Thou fix them on the earth as fast:
 And join with thee calm Peace, and Quiet,
 Spare Fast, that oft with gods doth diet,
 And hears the Muses in a ring,
 Aye round about Jove's altar sing:
 And add to these retired Leisure,
 That in trim gardens takes his pleasure:
 But first, and chiefest, with thee bring,
 Him that yon soars on golden wing,
 Guiding the fiery-wheeled throne,
 The cherub Contemplation;
 And the mute Silence hist along,
 'Less Philomel will dign a song,
 In her sweetest saddest plight,
 Smoothing the rugged brow of Night,
 While Cynthia checks her dragon yoke,
 Gently o'er the accustomed oak:
 Sweet bird, that shun'st the noise of folly,
 Most musical, most melancholy!

Thee, chantress, oft, the woods among,
 I woo, to hear thy even-song:
 And, missing thee, I walk unseen
 On the dry smooth-shaven green,
 To behold the wandering moon,
 Riding near her highest noon,
 Like one that had been led astray
 Through the heaven's wide pathless way;
 And oft, as if her head she bow'd,
 Stooping through a fleecy cloud,
 Oft, on a plat of rising ground,
 I hear the far-off curfew sound,
 Over some wide-water'd shore,
 Swinging slow with sullen roar:
 Or, if the air will not permit,
 Some still removed place will fit,
 Where glowing embers through the room
 Teach light to counterfeit a gloom;
 Far from all resort of mirth,
 Save the cricket on the hearth,
 Or the bellman's drowsy charm,
 To bless the doors from nightly harm.
 Or let my lamp at midnight hour,
 Be seen in some high lonely tower,
 Where I may oft out-watch the Bear,
 With thrice-great Hermes, or unsphere
 The spirit of Plato, to unfold
 What worlds or what vast regions hold
 The immortal mind, that hath forsook
 Her mansion in this fleshly nook:
 And of those demons that are found
 In fire, air, flood, or under ground,
 Whose power hath a true consent
 With planet, or with element.
 Sometime let gorgeous Tragedy
 In scepter'd pall come sweeping by,
 Presenting 'Thebes' or 'Pelops' line,
 Or the tale of Troy divine;
 Or what (though rare) of later age
 Ennobled hath the buskin'd stage.

But, O sad virgin, that thy power
 Might raise Musæus from his bower!
 Or bid the soul of Orpheus sing
 Such notes, as, warbled to the string,
 Drew iron tears down Pluto's cheek,
 And made Hell grant what love did seek!
 Or call up him that left half-told
 The story of Cambuscan bold,
 Of Camball, and of Algarsife,
 And who had Canace to wife,
 That own'd the virtuous ring and glass;
 And of the wondrous horse of brass,
 On which the Tartar king did ride;
 And if aught else great bards beside
 In sage and solemn tunes have sung,
 Of tourneys, and of trophies hung,
 Of forests, and enchantments drear,
 Where more is meant than meets the ear.

Thus, Night, oft see me in thy pale career,
 Till civil-suited morn appear,
 Not trick'd and frounc'd as she was wont
 With the Attic boy to hunt,
 But kercheft in a comely cloud,
 While rocking winds are piping loud,

Or ushered with a shower still,
 When the gust hath blown his fill,
 Ending on the rustling leaves,
 With minute drops from off the eaves.
 And, when the sun begins to fling
 His flaming beams, me, goddess, bring
 To arched walks of twilight groves,
 And shadows brown, that Sylvan loves,
 Of pine, or monumental oak,
 Where the rude axe, with heaved stroke,
 Was never heard the nymphs to daunt,
 Or fright them from their hallow'd haunt.
 There in close covert by some brook,
 Where no profaner eye may look,
 Hide me from Day's garish eye,
 While the bee with honied thigh,
 That at her flowery work doth sing,
 And the waters murmuring,
 With such consort as they keep,
 Entice the dewy feather'd Sleep;
 And let some strange mysterious dream
 Wave at his wings in airy stream
 Of lively portraiture display'd,
 Softly on my eye-lids laid.
 And, as I wake, sweet music breathe
 Above, about, or underneath,
 Sent by some spirit to mortal good,
 Or the unseen genius of the wood.

But let my due feet never fail
 To walk the studious cloisters pale,
 And love the high-embowered roof,
 With antique pillars massy proof,
 And storied windows richly dight,
 Casting a dim religious light:
 There let the pealing organ blow,
 To the full-voic'd quire below,
 In service high and anthems clear,
 As may with sweetness, through mine ear,
 Dissolve me into ecstasies,
 And bring all heaven before mine eyes.

And may at last my weary age
 Find out the peaceful hermitage,
 The hairy gown and mossy cell,
 Where I may sit and rightly spell
 Of every star that heaven doth shew,
 And every herb that sips the dew;
 Till old experience do attain
 To something like prophetic strain.
 These pleasures, Melancholy, give,
 And I with thee will choose to live.

LYCIDAS.

YET once more, O ye laurels, and once more,
 Ye myrtles brown, with ivy never-sere,
 I come to pluck your berries harsh and crude:
 And, with forc'd fingers rude,
 Shatter your leaves before the mellowing year:
 Bitter constraint, and sad occasion dear,
 Compels me to disturb your season due;
 For Lycidas is dead, dead ere his prime,
 Young Lycidas, and hath not left his peer:
 Who would not sing for Lycidas? he knew
 Himself to sing, and build the lofty rhyme.

He must not float upon his watery bier
 Unwept, and welter to the parching wind,
 Without the meed of some melodious tear.

Begin then, Sisters of the sacred well,
 That from beneath the seat of Jove doth spring;
 Begin, and somewhat loudly sweep the string.
 Hence with denial vain, and coy excuse:

So may some gentle Muse
 With lucky words favor my destin'd urn;
 And, as he passes, turn
 And bid fair peace be to my sable shroud;

For we were nurs'd upon the self-same hill,
 Fed the same flock, by fountain, shade, and rill.
 Together both, ere the high lawns appear'd
 Under the opening eye-lids of the morn,
 We drove afield, and both together heard
 What time the grey-fly winds her sultry horn,
 Battening our flocks with the fresh dews of night,
 Oft till the star, that rose, at evening bright,
 Toward heaven's descent had slop'd his westering wheel.

Meanwhile the rural ditties were not mute,
 Temper'd to the oaten flute;
 Rough Satyrs danc'd, and Fauns with cloven heel
 From the glad sound would not be absent long;
 And old Dametas lov'd to hear our song.

But, O the heavy change, now thou art gone,
 Now thou art gone, and never must return!
 Thee, shepherd, thee the woods, and desert caves
 With wild thyme and the gadding vine o'ergrown,
 And all their echoes, mourn:
 The willows, and the hazel copses green,
 Shall now no more be seen

Fanning their joyous leaves to thy soft lays.
 As killing as the canker to the rose,
 Or taint-worm to the weanling herds that graze,
 Or frost to flowers, that their gay wardrobe wear,
 When first the white-thorn blows;
 Such, Lycidas, thy loss to shepherds' ear.

Where were ye, Nymphs, when the remorseless deep

Clos'd o'er the head of your lov'd Lycidas?
 For neither were ye playing on the steep,
 Where your old bards, the famous Druids, lie,
 Nor on the shaggy top of Mona high,
 Nor yet were Deva spreads her wizard stream:
 Ay me! I fondly dream [done?]
 Had ye been there—for what could that have
 What could the Muse herself that Orpheus bore,
 The Muse herself, for her enchanting son,
 Whom universal nature did lament,
 When, by the rout that made the hideous roar,
 His gory visage down the stream was sent,
 Down the swift Hebrus to the Lesbian shore?

Alas! what boots it with incessant care
 To tend the homely, slighted, shepherd's trade,
 And strictly meditate the thankless muse?
 Were it not better done, as others use,
 To sport with Amaryllis in the shade,
 Or with the tangles of Naxos's hair?
 Fame is the spur that the clear spirit doth raise
 (That last infirmity of noble mind)
 To scorn delights and live laborious days;
 But the fair guerdon when we hope to find,

And think to burst out into sudden blaze,
Comes the blind fury with the abhorred shears
And slits the thin, spun life. "But not the praises."

Phœbus replied, and touch'd my trembling ears ;
"Fame is no plant that grows on mortal soil,
Nor in the glistening foil
Set off to the world, nor in broad rumor lies:
But lives and spreads aloft by those pure eyes,
And perfect witness of all-judging Jove ;
As he pronounces lastly on each deed,
Of so much fame in heaven expect thy meed."
O fountain Arethuse, and thou honor'd flood,
Smooth-sliding Mincius, crown'd with vocal reeds!

That strain I heard was of a higher mood :
But now my oar proceeds,
And listens to the herald of the sea
That came in Neptune's plea ;
He ask'd the waves, and ask'd the felon winds,
What hard mishap hath doom'd this gentle
swain ?

And question'd every gust of rugged wings
That blows from off each beaked promontory :
They knew not of his story ;
And sage Hippotades their answer brings,
That not a blast was from his dungeon stray'd ;
The air was calm, and on the level brine
Sleek Panope with all her sisters play'd.
It was that fatal and perfidious bark,
Built in the eclipse, and rigg'd with curses dark,
That sunk so low that sacred head of thine.

Next Camus, reverend sire, went footing slow,
His mantle hairy, and his bonnet sedge,
Inwrought with figures dim, and on the edge
Like to that sanguine flower inscribed with woe.
"Ah! who hath reft" (quoth he) "my dearest pledge?"

Last came, and last did go,
The pilot of the Galilean lake ;
Two massy keys he bore of metals twain,
(The golden opes, the iron shuts amain,)
He shook his miter'd locks, and stern bespake :
"How well could I have spared for thee, young
swain,

Enow of such, as for their bellies' sake
Creep, and intrude, and climb into the fold ?
Of other care they little reckoning make,
Than how to scramble at the shearers' feast,
And shove away the worthy bidden guest ;
Blind mouths! that scarce themselves know how to hold [least
A sheep-hook, or have learn'd aught else the
That to the faithful herdman's art belongs!
What rocks it them? What need they? They are sped;

And, when they list, their lean and flashy songs
Grate on their scrannel pipes of wretched straw ;
The hungry sheep look up, and are not fed,
But, swoln with wind and the rank mist they draw,

Rot inwardly, and foul contagion spread :
Besides what the grim wolf with privy paw
Daily devours apace, and nothing said :

But that two-handed engine at the door
Stands ready to smite once, and smite no more."

Return, Alpheus, the dread voice is past,
That shrunk thy streams ; return, Sicilian Muse,
And call the vales, and bid them hither cast
Their bells, and flowerets of a thousand hues.
Ye valleys low, where the mild whispers use
Of shades, and wanton winds, and gushing brooks,
On whose fresh lap the swart-star sparsely looks ;
Throw hither all your quaint enamell'd eyes,
That on the green turf suck the honied showers,
And purple all the ground with vernal flowers.
Bring the rathe primrose that forsaken dies,
The tufted crow-toe, and pale jessamine,
The white pink, and the pansy freak'd with jet,
The glowing violet,
The musk-rose, and the well-attired woodbine,
With cowslips wan, that hang the pensive head,
And every flower that sad embroidery wears :
Bid Amaranthus all his beauty shed,
And daffodillies fill their cups with tears,
To strew the laureate herse where Lycid lies.
For, so to interpose a little ease,
Let our frail thoughts dally with false surmise ;
Ay me! whilst thee the shores and sounding seas
Wash far away, where'er thy bones are hurl'd,
Whether beyond the stormy Hebrides,
Where thou, perhaps, under the whelming tide,
Visit'st the bottom of the monstrous world ;
Or whether thou, to our moist vows denied,
Sleep'st by the fable of Bellerus old,
Where the great vision of the guarded mount
Looks towards Namancos and Bayona's hold ;
Look homeward, angel, now, and melt with ruth:

And, O ye dolphins, waft the hapless youth.
Weep no more, woful shepherds, weep no more,
For Lycidas your sorrow is not dead,
Sunk though he be beneath the watery floor ;
So sinks the day-star in the ocean bed,
And yet anon repairs his drooping head,
And tricks his beams, and with new-spangled ore

Flames in the forehead of the morning sky :
So Lycidas sunk low, but mounted high,
Through the dear night of him that walk'd
the waves ;

Where, other groves and other streams along,
With nectar pure his oozy locks he laves,
And hears the unexpressive nuptial song,
In the blest kingdoms meek of joy and love.
There entertain him all the saints above,
In solemn troops, and sweet societies,
That sing, and, singing in their glory, move,
And wipe the tears for ever from his eyes.
Now, Lycidas, the shepherds weep no more ;
Henceforth thou art the genius of the shore,
In thy large recompense, and shalt be good
To all that wander in that perilous flood.

Thus sang the uncouth swain to the oaks and rills,
While the still morn went out with sandals grey ;
He touch'd the tender stops of various quills,

With eager thought warbling his doric lay ;
 And now the sun had stretch'd out all the hills,
 And now was dropt into the western bay :
 At last he rose, and twitch'd his mantle blue :
 To-morrow to fresh woods, and pastures new.

COMUS.

THE PERSONS.

The Attendant Spirit, afterwards in the habit of Thyrsis.
Comus, with his crew.

The Lady.

First Brother.

Second Brother.

Sabrina, the Nymph.

The first Scene discovers a wild wood.

The Attendant Spirit descends or enters.

BEFORE the starry threshold of Jove's court
 My mansion is, where those immortal shapes
 Of bright aerial spirits live insph'rd
 In regions mild of calm and serene air,
 Above the smoke and stir of this dim spot,
 Which men call earth ; and, with low-thoughted
 care

Confin'd and pester'd in this pinfold here,
 Strive to keep up a frail and feverish being,
 Unmindful of the crown that virtue gives,
 After this mortal change, to her true servants,
 Amongst the enthron'd gods on sainted seats.
 Yet some there be that by due steps aspire
 To lay their just hands on that golden key
 That opes the palace of Eternity :
 To such my errand is ; and but for such,
 I would not soil these pure ambrosial weeds
 With the rank vapors of this sin-worn mould.

But to my task. Neptune, besides the sway
 Of every salt flood, and each ebbing stream,
 Took in by lot 'twixt high and nether Jove
 Imperial rule of all the sea-girt isles,
 That, like to rich and various gems, inlay
 The unadorn'd bosom of the deep,
 Which he, to grace his tributary gods,
 By course commits to several government,
 And gives them leave to wear their sapphire crowns,

And wield their little tridents : but this isle,
 The greatest and the best of all the main,
 He quarters to his blue-hair'd deities ;
 And all this tract that fronts the falling Sun
 A nobler peer of mickle trust and power
 Has in his charge, with temper'd awe to guide
 An old and haughty nation, proud in arms :
 Where his fair offspring, nurs'd in princely lore,
 Are coming to attend their father's state,
 And new-intrusted sceptre ; but their way
 Lies through the perplex'd paths of this drear
 wood,

The nodding horror of whose shady brows
 Threats the forlorn and wandering passenger ;
 And here their tender age might suffer peril,
 But that by quick command from sovereign Jove
 I was dispatch'd for their defence and guard :
 And listen why ; for I will tell you now
 What never yet was heard in tale or song,
 From old or modern bard, in hall or bower.

Bacchus, that first from out the purple grape
 Crush'd the sweet poison of misused wine,
 After the Tuscan mariners transform'd,
 Coasting the Tyrrhene shore, as the winds listed,

On Circe's island fell : (Who knows not Circe,
 The daughter of the Sun, whose charmed cup
 Whoever tasted, lost his upright shape,
 And downward fell into a grovelling swine?)
 This nymph, that gaz'd upon his clustering locks
 With ivy berries wreath'd, and his blithe youth,
 Had by him, ere he parted thence, a son
 Much like his father, but his mother more,
 Whom therefore she brought up, and Comus
 nam'd :

Who ripe, and frolic of his full-grown age,
 Roving the Celtic and Iberian fields,
 At last betakes him to this ominous wood ;
 And, in thick shelter of black shades embower'd,
 Excels his mother at her mighty art,
 Offering to every weary traveller
 His orient liquor in a crystal glass,
 To quench the drought of Phœbus ; which as they taste

(For most do taste through fond intemperate thirst)

Soon as the potion works, their human countenance,

The express resemblance of the gods, is chang'd
 Into some brutish form of wolf, or bear,
 Or ounce, or tiger, hog, or bearded goat,
 All other parts remaining as they were ;
 And they, so perfect is their misery

Not once perceive their foul disfigurement,
 But boast themselves more comely than before ;
 And all their friends and native home forget,
 To roll with pleasure in a sensual sty.

Therefore when any, favor'd of high Jove,
 Chances to pass through this adventurous glade,
 Swift as the sparkle of a glancing star
 I shoot from heaven, to give him safe convoy,
 As now I do : but first I must put off
 These my sky-robes spun, out of Iris' woof,
 And take the weeds and likeness of a swain
 That to the service of this house belongs,
 Who with his soft pipe, and smooth-dittied
 song,

Well knows to still the wild winds when they
 roar,

And hush the waving woods ; nor of less faith,
 And in this office of his mountain watch
 Likeliest, and nearest to the present aid
 Of this occasion. But I hear the tread
 Of hateful steps ; I must be viewless now.

Comus enters with a charming-rod in one hand, his glass in the other ; with him a rout of monsters, headed like sundry sorts of wild beasts, but otherwise like men and women, their apparel glistering ; they come in making a riotous and unruly noise, with torches in their hands.

Comus.

The Star, that bids the shepherd fold,
 Now the top of heaven doth hold ;

And the gilded car of day
 His glowing axle both allay
 In the steep Atlantic stream;
 And the slope sun his upward beam
 Shoots against the dusky pole,
 Pacing towards the other goal
 Of his chamber in the east.
 Meanwhile welcome Joy, and Feast,
 Midnight Shout, and Revelry,
 Topsy Dance, and Jollity
 Braid your locks with rosy twine,
 Dropping odors, dropping wine.
 Rigor now is gone to bed,
 And Advice with scrupulous head.
 Strict Age and sour Severity,
 With their grave saws, in slumber lie.
 We, that are of purer fire,
 Imitate the starry quire,
 Who, in their nightly watchful spheres,
 Lead in swift round the months and years.
 The sounds and seas, with all their finny drove,
 Now to the moon in wavering morrice move;
 And, on the tawny sands and shelves,
 Trip the pert fairies and the dapper elves.
 By dimpled brook and fountain brim,
 The wood-nymphs, deck'd with daisies trim,
 Their merry wakes and pastimes keep;
 What hath night to do with sleep?
 Night hath better sweets to prove,
 Venus now wakes, and wakens love.
 Come, let us our rites begin;
 'Tis only daylight that makes sin,
 Which these dun shades will ne'er report:—
 Hail, goddess of nocturnal sport,
 Dark-veil'd Cotytto, to whom the secret flame
 Of midnight torches burns; mysterious dame,
 That ne'er art call'd, but when the dragon womb
 Of Stygian darkness spits her thickest gloom,
 And makes one blot of all the air;
 Stay thy cloudy ebon chair,
 Wherein thou rid'st with Hecat', and befriend
 Us thy vow'd priests, till utmost end
 Of all thy dues be done, and none left out;
 Ere the babbling eastern scout,
 The nice morn, on the India steep
 From her cabin'd loop-hole peep,
 And to the tell-tale sun descry
 Our conceal'd solemnity.
 Come, knit hands, and beat the ground
 In a light fantastic round.

The Measure.

Break off, break off, I feel the different pace
 Of some chaste footing near about this ground.
 Run to your shrouds, within these brakes and trees;
 Our number may affright: some virgin sure
 (For so I can distinguish by mine art)
 Benighted in these woods. Now to my charms,
 And to my wily trains: I shall ere long
 Be well-stocked with as fair a herd as graz'd
 About my mother Circe. Thus I hurl
 My dazzling spells into the spongy air,
 Of power to cheat the eye with bleat illusion,

And give it false presentments, lest the place
 And my quaint habits breed astonishment,
 And put the damsel to suspicious flight,
 Which must not be; for that's against my
 course:

I, under fair pretence of friendly ends,
 And well-plac'd words of glozing courtesy
 Baited with reasons not unplausible,
 Wind me into the easy-hearted man,
 And hug him into snares. When once her eye
 Hath met the virtue of this magic dust,
 I shall appear some harmless villager,
 Whom thrift keeps up about his country gear.
 But here she comes; I fairly step aside,
 And hearken, if I may, her business here.

The Lady enters.

This way the noise was, if mine ear be true,
 My best guide now; methought it was the
 sound

Of riot and ill-manag'd merriment,
 Such as the jocund flute, or gamesome pipe,
 Stirs up among the loose unletter'd hinds;
 When for their teeming flocks, and granges full,

In wanton dance they praise the bounteous
 Pan,

And thank the gods amiss. I should be loth
 To meet the rudeness, and swill'd insolence,
 Of such late wassailers; yet, O! where else
 Shall I inform my unacquainted feet
 In the blind mazes of this tangled wood?

My brothers, when they saw me wearied out
 With this long way, resolving here to lodge
 Under the spreading favor of these pines,
 Stept, as they said, to the next thicket side,
 To bring me berries, or such cooling fruit.
 As the kind hospitable woods provide.

They left me then, when the gray-hooded even,

Like a sad votarist in palmer's weed,
 Rose from the hindmost wheels of Phœbus' wain.

But where they are, and why they came not back,

Is now the labor of my thoughts; 'tis likeliest
 They had engag'd their wandering steps too far;

And envious darkness, ere they could return,
 Had stole them from me: else, O thievish
 night,

Why should'st thou, but for some felonious end,
 In thy dark lantern thus close up the stars,
 That nature hung in heaven, and fill'd their lamps

With everlasting oil, to give due light
 To the misled and lonely traveller?

This is the place, as well as I may guess,
 Whence even now the tumult of loud mirth
 Was rife, and perfect in my listening ear;
 Yet nought but single darkness do I find.
 What this might be? A thousand fantasies
 Begin to throng into my memory,
 Of calling shapes, and beckoning shadows dire,
 And airy tongues, that syllable men's names

On sands, and shores, and desert wildernesses.
 These thoughts may startle well, but not astound,
 The virtuous mind, that ever walks attended
 By a strong siding champion, Conscience.—
 O welcome pure-ey'd faith, white-handed hope,
 Thou hovering angel, girt with golden wings,
 And thou, unblemish'd form of chastity!
 I see ye visibly, and now believe
 That he, the Supreme Good, to whom all things
 ill

Are but as slavish officers of vengeance,
 Would send a glist'ring guardian, if need were,
 To keep my life and honor unassail'd.
 Was I deceiv'd, or did a sable cloud
 Turn forth her silver lining on the night?
 I did not err, there does a sable cloud
 Turn forth her silver lining on the night,
 And cast a gleam over this tufted grove:
 I cannot halloo to my brothers, but
 Such noise as I can make to be heard farthest
 I'll venture; for my new-enliven'd spirits
 Prompt me; and they perhaps are not far off.

SONG.

Sweet Echo, sweetest nymph, that liv'st unseen
 Within thy airy shell,
 By slow Meander's margin green,
 And in the violet-embroider'd vale,
 Where the lovelorn nightingale
 Nightly to thee her sad song mourneth well,
 Canst thou not tell me of a gentle pair
 That liketh thy Narcissus are?
 O, if thou have
 Hid them in some flowery cave,
 Tell me but where,
 Sweet queen of parley, daughter of the sphere!
 So may'st thou be translated to the skies,
 And give resounding grace to all heaven's harmonies.

Enter Comus.

Comus. Can any mortal mixture of earth's mould
 Breathe such divine enchanting ravishment?
 Sure something holy lodges in that breast,
 And with these raptures moves the vocal air
 To testify his hidden residence.
 How sweetly did they float upon the wings
 Of silence, through the empty vaulted night,
 At every fall smoothing the raven-down
 Of darkness, till it smil'd! I have oft heard
 My mother Circe with the Syrens three,
 Amidst the flowery-kirtled Naiades,
 Culling their potent herbs and baleful drugs,
 Who, as they sung, would take the prison'd soul
 And lap it in Elysium: Scylla wept,
 And chid her barking waves into attention,
 And fell Charybdis murmur'd soft applause:
 Yet they in pleasing slumber lull'd the sense,
 And in sweet madness robb'd it of itself;
 But such a sacred and home-felt delight,
 Such sober certainty of waking bliss,
 I never heard till now.—I'll speak to her,
 And she shall be my queen.—Hail, foreign wonder!

Whom certain these rough shades did never breed,

Unless the goddess that in rural shrine
 Dwell'st here with Pan, or Sylvan, by blest song
 Forbidding every bleak unkindly fog
 To touch the prosperous growth of this tall wood.

Lad. Nay, gentle shepherd, ill is lost that
 praise

That is address'd to unattending ears;
 Not any boast of skill, but extreme shift
 How to regain my sever'd company,
 Compell'd me to awake the courteous Echo
 To give me answer from her mossy couch.

Com. What chance, good lady, hath bereft you
 thus?

Lad. Dim darkness, and this leafy labyrinth.

Com. Could that divide you from near-ushering guides?

Lad. They left me weary on a grassy turf.

Com. By falsehood, or discourtesy, or why?

Lad. To seek i' the valley some cool friendly
 spring.

Com. And left your fair side all unguarded,
 lady?

Lad. They were but twain, and purpos'd quick return.

Com. Perhaps forestalling night prevented them.

Lad. How easy my misfortune is to hit!

Com. Imports their loss, beside the present need?

Lad. No less than if I should my brothers lose.

Com. Were they of manly prime, or youthful bloom?

Lad. As smooth as Hebe's their unrazor'd lips.

Com. Two such I saw, what time the labor'ox
 In his loose traces from the furrow came,
 And the swink't hedger at his supper sat;
 I saw them under a green mantling vine,
 That crawls long the side of yon small hill,
 Plucking ripe clusters from the tender shoots;
 Their port was more than human, as they stood:
 I took it for a fairy vision
 Of some gay creatures of the element,
 That in the colors of the rainbow live,
 And play i' the plighted clouds. I was awe-struck
 And, as I past, I worshipt; if those you seek,
 It were a journey like the path to heaven,
 To help you find them.

Lad. Gentle villager,

What readiest way would bring me to that place?

Com. Due west it rises from this shrubby point.

Lad. To find out that, good shepherd, I suppose,

In such a scant allowance of star-light,
 Would overtask the best land-pilot's art,
 Without the sure guess of well-practis'd feet.

Com. I know each lane, and every alley green,
 Dingle, or bushy dell of this wild wood,
 And every bosky bourn from side to side,
 My daily walks and ancient neighborhood;
 And if your stray attendants be yet lodg'd,
 Or shroud within these limits, I shall know
 Ere morrow wake, or the low-roosted lark

From her thatch'd pallet rouse ; if otherwise,
I can conduct you, lady, to a low
But loyal cottage, where you may be safe
Till further quest.

Lad. Shepherd, I take thy word
And trust thy honest offer'd courtesy,
Which oft is sooner found in lowly sheds
With smoky rafters, than in tap'stry halls
In courts of princes, where it first was nam'd
And yet is most pretended : in a place
Less warranted than this, or less secure,
I cannot be, that I should fear to change it.—
Eye me, blest Providence, and square my trial
To my proportion'd strength—Shepherd, lead on.

[Exeunt.]

Enter The Two Brothers.

El. Br. Unmuffle, ye faint stars ; and thou, fair moon,

That wont'st to love the traveller's benison,
Stoop thy pale visage through an amber cloud,
And disinherit Chaos, that reigns here
In double night of darkness and of shades ;
Or, if your influence be quite damm'd up
With black usurping mists, some gentle taper,
Though a rush-candle from the wicker hole
Of some clay habitation, visit us
With thy long-levell'd rule of streaming light ;
And thou shalt be our star of Arcady,
Or Tyrian Cynosure.

Sec. Br. Or, if our eyes
Be barr'd that happiness, might we but hear
The folded flocks penn'd in their wattled cotes,
Or sound of pastoral reed with oaten stops,
Or whistle from the lodge, or village cock
Count the night watches to his feathery dames,
'Twould be some solace yet, some little cheering,
In this close dungeon of innumerable boughs.
But, O that hapless virgin, our lost sister !
Where may she wander now, whither betake her
From the chill dew, among rude burs and thistles ?

Perhaps some cold bank is her bolster now,
Or 'gainst the rugged bark of some broad elm
Leans her unpillow'd head, fraught with sad fears.

What, if in wild amazement and affright ?
Or, while we speak, within the direful grasp
Of savage hunger or of savage heat ?

El. Br. Peace, brother : be not over-exquisite
To cast the fashion of uncertain evils :
For grant they be so, while they rest unknown,
What need a man forestall his date of grief,
And run to meet what he would most avoid ?
Or, if they be but false alarms of fear,
How bitter is such self-delusion !
I do not think my sister so to seek,
Or so unprincipled in Virtue's book,
And the sweet peace that goodness bosoms ever,
As that the single want of light and noise
(Not being in danger, as I trust she is not,)
Could stir the constant mood of her calm thoughts
And put them into misbecoming plight.
Virtue could see to do what virtue would
By her own radiant light, though sun and moon

Were in the flat sea sunk. And Wisdom's self
Oft seeks to sweet retired solitude ;
Where, with her best nurse, Contemplation,
She plumes her feathers, and lets grow her wings,
That in the various bustle of resort
Were all too ruffled, and sometimes impair'd.
He that has light within his own clear breast
May sit i' the centre, and enjoy bright day :
But he that hides a dark soul and foul thoughts,
Benighted walks under the mid-day sun ;
Himself is his own dungeon.

Sec. Br. 'Tis most true,
That musing meditation most effects
The pensive secrecy of desert cell,
Far from the cheerful haunt of men and herds,
And sits as safe as in a senate-house ;
For who would rob a hermit of his weeds,
His few books, or his beads, or maple dish,
Or do his grey hairs any violence ?
But Beauty, like the fair Hesperian tree
Laden with blooming gold, had need the guard
Of dragon-watch, with unenchanted eye,
To save her blossoms, and defend her fruit,
From the rash hand of bold incontinence.
You may as well spread out the unsunn'd heaps
Of miser's treasure by an outlaw's den,
And tell me it is safe, as bid me hope
Danger will wink on opportunity,
And let a single helpless maiden pass
Uninjur'd in this wild surrounding waste.
Of night, or loneliness, it recks me not ;
I fear the dread events that dog them both,
Lest some ill-greeting touch attempt the person
Of our unowned sister.

El. Br. I do not, brother,
Infer, as if I thought my sister's state
Secure, without all doubt or controversy ;
Yet, where an equal poise of hope and fear
Does arbitrate the event, my nature is
That I incline to hope, rather than fear,
And gladly banish squint suspicion.
My sister is not so defenceless left
As you imagine ; she has a hidden strength
Which you remember not.

Sec. Br. What hidden strength,
Unless the strength of Heaven, if you mean that ?

El. Br. I mean that too, but yet a hidden strength,
Which, if Heaven gave it, may be term'd her
own ;

'Tis chastity, my brother, chastity :
She that has that is clad in complete steel ;
And, like a quiver'd nymph with arrows keen,
May trace huge forests, and unharbor'd heaths,
Infamous hills, and sandy perilous wilds ;
Where, through the sacred rays of chastity,
No savage fierce, bandit, or mountaineer,
Will dare to soil her virgin purity :
Yea there, where very desolation dwells,
By grots and caverns shagg'd with horrid shades,
She may pass on with unblench'd majesty,
Be it not done in pride, or in presumption.
Some say, no evil thing that walks by night

In fog or fire, by lake or moorish fen,
 Blue meagre hag, or stubborn unlaid ghost
 That breaks his magic chains at curfew time,
 No goblin, or swart fairy of the mine,
 Hath hurtful power o'er true virginity.
 Do ye believe me yet, or shall I call
 Antiquity from the old schools of Greece
 To testify the arms of chastity?
 Hence had the huntress Dian her dread bow,
 Fair silver-shafted queen, for ever chaste,
 Wherewith she tamed the brindled lioness
 And spotted mountain-pard, but set at nought
 The frivolous bolt of Cupid; gods and men
 Fear'd her stern frown, and she was queen o'
 the woods.

What was that snaky-headed Gorgon shield,
 That wise Minerva wore, unconquer'd virgin.
 Wherewith she freez'd her foes to congeal'd
 But rigid looks of chaste austerity, [stone,
 And noble grace, that dash'd brute violence
 With sudden adoration and blank awe?
 So dear to Heaven is saintly chastity,
 That, when a soul is found sincerely so,
 A thousand liveried angels lackey her,
 Driving far off each thing of sin and guilt;
 And, in clear dream and solemn vision,
 Tell her of things that no gross ear can hear;
 Till oft converse with heavenly habitants
 Begin to cast a beam on the outward shape,
 The unpolluted temple of the mind,
 And turns it by degrees to the soul's essence,
 Till all be made immortal: but when lust,
 By unchaste looks, loose gestures, and foul talk,
 But most by lewd and lavish act of sin,
 Lets in defilement to the inward parts,
 The soul grows clotted by contagion,
 Imbodies, and imbrutes, till she quite lose
 The divine property of her first being.
 Such are those thick and gloomy shadows damp,

Oft seen in charnel vaults and sepulchres
 Ling'ring, and sitting by a new-made grave,
 As loth to leave the body that it lov'd,
 And link'd itself by carnal sensuality
 To a degenerate and degraded state.

Sec. Br. How-charming is divine philosophy!
 Not harsh, and crabbed, as dull fools suppose,
 But musical as is Apollo's lute,
 And a perpetual feast of nectar'd sweets,
 Where no crude surfeit reigns.

El. Br. List, list; I hear,
 Some far-off halloo break the silent air.

Sec. Br. Methought so too; what should it be?

El. Br. For certain,
 Either some one like us night-founder'd here,
 Or else some neighbor woodman, or, at worst,
 Some roving robber, calling to his fellows.

Sec. Br. Heaven keep my sister. Again, again, and near!

Best draw, and stand upon our guard.

El. Br. I'll halloo:
 If he be friendly, he comes well; if not,
 Defence is a good cause, and Heaven be for us.
 [Enter the Attendant Spirit habited like a shepherd.]

That halloo I should know; what are you? speak;
 Come not too near, you fall on iron stakes else.

Spir. What voice is that? my young lord?
 speak again.

Sec. Br. O brother, 'tis my father's shepherd,
 sure.

El. Br. Thyrsis? Whose artful strains have oft delay'd

The huddling brook to hear his madrigal;
 And sweeten'd every musk-rose of the dale?
 How com'st thou here, good swain? hath any ram

Slipt from the fold, or young kid lost his dam,
 Or straggling wether the pent flock forsook?
 How could'st thou find this dark sequester'd
 nook?

Spir. O my lov'd master's heir, and his next
 joy,

I came not here on such a trivial toy
 As a stray'd ewe, or to pursue the stealth
 Of pilfering wolf: not all the fleecy wealth,
 That doth enrich these downs, is worth a thought
 To this my errand, and the care it brought.
 But, O my virgin lady, where is she?
 How chance she is not in your company?

El. Br. To tell thee sadly, shepherd, without blame,

Or our neglect, we lost her as we came.

Spir. Ay me unhappy! then my fears are true.

El. Br. What fears, good Thyrsis? Pr'ythee briefly show.

Spir. I'll tell ye: 'tis not vain or fabulous.
 (Though so esteem'd by shallow ignorance,)
 What the sage poets, taught by the heavenly
 Muse,

Storied of old in high immortal verse,
 Of dire chimeras, and enchanted isles,
 And rifted rocks whose entrance leads to hell;
 For such there be, but unbelief is blind.

Within the navel of this hideous wood,
 Immur'd in cypress shades a sorcerer dwells,
 Of Bacchus and of Circe born, great Comus,
 Deep skill'd in all his mother's witcheries;
 And here to every thirsty wanderer
 By sly enticement gives his baneful cup,
 With many murmurs mix'd, whose pleasing poison

The visage quite transforms of him that drinks.
 And the inglorious likeness of a beast
 Fixes instead, unmoulding reason's mintage
 Character'd in the face: this have I learnt
 Tending my flocks hard by i' the hilly crofts,
 That brow this bottom glade; whence night by
 night

He and his monstrous rout are heard to howl,
 Like stabled wolves, or tigers at their prey,
 Doing abhorred rites to Hecate

In their obscured haunts of inmost bowers.
 Yet have they many baits, and guileful spells,
 To inveigle and invite the unwary sense
 Of them that pass unweeting by the way.

This evening late, by then the chewing flocks
 Had ta'en their supper on the savory herb
 Of knot-grass dew-beesprent, and were in fold,

I sat me down to watch upon a bank
 With ivy canopied, and interwove
 With flaunting honeysuckle, and began,
 Wrapt in a pleasing fit of melancholy,
 To meditate my rural minstrelsy,
 Till fancy had her fill; but, ere a close,
 The wonted roar was up amidst the woods,
 And fill'd the air with barbarous dissonance;
 At which I ceas'd, and listen'd them a while,
 Till an unusual stop of sudden silence
 Gave respite to the drowsy frighted steeds,
 That draw the litter of close-curtain'd sleep;
 At last a soft and solemn-breathing sound
 Rose like a steam of rich distill'd perfumes,
 And stole upon the air, that even silence
 Was took ere she was ware, and wish'd she might Deny her nature, and be never more,
 Still to be so displac'd. I was all ear,
 And took in strains that might create a soul
 Under the ribs of Death; but O! ere long,
 Too well I did perceive it was the voice
 Of my most honor'd lady, your dear sister.
 Amaz'd I stood, harrow'd with grief and fear,
 And, O poor hapless nightingale, thought I,
 How sweet thou sing'st, how near the deadly snare!

Then down the lawns I ran with headlong haste,
 Through paths and turnings often trod by day,
 Till, guided by mine ear, I found the place,
 Where that damn'd wizard, hid in sly disguise,
 (For so by certain signs I knew,) had met
 Already, ere my best speed could prevent,
 The aidless innocent lady, his wish'd prey;
 Who gently ask'd if he had seen such two,
 Supposing him some neighbor villager.
 Longer I durst not stay, but soon I guess'd
 Ye were the two she meant; with that I sprung
 Into swift flight, till I had found you here;
 But further know I not.

Sec. Br. O night, and shades!
 How are ye join'd with hell in triple knot
 Against the unarm'd weakness of one virgin,
 Alone and helpless! Is this the confidence
 You gave me, brother?

El. Br. Yes, and keep it still;
 Lean on it safely; not a period
 Shall be unsaid for me: against the threats
 Of malice, or of sorcery, or that power
 Which erring men call chance, this I hold firm,—
 Virtue may be assail'd, but never hurt,
 Surpris'd by unjust force, but not enthrall'd:
 Yea, even that, which mischief meant most harm,
 Shall in the happy trial prove most glory:
 But evil on itself shall back recoil,
 And mix no more with goodness; when at last
 Gather'd like scum, and settled to itself,
 It shall be in eternal restless change
 Self-fed and self-consum'd: if this fail,
 The pillar'd firmament is rottenness,
 And earth's base built on stubble.—But come,
 let's on.

Against the opposing will and arm of Heaven
 May never this just sword be lifted up;
 But for that damn'd magician, let him be girt

With all the grisly legions that troop
 Under the sooty flag of Acheron, Harpies and Hydras, or all the monstrous-
 forms

"Twixt Africa and Ind, I'll find him out,
 And force him to return his purchase back,
 Or drag him by the curls to a foul death,
 Curs'd as his life.

Spir. Alas! good venturous youth,
 I love thy courage yet, and bold emprise;
 But here thy sword can do thee little stead;
 Far other arms and other weapons must
 Be those, that quell the might of hellish charms:
 He with his bare wand can unthread thy joints,
 And crumble all thy sinews.

El. Br. Why pr'ythe, shepherd,
 How durst thou then thyself approach so near,
 As to make this relation?

Spir. Care, and utmost shifts,
 How to secure the lady from surprisal,
 Brought to my mind a certain shepherd lad,
 Of small regard to see to, yet well skill'd
 In every virtuous plant, and healing herb,
 That spreads her verdant leaf to th' morning ray
 He lov'd me well, and oft would beg me sing;
 Which when I did, he on the tender grass
 Would sit and hearken even to ecstasy,
 And in requital ope his leathern scrip,
 And show me simples of a thousand names,
 Telling their strange and vigorous faculties:
 Amongst the rest a small unsightly root,
 But of divine effect, he cull'd me out;
 The leaf was darkish, and had prickles on it,
 But in another country, as he said,
 Bore a bright golden flower, but not in this soil:

Unknown, and light esteem'd, and the dull swain
 Treads on it daily with his clouted shoon:
 And yet more medicinal is it than that moly,
 That Hermes once to wise Ulysses gave;
 He call'd it hæmony, and gave it me,
 And bade me keep it as of sov'reign use
 'Gainst all enchantments, mildew, blast, or damp,
 Or ghastly furies' apparition.

I purs'd it up, but little reckoning made,
 Till now that this extremity compell'd:
 But now I find it true; for by this means
 I knew the foul enchanter though disguis'd,
 Enter'd the very lime-twigs of his spells,
 And yet came off: if you have this about you,
 (As I will give you when we go) you may
 Boldly assault the necromancer's hall;
 Where if he be, with dauntless hardihood,
 And brandish'd blade, rush on him; break his glass,
 And shed the luscious liquor on the ground,
 But seize his wand; though he and his curs'd crew

Fierce sign of battle make, and menace high,
 Or like the sons of Vulcan vomit smoke,
 Yet will they soon retire, if he but shrink.

El. Br. Thyrsis, lead on apace, I'll follow
 thee
 And some good angel bear a shield before us.

The Scene changes to a stately palace, set out with all manner of deliciousness: soft music, tables spread with all dainties. Comus appears with his rabble, and the Lady set in an enchanted chair, to whom he offers his glass, which she puts by, and goes about to rise.

Comus.

Nay, lady, sit; if I but wave this wand,
Your nerves are all chain'd up in alabaster,
And you a statue, or, as Daphne was,
Root-bound, that fled Apollo.

Lad.

Fool, do not boast;
Thou canst not touch the freedom of my mind
With all thy charms, although this corporal rind
Thou hast immanacled, while Heaven sees good.

Com. Why are you vex'd, lady? Why do you frown?

Here dwell no frowns, nor anger; from these gates

Sorrow flies far: see, here be all the pleasures,
That fancy can beget on youthful thoughts,
When the fresh blood grows lively, and returns
Brisk as the April buds in primrose-season.
And first, behold this cordial julep here,
That flames and dances in his crystal bounds,
With spirits of balm and fragrant syrups mix'd;
Not that nepenthes, which the wife of Thone
In Egypt gave to Jove-born Helena,
Is of such power to stir up joy as this,
To life so friendly, or so cool to thirst.
Why should you be so cruel to yourself,
And to those dainty limbs, which nature lent
For gentle usage and soft delicacy?
But you invert the covenants of her trust,
And harshly deal like an ill borrower
With that which you receiv'd on other terms;
Scorning the unexempt condition,
By which all mortal frailty must subsist,
Refreshment after toil, ease after pain,
That have been tir'd all day without repast,
And timely rest have wanted; but, fair virgin,
This will restore all soon.

Lad.

'Twill not, false traitor!

'Twill not restore the truth and honesty,
That thou hast banish'd from thy tongue with lies.

Was this the cottage, and the safe abode,
Thou told'st me of? What grim aspects are these,
These ugly-headed monsters? Mercy guard me!
Hence with thy brew'd enchantments, foul deceiver!

Hast thou betray'd my credulous innocence
With visor'd falsehood and base forgery?
And would'st thou seek again to trap me here
With lickerish baits, fit to ensnare a brute?
Were it a draught for Juno when she banquets,
I would not taste thy treasonous offer; none
But such as are good men can give good things;
And that which is not good, is not delicious
To a well-govern'd and wise appetite.

Com. O foolishness of men! that lend their ears
To those budge doctors of the Stoic fur,
And fetch their precepts from the Cynic tub,
Praising the lean and sallow abstinence.

Wherefore did nature pour her bounties forth
With such a full and unwithdrawing hand,
Covering the earth with odours, fruits, and flocks,
Thronging the seas with spawn innumerable,
But all to please and sate the curious taste?
And set to work millions of spinning worms,
That in their green-shops weave the smooth-
hair'd silk,

To deck her sons; and that no corner might
Be vacant of her plenty, in her own loins
She hutch'd the all-worshipt ore, and precious gems,

To store her children with: if all the world
Should in a pet of temperance feed on pulse, Drink the clear stream, and nothing wear but frieze,

The All-giver would be unthank'd, would be unprais'd,

Not half his riches known, and yet despis'd;
And we should serve him as a grudging master,
As a penurious niggard of his wealth;
And live like nature's bastards, not her sons,
Who would be quite surcharg'd with her own
weight,

And strangled with her waste fertility;
The earth cumber'd, and the wing'd air dark'd with plumes,

The herds would over-multitude their lords,
The sea o'erfraught would swell, and the unsought diamonds

Would so emblaze the forehead of the deep,
And so bestud with stars, that they below
Would grow inur'd to light and come at last
To gaze upon the sun with shameless brows.

List, lady: be not coy, and be not cozen'd
With that same vaunted name, virginity.
Beauty is nature's coin, must not be hoarded,
But must be current; and the good thereof
Consists in mutual and partaken bliss,
Unsavoury in the enjoyment of itself;

If you let slip time, like a neglected rose
It withers on the stalk with languish'd head.
Beauty is nature's brag, and must be shown
In courts, at feasts, and high solemnities,
Where most may wonder at the workmanship;
It is for homely features to keep home,
They had their name thence; coarse complexions,
And cheeks of sorry grain, will serve to ply
The sampler, and to tease the housewife's wool.
What need a vermeil-tinctur'd lip for that,
Love-darting eyes, or tresses like the Morn?
There was another meaning in these gifts;
Think what, and be advis'd; you are but young yet.

Lad. I had not thought to have unlock'd my lips
In this unhallow'd air, but that this juggler
Would think to charm my judgment, as mine eyes,
Obtruding false rules prank'd in reason's garb.
I hate when vice can bolt her arguments,
And virtue has no tongue to check her pride.—
Impostor! do not charge most innocent nature,
As if she would her children should be riotous
With her abundance; she, good cateress,
Means her provision only to the good,

That live according to her sober laws,
 And holy dictate of spare temperance:
 If every just man, that now pines with want,
 Had but a moderate and beeseeming share
 Of that which lewdly-pamper'd luxury
 Now heaps upon some few with vast excess,
 Nature's full blessings would be well dispens'd
 In unsuperfluous even proportion,
 And she no whit encumber'd with her store;
 And then the Giver would be better thank'd,
 His praise due paid: for swinish gluttony
 Ne'er looks to Heaven amidst her gorgeous feast,
 But with besotted base ingratitude
 Crams, and blasphemes his feeder. Shall I go on?
 Or have I said enough? To him that dares
 Arm his profane tongue with contemptuous words
 Against the sun-clad power of chastity,
 Fain would I something say, yet to what end?
 Thou hast nor ear, nor soul, to apprehend
 The sublime notion, and high mystery,
 That must be uttered to unfold the sage
 And serious doctrine of virginity;
 And thou art worthy that thou shouldst not know
 More happiness than this thy present lot.
 Enjoy your dear wit, and gay rhetoric,
 That hath so well been taught her dazzling fence;
 Thou art not fit to hear thyself convinc'd:
 Yet, should I try, the uncontrolled worth
 Of this pure cause would kindle my rapt spirits
 To such a flame of sacred vehemence,
 That dumb things would be mov'd to sympathize,
 And the brute earth would lend her nerves and shake,

Fill all thy magic structures, rear'd so high,
 Were shatter'd into heaps o'er thy false head.

Com. She fables not; I feel that I do fear
 Her words set off by some superior power;
 And though not mortal, yet a cold shuddering dew
 Dips me all o'er, as when the wrath of Jove
 Speaks thunder, and the chains of Erebus,
 To some of Saturn's crew. I must dissemble,
 And try her yet more strongly.—Come, no more;
 This is mere moral babble, and direct,
 Against the canon-laws of our foundation;
 I must not suffer this: yet 'tis but the lees
 And settlings of a melancholy blood:
 But this will cure all straight: one sip of this
 Will bathe the drooping spirits in delight,
 Beyond the bliss of dreams. Be wise and taste.

The Brothers rush in with swords drawn, wrest his glass out of his hand, and break it against the ground; his rout make sign of resistance, but are all driven in. The Attendant Spirit comes in.

Spirit.

What, have you let the false enchanter 'scape?
 O ye mistook, ye should have snatch'd his wand,
 And bound him fast; without his rod revers'd,
 And backward mutters of dissevering power,
 We cannot free the lady that sits here
 In stony fetters fix'd, and motionless:
 Yet stay, be not disturb'd; now I bethink me,
 Some other means I have which may be us'd,

Which once of Melibœus old I learn'd,
 The soothest shepherd that e'er pip'd on plains.

There is a gentle nymph not far from hence,
 That with moist curb sways the smooth Severn
 stream,
 Sabrina is her name, a virgin pure;
 Whilom she was the daughter of Locrine,
 That had the sceptre from his father brute.
 She, guiltless damsel, flying the mad pursuit
 Of her enraged stepdame Guendolen,
 Commended her fair innocence to the flood,
 That staid her flight with his cross-flowing course.
 The water-nymphs, that in the bottom play'd,
 Held up their pearly wrists, and took her in,
 Bearing her straight to aged Nereus' hall;
 Who, piteous of her woes, rear'd her lank head,
 And gave her to his daughters to imbathe
 In nectar'd lavers, strew'd with asphodel;
 And through the porch and inlet of each sense
 Dropt in ambrosial oils, till she reviv'd,
 And underwent a quick immortal change,
 Made goddess of the river: still she retains
 Her maiden gentleness, and oft at eve
 Visits the herds along the twilight meadows,
 Helping all urchin blasts, and ill-luck signs
 That the shrewd meddling elfe delights to make,
 Which she with precious vial'd liquors heals;
 For which the shepherds at their festivals
 Carol her goodness loud in rustic lays,
 And throw sweet garland wreaths into her stream
 Of pansies, pinks, and gaudy daffodils.
 And, as the old swain said, she can unlock
 The clasp charm, and thaw the numbing spell,
 If she be right invok'd in warbled song;
 For maidenhood she loves, and will be swift
 To aid a virgin, such as was herself,
 In hard-besetting need; this will I try,
 And add the power of some adjuring verse.

SONG.

Sabrina fair,
 Listen where thou art sitting
 Under the glassy, cool, translucent wave,
 In twisted braids of lilies knitting
 The loose train of thy amber-dropping hair;
 Listen for dear honor's sake,
 Goddess of the silver lake,
 Listen, and save.

Listen, and appear to us,
 In name of great Oceanus;
 By the earth-shaking Neptune's mace,
 And Tethys' grave majestic pace,
 By hoary Nereus' wrinkled look,
 And the Carpathian wizard's hook,
 By scaly Triton's winding shell,
 And old soothsaying Glaucus' spell,
 By Leucothea's lovely hands,
 And her son that rules the strands,
 By Thetis' tinsel-slipper'd feet,
 And the songs of Syrens sweet,
 By dead Parthenope's dear tomb,
 And fair Ligea's golden comb,
 Wherewith she sits on diamond rocks,
 Sleeking her soft alluring locks;

By all the nymphs that nightly dance
Upon thy streams with wily glance,
Rise, rise, and heave thy rosy head,
From thy coral-paven bed,
And bridle in thy headlong wave,
'Till thou our summons answer'd have.

Listen, and save.

Sabrina rises, attended by water-nymphs, and sings.

By the rushy-fringed bank,
Where grows the willow, and the osier dank,

My sliding chariot stays,
Thick set with agate, and the azure sheen
Of turkoi blue, and em'rald green,

That in the channel strays;
Whilst from off the waters fleet
Thus I set my printless feet
O'er the cowslip's velvet head,
That bends not as I tread;
Gentle swain, at thy request,
I am here.

Spir. Goddess dear,
We implore thy powerful hand
To undo the charmed band
Of true virgin here distressed,
Through the force, and through the wile,
Of unblest enchanter vile.

Sabr. Shepherd, 'tis my office best
To help ensnared chastity:
Brightest lady, look on me:
Thus I sprinkle on thy breast
Drops, that from my fountain pure
I have kept, of precious cure;
Thrice upon thy finger's tip
Thrice upon thy rubied lip:
Next this marble venom'd seat,
Smear'd with gums of glutinous heat,
I touch with chaste palms moist and cold:—
Now the spell hath lost his hold;
And I must haste, ere morning hour,
To wait in Amphitrite's bower.

Sabrina descends, and the Lady rises out of her seat.

Spir. Virgin, daughter of Loocrine,
Sprung of old Anchises' line,
May thy brimmed waves for this
Their full tribute never miss
From a thousand petty rills,
That tumble down the snowy hills:
Summer drought, or singed air,
Never scorch thy tresses fair,
Nor wet October's torrent flood
Thy molten crystal fill with mud;
May thy billows roll ashore
The beryl and the golden ore;
May thy lofty head be crown'd
With many a tower and terrace round,
And here and there thy banks upon
With groves of myrrh and cinnamon.

Come, lady, while Heaven lends us grace,
Let us fly this cursed place,
Lest the sorcerer us entice
With some other new device.
Not a waste or needless sound,

Till we come to holier ground;
I shall be your faithful guide
Through this gloomy covert wide
And not many furlongs thence
Is your father's residence,
Where this night are met in state
Many a friend to gratulate
His wish'd presence; and beside
All the swains, that there abide,
With jigs and rural dance resort;
We shall catch them at their sport,
And our sudden coming there
Will double all their mirth and cheer:
Come, let us haste, the stars grow high,
But night sits monarch yet in the mid-sky.

The Scene changes, presenting Ludlow town and the president's castle; then come in country dancers, after them the Attendant Spirit, with the two Brothers, and the Lady.

SONG.

Spir. Back, shepherds, back; enough your play,
Till next sun-shine holiday:
Here be, without duck or nod
Other trippings to be trod
Of lighter toes, and such court guise
As Mercury did first devise
With the mincing Dryades,
On the lawns, and on the leas.

This second Song presents them to their Father and Mother.

Noble lord, and lady bright,
I have brought ye new delight;
Here behold so goodly grown
Three fair branches of your own;
Heaven hath timely tried their youth,
Their faith, their patience, and their truth,
And sent them here through hard assays
With a crown of deathless praise,
To triumph in victorious dance
O'er sensual folly and intemperance.

The dances [being] ended, the Spirit epiloguizes.

Spir. To the ocean now I fly,
And those happy climes that lie
Where day never shuts his eye,
Up in the broad fields of the sky:
There I suck the liquid air,
All amidst the gardens fair
Of Hesperus, and his daughters three
That sing about the golden tree:
Along the crisped shades and bowers
Revels the spruce and jocund Spring;
The Graces, and the rosy-bosom'd Hours,
Thither all their bounties bring;
There eternal Summer dwells,
And west-winds, with musky wing,
About the cedarn alleys fling
Nard and cassia's balmy smells.
Iris there with humid bow
Waters the odorous banks, that blow
Flowers of more mingled hue
Than her purpled scarf can show;
And drenches with Elysian dew

(List, mortals, if your ears be true)
 Beds of hyacinth and roses,
 Where young Adonis oft reposes,
 Waxing well of his deep wound
 In slumber soft, and on the ground
 Sadly sits the Assyrian queen :
 But far above in spangled sheen
 Celestial Cupid, her fam'd son, advanc'd,
 Holds his dear Psyche sweet entranc'd,
 After her wand'ring labors long
 'Till free consent the gods among
 Make her his eternal bride,
 And from her fair unspotted side
 Two blissful twins are to be born,
 Youth and Joy ; so Jove hath sworn.

But now my task is smoothly done,
 I can fly, or I can run
 Quickly to the green earth's end,
 Where the bow'd welkin slow doth bend,
 And from thence can soar as soon
 To the corners of the moon.

Mortals that would follow me,
 Love virtue ; she alone is free :
 She can teach ye how to climb
 Higher than the sphery chime ;
 Or if virtue feeble were,
 Heaven itself would stoop to her.

SONNETS.

To the Nightingale.

O NIGHTINGALL, that on yon bloomy spray
 Warblest at eve, when all the woods are still,
 Thou with fresh hope the lover's heart dost fill,

While the jolly hours lead on propitious May.
 Thy liquid notes that close the eye of day,

First heard before the shallow cuckoo's bill,
 Portend success in love ; O if Jove's will
 Have link'd that amorous power to thy soft lay,
 Now timely sing, ere the rude bird of hate
 Foretell my hopeless doom in some grove nigh ;
 As thou from year to year hast sung too late
 For my relief, yet hadst no reason why :

Whether the Muse, or Love call thee his mate,
 Both them I serve, and of their train am I.

On his being arrived at the Age of Twenty-three.
 How soon hath time, the subtle thief of youth,
 Stol'n on his wing my three and twentieth year !

My hasting days fly on with full career,
 But my late spring no bud or blossom shew'th.
 Perhaps my semblance might deceive the truth,

That I to manhood am arriv'd so near,
 And inward ripeness doth much less appear,
 That some more timely happy spirits indu'th.

Yet be it less or more, or soon or slow,
 It shall be still in strictest measure even

To that same lot, however mean or high,
 Toward which time leads me, and the will of Heav'n ;

All is, if I have grace to use it so,
 As ever in my great Task-master's eye.

When the Assault was intended for the City.

CAPTAIN or Colonel, or Knight in arms,
 Whose chance on these defenceless doors may seize,

If deed of honor did thee ever please,
 Guard them, and him within protect from harms.
 He can requite thee, for he knows the charms

That call fame on such gentle acts as these,
 And he can spread thy name o'er lands and seas,
 Whatever clime the sun's bright circle warms.

Lift not thy spear against the Muses' bower :
 The great Emathian conqueror bid spare
 The house of Pindarus, when temple and tow'r

Went to the ground : and the repeated air
 Of sad Electra's poet had the power
 To save th' Athenian walls from ruin bare.

To the Lord General Fairfax.

FAIRFAX, whose name in arms through Europe
 rings,

Filling each mouth with envy or with praise,
 And all her jealous monarchs with amaze,
 And rumours loud, that daunt remotest kings ;
 Thy firm unshaken virtue ever brings

Victory home, though new rebellions raise
 Their hydraheads, and the false North displays
 Her broken league to imp their serpent wings.

O yet a nobler task awaits thy hand,
 (For what can war, but endless war still breed ?)
 'Till truth and right from violence be freed
 And public faith clear'd from the shameful brand
 Of public fraud. In vain doth valor bleed,
 While avarice and rapine share the land.

To the Lord General Cromwell.

CROMWELL, our chief of men, who through a cloud
 Not of war only, but detractions rude,

Guided by faith, and matchless fortitude,
 To peace and truth thy glorious way hast plough'd,
 And on the neck of crowned Fortune proud

Hast rear'd God's trophies, and his work pursued,

While Darwen stream with blood of Scots imbrued,

And Dunbar field resounds thy praises loud,
 And Worcester's laureat wreath. Yet much remains

To conquer still ; Peace hath her victories
 No less renown'd than war : new foes arise
 Threat'ning to bind our souls with secular chains :
 Help us to save free conscience from the paw
 Of hireling wolves, whose gospel is their maw.

To Sir Henry Vane the younger.

VANE, young in years, but in sage counsel old
 Than whom a better senator ne'er held
 The helm of Rome, when gowns not arms repell'd

The fierce Epirot and the African bold,
 Whether to settle peace, or to unfold

The drift of hollow states hard to be spell'd,
 Then to advise how War may, best upheld,
 Move by her two main nerves, iron and gold,
 In all her equipage: besides to know
 Both spiritual power and civil, what each means, Whatsevers each, thou hast learn'd, which few have done:
 The bounds of either sword to thee we owe;
 Therefore on thy firm hand Religion leans
 In peace, and reckons thee her eldest son.

On the late Massacre in Piedmont.

AVENGE, O Lord, thy slaughter'd saints, whose bones
 Lie scatter'd on the Alpine mountains cold;
 E'en them who kept thy truth so pure of old,
 When all our fathers worship'd stocks and stones,
 Forget not; in thy book record their groans
 Who were thy sheep, and in their ancient fold
 Slain by the bloody Piemontese that roll'd
 Mother with infant down the rocks. Their moans
 The vales redoubled to the hills, and they
 To Heav'n. Their martyr'd blood and ashes sow
 O'er all th' Italian fields, where still doth sway
 The triple tyrant; that from these may grow
 A hundred fold, who having learn'd thy way,
 Early may fly the Babylonian woe.

On his Blindness.

WHEN I consider how my light is spent
 Ere half my days, in this dark world and wide,
 And that one talent which is death to hide,
 Lodg'd with me useless, though my soul more bent
 To serve therewith my Maker, and present
 My true account, lest he returning chide;
 Doth God exact day labour, light denied,
 I fondly ask? but patience to prevent
 That murmur, soon replies, God doth not need
 Either man's work or his own gifts; who best Bear his mild yoke, they serve him best: his state
 Is kingly; thousands at his bidding speed,
 And post o'er land and ocean without rest;
 They also serve who only stand and wait.

To Mr. Lawrence.

LAWRENCE, of virtuous father virtuous son,
 Now that the fields are dank, and ways are mire,
 Where shall we sometimes meet, and by the fire
 Help waste a sullen day, what may be won
 From the hard season gaining? Time will run
 On smoother, till Favonius re-inspire
 The frozen earth, and clothe in fresh attire
 The lily and rose, that neither sow'd nor spun.
 What neat repast shall feast us, light and
 choice,
 Of Attic taste, with wine, whence we may rise
 To hear the lute well touch'd, or artful voice
 Warble immortal notes and Tuscan air:
 He who of those delights can judge, and spare
 To interpose them oft, is not unwise.

To Cyriac Skinner.

CYRIAC, whose grandsire on the royal bench
 Of British Themis, with no mean applause Pronounc'd, and in his volumes taught our laws,
 Which others at their bar so often wrench;
 To day deep thoughts resolve with me to drench
 In mirth, that after no repenting draws;
 Let Euclid rest, and Archimedes pause,
 And what the Swede intends, and what the French.
 To measure life learn thou betimes, and know
 Tow'rd solid good what leads the nearest way;
 For other things mild Heav'n a time ordains,
 And disapproves that care, though wise, in
 shew,
 That with superfluous burden loads the day.
 And when God sends a cheerful hour, refrains.

To the same.

CYRIAC, this three years day these eyes, though
 clear,
 To outward view, of blemish or of spot,
 Bereft of light, their seeing have forgot,
 Nor to their idle orbs doth sight appear
 Of sun, or moon, or star, throughout the year,
 Or man, or woman. Yet I argue not Against Heav'n's hand or will, nor bate a jot
 Of heart or hope; but still bear up, and steer Right onward. What supports me? dost thou ask:
 The conscience, friend, to 've lost them over-ply'd
 In liberty's defence, my noble task,
 Of which all Europe talks from side to side.
 This thought might lead me through the world's vain mask,
 Content though blind, had I no better guide.

On his deceased Wife.

METHOUGHT I saw my late espoused saint
 Brought to me like Alcestis from the grave,
 Whom Jove's great son to her glad husband
 gave,
 Rescued from death by force, though pale and faint.
 Mine, as whom wash'd from spot of child-bed
 taint,
 Purification in the old law did save,
 And such, as yet once more I trust to have Full sight of her in heav'n without restraint,
 Came vested all in white, pure as her mind:
 Her face was veil'd, yet to my fancied sight
 Love, sweetness, goodness, in her person shin'd
 So clear, as in no face with more delight.
 But O, as to embrace me she inclin'd,
 I wak'd, she fled, and day brought back my
 night.

BERMUDAS.

WHERE the remote Bermudas ride,
In the ocean's bosom unespied ;
From a small boat, that row'd along,
The list'ning winds receiv'd this song.

What should we do but sing his praise,
That led us through the wat'ry maze,
Unto an isle so long unknown,
And yet far kinder than our own ?
Where he the huge sea-monsters wracks,
That lift the deep upon their backs.
He lands us on a grassy stage,
Safe from the storms, and prelate's rage.
He gave us this eternal spring,
Which here enamels every thing ;
And sends the fowls to us in care,
On daily visits through the air.
He hangs in shades the orange bright,
Like golden lamps in a green night ;
And does in the pomegranates close
Jewels more rich than Ormus shows.
He makes the figs our mouths to meet ;
And throws the melons at our feet.
But apples, plants of such a price,
No tree could ever bear them twice.
With cedars, chosen by his hand,
From Lebanon, he stores the land ;
And makes the hollow seas, that roar,
Proclaim the ambergrease on shore.
He cast (of which we rather boast)
The gospel's pearl upon our coast ;
And in these rocks for us did frame
A temple, where to sound his name.
Oh ! let our voice his praise exalt,
Till it arrive at heaven's vault :
Which, thence (perhaps) rebounding, may,
Echo beyond the Mexique Bay.

Thus sung they, in the English boat,
An holy and a cheerful note ;
And all the way, to guide their chime,
With falling oars they kept the time.

THE GARDEN.

How vainly men themselves amaze,
To win the palm, the oak, or bays ;
And their incessant labours see
Crown'd from some single herb, or tree,
Whose short and narrow verged shade
Does prudently their toils upbraid ;
While all the flow'rs, and trees do close,
To weave the garlands of repose.

Fair Quiet, have I found thee here,
And innocence, thy sister dear !
Mistaken long, I sought you then
In busy companys of men.
Your sacred plants, if here below,
Only among the plants will grow.
Society is all but rude
To this delicious solitude.

No white, nor red was ever seen
So am'rous as this lovely green.
Fond lovers, cruel as their flame,
Cut in these trees their mistress' name.
Little, alas, they know or heed,
How far these beautys her exceed !
Fair trees ! where'er your barks I wound,
No name shall but your own be found.

When we have run our passion's heat,
Love hither makes his best retreat.
The gods, who mortal beauty chase,
Still in a tree did end their race.
Apollo hunted Daphne so,
Only that she might laurel grow :
And Pan did after Syrinx speed,
Not as a nymph, but for a reed.

What wondrous life in this I lead !
Ripe apples drop about my head.
The luscious clusters of the vine
Upon my mouth do crush their wine.
The nectarine, the curious peach,
Into my hands themselves do reach.
Stumbling on melons, as I pass,
Insnar'd with flow'rs, I fall on grass.

Meanwhile the mind, from pleasure less,
Withdraws into its happiness ;
The mind, that ocean where each kind
Does straight its own resemblance find ;
Yet it creates, transcending these,
Far other worlds, and other seas ;
Annihilating all that's made
To a green thought in a green shade.

Here at the fountain's sliding foot,
Or at some fruit tree's mossy root,
Casting the body's vest aside,
My soul into the boughs does glide :
There, like a bird, it sits and sings,
Then whets, and claps its silver wings ;
And, till prepar'd for longer flight,
Waves in its plumes the various light.

Such was that happy garden-state,
While man there walk'd without a mate :
After a place so pure and sweet,
What other help could yet he meet !
But 'twas beyond a mortal's share
To wander solitary there :
Two Paradises are in one,
To live in Paradise alone.

How well the skilful gard'ner drew
Of flow'rs, and herbs, this dial new :
Where, from above, the milder sun
Does through a fragrant zodiac run :
And, as it works, th' industrious bee
Computes his time as well as we.
How could such sweet and wholesome hour
Be reckon'd but with herbs and flow'rs ?

WILMOT, EARL OF ROCHESTER.

LOVE AND LIFE.

ALL my past life is mine no more,
 The flying hours are gone:
 Like transitory dreams given o'er,
 Whose images are kept in store
 By memory alone.

The time that is to come is not;
 How can it then be mine?
 The present moment's all my lot;
 And that, as fast as it is got,
 Phillis, is only thine.

Then talk not of inconstancy,
 False hearts, and broken vows;
 If I, by miracle, can be
 This live-long minute true to thee,
 'Tis all that Heaven allows.

HUDIBRAS.

[FROM PART I. CANTO I.]

Hudibras and his Squire.

WHEN civil dudgeon first grew high,
 And men fell out, they knew not why;
 When hard words, jealousies, and fears,
 Set folks together by the ears,

* * * * *

When Gospel-trumpeter, surrounded
 With long-ear'd rout, to battle sounded;
 And pulpit, drum ecclesiastic,
 Was beat with fist instead of a stick;
 Then did Sir Knight abandon dwelling,
 And out he rode a colonelling*.
 A wight he was, whose very sight would Entitle him mirror of knighthood,
 That never bow'd his stubborn knee
 To any thing but chivalry,
 Nor put up blow, but that which laid
 Right worshipful on shoulder blade;
 Chief of domestic knights and errant,
 Either for chartel or for warrant;
 Great on the bench, great in the saddle,
 That could as well bind o'er as swaddle;
 Mighty he was at both of these,
 And styl'd of war, as well as peace:
 (So some rats, of amphibious nature,

* The knight (if, as is supposed, Sir Samuel Luke was M. Butler's hero) was not only a colonel in the parliament-army, but also a scout-master-general in the counties of Bedford, Surry, &c.

Are either for the land or water,)
 But here our authors make a doubt
 Whether he were more wise or stout:
 Some hold the one, and some the other,
 But, howsoe'er they make a pother,
 The difference was so small, his brain
 Outweigh'd his rage but half a grain;
 Which made some take him for a tool
 That knaves do work with, call'd a fool.
 For't has been held by many, that
 As Montaigne, playing with his cat,
 Complains she thought him but an ass,
 Much more she would Sir Hudibras:
 For that's the name our valiant knight
 To all his challenges did write.
 But they're mistaken very much;
 'Tis plain enough he was not such.
 We grant, although he had much wit,
 He was very shy of using it,
 As being loath to wear it out,
 And therefore bore it not about:
 Unless on holidays or so,
 As men their best apparel do.
 Beside, 'tis known he could speak Greek
 As naturally as pigs squeak;
 That Latin was no more difficile,
 Than to a blackbird 'tis to whistle:
 Being rich in both, he never scant'd
 His bounty unto such as wanted;
 But much of either would afford
 To many that had not one word.

* * * * *

He was in logic a great critic,
 Profoundly skill'd in analytic;
 He could distinguish, and divide
 A hair 'twixt south and south-west side;
 On either which he would dispute,
 Confute, change hands, and still confute:
 He'd undertake to prove, by force
 Of argument, a man's no horse;
 He'd prove a buzzard is no fowl,
 And that a lord may be an owl;
 A calf an alderman, a goose a justice*,
 And rooks committee-men and trustees.
 He'd run in debt by disputation,
 And pay with ratiocination:
 All this by syllogism true,
 In mood and figure he would do.
 For rhetoric, he could not ope
 His mouth, but out there flew a trope:
 And when he happen'd to break off
 I' th' middle of his speech, or cough,
 H' had hard words ready to shew why,
 And tell what rules he did it by;
 Else when with greatest art he spoke,
 You'd think he talk'd like other folk;
 For all a rhetorician's rules
 Teach nothing but to name his tools.
 But, when he pleas'd to shew't, his speech,
 In loftiness of sound, was rich;
 A Babylonish dialect,
 Which learned pedants much affect;

* Such was Alderman Pennington, who sent a person to Newgate for singing (what he called) a malignant psalm.

It was a party-colour'd dress
 Of patch'd and py-ball'd languages;
 'Twas English cut on Greek and Latin,
 Like fustian heretofore on satin;
 It had an odd promiscuous tone,
 As if h' had talk'd three parts in one;
 Which made some think, when he did gabble,
 Th' had heard three labourers of Babel,
 Or Cerberus himself pronounce
 A leash of languages at once.
 This he as volubly would vent,
 As if his stock would ne'er be spent;
 And truly, to support that charge,
 He had supplies as vast and large;
 For he could coin or counterfeit
 New words, with little or no wit;
 Words so debas'd and hard, no stone
 Was hard enough to touch them on;
 And when with hasty noise he spoke 'em,
 The ignorant for current took 'em,
 That had the orator, who once
 Did fill his mouth with pebble stones
 When he harangu'd, but known his phrase,
 He would have us'd no other ways.
 In mathematics he was greater Than Tycho Brahe* or Erra Patert†;
 For he, by geometric scale,
 Could take the size of pots of ale;
 Resolve by sines and tangents straight
 If bread or butter wanted weight;
 And wisely tell what hour o' th' day
 The clock does strike, by algebra.
 Beside, he was a shrewd philosopher,
 And had read ev'ry text and gloss over;
 Whate'er the rabbed'st author hath,
 He understood b' implicit faith;
 Whatever sceptic could inquire for,
 For ev'ry why he had a wherefore;
 Knew more than forty of them do,
 As far as words and terms could go;
 All which he understood by rote,
 And, as occasion serv'd, would quote;
 No matter whether right or wrong,
 They might be either said or sung.
 His notions fitted things so well,
 That which was which he could not tell;
 But oftentimes mistook the one
 For th' other, as great clerks have done.
 He could reduce all things to acts,
 And knew their natures by abstracts;
 Where entity and quiddity,
 The ghosts of defunct bodies, fly;
 Where truth in person does appear,
 Like words congeal'd in northern air.
 He knew what's what, and that's as high
 As metaphysic wit can fly;
 In school-divinity as able,
 As he that hight Irrefragable ‡;

* An eminent Danish mathematician.

† William Lilly, the famous astrologer of those times.

‡ Alexander Haies, so called; he was an Englishman, born in Gloucestershire, and flourished about the year 1236, at the time when what was called school-divinity was much in vogue; in which science he was so deeply read, that he was called Doctor Irrefragabilis; that is, the Invincible Doctor, whose arguments could not be resisted.

A second Thomas*, or, at once
 To name them all, another Duncet†:
 Profound in all the Nominal
 And Real ways beyond them all‡:
 For he a rope of sand could twist
 As tough as learned Sorbonist,
 And weave fine cobwebs, fit for scull
 That's empty when the moon is full;
 Such as take lodgings in a head
 That's to be let unfurnished.

* * * * *

For his religion, it was fit
 To match his learning and his wit;
 'Twas Presbyterian true blue;
 For he was of that stubborn crew§
 Of errant saints, whom all men grant
 To be the true church militant;
 Such as do build their faith upon
 The holy text of pike and gun;
 Decide all controversies by Infallible artillery;
 And prove their doctrine orthodox,
 By apostolic blows and knocks;
 Call fire, and sword, and desolation,
 A godly, thorough Reformation,
 Which always must be carry'd on,
 And still be doing, never done;
 As if religion were intended
 For nothing else but to be mended:
 A sect whose chief devotion lies
 In odd perverse antipathies;
 In falling out with that or this,
 And finding somewhat still amiss;
 More peevish, cross, and splenetic,
 Than dog distract, or monkey sick;
 That with more care keep holiday
 The wrong, than others the right way;
 Compound for sins they are inclin'd to,
 By damning those they have no mind to:
 Still so perverse and opposite,
 As if they worshipp'd God for spite.
 The self-same thing they will abhor
 One way, and long another for:
 Freewill they one way disavow,
 Another, nothing else allow:
 All piety consists therein
 In them, in other men all sin:
 Rather than fail, they will defy
 That which they love most tenderly;
 Quarrel with mine'd pies, and disparage
 Their best and dearest friend, plum porridge;
 Fat pig and goose itself oppose,
 And blaspheme custard through the nose.

* Thomas Aquinas, a Dominican friar, was born in 1224, studied at Cologne and at Paris. He never modelled the school-divinity, and was therefore called the Angelic Doctor, and Engle of divines.

† Johannes Duns Scotus was a very learned man, who lived about the end of the thirteenth, and beginning of the fourteenth century. The English and Scots strive which of them shall have the honour of his birth. The English say he was born in Northumberland; the Scots allege he was born at Dun-e in the Merse, the neighbouring county to Northumberland, and hence was called Duns Scotus.

‡ Guilelmus Occam was father of the Nominals, and Johannes Duns Scotus of the Reals.

§ This satirical description of the most extravagant of the ancient Puritans ought not to be offensive to the moderate Presbyterians of these days — Compiler.

Th' apostles of this fierce religion,
Like Mahomet's, were ass and widgeon,
To whom our knight, by fast instinct
Of wit and temper, was so likt,
As if hypocrisy and nonsense
Had got th' advowson of his conscience.

Thus was he gifted and accouter'd,
We mean on th' inside, not the outward:
That next of all we shall discuss;
Then listen, Sirs, it follows thus.

His tawny beard was th' equal grace
Both of his wisdom and his face;
In cut and die so like a tile,
A sudden view it would beguile;
The upper part whereof was whey,
The nether orange, mix'd with grey.
This hairy meteor did denounce
The fall of sceptres and of crowns;
With grisly type did represent
Declining age of government,
And tell, with hieroglyphic spade,
Its own grave and the State's were made:
Like Samson's heart-breakers, it grew

In time to make a nation rue;
Though it contributed its own fall,
To wait upon the public downfall:
It was monastic, and did grow
In holy orders by strict vow;
Of rule as sullen and severe,
As that of rigid Cordeliere:
'Twas bound to suffer persecution,
And martyrdom, with resolution;
T' oppose itself against the hate,
And vengeance of th' incensed state,
In whose defiance it was worn,
Still ready to be pull'd and torn,
With red hot irons to be tortur'd,
Revild, and spit upon, and martyr'd:
Maugre all which 'twas to stand fast
As long as monarchy should last;
But when the state should hap to reel,
'Twas to submit to fatal steel,
And fall, as it was consecrate,
A sacrifice to fall of state,
Whose thread of life the fatal sisters
Did twist together with its whiskers,
And twine so close, that time should never,
In life or death, their fortunes sever,
But with his rusty sickle mow
Both down together at a blow.

* * * * *
His doublet was of sturdy buff,
And though not sword, yet cudgel proof,
Whereby 'twas fitter for his use,
Who fear'd no blows but such as bruise.

His breeches were of rugged woollen,
And had been at the siege of Bullen;
To old king Harry so well known,
Some writers held they were his own:
Through they were lin'd with many a piece
Of ammunition bread and cheese,
And fat black puddings, proper food
For warriors that delight in blood:
For, as we said, he always chose

To carry victual in his hose.

That often tempted rats and mice
The ammunition to surprise;
And when he put a hand but in
The one or t' other magazine,
They stoutly in defence on't stood,
And from the wounded foe drew blood,
And till they were storm'd, and beaten out,
Ne'er left the fortify'd redoubt:
And though knights-errant, as some think,
Of old did neither eat nor drink,
Because when thorough deserts vast,
And regions desolate, they past,
Where belly-timber above ground,
Or under, was not to be found,
Unless they graz'd, there's not one word
Of their provision on record;
Which made some confidently write,
They had no stomachs but to fight.
'Tis false: for Arthur wore in hall
Round table like a farthingal,
On which, with shirt pull'd out behind,
And eke before, his good knights din'd;
Though 'twas no table some suppose
But a huge pair of round trunk hose,
In which he carry'd as much meat
As he and all the knights could eat,
When, laying by their swords and truncheons,
They took their breakfasts, or their luncheons.
But let that pass at present, lest
We should forget where we digest,
As learned authors use, to whom
We leave it, and to the purpose come.

His puissant sword unto his side,
Near his undaunted heart, was ty'd,
With basket hilt that would hold broth,
And serve for fight and dinner both;
In it he melted lead for bullets
To shoot at foes, and sometimes pullets.
To whom he bore so fell a grutch,
He ne'er gave quarter to any such.
The trenchant blade, Toledo trusty,
For want of fighting was grown rusty,
And ate into itself, for lack
Of somebody to hew and hack:
The peaceful scabbard, where it dwelt,
The rancour of its edge had felt;
For of the lower end two handful
It had devour'd, 'twas so manful,
And so much scorn'd to lurk in case,
As if it durst not shew its face.

In many desperate attempts
Of warrants, exigents, contempts,
It had appear'd with courage bolder
Than Serjeant Bum invading shoulder:
Oft' had it ta'en possession,
And pris'ners too, or made them run.

This sword a dagger had, his page,
That was but little for his age,
And therefore waited on him so,
As dwarfs upon knights-errant do:
It was a serviceable dudgeon,
Either for fighting or for drudging:
When it had stabb'd, or broke a head,

It would scrape trenchers, or chip bread ;
Toast cheese or bacon, though it were
To bait a mouse-trap, 'twould not care :
'Twould make clean shoes, and in the earth
Set leeks and onions, and so forth :
It had been 'prentice to a brewer,
Where this and more it did endure,
But left the trade, as many more
Have lately done on the same score.

In th' holsters, at his saddle-bow,
Two aged pistols he did stow,
Among the surplus of such meat
As in his hose he could not get :
These would inveigle rats with th' scent,
To forage when the cocks were bent,
And sometimes catch 'em with a snap,
As cleverly as the ablest trap :
They were upon hard duty still,
And ev'ry night stood sentinel,
To guard the magazine i' th' hose
From two-legg'd and from four-legg'd foes.

Thus clad and fortify'd, Sir Knight,
From peaceful home, set forth to fight.
But first with nimble active force
He got on th' outside of his horse :
For having but one stirrup ty'd
T' his saddle on the further side,
It was so short h' had much ado
To reach it with his desp'rate toe ;
But after many strains and heaves,
He got up to the saddle-eaves,
From whence he vaulted into th' seat
With so much vigour, strength, and heat,
That he had almost tumbled over
With his own weight, but did recover,
By laying hold on tail and main,
Which oft' he us'd instead of rein.

But now we talk of mounting steed,
Before we further do proceed,
It doth behove us to say something,
Of that which bore our valiant Bumkin.
The beast was sturdily, large, and tall,
With mouth of meal, and eyes of wall ;
I would say eye ; for h' had but one,
As most agree, though some say none.
He was well stay'd, and in his gait
Preserv'd a grave, majestic state ;
At spur or switch no more he skipt,
Or mended pace, than Spaniard whipt ;
And yet so fiery he would bound,
As if he griev'd to touch the ground ;
That Cæsar's horse, who, as fame goes,
Had corns upon his feet and toes,
Was not by half so tender hoof.
Nor trod upon the ground so soft ;
And as that beast would kneel and stoop
(Some write) to take his rider up ;
So Hudibras his ('tis well known)
Would often do to set him down.
We shall not need to say what lack
Of leather was upon his back ;
For that was hidden under pad,
And breech of Knight gall'd full as bad :
His strutting ribs on both sides shew'd

Like furrows he himself had plough'd ;
For underneath the skirt of pannel,
'Twixt ev'ry two there was a channel.
His dragging tail hung in the dirt,
Which on his rider he would flurt,
Still as his tender side he prickt
With arm'd heel. * * * * *

A Squire he had, whose name was Ralph*,
That in th' adventure went his half,
Though writers, for more stately tone,
Do call him Ralpho, 'tis all one ;
And when we can, with metre safe,
We'll call him so ; if not, plain Ralph ;
(For rhyme the rudder is of verses,
With which, like ships, they steer their courses.)
An equal stock of wit and valour
He had laid in ; by birth a tailor.
The mighty Tyrian queen, that gain'd,
With subtle shreds, a tract of land,
Did leave it, with a castle fair,
To his great ancestor, her heir ;
From him descended cross-legg'd knights,
Fam'd for their faith and warlike fights
Against the bloody Cannibal,
Whom they destroy'd both great and small.
This sturdy Squire, he had, as well
As the bold Trojan knight, seen hell,
Not with a counterfeited pass
Of golden bough, but true gold lace :
His knowledge was not far behind
The knight's, but of another kind,
And he another way came by 't :
Some call it gifts, and some new-light ;
A lib'ral art, that costs no pains
Of study, industry, or brains.
His wit was sent him for a token,
But in the carriage crack'd and broken ;
Like commendation ninepence crookt†
With—To and from my love—it lookt.
He ne'er consider'd it, as loth
To look a gift-horse in the mouth,
And very wisely would lay forth
No more upon it than 'twas worth ;
But as he got it freely, so
He spent it frank and freely too :
Forsaints themselves will sometimes be
Of gifts that cost them nothing, free.
By means of this, with hem and cough,
Prolongers to enlighten'd stuff,
He could deep mysteries unriddle,
As easily as thread a needle :
For as of vagabonds we say,
That they are ne'er beside their way,

* Sir Roger L'Estrange (Key to Hudibras) says, that this famous Squire was one Isaac Robinson, a zealous butcher in Moorfields, who was always contriving some new quip or cut in church-government ; but, in a Key at the end of a burlesque poem of Mr. Butler's, 1706, in folio, p. 12, it is observed, "That Hudibras's Squire was one Pemble, a tailor, and one of the Committee of Sequestrators."

† Until the year 1696, when all money, not milled, was called in, a ninepenny piece of silver was as common as sixpences or shillings ; and these ninepences were usually bent as sixpences commonly are now, which bending was called, To my love, and from my love ; and such ninepences men gave or sent to their sweethearts, as tokens of love.

What'er men speak by this new light,
Still they are sure to be i' th' right.
'Tis a dark lantern of the Spirit,
Which none see by but those that hear it;
A light that falls down from on high,
For spiritual trades to cozen by;
An ignis fatuus that bewitches,
And leads men into pools and ditches,
To make them dip themselves, and sound
For Christendom in dirty pond;
To dive, like wild fowl, for salvation,
And fish to catch regeneration.
This light inspires and plays upon
The nose of saint, like bagpipe drone,
And speaks through hollow empty soul,
As through a trunk, or whisp'ring hole,
Such language as no mortal ear
But spirit'al eaves-droppers can hear;
So Phœbus, or some friendly muse,
Into small poets song infuse,
Which they at second-hand rehearse,
Through reed or bag-pipe, verse for verse.
Thus Ralph became infallible
As three or four-legg'd oracle.
The ancient cup, or modern chair;
Spoke truth point blank, though unaware.

[FROM PART II. CANTO I.]

Hudibras and Ralph in the Stocks, are visited by the unkind Widow, with whom the former is in love.

This tattling gossip^{*} knew too well
What mischief Hudibras befel,
And straight the spiteful tidings bears
Of all, to th' unkind widow's ears.
Democritus ne'er laugh'd so loud,
To see bawds carted through the crowd,
Or funerals, with stately pomp,
March slowly on in solemn dump,
As she laugh'd out, until her back,
As well as sides, was like to crack.
She vow'd she would go see the sight,
And visit the distressed knight;
To do the office of a neighbour,
And be a gossip at his labour;
And from his wooden jail the stocks,
To set at large his fetter-locks;
And by exchange, parole, or ransom,
To free him from th' enchanted mansion.
This being resolv'd, she call'd for hood
And fisher, implements abroad
Which ladies wear, beside a slender
Young waiting damsel to attend her,
All which appearing, on she went
To find the knight, in limbo pent;
And 'twas not long before she found
Him and his stout squire in the pound;
Both coupled in enchanted tether,
By further leg behind together:
For as he sat upon his rump,
His head, like one in doleful dump,
Between his knees, his hands apply'd
Unto his ears on either side,

* Fame.

And by him, in another hole,
Afflicted Ralpho, cheek by jole:
She came upon him in his wooden
Magician's circle, on the sudden,
As spirits do t' a conjurer,
When in their dreadful shapes th' appear.
No sooner did the knight perceive her,
But straight he fell into a fever,
Inflam'd all over with disgrace,
To be seen by her in such a place;
Which made him hang his head, and scowl,
And wink and goggle like an owl:
He felt his brains begin to swim,
When thus the dame accosted him.
"This place" quoth she, "they say's enchanted,

And with delinquent spirits haunted,
That here are ty'd in chains, and scourg'd,
Until their guilty crimes be purg'd:
Look, there are two of them appear,
Like persons I have seen somewhere.
Some have mistaken blocks and posts
For spectres, apparitions, ghosts,
With saucer eyes, and horns; and some
Have heard the devil beat a drum;
But if our eyes are not false glasses,
That give a wrong account of faces,
That heard and I should be acquainted,
Before 'twas conjur'd and enchanted,
For though it be disfigur'd somewhat,
As if 't had lately been in combat,
It did belong to a worthy knight,
Howe'er this goblin is come by 't."

When Hudibras the lady heard,
Discoursing thus upon his beard,
And speak with such respect and honour
Both of the beard and the beard's owner,
He thought it best to set as good
A face upon it as he could;
And thus he spoke: "Lady, your bright
And radiant eyes are in the right;
The beard's th' identic beard you knew.
The same numerically true;
Nor is it worn by fiend or elf,
But its proprietor himself."

"O heavens!" quoth she, "can that be true?
I do begin to fear 'tis you:
Not by your individual whiskers,
But by your dialect and discourse,
That never spoke to man or beast,
In notions vulgarly exprest:
But what malignant star, alas!
Has brought you both to this sad pass?"

Quoth he, "The fortune of the war,
Which I am less afflicted for,
Than to be seen with beard and face
By you in such a homely case."

Quoth she, "Those need not be ashamed
For being honourably maim'd;
If he that is in battle conquer'd,
Have any title to his own beard,
Though yours be sorely lugg'd and torn,
It does your visage more adorn
Than if 't were prun'd, and starch'd, and lander'd,

And cut square by the Russian standard.
A torn beard's like a tatter'd ensign,
That's bravest which there are most rents in.
That petticoat about your shoulders,
Does not so well become a soldier's ;
And I'm afraid they are worse handled,
Although i' th' rear, your beard the van led ;
And those uneasy bruises make
My heart for company to ache,
To see so worshipful a friend
I' th' pillory set, at the wrong end."

Quoth Hudibras, "This thing call'd pain,
Is (as the learned Stoics maintain)
Not bad simpliciter, nor good,
But merely as 'tis understood.
Sense is deceitful, and may feign
As well in counterfeiting pain
As other gross phenomenas
In which it oft' mistakes the case.
But since th' immortal intellect
(That's free from error and defect, Whose objects still persist the same)
Is free from outward bruise or maim,
Which nought external can expose
To gross material bangs or blows,
It follows, we can ne'er be sure
Whether we pain or not endure.
And just so far are sore and griev'd
As 'y the fancy is believ'd.
Some have been wounded with conceit,
And dy'd of mere opinion straight ;
Others, though wounded sore in reason,
Felt no contusion, nor discretion.
A Saxon duke did grow so fat,
That mice (as histories relate)
Ate grits and labyrinths to dwell in
His postique parts, without his feeling ;
Then how is 't possible a kick
Should e'er reach that way to the quick?"

Quoth she, "I grant it is in vain
For one that's basted to feel pain,
Because the pangs his bones endure
Contribute nothing to the cure ;
Yet honour hurt is wont to rage
With pain no medicine can assuage."

Quoth he, "That honour's very squeamish,
That takes a basting for a blemish :
For what's more honorable than scars,
Or skin to tatters rent in wars?
Some have been beaten till they know
What wood a cudgel's of by th' blow :
Some kick'd until they can feel whether
A shoe be Spanish or neat's leather ;
And yet have met, after long running,
With some whom they have taught that cunning.
The furthest way about, t' o'ercome,
In th' end does prove the nearest home.
By laws of learned duellists
They that are bruise'd with wood or fists,
And think one beating may for once
Suffice, are cowards and poltroons ;
But if they dare engage t' a second,
They're stout and gallant fellows reckon'd."
"Th' old Romans freedom did bestow,

Our princes worship, with a blow.
King Pyrrhus cur'd his splenetic
And testy courtiers with a kick.
The Negus, when some mighty lord
Or potentate's to be restor'd,
And pardon'd for some great offence,
With which he's willing to dispense,
First has him laid upon his belly,
Then beaten back and side, t' a jelly ;
That done, he rises, humbly bows,
And gives thanks for the princely blows ;
Departs not meanly proud, and boasting
Of his magnificent rib-roasting.
The beaten soldier proves most manful,
That, like his sword, endures the anvil,
And justly's held more formidable,
The more his valour's malleable :
But he that fears a bastinado,
Will run away from his own shadow :
And though I'm now in durance fast,
By our own party basely cast,
Ransom, exchange, parole, refus'd,
And worse than by the en'my us'd ;
In close catasta shut, past hope
Of wit or valour to elope ;
As beards, the nearer that they tend
To th' earth still grow more reverend ;
And cannons shoot the higher pitches,
The lower we let down their breeches ;
I'll make this low dejected fate
Advance me to a greater height."

DESCRIPTION OF HOLLAND.

A COUNTRY that draws fifty foot of water,
In which men live as in the hold of Nature,
And when the sea does in upon them break,
And drowns a province, does but spring a leak ;
That always ply the pump, and never think
They can be safe, but at the rate they stink ;
That live as if they had been run aground,
And, when they die, are cast away and drown'd ;
That dwell in ships, like swarms of rats, and prey
Upon the goods all nations' fleets convey ;
And when their merchants are blown up and crackt,
Whole towns are cast away in storms, and wreckt,
That feed, like cannibals, on other fishes,
And serve their couns-in-germans up in dishes ;
A land that rides at anchor, and is moor'd,
In which they do not live, but go aboard.

BREVITY.

As 'tis a greater mystery in the art
Of painting to foreshorten any part
Than draw it out, so 'tis in books the chief
Of all perfections to be plain and brief.

SCENE, Venice.

ACT I. SCENE I.

Enter Priuli and Jaffier.

Priuli. No more ! I'll hear no more ; be gone and leave me.

Jaff. Not hear me ! by my suffering but you shall !

My lord, my lord ! I'm not that abject wretch
 You think me : patience ! where's the distance throws

Me back so far, but I may boldly speak
 In right, though proud oppression will not hear
 me !

Pri. Have you not wrong'd me ?

Jaff. Could my nature e'er
 Have brook'd injustice, or the doing wrongs,
 I need not now thus low have bent myself,
 To gain a hearing from a cruel father !
 Wrong'd you ?

Pri. Yes ! wrong'd me in the nicest point ;
 The honour of my house ; you have done me
 wrong.

You may remember, (for I now will speak,
 And urge its baseness,) when you first came home

From travel, with such hopes, as made you look'd on

By all men's eyes, a youth of expectation ;
 Pleas'd with your growing virtue, I receiv'd
 you ;

Court'd, and sought to raise you to your merits :
 My house, my table, nay, my fortune too,
 My very self, was yours ; you might have us'd
 me

To your best service ; like an open friend,
 I treated, trusted you, and thought you mine ;
 When in requital of my best endeavours,
 You treacherously practis'd to undo me.
 Seduc'd the weakness of my age's darling,
 My only child, and stole her from my bosom :
 Oh Belvidera !

Jaff. 'Tis to me you owe her,
 Childless you had been else, and in the grave
 Your name extinct, no more Priuli heard of.
 You may remember, scarce five years are past,
 Since in your brigantine you sail'd to see
 The Adriatic wedded by our duke,
 And I was with you : your unskilful pilot
 Dash'd us upon a rock ; when to your boat
 You made for safety ; entered first yourself ;
 The affrighted Belvidera following next,
 As she stood trembling on the vessel's side,
 Was by a wave wash'd off into the deep ;
 When instantly I plung'd into the sea,
 And buffeting the billows to her rescue,
 Redeem'd her life with half the loss of mine.
 Like a rich conquest in one hand I bore her,
 And with the other dash'd the saucy waves,
 That throng'd and press'd to rob me of my prize :
 I brought her, gave her your despairing arms :
 Indeed you thank'd me ; but a nobler gratitude
 Rose in her soul : for from that hour she lov'd
 me,

'Till for her life she paid me with herself.

Pri. You stole her from me ; like a thief you stole her

At dead of night ; that cursed hour you chose
 To rifle me of all my heart held dear.

May all your joys in her prove false like mine ;
 A steril fortune, and a barren bed,

Attend you both ; continual discord make
 Your days and nights bitter and grievous : still
 May the hard hand of a vexatious need
 Oppress and grind you ; 'till at last you find
 The curse of disobedience all your portion.

Jaff. Half of your curse you have bestow'd
 in vain :

Heav'n has already crown'd our faithful loves
 With a young boy, sweet as his mother's beauty :
 May he live to prove more gentle than his grandsire,

And happier than his father !

Pri. Rather live
 To bait thee for his bread, and din your ears
 With hungry cries : whilst his unhappy mother
 Sits down and weeps in bitterness of want.

Jaff. You talk as if 'twou'd please you.

Pri. 'Twou'd, by heav'n.
 Once she was dear indeed ; the drops that fell
 From my sad heart, when she forgot her duty,
 The fountain of my life was not so precious :
 But she is gone, and if I am a man
 I will forget her.

Jaff. Would I were in my grave.

Pri. And she too with thee ;
 For, living here, you're but my curs'd remem-brancers.

I once was happy.

Jaff. You use me thus, because you know my soul
Is fond of Belvidera : you perceive
My life feeds on her, therefore thus you treat me !
Oh ! could my soul ever have known satiety ;
Were I that thief, the doer of such wrongs
As you upbraid me with, what hinders me,
But I might send her back to you with contentedly,
And court my fortune where she would be kinder !

Pri. You dare not do it.

Jaff. Indeed, my lord, I dare not.
My heart that awes me, is too much my master :
Three years are past since first our vows were plighted,
During which time the world must bear me witness,
I've treated Belvidera like your daughter,
The daughter of a senator of Venice ;
Distinction, place, attendance and observance,
Due to her birth, she always has commanded ;
Out of my little fortune I've done this ;
Because (tho' hopeless e'er to win your nature)
The world might see, I lov'd her for herself.
Not as the heiress of the great Priuli.—

Pri. No more !

Jaff. Yes ! all, and then adieu for ever. [ty
There's not a wretch that lives on common charity
But's happier than me : for I have known
The luscious sweets of plenty ; every night
Have slept with soft content about my head,
And never wak'd but to a joyful morning ;
Yet now must fall like a full ear of corn,
Whose blossom 'scap'd, yet s wither'd in the ripening.

Pri. Home and be humble, study to retrench ;
Discharge the lazy vermin of thy hall,
Those pageants of thy folly,
Reduce the glittering trappings of thy wife
To humble weeds, fit for thy little state ;
Then to some suburb cottage both retire ;
Drudge to feed loathsome life ; get brats, and starve—

Home, home, I say.—

[Exit.

Jaff. Yes, if my heart would let me —
This proud, this swelling heart : home I would go,
But that my doors are hateful to mine eyes,
Fill'd and damm'd up with gaping creditors
Watchful as fowlers when their game will spring ;
I've now not fifty ducats in the world,
Yet still I am in love, and pleas'd with ruin.
O Belvidera ! Oh ! she is my wife—
And we will bear our wayward fate together,
But ne'er know comfort more.

Enter Pierre.

Pier. My friend, good-morrow !
How fares the honest partner of my heart ?
What, melancholy ! not a word to spare me ?

Jaff. I'm thinking, Pierre, how that damn'd starving quality,
Call'd honesty, got footing in the world.

Pier. Why, pow'rful villainy first set it up,
For its own ease and safety : honest men
Are the soft easy cushions on which knaves
Repose and fatten : were all mankind villains,
They'd starve each other ; lawyers would want practice,

Cut-throats rewards : each man would kill his brother

Himself, none would be paid or hang'd for murder :

Honesty ! 'twas a cheat invented first *

To bind the hands of bold deserving rogues,
That fools and cowards might sit safe in power,
And lord it uncontrold above their betters.

Jaff. Then honesty is but a notion ?

Pier. Nothing else :

Like wit, much talk'd of, not to be defin'd :

He that pretends to most too, has least share in't ;

'Tis a ragged virtue : honesty ! no more on't.

Jaff. Sure thou art honest ?

Pier. So indeed men think me.

But they're mistaken, Jaffair : I am a rogue

As well as they :

A fine gay bold-fac'd villain, as thou seest me ;

'Tis true, I pay my debts when they're contracted ;

I steal from no man ; would not cut a throat,

To gain admission to a great man's purse,

Or a whore's bed ; I'd not betray my friend,

To get his place or fortune : I scorn to flatter

A blown-up fool above me, or orush the wretch beneath me :

Yet Jaffair, for all this I am a villain.

Jaff. A villain !

Pier. Yes, a most notorious villain :

To see the sufferings of my fellow-creatures,

And own myself a man : to see our senators

Cheat the deluded people with a shew

Of liberty, which yet they ne'er must taste of ;

They say, by them our hands are free from fetters,

Yet whom they please they lay in basest bonds ;

Bring whom they please to infamy and sorrow ;

Drive us like wrecks down the rough tide of power,

Whilst no hold's left to save us from destruction ;

All that bear this are villains, and I one,

Not to rouse up at the great call of Nature,

And check the growth of these domestic spoilers,

That make us slaves, and tell us 'tis our charter.

Jaff. Oh Aquilina ! friend, to lose such beauty,

The dearest purchase of thy noble labours ;

She was thy right by conquest, as by love.

Pier. Oh Jaffair ! I'd so fix'd my heart upon her,

That wheresoe'er I fram'd a scheme of life

For time to come, she was my only joy,

With which I wish'd to sweeten future cares ;

I fancied pleasures, none but one that loves

And doats as I did, can imagine like 'em :

When in th' extremity of all these hopes,

In the most charming hour of expectation,
Then when our eager wishes soar'd the highest,
Ready to stoop and grasp the lovely game,
A haggard owl, a worthless kite of prey,
With his foul wings sail'd in, and spoil'd my quarry.

Jaff. I know the wretch, and scorn him as thou hat'st him.

Pier. Curse on the common good that's so protected,

* Where every slave that heaps up wealth enough
To do much wrong, becomes a lord of right :
I, who believ'd no ill could e'er come near me,
Found in the embraces of my Aquilina
A wretched, old, but itching senator ;
A wealthy fool, that had bought out my title :
A rogue, that uses beauty like a lamb-skin,
Barely to keep him warm ; that filthy cuckoo too
Was in my absence crept into my nest,
And spoiling all my brood of noble pleasure.

Jaff. Didst thou not chase him thence ?

Pier. I did, and drove

The rank old-bearded Hircio stinking home :
The matter was complain'd of in the senate,
I summon'd to appear, and censur'd basely,
For violating something they call privilege—
This was the recompence of my service.
Would I'd been rather beaten by a coward :
A soldier's mistress, Jaffeir, is his religion ;
When that's profan'd, all other ties are broken :
That even dissolves all former bonds of service,
And from that hour I think myself as free
To be the foe as e'er the friend of Venice—
Nay, dear revenge, whene'er thou call'st, I'm ready.

Jaff. I think no safety can be here for virtue,
And grieve my friend as much as thou, to live
In such a wretched state as this of Venice,
Where all agree to spoil the public good,
And villains fatten with the brave man's labours.

Pier. We've neither safety, unity, nor peace,
For the foundation's lost of common good ;
Justice is lame as well as blind amongst us ;
The laws (corrupted to their ends that make 'em)

Serve but for instruments of some new tyranny,
That every day starts up t'enslave us deeper :
Now could this glorious cause but find out friends
To do it right ! oh Jaffeir ! then might'st thou
Not wear these seals of woe upon thy face :
The proud Priuli should be taught humanity,
And learn to value such a son as thou art.
I dare not speak ! but my heart bleeds this moment.

Jaff. Curst be the cause, tho' I thy friend be part on't :

Let me partake the troubles of thy bosom,
For I am us'd to misery, and perhaps
May find a way to sweeten't to thy spirit.

Pier. Too soon 'twill reach thy knowledge—

Jaff. Then from thee

Let it proceed. There's virtue in thy friendship
Would make the saddest tale of sorrow pleasing,
Strengthen my constancy, and welcome ruin.

Pier. Then thou art ruin'd !

Jaff. That I long since knew ;
I and ill fortune have been long acquainted.

Pier. I pass'd this very moment by thy doors,
And found them guarded by a troop of villains ;
The sons of public rapine were destroying :
They told me, by the sentence of the law,
They had commission to seize all thy fortune :
Nay more, Priuli's cruel hand had sign'd it.
Here stood a ruffian with a horrid face
Lording it o'er a pile of massy plate,
Tumbled into a heap for public sale :
There was another making villainous jests
At thy undoing ; he had ta'en possession
Of all thy ancient most domestic ornaments,
Rich hangings, intermix'd and wrought with gold ;

The very bed, which on thy wedding night
Receiv'd thee to the arms of Belvidera,
The scene of all thy joys, was violated
By the coarse hands of filthy dungeon villains,
And thrown amongst the common lumber.

Jaff. Now thank Heav'n—

Pier. Thank Heav'n ! for what ?

Jaff. That I'm not worth a ducat.

Pier. Curse thy dull stars, and the worse fate of Venice,

Where brothers, friends, and fathers, all are false ;

Where there's no trust, no truth ; where innocence

Stoops under vile oppression ; and vice lords it :
Hadst thou but seen, as I did, how at last
Thy beauteous Belvidera, like a wretch
That's doom'd to banishment, came weeping forth,

Shining through tears, like April-suns in showers
That labour to o'ercome the cloud that loads 'em ;

Whilst two young virgins, on whose arms she lean'd,

Kindly look'd up, and at her grief grew sad,
As if they catch'd the sorrows that fell from her :

E'en the lewd rabble that were gather'd round
To see the sight, stood mute when they beheld her ;

Govern'd their roaring throats, and grumbled pity :

I could have hugg'd the greasy rogues : they pleas'd me.

Jaff. I thank thee for this story, from my soul,

Since now I know the worst that can befall me :

Ah Pierre ! I have a heart, that could have borne
The roughest wrong my fortune could have done me :

But when I think what Belvidera feels,
The bitterness her tender spirit tastes of,
I own myself a coward : bear my weakness,
If throwing thus my arms about thy neck,
I play the boy, and blubber in thy bosom.
Oh ! I shall drown thee with my sorrows !

Pier. Burn!

First burn, and level Venice to thy ruin.
What, starvelike beggars' brats in frosty weather,
Under a hedge, and whine ourselves to death!
Thou, or thy cause shall never want assistance,
Whilst I have blood or fortune fit to serve thee;
Command my heart: thou'rt every way its master.

Jaff. No, there's a secret pride in bravely dying.

Pier. Rats die in holes and corners, dogs run
mad;

Man knows a braver remedy for sorrow.
Revenge! the attribute of gods; they stamp it
With their great image on our natures: die!
Consider well the cause that calls upon thee:
And if thou'rt base enough, die then: remember

Thy Belvidera suffers: Belvidera!

Die——damn first——what, be decently interr'd
In a church-yard, and mingle thy brave dust
With stinking rogues that rot in winding-sheets,
Surfeit slain fools, the common dung o' th' soil.

Jaff. Oh!

Pier. Well said, out with 't, swear a little——

Jaff. Swear! By sea and air! by earth, by heav'n and hell,

I will revenge my Belvidera's tears!

Hark: thee my friend——Priuli——is——a senator!

Pier. A dog!

Jaff. Agreed.

Pier. Shoot him.

Jaff. With all my heart.

No more: where shall we meet at night?

Pier. I'll tell thee;

On the Rialto every night at twelve
I take my evening's walk of meditation:
There we two will meet, and talk of precious Mischief——

Jaff. Farewell.

Pier. At twelve.

Jaff. At any hour; my plagues

Will keep me waking. [Exit Pierre]

Tell me why, good Heav'n,
Thou mad'st me what I am, with all the spirit,
Aspiring thoughts, and elegant desires
That fill the happiest man? Ah! rather why
Didst thou not form me sordid as my fate,
Base-minded, dull, and fit to carry burdens?
Why have I sense to know the curse that's on me?

Is this just dealing, Nature?——Belvidera!

Enter Belvidera.

Poor, Belvidera!

Belv. Lead me, lead me, my virgins!
To that kind voice. My lord, my love, my refuge!

Happy my eyes, when they behold thy face:
My heavy heart will leave its doleful beating
At sight of thee, and bound with sprightly joys. [spring,]

Oh smile, as when our loves were in their
And cheer my fainting soul!

2 1 2

Jaff. As when our loves

Were in their spring? has then my fortune chang'd?

Art thou not Belvidera, still the same,
Kind, good, and tender, as my arms first found
thee?

If thou art alter'd, where shall I have harbour?
Where ease my loaded heart? Oh! where complain?

Belv. Does this appear like change, or love decaying;

When thus I throw myself into thy bosom,
With all the resolution of strong truth?
Beats not my heart as 'twould alarm thine
To a new charge of bliss? I joy more in thee,
Than did thy mother when she hugg'd thee
first,

And bless'd the gods for all her travel past.

Jaff. Can there in woman be such glorious faith?

Sure all ill stories of thy sex are false;
Oh woman! lovely woman! nature made thee
To temper man: we had been brutes without
you.

Angels are painted fair, to look like you:
There's in you all that we believe of heav'n,
Amazing brightness, purity and truth,
Eternal joy, and everlasting love.

Belv. If love be treasure, we'll be wondrous rich;

I have so much, my heart will surely break
with 't;

Vows can't express it. When I wou'd declare How great's my joy, I'm dumb with the big
thought;

I swell and sigh, and labour with my longing.
O lead me to some desert wide and wild,
Barren as our misfortunes, where my soul
May have its vent; where I may tell aloud
To the high heavens and ev'ry list'ning planet,
With what a boundless stock my bosom's
fraught;

Where I may throw my eager arms about thee,
Give loose to love with kisses, kindling joy,
And let off all the fire that's in my heart.

Jaff. Oh Belvidera! doubly I'm a beggar,
Undone by fortune, and in debt to thee;
Want! worldly want! that hungry meagre fiend
Is at my heels, and chases me in view.
Canst thou bear cold and hunger? can these limbs,

Fram'd for the tender offices of love,
Endure the bitter gripes of smarting poverty?
When banish'd by our miseries abroad,
(As suddenly we shall be) to seek out
(In some far climate where our names are strangers)

For charitable succour; wilt thou then,
When in a bed of straw we shrink together,
And the bleak winds shall whistle round our head;
Wilt thou then talk thus to me? wilt thou then
Hush my cares thus, and shelter me with love?

Belv. Oh I will love thee, even in madness love
thee.

Tho' my distracted senses should forsake me,
I'd find some intervals, when my poor heart
Should 'swage itself, and be let loose to thine.
Tho' the bare earth be all our resting-place,
Its roots our food, some cliff our habitation,
I'll make this arm a pillow for thy head ;
And as thou sighing ly'st, and swell'd with sorrow,
Creep to thy bosom, pour the balm of love
Into thy soul, and kiss thee to thy rest ;
Then praise our God, and watch thee 'till the morning.

Jaff. Hear this you heav'ns, and wonder how you made her !

Reign, reign ye monarchs that divide the world,
Busy rebellion ne'er will let you know
Tranquillity and happiness like mine ;
Like gawdy ships, th' obsequious billows fall
And rise again, to lift you in your pride ;
They wait but for a storm, and then devour you :
I, in my private bark, already wreck'd,
Like a poor merchant driv'n on unknown land,
That had by chance pack'd up his choicest treasure

In one dear casket, and sav'd only that.

Since I must wander further on the shore,

Th'us hug my little, but my precious store ;
Resolv'd to scorn, and trust my fate no more. }

[Exit.]

ACT II. SCENE I.

Enter Pierre and Aquilina.

Aqui. By all thy wrongs, thou'rt dearer to my arms

Than all the wealth of Venice : pr'ythee stay,
And let us love to-night.

Pier. No : there's fool,

There's fool about thee : when a woman sells
Her flesh to fools, her beauty's lost to me ;
They leave a taint, a sully where they've past ;
There's such a baneful quality about 'em,
E'en spoils complexions with their nauseous-
ness,

They infect all they touch ; I cannot think
Of tasting any thing a fool has pall'd.

Aqui. I loath and scorn that fool thou mean'st, as much

Or more than thou canst ; but the beast has gold
That makes him necessary ; power too,
To qualify my character, and poise me
Equal with peevish virtue, that beholds
My liberty with envy : in their hearts
They're loose as I am ; but an ugly power
Sits in their faces, and frights pleasures from 'em.

Pier. Much good may't do you, madam, with your senator.

Aqui. My senator ! why, canst thou think that wretch

E'er fill'd thy Aquilina's arms with pleasure ?
* * * * *

Think'st thou I love him ? No, by all the joys
Thou ever gav'st me, his presence is my penance ;
The worst thing an old man can be's a lover.

A mere memento mori to poor woman.

I never lay by his decrepit side,
But all that night I ponder'd on my grave.

Pier. Would he were well sent thither.

Aqui. That's my wish too :

For then, my Pierre, I might have cause with pleasure

To play the hypocrite. Oh ! how I could weep
Over the dying dotard, and kiss him too,
In hopes to smother him quite ; then, when the
time

Was come to pay my sorrows at his funeral,
(For he has already made me heir to treasures
Would make me out-act a real widow's whining ;)
How could I frame my face to fit my mourning !
With wringing hands attend him to his grave,
Fall swooning on his hearse : take mad possession

E'en of the dismal vault where he lay bury'd ;
There like th' Ephesian matron dwell, 'till thou
My lovely soldier, com'st to my deliverance ;
Then throwing up thy veil, with open arms
And laughing eyes, run to new dawning joy.

Pier. No more ! I've friends to meet me here to-night,

And must be private. As you prize my friendship,

Keep up your coxcomb : let him not pry nor listen,
Nor frisk about the house as I have seen him,
Like a tame mumping squirrel with a hell on ;
Curs will be abroad to bite him, if you do.

Aqui. What friends to meet ? mayn't I be of your council ?

Pier. How ! a woman ask questions out of bed ?
Go to your senator, ask him what passes
Amongst his brethren ; he'll hide nothing from
you :

But pump me not for politics. No more !
Give order that whoever in my name
Comes here, receive admittance. So good night.

Aqui. Must we ne'er meet again ! embrace no
more !

Is love so soon and utterly forgotten !

Pier. As you henceforward treat your fool, I'll think on't.

Aqui. Curst be all fools—I die if he forsakes
me ;

And how to keep him, heav'n or hell instruct me.
[Exit.]

Scene the Rialto.

Enter Jaffeur.

Jaff. I'm here ; and thus, the shades of night around me,

I look as if all hell were in my heart.

And I in hell. Nay surely 'tis so with me ;*

For every step I tread, methinks some fiend

Knocks at my breast, and bids me not be quiet.

I've heard how desperate wretches, like myself,

Have wander'd out at this dead time of night

To meet the foe of mankind in his walk :

Sure I'm so curst, that tho' of heav'n forsaken,

No minister of darkness cares to tempt me.

Hell ! hell ! why sleepest thou ?

Enter Pierre.

Pier. Sure I've staid too long :
The clock has struck, and I may lose my proselyte.
Speak, who goes there ?

Jaff. A dog that comes to howl
At yonder moon : what's he that asks the question ?

Pier. A friend to dogs, for they are honest creatures,
And ne'er betray their masters ; never fawn
On any that they love not : well met, friend :
Jaffair ?

Jaff. The same. Oh Pierre, thou'rt come in season,
I was just going to pray.

Pier. Ah that's mechanic,
Priests make a trade on't, and yet starve by't
too :
No praying ; it spoils business, and time's precious :

Where's Belvidera ?

Jaff. For a day or two
I've lodg'd her privately, 'till I see farther
What fortune will do with me. Pr'ythee friend,
If thou would'st have me fit to hear good counsel,

Speak not of Belvidera ?

Pier. Not of her ?

Jaff. Oh no !

Pier. Not name her ? May be I wish her well.

Jaff. Whom well ?

Pier. Thy wife, thy lovely Belvidera ;
I hope . . . can may wish his friend's wife well,
And no harm done !

Jaff. You are merry, Pierre !

Pier. I am so :

Thou shalt smile too, and Belvidera smile ;
We'll all rejoice : here's something to buy pins,
[Gives him a purse.]

Marriage is chargeable.

Jaff. I but half wisht
To see the Devil, and he's here already. Well !
What must this buy, rebellion, murder, treason ?
Tell me which way I must be damn'd for this.

Pier. When last we parted, we'd no qualms like these.

But entertain'd each other's thoughts like men,
Whose souls were well acquainted. Is the world Reform'd since our last meeting ? What new miracles

Have happen'd ? Has Priuli's heart relented ?
Can he be honest ?

Jaff. Kind Heav'n ! let heavy curses
Gall his old age ; cramps, aches rack his bones,
And bitterest disquiet wring his heart ;
O let him live 'till life become his burden !
Let him groan under 't long, linger an age
In the worst agonies and pangs of death,
And find its ease, but late.

Pier. Nay, could'st thou not
As well, my friend, have stretch'd the curse to all
The senate round, as to one single villain ?

Jaff. But curses stick not : could I kill with cursing,

By heav'n I know not thirty heads in Venice
Should not be blasted ; senators should rot
Like dogs on dunghills ; but their wives and daughters

Die of their own diseases. Oh for a curse
To kill with !

Pier. Daggers, daggers, are much better !

Jaff. Ha !

Pier. Daggers.

Jaff. But where are they ?

Pier. Oh, a thousand

May be dispos'd of in honest hands in Venice.

Jaff. Thou talk'st in clouds.

Pier. But yet a heart half wrong'd
As thine has been, would find the meaning,
Jaffair.

Jaff. A thousand daggers all in honest hands ;
And have not I a friend will stick one here ?

Pier. Yes, if I thought thou wert not to be cherisht

T' a nobler purpose, I would be that friend.
But thou hast better friends, friends whom thy wrongs

Have made thy friends ; friends worthy to be call'd so !

I'll trust thee with a secret : there are spirits
This hour at work. But as thou art a man,
Whom I have pickt and chosen from the world,
Swear that thou wilt be true to what I utter,
And when I've told thee that which only gods,
And men like gods are privy to, then swear
No chance or change shall wrest it from thy bosom.

Jaff. When thou would'st bind me, is there need of oaths ?

* * * * *
For thou'rt so near my heart, that thou may'st
see

Its bottom, sound its strength and firmness to
thee.

Is coward, fool, or villain in my face ?

If I seem none of these, I dare believe

Thou would'st not use me in a little cause,

For I am fit for honour's toughest task ;

Nor ever yet found fooling was my province ;

And for a villainous inglorious enterprize,

I know thy heart so well, I dare lay mine

Before thee, set it to what point thou wilt.

Pier. Nay, it's a cause thou wilt be fond of,
Jaffair.

For it is founded on the noblest basis,
Our liberties, our natural inheritance ;
There's no religion, no hypocrisy in't ;
We'll do the business, and ne'er fast and pray
for't :

Openly act a deed the world shall gaze
With wonder at, and envy when 'tis done.

Jaff. For liberty !

Pier. For liberty, my friend !

Thou shalt be freed from base Priuli's tyranny,
And thy sequestered fortunes heal'd again.

I shall be freed from those opprobrious wrongs
That press me now, and bend my spirit downward.

All Venice free, and every growing merit
Succeed to its just right : fools shall be pull'd
From wisdom's seat ; those baleful unclean birds,
Those lazy owls, who, perch'd near fortune's top,
Sit only watchful with their heavy wings
To cuff down new-fledg'd virtues, that would rise
To nobler heights, and make the grove harmonious.

Jaff. What can I do ?

Pier. Can'st thou not kill a senator ?

Jaff. Were there one wise or honest, I could kill him

For herding with that nest of fools and knaves.
By all my wrongs, thou talk'st as if revenge
Were to be had, and the brave story warns me.

Pier. Swear then !

Jaff. I do, by all those glittering stars
And yon great ruling planet of the night !
By all good powers above, and ill below !
By love and friendship, dearer than my life !
No pow'r or death shall make me false to thee.

Pier. Here we embrace, and I'll unlock my heart.

A council's held hard by, where the destruction
Of this great empire's hatching : there I'll lead
thee !

But be a man, for thou'rt to mix with men
Fit to disturb the peace of all the world,
And rule it when it's wildest——

Jaff. I give thee thanks

For this kind warning. Yes, I'll be a man,
And charge thee, Pierre, whene'er thou seest
my fears

Betray me less, to rip this heart of mine
Out of my breast, and shew it for a coward's.
Come, let's be gone, for from this hour I chase
All little thoughts, all tender human follies
Out of my bosom : vengeance shall have room :
Revenge !

Pier. And liberty !

Jaff. Revenge ! revenge !—— [Exeunt.

The scene changes to Aquilina's house, the Greek Courtezan.

Enter Renault.

Ren. Why was my choice ambition, the worst
ground

A wretch can build on ? it's indeed at distance
A goodly prospect, tempting to the view ;
The height delights us, and the mountain-top
Looks beautiful, because it's nigh to heav'n ;
But we ne'er think how sandy's the foundation,
What storm will batter, and what tempest shake
us.

Who's there ?

Enter Spinosa.

Spin. Renault. good-morrow ! for by this time

I think the scale of night has turn'd the balance,
And weighs up morning. Has the clock struck twelve ?

Ren. Yes ; clocks will go as they are set :
but man,

Irregular man's ne'er constant, never certain :

I've spent at least three precious hours of darkness

In waiting dull attendance ; 'tis the curse
Of diligent virtue to be mixt, like mine,
With giddy tempers, souls but half resolv'd.

Spin. Hell seize that soul amongst us, it can frighten.

Ren. What's then the cause that I am here alone ?

Why are we not together ?

Enter Eliot.

O Sir, welcome !

You are an Englishman : when treason's hatch-
ing

One might have thought you'd not have been behindhand.

In what whore's lap have you been lolling ?

Give but an Englishman his whore and ease,
Beef and a sea-coal-fire, he's yours for ever.

Eli. Frenchman, you are saucy.

Ren. How !

Enter Bedamar the Ambassador, Theodore Bramveil, Durand, Brabe, Revillido, Mezzana, Ternon, Retrosi, Conspirators.

Bed. At difference ! fie :

Is this a time for quarrels ? Thieves and rogues Fall out and brawl : should men of your high calling,

Men separated by the choice of providence
From the gross heap of mankind, and set here
In this assembly as in one great jewel,
T' adorn the bravest purpose it e'er smil'd on :
Should you like boys wrangle for trifles ?

Ren. Boys !

Bed. Renault, thy hand !

Ren. I thought I'd given my heart
Long since to every man that mingles here ;
But grieve to find it rusted with such tempers.
That can't forgive my froward age its weakness.

Bed. Eliot, thou once hadst virtue ; I have seen

Thy stubborn temper bent with god-like good-
ness,

Not half thus courted. 'Tis thy nation's glory,
To hug the foe that offers brave alliance.

Once more embrace, my friends——we'll all embrace——

United thus, we are the mighty engine
Must twist this rooted empire from its basis !
Totters not it already ?

Eli. Would 'twere tumbling.

Bed. Nay it shall down : this night we seal its ruin.

Enter Pierre.

Oh Pierre, thou art welcome !

Come to my breast, for by its hopes thou look'st
Lovely dreadful, and the fate of Venice
Seems on thy sword already. Oh my Mars !
The poets that first feign'd a god of war
Sure prophesy'd of thee.

Pier. Friends ! was not Brutus,

(I mean that Brutus, who in open senate Stabb'd the first Cæsar that usurp'd the world)

A gallant man?

Ren. Yes, and Catiline too ;
Tho' story wrong his fame : for he conspir'd
To prop the reeling glory of his country :
His cause was good.

Bed. And ours as much above it,
As Renault thou'rt superior to Cethegus,
Or Pierre to Cassius.

Pier. Then to what we aim at,
When do we start ? or must we talk for ever ?

Bed. No, Pierre, the deed's near birth. Fate seems to have set

The business up, and given it to our care :
I hope there's not a heart or hand amongst us
But is firm and ready.

Alc. All !
We'll die with Bedamar.

Bed. Oh men,
Matchless, as will your glory be hereafter,
The game is for a matchless prize, if won ;
If lost, disgraceful ruin.

Ren. What can lose it ?
The public stock's a beggar ; one Venetian
Trusts not another. Look into their stores
(Of general safety ; empty magazines,
A tatter'd fleet, a murmuring unpaid army,
Bankrupt nobility, harass'd commonalty,
A factions, giddy, and divided senate,
Is all the strength of Venice. Let's destroy it ;
Let's fill their magazines with arms to awe them,
Man out their fleet, and make their trade maintain it ;

Let loose the murmuring army on their masters,
To pay themselves with plunder ; lop their nobles

To the base roots, whence most of 'em first sprung ;

Enslave the rout, whom smarting will make humble ;

Turn out their droning senate, and possess
That seat of empire which our souls were fram'd
for.

Pier. Ten thousand men are armed, at your nod,

Commanded all by leaders fit to guide
A battle for the freedom of the world ;
This wretched state has starv'd them in its service.

And by your bounty quicken'd, they're resolv'd
To serve your glory, and revenge their own :
They've all their different quarters in this city,
Watch for th' alarm and grumble 'tis so tardy.

Bed. I doubt not, friend, but thy unwearied diligence

Has still kept waking, and it shall have ease ;
After this night it is resolv'd we meet
No more, 'till Venice own us for her lords.

Pier. How lovelily the Adriatic whore, Dress'd in her flames, will shine ! devouring flames !

Such as shall burn her to the watery bottom,
And hiss in her foundation.

Bed. Now if any

Amongst us that owns this glorious cause,
Have friends or interest he'd wish to save,
Let it be told ; the general doom is seal'd ;
But I'd forego the hopes of a world's empire,
Rather than wound the bowels of my friend.

Pier. I must confess, you there have touch'd my weakness.

I have a friend ; hear it, such a friend !
My heart was ne'er shut to him. Nay, I'll tell
you.

He knows the very business of this hour ;
But he rejoices in the cause, and loves it :
We've chang'd a vow to live and die together,
And he's at hand to ratify it here.

Ren. How ! all betray'd ?

Pier. No—I've dealt nobly with you ;
I've brought my all into the publick stock ;
I'd but one friend, and him I'll share amongst
you :

Receive and cherish him : or if, when seen
And search'd, you find him worthless ; as my tongue

Has lodg'd this secret in his faithful breast,
To ease your fears I wear a dagger here,
Shall rip it out again, and give you rest.
Come forth thou only good I e'er could boast of.

Enter Jaffeir with a dagger.

Bed. His presence bears the shew of manly virtue !

Jaff. I know you'll wonder all, that thus uncall'd,

I dare approach this place of fatal councils ;
But I'm amongst you, and by heav'n it glads me,
To see so many virtues thus united,
To restore justice and dethrone oppression.
Command this sword, if you would have it quiet,
Into this breast ; but if you think it worthy
To cut the throats of reverend rogues in robes,
Send me into the curs'd assembled senate ;
It shrinks not, tho' I meet a father there.
Would you behold this city flaming ? Here's
A hand shall bear a lighted torch at noon
To th' arsenal, and set its gates on fire.

Ren. You talk this well, sir.

Jaff. Nay—by Heav'n I'll do this.
Come, come, I read distrust in all your faces,
You fear me a villain ; and indeed its odd
To hear a stranger talk thus at first meeting,
Of matters that have been so well debated ;
But I come ripe with wrongs, as you with councils ;

I hate this senate, am a foe to Venice :
A friend to none, but men resolv'd like me,
To push on mischief. Oh did you but know me,
I need not talk thus !

Bed. Pierre ! I must embrace him,
My heart beats to this man as if it knew him.

Ren. I never lov'd these huggers.

Jaff. Still I see
The cause delights ye not. Your friends survey
me

As I were dangerous—but I come arm'd
Against all doubts, and to your trust will give

A pledge, worth more than all the world can pay for.

My Belvidera! Ho! my Belvidera!

Bed. What wonder's next?

Jaff. Let me intreat you,
As I have henceforth hopes to call ye friends,
That all but the Ambassador, and this Grave guide of counsels, with my friend that owns me,

Withdraw a while, to spare a woman's blushes.

[Exit all but Bed. Ren. Jaff. Pier.]

Bed. Pierre, whither will this ceremony lead us?

Jaff. My Belvidera! Belvidera!

Enter Belvidera.

Belv. Who,

Who calls so loud at this late peaceful hour?
That voice was wont to come in gentle whispers,
And fill my ears with the soft breath of love:
Thou hourly image of my thoughts, where art
thou?

Jaff. Indeed 'tis late.

Belv. Oh! I have slept and dreamt,
And dreamt again: where hast thou been, thou loiterer?

Tho' my eyes clos'd, my arms have still been open'd;
Stretch'd every way betwixt my broken slumbers,

To search if thou wert come to crown my rest;
There's no repose without thee: oh the day
Too soon will break, and wake us to our sorrow;
Come, come to bed, and bid thy cares good-night.

Jaff. Oh Belvidera! we must change the scene

In which the past delights of life were tasted:
The poor sleep little; we must learn to watch
Our labours late, and early every morning,
'Midst winter frosts, thin clad and fed with sparing,

Rise to our toils, and drudge away the day.

Belv. Alas! where am I! whither is't you lead
me!

Methinks I read distraction in your face!
Something less gentle than the fate you tell me:
You shake and tremble too! your blood runs
cold!

Heav'n's guard my love, and bless his heart with patience.

Jaff. That I have patience, let our fate bear witness,

Who has ordain'd it so, that thou and I,
(Thou the divinest good man e'er possess'd,
And I, the wretched'st of the race of man)
This very hour, without one tear, must part.

Belv. Part! must we part? Oh! am I then forsaken?

Will my love cast me off? have my misfortunes
Offended him so highly, that he'll leave me?

Why drag you from me? whither are you going?
My dear! my life! my love!

Jaff. Oh friends!

Belv. Speak to me.

Jaff. Take her from my heart,
She'll gain such hold else I shall ne'er get loose.
I charge thee take her, but with tender'st care,
Relieve her troubles and assuage her sorrows.

Ren. Rise, madam! and command amongst your servants.

Jaff. To you, sirs, and your honours, I bequeath her,
And with her this; when I prove unworthy—

[Gives a dagger.]

You know the rest—then strike it to her
heart;

And tell her, he who three whole happy years
Lay in her arms, and each kind night repeated
The passionate vows of still increasing love,
Sent that reward for all her truth and sufferings.

Belv. Nay, take my life, since he has sold it cheaply;

Or send me to some distant clime your slave;
But let it be far off, lest my complainings
Should reach his guilty ears, and shake his peace.

Jaff. No, Belvidera, I've contriv'd thy honour;

Trust to my faith, and be but fortune kind
To me, as I'll preserve that faith unbroken.
When next we meet, I'll lift thee to a height,
Shall gather all the gazing world about thee,
To wonder what strange virtue plac'd thee there.
But if we ne'er meet more—

Belv. Oh thou unkind one!

Ne'er meet more! Have I deserv'd this from
you?

Look on me, tell me; speak, thou dear deceiver,
Why am I separated from thy love?

If I am false, accuse me; but if true,
Don't, prithee don't in poverty forsake me,
But pity the sad heart, that's torn with parting.
Yet hear me! yet recal me—

[Ex. Ren. Bed. and Belv.]

Jaff. Oh my eyes!

Look not that way, but turn yourselves awhile
Into my heart, and be wean'd all together.

My friend, where art thou?

Pier. Here, my honour's brother.

Jaff. Is Belvidera gone?

Pier. Renault has led her

Back to her own apartment; but by Heav'n!
Thou must not see her more 'till our work's over.

Jaff. No?

Pier. Not for your life.

Jaff. Oh Pierre, wert thou but she,
How I could pull thee down into my heart,
Gaze on thee 'till my eye-strings crackt with
love,

'Till all my sinews with its fire extended,
Fixt me upon the rack of ardent longing;

Then swelling, sighing, raging, to be blest,
Come like a panting turtle to thy breast,

On thy soft bosom, hovering, bill and play.
Confess the cause why last I fled away;

Own 'twas a fault, but swear to give it o'er,
And never follow false ambition more. [Exit.]

ACT III. SCENE I.

Enter Aquilina and her Maid.

Aqui. Tell him I am gone to bed: tell him I am not at home; tell him I've better company with me,—or any thing; tell him, in short, I will not see him, the eternal troublesome vexatious fool! He's worse company than an ignorant physician—I'll not be disturb'd at these unseasonable hours.

Maid. But, madam! he's here already, just enter'd the doors.

Aqui. Turn him out again, you unnecessary, useless, giddy-brain'd ass! If he will not be gone, set the house a-fire and burn us both: I'd rather meet a toad in my dish, than that old hideous animal in my chamber to-night.

Enter Antonio.

Ant. Nacky, Nacky, Nacky,—how dost do, Nacky? hurry durr. I am come, little Nacky; past eleven o'clock, a late hour; time in all conscience to go to bed, Nacky—Nacky did I say? Ay, Nacky, Aquilina, lina, lina, quilina, quilina, quilina, Aquilina, Naquilina, Naquilina, Acky, Nacky, Nacky, Nacky, queen Nacky—come let's to bed—you fubbs, you pugg, you—you little puss—purree tuzzy—I am a senator.

Aqui. You are a fool, I am sure.

Ant. May be so too, sweetheart. Never the worse senator for all that. Come, Nacky, Nacky.

Aqui. You would do well, signior, to be troublesome here no longer, but leave me to myself; be sober and go home, sir.

Ant. Home, Madonna!

Aqui. Ay, home, sir. Who am I?

Ant. Madonna, as I take it you are my—you are—thou art my little Nacky Nacky;—that's all!

Aqui. I find you are resolv'd to be troublesome; and so to make short of the matter in few words, I hate you, detest you, loath you, I am weary of you, sick of you—hang you, you are an old, silly, impertinent, impotent, solicitous coxcomb; crazy in your head, and lazy in your body, love to be meddling with every thing, and if you had not money, you are good for nothing.

Ant. Good for nothing! Hurry durr. Sixty-one years old, and good for nothing; that's brave. [To the Maid.] Come, come, Mrs. Fiddle-faddle, turn you out for a season; go, turn out I say, it is our will and pleasure to be private some moments—out, out when you are bid too—[Puts her out and locks the door.] Good for nothing, you say!

Aqui. Why, what are you good for?

Ant. In the first place, madam, I am old, and consequently very wise, very wise, Madonna, d'ye mark that? In the second place, take notice, if you please, that I am a senator, and when I think fit can make speeches, Madonna. Hurry durr, I can make a speech in the senate-house now and then—would make your hair stand on end, Madonna.

Aqui. What care I for your speeches in the senate-house? If you would be silent here, I should thank you.

Ant. Why, I can make speeches to thee too, my lovely Madonna; for example—my cruel fair one, [Takes out a purse of gold, and at every pause shakes it.] Since it is my fate, that you should prove angry with your servant; tho' late at night—I hope 'tis not too late with this to gain reception for my love—there's for thee, my little Nicky Nacky—take it, here take it—I say take it, or I'll throw it at your head—How now rebel!

Aqui. Truly, my illustrious senator, I must confess your honour is at present most profoundly eloquent indeed.

Ant. Very well: come, now let's sit down and think upon't a little—come, sit I say—sit down by me a little, my Nicky Nacky, ha—[sits down] hurry durr—good for nothing—

Aqui. No, sir, if you please I can know my distance and stand.

Ant. Stand: You won't sit down?

Aqui. No, sir.

Ant. Then look you now, suppose me a bull, a Basan-bull, the bull of bulls, or any bull. Thus up I get and with my brows thus bent—I broo, I say I broo, I broo, I broo. You won't sit down, will you—I broo—

[Bellows like a bull and drives her about.]

Aqui. Well, sir, I must endure this, [She sits down.] Now your honour has been a bull, pray what beast will your worship please to be next?

Ant. Now I'll be a senator again, and thy lover, little Nicky Nacky! [He sits by her] I'll be a dog.

Aqui. A dog, my lord

Ant. Ay a dog—and I'll give thee this t'other purse to let me be a dog—and use me like a dog a little. Hurry durr—I will—here 'tis—[Gives the purse.]

Aqui. Well, with all my heart. But let me beseech your dogship to play your tricks over as fast as you can, that you may be turn'd out of doors as you deserve.

Ant. Ay, ay,—no matter for that—that shan't move me—[He gets under the table.] Now bough waugh waugh, bough waugh—

[Barks like a dog.]

Aqui. Hold, hold, hold, sir, I beseech you: what is't you do? If curs bite they must be kickt, sir. Do you see, kickt thus.

Ant. Ay, with all my heart: do, kick, kick on, row I am under the table, kick again—kick harder—harder yet, bough waugh waugh, waugh, bough—odd, I'll have a snap at thy shins—bough waugh waugh, waugh bough—odd she kicks bravely—

Aqui. Nay, then I'll go another way to work with you: and I think here's an instrument fit for the purpose!

[Fetches a whip and a bel.]

What, bite your mistress, sirrah! out, out of doors, you dog, to kennel and be hang'd—bite your mistress by the legs, you rogue——

[She whips him.]

Ant. Nay, pr'ythee Nacky, now thou art too loving: hurry durry, odd, I'll be a dog no longer.

Aqui. Nay, none of your fawning and grinning; but be gone, or here's the discipline. What, bite your mistress by the legs, you mongrel? Out of doors——hout, hout, to kennel, sirrah! go.

Ant. This is very barbarous usage, Nacky, very barbarous: look you, I will not go—I will not stir from the door, that I resolve——hurry durry, what, shut me out?

[She whips him out.]

Aqui. Ay, and if you come here any more to-night I'll have my footmen lug you, you cur: What, bite your poor mistress Nacky, sirrah!

Enter Maid.

Maid. Heav'n's, madam! what's the matter?

[He howls at the door like a dog.]

Aqui. Call my footmen hither presently.

Enter two Footmen.

Maid. They are here already, madam; the house is all alarm'd with a strange noise, that nobody knows what to make of.

Aqui. Go all of you and turn that troublesome beast in the next room out of my house.—If I ever see him within these walls again, without my leave for his admittance, you sneaking rogues,—I'll have you poison'd all, poison'd like rats: every corner of the house shall stink of one of you. Go, and learn hereafter to know my pleasure. So now for my Pierre: Thus when the godlike lover is displeas'd, We sacrifice our fool, and he's appeas'd. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.

Enter Belvidera.

Belv. I'm sacrific'd! I'm sold! betray'd to shame!

Inevitable ruin has inclos'd me!
No sooner was I to my bed repair'd,
To weigh and, weeping, ponder my condition,
But the old hoary wretch, to whose false care
My peace and honour was entrusted, came (Like Tarquin) ghastly, with infernal lust.
Oh thou Roman Lucrece!
Thou could'st find friends, to vindicate thy wrong!

I never had but one, and he's prov'd false!
He, that should guard my virtue, has betray'd it!
Left me! undone me! Oh, that I could hate him!
Where shall I go! Oh! whither, whither wander?

Enter Jaffier.

Jaff. Can Belvidera want a resting-place,
When these poor arms are open to receive her?
Oh! 'tis in vain to struggle with desires
Strong as my love to thee; for every moment
I'm from thy sight, the heart within my bosom
Moans like a tender infant in its cradle,

Whose nurse had left it. Come, and with the songs

Of gentle love, persuade it to its peace.

Belv. I fear the stubborn wanderer will not own me;

'Tis grown a rebel, to be rul'd no longer;
Scorns the indulgent bosom that first lull'd it,
And, like a disobedient child, disdains
The soft authority of Belvidera.

Jaff. There was a time——

Belv. Yes, yes, there was a time,

When Belvidera's tears, her cries and sorrows,
Were not despis'd; when, if she chanc'd to sigh,

Or look'd but sad——there was, indeed, a time

When Jaffier would have taken her in his arms,
Eased her declining head upon his breast,
And never left her, till he found the cause.

But let her now weep seas;

Cry, till she rend the earth; sigh, till she burst
Her heart asunder; still he bears it all.

Deaf as the wind, and as the rocks unshaken.

Jaff. Have I been deaf? am I that rock unmov'd,

Against whose root tears beat, and sighs are sent,

In vain? Have I beheld thy sorrows calmly?

Witness against me heav'n's, have I done this?

Then bear me in a whirlwind back again,

And let that angry dear one ne'er forgive me.

Oh! thou too rashly censures my love!

Could'st thou but think how I have spent this night,

Dark and alone, no pillow to my head,

Rest in my eyes, nor quiet in my heart,

Thou would'st not, Belvidera, sure thou would'st not

Talk to me thus; but, like a pitying angel,
Spreading thy wings, come settle on my breast,
And hatch warm comfort there, ere sorrows freeze it.

Belv. Why, then, poor mourner, in what baleful corner

Hast thou been talking with that witch, the night?

On what cold stone hast thou been stretch'd along,

Gathering the grumbling winds about thy head,
To mix with theirs, the accent of thy woes?

Oh! now I find the cause my love forsakes me;

I am no longer fit to bear a share

In his concerns—My weak female virtue

Must not be trusted: 'tis too frail and tender.

Jaff. Oh, Portia! Portia! what a soul was thine!

Belv. That Portia was a woman; and when Brutus,

Big with the fate of Rome, (Heav'n guard thy safety!)

Conceal'd from her the labours of his mind,

She let him see her blood was great as his,

Flow'd from a spring as noble, and a heart

Fit to partake his troubles as his love.

Fetch, fetch that dagger back, the dreadful dower
Thou gav'st last night in parting with me ;—
strike it

Here to my heart ; and, as the blood flows from it,
Judge if it run not pure as Cato's daughter's.

Jaff. Thou art too good, and I indeed unworthy,

Unworthy so much virtue. Teach me how
I may deserve such matchless love as thine,
And see with what attention I'll obey thee.

Belv. Do not despise me : that's the all I ask.

Jaff. Despise thee ! Hear me —

Belv. Oh ! thy charming tongue
Is but too well acquainted with my weakness ;
Knows, let it name but love, my melting heart
Dissolves within my breast ; 'till, with closed
eyes,

I reel into thy arms, and all's forgotten.

Jaff. What shall I do ?

Belv. Tell me ! be just, and tell me
Why dwells that busy cloud upon thy face ?
Why am I made a stranger ? why that sigh,
And I not know the cause ? Why, when the world

I wrapt in rest, why chuses then my love
To wander up and down in horrid darkness,
Loathing his bed, and these desiring arms ?
Why are these eyes bloodshot with tedious watching ?

Why starts he now ? and looks as if he wished
His fate were finished ? Tell me, ease my fear ;
Lest when we next time meet, I want the power
To search into the sickness of thy mind,
But talk as wildly then as thou look'st now.

Jaff. Oh, Belvidera !

Belv. Why was I last night delivered to a villain ?

Jaff. Ha ! a villain ?

Belv. Yes, to a villain ! Why at such an hour
Meets that assembly, all made up of wretches,
That look as hell had drawn them into league ?
Why, I in this hand, and in that a dagger,
Was I deliver'd with such dreadful ceremonies ?
" To you, sirs, and to your honours, I bequeath
her,

And with her this : whene'er I prove unworthy—
You know the rest—then strike it to her heart."
Oh ! why is that rest concealed from me ?—
Must I

Be made the hostage of a hellish trust !
For such I know I am : that's all my value.
But by the love and loyalty I owe thee,
I'll free thee from the bondage of these slaves ;
Straight to the senate, tell them all I know,
All that I think, all that my fears inform me.

Jaff. Is this the Roman virtue ? this the blood
That boasts its purity with Cato's daughter ?
Would she have e'er betrayed her Brutus ?

Belv. No :

For Brutus trusted her. Wert thou so kind,
What would not Belvidera suffer for thee !

Jaff. I shall undo myself, and tell thee all.

Belv. Look not upon me as I am, a woman :

But as a bone, thy wife, thy friend ; who long
Has had admission to thy heart, and there
Studied the virtues of thy gallant nature.
Thy constancy, thy courage, and thy truth,
Have been my daily lesson : I have learned
them,

And, bold as thou, can suffer or despise
The worst of fates for thee, and with thee share
them.

Jaff. Oh, you divinest powers ! look down and hear

My prayers ! instruct me to reward this virtue !
Yet think a little, ere thou tempt me further ;
Think I have a tale to tell will shake thy nature,

Melt all this boasted constancy, thou talk'st of,
Into vile tears and despicable sorrows :

Then, if thou should'st betray me !—

Belv. Shall I swear ?

Jaff. No, do not swear : I would not violate
Thy tender nature, with so rude a bond :

But as thou hop'st to see me live my days,
And love thee long, lock this within thy breast ;
I have bound myself, by all the strictest sacraments,

Divine and human—

Belv. Speak !

Jaff. To kill thy father—

Belv. My father !

Jaff. Nay, the throats of the whole senate
Shall bleed, my Belvidera. He, amongst us,
That spares his father, brother, or his friend,
Is damned. How rich and beauteous will the face

Of ruin look, when these wide streets run blood !
I, and the glorious partners of my fortune,
Shouting and striding o'er the prostrate dead,
Still to new waste ; whilst thou, far off in safety
Smiling, shalt see the wonders of our daring,
And, when night comes, with praise and love receive me.

Belv. Oh !

Jaff. Have a care, and shrink not even in thought !

For if thou dost—

Belv. I know it ; thou wilt kill me.

Do, strike thy sword into this bosom : lay me
Dead on the earth, and then thou wilt be safe.
Murder my father ! though his cruel nature
Has persecuted me to my undoing ;
Driven me to basest wants ; can I behold him,
With smiles of vengeance, butchered in his age ?
The sacred fountain of my life destroyed ?
And can'st thou shed the blood that gave me being ?

Nay be a traitor too, and sell thy country ?
Can thy great heart descend so vilely low,
Mix, with hired slaves, bravoës, and common stabbers,

Nose-slitters, alley-lurking villains ! join
With such a crew, and take a ruffian's wages,
To cut the throats of wretches as they sleep ?

Jaff. Thou wrong'st me, Belvidera ! I have engaged,

With men of souls fit to reform the ills
Of all mankind: there's not a heart among'st
them

But'st stout as death, yet honest as the nature
Of man first made, ere fraud and vice were fashion.

Belv. What's he, to whose curst hands last night thou gavest me?

Was that well done? Oh! I could tell a story,
Would rouse thy lion-heart out of its den,
And make it rage with terrifying fury.

Jaff. Speak on, I charge thee.

Belv. O my love! if e'er
Thy Belvidera's peace deserved thy care, Remove me from this place. Last night! last
night!

Jaff. Distract me not, but give me all the truth!

Belv. No sooner wert thou gone, and I alone
Left in the power of that old son of mischief;
No sooner was I laid on my sad bed,
But that vile wretch approached me. Then my heart

Throbbed with its fears: oh, how I wept and sighed,
And shrunk and trembled! wished in vain for
him,

That should protect me! Thou, alas! wert gone.
Jaff. Patience, sweet Heaven, 'till I make vengeance sure!

Belv. He drew the hideous dagger forth thou gavest him,

And, with upbraiding smiles, he said, 'Behold it!
'This is the pledge of a false husband's love.'
And in my arms then pressed, and would have clasped me;

But with my cries, I scared his coward heart,
'Till he withdrew, and muttered vows to hell.
These are thy friends! with these thy life, thy
honour,

Thy love, all staked, and all will go to ruin.

Jaff. No more: I charge thee keep this secret close;

Clear up thy sorrows; look as if thy wrongs
Were all forgot, and treat him like a friend,
As no complaint were made. No more; retire,
Retire, my life, and doubt not of my honour;
I'll heal its failings, and deserve thy love.

Belv. Oh! should I part with thee, I fear thou wilt

In anger leave me, and return no more.

Jaff. Return no more! I would not live without thee

Another night, to purchase the creation.

Belv. When shall we meet again?

Jaff. Anon; at twelve

I'll steal myself to thy expecting arms:
Come like a travelled dove, and bring thee peace.

Belv. Indeed!

Jaff. By all our loves.

Belv. 'Tis hard to part:

But sure no falsehood ever looked so fairly.

Farewell! remember twelve.

Jaff. Let Heaven forget me,

[Exit.

When I remember not thy truth, thy love!
How cursed is my condition, tossed and jostled
From every corner; fortune's common fool,
The jest of rogues, and instrumental ass,
For villains to lay loads of shame upon,
And drive about just for their ease and scorn!

Enter Pierre.

Pier. Jaffair!

Jaff. Who calls?

Pier. A friend, that could have wished To have found thee otherwise employed. What hunt

A wife on the dull soil! Sure a staunch husband
Of all hounds is the dullest. Wilt thou never,
Never be weaned from caudles and confections?
What feminine tales hast thou been listening to,
Of unaired shirts, catarrhs and tooth-ache, got
By thin-soled shoes?

Jaff. May not a man, then, trifle out an hour
With a kind woman, and not wrong his calling?

Pier. Not in a cause like ours.

Jaff. Then, friend, our cause
Is in a damned condition: for I'll tell thee, [it:
That canker-worm, called lechery, has touched
'Tis tainted vilely. Would'st thou think it?
Renault

(That mortified, old, withered, winter rogue)
Loves simple fornication like a priest;
He visited her last night, like a kind guardian:
Faith! she has some temptation, that's the truth on't.

Pier. He durst not wrong his trust?

Jaff. 'Twas something late, though,
To take the freedom of a lady's chamber.

Pier. Was she in bed?

Jaff. Yes, faith, in virgin sheets,
White as her bosom.

Pier. Patience guide me!

He used no violence?

Jaff. No, no; out on it, violence!

Played with her neck; brushed her with his grey beard;

Struggled and touzed; tickled her, till she squeaked a little,

May be, or so—but not a jot of violence—

Pier. Damn him!

Jaff. Ay, so say I: but hush, no more of it.
All hitherto is well, and I believe
Myself no monster yet: though no man knows What fate he is born to. Sure it is near the hour

We all should meet for our concluding orders:
Will the ambassador be here in person?

Pier. No, he has sent commission to that villain Renault,

To give the executing charge:

I'd have thee be a man, if possible,
And keep thy temper; for a brave revenge
Ne'er comes too late.

Jaff. Fear not, I am as cool as patience.

Had he completed my dishonour, rather Than hazard the success our hopes are ripe for,
I'd bear it all with mortifying virtue.

Pier. He's yonder, coming this way through the hall;

His thoughts seem full.

Jaff. Prithee retire, and leave me

With him alone: I'll put him to some trial;

See how his rotten part will bear the touching.

Pier. Be careful, then.

Jaff. Nay, never doubt, but trust me.

What! be a devil, take a damning oath

For shedding native blood! Can there be a sin

In merciful repentance? Oh, this villain!

Enter Renault.

Ren. Perverse and peevish! What a slave is man

To let his itching flesh thus get the better of him!

Dispatch the tool her husband—that were well.

Who's there?

Jaff. A man.

Ren. My friend, my near ally!

The hostage of your faith, my beauteous charge is very well.

Jaff. Sir, are you sure of that?

Stands she in perfect health? beats her pulse even?

Neither too hot nor cold?

Ren. What means that question?

Jaff. Oh, women have fantastic constitutions, Inconstant in their wishes, always wavering, And never fixed. Was it not boldly done, Even at first sight, to trust the thing I loved (A tempting treasure, too) with youth so fierce And virorous as thine? but thou art honest.

Ren. Who dares accuse me?

Jaff. Cursed be he, that doubts Thy virtue! I have tried it, and declare, Were I to chuse a guardian of my honour, I'd put it in thy keeping: for I know thee.

Ren. Know me! [thee:]

Jaff. Ay, know thee. There's no falsehood in Thou look'st just as thou art. Let us embrace! Now, would'st thou cut my throat, or I cut thine?

Ren. You dare not do it.

Jaff. You lie, sir.

Ren. How!

Jaff. No more,

'Tis a base world, and must reform, that's all.

Enter Spinosa, Theodore, Eliot, Revillido, Durand, Bramveil, and the rest of the conspirators.

Ren. Spinosa, Theodore!

Spin. The same.

Ren. You are welcome.

Spin. You are trembling, sir.

Ren. 'Tis a cold night, indeed, and I am aged;

Full of decay, and natural infirmities;

[Pierre re-enters.

We shall be warm, my friends, I hope, to-morrow.

Pier. 'Twas not well done; thou should'st have stroked him, And not have galled him.

Jaff. Damn him, let him chew on it.

Heaven! Where am I? beset with cursed fiends, That wait to damn me! What a devil is man, When he forgets his nature—hush, my heart.

Ren. My friends, 'tis late; are we assembled all?

Where's Theodore?

Theod. At hand.

Ren. Spinosa.

Spin. Here.

Ren. Bramveil.

Bram. I'm ready.

Ren. Durand and Brabe.

Dur. Command us.

We are both prepared.

Omnes. All; all.

Ren. Mezzana, Revillido,

Ternon, Retrosi! Oh! you are men, I find.

Fit to hold your fate, and meet her summons.

To-morrow's rising sun must see you all

Decked in your honours. Are the soldiers ready?

Pier. All, all.

Ren. You, Durand, with your thousand, must possess

St. Mark's; you, captain, know your charge already;

'Tis to secure the ducal palace: you,

Brabe, with an hundred more, must gain the Secque:

With the like number, Bramveil, to the Procural;

Be all this done with the least tumult possible,

'Till in each place you post sufficient guards:

Then sheathe you swords in every breast you meet.

Jaff. Oh! reverend cruelty! damned bloody villain! [Aside.]

Ren. During this execution, Durand, you Must in the midst keep your battalia fast; And, Theodore, be sure to plant the cannon That may command the streets; whilst Revillido, Messano, Ternon, and Retrosi guard you.

This done, we'll give the general alarm,

Apply petards, and force the arsenal gates;

Then fire the city round in several places,

Or with our cannon (if it dare resist)

Batter to ruin. But above all, I charge you,

Shed blood enough; spare neither sex nor age,

Name nor condition; if there live a senator

After to-morrow, though the dullest rogue

That e'er said nothing, we have lost our ends.

If possible, let's kill the very name

Of senator, and bury it in blood.

Jaff. Merciless, horrid slave—Ay, blood enough!

Shed blood enough, old Renault! how thou charimest me!

Ren. But one thing more, and then farewell, till fate

Join us again, or separate us for ever:

First let's embrace. Heaven knows, who next shall thus

Wing ye together; but let's all remember,

We wear no common cause upon our swords:

Let each man think, that on his single virtue

Depends the good and fame of all the rest ;
 Eternal honour, or perpetual infamy.
 Let us remember through what dreadful hazards
 Propitious fortune hitherto has led us :
 How often on the brink of some discovery
 Have we stood tottering, yet still kept our ground
 So well, that the busiest searchers ne'er could follow

Those subtle tracks, which puzzled all suspicions.
 You droop, sir.

Jaff. No ; with most profound attention
 I've heard it all, and wonder at thy virtue.

Ren. Though there be yet few hours 'twixt them and ruin,

Are not the senate lulled in full security,
 Quiet and satisfied, as fools are always ?
 Never did so profound repose fore-run
 Calamity so great. Nay, our good fortune
 Has blinded the most piercing of mankind.
 Strengthened the fearfullest, charmed the most suspectful,

Confounded the most subtle. For we live,
 We live, my friends, and quickly shall our life
 Prove fatal to these tyrants. Let's consider,
 That we destroy oppression, avarice,
 A people nursed up equally with vices
 And loathsome lusts, which nature most abhors,
 And such as without shame she cannot suffer.

Jaff. Oh, Belvidera ! take me to thy arms,
 And shew me where's my peace, for I have lost
 it ! [Exit.]

Ren. Without the least remorse, then, let's resolve

With fire and sword to exterminate these tyrants ;

And when we shall behold those cursed tribunals,
 Stained by the tears and sufferings of the innocent,

Burning with flames rather from Heaven than
 ours,

The raging, furious, and un pitying soldier
 Pulling his reeking daggers from the bosoms
 Of gasping wretches ; death in every quarter ;
 With all, that sad disorder can produce,
 To make a spectacle of horror ; then,
 Then let us call to mind, my dearest friends,
 That there is nothing pure upon the earth ;
 That the most valued things have most alloys,
 And that in change of all those vile enormities, Under whose weight this wretched country labours,

The means are only in our hands to crown them.

Pier. And may those powers above, that are propitious

To gallant minds, record this cause and bless
 it !

Ren. Thus happy, thus secure of all we wish
 for,

Should there, my friends, be found among us
 one,

False to this glorious enterprise, what fate,
 What vengeance, were fit for such a villain ?

Eli. Death here without repentance ; hell hereafter.

Ren. Let that be my lot, if, as here I stand,
 Listed by fate among her darling sons,
 Though I had one only brother, dear by all
 The strictest ties of nature ; though one hour
 Had given us birth, one fortune fed our wants,
 One only love, and that but of each other,
 Still filled our minds ; could I have such a friend
 Joined in this cause, and had but ground to fear
 He meant foul play ; may this right hand drop
 from me,

If I'd not hazard all my future peace,
 And stab him to the heart before you. Who,
 Who would do less ? Would'st thou not, Pierre,
 the same ?

Pier. You've singled me, sir, out for this hard question,

As if it were started only for my sake :
 Am I the thing you fear ? Here, here's my bosom,
 Search it with all your swords. Am I a traitor ?

Ren. No ; but I fear your late commended
 friend

Is little less. Come, sirs, 'tis now no time
 To trifle with our safety. Where's this Jaffair ?

Spin. He left the room just now, in strange disorder.

Ren. Nay, there is danger in him ; I observed
 him ;

During the time I took for explanation,
 He was transported from most deep attention,
 To a confusion which he could not smother ;

His looks grew full of sadness and surprise,
 All which betrayed a wavering spirit in him,

That laboured with reluctance and sorrow.
 What's requisite for safety must be done

With speedy execution ; he remains
 Yet in our power : I, for my own part, wear

A dagger—

Pier. Well.

Ren. And I could wish it—

Pier. Where ?

Ren. Buried in his heart.

Pier. Away ; we're yet all friends ;

No more of this, 'twill breed ill blood among us.

Spin. Let us all draw our swords, and search the house.

Pull him from the dark hole, where he sits brood-
 ing

O'er his cold fears, and each man kill his share of him.

Pier. Who talks of killing ? Who is he, will shed the blood

That's dear to me ? is it you, or you, sir ?

What, not one speak ! how you stand, gaping all
 On your grave oracle, your wooden god there !

Yet not a word ! Then, sir, I'll tell you a secret ;
 Suspicion's but at best a coward's virtue.

Ren. A coward !— [To Ren.
Handles his sword.]

Pier. Put up thy sword, old man ;

Thy hand shakes at it. Come, let's heal this breach ;

I am too hot, we yet may all live friends.

Spin. Till we are safe, our friendship cannot be so.

Pier. Again! Who's that?

Spin. 'Twas I.

The. And I.

Ren. And I.

Om. And all.

Ren. Who are on my side?

Spin. Every honest sword.

Let's die like men, and not be sold like slaves.

Pier. One such word more, by Heaven I'll to the senate,

And hang ye all, like dogs, in clusters.

Why peep your coward swords half out their shells?

Why do you not all brandish them like mine?

You fear to die, and yet dare talk of killing!

Ren. Go to the senate, and betray us! haste!

Secure thy wretched life; we fear to die

Less than thou darest be honest.

Pier. That's rank falsehood.

Fear'st not thou death! Fie, there's a knavish itch

In that salt blood, an utter foe to smarting.

Had Jaffair's wife proved kind, he'd still been true.

Faugh!—how that stinks! thou die! thou kill my friend!

Or thou! or thou! with that lean, withered face!

Away, disperse all to your several charges,

And meet to-morrow where your honour calls you.

I'll bring that man, whose blood you so much thirst for,

And ye shall see him venture for you fairly—

Hence! hence, I say. [Exit Rena. It angrily.]

Spin. I fear we have been to blame,

And done too much.

The. 'Twas too far urged against the man you loved.

Rev. Here take our swords, and crush them with your feet.

Spin. Forgive us, gallant friend.

Pier. Nay, now you've found

The way to melt, and cast me as you will.

I'll fetch 'his friend, and give him to your mercy:

Nay, he shall die, if you will take him from me.

For your repose, I'll quit my heart's best jewel;

But would not have him torn away by villains,

And spiteful villany.

Spin. No, may you both

For ever live, and fill the world with fame.

Pier. Now ye are too kind. Whence rose all this discord?

Oh, what a dangerous precipice have we 'scaped! How near a fall was all we had long been building!

What an eternal blot had stained our glories,

If one, the bravest and the best of men,

Had fallen a sacrifice to rash suspicion,

Butchered by those, whose cause he came to cherish!

Oh! could you know him all, as I have known him;

How good he is, how just, how true, how brave,

You would not leave this place till you had seen him;

Humbled yourselves before him, kissed his feet, And gained remission for the worst of follies.

Come but to-morrow, all your doubts shall end, And to your loves me better recommend,

That I have preserv'd your fame, and sav'd my friend.

ACT IV. SCENE I.

The Rialto.

Enter Jaffair and Belvidera.

Jaff. Where dost thou lead me? Every step I move,

Methinks I tread upon some mangled limb

Of a racked friend! Oh, my dear charming ruin!

Where are we wandering?

Bel. To eternal honour;

To do a deed, shall chronicle thy name

Among the glorious legends of those few,

That have saved sinking nations. Thy renown

Shall be the future song of all the virgins,

Who, by thy piety, have been preserved

From horrid violation. Every street

Shall be adorned with statues to thy honour;

And at thy feet this great inscription written,

Remember him, that propped the fall of Venice.

Jaff. Rather, remember him, who, after all

The sacred bonds of oaths, and holier friendship,

In fond compassion to a woman's tears,

Forgot his manhood, virtue, truth, and honour,

To sacrifice the bosom that relieved him.

Why wilt thou damn me?

Bel. Oh, inconstant man!

How will you promise! how will you deceive!

Do, return back, replace me in my bondage,

Tell all thy friends how dangerously thou lovest me,

And let thy dagger do its bloody office.

Oh! that kind dagger, Jaffair, how 'twill look

Struck through my heart, drenched in my blood to the hilt!

Whilst these poor dying eyes shall, with their tears,

No more torment thee; then thou wilt be free:

Or, if thou think'st it nobler, let me live,

Till I'm a victim to the hateful lust

Of that infernal devil, that old fiend,

That's damned himself, and would undo mankind.

Last night, my love!

Jaff. Name it not again!

It shews a beastly image to my fancy,

Will wake me into madness. Oh, the villain!

That durst approach such purity as thine

On terms so vile: destruction, swift destruction,

Fall on my coward head, and make my name

The common scorn of fools, if I forgive him!

If I forgive him? If I not revenge

With utmost rage, and most unstaying fury,

Thy sufferings, thou dear darling of my life.

Bel. Delay no longer then, but to the senate,

And tell the dismallest story ever uttered:

Tell them what bloodshed, rapines, desolations,
Have been prepared : how near's the fatal hour.
Save thy poor country, save the reverend blood
Of all its nobles, which to-morrow's dawn,
Must else see shed. Save the poor tender lives
Of all those little infants, which the swords
Of murderers are whetting for this moment.
Think thou already hear'st their dying screams ;
Think that thou see'st their sad distracted mothers,
Kneeling before thy feet, and begging pity :
With torn dishevelled hair, and streaming eyes,
Their naked mangled breasts, besmeared with
blood ;
And even the milk, with which their fondled babes
Softly they hushed, dropping in anguish from
them ;
Think thou seest this, and then consult thy heart.
Jaff. Oh !

Bel. Think too, if you lose this present minute,

What miseries the next day brings upon thee :
Imagine all the horrors of that night ;
Murder and rapine, waste and desolation,
Confusedly raging. Think what then may prove
My lot ; the ravisher may then come safe,
And 'midst the terror of the public ruin,
Do a damned deed ; perhaps may lay a train
To catch thy life. Then where will be revenge,
The dear revenge, that's due to such a wrong ?

Jaff. By all Heaven's powers, prophetic truth dwells in thee !

For every word thou speakest, strikes through
my heart,
Like a new light, and shews it, how it has wandered.

Just what thou hast made me, take me, Belviderra,

And lead me to the place, where I am to say
This bitter lesson ; where I must betray
My truth, my virtue, constancy, and friends.
Must I betray my friend ? Ah ! take me quickly ;
Secure me well before that thought's renewed ;
If I relapse once more, all's lost for ever.

Bel. Hast thou a friend more dear than Bel-videra ?

Jaff. No ; thou art my soul itself ; wealth, friendship, honour,

All present joys, and earnest of all future,
Are summed in thee. Methinks, when in thy
arms,

Thus leaning on thy breast, one minute's more
Than a long thousand years of vulgar hours.
Why was such happiness not given me pure ?
Why dashed with cruel wrongs, and bitter warnings ?

Come, lead me forward, now, like a tame lamb
To sacrifice. Thus, in his fatal garlands Decked fine and pleased, the wanton skips and plays,

Trots by the enticing flattering priestess' side,
And much transported with its little pride,
Forgets his dear companions of the plain ;

Till, by her bound, he's on the altar slain,
Yet then too hardly bleats, such pleasure's in the pain.

Enter Officer and six Guards.

Off. Stand ! who goes there ?

Bel. Friends.

Jaff. Friends, Belvidera ! Hide me from my friends !

By Heaven, I would rather see the face of hell,
Than meet the man I love.

Off. But what friends are you ?

Bel. Friends to the senate, and to the state of Venice.

Off. My orders are to seize on all I find
At this late hour, and bring them to the council,

Who are now sitting.

Jaff. Sir, you shall be obeyed. [me.

Hold, brute, stand off ! none of your paws upon
Now, the lot's cast, and, Fate, do what thou wilt.
[Exeunt guarded.

SCENE II.

The Senate-House, where appear sitting the Duke of Venice, Priuli, Antonio, and eight other Senators.

Duke. Antonio, Priuli, senators of Venice,
Speak, why are we assembled here this night ?
What have you to inform us of, concerns
The state of Venice' honour, or its safety ?

Pri. Could words express the story I have to tell you,

Fathers, these tears were useless ; these sad tears,
That fall from my old eyes ; but there is cause
We all should weep, tear off these purple robes,
And wrap ourselves in sackcloth, sitting down
On the sad earth, and cry aloud to Heaven :
Heaven knows, if yet there be an hour to come,
Ere Venice be no more.

All Sen. How !

Pri. Nay, we stand
Upon the very brink of gaping ruin.
Within this city's formed a dark conspiracy,
To massacre us all, our wives and children,
Kindred and friends, our palaces and temples
To lay in ashes ; nay, the hour too fixed ;
The swords, for aught I know, drawn e'en this moment,

And the wild waste begun. From unknown hands
I had this warning ; but, if we are men,
Let us not be tamely butchered, but do something

That may inform the world, in after ages,
Our virtue was not ruined, though we were.

[A noise without.

Room, room, make room for some prisoners—

Sen. Let us raise the city.

Enter Officer and Guards.

Duke. Speak, there. What disturbance ?

Off. Two prisoners have the guards seized in the street,

Who say, they come to inform this reverend senate

About the present danger.

Enter Jaffeir and Officer.

All. Give them entrance—Well, who are you?

Jaff. A villain.

Ant. Short and pithy.

The man speaks well.

Jaff. Would every man, that hears me,
Would deal so honestly, and own his title.

Duke. 'Tis rumoured, that a plot has been contrived
Against this state: and you have a share in it
too.

If you are a villain, to redeem your honour
Unfold the truth, and be restored with mercy.

Jaff. Think not, that I to save my life came hither;

I know its value better; but in pity
To all those wretches, whose unhappy dooms
Are fixed and sealed. You may see here before
you

The sworn and covenanted foe of Venice;
But use me as my dealings may deserve,
And I may prove a friend.

Duke. The slave capitulates!
Give him the torture!

Jaff. That you dare not do:
Your fear wont let you, not the longing itch
To hear a story, which you dread the truth of—Truth, which the fear of smart shall ne'er get from me.

Cowards are scared with threatenings; boys are whipt

Into confessions: but a steady mind
Acts of itself, ne'er asks the body counsel.
Give him the torture! Name but such a thing
Again, by Heaven I'll shut these lips for ever.
Not all your racks, your engines, or your wheels,
Shall force a groan away, that you may guess at.

Ant. A bloody-minded fellow, I'll warrant;
A damned bloody-minded fellow.

Duke. Name your conditions.

Jaff. For myself full pardon,
Besides the lives of two and twenty friends,
Whose names are here enrolled—Nay, let their crimes

Be ne'er so monstrous, I must have the oaths
And sacred promise of this reverend council,
The thing I ask be ratified. Swear this,
And I'll unfold the secret of your danger.

All. We'll swear.

Duke. Propose the oath.

Jaff. By all the hopes
Ye have of peace and happiness hereafter.
Swear.

All. We all swear.

Jaff. To grant me what I have asked,
Ye swear?

All. We swear.

Jaff. And, as ye keep the oath,
May you, and your posterity be blessed,
Or cursed for ever.

Jaff. Then here's the list, and with it the full disclose
Of all that threatens you. [Delivers a paper.]
Now, Fate, thou hast caught me.

2 L

Ant. Why, what a dreadful catalogue of cutting throats is here! I'll warrant you, not one of these fellows but has a face like a lion. I dare not so much as read their names over.

Duke. Give order, that all diligent search be made

To seize these men; their characters are public;
The paper intimates their rendezvous
To be at the house of a famed Grecian courtesan,
Called Aquilina; see that place secured.

You, Jaffeir, must with patience bear, till morning,

To be our prisoner.

Jaff. Would the chains of death
Had bound me safe, e'er I had known this minute!

I've done a deed will make my story hereafter
Quoted in competition with all ill ones:
The history of my wickedness shall run
Down thro' the low traditions of the vulgar,
And boys be taught to tell the tale of Jaffeir.

Duke. Captain, withdraw your prisoner.

Jaff. Sir, if possible,

Lead me, where my own thoughts themselves
may lose me;

Where I may doze out what I've left of life,
Forget myself, and this day's guilt and falsehood.

Cruel remembrance! how shall I appease thee?
[Exit guarded.]

Off. [Without] More traitors; room, room, room, make room there.

Duke. How is this? guards!

Where are our guards? Shut up the gates, the treason's

Already at our doors.

Enter Officer.

Off. My lords, more traitors,
Seized in the very act of consultation;
Furnished with arms and instruments of mischief.
Bring in the prisoners.

Enter Pierre, Renault, Theodore, Eliot, Revellido, and other Conspirators, in fetters.

Pier. You, my lords, and fathers
(As you are pleased to call yourselves) of Venice,

If you sit here to guide the course of justice,
Why these disgraceful chains upon the limbs,
That have so often laboured in your service?
Are these the wreaths of triumph ye bestow
On those that bring you conquest home, and honours?

Duke. Go on; you shall be heard, sir.

Ant. And be hanged too, I hope.

Pier. Are these the trophies I have deserved for fighting

Your battles with confederated powers?

When winds and seas conspired to overthrow
you,

And brought the fleets of Spain to your own harbours;

When you, great duke, shrunk trembling in your palace,

And saw your wife, the Adriatic, ploughed,

Like a lewd whore, by bolder prows than yours,
Stepped not I forth, and taught your loose Venetians

The task of honour, and the way to greatness?
Raised you from your capitulating fears
To stipulate the terms of sued-for peace?

And this my recompence! if I am a traitor,
Produce my charge; or shew the wretch that's base

And brave enough, to tell me I am a traitor.

Duke. Know you one Jaffair?

[Consp. murmur.]

Pier. Yes, and know his virtue.

His justice, truth, his general worth, and sufferings

From a hard father, taught me first to love him.

Enter Jaffair guarded.

Duke. See him brought forth.

Pier. My friend too bound! nay, then,
Our fate has conquered us, and we must fall.
Why droops the man, whose welfare's so much mine,

They are but one thing? These reverend tyrants, Jaffair,

Call us traitors. Art thou one, my brother?

Jaff. To thee, I am the falsest, veriest slave,
That e'er betrayed a generous, trusting friend,
And gave up honour to be sure of ruin.
All our fair hopes, which morning was to have crowned,

Has this cursed tongue o'erthrown.

Pier. So, then, all's over:

Venice has lost her freedom, I my life.

No more. Farewell.

Duke. Say; will you make confession

Of your vile deeds, and trust the senate's mercy?

Pier. Cursed be your senate! cursed your constitution!

The curse of growing factions and divisions,
Still vex your councils, shake your public safety,
And make the robes of government you wear,
Hateful to you, as these base chains to me!

Duke. Pardon, or death?

Pier. Death! honourable death!

Ren. Death's the best thing we ask, or you can give;

No shameful bonds, but honourable death.

Duke. Break up the council. Captain, guard your prisoners.

Jaffair, you are free, but these must wait for judgment. [Exeunt all the Senators.]

Pier. Come, where's my dungeon? Lead me to my straw:

It will not be the first time I've lodged hard,
To do the senate service.

Jaff. Hold, one moment. [senate?]

Pier. Who's he disputes the judgment of the presumptuous rebel—on— [Strikes Jaffair.]

Jaff. By Heaven, you stir not!

I must be heard; I must have leave to speak.
Thou has disgraced me, Pierre, by a vile blow:
Had not a dagger done thee nobler justice?
But use me as thou wilt, thou canst not wrong me,

For I am fallen beneath the basest injuries:
Yet look upon me with an eye of mercy,
With pity and with charity behold me;
Shut not thy heart against a friend's repentance;
But, as there dwells a god-like nature in thee,
Listen with mildness to my supplications!

Pier. What whining monk art thou? what holy cheat,

That would encroach upon my credulous ears,
And canst thus vilely? Hence! I know thee not;

Dissemble and be nasty. Leave, hypocrite.

Jaff. Not know me, Pierre!

Pier. No, I know thee not! What art thou?

Jaff. Jaffair, thy friend, thy once-loved valued friend!

Thou' now deservedly scorned, and used most hardly.

Pier. Thou, Jaffair! thou my once-loved valued friend!

By Heavens thou liest; the man so called, my friend,

Was generous, honest, faithful, just, and valiant;
Noble in mind, and in his person lovely;

Dear to my eyes, and tender to my heart:

But thou! a wretched, base, false, worthless coward,

Poor, even in soul, and loathsome in thy aspect;
All eyes must shun thee, and all hearts detest thee.

Prithce avoid; nor longer cling thus round me,
Like something baneful, that my nature's chilled at.

Jaff. I have not wronged thee, by these tears I have not,

But still am honest, true, and, hope too, valiant;

My mind still full of thee, therefore still noble.
Let not thy eyes then shun me, nor thy heart

Detest me utterly. Oh! look upon me,

Look back, and see my sad, sincere submission!
How my heart swells, as e'en 'twould burst my

bosom;
Fond of its goal, and labouring to be at thee.

What shall I do? what say, to make thee hear me?

Pier. Hast thou not wronged me? Dar'st thou call thyself

That once-loved, valued friend of mine,
And swear thou hast not wronged me? Whence these chains?

Whence the vile death, which I may meet this moment?

Whence this dishonour, but from thee, thou false one?

Jaff. All's true; yet grant one thing, and I've done asking.

Pier. What's that?

Jaff. To take thy life, on such conditions
The council have proposed: thou, and thy friends
May yet live long, and to be better treated.

Pier. Life! ask my life! Confess! record myself

A villain, for the privilege to breathe!

And carry up and down this cursed city,
A discontented and repining spirit,
Burthensome to itself, a few years longer ;
To lose it, may be, at last, in a lewd quarrel
For some new friend, treacherous and false as thou art !

No, this vile world and I have long been jangling,

And cannot part on better terms than now,
When only men, like thee, are fit to live in it.

Jaff. By all that's just——

Pier. Swear by some other powers,

For thou hast broke that sacred oath too lately.

Jaff. Then, by that hell I merit, I'll not leave thee,

Till to thyself, at least, thou art reconciled,
However thy resentment deal with me.

Pier. Not leave me !

Jaff. No ; thou shalt not force me from thee.
Use me reproachfully, and like a slave ;
Tread on me, buffet me, heap wrongs on wrongs
On my poor head : I'll bear it all with patience,
Shall weary out thy most unfriendly cruelty ;
Lie at thy feet, and kiss them, though they
spurn me :

Till, wounded by my sufferings, thou relent,
And raise me to thy arms with dear forgiveness.

Pier. Art thou not——

Jaff. What ?

Pier. A traitor ?

Jaff. Yes.

Pier. A villain.

Jaff. Granted.

Pier. A coward, a most scandalous coward :
Spiritless, void of honour ; one, who has sold
Thy everlasting fame for shameless life !

Jaff. All, all, and more, much more : my faults are numberless.

Pier. And would'st thou have me live on terms like thine ?

Base, as thou art false——

Jaff. No ; 'tis to me, that's granted :
The safety of thy life was all I aimed at,
In recompence for faith and trust so broken.

Pier. I scorn it more, because preserved by
thee ;

And as, when first my foolish heart took pity
On thy misfortunes, sought thee in thy miseries Relieved thy wants, and raised thee from the state [thee,

Of wretchedness, in which thy fate had plunged
To rank thee in my list of noble friends ;
All I received, in surety for thy truth,
Were unregarded oaths, and this, this dagger,
Given with a worthless pledge, thou since hast stolen :

So I restore it back to thee again ;
Swearing by all those powers, which thou hast violated,

Never from this cursed hour to hold communion,
Friendship, or interest, with thee, though our
years

Were to exceed those limited the world.

Take it—farewell—for now I owe thee nothing.

Jaff. Say thou wilt live then.

Pier. For my life, dispose it
Just as thou wilt, because 'tis what I'm tired with.

Jaff. Oh, Pierre !

Pier. No more.

Jaff. My eyes won't lose the sight of thee,
But languish after thee, and ache with gazing.

Pier. Leave me—Nay, then, thus, thus I throw thee from me ;

And curses, great as is thy falsehood, catch thee !
[Exit.

Jaff. Amen.

He's gone, my father, friend, preserver,
And here's the portion he has left me :

[Holds the dagger up.
This dagger. Well remembered ! with this dagger,

I gave a solemn vow of dire importance ;
Parted with this, and Belvidera together.
Have a care, memory ! drive that thought no farther :

No, I'll esteem it, as a friend's last legacy ;
Treasure it up within this wretched bosom,
Where it may grow acquainted with my heart,
That, when they meet, they start not from each other.

So now for thinking—A blow ! called traitor,
villain,

Coward, dishonourable coward !

Oh ! for a long sound sleep, and so forget it.
Down, busy devil !

Enter Belvidera.

Belc. Whither shall I fly ?

Where hide me and my miseries together ?
Where's now the Roman constancy I boasted ?
Sunk into trembling fears and desperation,
Not daring to look up to that dear face,
Which used to smile, even on my faults ; but,
down,

Bending these miserable eyes on earth,
Must move in penance, and implore much mercy.

Jaff. Mercy ! Kind Heaven has surely endless stores,

Hoarded for thee, of blessings yet untasted :
Let wretches, loaded hard with guilt, as I am,
Bow with the weight, and groan beneath the bur-
then,

Creep with a remnant of that strength, they've
left,

Before the footstool of that Heaven, they've injured.

Oh, Belvidera : I'm the wretched'st creature
E'er crawled on earth. Now, if thou hast virtue, help me ;

Take me into thy arms, and speak the words of peace

To my divided soul, that wars within me,

And raises every sense to my confusion :

By Heaven, I'm tottering on the very brink

Of pence, and thou art all the hold I've left.

Belc. Alas ! I know thy sorrows are most mighty :

I know thou'st cause to mourn ; to mourn, my Jaffair,
With endless cries, and never-ceasing wailing :
Thou'st lost——

Jaff. Oh ! I have lost what can't be counted.
My friend too, Belvidera, that dear friend,
Who, next to thee, was all my heart rejoiced in,
Has used me like a slave, shamefully used me :
'Twould break thy pitying heart to hear the story.
What should I do ? Resentment, indignation,
Love, pity, fear, and memory, how I've wronged
him,

Distract my quiet with the very thought of it,
And tear my heart to pieces in my bosom.

Belv. What has he done ?

Jaff. Thou'dst hate me, should I tell thee.

Belv. Why ?

Jaff. Oh ! he has used me—yet, by Heaven, I bear it ;

He has used me, Belvidera—but first swear,
That when I've told thee, thou wilt not loath me utterly,

Though vilest blots, and stains appear on me ;
But still, at least, with charitable goodness,
Be near me in the pangs of my affliction.
Nor scorn me, Belvidera, as he has done.

Belv. Have I then e'er been false, that now I am doubted ?

Speak, what's the cause I am grown into distrust ?
Why thought unfit to hear my love's complain-
ing ?

Jaff. Oh !

Belv. Tell me.

Jaff. Bear my failings, for they are many.
Oh, my dear angel ! in that friend, I have lost
All my soul's peace ; for every thought of him
Strikes my sense hard, and deadens it in my brains !
Would'st thou believe it ?

Belv. Speak.

Jaff. Before we parted,
E'er yet his guards had led him to his prison,
Full of severest sorrow for his sufferings,
With eyes o'erflowing, and a bleeding heart,
Humbling myself, almost beneath my nature,
As at his feet I kneeled and sued for mercy,
Forgetting all our friendship, all the dearness,
In which we have lived so many years together,
With a reproachful hand he dashed a blow :
He struck me, Belvidera ! by Heaven, he struck
me !

Buffeted, called me traitor, villain, coward.
Am I a coward ? Am I a villain ? Tell me !
Thou'rt the best judge, and mad'st me, if I am so.

Damnation ! Coward !

Belv. Oh ! forgive him, Jaffair ;
And, if his sufferings wound thy heart already,
What will they do to-morrow ?

Jaff. Ah !

Belv. To-morrow,
When thou shalt see him stretched in all the agonies

Of a tormenting and a shameful death ;
His bleeding bowels, and his broken limbs,

Insulted o'er by a vile butchering villain ;
What will thy heart do then ? Oh ! sure 'twill
stream,

Like my eyes now.

Jaff. What means thy dreadful story ?

Death, and to-morrow ! Broken limbs and bowels !

Insulted o'er by a vile butchering villain !

By all my fears, I shall start out to madness

With barely guessing, if the truth's hid longer.

Belv. The faithless senators, 'tis they've decreed it :

They say, according to your friends' request,
They shall have death, and not ignoble bondage ;
Declare their promised mercy all as forfeited :
False to their oaths, and deaf to intercession,
Warrants are passed for public death to-morrow.

Jaff. Death ! doomed to die ! condemned unheard ! unpleaded !

Belv. Nay, cruellest racks and torments are preparing,

To force confession from their dying pangs——
Oh ! do not look so terribly upon me !

How your lips shake, and all your face disordered !

What means my love ?

Jaff. Leave me, I charge thee, leave me—
Strong temptations

Wake in my heart.

Belv. For what ?

Jaff. No more, but leave me.

Belv. Why ?

Jaff. Oh ! by Heaven, I love thee with that fondness,

I would not have thee stay a moment longer
Near these cursed hands : are they not cold upon thee ?

[Pulls the dagger half out of his bosom, and puts it back again.]

Belv. No ; everlasting comfort's in thy arms.
To lean thus on thy breast, is softer ease
Than downy pillows, decked with leaves of roses.

Jaff. Alas ! thou thinks't not of the thorns 'tis filled with :

[pent
Fly, e'er they gall thee. There's a lurking serpent Ready to leap, and sting thee to the heart.]

Art thou not terrified ?

Belv. No.

Jaff. Call to mind

What thou hast done, and whither thou hast brought me.

Belv. Ha !

Jaff. Where's my friend ? my friend, thou smiling mischief !

Nay shrink not, now 'tis too late ; thou shouldst have fled

When thy guilt first had cause ; for dire revenge
Is up and raging for my friend. He groans !

Hark, how he groans ! his screams are in my ears
Already ; see, they've fixed him on the wheel !

And now they tear him !—murder ! Perjured senate !

Murder !—Oh !—Hark thee, traitress, thou hast done this !

Thanks to thy tears, and false persuading love.
How her eyes speak ! Oh, thou bewitching creature !

Madness can't hurt thee. Come, thou little trembler,

Creep even into my heart, and there lie safe ;
'Tis thy own citadel—Ha—yet stand off !
Heaven must have justice, and my broken vows—
I'll wink, and then 'tis done—

Belv. What means the lord

Of me, my life, and love ? What's in thy bosom,
Thou graspest at so ? Nay, why am I thus treated ?

[Draws the dagger, and offers to stab her.]

What wilt thou do ? Ah ! do not kill me, Jaffier :
Pity these panting breasts, and trembling limbs
That used to clasp thee, when thy looks were milder,

That yet hang heavy on my unpurged soul,
And plunge it not into eternal darkness !

Jaff. Know, Belvidera, when we parted last,
I gave this dagger with thee, as in trust,
To be thy portion, if I e'er proved false.
On such condition, was my truth believed ;
But now 'tis forfeited, and must be paid for.

[Offers to stab her again.]

[Kneeling.]

Belv. Oh ! Mercy !

Jaff. Nay, no struggling.

Belv. Now, then, kill me,

[Leaps on his neck and kisses him.]

While thus I cling about thy cruel neck,
Kiss thy revengeful lips, and die in joys
Greater than any I can guess hereafter.

Jaff. I am, I am a coward, witness heaven,
Witness it, earth, and every being witness !
'Tis but one blow ! yet, by immortal love.
I cannot longer bear a thought to harm thee.

[He throws away the dagger, and embraces her.]

The seal of providence is sure upon thee ;
And thou wert born for yet unheard-of wonders.

Oh ! thou : ert either born to save or damn me !
By all the power, that's given thee o'er my soul,
By thy resistless tears and conquering smiles,
By the victorious love, that still waits on thee,
Fly to thy cruel father, save my friend,
Or all our future quiet's lost for ever !

Fall at his feet, cling round his reverend knees,
Speak to him with thy eyes, and with thy tears,
Melt his hard heart, and wake dead nature in him :

Crush him in thy arms, torture him with thy soft-
Noi, till thy prayers are granted, set him free,
But conquer him, as thou hast conquered me !

[Exeunt.]

ACT V. SCENE I.

An Apartment in Priuli's House.

Enter Priuli solus.

Pri. Why, cruel heaven, have my unhappy days

Been lengthened to this sad one ? Oh ! dishonour

And deathless infamy is fallen upon me !

Was it my fault ? Am I a traitor ? No.

But then, my only child, my daughter wedded ;

There my best blood runs foul, and a disease

Incurable has seized upon my memory,

To make it rot and stink to after-ages !

Curst be the fatal minute when I got her ;

Or would that I had been any thing but man,

And raised an issue, which would ne'er have wronged me.

The miserablest creatures (man excepted)

Are not the less esteemed, though their posterity

Degenerate from the virtues of their fathers :

The vilest beasts are happy in their offspring,

While only man gets traitors, whores, and villains !

Cursed be the names, and some swift blow from fate

Lay this head deep, where mine may be forgotten !

Enter Belvidera, in a long mourning veil.

Belv. He's there, my father, my inhuman father,

That for three years has left an only child

Exposed to all the outrages of fate,

And cruel ruin !—Oh——

Pri. What child of sorrow

Art thou, that comest wrapt in weeds of sadness,
And movest, as if thy steps were towards a grave ?

Belv. A wretch, who, from the very top of happiness,

Am fallen into the depths of misery,

And want your pitying hand to raise me up again.

Pri. Indeed thou talkest as thou hadst tasted sorrows ;

Would I could help thee !

Belv. 'Tis greatly in your power :

The world, too, speaks you charitable ; and I,
Who ne'er asked alms before, in that dear hope,
Am come a begging to you, sir.

Pri. For what ?

Belv. Oh, well regard me ! is this voice a strange one ?

Consider, too, when beggars once pretend
A case like mine, no little will content them.

Pri. What wouldst thou beg for ?

Belv. Pity and forgiveness. [Throws up her veil.]
By the kind tender names of child and father,

Hear my complaints, and take me to your love !

Pri. My daughter !

Belv. Yes, your daughter, by a mother

Virtuous and noble, faithful to your honour,

Obedient to your will, kind to your wishes,

Dear to your arms : by all the joys she gave you,

When, in her blooming years, she was your treasure,

Look kindly on me. In my face behold

The lineaments of her's you have kissed so often,

Pleading the cause of your poor cast-off child.

Pri. Thou art my daughter.

Belv. Yes—and you have often told me,

With smiles of love and chaste paternal kisses,
I had much resemblance of my mother.

Pri. Oh!

Hadst thou inherited her matchless virtues,
I had been too blessed!

Belv. Nav, do not call to memory
My disobedience; but let pity enter
Into your heart, and quite deface the impression.
For could you think how mine's perplexed, what sadness,

Fears and despair distract the peace within me,
Oh! you would take me in your dear, dear arms,
Hover with strong compassion o'er your young
one,

To shelter me, with a protecting wing,
From the black gathered storm, that's just, just breaking.

Pri. Don't talk thus.

Belv. Yes, I must; and you must hear too.
I have a husband.

Pri. Damn him.

Belv. Oh! do not curse him:

He would not speak so hard a word towards you
On any terms, howe'er he deals with me.

Pri. Ha! what means my child?

Belv. Oh! there's but this short moment
'Twixt me and fate: yet send me not with curses
Down to my grave; afford me one kind blessing
Before we part: just take me in your arms,
And recommend me with a prayer to Heaven,
That I may die in peace; and when I am dead—

Pri. How my soul's catch'd!

Belv. Lay me, I beg you, lay me
By the dear ashes of my tender mother.
She would have pitied me, had fate yet spared
her.

Pri. By Heaven, my aching heart forebodes much mischief!

Tell me thy story, for I'm still thy father.

Belv. No; I'm contented.

Pri. Speak!

Belv. No matter.

Pri. Tell me:

By yon blessed Heaven, my heart runs o'er with fondness!

Belv. Oh!

Pri. Utter it!

Belv. Oh! my husband, my dear husband,
Carries a dagger in his once kind bosom.
To pierce the heart of your poor Belvidera!

Pri. Kill thee!

Belv. Yes, kill me. When he passed his faith
And covenant against your state and senate.
He gave me up a hostage for his truth:
With me a dagger and a dire commission,
Whene'er he failed, to plunge it through this bosom!

I learnt the danger, chose the hour of love
To attempt his heart, and bring it back to honour.

Great love prevailed, and blest me with success!
He came, confessed, betrayed his dearest friends
For promised mercy. Now they are doomed to suffer,

Galled with remembrance of what then was sworn,

If they are lost, he vows to appease the gods
With this poor life, and make my blood the atonement!

Pri. Heavens!

Belv. Think you saw what passed at our last parting:

Think you beheld him, like a raging lion,
Pacing the earth, and tearing up his steps,
Fate in his eyes, and roaring with the pain
Of burning fury: think you saw his one hand
Fixed on my throat, whilst the extended other Grasped a keen threatening dagger: Oh! 'twas
thus

We last embraced, when, trembling with revenge
He dragged me to the ground, and at my bosom
Presented horrid death. Cried out, 'My friends!
Where are my friends?' swore, wept, raged,
threatened, loved,
For yet he loved, and that dear love preserved
me

To this last trial of a father's pity.
I fear not death; but cannot bear the thought,
That that dear hand should do the unfriendly office.

If I was ever then your care, now hear me;
Fly to the senate, save the promised lives
Of his dear friends, ere mine be made the sacrifice.

Pri. Oh, my heart's comfort!

Belv. Will you not, my father?

Weep not, but answer me!

Pri. By Heaven I will.

Not one of them but what shall be immortal.
Canst thou forgive me all my follies past?
I'll henceforth be indeed a father; never,
Never more thus expose, but cherish thee,
Dear as the vital warmth, that feeds my life,
Dear as these eyes, that weep in fondness over
thee:

Peace to thy heart! Farewell.

Belv. Go, and remember,

'Tis Belvidera's life her father pleads for.
[Exeunt severally.]

SCENE II.

A Garden.

Enter Jaffeir.

Jaff. Final destruction seize on all the world!
Bend down ye heavens, and, shutting round this
earth,
Crush the vile globe into its first confusion;
Scorch it with elemental flames to one cursed cinder,
And all us little creepers on it, called men,
Burn, burn to nothing; but let Venice burn,
Hotter than all the rest: here kindle hell,
Ne'er to extinguish; and let souls hereafter
Groan here, in all those pains, which mine feels now!

Enter Belvidera.

Belv. My life— [Meeting him.]

Jaff. My plague— [Turning from her.]

Belv. Nay, then I see my ruin.
If I must die—

Jaff. No, death's this day too busy :
Thy father's ill-timed mercy came too late.
I thank thee for thy labours though ; and him
too ;
But all my poor, betrayed, unhappy friends,
Have summons to prepare for fate's black hour ;
And yet I live.

Belv. Then be the next my doom :
I see, thou hast passed my sentence in thy heart,
And I'll no longer weep, or plead against it,
But with the humblest, most obedient patience,
Meet thy dear hands and kiss them, when they wound me.

Indeed I am willing, but I beg thee do it
With some remorse ; and when thou givest the blow,

View me with eyes of a relenting love,
And shew me pity, for 'twill sweeten justice.

Jaff. Shew pity to thee !

Belv. Yes ; and when thy hands, [deed, (charged with my fate, come trembling to the
As thou hast done a thousand times
To this poor breast, when kinder rage hath brought thee, [each other,
When our stung hearts have leaped to meet
And melting kisses sealed our lips together ;
When joys have left me gasping in thy arms—
So let my death come now, and I'll not shrink from it.

Jaff. Nay, Belvidera, do not fear my cruelty,
Nor let the thoughts of death perplex thy fancy ;
But answer me to what I shall demand,
With a firm temper and unshaken spirit.

Belv. I will, when I have done weeping——

Jaff. Fie, no more of it——
How long is it, since that miserable day
We wedded first ?

Belv. Oh ! Oh !

Jaff. Nay, keep in thy tears,
Lest they unman me too

Belv. Heaven knows I cannot ;
The words you utter sound so very sadly,
The streams will follow——

Jaff. Come, I'll kiss them dry then.

Belv. But was it a miserable day ?

Jaff. A cursed one.

Belv. I thought it otherwise ; and you have often sworn,

In the transporting hours of warmest love,
When sure you spoke the truth, you have sworn,
you blessed it.

Jaff. 'Twas a rash oath.

Belv. Then why am I not cursed too ?

Jaff. No, Belvidera ; by the eternal truth,
I doat with too much fondness.

Belv. Still so kind !

Still then do you love me ?

Jaff. Nature, in her workings,
Inclines not with more ardour to creation,
Than I do now towards thee. Man ne'er was blessed,
Since the first pair met, as I have been.

Belv. Then sure you will not curse me ?

Jaff. No, I'll bless thee.

'Tis now, I think, three years we have lived together.

Belv. And may no fatal minute ever part us,
Till, reverend grown for age and love, we go
Down to one grave, as our last bed, together ;
There sleep in peace, till an eternal morning.

Jaff. When will that be ? [Sighing.

Belv. I hope, long ages hence.

Jaff. Have I not hitherto, (I beg thee tell me Thy very fears) used thee with tenderest love ?
Did e'er my soul rise up in wrath against thee ?
Did I e'er frown, when Belvidera smiled ?
Or by the least unfriendly word betray
Abating passion ? have I ever wronged thee ?

Belv. No.

Jaff. Has my heart, or have my eyes, o'er wandered
To any other woman ?

Belv. Never, never—I were the worst of false ones, should I accuse thee.

I own I have been too happy, blessed above
My sex's charter.

Jaff. Did I not say, I came to bless thee ?

Belv. You did.

Jaff. Then hear me, bounteous Heaven !
Pour down your blessings on this beauteous head,
Where everlasting sweets are always springing,
With a continual giving hand, let peace,
Honour, and safety, always hover round her ;
Feed her with plenty ; let her eyes ne'er see
A sight of sorrow, nor her heart know mourning ;
Crown all her days with joy, her nights with rest,
Harmless as her own thoughts ; and prop her
virtue,

To bear the loss of one, that too much loved,
And comfort her with patience in our parting !

Belv. How ! parting, parting !

Jaff. Yes, for ever parting ;

I have sworn, Belvidera, by yon Heaven,
That best can tell how much I lose to leave thee,
We part this hour for ever.

Belv. Oh ! call back
Your cruel blessing ! stay with me and curse
me !

Jaff. No, 'tis resolved.

Belv. Then hear me too, just Heaven !

Pour down your curses on this wretched head,
With never-ceasing vengeance ; let despair,
Danger and infamy, nay all, surround me ;
Starve me with wanting ; let my eyes ne'er see
A sight of comfort, nor my heart know peace :
But dash my days with sorrow, nights with horrors,

Wild as my own thoughts now, and let loose
fury,

To make me mad enough for what I lose,
If I must lose him ! If I must ? I will not.
Oh ! turn and hear me !

Jaff. Now, hold heart, or never.

Belv. By all the tender days we have lived together,
Pity my sad condition ! speak, but speak !

Jaff. Oh ! Oh !

Belv. By these arms, that now cling round thy neck,
By this dear kiss, and by ten thousand more,
By these poor streaming eyes——

Jaff. Murder ! unhold me :
By the immortal destiny, that doomed me

[Draws his dagger.
To this cursed minute, I'll not live one longer ;
Resolve to let me go, or see me fall——

Belv. Hold, sir, be patient !

Jaff. Hark, the dismal bell ! [Passing bell tolls.
Tolls out for death ! I must attend its call too ;
For my poor friend, my dying Pierre, expects me ;

He sent a message to require I would see him
Before he died, and take his last forgiveness.
Farewell, for ever !

Belv. Leave thy dagger with me,
Bequeath me something—Not one kiss at parting ?

Oh ! my poor heart, when wilt thou break !
[Going out, looks back at him.

Jaff. Yet stay :
We have a child, as yet a tender infant ;
Be a kind mother to him, when I am gone ;
Breed him in virtue, and the paths of honour,
But never let him know his father's story ;
I charge thee, guard him from the wrongs my fate

May do his future fortune, or his name.
Now—nearer yet— [Approaching each other.
Oh ! that my arms were rivetted.
Thus round thee ever ! But my friend ! my oath !
This, and no more. [Kisses her.

Belv. Another, sure another,
For that poor little one you have taken such care of !
I will give it him truly.

Jaff. So now, farewell !

Belv. For ever ?

Jaff. Heaven knows for ever ; all good angels guard thee. [Exit.

Belv. All ill ones sure had charge of me this moment.

Cursed be my days, and doubly cursed my nights,
Which I must now mourn out with widowed tears ;

Blasted be every herb, and fruit, and tree ;
Cursed be the rain that falls upon the earth,
And may the general curse reach man and beast !
Oh ! give me daggers, fire or water !
How I could bleed, how burn, how drown, the waves

Huzzing and booming round my sinking head,
Till I descended to the peaceful bottom !
Oh ! there all is quiet, here all rage and fury :
The air's too thin, and pierces my weak brain ;
I long for thick substantial sleep. Hell ! hell !
Burst from the centre, rage and roar aloud,
If thou art half so hot, so mad as I am.

Enter Priuli and Servants.

Who's there ? [They raise her.

Pri. Run, seize, and bring her safely home :
Guard her as you would life ! Alas, poor creature !

Belv. What to my husband ! then conduct me quickly ;
Are all things ready ? Shall we die most gloriously ?

Say not a word of this to my old father :
Murmuring streams, soft shades, and springing flowers !

Lutes, laurels, seas of milk, and ships of amber !
[Exeunt.

SCENE III.

Opening, discovers a scaffold, and a wheel prepared for the execution of Pierre ; then enter Officer, Pierre, and Guards, a Friar, Executioner, and a great rabble.

Offi. Room, room there—stand all by, make room for the prisoner.

Pier. My friend not come yet ?

Fri. Why are you so obstinate ?

Pier. Why you so troublesome, that a poor wretch can't die in peace,
But you, like ravens, will be croaking round him—

Fri. Yet Heaven——

Pier. I tell thee, Heaven and I are friends :
I ne'er broke peace with it yet by cruel murders,
Rapine, or perjury, or vile deceiving ;
But lived in moral justice towards all men :
Nor am a foe to the most strong believers,
Howe'er my own short-sighted faith confine me.

Fri. But an all-seeing Judge——

Pier. You say my conscience
Must be my accuser ; I have searched that conscience.

And find no records there of crimes, that scare me.

Fri. 'Tis strange, you should want faith.

Pier. You want to lead

My reason blind-fold, life a hampered lion,
Checked of its nobler vigour ; then, when baited
Down to obedient tameness, make it couch.
And shew strange tricks, which you call signs of faith :

So silly souls are gulled, and you get money.
Away ; no more. Captain, I'd have hereafter
This fellow write no lies of my conversion,
Because he has crept upon my troubled hours.

Enter Jaffir.

Jaff. Hold : eyes be dry ;
Heart, strengthen me to bear
This hideous sight, and humble me, to take
The last forgiveness of a dying friend,
Betrayed by my vile falsehood, to his ruin.
Oh, Pierre !

Pier. Yet nearer.

Jaff. Crawling on my knees,
And prostrate on the earth, let me approach thee :

How shall I look up to thy injured face,
That always used to smile with friendship on me ?

It darts an air of so much manly virtue,
That I, methinks, look little in thy sight,
And stripes are fitter for me, than embraces.

Pier. Dear to my arms, though thou hast undone my fame,

I can't forget to love thee. Prithee, Jaffair,
Forgive that filthy blow my passion dealt thee;
I'm now preparing for the land of peace,
And fain would have the charitable wishes
Of all good men, like thee, to bless my journey.

Jaff. Good! I am the vilest creature, worse than e'er

Suffered the shameful fate, thou'rt going to taste of.

Why was I sent for to be used thus kindly?
Call, call me villain, as I am! describe
The foul complexion of my hateful deeds:
Lead me to the rack, and stretch me in thy stead!
I have crimes enough to give it its full load,
And do it credit: thou wilt but spoil the use of it—

And honest men hereafter bear its figure
About them, as a charm from treacherous friendship.

Off. The time grows short, your friends are dead already.

Jaff. Dead!

Pier. Yes, dead, Jaffair; they have all died like men, too,

Worthy their character.

Jaff. And what must I do?

Pier. Oh, Jaffair!

Jaff. Speak loud thy burthened soul.

And tell thy troubles to thy tortured friend.

Pier. Friend! Could'st thou yet be a friend, a generous friend,

I might hope comfort from thy noble sorrows.
Heaven knows, I want a friend.

Jaff. And I a kind one,

That would not thus scorn my repenting virtue,
Or think, when he's to die, my thoughts are idle.

Pier. No! live, I charge thee, Jaffair.

Jaff. Yes I will live:

But it shall be to see thy fall revenged
At such a rate, as Venice long shall groan for.

Pier. Wilt thou?

Jaff. I will, by Heaven.

Pier. Then still thou art noble,

And I forgive thee. Oh!—yet—shall I trust thee.

Jaff. No; I have been false already.

Pier. Dost thou love me?

Jaff. Rip up my heart, and satisfy thy doubts!

Pier. Curse on this weakness! [He weeps.]

Jaff. Tears! Amusement! Tears!

I never saw thee melted thus before;
And know there's something labouring in thy bosom,

That must have vent: though I am a villain, tell me.

Pier. See'st thou that engine?

[Pointing to the wheel.]

Jaff. Why?

2 M

Pier. Is it fit a soldier, who has lived with honour,
Fought nation's quarrels, and been crowned with conquest,

Be exposed a common carcass on a wheel?

Jaff. Ha!

Pier. Speak! is it fitting?

Jaff. Fitting!

Pier. Yes; is it fitting?

Jaff. What's to be done?

Pier. I'd have thee undertake

Something that's noble to preserve my memory
From the disgrace that's ready to attain it.

Off. The day grows late, sir.

Pier. I'll make haste. Oh, Jaffair!

Though thou'st betrayed me, do me some way justice.

Jaff. No more of that: thy wishes shall be satisfied;

I have a wife, and she shall bleed: my child, too,
Yield up his little throat, and all

To appease thee—

[Going away, Pierre holds him.]

Pier. No—this—no more.

[He whispers Jaffair.]

Jaff. Ha! is it then so?

Pier. Most certainly.

Jaff. I'll do it.

Pier. Remember.

Off. Sir!

Pier. Come, now I'm ready,

[He and Jaffair ascend the scaffold.]

Captain, you should be a gentleman of honour;
Keep off the rabble, that I may have room
To entertain my fate, and die with decency.
Come.

[Takes off his gown, executioner prepares to bind him.]

Fri. Son.

Pier. Hence, tempter!

Off. Stand off, priest.

Pier. I thank you, sir.

[To the Officer.]

You'll think on't?

[To Jaffair.]

Jaff. It won't grow stale before to-morrow.

Pier. Now, Jaffair! now I'm going. Now—

[Executioner having bound him.]

Jaff. Have at thee,

Thou honest heart, then—here! [Stabs him.]
And this is well too. [Stabs himself.]

Fri. Dammable deed!

Pier. Now thou hast indeed been faithful.
This was done nobly—We have deceived the senate.

Jaff. Bravely.

Pier. Ha, ha, ha—oh! oh!

[Dies.]

Jaff. Now, ye cursed rulers,

Thus of the blood ye have shed I make a libation,

And sprinkle it mingling. May it rest upon you,
And all your race! Be henceforth peace a stranger

Within your walls; let plagues and famine waste
Your generation—Oh, poor Belvidera!

Sir, I have a wife, bear this in safety to her,

A token, that with my dying breath I blessed her,
And the dear little infant left behind me.
I'm sick—I'm quiet. [Dies.

Offi. Bear this news to the senate,
Aud guard their bodies, till there's further orders.

Heaven grant I die so well!

[Scene shuts upon them.

SCENE IV.

Soft Music.—Enter Belvidera distracted, led by two of her Women, Priuli and Servants.

Pri. Strengthen her heart with patience, pitying Heaven!

Belv. Come, come, come, come, come, nay, come to bed,

Prithee, my love! The winds; hark! how they whistle;

And the rain beats. Oh! how the weather shrinks me!

You are angry now, who cares? Pish, no indeed, Chuse then; I say you shall not go, you shall not; Whip your ill-nature; get you gone then. Oh! Are you returned? See, father, here he's come again:

Am I to blame to love him? O, thou dear one, Why do you fly me? Are you angry still then? Jaffeir, where art thou? father, why do you do thus?

Stand off, don't hide him from me. He's here somewhere.

Stand off, I say. What, gone? Remember it, tyrant:

I may revenge myself for this trick, one day. I'll do't—I'll do't. Renault's a nasty fellow; Hang him, hang him, hang him.

Enter Officer.

Pri. News, what news?

[Officer whispers Priuli.

Offi. Most sad, sir;

Jaffeir, upon the scaffold, to prevent

A shameful death, stabbed Pierre, and next himself;

Both fell together.

Pri. Daughter!

Belv. Ha! look there!

My husband bloody, and his friend too! Murder! Who has done this? Speak to me, thou sad vision!

On these poor trembling knees I beg it. Vanished—

Here they went down—Oh, I'll dig, dig the den up!

You shan't delude me thus. Hoa, Jaffeir, Jaffeir! Peep up, and give me but a look. I have him! I've got him father. Oh! now how I'll smuggle him!

My love! my dear! my blessing! help me! help me!

They have hold on me, and drag me to the bottom.

Nay—now they pull so hard—farewell— [Dies.

Maid. She's dead;
Breathless and dead.

Pri. Oh! guard me from the sight on't!
Lead me into some place that's fit for mourning:
Where the free air, light, and the cheerful sun,
May never enter: hang it round with black:
Set up one taper, that may last a day,
As long as I've to live; and there all leave me:
Sparing no tears, when you this tale relate,
But bid all cruel fathers dread my fate.

[Exeunt omnes.

EDMUND WALLER.

Born 1605.—Died 1687.

A PANEGYRIC TO MY LORD PROTECTOR, OF THE PRESENT GREATNESS AND JOINT INTEREST OF
HIS HIGHNESS AND THIS NATION.

WHILE with a strong and yet a gentle hand,
You bridle faction, and our hearts command,
Protect us from ourselves, and from the foe,
Make us unite, and make us conquer too;

Let partial spirits still aloud complain,
Think themselves injur'd that they cannot reign:
And own no liberty but where they may
Without control upon their fellows prey.

Above the waves as Neptune shew'd his face,
To chide the winds, and save the Trojan race,
So has your Highness, rais'd above the rest,
Storms of ambition tossing us repress.

Your drooping country, torn with civil hate,
Restor'd by you, is made a glorious state;
The seat of empire, where the Irish come,
And the unwilling Scots to fetch their doom.

The sea's our own: and now all nations greet,
With bending sails, each vessel of our fleet.
Your pow'r extends as far as winds can blow,
Or swelling sails upon the globe may go.

Heav'n, (that hath plac'd this island to give law,
To balance Europe, and its states to awe)
In this conjunction doth on Britain smile,
The greatest leader, and the greatest isle!

Whether this portion of the world were rent,
By the rude ocean, from the continent,
Or thus created, it was sure design'd
To be the sacred refuge of mankind.

Hither th' oppressed shall henceforth resort,
Justice to crave, and succour at your court;
And then your Highness, not for ours alone,
But for the world's Protector, shall be known.

Fame, swifter than your winged navy, flies
Through ev'ry land that near the ocean lies.
Sounding your name, and telling dreadful news
To all that piracy and rapine use.

With such a chief the meanest nation blest,
Might hope to lift her head above the rest.
What may be thought impossible to do
By us embraced by the sea and you?

Lords of the world's great waste, the ocean, we
Whole forests send to reign upon the sea.
And ev'ry coast may trouble or relieve;
But none can visit us without your leave.

Angels and we have this prerogative,
That none can at our happy seats arrive;
While we descend, at pleasure, to invade
The bad with vengeance, and the good to aid.

Our little world, the image of the great,
Like that amidst the boundless ocean set,
Of her own growth hath all that Nature craves,
And all that's rare, as tribute from the waves.

As Egypt does not on the clouds rely,
But to the Nile owes more than to the sky;
So what our earth and what our heav'n denies,
Our ever constant friend, the sea, supplies.

The taste of hot Arabia's spice we know,
Free from the scorching sun that makes it
grow:
Without the worm, in Persian silks we shine;
And, without planting, drink of ev'ry vine.

To dig for wealth we weary not our limbs;
Gold, though the heaviest metal, hither swims.
Ours is the harvest where the Indians mow;
We plough the deep, and reap what others sow.

Things of the noblest kind our own soil breeds;
Stout are our men, and warlike are our steeds.
Rome, though her Eagle through the world had flown,
Could never make this island all her own.

Here the Third Edward, and the Black Prince
too,
France-conqu'ring Henry flourish'd, and now
you;
For whom we stay'd, as did the Grecian state,
Till Alexander came to urge their fate.

When for more worlds the Macedonian cry'd,
He wist not Thetis in her lap did hide
Another yet; a world reserv'd for you,
To make more great than that he did subdue.

He safely might old troops to battle lead,
Against th' unwarlike Persian and the Mede,
Whose hasty flight did from a bloodless field,
More spoils than honour to the victor yield.

A race unconquer'd, by their clime made bold,
The Caledonians, arm'd with want and cold,
Have by a fate indulgent to your fame,
Been from all ages kept for you to tame.

Whom the old Roman wall so ill confin'd,
With a new chain of garrisons, you bind:
Here foreign gold no more shall make them
come;
Our English iron holds them fast at home.

They that henceforth must be content to know
No warmer region than the hills of snow,
May blame the sun, but must extol your grace,
Which in our senate hath allow'd them place.

Preferr'd by conquest, happily o'erthrown,
Falling they rise, to be with us made one.
So kind Dictators made, when they come home,
Their vanquish'd foes free citizens of Rome.

Like favour find the Irish, with like fate
Advanc'd to be a portion of our state;
While by your valour and your bounteous mind,
Nations, divided by the sea, are join'd.

Holland, to gain your friendship, is content
To be our outguard on the Continent:
She from her fellow-provinces would go,
Rather than hazard to have you her foe.

In our late fight, when cannons did diffuse,
Preventing posts, the terror and the news,
Our neighbour princes trembled at their roar;
But our conjunction makes them tremble more.

Your never-failing sword made war to cease,
And now you heal us with the acts of peace;
Our minds with bounty and with awe engage,
Invite affection, and restrain our rage.

Less pleasure take brave minds in battles won,
Than in restoring such as are undone.
Tigers have courage, and the rugged bear,
But man alone can, whom he conquers, spare.

To pardon willing, and to punish loath,
You strike with one hand, but you heal with
both,
Lifting up all that prostrate lie, you grieve
You cannot make the dead again to live.

When Fate or error had our age misled,
And o'er this nation such confusion spread,
The only cure which could from Heav'n come down
Was so much pow'r and piety in one!

One! whose extraction from an ancient line
Gives hope again that well-born men may shine.
The meanest in your nature, mild and good,
The noblest rest secured in your blood.

Oft have we wonder'd how you hid in peace
A mind proportion'd to such things as these ;
How such a ruling sp'rit you could restrain,
And practise first over yourself to reign.

Your private life did a just pattern give
How fathers, husbands, pious sons, should live.
Born to command, your princely virtues slept,
Like humble David's, while the flock he kept :

But when your troubled country call'd you forth,
Your flaming courage and your matchless worth,
Dazzling the eyes of all that did pretend,
To fierce contention gave a prosperous end.

Still as you rise, the state exalted too,
Finds no distemper while 'tis chang'd by you :
Chang'd like the world's great scene ! when,
without noise,
The rising sun night's vulgar lights destroys.

Had you, some ages past, this race of glory
Run, with amazement we should read your story ;
But living virtue, all achievements past,
Meets envy still to grapple with at last.

This Cæsar found ; and that ungrateful age,
With losing him, went back to blood and rage ;
Mistaken Brutus thought to break their yoke,
But cut the bond of union with that stroke.

That sun once set, a thousand meaner stars
Gave a dim light to violence and wars ;
To such a tempest as now threatens all,
Did not your mighty arm prevent the fall.

If Rome's great senate could not wield that
sword,
Which of the conquer'd world had made them
lord,
What hope had ours, while yet their pow'r was new,
To rule victorious armies but by you ?

You ! that had taught them to subdue their foes,
Could order teach, and their high sp'rits com-
pose :
To ev'ry duty could their minds engage,
Provoke their courage, and command their rage.

So when a lion shakes his dreadful mane,
And angry grows, if he that first took pain
To tame his youth approach the haughty beast,
He bends to him, but frights away the rest.

As the vex'd world, to find repose, at last
Itself into Augustus' arms did cast ;
So England now does, with like toil oppress,
Her weary head upon your bosom rest.

Then let the Muses, with such notes as these,
Instruct us what belongs unto our peace.

Your battles they hereafter shall endite,
And draw the image of our Mars in fight :

Tell of towns storm'd, of armies overrun,
And mighty kingdoms by your conduct won :
How, while you thunder'd, clouds of dust did choke
Contending troops, and seas lay hid in smoke.

Illustrious acts high raptures do infuse,
And ev'ry conqueror creates a Muse.
Here, in low strains, your milder deeds we sing ;
But there, my Lord ! we'll bays and olive bring

To crown your head ; while you in triumph ride
O'er vanquish'd nations, and the sea beside ;
While all your neighbour princes unto you,
Like Joseph's sheaves, pay reverence, and bow.

THE STORY OF PHŒBUS AND DAPHNE APPLIED.

THYRSIS, a youth of the inspired train,
Fair Sacharissa lov'd, but lov'd in vain :
Like Phœbus sung the no less am'rous boy ;
Like Daphne she, as lovely, and as coy !
With numbers he the flying nymph pursues,
With numbers such as Phœbus' self might use !
Such is the chase when Love and Fancy leads,
O'er craggy mountains, and through flow'ry
Invok'd to testify the lover's care, meads ;
Or form some image of his cruel fair,
Urg'd with his fury, like a wounded deer,
O'er these he fled : and now approaching near,
Had reach'd the nymph with his harmonious lay,
When all his charms could not incline to stay.
Yet what he sung in his immortal strain,
Though unsuccessful, was not sung in vain :
All but the nymph that should redress his wrong,
Attend his passion, and approve his song.
Like Phœbus, thus acquiring unsought praise,
He catch'd at love, and fill'd his arms with bays.

OF LOVE.

ANGER, in hasty words or blows,
Itself discharges on our foes ;
And sorrow too, finds some relief
In tears, which wait upon our grief :
So ev'ry passion, but fond love,
Unto its own redress does move ;
But that alone the wretch inclines
To what prevents his own designs ;
Makes him lament, and sigh, and weep.
Disorder'd, tremble, fawn, and creep ;
Postures which render him despis'd.
Where he endeavours to be priz'd,
For women, (born to be control'd),
Stoop to the forward and the bold,
Affect the haughty and the proud,
The gay, the frolic and the loud.
Who first the gen'rous steed oppress,
Not kneeling did salute the beast ;

But with high courage, life, and force,
Approaching, tam'd th' unruly horse.

Unwisely we the wiser East
Pity, supposing them oppress
With tyrants' force, whose law is will,
By which they govern, spoil, and kill:
Each nymph, but moderately fair,
Commands with no less rigour here.
Should some brave Turk, that walks among
His twenty lasses, bright and young,
And beckons to the willing dame,
Preferr'd to quench his present flame,
Behold as many gallants here,
With modest guise and silent fear,
All to one female idol bend,
While her high pride does scarce descend
To mark their follies, he would swear
That these her guard of eunuchs were,
And that a more majestic queen,
Or humbler slaves, he had not seen.

All this with indignation spoke,
In vain I struggled with the yoke
Of mighty Love: that conqu'ring look,
When next beheld, like lightning strook
My blasted soul, and made me bow
Lower than those I pity'd now.

So the tall stag, upon the brink
Of some smooth stream about to drink,
Surveying there his armed head,
With shaming remembers that he fled
The scorned dogs, resolves to try
The combat next; but if their cry
Invades again his trembling ear,
He strait resumes his wonted care,
Leaves the untasted spring behind,
And, wing'd with fear, outflies the wind.

TO AMORET.

FAIR! that you may truly know
What you unto Thrysis owe,
I will tell you how I do
Sacharissa love and you.

Joy salutes me when I set
My blest eyes on Amoret;
But with wonder I am strook,
While I on the other look.

If sweet Amoret complains,
I have sense of all her pains;
But for Sacharissa I
Do not only grieve, but die.

All that of myself is mine,
Lovely Amoret! is thine;
Sacharissa's captive fain
Would untie his iron chain,
And those scorching beams to shun,
To thy gentle shadow run.

If the soul had free election
To dispose of her affection,
I would not thus long have borne
Haughty Sacharissa's scorn:
But 'tis sure some pow'r above,
Which controls our wills in love!

If not a love, a strong desire
To create and spread that fire
In my breast, solicits me,
Beauteous Amoret! for thee.

'Tis amazement more than love
Which her radiant eyes do move:
If less splendor wait on thine,
Yet they so benignly shine,
I would turn my dazzled sight
To behold their milder light:
But as hard 'tis to destroy
That high flame as to enjoy;
Which how eas'ly I may do,
Heav'n (as eas'ly scal'd) does know!

Amoret! as sweet and good
As the most delicious food,
Which but tasted does impart
Life and gladness to the heart.

Sacharissa's beauty's wine,
Which to madness doth incline;
Such a liquor as no brain
That is mortal can sustain.

Scarce can I to Heav'n excuse
The devotion which I use
Unto that adored dame;
For 'tis not unlike the same
Which I thither ought to send;
So that if it could take end,
'Twould to Heav'n itself be due,
To succeed her and not you;
Who already have of me
All that's not idolatry;
Which, though not so fierce a flame,
Is longer like to be the same.

Then smile on me, and I will prove Wonder is shorter liv'd than love.

TO A LADY SINGING A SONG OF HIS COMPOSING.

CHLORIS! yourself you so excel,
When you vouchsafe to breath my thought,
That, like a spirit, with this spell
Of my own teaching, I am caught.

That eagle's fate and mine are one,
Which, on the shaft that made him die,
Espy'd a feather of his own,
Wherewith he wont to soar so high.

Had Echo, with so sweet a grace,
Narcissus' loud complaints return'd,
Not for reflection of his face,
But of his voice, the boy had burn'd.

TO ZELINDA.

FAIREST piece of well-form'd earth!
Urge not thus your haughty birth:
The pow'r which you have o'er us lies
Not in your race, but in your eyes.
"None but a Prince!"—Alas! that voice
Confines you to a narrow choice.
Should you no honey vow to taste,
But what the master-bees have plac'd

In compass of their cells, how small
 A portion to your share would fall ?
 Nor all appear, among those few,
 Worthy the stock from whence they grew,
 The sap which at the root is bred
 In trees, through all the boughs is spread ;
 But virtues which in parents shine
 Make not like progress through the line.
 'Tis not from whom, but where we live :
 The place does oft' those graces give.
 Great Julius, on the mountains bred,
 A flock perhaps, or herd had led.
 He that the world subdu'd* had been
 But the best wrestler on the green.
 'Tis art and knowledge which draw forth
 The hidden seeds of native worth :
 They blow those sparks, and make them rise
 Into such flames as touch the skies.
 To the old heroes hence was giv'n
 A pedigree which reach'd to heav'n :
 Of mortal seed they were not held,
 Which other mortals so excell'd.
 And beauty, too, in such excess
 As your's Zelinda ! claims no less.
 Smile but on me, and you shall scorn,
 Henceforth, to be of princes born.
 I can describe the shady grove
 Where your lov'd mother slept with Jove,
 And yet excuse the faultless dame,
 Caught with her spouse's shape and name.
 Thy matchless form will credit bring
 To all the wonders I shall sing.

ON A GIRDLE.

THAT which her slender waist confin'd,
 Shall now my joyful temples bind :
 No monarch but would give his crown,
 His arms might do what this has done.

It was my heav'n's extremest sphere,
 The pale which held that lovely deer.
 My joy, my grief, my hope, my love,
 Did all within this circle move !

A narrow compass ! and yet there
 Dwelt all that's good, and all that's fair ;
 Give me but what this riband bound,
 Take all the rest the sun goes round.

SONG:

Go, lovely Rose !
 Tell her that wastes her time and me.
 That now she knows,
 When I resemble her to thee,
 How sweet and fair she seems to be.

Tell her that's young,
 And shuns to have her graces spy'd,
 That hadst thou sprung
 In deserts where no men abide,
 Thou must have uncommended dy'd.

* Alexander.

Small is the worth
 Of beauty from the light retir'd :
 Bid her come forth,
 Suffer herself to be desir'd,
 And not blush so to be admir'd.

Then die ! that she
 The common fate of all things rare
 May read in thee,
 How small a part of time they share
 That are so wondrous sweet and fair !

CONTENTATION.

Directed to my dear Father, and most worthy friend, Mr. Isaac Walton.

HEAV'N, what an age is this ! what race
 Of giants are sprung up, that dare
 Thus fly in the Almighty's face,
 And with his providence make war !

I can go no where but I meet
 With malecontents and mutineers,
 As if in life was nothing sweet,
 And we must blessings reap in tears.

O senseless man ! that murmurs still
 For happiness, and does not know,
 Even though he might enjoy his will,
 What he would have to make him so.

Is it true happiness to be
 By undiscerning Fortune plac'd,
 In the most eminent degree,
 Where few arrive, and none stand fast ?

Titles and wealth are Fortune's toils,
 Wherewith the vain themselves ensnare :
 The great are proud of borrow'd spoils,
 The miser's plenty breeds his care.

The one supinely yawns at rest,
 Th' other eternally doth toil ;
 Each of them equally a beast,
 A pamper'd horse, or lab'ring moil.

The titulados oft disgrac'd,
 By public hate or private frown,
 And he whose hand the creature rais'd,
 Has yet a foot to kick him down.

The drudge who would all get, all save,
 Like a brute beast both feeds and lies ;
 Prone to the earth, he digs his grave,
 And in the very labour dies.

Excess of ill got, ill-kept pelf,
Does only death and danger breed ;
Whilst one rich worldling starves himself
With what would thousand others feed.

By which we see that wealth and pow'r,
Although they make men rich and great,
The sweets of life do often sour,
And gull ambition with a cheat.

Nor is he happier than these,
Who in a moderate estate,
Where he might safely live at ease,
Has lusts that are immoderate.

For he, by those desires misled,
Quits his own vine's securing shade,
T' expose his naked, empty head,
To all the storms man's peace invade.

Nor is he happy who is trim,
Trick'd up in favours of the fair,
Mirrours, with every breath made dim,
Birds, caught in every wanton snare

Woman, man's greatest woe or bliss,
Does often far, than serve, enslave,
And with the magic of a kiss,
Destroys whom she was made to save.

Oh, fruitful grief, the world's disease '
And vainer man to make it so,
Who gives his miseries increase
By cultivating his own woe.

There are no ills but what we make,
By giving shapes and names to things ;
Which is the dangerous mistake
That causes all our sufferings.

We call that sickness, which is health,
That persecution, which is grace ;
That poverty, which is true wealth,
And that dishonour, which is praise.

Providence watches over all,
And that with an impartial eye ;
And if to misery we fall,
'Tis through our own infirmity.

'Tis want of foresight makes the bold
Ambitious youth to danger climb ;
And want of virtue, when the old
At persecution do repine.

Alas ! our time is here so short,
That in what state soe'er 'tis spent,
Of joy or woe, does not import,
Provided it be innocent.

But we may make it pleasant too,
If we will take our measures right,
And not what Heav'n has done, undo
By an unruly appetite.

'Tis contentation that alone
Can make us happy here below ;
And when this little life is gone,
Will lift us up to Heaven too.

A very little satisfies
An honest and a grateful heart ;
And who would more than will suffice,
Does covet more than is his part.

That man is happy in his share,
Who is warm clad, and cleanly fed,
Whose necessities bound his care,
And honest labour makes his bed.

Who, free from debt, and clear from crimes,
Honours those laws that others fear,
Who ill of princes, in worst times,
Will neither speak himself, nor hear.

Who from the busy world retires,
To be more useful to it still,
And to no greater good aspires,
But only the eschewing ill.

Who, with his angle and his books,
Can think the longest day well spent,
And praises God when back he looks,
And finds that all was innocent.

This man is happier far than he
Whom public business oft betrays,
Through labyrinths of policy,
To crooked and forbidden ways.

The world is full of beaten roads,
But yet so slippery withal,
That where one walks secure, 'tis odds
A hundred and a hundred fall.

Untrodden paths are then the best,
Where the frequented are unsure ;
And he comes soonest to his rest,
Whose journey has been most secure.

It is content alone that makes
Our pilgrimage a pleasure here ;
And who buys sorrow cheapest, takes
An ill commodity too dear.

But he has fortunes worst withstood,
And happiness can never miss,
Can covet nought, but where he stood,
And thinks him happy where he is.

ABSALOM AND ACHITOPHEL.

The occasion of it explained.*

THE Earl of Shaftesbury seemed bent upon the ruin of the Duke of York. It was mostly through his influence in both houses, that those infamous witnesses, Oates, Tongue, Bedloe, &c. were so strenuously encouraged, and the Popish plot, if not schemed by him, was at least by him cherished and supported. He had been heard to say with some exultation, I won't pretend to pronounce who started the game, but I am sure I have had the full hunting.

The indiscreet zeal and imprudent conduct of the Roman Catholics, for some time past, had given too much room for suspicion; they having often openly, and in defiance of the established laws of the kingdom, shewn a thorough contempt for the established religion of their country, propagated as much as possible their own tenets, loudly triumphed in their progress and daily acquisition of proselytes among all ranks of people, without the least secrecy or caution. Hence was the nation ripe for alarm: when given, it spread like wild-fire; and the Duke of York, as head of the party at which it was aimed, was obliged to withdraw to Brussels to avoid the impending storm.

The king being some time after taken ill, produced his highness's sudden return, before his enemies, and those in the opposition to the court-measures, could provide for his reception; so that their schemes were thus for a while disconcerted. Least his presence might revive commotion, he returned again to Brussels, and was then permitted (previously) to retire to Scotland, having received the strongest assurances of his brother's affection and resolution to secure him and his heirs the succession. He had before this the satisfaction of seeing the turbulent Earl of Shaftesbury removed from his seat and precedence in the privy-council, as well as all share in the ministry; and now prevailed to have the Duke of Monmouth dismissed from all his posts, and sent into Holland.

Shaftesbury's views were to lift Monmouth to the throne, whose weaknesses he knew he could so effectually manage, as to have the reins of government in that case in his own hands. Monmouth was the eldest of the king's sons, by whom he was tenderly beloved. His mother was one Mrs. Lucy Walters, otherwise Barlow, a Pembrokehire woman, who bore him at Rotterdam in 1649, and between whom and his Majesty it was artfully reported there had passed a contract of marriage. This report was narrowly examined into, and proved false, to the full satisfaction of the privy-council, and of the people in general, though Shaftesbury did all in his power to support and establish a belief of its reality. The youth was educated at Paris under the queen-mother, and brought over to England in 1662; soon after which time he was created Duke of Orkney in Scotland, and Monmouth in England, or rather Wales.

The partizans of Shaftesbury, and other malecontents, had long pointed out his Grace as a proper successor to the crown, instead of the Duke of York, in case of the king's demise; and he began to believe that he had a real right to be so. At the instigation of his old friend Shaftesbury, he returned to England without his father's consent, who would not see him; and, instead of obeying the royal mandate to retire again, he and Shaftesbury jointly made a pompous parade through several counties in the west and north of England, scattering the seeds of discord and disaffection; so that their designs seemed to be levelled against the government, and a tempest was gathering at a distance, not unlike that which swept the royal martyr from his throne and life. Many people, who could not otherwise have taken part with the court, shuddering when they looked back upon the scenes of anarchy and confusion, that had followed that melancholy catastrophe, in order to prevent the return of a similar storm, attached themselves to the king and the Duke of York; and the latter returned to court, where he kept his ground.

The kingdom was now in a high fermentation; the murmur of each party broke out into altercation, and declamatory abuse. Every day produced new libels and disloyal pamphlets. To answer and expose them, their partizans and abettors, several authors were retained by authority, but none came up to the purpose so well as Sir Roger L'Estrange, in the Observer; and the poet laureate, in the poem under inspection, the elegance and severity of which raised his character prodigiously, and shewed the proceedings of Shaftesbury and his followers in a most severe light. These writings, according to Richard, in a great measure stemmed the tide of a popular current, that might have otherwise immersed the nation in ruin. His Grace the Duke of Monmouth afterwards engaged in the Rye-house Plot, and a reward was offered for the taking him, both by his father and

Lewis XIV. whether in England or France. He obtained his pardon both of the king and duke, by two very submissive, nay, abject, letters; and being admitted to the royal presence, seemed extremely sorry for his past offences, confessed his having engaged in a design for seizing the king's guards, and changing the government, but denied having any knowledge of a scheme for assassinating either his father or uncle, which it seems was set on foot by the inferior ministers of this conspiracy.

Presuming, however, upon the king's paternal affection, he soon recanted his confession, and consorted with his old followers; so that the king forbid him the court, and he retired to Holland, from whence he returned in 1685, raised a rebellion against his uncle, then on the throne, caused himself to be proclaimed king, and being defeated and taken prisoner, was beheaded on Tower-hill in his thirty-sixth year.—Derrick.

PART I.

In pious times, ere priestcraft did begin,
Before polygamy was made a sin;
When man on many multiply'd his kind,
Ere one to one was cursedly confin'd;
When nature prompted, and no law deny'd
Promiscuous use of concubine and bride;
Then Israel's monarch after heaven's own heart,
His vigorous warmth did variously impart
To wives and slaves; and wide as his command,
Scatter'd his Maker's image through the land.
Michael, of royal blood, the crown did wear;
A soil ungrateful to the tiller's care:
Not so the rest; for several mothers bore
To god-like David several sons before.
But since like slaves his bed they did ascend,
No true succession could their seed attend,
Of all the numerous progeny was none
So beautiful, so brave, as Absalom*:

* So beautiful, so brave.] The Duke of Monmouth was young, exquisitely beautiful, brave, generous, affecting popularity, and tenderly beloved by his father; his education with one part of the flower of the English youth at Oxford, and served with another in the army; so that he

* This explanation is here slightly abbreviated.—Compiler.

Whether inspir'd by some diviner lust,
 His father got him with a greater gust;
 Or that his conscious destiny made way,
 By manly beauty to imperial sway.
 Early in foreign fields he won renown,
 With kings and states ally'd to Israel's crown:
 In peace the thoughts of war he could remove,
 And seem'd as he were only born for love.
 Whate'er he did, was done with so much ease,
 In him alone 'twas natural to please:
 His motions all accompany'd with grace;
 And paradise was open'd in his face.
 With secret joy indulgent David view'd
 His youthful image in his son renew'd:
 To all his wishes nothing he deny'd;
 And made the charming Annabel his bride.
 What faults he had,—for who from faults is free?
 His father could not, or he would not see.
 Some warm excesses which the law forbore,
 Were construed youth that purged by boiling
 o'er;

And Amnon's murder, by a specious name,
 Was call'd a just revenge for injur'd fame.
 Thus prais'd and lov'd, the noble youth remain'd,
 While David, undisturb'd, in Sion reign'd,
 But life can never be sincerely blest:
 Heaven punishes the bad, and proves the best.
 The Jews, a headstrong, moody, murmuring
 race,

As ever try'd th' extent and stretch of grace;
 God's pamp'ring people, whom debauch'd with
 ease,

No king could govern, nor no God could please;
 Gods they had try'd of every shape and size,
 That godsmiths could produce or priests devise:
 These Adam-wits*, too fortunately free,
 Began to dream they wanted liberty;
 And when no rule, no precedent was found,
 Of men, by laws less circumscrib'd and bound:
 They led their wild desires to woods and caves.
 And thought that all but savages were slaves.
 They who, when Saul was dead, without a blow,
 Made foolish Ishbosheth the crown forego;
 Who banish'd David did from Hebron bring,
 And with a general shout proclaim'd him king:
 Those very Jews, who, at their very best,

had all the advantages of private friendships joined to those which attend upon royal extraction. His tutor, one Ross, a Scotchman, either from love to his pupil, or to gain importance to himself, was the first person who inflamed his mind with high ambition, by making him believe, or persuading him to make others believe, that the king had been privately married to his mother. Ross went further, for he advised Couzens, bishop of Durham, to write a certificate of the marriage, and to deposit it in a strong box in his own house; making use of this argument, that, if the Duke of York should be converted from popery, there would be no need of bringing the certificate to public view; and if he should not, that all arts were justifiable to exclude a papist from the throne: circumstances which Couzens immediately communicated to the king, but which that prince disregarded, acquitting Monmouth, and imputing them only to the petulance of his tutor. Yet Ross, after Couzens died, spread a report abroad, that he had left such a certificate behind him.—Dr. J. Warton.

* These Adam-wits, &c.] Persons discontented in happy circumstances are not unluckily called Adam-wits, from a remembrance of Adam's weakness in Paradise, who, aiming at being happier than the happiest, by persuasion of Eve, eat of the forbidden fruit, and thereby forfeited the divine favour, and was excluded the garden of Eden.—Derrick.

Their humour more than loyalty express,
 Now wonder'd why so long they had obey'd
 An idol monarch which their hands had made;
 Thought they might ruin him they could create,
 Or melt him to that golden calf, a state.
 But these were random bolts: no form'd design,
 Nor interest made the factious crowd to join:
 The sober part of Israel, free from stain,
 Well knew the value of a peaceful reign;
 And, looking backward with a wise affright,
 Saw seams of wounds dishonest to the sight;
 In contemplation of whose ugly scars,
 They curst the memory of civil wars.
 The moderate sort of men thus qualify'd,
 Inclined the balance to the better side;
 And David's mildness manag'd it so well,
 The bad found no occasion to rebel.
 But when to sin our bias'd nature leans,
 The careful devil is still at hand with means;
 And providently pimps for ill desires:
 The good old cause reviv'd a plot requires.
 Plots, true or false, are necessary things,
 To raise up commonwealths; and ruin kings.

Th' inhabitants of old Jerusalem
 Were Jebusites; the town so call'd from them;
 And theirs the native right—
 But when the chosen people grew more strong,
 The rightful cause at length became the wrong;
 And every loss the men of Jebus bore,
 They still were thought God's enemies the more.
 Thus worn or weaken'd, well or ill content,
 Submit they must to David's government:
 Impoverish'd and depriv'd of all command,
 Their taxes doubled as they lost their land;
 And what was harder yet to flesh and blood,
 Their gods disgrac'd, and burnt like common
 wood.

This set the heathen priesthood in a flame;
 For priests of all religions are the same.
 Of whatso'er descent their godhead be,
 Stock, stone, or other homely pedigree,
 In his defence his servants are as bold,
 As if he had been born of beaten gold.
 The Jewish rabbins, though their enemies,
 In this conclude them honest men and wise:
 For 'twas their duty, all the learned think,
 To espouse his cause by whom they eat and drink.
 From hence began that plot, the nation's curse,
 Bad in itself, but represented worse;
 Rais'd in extremes, and in extremes decry'd;
 With oaths affirm'd, with dying vows deny'd;
 Not weigh'd nor winnow'd by the multitude;
 But swallow'd in the mass, unchew'd and crude.
 Some truth there was, but dash'd and brew'd with lies,

To please the fools, and puzzle all the wise.
 Succeeding times did equal folly call,
 Believing nothing, or believing all.
 Th' Egyptian rites the Jebusites embrac'd;
 Where gods are recommended by their taste.
 Such savoury deities must needs be good,
 As serv'd at once for worship and for food,
 By force they could not introduce these gods;
 For tea to one in former days was odds.

So fraud was us'd, the sacrificer's trade :
 Fools are more hard to conquer than persuade.
 Their busy teachers mingled with the Jews,
 And rak'd for converts ev'n the court and stews :
 Which Hebrew priests the more unkindly took,
 Because the fleece accompanies the flock.
 Some thought they God's anointed meant to slay

By guns, invented since full many a day :
 Our author swears it not ; but who can know
 How far the devil and Jebusites may go ?
 This plot, which fail'd for want of common sense,
 Had yet a deep and dangerous consequence :
 For as, when raging fevers boil the blood,
 The standing lake soon floats into a flood,
 And every hostile humour, which before
 Slept quiet in its channels, bubbles o'er ;
 So several factions from this first ferment,
 Work up to foam and threat the government.
 Some by their friends, more by themselves thought wise,

Oppos'd the power to which they could not rise.
 Some had in courts been great, and thrown from thence,

Like fiends were harden'd in impenitence.
 Some, by their monarch's fatal mercy, grown
 From pardon'd rebels kinsmen to the throne,
 Were rais'd in power and public office high ;
 Strong bands, if bands ungrateful men could tie.

Of these the false Achitophel was first ;
 A name to all succeeding ages curst :
 For close designs, and crooked councils fit ;
 Sagacious, bold, and turbulent of wit ;
 Restless, unfix'd in principles and place ;
 In power unpleas'd, impatient of disgrace :
 A fiery soul, which working out its way,
 Fretted the pigmy-body to decay,
 And o'er-inform'd the tenement of clay. }
 A daring pilot in extremity ;
 Pleas'd with the dangers when the waves went
 high

He sought the storms ; but, for a calm unfit,
 Would steer too nigh the sands to boast his wit.
 Great wits are sure to madness near ally'd,
 And thin partitions do their bounds divide ;
 Else why should he, with wealth and honour
 blest,

Refuse his age the needful hours of rest ?
 Punish a body which he could not please ;
 Bankrupt of life, yet prodigal of ease ?
 And all to leave what with his toil he won,
 To that unfeather'd two-legg'd thing, a son ;
 Got, while his soul did huddled notions try ;
 And born a shapeless lump, like anarchy.
 In friendship false, implacable in hate ;
 Resolv'd to ruin, or to rule the state.
 To compass this the triple bond he broke* ;
 The pillars of the public safety shook ;
 And fitted Israel for a foreign yoke : }

* — the triple bond he broke.] In the year 1667, a triple alliance was entered into between England, Sweden, and Holland, which was dissolved by the second Dutch war, to which, and a closer connection with France, Lord Shaftesbury contributed his advice, and thereby — fitted Israel for a foreign yoke.

Derrick.

Then seiz'd with fear, yet still affecting fame,
 Usurp'd a patriot's all-atoning name.
 So easy still it proves in factious times,
 With public zeal to cancel private crimes.
 How safe is treason, and how sacred ill,
 Where none can sin against the people's will ?
 Where crowds can wink, and no offence be known,

Since in another's guilt they find their own ?
 Yet fame deserv'd no enemy can grudge ;
 The statesman we abhor, but praise the judge.
 In Israel's courts ne'er sat an Abethdin
 With more discerning eyes, or hands more clean,
 Unbrib'd, unsought, the wretched to redress ;
 Swift of dispatch, and easy of access.
 Oh ! had he been content to serve the crown,
 With virtues only proper to the gown ;
 Or had the rankness of the soil been freed
 From cockle, that oppress'd the noble seed ;
 David for him his tuneful harp had strung,
 And Heaven had wanted one immortal song.
 But wild Ambition loves to slide, not stand,
 And Fortune's ice prefers to Virtue's land.
 Achitophel, grown weary to possess
 A lawful fame, and lazy happiness,
 Disdain'd the golden fruit to gather free,
 And lent the crowd his arm to shake the tree.
 Now, manifest of crimes contriv'd long since,
 He stood at bold defiance with his prince ;
 Held up the buckler of the people's cause
 Against the crown, and skulk'd behind the laws.
 The wish'd occasion of the plot he takes ;
 Some circumstances finds, but more he makes.
 By buzzing emissaries fills the ears
 Of listening crowds with jealousies and fears
 Of arbitrary counsels brought to light,
 And proves the king himself a Jebusite.
 Weak arguments ! which yet he knew full well,
 Were strong with people easy to rebel.
 For, govern'd by the moon, the giddy Jews
 Tread the same track when she the prime renews ;
 And once in twenty years their scribes record,
 By natural instinct they change their lord.
 Achitophel still wants a chief, and none
 Was found so fit as warlike Absalom.
 Not that he wish'd his greatness to create,
 For politicians neither love nor hate ;
 But, for he knew his title not allow'd,
 Would keep him still depending on the crowd :
 That kingly power, thus ebbing out, might be Drawn to the dregs of a democracy.
 Him he attempts with studied arts to please,
 And sheds his venom in such words as these.

" Auspicious prince, at whose nativity
 Some royal planet rul'd the southern sky ;
 Thy longing country's darling and desire ;
 Their cloudy pillar and their guardian fire :
 Their second Moses, whose extended wand
 Divides the seas, and shews the promis'd land :
 Whose dawning day, in every distant age,
 Has exercis'd the sacred prophet's rage :
 The people's prayer, the glad diviner's theme,
 The young men's vision ; and the old men's dream !

These, Saviour, thee the nation's vows confess,
And, never satisfy'd with seeing, bless:
Swift unbespoken pomps thy steps proclaim,
And stammering babes are taught to lisp thy name.

How long wilt thou the general joy detain,
Starve and defraud the people of thy reign!
Content ingloriously to pass thy days,
Like one of virtue's fools that feed on praise;
'Till thy fresh glories, which now shine so bright,
Grow stale, and tarnish with our daily sight!
Believe me, royal youth, thy fruit must be
Or gather'd ripe, or rot upon the tree.
Heaven has to all allotted, soon or late,
Some lucky revolution of their fate:
Whose motions if we watch and guide with skill,
(For human good depends on human will,)
Our fortune rolls as from a smooth descent,
And from the first impression takes the bent:
But if unseiz'd, she glides away like wind,
And leaves repenting folly far behind.
Now, now she meets you with a glorious prize,
And spreads her locks before her as she flies.
Had thus old David, from whose loins you spring,

Not dar'd when fortune call'd him to be king,
At Gath an exile he might still remain,
And Heaven's anointing oil had been in vain.
Let his successful youth your hopes engage;
But shun the example of declining age:
Behold him setting in his western skies,
The shadows lengthening as the vapours rise.
He is not now, as when on Jordan's sand
The joyful people throng'd to see him land, Covering the beach, and blackening all the } strand;

But, like the prince of angels, from his height
Comestumbling downward with diminish'd light:
Betray'd by one poor plot to public scorn:
(Our only blessing since his curst return:)
Those heaps of people which one sheaf did bind,
Blown off and scatter'd by a puff of wind.
What strength can he to your designs oppose,
Naked of friends, and round beset with foes?
If Pharaoh's doubtful succour he should use,
A foreign aid would more incense the Jews:
Proud Egypt would dissembled friendship bring;
Foment the war, but not support the king:
Nor would the royal party e'er unite
With Pharaoh's arms to assist the Jebusite;
Or if they should, their interest soon would break,

And with such odious aid make David weak.
All sorts of men by my successful arts,
Abhorring kings, estrange their alter'd hearts
From David's rule: and 'tis their general cry,
Religion, commonwealth, and liberty.
If you, as champion of the public good,
Add to their arms a chief of royal blood,
What may not Israel hope, and what applause
Might such a general gain by such a cause?
Not barren praise alone, that gaudy flower
Fair only to the sight, but solid power:
And nobler is a limited command,

2 N 2

Given by the love of all your native land,
Than a successive title, long and dark,
Drawn from the mouldy rolls of Noah's ark."

What cannot praise effect in mighty minds,
When flattery soothes, and when ambition blinds?
Desire of power, on earth a vicious weed,
Yet sprung from high is of celestial seed:
In God 'tis glory; and when men aspire,
'Tis but a spark too much of heavenly fire.
The ambitious youth too covetous of fame,
Too full of angel's metal in his frame,
Unwarily was led from virtue's ways,
Made drunk with honour, and debauch'd with praise.

Half loth, and half consenting to the ill,
For royal blood within him struggled still,
He thus reply'd.—"And what pretence have I
To take up arms for public liberty?
My father governs with unquestion'd right;
The faith's defender, and mankind's delight;
Good, gracious, just, observant of the laws;
And Heaven by wonders has espous'd his cause.
Whom has he wrong'd in all his peaceful reign?
Who sues for justice to his throne in vain?
What millions has he pardon'd of his foes,
Whom just revenge did to his wrath expose?
Mild, easy, humble, studious of our good;
Inclin'd to mercy, and averse from blood.
If mildness ill with stubborn Israel suit,
His crime is God's beloved attribute.
What could he gain his people to betray,
Or change his right for arbitrary sway?
Let haughty Pharaoh curse with such a reign
His fruitful Nile, and yoke a servile train.
If David's rule Jerusalem displease,
The dog-star heats thy brains to this disease.
Why then should I, encouraging the bad,
Turn rebel and run popularly mad?
Were he a tyrant, who, by lawless might Oppress'd the Jews, and rais'd the Jebusite,
Well might I mourn; but nature's holy bands
Would curb my spirits and restrain my hands:
The people might assert their liberty;
But what was right in them were crime in me.
His favour leaves me nothing to require,
Prevents my wishes, and out-runs desire;
What more can I expect while David lives?
All but his kingly diadem he gives:
And that——" But there he paus'd; then,
sighing, said—

"Is justly destin'd for a worthier head.
For when my father from his toils shall rest,
And late augment the number of the blest,
His lawful issue shall the throne ascend,
Or the collateral line, where that shall end.
His brother, though oppress'd with vulgar spite,
Yet dauntless, and secure of native right,
Of every royal virtue stands possess;
Still dear to all the bravest and the best.
His courage foes, his friends his truth proclaim;
His loyalty the king, the world his fame.
His mercy e'en the offending crowd will find;
For sure he comes of a forgiving kind.
Why should I then repine at Heaven's decree,

Which gives me no pretence to royalty?
 Yet oh that fate propitiously inclin'd,
 Had rais'd my birth, or had debas'd my mind;
 To my large soul not all her treasure lent,
 And then betray'd it to a mean descent!
 I find, I find my mounting spirits bold,
 And David's part disdains my mother's mould.
 Why am I scanted by a niggard birth?
 My soul disclaims the kindred of her earth;
 And, made for empire, whispers me within,
 Desire of greatness is a god-like sin."

Him staggering so, when hell's dire agent
 found,
 While fainting virtue scarce maintain'd her
 ground,

He pours fresh forces in, and thus replies:
 "The eternal God, supremely good and wise,
 Imparts not these prodigious gifts in vain:
 What wonders are reserv'd to bless your reign!
 Against your will your arguments have shown,
 Such virtue's only given to guide a throne.
 Not that your father's mildness I condemn;
 But manly force becomes the diadem.
 'Tis true he grants the people all they crave;
 And more, perhaps, than subjects ought to have:
 For lavish grants suppose a monarch tame,
 And more his goodness than his wit proclaim.
 But when should people strive their bonds to break,

If not when kings are negligent or weak?
 Let him give on, till he can give no more,
 The thrifty Sanhedrim shall keep him poor;
 And every shekel, which he can receive,
 Shall cost a limb of his prerogative.
 To ply him with new plots shall be my care;
 Or plunge him deep in some expensive war;
 Which when his treasure can no more supply,
 He must, with the remains of kingship, buy
 His faithful friends, our jealousies and fears
 Call Jebusites, and Pharaoh's pensioners;
 Whom when our fury from his aid has torn,
 He shall be naked left to public scorn.
 The next successor, whom I fear and hate,
 My arts have made obnoxious to the state;
 Turn'd all his virtues to his overthrow,
 And gain'd our elders to pronounce a foe.
 His right, for sums of necessary gold,
 Shall first be pawn'd, and afterwards be sold;
 'Till time shall ever-wanting David draw,
 To pass your doubtful title into law;
 If not, the people have a right supreme
 To make their kings; for kings are made for
 them.

All empire is no more than power in trust,
 Which, when resum'd, can be no longer just.
 Succession, for the general good design'd,
 In its own wrong a nation cannot bind:
 If altering that the people can relieve,
 Better one suffer than a nation grieve.
 The Jews well know their power: ere Saul they chose,

God was their king, and God they durst depose.
 Urge now your piety, your filial name,
 A father's right, and fear of future fame;

The public good, that universal call,
 To which e'en Heaven submitted, answers all.
 Nor let his love enchant your generous mind;
 'Tis nature's trick to propagate her kind.
 Our fond begetters, who would never die,
 Love but themselves in their posterity.
 Or let his kindness by the effects be try'd,
 Or let him lay his vain pretence aside.
 God said, he lov'd your father; could he bring
 A better proof, than to anoint him king?
 It surely shew'd he lov'd the shepherd well,
 Who gave so fair a flock as Israel.
 Would David have you thought his darling son?
 What means he then to alienate the crown?
 The name of godly he may blush to bear:
 Is't after God's own heart to cheat his heir?
 He to his brother gives supreme command,
 To you a legacy of barren land;
 Perhaps the old harp, on which he thrums his lays,

Or some dull Hebrew ballad in your praise.
 Then the next heir, a prince severe and wise,
 Already looks on you with jealous eyes;
 Sees through the thin disguises of your arts,
 And marks your progress in the people's hearts;
 Though now his mighty soul its grief contains:
 He meditates revenge who least complains;
 And like a lion, slumbering in the way,
 Or sleep dissembling, while he waits his prey,
 His fearless foes within his distance draws,
 Constrains his roaring, and contracts his paws;
 'Till at the last his time for fury found,
 He shoots with sudden vengeance from the
 ground;

The prostrate vulgar passes o'er and spares,
 But with a lordly rage his hunters tears.
 Your case no tame expedients will afford:
 Resolve on death, or conquest by the sword,
 Which for no less a stake than life you draw;
 And self-defence is nature's eldest law.
 Leave the warm people no considering time:
 For then rebellion may be thought a crime.
 Avail yourself of what occasion gives,
 But try your title while your father lives:
 And that your arms may have a fair pretence,
 Proclaim you take them in the king's defence;
 Whose sacred life each minute would expose
 To plots, from seeming friends, and secret foes.
 And who can sound the depth of David's soul?
 Perhaps his fear his kindness may control.
 He fears his brother, though he loves his son,
 For plighted vows too late to be undone.
 If so, by force he wishes to be gain'd:
 Like women's lechery to seem constrain'd.
 Doubt not: but, when he most affects the frown,
 Commit a pleasing rape upon the crown.
 Secure his person to secure your cause:
 They who possess the prince possess the laws."

He said, and this advice above the rest,
 With Absalom's mild nature suited best;
 Unblam'd for life, ambition set aside,
 Not stain'd with cruelty, nor puffed with pride.
 How happy had he been, if destiny
 Had higher plac'd his birth, or not so high!

His kingly virtues might have claim'd a throne,
And blest all other countries but his own.
But charming greatness since so few refuse,
'Tis juster to lament him than accuse.
Strong were his hopes a rival to remove,
With blandishments to gain the public love:
To head the faction while their zeal was hot,
And popularly prosecute the plot.
To further this, Achitophel unites
The malcontents of all the Israelites:
Whose differing parties he could wisely join,
For several ends, to serve the same design.
The best, and of the princes some were such,
Who thought the power of monarchy too much;
Mistaken men, and patriots in their hearts;
Not wicked, but seduc'd by impious arts.
By these the springs of property were bent,
And wound so high, they crack'd the government.

The next for interest sought to embroil the state,
To sell their duty at a dearer rate;
And make their Jewish markets of the throne;
Pretending public good to serve their own.
Others thought kings an useless heavy load,
Who cost too much, and did too little good.
These were for laying honest David by,
On principles of pure good husbandry.
With them join'd all the haranguers of the throng,
That thought to get preferment by the tongue.
Who follow next a double danger bring,
Not only hating David, but the king;
The Solymæan rout; well vers'd of old,
In godly faction, and in treason bold.
Cowering and quaking at a conqueror's sword,
But lofty to a lawful prince restor'd;
Saw with disdain an Ethnic plot begun,
And scorn'd by Jebusites to be outdone.
Hot Levites headed these; who pull'd before
From the ark, which in the Judges' days they bore,

Resum'd their cant, and with a zealous cry,
Pursued their old belov'd Theocracy:
Where Sanhedrim and priest enslav'd the nation,
And justifi'd their spoils by inspiration:
For who so fit to reign as Aaron's race,
If once dominion they could found in grace!
These led the pack; though not of surest scent,
Yet deepest-mouth'd against the government.
A numerous host of dreaning saints succeed,
Of the true old enthusiastic breed:
'Gainst form and order they their power employ,
Nothing to build, and all things to destroy.
But far more numerous was the herd of such,
Who think too little, and who talk too much,
These out of mere instinct, they knew not
why,

Ador'd their fathers' God and property;
And by the same blind benefit of fate,
The devil and the Jebusite did hate:
Born to be sav'd, e'en in their own despite,
Because they could not help believing right.
Such were the tools: but a whole Hydra more
Remains of sprouting heads too long to score.
Some of their chiefs were princes of the land

In the first rank of these did Zimri* stand;
A man so various, that he seem'd to be
Not one, but all mankind's epitome:
Stiff in opinions, always in the wrong;
Was every thing by starts, and nothing long;
But, in the course of one revolving moon,
Was chymist, fidler, statesman, and buffoon:
Then all for women, painting, rhyming, drinking,
Besides ten thousand freaks that dy'd in think-
ing.

Blest madman, who could every hour employ,
With something new to wish, or to enjoy!
Railing and praising were his usual themes;
And both, to shew his judgment, in extremes:
So over violent, or over civil,
That every man with him was God or Devil.
In squandering wealth was his peculiar art:
Nothing went unrewarded but desert.
Beggard by fools, whom still he found too late;
He had his jest, and they had his estate.
He laugh'd himself from court; then sought relief

By forming parties, but could ne'er be chief:
For, spite of him, the weight of business fell
On Absalom, and wise Achitophel:
Thus, wicked but in will, of means bereft,
He left not faction, but of that was left.

Titles and names† 'twere tedious to rehearse
Of lords, below the dignity of verse.

* ——— Zimri ———
*A man so various, that he seem'd to be
Not one, but all mankind's epitome:]*

Was drawn for George Villiers, who succeeded to the title of Duke of Buckingham, on the death of his father, who was murdered by Felton. "He had somewhat great vivacity, was the minister of riot, the slave of intemperance, a pretended atheist, without honour, principle, economy, or discretion." He had a fine person, and the women deemed him handsome; he was capricious and sarcastic; sung well; told a story very facetiously; mimicked the failings of others admirably; and possessed strong powers for ridicule; versified with ease; but knew all his accomplishments, and soiled them by his intolerable vanity. He had shared in the king's exile, and coming into possession of more than 20,000*l.* per annum, at the restoration, was a great favorite. In 1666 it was discovered, that he had endeavoured to stir up such of the people that were ill-disposed to the government, because he had been refused the trust of president of the North. In the following year he made his peace at court, and became a member of the Cabal, which was made up of five ministers, in whom alone the king for some time confided, and who led him into measures that were productive of all the uneasiness he afterwards sustained. In 1673 he became a favorer of the nonconformists; and in the affairs of the Popish plot, and bill of exclusion, stuck close to Shaftesbury, and, with all his strength and influence, opposed the court. Having at length squandered away almost all his immense fortune, with the acquisition of a infamous character, he departed this life in 1687, lamented by nobody, according to Wood, at his house in York-shire.

His grace was the author of several pieces of entertainment, but particularly the Rehearsal; the Bayes of which he intended for Dryden, who has fully avenged himself in the character of Zimri: with this advantage, that the picture is an exact resemblance.—Dorrick.

† Titles and names.] Four score years ago it might have been interesting and entertaining to have known the particular histories of the persons here enumerated. Who inquires any thing relating to Balaam, who was the Earl of Huntingdon; to Nadab, Lord Howard of Escrick; to bull-faced Jonas, meaning Sir William Jones, a great lawyer of his time, and mentioned by Burnet as having refused the great seal; to Shimei, who was Singsby Bethel, Esq. famous for his avarice, of whom our poet says coarsely.

"Cool was his kitchen, though his brains were hot."
The only person of whom we wish to know more was Caleb, who was Ford, Lord Grey, whose memoirs are very curious.—Dr. J. Warton.

Wits, warriors, commonwealth's-men, were the best:

Kind husbands, and mere nobles, all the rest.
And therefore, in the name of dullness, be-
The well-hung Balaam, and cold Caleb* free:
And canting Nadab† let oblivion damn,
Who made new porridge for the paschal lamb;
Let friendship's holy band some names assure;
Some their own worth, and some let scorn secure.

Nor shall the rascal rabble here have place,
Whom kings no titles gave, and God no grace:
Not bull-fac'd Jonas, who could statutes draw‡
To mean rebellion, and make treason law.
But he, though bad, is follow'd by a worse,
The wretch who Heaven's anointed dar'd to curse:

Shimei, whose youth did early promise bring
Of zeal to God, and hatred to his king;
Did wisely from expensive sins refrain,
And never broke the sabbath, but for gain:
Nor ever was he known an oath to vent,
Or curse, unless against the government.
Thus heaping wealth, by the most ready way
Among the Jews, which was to cheat and pray;
The city, to reward his pious hate
Against his master, chose him magistrate.
His hand a vase of justice did uphold;
His neck was loaded with a chain of gold.
During his office treason was no crime;
The sons of Belial had a glorious time:
For Shimei, though not prodigal of self,
Yet lov'd his wicked neighbour as himself.
When two or three were gather'd to declaim
Against the monarch of Jerusalem,
Shimei was always in the midst of them:
And if they curs'd the king when he was by,
Would rather curse than break good company.
If any durst his factious friends accuse,
He pack'd a jury of dissenting Jews;
Whose fellow-feeling in the godly cause
Would free the suffering saint from human laws.
For laws are only made to punish those
Who serve the king, and to protect his foes.
If any leisure time he had from power,
(Because 'tis sin to misemploy an hour,)
His business was, by writing to persuade,

† Nadab is Lord Howard of Escrick, who took the sacrament in lamb's wool. MS. Note by Mr. Luttrell.—Malone.
‡ Ford, Lord Grey of Werk, was strongly attached to the Duke of Monmouth, a zealous promoter of Lord Shaftesbury's measures, and a constant opponent of the court. He was a smooth talker, possessed of a large estate, both which accomplishments gave him influence among the people. Being concerned in the Ryehouse-plot, he was arrested, and examined before the privy-council, who ordered him to the Tower; but when the messenger, who had the care of him, brought him thither, the gates were shut, it being late, and they could not get in; so that they spent the whole night together, and drank pretty freely. In the morning they came to the Tower again very early, the doors not being as yet opened; and his keeper, who was very drunk, falling asleep, he turned down towards the wharf, and taking care, got off to Holland. Here he joined his old friend Monmouth, whom he contributed to spirit up to the rebellion; in the ensuing reign, that brought that unhappy rebellion to the block.—Derick.

§ ——— draw] Sir William Jones. He drew the Habeas Corpus Act. MS. Luttrell.—Malone.

That kings were useless, and a clog to trade:
And, that his noble style he might refine,
No Rechabite more shunn'd the fumes of wine:
Chaste were his cellars, and his shrieval board
The grossness of a city feast abhorrd:
His cooks with long disuse their trade forgot;
Cool was his kitchen, though his brains were hot.

Such frugal virtue malice may accuse;
But sure 'twas necessary to the Jews:
For towns, once burnt, such magistrates require
As dare not tempt God's providence by fire.
With spiritual food he fed his servants well,
But free from flesh that made the Jews rebel:
And Moses' laws he held in more account,
For forty days of fasting in the mount.
To speak the rest, who better are forgot,
Would tire a well-breath'd witness of the plot.
Yet Corah*, thou shalt from oblivion pass;
Erect thyself, thou monumental brass,
High as the serpent of thy metal made,
While nations stand secure beneath thy shade.
What, though his birth were base, yet comets rise

From earthly vapours, ere they shine in skies.
Prodigious actions may as well be done
By weaver's issue, as by prince's son.
This arch-attester for the public good
By that one deed ennobles all his blood.
Who ever ask'd the witnesses' high race,
Whose oath with martyrdom did Stephen grace?
Ours was a Levite, and as times went then,
His tribe were God Almighty's gentlemen.
Sunk were his eyes, his voice was harsh and loud,

Sure signs he neither cholerick was, nor proud:
His long chin prov'd his wit; his saint-like grace
A church vermilion, and a Moses' face.
His memory, miraculously great,
Could plots, exceeding man's belief, repeat:
Which therefore cannot be accounted lies,
For human wit could never such devise.
Some future truths are mingled in his book;
But where the witness fail'd, the prophet spoke:
Some things like visionary flights appear;
The spirit caught him up the Lord knows where;
And gave him his rabbinical degree,
Unknown to foreign university†.

* Yet Corah,] This was Titus Oates, the informer of the execrable Popish plot, which was so loaded with absurdities and inconsistencies, that to have believed it, is a lasting disgrace to the people of this country. He was himself the most infamous of men; and among other crimes, had been indicted for perjury; and been expelled from a chaplainship in the fleet on complaint of some unnatural practices. So ample an account has been given of the intended murders, massacres, and cruelties, by Burnet, Echard, North, and Hume, that they need not, and cannot, be detailed in this place, and are indeed sufficiently known. Oates for his discovery was by the Parliament recommended to the king, was lodged in Whitehall, and protected by guards, and had a pension of 1300*l.* a year. But in the succeeding reign, 1685, this abandoned villain was convicted of the most atrocious perjury, on the fullest and clearest evidence, was fined a thousand marks on each of two indictments, and sentenced to be whipped on two different days from Aldgate to Newgate, to be imprisoned for life, and to be pilloried five times every year. All this he survived, and in the succeeding reign obtained a pension of 200*l.* a year.—Dr. J. Warren.

† Unknown to foreign university,] He pretended to have taken a degree at Salamanca. MS. Note by Mr. Luttrell.—Malone.

His judgment yet his memory did excel ;
Which piec'd his wonderous evidence so well,
And suited to the temper of the times,
Then groaning under Jebusitic crimes.
Let Israel's foes suspect his heavenly call,
And rashly judge his writ apocryphal ;
Our laws for such affronts have forfeits made :
He takes his life who takes away his trade.
Were I myself in witness Corah's place,
The wretch who did me such a dire disgrace,
Should whet my memory, though once forgot,
To make him an appendix of my plot.
His zeal to Heaven made him his prince despise,
And load his person with indignities.
But zeal peculiar privilege affords,
Indulging latitude to deeds and words :
And Corah might for Agag's murder call*,
In terms as course as Samuel us'd to Saul.
What others in his evidence did join,
The best that could be had for love or coin,
In Corah's own predicament will fall :
For witness is a common name to all.

Surrounded thus with friends of every sort,
Deluded Absalom forsakes the court :
Impatient of high hopes, urg'd with renown,
And fir'd with near possession of a crown.
The admiring crowd are dazzled with surprize,
And on his goodly person feed their eyes.
His joy conceal'd, he sets himself to show ;
On each side bowing popularly low :
His looks, his gestures, and his words he frames,
And with familiar ease repeats their names.
Thus form'd by nature, furnish'd out with arts,
He glides unfelt into their secret hearts.
Then, with a kind compassionating look,
And sighs, bespeaking pity ere he spoke,
Few words he said ; but easy those and fit,
More sweet than Hybla-drops, and far more sweet.

" I mourn, my countrymen, your lost estate ;
Though far unable to prevent your fate ;
Behold a banish'd man for your dear cause
Expos'd a prey to arbitrary laws !
Yet oh ! that I alone could be undone,
Cut off from empire, and no more a son !
Now all your liberties a spoil are made ;
Egypt and Tyrus intercept your trade,
And Jebusites your sacred rites invade. }
My father, whom with reverence yet I name,
Charm'd into ease, is careless of his fame ;
And, brib'd with petty sums of foreign gold,
Is grown in Bathsheba's embraces old ;

* And Corah might for Agag's murder call.] Agag, Sir Edmond-bury Godfrey, a justice of peace, before whom Oates had made his first deposition, and who was, soon after, found murdered in a ditch near Primrose-hill, on the road to Hampstead, his sword being run quite through his body, without any effusion of blood. This was done, as it was supposed, with a view to make people think he had murdered himself ; whereas, in fact, his death was occasioned by strangling, a broad livid mark being plain round his neck, which was broken, and his breast bruised in several places, as if he had been kneeled or trampled upon. His gloves and cane lay near him, his shoes were clean and his money untouched. It is very surprising, that his murderers were never discovered, though Neddes, an infamous wretched incendiary, swore the crime against two or three innocent people, who suffered death.—Derrick.

Exalts his enemies, his friends destroys ;
And all his power against himself employs.
He gives, and let him give, my right away :
But why should he his own and yours betray ?
He, only he, can make the nation bleed,
And he alone from my revenge is freed.
Take then my tears, with that he wip'd his eyes,
'Tis all the aid my present power supplies :
No court-informer can these arms accuse ;
These arms may sons against their fathers use :
And 'tis my wish, the next successor's reign
May make no other Israelite complain."

Youth, beauty, graceful action seldom fail ;
But common interest always will prevail :
And pity never ceases to be shown
To him who makes the people's wrongs his own.
The crowd, that still believe their kings oppress,
With lifted hands their young Messiah bless :
Who now begins his progress to ordain
With chariots, horsemen, and a numerous train :
From east to west his glories he displays,
And, like the sun, the promis'd land surveys.
Fame runs before him as the morning-star,
And shouts of joy salute him from afar :
Each house receives him as a guardian god,
And consecrates the place of his abode.
But hospitable treats did most commend
Wise Issachar, his wealthy western friend*.

This moving court, that caught the people's eyes,
And seem'd but pomp, did other ends disguise :
Achitophel had form'd it, with intent
To sound the depths, and fathom where it went,
The people's hearts, distinguish friends from foes ;
And try their strength before they came to blows.

Yet all was colour'd with a smooth pretence
Of specious love, and duty to their prince.
Religion, and redress of grievances,
Two names that always cheat, and always please,
Are often urg'd ; and good king David's life
Endanger'd by a brother and a wife.
Thus in a pageant shew a plot is made ;
And peace itself is war in masquerade.
Oh foolish Israel ! never warn'd by ill !
Still the same bait, and circumvented still !
Did ever men forsake their present ease,
In midst of health imagine a disease ;
Take pains contingent mischiefs to foresee,
Make heirs for monarchs, and for God decree ?
What shall we think ? Can people give away,
Both for themselves and sons, their native sway ?
Then they are left defenceless to the sword
Of each unbounded, arbitrary lord :
And laws are vain, by which we right enjoy,
If kings unquestion'd can those laws destroy.

* ——— wealthy western friend.] Issachar was Thomas Thynne, Esq. ancestor of the Marquis of Bath, one of the most opulent commoners in the kingdom, and therefore usually called Tom of Ten Thousand. He had once been a favourite of the Duke of York, but he afterwards magnificently entertained the Duke of Monmouth and all his attendants, when he made a progress into the west, at his noble house at Longleat.—Dr. J. War-ton.

Yet if the crowd be judge of fit and just,
And kings are only officers in trust,
Then this resuming covenant was declar'd
When kings were made, or is for ever barr'd.
If those who gave the sceptre could not tie
By their own deed their own posterity,
How then could Adam bind his future race?
How could his forfeit on mankind take place?
Or how could heavenly justice damn us all,
Who ne'er consented to our father's fall?
Then kings are slaves to those whom they command,

And tenants to their people's pleasure stand.
Add, that the power for property allow'd
Is mischievously seated in the crowd:
For who can be secure of private right,
If sovereign sway may be dissolv'd by night?
Nor is the people's judgment always true:
The most may err as grossly as the few?
And faultless kings run down by common cry,
For vice, oppression, and for tyranny.
What standard is there in a fickle rout,
Which, flowing to the mark, runs faster out?
Nor only crowds but Sanhedrims may be Infected with this public lunacy,
And share the madness of rebellious times,
To murder monarchs for imagin'd crimes.
If they may give and take when'er they please,
Not kings alone, the Godhead's images,
But government itself at length must fall
To nature's state, where all have right to all.
Yet grant our lords the people kings can make,
What prudent men a settled throne would shake?
For whatsoe'er their sufferings were before,
That change they covet makes them suffer more.
All other errors but disturb a state;
But innovation is the blow of fate.
If ancient fabrics nod, and threat to fall,
To patch their flaws, and buttress up the wall,
Thus far 'tis duty: but here fix the mark;
For all beyond it is to touch the ark.
To change foundations, cast the frame anew,
Is work for rebels, who base ends pursue;
At once divine and human laws control,
And mend the parts by ruin of the whole.
The tampering world is subject to this curse,
To physic their disease into a worse.

Now what relief can righteous David bring?
How fatal 'tis to be too good a king!
Friends he has few, so high the madness grows;
Who dare be such must be the people's foes.
Yet some there were, e'en in the worst of days;
Some let me name, and naming is to praise.

In this short file Barzillai first appears;
Barzillai, crown'd with honour and with years.
Long since, the rising rebels* he withstood

In regions waste beyond the Jordan's flood:] The Duke of Ormond adhered zealously to the interest of his sovereign Charles I. in Ireland, where, being chief of a noble, ancient, and wealthy family, his power and influence were, as long as possible, enlisted against the arms of Cromwell. But being at length obliged to yield to the necessity of the times, he quitted that kingdom, and accompanied King Charles II. in his exile. After the restoration, he was at one and the same time lord-lieutenant of Ireland, steward of the household, groom of

In regions waste beyond the Jordan's flood:
Unfortunately brave to buoy the state;
But sinking underneath his master's fate:
In exile with his godlike prince he mourn'd;
For him he suffer'd, and with him return'd.
The court he practis'd, not the courtier's art:
Large was his wealth, but larger was his heart.
Which well the noblest objects knew to chuse,
The fighting warrior, and recording muse.
His bed could once a faithful issue boast;
Now more than half a father's name is lost.
His eldest hope, with every grace adorn'd,
By me, so Heaven will have it, always mourn'd,
And always honour'd, snatch'd in manhood's prime

By unequal fates, and providence's crime;
Yet not before the goal of honour won,
All parts fulfill'd of subject and of son:
Swift was the race, but short the time to run.
Oh narrow circle, but of power divine,
Scanted in space, but perfect in thy line!
By sea, by land, thy matchless worth was known,
Arms thy delight, and war was all thy own:
Thy force infus'd the fainting Tyrians propp'd*
And haughty Pharaoh found his fortune stopp'd.
Oh ancient honour! Oh unconquer'd hand,
Whom foes unpunish'd never could withstand!
But Israel was unworthy of his name:
Short is the date of all immoderate fame.
It looks as Heaven our ruin had design'd,
And durst not trust thy fortune and thy mind.
Now, free from earth, thy disencumber'd soul
Mounts up, and leaves behind the clouds and starry pole:

From thence thy kindred legions mayst thou bring,
To aid the guardian angel of thy king.
Here stop, my muse, here cease thy painful flight:

No pinions can pursue immortal height:
Tell good Barzillai thou canst sing no more,
And tell thy soul she should have fled before:
Or fled she with his life, and left this verse
To hang on her departed patron's hearst?
Now take thy steepy flight from heaven, and see
If thou canst find on earth another he:
Another he would be too hard to find;
See then whom thou canst see not far behind.
Zadoc the priest, whom, shunning power and place,
His lowly mind advanc'd to David's grace.

the stole, and privy-counsellor for the three kingdoms. Perhaps no man was ever better beloved, and no man deserved it better: he was liberal, brave, loyal, and sincere: a friend to the constitution, and a protector of the Protestants. On this account he was no favourite in the succeeding reign, and died in retirement, without post or employment, July 1683, aged seventy-nine.—Derrick.

Lord Ossory having married a Dutch lady, lived some time in Holland, and was of signal service in preventing the progress of the French arms, by his knowledge and advice.—Derrick.

To hang on her departed patron's hearst:] This alludes to the custom of affixing poems to the pall or hearse. See Milton's Lat. Eleg. 8. 22. And his epitaph on the Marchioness of Winchester, ver. 68, &c.—Todd.

With him the Sagan of Jerusalem,
Of hospitable soul, and noble stem;
Him of the western dome*, whose weighty sense
Flows in fit words and heavenly eloquence.
The prophets' sons, by such example led,
To learning and to loyalty were bred:
For colleges on bounteous kings depend,
And never rebel was to arts a friend.
To these succeed the pillars of the laws;
Who best can plead, and best can judge a cause.
Next them a train of loyal peers ascend;
Sharp-judging Adriel†, the Muses' friend,
Himself a Muse: in Sanhedrim's debate
True to his prince, but not a slave of state;
Whom David's love with honours did adorn,
That from his disobedient son were torn.
Jotham of piercing wit, and pregnant thought:
Endued by nature, and by learning taught,
To move assemblies, who but only try'd
The worse awhile, then chose the better side:
Nor chose alone, but turn'd the balance too;
So much the weight of one brave man can do.
Hushai, the friend of David in distress;
In public storms of manly stedfastness:
By foreign treaties he inform'd his youth,
And join'd experience to his native truth.
His frugal care supply'd the wanting throne;
Frugal for that, but bounteous of his own:
'Tis easy conduct when exchequers flow;
But hard the task to manage well the low:
For sovereign power is too depress'd or high,
When kings are forc'd to sell, or crowds to buy.
Indulge one labour more, my weary muse,
For Amiel: who can Amiel's praise refuse?

* Him of the western dome.] This was Dolben, who was bishop of Rochester, and succeeded Sterne in the archbishoprick of York: a man, says Burnet, of more spirit than discretion, an excellent preacher, but of a free conversation, which laid him open to much censure in a vicious court. During the rebellion he bore arms, and was made a major by Charles I.—Dr. J. Warton.

† Sharp-judging Adriel.] Sheffield, Earl of Mulgrave, Adriel, was a man of a fine person, elegant manners, and insinuating address. When they were both young, he paid his address to Queen Anne, and to prevent a connection, Charles II. is said to have contrived a cruel and unjustifiable scheme of sending him to Langiers in a ship so crazy as to have drowned him. He was always firm in his attachment to James II. for which, with great liberality, King William once commended him, and after some years took him into favour, and gave him a pension of 3000*l.* a year. He was a man of wit and parts, not a genius. His poems are feeble and flimsy, notwithstanding Dryden has so profusely praised his Essay on Poetry. But the prose is terse, perspicuous, and elegant, and his memoirs so curious, that we must regret they were left unfinished.—Dr. J. Warton.

‡ Jotham of piercing wit.] The Marquis of Halifax, Jotham, was, in Hume's opinion, the man who possessed the finest genius and most extensive capacity of all employed in public affairs, by Charles II. Hume is of opinion, that the many variations he was guilty of in his political conduct, for he voted first for the exclusion bill, then for limitations, then for expedients, and was then on good terms with the Duke, might be the effects of his integrity, rather than of his ambition. Lord Orford, in his Noble Authors, p. 66, vol. II. is of a very different opinion. He wrote many pamphlets on topics then agitated, now forgotten.—Dr. J. Warton.

§ —who can Amiel's praise.] Sir Edward Seymour, Amiel, was a man of high birth, being the elder branch of that family, of great boldness, vivacity of parts, and a graceful manner, though of insufferable pride. Burnet says, he was the first Speaker of the House of Commons that was not bred to the law. He knew the house and every man in it so well, that by looking about he could tell the fate of any question. Charles II. loved him personally, though he frequently voted against his measures. But once having voted for the court, the king said to him, "You were not against me to-day." He immediately answered, "No, sir, I was against my conscience to-day."—Dr. J. Warton.

Of ancient race by birth, but nobler yet
In his own worth, and without title great:
The Sanhedrim long time as chief he rul'd,
Their reason guided, and their passion cool'd:
So dextrous was he in the crown's defence,
So form'd to speak a loyal nation's sense,
That, as their band was Israel's tribes in small,
So fit was he to represent them all.
Now rash charioteers the seat ascend,
Whose loose careers his steady skill commend:

They, like the unequal ruler of the day,
Misguide the seasons, and mistake the way:
While he withdrawn at their mad labours smiles,

And safe enjoys the sabbath of his toils.

These were the chief, a small but faithful band
Of worthies, in the breach who dar'd to stand,
And tempt the united fury of the land,
With grief they view'd such powerful engines bent,

To batter down the lawful government.

A numerous faction, with pretended frights,
In Sanhedrims to plume the regal rights;
The true successor from the court remov'd;
The plot, by hireling witnesses, improv'd.
These ills they saw, and, as their duty bound,
They shew'd the king the danger of the wound;
That no concessions from the throne would please,

But lenitives fomented the disease:

That Absalom, ambitious of the crown,
Was made the lure to draw the people down:
That false Achitophel's pernicious hate
Had turn'd the plot to ruin church and state:
The council violent, the rabble worse:
That Shimei taught Jerusalem to curse.

With all these loads of injuries oppress,
And long revolving in his careful breast
The event of things, at last his patience tir'd,
Thus, from his royal throne, by Heaven inspir'd,
The god-like David spoke; with awful fear
His train their Maker in their master hear.

"Thus long have I, by native mercy sway'd,
My wrongs dissembled, my revenge delay'd:
So willing to forgive the offending age;
So much the father did the king assuage.
But now so far my clemency they slight,
The offenders question my forgiving right,
That one was made for many, they contend;
But 'tis to rule; for that's a monarch's end.
They call my tenderness of blood, my fear;
Though manly tempers can the longest bear.
Yet, since they will divert my native course,
'Tis time to shew I am not good by force.

Those heap'd affronts that haughty subjects bring,

Are burdens for a camel, not a king.
Kings are the public pillars of the state,
Born to sustain and prop the nation's weight:
If my young Sampson will pretend a call
To shake the column, let him share the fall:
But oh, that yet he would repent and live!
How easy 'tis for parents to forgive!

With how few tears a pardon might be won
From nature, pleading for a darling son!
Poor, pitied youth, by my paternal care,
Rais'd up to all the height his frame could bear!
Had God ordain'd his state for empire born,
He would have given his soul another turn:
Gull'd with a patriot's name, whose modern sense

Is one that would by law supplant his prince;
The people's brave, the politician's tool;
Never was patriot yet, but was a fool.
Whence comes it, that religion and the laws
Should more be Absalom's than David's cause?
His old instructor, ere he lost his place,
Was never thought indu'd with so much grace.
Good Heavens, how faction can a patriot paint!
My rebel ever proves my people's saint.
Would they impose an heir upon the throne!
Let Sanhedrims be taught to give their own.
A king's at least a part of government;
And mine as requisite as their consent:
Without my leave a future king to chuse,
Infers a right the present to depose.
True, they petition me to approve their choice:
But Esau's hands suit ill with Jacob's voice.
My pious subjects for my safety pray;
Which to secure, they take my power away.
From plots and treasons Heaven preserve my
years,

But save me most from my petitioners!
Unsate as the barren womb or grave;
God cannot grant so much as they can crave.
What then is left, but with a jealous eye
To guard the small remains of royalty!
The law shall still direct my peaceful sway,
And the same law teach rebels to obey:
Votes shall no more establish'd power control,
Such votes as make a part exceed the whole.
No groundless clamours shall my friends remove,

Nor crowds have power to punish ere they prove;
For Gods and god-like kings their care express,
Still to defend their servants in distress.
Oh, that my power to saving were confin'd!
Why I am forc'd, like Heaven, against my mind, }
To make examples of another kind?
Must I at length the sword of justice draw!
Oh curst effects of necessary law!
How ill my fear they by my mercy scan!
Beware the fury of a patient man.
Law they require, let law then shew her face:
They could not be content to look on Grace,
Her hinder parts, but with a daring eye
To tempt the terror of her front and die.
By their own arts 'tis righteously decreed,
Those dire artificers of death shall bleed.
Against themselves their witnesses will swear*,
'Till, viper-like, their mother plot they tear;
And suck for nutriment that bloody gore,
Which was their principle of life before.

* Against themselves their witnesses will swear.] Alluding to the inconsistencies and contradictions of Dr. Oates, Captain Bedloe, and other witnesses, made use of to support the credit of the Popish plot.—Derrick.

Their Belial with their Beelzebub will fight;
Thus on my foes, my foes shall do me right.
Nor doubt the event: for factious crowds engage,

In their first onset, all their brutal rage.
Then let 'em take an unresisted course:
Retire, and traverse, and delude their force:
But, when they stand all breathless, urge the fight,

And rise upon them with redoubled might:
For lawful power is still superior found;
When long driven back at length it stands the
ground."

He said: The Almighty nodding gave consent;

And peals of thunder shook the firmament.
Henceforth a series of new time began,
The mighty years in long procession ran:
Once more the god-like David was restor'd,
And willing nations knew their lawful lord.

MAC-FLECKNOE*.

ALL human things are subject to decay,
And when fate summons, monarchs must obey.
This Flecknoe found, who, like Augustus,
young
Was call'd to empire, and had govern'd long;
In prose and verse, was own'd, without dispute,
Through all the realms of Nonsense, absolute.
This aged prince, now flourishing in peace,
And blest with issue of a large increase:
Worn out with business, did at length debate
To settle the succession of the state:
And, pondering, which of all his sons was fit
To reign, and wage immortal war with wit,
Cry'd, "'Tis resolv'd; for nature pleads, that he Should only rule, who most resembles me.
Shadwell alone my perfect image bears,
Mature in dulness from his tender years:
Shadwell alone, of all my sons, is he,
Who stands confirm'd in full stupidity.
The rest to some faint meaning make pretence,
But Shadwell never deviates into sense.
Some beams of wit on other souls may fall,
Strike through, and make a lucid interval;
But Shadwell's genuine night admits no ray,
His rising fogs prevail upon the day.

* This is one of the best, as well as severest satires, ever produced in our language. Mr. Thomas Shadwell is the hero of the piece, and introduced, as if pitched upon, by Flecknoe, to succeed him in the throne of dulness; for Flecknoe was never poet-laureat, as has been ignorantly asserted in Cibber's Lives of the Poets.

Richard Flecknoe, Esq., from whom this poem derives its name, was an Irish priest, who had, according to his own declaration, laid aside the mechanic part of the priesthood. He was well known at court; yet, out of four plays which he wrote, could get only one of them acted, and that was damned. "He has," says Langhorne, "published sundry works, as he styles them, to continue his name to posterity, though possibly an enemy has done that for him, which his own envious could never have perfected: for, whatever may become of his own pieces, his name will continue, whilst Mr. Dryden's satire, called Mac-Flecknoe, shall remain in vogue."

From this poem Pope took the hint of his Dunciad.—Derrick.

Besides, his goodly fabric fills the eye,
And seems design'd for thoughtless majesty :
Thoughtless as monarch oaks, that shade the plain,

And, spread in solemn state, supinely reign.
Heywood and Shirley were but types of thee,
Thou last great prophet of tautology.
Even I, a dunce of more renown than they,
Was sent before but to prepare thy way ;
And, coarsely clad in Norwich druggot, came
To teach the nations in thy greater name.
My warbling lute, the lute I whilom strung,
When to king John of Portugal I sung,
Was but the prelude to that glorious day,
When thou on silver Thames didst cut thy way,

With well-tim'd oars before the royal barge,
Swell'd with the pride of thy celestial charge ;
And big with hymn, commander of an host,
The like was ne'er in Epsom blankets tost.
Methinks I see the new Arion sail,
The lute still trembling underneath thy nail.
At thy well-sharpen'd thumb from shore to shore

The trebles squeak for fear, the bases roar :
Echoes from ——— Alley Shadwell call,
And Shadwell they resound from Aston-Hall.
About thy boat the little fishes throng,
As at the morning toast that floats along.
Sometimes, as prince of thy harmonious band,
Thou wilt'st thy papers in thy threshing hand.
St. Andre's feet ne'er kept more equal time,
Not even the feet of thy own Psyche's rhyme :
Though they in number as in sense excel ;
So just, so like tautology, they fell,
That, pale with envy, Singleton forswore
The lute and sword, which he in triumph bore,

And vow'd he ne'er would act Villerius more." }
Here stopt the good old sire, and wept for joy,

In silent raptures of the hopeful boy.
All arguments, but most his plays, persuade,
That for a roited dulness he was made.

Close to the walls which fair Augusta bind,
(The fair Augusta much to fears inclin'd)
An ancient fabric rais'd to inform the sight,
There stood of yore, and Barbican it hight :
A watch-tower once ; but now, so fate ordains,
Of all the pile an empty name remains :
From its old ruins brothel-houses rise,
Scenes of lewd loves, and of polluted joys,
Where their vast courts the mother-strumpets keep,

And, undisturb'd by watch, in silence sleep.
Near these a nursery erects its head,
Where queens are form'd, and future heroes bred ;

Where unfledg'd actors learn to laugh and cry,

Where infant punks their tender voices try,
And little Maximins the gods defy.
Great Fletcher never treads in buskins here,
Nor greater Jonson dares in socks appear ;

But gentle Simkin just reception finds*

Amidst this monument of vanish'd minds :
Pure clinches the suburban muse affords,
And Panton waging harmless war with words.
Here Flecknoe, as a place to fame well known,
Ambitiously design'd his Shadwell's throne.
For ancient Decker prophesy'd long since,
That in this pile should reign a mighty prince,
Born for a scourge of wit, and flail of sense : }
To whom true dulness should some Psychas owe,

But worlds of Misers from his pen should flow ;

Humorists and Hypocrites it should produce,
Whole Raymond families, and tribes of Bruce.

Now empress Fame had publish'd the renown

Of Shadwell's coronation through the town.
Rous'd by report of fame, the nations meet,
From near Bunhill, and distant Watling-street.
No Persian carpets spread the imperial way,
But scatter'd limbs of mangled poets lay :
From dusty shops neglected authors come,
Martyrs of pies. * * * *

Much Heywood, Shirley, Orleby there lay,
But loads of Shadwell almost chok'd the way.
Bilk'd stationers for yeomen stood prepar'd,
And Herringman was captain of the guard.
The hoary prince in majesty appear'd,
High on a throne of his own labours rear'd.
At his right hand our young Ascanius sate,
Rome's other hope, and pillar of the state.
His brows thick fogs, instead of glories, grace.
And lambent dulness play'd around his face.
As Hannibal did to the altars come,
Swore by his sire, a mortal foe to Rome ;
So Shadwell swore, nor should his vow be vain,

That he till death true dulness would maintain ;

And, in his father's right, and realm's defence,

Ne'er to have peace with wit, nor truce with sense.

The king himself the sacred unction made,
As king by office, and as priest by trade.
In his sinister hand, instead of ball,
He plac'd a mighty mug of potent ale ;
Love's Kingdom to his right he did convey,
At once his sceptre, and his rule of sway ;
Whose righteous lore the prince had practis'd young,

And from whose loins recorded Psyche sprung.
His temples, last, with poppies were o'erspread,
That nodding seem'd to consecrate his head.
Just at the point of time, if fame not lie,
On his left hand twelve reverend owls did fly.
So Romulus, 'tis sung, by Tyber's brook,
Presage of sway from twice six vultures took.
The admiring throng loud acclamations make,
And omens of his future empire take.

* ————Simkin just reception finds] Simkin is a character of a cobbler in an interlude. Panton, who is mentioned soon after, was a famous punster.—Derrick.

The sire then shook the honours of his head,
And from his brows damps of oblivion shed
Full on the filial dulness: long he stood,
Repelling from his breast the raging god ;
At length burst out in this prophetic mood. }

"Heavens bless my son, from Ireland let him reign

To far Barbadoes on the western main ;
Of his dominion may no end be known,
And greater than his father's be his throne ;
Beyond Love's Kingdom* let him stretch his pen!"—

He paus'd, and all the people cry'd, Amen.
Then thus continu'd he: "My son, advance
Still in new impudence, new ignorance.
Success let others teach, learn thou from me
Pangs without birth, and fruitless industry.
Let Virtuosos in five years be writ ;
Yet not one thought accuse thy toil of wit.
Let gentle George in triumph tread the stage,
Make Dorimant betray, and Loveit rage ;
Let Cully, Cockwood, Fopling, charm the pit,

And in their folly shew the writer's wit.
Yet still thy fools shall stand in thy defence,
And justify their author's want of sense.
Let them be all by thy own model made
Of dulness, and desire no foreign aid ;
That they to future ages may be known,
Not copies drawn, but issue of thy own.
Nay, let thy men of wit too be the same,
All full of thee, and differing but in name.
But let no alien Sedley interpose,
To lard with wit thy hungry Epsom prose†.
And when false flowers of rhetoric thou would'st
cull,

Trust nature, do not labour to be dull ;
But write thy best, and top ; and, in each line,
Sir Formal's oratory will be thine :
Sir Formal, though unsought, attends thy quill,
And does thy northern dedications fill.
Nor let false friends seduce thy mind to fame,
By arrogating Jonson's hostile name.
Let father Flecknoe fire thy mind with praise,
And uncle Ogleby thy envy raise.
Thou art my blood, where Jonson has no part:
What share have we in nature, or in art ?
Where did his wit on learning fix a brand,
And rail at arts he did not understand ?
Where made he love in prince Nicander's vein‡,
Or swept the dust in Psyche's humble strain ?

As thou whole Etheridge dost transfuse to thine ?

But so transfus'd, as oil and waters flow,
His always floats above, thine sinks below.
This is thy province, this thy wondrous way.
New humours to invent for each new play ;
This is that boasted bias of thy mind,
By which one way to dulness 'tis inclin'd :
Which makes thy writings lean on one side
still,

And, in all changes, that way bends thy will.
Nor let thy mountain-belly make pretence*
Of likeness ; thine's a tympany of sense.
A tun of man in thy large bulk is writ,
But sure thou'rt but a kilderkin of wit.
Like mine, thy gentle numbers feebly creep ;
Thy tragic muse gives smiles, thy comic sleep.
With whate'er gall thou sett'st thyself to write,
Thy inoffensive satires never bite.
In thy felonious art though venom lies,
It does but touch thy Irish pen, and dies.
Thy genius calls thee not to purchase fame
In keen lambics, but mild Anagram.

Leave writing plays, and choose for thy command

Some peaceful province in Acrostic land.

There thou may'st Wings display and Altars raise,

And torture one poor word ten thousand ways.
Or, if thou would'st thy different talents suit,
Set thy own songs, and sing them to thy lute."

He said ; but his last words were scarcely heard :

For Bruce and Longvill† had a trap prepar'd,
And down they sent the yet declaiming bard. }
Sinking he left his drugget robe behind,
Borne upwards by a subterranean wind.
The mantle fell to the young prophet's part,
With double portion of his father's art.

THEODORE AND HONORIA.

Of all the cities in Romanian lands,
The chief, and most renown'd, Ravenna stands,
Adorn'd in ancient times with arms and arts,
And rich inhabitants, with generous hearts.
But Theodore the brave, above the rest,
With gifts of fortune and of nature bless'd,
The foremost place for wealth and honour held,
And all in feats of chivalry excell'd.

This noble youth to madness lov'd a dame,
Of high degree, Honoria was her name ;
Fair as the fairest, but of haughty mind,
And fiercer than became so soft a kind ;
Proud of her birth ; (for equal she had none ;)
The rest she scorn'd ; but hated him alone ;
His gifts, his constant courtship, nothing gain'd ;
For she, the more he lov'd, the more dis-dain'd.

* Nor let thy mountain-belly, &c.] Alluding to Shadwell's form, who was pretty lusty.—Derrick.

† For Bruce and Longvill, &c.] Two very heavy characters in Shadwell's Virtuoso, whom he calls gentlemen of wit and good sense.—Derrick.

He liv'd with all the pomp he could devise,
 At tilts and tournaments obtain'd the prize ;
 But found no favour in his lady's eyes :
 Relentless as a rock, the lofty maid,
 Turn'd all to poison that he did or said :
 Nor prayers, nor tears, nor offer'd vows, could move ;
 The work went backward ; and the more he strove
 To advance his suit, the farther from her love.
 Wearied at length, and wanting remedy,
 He doubted oft, and oft resolv'd to die.
 But pride stood ready to prevent the blow,
 For who would die to gratify a foe ?
 His generous mind disdain'd so mean a fate ;
 That pass'd, his next endeavour was to hate.
 But vainer that relief than all the rest,
 The less he hop'd, with more desire possess'd ;
 Love stood the siege, and would not yield his
 breast.

Change was the next, but change deceiv'd his
 care ;

He sought a fairer, but found none so fair.
 He would have worn her out by slow degrees,
 As men by fasting starve the untam'd disease :
 But present love requir'd a present ease.
 Looking he feeds alone his famish'd eyes,
 Feels lingering death, but looking not he dies.
 Yet still he chose the longest way to fate,
 Wasting at once his life, and his estate.

His friends beheld, and pity'd him in vain,
 For what advice can ease a lover's pain !
 Absence, the best expedient they could find,
 Might save the fortune, if not cure the mind :
 This means they long propos'd, but little gain'd,
 Yet after much pursuit, at length obtain'd.

Hard you may think it was to give consent,
 But struggling with his own desires he went,
 With large expence, and with a pompous
 train,

Provided as to visit France and Spain,
 Or for some distant voyage o'er the main.
 But love had clipp'd his wings, and cut him short,
 Confin'd within the purlieus of the court.
 Three miles he went, nor farther could retreat ;
 His travels ended at his country-seat :
 To Chassis' pleasing plains he took his way,
 There pitch'd his tents, and there resolv'd to stay.

The spring was in the prime ; the neighbouring grove
 Supply'd with birds, the choristers of love,
 Music unbought, that minister'd delight
 To morning walks, and lull'd his cares by night ;
 There he discharg'd his friends ; but not the expence

Of frequent treats, and proud magnificence.
 He liv'd as kings retire, though more at large
 From public business, yet with equal charge ;
 With house, and heart still open to receive ;
 As well content as love would give him leave :
 He would have liv'd more free ; but many a guest,

Who could forsake the friend, pursu'd the feast.

It happ'd one morning, as his fancy led,
 Before his usual hour he left his bed,
 To walk within a lonely lawn, that stood
 On every side surrounded by a wood :
 Alone he walk'd, to please his pensive mind,
 And sought the deepest solitude to find ;
 'Twas in a grove of spreading pines he stray'd ;
 The winds within the quivering branches
 play'd,

And dancing trees a mournful music made.
 The place itself was suiting to his care,
 Uncouth and savage, as the cruel fair.
 He wander'd on, unknowing where he went,
 Lost in the wood, and all on love intent :
 The day already half his race had run,
 And summon'd him to due repast at noon,
 But love could feel no hunger but his own.

Whilst listening to the murmuring leaves he stood,

More than a mile immers'd within the wood,
 At once the wind was laid ; the whispering
 sound

Was dumb ; a rising earthquake rock'd the
 ground ;

With deeper brown the grove was overspread ;
 A sudden horror seiz'd his giddy head,
 And his ears tinkled, and his colour fled ;
 Nature was in alarm ; some danger nigh
 Seem'd threaten'd, though unseen to mortal
 eye.

Unus'd to fear, he summon'd all his soul,
 And stood collected in himself, and whole ;
 Not long : for soon a whirlwind rose around,
 And from afar he heard a screaming sound,
 As of a dame distress'd, who cry'd for aid,
 And fill'd with loud laments the secret shade.

A thicket close beside the grove there stood
 With briars and brambles choak'd, and dwarfish
 wood ;

From thence the noise, which now approaching
 near,

With more distinguish'd notes invades his ear ;
 He rais'd his head, and saw a beauteous maid,
 With hair dishevell'd, issuing through the shade ;
 Stripp'd of her clothes, and e'en those parts reveal'd.

Which modest nature keeps from sight con-ceal'd.

Her face, her hands, her naked limbs were torn,
 With passing through the brakes, and prickly thorn ;

Two mastiffs gaunt and grim her flight pursu'd,
 And oft their fasten'd fangs in blood embrou'd :
 Oft they came up, and pinch'd her tender
 side,

Mercy, O mercy, Heaven, she ran, and cry'd ;
 When Heaven was nam'd, they loos'd their hold again,

Then sprung she forth, they follow'd her amain.

Not far behind, a knight of swarthy face,
 High on a coal-black steed pursu'd the chase ;
 With flashing flames his ardent eyes were
 fill'd,

And in his hand a naked sword he held :

He chear'd the dogs to follow her who fled,
And vow'd revenge on her devoted head.

As Theodore was born of noble kind;
The brutal action rous'd his manly mind;
Mov'd with unworthy usage of the maid,
He, though unarm'd, resolv'd to give her aid.
A saplin pine he wrench'd from out the ground,
The readiest weapon that his fury found.
Thus furnish'd for offence, he cross'd the way
Betwixt the graceless villain and his prey.

The knight came thundering on, but, from afar,

Thus in imperious tone forbad the war:
Cease, Theodore, to proffer vain relief,
Nor stop the vengeance of so just a grief;
But give me leave to seize my destin'd prey,
And let eternal justice take the way:
I but revenge my fate, disdain'd, betray'd,
And suffering death for this ungrateful maid.

He said, at once dismounting from the steed;
For now the hell-hounds, with superior speed,
Had reach'd the dame, and fastening on her side,
The ground with issuing streams of purple dy'd.
Stood Theodore surpriz'd in deadly fright,
With chattering teeth, and bristling hair upright;

Yet arm'd with inborn worth, Whate'er, said he,
Thou art, who know'st me better than I thee;
Or prove thy rightful cause, or be defy'd.
The spectre, fiercely staring, thus reply'd:

Know, Theodore, thy ancestry I claim,
And Guido Cavalcanti was my name.
One common sire our fathers did beget,
My name and story some remember yet:
Thee, then a boy, within my arms I laid,
When for my sins I lov'd this haughty maid;
Not less ador'd in life, nor serv'd by me,
Than proud Honoria now is lov'd by thee.
What did I not her stubborn heart to gain?
But all my vows were answer'd with disdain:
She scorn'd my sorrows, and despis'd my pain.
Long time I dragg'd my days in fruitless care:
Then loathing life, and plung'd in deep despair,
To finish my unhappy life, I fell
On this sharp sword, and now am damn'd in hell.

Short was her joy; for soon the insulting maid
By Heaven's decree in the cold grave was laid.
And, as in unrepented sin she dy'd, Doom'd to the same bad place is punish'd for her pride:

Because she deem'd I well deserv'd to die,
And made a merit of her cruelty.
There, then, we met; both try'd, and both were cast,

And this irrevocable sentence pass'd;
That she, whom I so long pursu'd in vain,
Should suffer from my hands a lingering pain:
Renew'd to life that she might daily die,
I daily doom'd to follow, she to fly;
No more a lover, but a mortal foe,
I seek her life (for love is none below.)
As often as my dogs with better speed
Arrest her flight, is she to death decreed:

Then with this fatal sword, on which I dy'd,
I pierce her open back, or tender side,
And tear that harden'd heart from out her
breast,

Which, with her entrails, makes my hungry
hounds a feast.

Nor lies she long, but as her fates ordain;
Springs up to life, and fresh to second pain,
Is sav'd to-day, to-morrow to be slain.

This, vers'd in death, the infernal knight relates,

And then for proof fulfill'd the common fates;
Her heart and bowels through her back he
drew,

And fed the hounds that help'd him to pursue.
Stern look'd the fiend, as frustrate of his will,
Not half suffic'd, and greedy yet to kill.

And now the soul, expiring through the wound,
Had left the body breathless on the ground,

When thus the grisly spectre spoke again:
Behold the fruit of ill-rewarded pain:

As many months as I sustain'd her hate,
So many years is she condemn'd by fate

To daily death; and every several place
Conscious of her disdain, and my disgrace,

Must witness her just punishment; and be
A scene of triumph and revenge to me,

As in this grove I took my last farewell,
As on this very spot of earth I fell,

As Friday saw me die, so she my prey
Becomes ev'n here, on this revolving day.

Thus while he spoke, the virgin from the
ground

Upstart'd fresh, already clos'd the wound,
And, unconcern'd for all she felt before,

Precipitates her flight along the shore:
The hell-hounds, as ungorg'd with flesh and

blood,
Pursue their prey, and seek their wonted food:

The fiend remounts his courser, mends his pace,
And all the vision vanish'd from the place.

Long stood the noble youth oppress'd with awe,

And stupid at the wondrous things he saw,
Surpassing common faith, transgressing nature's law:

He would have been asleep, and wish'd to wake,

But dreams he knew, no long impression make,
Though strong at first; if vision, to what end,

But such as must his future state portend?
His love the damsel, and himself the fiend.

But yet reflecting that it could not be
From Heaven, which cannot impious acts decree,

Resolv'd within himself to shun the snare,
Which hell for his destruction did prepare;

And as his better genius should direct,
From an ill cause to draw a good effect.

Inspir'd from Heaven, he homeward took his
way,

Nor pall'd his new design with long delay:
But of his train a trusty servant sent,

To call his friends together at his tent.

They came, and usual salutations paid,
 With words premeditated thus he said :
 What you have often counsell'd, to remove
 My vain pursuit of unregarded love,
 By thrift my sinking fortune to repair,
 Though late, yet is at last become my care :
 My heart shall be my own ; my vast expence
 Reduc'd to bounds, by timely providence ;
 This only I require ; invite for me
 Honoria, with her father's family,
 Her friends, and mine, the cause I shall display,
 On Friday next ; for that's the appointed day.
 Well pleas'd were all his friends, the task was
 light,

The father, mother, daughter, they invite ;
 Hardly the dame was drawn to this repast ;
 But yet resolv'd, because it was the last.
 The day was come, the guests invited came,
 And, with the rest, the inexorable dame :
 A feast prepar'd with riotous expence,
 Much cost, more care, and most magnificence.
 The place ordain'd was in that haunted grove.
 Where the revenging ghost pursu'd his love :
 The tables in a proud pavilion spread,
 With flowers below, and tissue overhead :
 The rest in rank, Honoria chief in place,
 Was artfully contriv'd to set her face
 To front the thicket, and behold the chace. }
 The feast was serv'd, the time so well forecast,
 That just when the dessert and fruits were
 plac'd,

The fiend's alarm began ; the hollow sound
 Sung in the leaves, the forest shook around,
 Air blacken'd, roll'd the thunder, groan'd the
 ground. }

Nor long before the loud laments arise,
 Of one distress'd, and mastiffs' mingled cries ;
 And first the dame came rushing through the
 wood,
 And next the famish'd hounds that sought their food,
 And grip'd her flanks, and oft essay'd their jaws in blood. }
 Last came the felon, on his sable steed,
 Arm'd with his naked sword, and urg'd his dogs to speed.

She ran, and cry'd, her flight directly bent,
 (A guest unbidden) to the fatal tent,
 The scene of death, and place ordain'd for punishment. }

Loud was the noise, aghast was every guest,
 The women shriek'd, the men forsook the feast ;
 The hounds at nearer distance hoarsely bay'd ;
 The hunter close pursu'd the visionary maid,
 She rent the heaven with loud laments, imploring aid. }

The gallants to protect the lady's right,
 Their fauchions brandish'd at the grisly spright ; }

High on his stirrups he provok'd the fight.
 Then on the crowd he cast a furious look,
 And wither'd all their strength before he strook :
 Back, on your lives, let be, said he, my prey,
 And let my vengeance take the destin'd way :

Vain are your arms, and vainer your defence,
 Against the eternal doom of Providence :
 Mine is the ungrateful maid by Heaven de-
 sign'd :

Mercy she would not give, nor mercy shall she
 find.

At this the former tale again he told
 With thundering tone, and dreadful to behold :
 Sunk were their hearts with horror of the crime,
 Nor needed to be warn'd a second time,
 But bore each other back : some knew the face, }
 And all had heard the much lamented case
 Of him who fell for love, and this the fatal
 place. }

And now the infernal minister advanc'd,
 Seiz'd the due victim, and with fury lanc'd
 Her back, and piercing through her inmost
 heart,

Drew backward as before the offending part.
 The reeking entrails next he tore away,
 And to his meagre mastiffs made a prey.
 The pale assistants on each other star'd,
 With gaping mouths for issuing words prepar'd ;
 The still-born sounds upon the palate hung,
 And died imperfect on the faltering tongue.
 The fright was general ; but the female band
 (A helpless train) in more confusion stand :
 With horror shuddering, on a heap they run,
 Sick at the sight of hateful justice done ; }
 For conscience rung the alarm, and made the case their own. }

So spread upon a lake, with upward eye,
 A plump of fowl behold their foe on high ;
 They close their trembling troop ; and all attend

On whom the sousing eagle will descend.

But most the proud Honoria fear'd the event,
 And thought to her alone the vision sent.
 Her guilt presents to her distracted mind
 Heaven's justice, Theodore's revengeful kind, }
 And the same fate to the same sin assign'd. }
 Already sees herself the monster's prey,
 And feels her heart and entrails torn away.
 'Twas a mute scene of sorrow, mix'd with fear ;
 Still on the table lay the unfinish'd cheer :
 The knight and hungry mastiffs stood around,
 The mangled dame lay breathless on the ground ;
 When on a sudden, re-inspir'd with breath,
 Again she rose, again to suffer death ;
 Nor staid the hell-hounds, nor the hunter staid,
 But follow'd, as before, the flying maid :
 The avenger took from earth the avenging sword,
 And mounting light as air his sable steed he spur'd :

The clouds dispell'd, the sky resum'd her light,
 And Nature stood recover'd of her fright.
 But fear, the last of ills, remain'd behind,
 And horror heavy sat on every mind.
 Nor Theodore encourag'd more the feast,
 But sternly look'd, as hatching in his breast
 Some deep designs ; which when Honoria view'd,
 The fresh impulse her former fright renew'd :
 She thought herself the trembling dame who fled,

And him the grisly ghost that spurr'd the infernal steed :

The more dismay'd, for when the guests withdrew,
Their courteous host saluting all the crew,
Regardless pass'd her o'er, nor grac'd with kind adieu.

That sting infix'd within her haughty mind,
The downfall of her empire she divin'd ;
And her proud heart with secret sorrow pin'd.
Home as they went, the sad discourse renew'd,
Of the relentless dame to death pursu'd,
And of the sight obscene so lately view'd.
None durst arraign the righteous doom she bore,
Ev'n they who pity'd most, yet blam'd her more :
The parallel they needed not to name.
But in the dead they damn'd the living dame.

At every little noise she look'd behind,
For still the knight was present to her mind :
And anxious oft she started on the way,
And thought the horseman-ghost came thundering for his prey.

Returned she took her bed with little rest,
But in short slumbers dreamt the funeral feast :
Awak'd, she turn'd her side, and slept again ;
The same black vapours mounted in her brain,
And the same dreams return'd with double pain.

Now forc'd to wake, because afraid to sleep,
Her blood all fever'd with a furious leap
She sprung from bed, distracted in her mind,
And fear'd, at every step, a twitching spright behind.

Darkling and desperate with a staggering pace,
Of death afraid, and conscious of disgrace ;
Fear, pride, remorse, at once her heart assail'd,
Pride put remorse to flight, but fear prevail'd.
Friday, the fatal day, when next it came,
Her soul forethought the fiend would change his game,

And her pursue, or Theodore be slain,
And two ghosts join their packs to hunt her o'er the plain.

This dreadful image so possess'd her mind,
That desperate any succour else to find,
She ceas'd all farther hope ; and now began
To make reflection on the unhappy man.
Rich, brave, and young who past expression lov'd,

Proof to disdain, and not to be remov'd :
Of all the men respected and admir'd,
Of all the dames, except herself, desir'd :
Why not of her ? prefer'd above the rest
By him with knightly deeds, and open love profess'd ?

So had another been, where he his vows address'd.

This quell'd her pride, yet other doubts remain'd,

That once disdaining, she might be disdain'd.
The fear was just, but greater fear prevail'd,
Fear of her life by hellish bounds assail'd :
He took a lowering leave ; but who can tell
What outward hate might inward love conceal ?

Her sex's arts she knew, and why not, then,
Might deep dissembling have a place in men ?
Here hope began to dawn ; resolv'd to try,
She fix'd on this her utmost remedy ;
Death was behind, but hard it was to die.
'Twas time enough at last on death to call,
The precipice in sight : a shrub was all,
That kindly stood betwixt to break the fatal fall.

One maid she had belov'd above the rest ;
Secure of her, the secret she confess'd ;
And now the cheerful light her fears dispell'd,
She with no winding turns the truth conceal'd,
But put the woman off, and stood reveal'd :
With faults confess'd commission'd her to go,
If pity yet had place, and reconcile her foe ;
The welcome message made, was soon receiv'd ;
'Twas to be wish'd, and hop'd, but scarce believ'd ;

Fate seem'd a fair occasion to present,
He knew the sex, and fear'd she might repent,
Should he delay the moment of consent.
There yet remain'd to gain her friends (a care
The modesty of maidens well might spare ;)
But she with such a zeal the cause embrac'd,
(As women, where they will, are all in haste)
The father, mother, and the kin beside,
Were overborne by fury of the tide ;
With full consent of all she chang'd her state ;
Resistless in her love, as in her hate.
By her example warn'd, the rest beware ;
More easy, less imperious, were the fair ;
And that one hunting, which the devil design'd
For one fair female, lost him half the kind.

CYMON AND IPHIGENIA.

POETA LOQUITUR.

Old as I am, for ladies' love unfit,
The power of beauty I remember yet,
Which once inflam'd my soul, and still inspires my wit,
If love be folly, the severe divine
Has felt that folly, though he censures mine ;
Pollutes the pleasures of a chaste embrace,
Acts what I write, and propagates in grace,
With riotous excess, a priestly race.
Suppose him free, and that I forge the offence,
He shew'd the way, perverting first my sense :
In malice witty, and with venom fraught,
He makes me speak the things I never thought.
Compute the gains of his ungovern'd zeal ;
Ill suits his cloth the praise of railing well.
The world will think that what we loosely write,
Though now arraign'd, he read with some delight ;

Because he seems to chew the cud again,
When his broad comment makes the text too plain ;

And teaches more in one explaining page,
Than all the double meanings of the stage.

What needs he paraphrase on what we mean ?
We were at worst but wanton ; he's obscene.

I, nor my fellows, nor myself excuse;
 But love's the subject of the comic muse:
 Nor can we write without it, nor would you
 A tale of only dry instruction view.
 Nor love is always of a vicious kind,
 But oft to virtuous acts inflames the mind,
 Awakes the sleepy vigour of the soul,
 And, brushing o'er, adds motion to the pool.
 Love, studious how to please, improves our parts
 With polish'd manners, and adorns with arts.
 Love first invented verse, and form'd the rhyme,
 The motion measur'd, harmoniz'd the chime;
 To liberal acts enlarg'd the narrow-soul'd,
 Soften'd the fierce, and made the coward bold:
 The world, when waste, he peopled with increase,
 And warring nations reconcil'd in peace.
 Ormond, the first, and all the fair may find,
 In this one legend, to their fame design'd,
 When beauty fires the blood, how love exalts
 the mind.

In that sweet isle where Venus keeps her court,
 And every grace, and all the loves, resort;
 Where either sex is form'd of softer earth,
 And takes the bent of pleasure from their birth;
 There liv'd a Cyprian lord above the rest,
 Wise, wealthy, with a numerous issue bless'd;
 But as no gift of fortune is sincere,
 Was only wanting in a worthy heir:
 His eldest born, a goodly youth to view,
 Excell'd the rest in shape, and outward shew,
 Fair, tall, his limbs with due proportion join'd,
 But of a heavy, dull, degenerate mind.
 His soul belied the features of his face;
 Beauty was there, but beauty in disgrace.
 A clownish mien, a voice with rustic sound,
 And stupid eyes that ever lov'd the ground.
 He look'd like nature's error, as the mind
 And body were not of a piece design'd,
 But made for two, and by mistake in one were join'd.

The ruling rod, the father's forming care,
 Were exercis'd in vain on wit's despair;
 The more inform'd, the less he understood,
 And deeper sunk by floundering in the mud.
 Now scorn'd of all, and grown the public shame,
 The people from Galesus chang'd his name,
 And Cymon call'd, which signifies a brute:
 So well his name did with his nature suit.

His father, when he found his labour lost,
 And care employ'd, that answer'd not the cost,
 Chose an ungrateful object to remove,
 And loath'd to see what nature made him love;
 So to his country farm the fool confin'd;
 Rude work well suited with a rustic mind.
 Thus to the wilds the sturdy Cymon went,
 A squire among the swains, and pleas'd with banishment.

His corn and cattle were his only care,
 And his supreme delight, a country fair.

It happen'd on a summer's holiday, [way;
 That to the green-wood shade he took his
 For Cymon shunn'd the church and us'd not much to pray.

His quarter-staff, which he could ne'er forsake,
 Hung half before, and half behind his back.
 He trudg'd along, unknowing what he sought,
 And whistled as he went, for want of thought.

By chance conducted, or by thirst constrain'd,
 The deep recesses of the grove he gain'd;
 Where in a plain defended by the wood,
 Crept through the matted grass a crystal flood,
 By which an alabaster fountain stood:
 And on the margin of the fount was laid
 (Attended by her slaves) a sleeping maid.
 Like Dian and her nymphs, when, tir'd with sport,

To rest by cool Eurotas they resort:
 The dame herself the goddess well express'd,
 Not more distinguish'd by her purple vest,
 Than by the charming features of her face,
 And, ev'n in slumber, a superior grace:
 Her comely limbs compos'd with decent care,
 Her body shaded with a slight cymarr;
 Her bosom to the view was only bare:
 Where two beginning paps were scarcely spy'd
 For yet their places were but signify'd:
 The fanning wind upon her bosom blows,
 To meet the fanning wind the bosom rose;
 The fanning wind, and purling streams, continue her repose.

The fool of nature stood with stupid eyes,
 And gaping mouth, that testify'd surprize,
 Fix'd on her face, nor could remove his sight,
 New as he was to love, and novice to delight:
 Long mute he stood, and leaning on his staff,
 His wonder witness'd with an idiot laugh;
 Then would have spoke, but by his glimmering
 sense

First found his want of words, and fear'd offence:

Doubted for what he was he should be known,
 By his clown accent, and his country tone.
 Through the rude chaos thus the running light
 Shot the first ray that pierc'd the native night:
 Then day and darkness in the mass were mix'd,
 Till gather'd in a globe the beams were fix'd:
 Last shone the sun, who, radiant in his sphere,
 Illumin'd heaven and earth, and roll'd around the year.

So reason in this brutal soul began,
 Love made him first suspect he was a man;
 Love made him doubt his broad barbarian sound;
 By love his want of words, and wit, he found;
 That sense of want prepar'd the future way
 To knowledge, and disclos'd the promise of a
 day.

What not his father's care, nor tutor's art,
 Could plant with pains in his unpolish'd heart,
 The best instructor, Love, at once inspir'd,
 As barren grounds to fruitfulness are fir'd:
 Love taught him shame, and shame, with love
 at strife,

Soon taught the sweet civilities of life;
 His gross material soul at once could find
 Somewhat in her excelling all her kind:
 Exciting a desire till then unknown,
 Somewhat unfound, or found in her alone.

This made the first impression on his mind,
Above, but just above, the brutal kind.
For beasts can like, but not distinguish too,
Nor their own liking by reflection know ;
Nor why they like or this, or t'other face,
Or judge of this, or that peculiar grace ;
But love in gross, and stupidly admire :
As flies allur'd by light, approach the fire.
Thus our man-beast, advancing by degrees,
First likes the whole, then separates what he sees ;

On several parts a several praise bestows,
The ruby lips, the well-proportion'd nose,
The snowy skin, and raven-glossy hair,
The dimpled cheek, and forehead rising fair, }
And ev'n in sleep itself, a smiling air, }
From thence his eyes descending view'd the rest,
Her plump round arms, white hands and heaving breast.

Long on the last he dwelt, though every part
A pointed arrow sped to pierce his heart.

Thus in a trice a judge of beauty grown,
(A judge erected from a country clown)
He long'd to see her eyes, in slumber hid.
And wish'd his own could pierce within the lid :
He would have wak'd her, but restrain'd his
thought,

And love new-born the first good manners
taught.

An awful fear his ardent wish withstood,
Nor durst disturb the goddess of the wood.
For such she seem'd by her celestial face,
Excelling all the rest of human race :
And things divine, by common sense he knew,
Must be devoutly seen, at distant view :
So checking his desire, with trembling heart
Gazing he stood, nor would, nor could depart ;
Fix'd as a pilgrim wilder'd in his way,
Who dares not stir by night, for fear to stray, }
But stands with awful eyes to watch the dawn }
of day.

At length awaking, Iphigene the fair,
(So was the beauty call'd, who caus'd his care)
Unclos'd her eyes, and double day reveal'd,
While those of all her slaves in sleep were seal'd.
The slaving cudden, propp'd upon his staff,
Stood ready gaping with a grinning laugh,
To welcome her awake, nor durst begin
To speak, but wisely kept the fool within.
Then she ; What make you, Cymon, here
alone ?

(For Cymon's name was round the country known

Because descended of a noble race,
And for a soul ill sorted with his face.)

But still the sot stood silent with surprise,
With fix'd regard on her new open'd eyes,
And in his breast receiv'd the venom'd dart,
A tickling pain that pleas'd amid the smart.
But conscious of her form, with quick distrust
She saw his sparkling eyes, and fear'd his brutal lust.

This to prevent, she wak'd her sleepy crew,
And rising hasty, took a short adieu.

Then Cymon first his rustic voice essay'd,
With proffer'd service to the parting maid
To see her safe ; his hand she long deny'd,
But took at length, asham'd of such a guide.
So Cymon led her home, and leaving there,
No more would to his country clowus repair,
But sought his father's house, with better mind,
Refusing in the farm to be confin'd.

The father wonder'd at the son's return,
And knew not whether to rejoice or mourn ;
But doubtfully receiv'd, expecting still
To learn the secret causes of his alter'd will.

Nor was he long delay'd : the first request
He made, was like his brothers to be dress'd,
And, as his birth requir'd, above the rest. }

With ease his suit was granted by his sire,
Distinguishing his heir by rich attire :
His body thus adorn'd, he next design'd
With liberal arts to cultivate his mind :
He sought a tutor of his own accord,
And study'd lessons he before abhorr'd.

Thus the man-child advanc'd, and learn'd so
fast,

That in short time his equals he surpass'd :
His brutal manners from his breast exil'd,
His mien he fashion'd, and his tongue he fil'd ;
In every exercise of all admir'd,
He seem'd, nor only seem'd, but was inspir'd :
Inspir'd by love, whose business is to please :
He rode, he fenc'd, he mov'd with graceful ease,
More fam'd for sense, for courtly carriage more,
Than for his brutal folly known before.

What then of alter'd Cymon shall we say,
But that the fire which choak'd in ashes lay,
A load too heavy for his soul to move,
Was upward blown below, and brush'd away by
love.

Love made an active progress through his mind,
The dusky parts he clear'd, the gross refin'd,
The drowsy wak'd ; and, as he went, impress'd
The Maker's image on the human breast.

Thus was the man amended by desire,
And though he lov'd perhaps with too much fire,
His father all his faults with reason scann'd,
And lik'd an error of the better hand :
Excus'd the excess of passion in his mind,
By flames too fierce, perhaps too much refin'd :
So Cymon, since his sire indulg'd his will,
Impetuous lov'd, and would be Cymon still ;
Galesus he disown'd, and chose to bear
The name of fool, confirm'd and bishop'd by the fair.

To Cipseus by his friends his suit he mov'd,
Cipseus the father of the fair he lov'd :
But he was pre-engag'd by former ties,
While Cymon was endeavouring to be wise :
And Iphigene, oblig'd by former vows,
Had given her faith to wed a foreign spouse :
Her sire and she to Rhodian Pasimond,
Though both repenting, were by promise bound,
Nor could retract ; and thus, as fate decreed,
Though better lov'd, he spoke too late to speed.

The doom was past, the ship already sent
Did all his tardy diligence prevent :

Sigh'd to herself the fair unhappy maid,
While stormy Cymon thus in secret said:
The time is come for Iphigene to find
The miracle she wrought upon my mind:
Her charms have made me man, her ravish'd
love

In rank shall place me with the bless'd above.
For mine by love, by force she shall be mine,
Or death, if force should fail, shall finish my design.

Resolv'd he said; and rigg'd with speedy care
A vessel strong, and well equipp'd for war.
The secret ship with chosen friends he stor'd;
And bent to die, or conquer, went aboard.
Ambush'd he lay behind the Cyprian shore,
Waiting the sail that all his wishes bore;
Nor long expected, for the following tide
Sent out the hostile ship and beauteous bride.

To Rhodes the rival bark directly steer'd,
When Cymon sudden at her back appear'd,
And stopp'd her flight: then standing on his prow,

In haughty terms he thus defy'd the foe:
Or strike your sails at summons, or prepare
To prove the last extremities of war.

Thus warn'd, the Rhodians for the fight provide;

Already were the vessels side by side,
These obstinate to save, and those to seize the bride.

But Cymon soon his crooked grapples cast,
Which with tenacious hold his toes embrac'd,
And, arm'd with sword and shield, amid the press he pass'd.

Fiercely was the fight, but hastening to his prey,
By force the furious lover freed his way:
Himself alone dispers'd the Rhodian crew,
The weak disdain'd, the valiant overthrew;
Cheap conquest for his following friends re-
main'd,

He reap'd the field, and they but only glean'd.
His victory confess'd, the foes retreat,
And cast their weapons at the victor's feet.
Whom thus he cheer'd: O Rhodian youth, I fought

For love alone, nor other booty sought:
Your lives are safe; your vessel I resign.
Yours be your own, restoring what is mine:
In Iphigene I claim my rightful due,
Robb'd by my rival, and detain'd by you:
Your Pasimond a lawless bargain drove,
The parent could not sell the daughter's love;
Or if he could, my love disdains the laws,
And like a king by conquest gains his cause:
Where arms take place, all other pleas are vain,
Love taught me force, and force shall love maintain.

You, what by strength you could not keep, re-
And at an easy ransom buy your peace

Fear on the conquer'd side soon sign'd the accord,

And Iphigene to Cymon was restor'd:
While to his arms the blushing bride he took;
To seeming sadness she compos'd her look;

As if by force subjected to his will,
Though pleas'd, dissembling, and a woman still.
And, for she wept, he wip'd her falling tears,
And pray'd her to dismiss her empty fears;
For yours I am, he said, and have deserv'd
Your love much better whom so long I serv'd,
Than he to whom your formal father tied
Your vows, and sold a slave, not sent a bride.
Thus while he spoke, he seiz'd the willing prey,
As Paris bore the Spartan spouse away.
Faintly she scream'd, and ev'n her eyes confess'd

She rather would be thought, than was distress'd.

Who now exults but Cymon in his mind? }
Vain hopes and empty joys of human kind, }
Proud of the present, to the future blind! }
Secure of fate, while Cymon ploughs the sea,
And steers to Candy with his conquer'd prey, Scarce the third glass of measur'd hours was
run,

When like a fiery meteor sunk the sun;
The promise of a storm; the shifting gales
Forsake, by fits, and fill, the flagging sails;
Hoarse murmurs of the main from far were
heard,

And night came on, not by degrees prepar'd,
But all at once: at once the winds arise,
The thunders roll, the fork lightning flies.
In vain the master issues out commands,
In vain the trembling sailors ply their hands:
The tempest unforeseen prevents their care,
And from the first they labour in despair.
The giddy ship betwixt the winds and tides,
Forc'd back and forwards, in a circle rides,
Stunn'd with the different blows; then shoots
again,

Till counterbuff'd, she stops, and sleeps again.
Not more aghast the proud archangel fell,
Plung'd from the height of heaven to deepest
hell,

Than stood the lover of his love possess'd,
Now curs'd the more, the more he had been bless'd;

More anxious for her danger than his own,
Death he defies; but would be lost alone.

Sad Iphigene to womanish complaints
Adds pious prayers, and wearies all the saints;
Ev'n, if she could, her love she would repent,
But since she cannot, dreads the punishment:
Her forfeit faith, and Pasimond betray'd,
Are ever present, and her crime upbraid.
She blames herself, nor blames her lover less,
Augments her anger, as her fears increase:
From her own back the burden would remove,
And lays the load on his ungovern'd love,
Which interposing durst, in heaven's despite,
Invade, and violate another's right:

The powers incens'd a while deferr'd his pain,
And made him master of his vows in vain:

But soon they punish'd his presumptuous
pride; }
That for his daring enterprize she died; }
Who rather not resisted, than complied.

Then impotent of mind, with alter'd sense,
She hugg'd the offender, and forgave the offence,

Sex to the last : mean-time with sails declin'd
The wandering vessel drove before the wind ;
Toss'd and retoss'd, aloft, and then alow,
Nor port they seek, nor certain course they
know,

But every moment wait the coming blow.
Thus blindly driven, by breaking day they view'd

The land before them, and their fears renew'd ;
The land was welcome, but the tempest bore
The threaten'd ship against a rocky shore.

A winding bay was near ; to this they bent,
And just escap'd ; their force already spent :
Secure from storms, and panting from the sea,
The land unknown at leisure they survey ;
And saw (but soon their sickly sight withdrew)
The rising towers of Rhodes at distant view ;
And curs'd the hostile shore of Pasimond, Sav'd from the seas, and shipwreck'd on the
ground.

The frighted sailors tried their strength in vain,

To turn the stern, and tempt the stormy main ;
But the stiff wind withstood the labouring oar,
And forced them forward on the fatal shore !
The crooked keel now bites the Rhodian strand,
And the ship moor'd constrains the crew to land :

Yet still they might be safe, because unknown,
But as ill fortune seldom comes alone,
The vessel they dismiss'd was driven before,
Already shelter'd on their native shore ;
Known each, they know ; but each with change
of cheer ;

The vanquish'd side exults ; the victors fear ;
Not them but theirs, made prisoners ere they
fight,

Despairing conquest, and depriv'd of flight.

The country rings around with loud alarms,
And raw in fields the rude militia swarms ;
Mouths without hands ; maintain'd at vast expence,

In peace a charge, in war a weak defence :
Stout once a month they march, a blustering
band,

And ever, but in times of need, at hand ;
This was the morn when, issuing on the guard,
Drawn up in rank and file they stood prepar'd
Of seeming arms to make a short essay,
Then hasten to be drunk, the business of the
day.

The cowards would have fled, but that they knew

Themselves so many, and their foes so few ;
But crowding on, the last the first impel :
Till overborne with weight the Cyprians fell.
Cymon enslav'd, who first the war begun,
And Iphigene once more is lost and won.

Deep in a dungeon was the captive cast,
Depriv'd of day, and held in fetters fast :
His life was only spar'd at their request,

Whom taken he so nobly had releas'd :

But Iphigenia was the ladies' care,
Each in their turn address'd to treat the fair ;
While Pasimond and his the nuptial feast prepare.

Her secret soul to Cymon was inclin'd,
But she must suffer what her fates assign'd :
So passive is the church of womankind.
What worse to Cymon could his fortune deal,
Roll'd to the lowest spoke of all her wheel ?
It rested to dismiss the downward weight,
Or raise him upward to his former height ;
The latter pleas'd, and love (concern'd the most)
Prepar'd the amends, for what by love he lost.

The sire of Pasimond had left a son,
Though younger, yet for courage early known,
Ormisda call'd, to whom by promise ti'd,
A Rhodian beauty was the destin'd bride ;
Cassandra was her name, above the rest
Renown'd for birth, with fortune amply bless'd.
Lysimachus, who rul'd the Rhodian state,
Was then by choice their annual magistrate :
He lov'd Cassandra too with equal fire,
But fortune had not favour'd his desire ;
Cross'd by her friends, by her not disapprov'd,
Nor yet prefer'd, or like Ormisda lov'd :
So stood the affair : some little hope remain'd,
That should his rival chance to lose, he gain'd.

Mean time young Pasimond his marriage
press'd,

Ordain'd the nuptial day, prepar'd the feast ;
And frugally resolv'd (the charge to shun,
Which would be double should he wed alone)
To join his brother's bridal with his own.

Lysimachus, oppress'd with mortal grief,
Receiv'd the news, and studi'd quick relief :
The fatal day approach'd ; if force were us'd,
The magistrate his public trust abus'd ;
To justice liable, as law requir'd ;
For when his office ceas'd, his power expir'd :
While power remain'd, the means were in his hand

By force to seize, and then forsake the land :
Betwixt extremes he knew not how to move,
A slave to fame, but more a slave to love :
Restraining others, yet himself not free,
Made impotent by power, debas'd by dignity.
Both sides he weigh'd : but after much debate,
The man prevail'd above the magistrate.

Love never fails to master what he finds,
But works a different way in different minds,
The fool enlightens, and the wise he blinds.
This youth proposing to possess and 'scape,
Began in murder, to conclude in rape :
Unprais'd by me, though heaven sometimes may bless

An impious act with undeserv'd success :

The great it seems are privileg'd alone

To punish all injustice but their own.

But here I stop, not daring to proceed,

Yet blush to flatter an unrighteous deed :

For crimes are but permitted, not decreed.

Resolv'd on force, his wit the prætor bent,
To find the means that might secure the event ;

Nor long he labour'd, for his lucky thought
In captive Cymon found the friend he sought.
The example pleas'd: the cause and crime the same:

An injur'd lover, and a ravish'd dame.
How much he durst he knew by what he dar'd, }
The less he had to lose, the less he car'd
To manage loathsome life when love was the reward.

'This ponder'd well, and fix'd on his intent,
In depth of night he for the prisoner sent;
In secret sent the public view to shun,
Then with a sober smile he thus begun:
The powers above, who bounteously bestow
Their gifts and graces on mankind below,
Yet prove our merit first, nor blindly give
To such as are not worthy to receive:
For valour and for virtue they provide
Their due reward, but first they must be tri'd:
These fruitful seeds within your mind they sow'd;

'Twas yours to improve the talent they be-
stow'd:

'They gave you to be born of noble kind,
'They gave you love to lighten up your mind,
And purge the grosser parts; they gave you care
To please, and courage to deserve the fair.

Thus far they tri'd you, and by proof they found

The grain intrusted in a grateful ground:
But still the great experiment remain'd,
'They offer'd you to lose the prize you gain'd;
That you might learn the gift was theirs alone:
And when restor'd, to them the blessing own.
Restor'd it soon will be; the means prepar'd,
The difficulty smooth'd, the danger shar'd:

Be but yourself, the care to me resign,
Then Iphigene is yours, Cassandra mine.
Your rival Pasimond pursues your life,
Impatient to revenge his ravish'd wife,
But yet not his; to-morrow is behind,
And love our fortunes in one band has join'd:
Two brothers are our foes, Ormisda mine,
As much declar'd as Pasimond is thine:

To-morrow must their common vows be ti'd:
With love to friend, and fortune for our guide,
Let both resolve to die, or each redeem a
bride.

Right I have none, nor hast thou much to plead;

'Tis force, when done, must justify the deed:
Our task perform'd, we next prepare for flight:
And let the losers talk in vain of right:
We with the fair will sail before the wind,
If they are griev'd, I leave the laws behind.
Speak thy resolves: if now thy courage droop,
Despair in prison, and abandon hope;
But if thou dar'st in arms thy love regain,
(For liberty without thy love were vain;)
Then second my design to seize the prey,
Or lead to second rape, for well thou know'st
the way.

Said Cymon overjoy'd, Do thou propose
The means to fight, and only shew the foes:

For from the first, when love had fir'd my mind,
Resolv'd I left the care of life behind.

To this the bold Lysimachus reply'd,
Let heaven be neuter, and the sword decide;
The spousals are prepar'd, already play
The minstrels, and provoke the tardy day:
By this the brides are wak'd, their grooms are dress'd;

All Rhodes is summon'd to the nuptial feast, }
All but myself, the sole unbidden guest.
Unbidden though I am, I will be there,
And, join'd by thee, intend to joy the fair.

Now hear the rest; when day resigns the
light,

And cheerful torches gild the jolly night,
Be ready at my call; my chosen few
With arms administer'd shall aid thy crew.
Then entering unexpected will we seize
Our destin'd prey, from men dissolv'd in ease;
By wine disabled, unprepar'd for fight:
And hastening to the seas, suborn our flight:
The seas are ours, for I command the fort,
A ship well mann'd expects us in the port:
If they, or if their friends, the prize contest,
Death shall attend the man who dares resist.

It pleas'd: the prisoner to his hold retir'd, }
His troop with equal emulation fir'd,
All fix'd to fight, and all their wonted work
requir'd.

The sun arose; the streets were throng'd around,
The palace open'd, and the posts were crown'd.
The double bridegroom at the door attends
The expected spouse, and entertains the friends;
They meet, they lead to church, the priests invoke

The powers, and feed the flames with fragrant smoke.

This done, they feast, and at the close of night }
By kindled torches vary their delight,
These lead the lively dance, and those the brimming bowls invite.

Now, at the appointed place and hour as-
sign'd,

With souls resolv'd the ravishers were join'd:
Three bands are form'd; the first is sent before
To favour the retreat, and guard the shore;
The second at the palace-gate is plac'd,
And up the lofty stairs ascend the last:
A peaceful troop they seem with shining vests.
But coats of mail beneath secure their breasts.

Dauntless they enter, Cymon at their head,
And find the feast renew'd, the table spread:
Sweet voices, mix'd with instrumental sounds,
Ascend the vaulted roof, the vaulted roof rebounds.

When, like the harpies, rushing through the hall

The sudden troop appears, the tables fall,
Their smoking load is on the pavement thrown;
Each ravisher prepares to seize his own:
The brides, invaded with a rude embrace,
Shriek out for aid, confusion fills the place.
Quick to redeem the prey their plighted lords
Advance, the palace gleams with shining swords.

But late is all defence, and succour vain ;
The rape is made, the ravishers remain :
Two sturdy slaves were only sent before
To bear the purchas'd prize in safety to the shore.

The troop retires, the lovers close the rear,
With forward faces not confessing fear :
Backward they move, but scorn their pace to mend ;
Then seek the stairs, and with slow haste descend.

Fierce Pasimond, their passage to prevent,
Thrust full on Cymon's back in his descent,
The blade return'd unbath'd, and to the handle bent.

Stout Cymon soon remounts, and cleft in two
His rival's head with one descending blow :
And as the next in rank Ormida stood,
He turn'd the point : the sword inur'd to blood
Bor'd his unguarded breast, which pour'd a purple flood.

With vow'd revenge the gathering crowd pursues,

The ravishers turn head, the fight renews ;
The hall is heap'd with corpse ; the sprinkled gore.

Besmears the walls, and floats the marble floor.
Dispers'd at length the drunken squadron flies,
The victors to their vessel bear the prize ;
And hear behind loud groans, and lamentable cries.

The crew with merry shouts their anchors weigh.

Then ply their oars, and brush the buxom sea.
While troops of gather'd Rhodians crowd the key.

What should the people do when left alone ?
The governor and government are gone,
The public wealth to foreign parts convey'd ;
Some troops disbanded, and the rest unpaid.
Rhodes is the sovereign of the sea no more ;
Their ships unrigg'd, and spent their naval store ;

They neither could defend, nor can pursue,
But grin'd their teeth, and cast a helpless view :

In vain with darts a distant war they try,
Short, and more short, the missive weapons fly.
Meanwhile the ravishers their crimes enjoy,
And flying sails and sweeping oars employ :
The cliffs of Rhodes in little space are lost,
Jove's isle they seek, nor Jove denies his coast.

In safety landed on the Candian shore,
With generous wines their spirits they restore :
There Cymon with his Rhodian friend resides,
Both court, and wed at once the willing brides.
A war ensues, the Cretans own their cause,
Stiff to defend their hospitable laws :
Both parties lose by turns ; and neither wins,
Till peace propounded by a truce begins.
The kindred of the slain forgive the deed,
But a short exile must for shew precure :
The term expir'd, from Candia they remove,
And happy each, at home, enjoys his love.

ALEXANDER'S FEAST ; OR THE POWER OF MUSIC ;

AN ODE,

IN HONOUR OF ST. CECILIA'S DAY.

I.

'Twas at the royal feast, for Persia won

By Philip's warlike son :

Aloft in awful state

The godlike hero sate

On his imperial throne :

His valiant peers were plac'd around ;

Their brows with roses and with myrtles bound :

(So should desert in arms be crown'd.)

The lovely Thais, by his side,

Sate like a blooming Eastern bride

In flower of youth and beauty's pride.

Happy, happy, happy pair !

None but the brave,

None but the brave,

None but the brave deserves the fair.

Chorus.

Happy, happy, happy pair !

None but the brave,

None but the brave,

None but the brave deserves the fair.

II.

Timotheus, plac'd on high

Amid the tuneful quire,

With flying fingers touch'd the lyre :

The trembling notes ascend the sky,

And heavenly joys inspire.

The song began from Jove,

Who left his blissful seats above,

(Such is the power of mighty love.)

A dragon's fiery form belied the god :

Sublime on radiant spires he rode,

When he to fair Olympia press'd :

And while he sought her snowy breast :

Then, round her slender waist he curl'd,

And stamp'd an image of himself, a sovereign of the world.

The listening crowd admire the lofty sound,

A present deity, they shout around :

A present deity, the vaulted roofs rebound :

With ravish'd ears

The monarch hears,

Assumes the god,

Affects to nod,

And seems to shake the spheres.

Chorus.

With ravish'd ears

The monarch hears,

Assumes the god,

Affects to nod,

And seems to shake the spheres.

III.

The praise of Bacchus then the sweet musician sung,

Of Bacchus ever fair and ever young :

The jolly god in triumph comes ;

Sound the trumpets ; beat the drums ;

Flush'd with a purple grace

He shews his honest face :

Now give the hautboys breath; he comes, he comes.

Bacchus, ever fair and young,
Drinking joys did first ordain;
Bacchus' blessings are a treasure,
Drinking is the soldier's pleasure:
Rich the treasure,
Sweet the pleasure,
Sweet is pleasure after pain.

Chorus.

Bacchus' blessings are a treasure,
Drinking is the soldier's pleasure:
Rich the treasure,
Sweet the pleasure,
Sweet is pleasure after pain.

iv.

Sooth'd with the sound the king grew vain;
Fought all his battles o'er again:
And thrice he routed all his foes; and thrice he slew the slain.

The master saw the madne'ss rise;
His glowing cheeks, his ardent eyes;
And, while he heaven and earth defied,
Chang'd his hand, and cheek'd his pride.

He chose a mournful muse
Soft pity to infuse:
He sung Darius great and good,

By too severe a fate,
Fallen, fallen, fallen, fallen,
Fallen from his high estate.

And weltring in his blood;
Deserted, at his utmost need,
By those his former bounty fed;
On the bare earth expos'd he lies,
With not a friend to close his eyes.

With downcast looks the joyless victor sate,
Revolving in his alter'd soul
The various turns of chance below;
And, now and then, a sigh he stole;
And tears began to flow.

Chorus.

Revolving in his alter'd soul
The various turns of chance below;
And, now and then, a sigh he stole;
And tears began to flow.

v.

The mighty master smil'd to see
That love was in the next degree:
'Twas but a kindred-sound to move,
For pity melts the mind to love.
Softly sweet in Lydian measures,
Soon he sooth'd his soul to pleasures.

War, he sung, is toil and trouble;
Honour, but an empty bubble;
Never ending, still beginning,
Fighting still, and still destroying:
If the world be worth thy winning,
Think, O think it worth enjoying:
Lovely Thais sits beside thee.
Take the good the gods provide thee.
The many rend the skies with loud applause;
So Love was crown'd, but Music won the cause.
The prince, unable to conceal his pain,

Gaz'd on the fair

Who caus'd his care,
And sigh'd and look'd, sigh'd and look'd,
Sigh'd and look'd, and sigh'd again:
At length, with love and wine at once oppress'd,
The vanquish'd victor sunk upon her breast.

Chorus.

The prince, unable to conceal his pain,
Gaz'd on the fair
Who caus'd his care,
And sigh'd and look'd, sigh'd and look'd,
Sigh'd and look'd, and sigh'd again:
At length, with love and wine at once oppress'd,
The vanquish'd victor sunk upon her breast.

vi.

Now strike the golden lyre again:
A louder yet, and yet a louder strain.
Break his bands of sleep asunder,
And rouse him, like a rattling peal of thunder.
Hark, hark, the horrid sound
Has rais'd up his head:
As awak'd from the dead,
And amaz'd, he stares around.
Revenge, revenge, Timotheus cries,
See the furies arise:
See the snakes that they rear,
How they hiss in their hair,
And the sparkles that flash from their eyes!
Behold a ghastly band,
Each a torch in his hand!
Those are Grecian ghosts, that in battle were slain,

And unbury'd remain
Inglorious on the plain:
Give the vengeance due
To the valiant crew.
Behold how they toss their torches on high,
How they point to the Persian abodes,
And glittering temples of their hostile gods.
The princes applaud, with a furious joy;
And the king seiz'd a flambeau with zeal to destroy;

Thais led the way,
To light him to his prey,
And, like another Helen, fir'd another Troy.

Chorus.

And the king seiz'd a flambeau with zeal to destroy;
Thais led the way,
To light him to his prey,
And, like another Helen, fir'd another Troy.

vii.

Thus, long ago,
Ere heaving bellows learn'd to blow,
While organs yet were mute
Timotheus, to his breathing flute,
And sounding lyre,
Could swell the soul to rage, or kindle soft desire.
At last divine Cecilia came,
Inventress of the vocal frame;
The sweet enthusiast, from her sacred store,
Enlarg'd the former narrow bounds,
And added length to solemn sounds,

With nature's mother-wit, and arts unknown
before.

Let old Timotheus yield the prize,
Or both divide the crown ;
He rais'd a mortal to the skies ;
She drew an angel down.

Grand Chorus.

At last, divine Cecilia came,
Inventress of the vocal frame ;
The sweet enthusiast, from her sacred store,
Enlarg'd the former narrow bounds,
And added length to solemn sounds,
With nature's mother-wit, and arts unknown
before.

Let old Timotheus yield the prize,
Or both divide the crown ;
He rais'd a mortal to the skies ;
She drew an angel down.

EPISTLE THE TENTH.

TO MY DEAR FRIEND, MR. CONGREVE, ON HIS COMEDY CALLED "THE DOUBLE DEALER."

WELL then, the promis'd hour is come at last,
The present age of wit obscures the past :
Strong were our sires, and as they fought they writ,

Conquering with force of arms, and dint of wit :
Theirs was the giant race, before the flood :
And thus, when Charles return'd our empire
stood.

Like Janus he the stubborn soil manur'd,
With rules of husbandry the rankness cur'd ;
Tam'd us to manners, when the stage was rude ;
And boist'rous English wit with art indued.
Our age was cultivated thus at length ;
But what we gain'd in skill we lost in strength.
Our builders were with want of genius curst ;
The second temple was not like the first :
Till you, the best Vitruvius, come at length ;
Our beauties equal, but excel our strength.
Firm Doric pillars found your solid base :
The fair Corinthian crowns the higher space :
Thus all below is strength, and all above is grace.

In easy dialogue is Fletcher's praise ;
He mov'd the mind, but had not power to raise.
Great Jonson did by strength of judgment
please ;

Yet doubling Fletcher's force, he wants his
ease.

In differing talents both adorn'd their age ;
One for the study, t'other for the stage.
But both to Congreve justly shall submit,
One match'd in judgment, both o'ermatch'd in
wit.

In him all beauties of this age we see,
Etherege his courtship, Southern's purity,
The satire, wit, and strength of manly Wycherly.

All this in blooming youth you have atchieved :
Nor are your foil'd contemporaries griev'd.

So much the sweetness of your manners move,
We cannot envy you, because we love.

Fabius might joy in Scipio, when he saw
A beardless consul made against the law,
And join his suffrage to the votes of Rome ;
Though he with Hannibal was overcome.
Thus old Romano bow'd to Raphael's fame,
And scholar to the youth he taught became.

O that your brows my laurel had sustain'd !
Well had I been depos'd, if you had reign'd :
The father had descended for the son ;
For only you are lineal to the throne.
Thus, when the state one Edward did depose,
A greater Edward in his room arose.
But now, not I, but poetry is curs'd ;
For Tom the second reigns like Tom the first.
But let them not mistake my patron's part,
Nor call his charity their own desert.
Yet this I prophesy ; thou shalt be seen,
(Though with some short parenthesis between)
High on the throne of wit, and, seated there,
Not mine, that's little, but thy laurel wear.
Thy first attempt an early promise made ;
That early promise this has more than paid.
So bold, yet so judiciously you dare,
That your least praise is to be regular.

Time, place, and action, may with pains be
wrought ;
But genius must be born, and never can be taught.

This is your portion ; this your native store ;
Heaven, that but once was prodigal before,
To Shakespear gave as much ; she could not give him more.

Maintain your post : That's all the fame you
need ;

For 'tis impossible you should proceed.
Already I am worn with cares and age,
And just abandoning the ungrateful stage :
Unprofitably kept at Heaven's expence,
I live a rent-charge on his providence :
But you, whom every muse and grace adorn,
Whom I foresee to better fortune born,
Be kind to my remains ; and O defend,
Against your judgment, your departed friend !
Let not the insulting foe my fame pursue,
But shade those laurels which descend to you :
And take for tribute what these lines express :
You merit more ; nor could my love do less.

EPILOGUE TO THE SECOND PART OF THE CONQUEST OF GRANADA.

THEY, who have best succeeded on the stage,
Have still conformed their genius to their age.
Thus Jonson did mechanic humour show,
When men were dull, and conversation low.
Then comedy was faultless, but 'twas coarse :
Cobb's tankard was a jest, and Otter's horse.
And, as their comedy, their love was mean ;
Except, by chance, in some one labour'd scene,
Which must atone for an ill-written play,
They rose, but at their height could seldom stay.

Fame then was cheap, and the first comer sped ;
And they have kept it since, by being dead.
But, were they now to write, when critics weigh
Each line, and every word, throughout a play,
None of them, no, not Jonson in his height,
Could pass, without allowing grains for weight.
Think it not envy, that these truths are told ;
Our poet's not malicious, though he's bold.
'Tis not to brand them, that their faults are shown,

But, by their errors, to excuse his own.
If love and honour now are higher rais'd,
'Tis not the poet, but the age is prais'd.
Wit's now arriv'd to a more high degree ;
Our native language more refin'd and free.
Our ladies and our men now speak more wit
In conversation, than those poets writ.
Then, one of these is, consequently, true ;
That what this poet writes comes short of you,
And imitates you ill (which most he fears,)
Or else his writing is not worse than theirs.
Yet, though you judge (as sure the critics will),
That some before him writ with greater skill,
In this one praise he has their fame surpass,
To please an age more gallant than the last.

PROLOGUE TO AURENGZEBE.

OUR author, by experience, finds it true,
'Tis much more hard to please himself than you ;
And out of no feigned modesty, this day
Damns his laborious trifle of a play :
Not that it's worse than what before he writ,
But he has now another taste of wit ;
And, to confess a truth, though out of time,
Grows weary of his long-lov'd mistress, Rhime.
Passion's too fierce to be in fetters bound,
And nature flies him like enchanted ground :
What verse can do, he has performed in this,
Which he presumes the most correct of his ;
But spite of all his pride, a secret shame
Invades his breast at Shakspeare's sacred name :
Aw'd when he hears his godlike Romans rage,
He, in a just despair, would quit the stage ;
And to an age less polish'd, more unskill'd,
Does, with disdain, the foremost honours yield.
As with the greater dead he dares not strive,
He would not match his verse with those who live :

Let him retire, betwixt two ages cast,
The first of this, and hindmost of the last.
A losing gamester, let him sneak away ;
He bears no ready money from the play.
The fate, which governs poets, thought it fit
He should not raise his fortunes by his wit.
The clergy thrive, and the litigious bar ;
Dull heroes fatten with the spoils of war :
All southern vices, heaven be praised, are here ;
But wit's a luxury you think too dear.
When you to cultivate the plant are loth,
'Tis a shrewd sign 'twas never of your growth ;
And wit in northern climates will not blow,
Except, like orange-trees, 'tis hous'd from snow.

There needs no care to put a playhouse down,
'Tis the most desert place of all the town :
We and our neighbours, to speak proudly, are,
Like monarchs, ruined with expensive war ;
While, like wise English, unconcern'd you sit,
And see us play the tragedy of wit.

UNDER MILTON'S PICTURE, BEFORE HIS
PARADISE LOST.

THREE Poets in three distant ages born,
Greece, Italy, and England did adorn.
The first, in loftiness of thought surpass'd ;
The next, in majesty ; in both the last.
The force of nature could no further go ;
To make a third, she join'd the former two.

ALL FOR LOVE ; OR, THE WORLD WELL LOST.

SCENE, Alexandria.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—The Temple of Isis.

Serapion, and Myris, Priests of Isis, discovered.
SER. PORTENTS and prodigies are grown so frequent,
That they have lost their name. Our fruitful
Nile

Flowed, ere the wonted season, with a torrent
So unexpected, and so wondrous fierce,
That the wild deluge overtook the haste
Even of the hinds, that watched it. Men and beasts

Were borne above the tops of trees, that grew
On the utmost margin of the water-mark :
Then with so swift an ebb the flood drove back-
ward,

It slipt from underneath the scaly herd :
Here monstrous phocæ panted on the shore ;
Forsaken dolphins there, with their broad tails,
Lay lashing the departing waves ; hard by them
Sea-horses, floundering in the slimy mud,
Tossed up their heads, and dashed the ooze about
them.

Enter Alexas behind them.

Myr. Avert these omens, Heaven !

Ser. Last night, between the hours of twelve and one,

In a lone aisle of the temple while I walked,
A whirlwind rose, that with a violent blast,

Shook all the dome ; the doors around me clapt ;
 The iron wicket, that defends the vault,
 Where the long race of Ptolemies is laid,
 Burst open, and disclosed the mighty dead :
 From out each monument, in order placed,
 An armed ghost starts up ; the boy-king last
 Reared his inglorious head : a peal of groans
 Then followed, and a lamentable voice
 Cried, ' Egypt is no more.' My blood ran back,
 My shaking knees against each other knocked,
 On the cold pavement down I fell entranced,
 And so unfinished left the horrid scene !

Alex. And dreamt you this, or did invent the story, [Shewing himself.
 To frighten our Egyptian boys withal,
 And train them up betimes in fear of priesthood ?

Ser. My lord, I saw you not,
 Nor meant my words should reach your ears ;
 but what
 I uttered was most true.

Alex. A foolish dream,
 Bred from the fumes of indigested feasts
 And holy luxury.

Ser. I know my duty :
 This goes no farther.

Alex. 'Tis not fit it should,
 Nor would the times now bear it, were it true.

All southern from yon hills the Roman camp
 Hangs o'er us black and threatening, like a storm
 Just breaking on our heads.

Ser. Our faint Egyptians pray for Antony,
 But in their servile hearts they own Octavius.

Myr. Why, then, does Antony dream out his hours,

And tempts not fortune for a noble day,
 Which might redeem what Actium lost ?

Alex. He thinks 'tis past recovery.

Ser. Yet the foe
 Seems not to press the siege.

Alex. Oh, there's the wonder.
 Mecænas and Agrippa, who can most
 With Cæsar, are his foes. His wife, Octavia,
 Driven from his house, solicits her revenge ;
 And Dolabella, who was once his friend,
 Upon some private grudge now seek his ruin ;
 Yet still war seems on either side to sleep.

Ser. 'Tis strange, that Antony, for some days past,

Has not beheld the face of Cleopatra,
 But here in Isis' temple lives retired,
 And makes his heart a prey to black despair.

Alex. 'Tis true ; and we much fear he hopes by absence,
 To cure his mind of love.

Ser. If he be vanquished,
 Or make his peace, Egypt is doomed to be
 A Roman province, and our plenteous harvests
 Must then redeem the scarceness of their soil.
 While Antony stood firm, our Alexandria
 Rivalled proud Rome (dominion's other seat),
 And fortune striding, like a vast Colossus,
 Could fix an equal foot of empire here.

Alex. Had I my wish, these tyrants of all nature,

Who lord it o'er mankind, should perish, perish,
 Each by the other's sword ; but since our will
 Is lamely followed by our power, we must Depend on one, with him to rise or fall.

Ser. How stands the queen affected ?

Alex. Oh, she doats,
 She doats, Serapion, on this vanquished man,
 And winds herself about his mighty ruins,
 Whom, would she yet forsake, yet yield him up,
 This hunted prey, to his pursuer's hands,
 She might preserve us all : but 'tis in vain—
 This changes my designs, this blasts my counsels,
 And makes me use all means to keep him here,
 Whom I could wish divided from her arms
 Far as the earth's deep centre. Well, you know
 The state of things : no more of your ill omens
 And black prognostics ; labour to confirm
 The people's hearties.

Enter Ventidius, talking aside with a gentleman of Antony's.

Ser. These Romans will o'erhear us.
 But who's that stranger ? by his warlike port,
 His fierce demeanor, and erected look,
 He is of no vulgar note.

Alex. Oh, 'tis Ventidius,
 Our emperor's great lieutenant in the east,
 Who first shev'd Rome, that Parthia could be conquered.

When Antony returned from Syria last,
 He left this man to guard the Roman frontiers.

Ser. You seem to know him well.

Alex. Too well. I saw him in Cilicia first,
 When Cleopatra there met Antony :
 A mortal foe he was to us and Egypt.
 But let me witness to the worth I hate ;
 A braver Roman never drew a sword :
 Firm to his prince, but as a friend, not slave :
 He ne'er was of his pleasures, but presides
 O'er all his cooler hours, and morning counsels :
 In short, the plainness, fierceness, rugged virtue
 Of an old true stamp'd Roman lives in him.
 His coming bodes, I know not what, of ill
 To our affairs. Withdraw, to mark him better,
 And I'll acquaint you why I sought you here,
 And what is our present work.

[They withdraw to a corner of the stage, and Ventidius, with the other, comes forward to the front.]

Vent. Not see him, say you ?
 I say I must, and will.

Gent. He has commanded,
 On pain of death, none should approach his presence.

Vent. I bring him news, will raise his drooping spirits,
 Give him new life.

Gent. He sees not Cleopatra.

Vent. Would he had never seen her !

Gent. He eats not, drinks not, sleeps not, has no use

Of any thing but thought ; or if he talks,
 'Tis to himself, and then 'tis perfect raving ;

Then he defies the world, and bids it pass.
Sometimes he gnaws his lips, and curses loud
The boy Octavius; then he draws his mouth
Into a scornful smile, and cries, 'Take all!
The world's not worth my care.'

Vent. Just, just his nature.

Virtue is his path, but sometimes 'tis too narrow
For his vast soul, and then he starts out wide,
And bounds into a vice, that bears him far
From his first course, and plunges him in ills:
But when his danger makes him find his fault,
Quick to observe, and full of sharp remorse,
He censures eagerly his own misdeeds,
Judging himself with malice to himself,
And not forgiving what as man he did.
Because his other parts are more than man.
He must not thus be lost.

[Alexas and the priests come forward.]

Alex. You have your full instructions; now advance;

Proclaim your orders loudly.

Ser. Romans! Egyptians! hear the queen's command.

Thus Cleopatra bids: Let labour cease;
To pomp and triumphs give this happy day,
That gave the world a lord; 'tis Antony's.
Live Antony, and Cleopatra live!
Be this the general voice sent up to heaven,
And every public place repeat this echo.

Vent. Fine pageantry! [Aside.]

Ser. Set out before your doors

The images of all your sleeping fathers,
With laurels crowned; with laurels wreath
your posts,
And strew with flowers the pavement; let the priest

Do present sacrifice, pour out the wine,
And call the gods to join with you in gladness.

Vent. Curse on the tongue that bids this general joy!

Can they be friends to Antony, who revel
When Antony's in danger? Hide, for shame,
You Romans, your great grandsires' images,
For fear their souls should animate their marbles,
To blush at their degenerate progeny.

Alex. A love, which knows no bounds to Antony,
Would mark the day with honours; when all
Heaven

Labour'd for him, when each propitious star
Stood wakeful in his orb to watch that hour,
And shed his better influence: her own birth-day
Our queen neglected, like a vulgar fate,
That passed obscurely by.

Vent. Would it had slept
Divided far from his, till some remote
And future age had called it out to ruin
Some other prince, not him!

Alex. Your emperor,
Tho' grown unkind, would be more gentle than
To upbraid my queen for loving him too well.

Vent. Does the mute sacrifice upbraid the priest?

He knows him not his executioner.

Oh! she has decked his ruin with her love,
Led him in golden bands to gaudy slaughter,
And made perdition pleasing: she has left him
The blank of what he was.

I tell thee, eunuch, she has quite unmanned
him:

Can any Roman see and know him now,
Thus altered from the lord of half mankind,
Unbent, unsinewed, made a woman's toy,
Shrunk from the vast extent of all his honours,
And cramp'd within a corner of the world?
Oh, Antony!

Thou bravest soldier, and thou best of friends!
Bounteous as nature, next to nature's God!
Couldst thou but make new worlds, so wouldst
thou give them,

As bounty were thy being. Rough in battle
As the first Romans, when they went to war,
Yet, after victory, more pitiful

Than all their praying virgins left at home!

Alex. Would you could add to those more shining virtues,

His truth to her, who loves him.

Vent. Would I could not!

But wherefore waste I precious hours with thee?
Thou art her darling mischief, her chief engine,
Antony's other fate. Go tell thy queen,
Ventidius is arrived to end her charms.

Let your Egyptian timbrels play alone,
Nor mix effeminate sounds with Roman trumpets.

You dare not fight for Antony; go pray,
And keep your cowards' holiday in temples.

[Exeunt Alex. Serap.]

Re-enter the Gentleman of Marc Antony.

2 Gent. The emperor approaches, and commands,

On pain of death, that none presume to stay.

1 Gent. I dare not disobey him.

[Going out with the other.]

Vent. Well, I dare:

But I'll observe him first, unseen, and find
Which way his humour drives: the rest I'll venture.

[Withdraws.]

Enter Antony, walking with a disturbed motion before he speaks.

Ant. They tell me, 'tis my birth-day; and I'll keep it

With double pomp of sadness:

'Tis what the day deserves, which gave me
breath.

Why was I raised the meteor of the world,
Hung in the skies, and blazing as I travelled,
Till all my fires were spent, and then cast downward,

To be trod out by Cæsar?

Vent. [Aside] On my soul
'Tis mournful, wondrous mournful!

Ant. Count thy gains

Now, Antony; wouldst thou be born for this?
Glutton of fortune, thy devouring youth
Has starved thy wanting age.

Vent. [Aside] How sorrow shakes him!

So, now the tempest tears him up by the roots,
And on the ground extends the noble ruin.

Ant. [Having thrown himself down] Lie there,
thou shadow of an emperor ;

The place, thou preseat on thy mother earth,
Is all thy empire now : now it contains thee ;
Some few days hence, and then 'twill be too
large,

When thou art contracted in thy narrow urn,
Shrunk to a few cold ashes ; then Octavia,
(For Cleopatra will not live to see it)
Octavia then will have thee all her own,
And bear thee in her widowed hand to Cæsar ;
Cæsar will weep, the crocodile will weep,
To see his rival of the universe
Lie still and peaceful there. I'll think no more of it.

Give me some music ; look, that it be sad.
I'll soothe my melancholy, till I swell
And burst myself with sighing— [Soft music.]
'Tis somewhat to my humour. Stay, I fancy
I'm now turned wild, a commoner of nature ;
Of all forsaken, and forsaking all,
Live in a shady forest's sylvan scene,
Stretched at my length beneath some blasted
oak,

I lean my head upon the mossy bark,
And look just of a piece as I grew from it :
My uncombed locks, matted like mis-letoe,
Hang o'er my hoary face ; a murmuring brook
Runs at my foot—

Vent. Methinks I fancy
Myself there too.

Ant. The herd come jumping by me,
And fearless quench their thirst, while I look on,
And take me for their fellow-citizen.
More of this image, more ; it lulls my thoughts.

[Soft music again.]
Vent. I must disturb him : I can hold no longer.
[Stands before him.]

Ant. [Starting up] Art thou Ventidius ?

Vent. Are you Antony ?

I'm liker what I was than you to him
I left you last.

Ant. I'm angry.

Vent. So am I.

Ant. I would be private. Leave me.

Vent. Sir, I love you,
And therefore will not leave you.

Ant. Will not leave me !

Where have you learnt that answer ? Who am I ?

Vent. My emperor ; the man I love next
heaven :

If I said more I think 'twere scarce a sin :
You're all that's good and godlike.

Ant. All that's wretched.

You will not leave me then ?

Vent. 'Twas too presuming
To say I would not ; but I dare not leave you ;
And 'tis unkind in you to chide me hence
So soon, when I so far have come to see you.

Ant. Now thou hast seen me, art thou satisfied ?

For, if a friend, thou hast beheld enough,
And, if a foe, too much.

Vent. Look, emperor, this is no common dew :
[Weeping.]

I have not wept this forty years ; but now
My mother comes afresh into my eyes ;
I cannot help her softness.

Ant. By heaven he weeps ! Poor good old man,
he weeps !

The big round drops course one another down
The furrows of his cheeks. Stop them, Venti-dus,

Or I shall blush to death ; they set my shame,
That caused them, full before me.

Vent. I'll do my best.

Ant. Sure there's contagion in the tears of friends ;

See, I have caught it too. Believe me 'tis not
For my own griefs but thine—Nay, father—

Vent. Emperor.

Ant. Emperor ! why that's the style of victory :

The conquering soldier, red with unfelt wounds,
Salutes his general so ; but never more
Shall that sound reach my ears.

Vent. I warrant you.

Ant. Actium, Actium ! Oh—

Vent. It sits too near you.

Ant. Here, here it lies, a lump of lead by
day,

And, in my short distracted nightly slumbers,
The hag, that rides my dreams—

Vent. Out with it ; give it vent.

Ant. Urge not my shame—

I lost a battle.

Vent. So has Julius done.

Ant. Thou favourest me, and speakest not half thou thinkest ;

For Julius fought it out, and lost it fairly ;

But Antony—

Vent. Nay, stop not.

Ant. Antony

(Well, thou wilt have it) like a coward fled, Fled, while his soldiers fought ; fled first, Venti-
dus.

Thou longest to curse me, and I give thee leave ;
I know thou camest prepared to rail.

Vent. I did.

Ant. I'll help thee—I have been a man, Ven-tidius.

Vent. Yes, and a brave one ; but—

Ant. I know thy meaning.

But I have lost my reason, have disgraced
The name of soldier with inglorious ease ;
In the full vintage of my flowing honours
Sat still, and saw it prest by other hands ;
Fortune came smiling to my youth, and wooed it,
And purple greatness met my ripened years.
When first I came to empire, I was borne
On tides of people, crowding to my triumphs,
The wish of nations, and the willing world
Received me as its pledge of future peace.
I was so great, so happy, so beloved,
Fate could not ruin me, till I took pains,

And worked against my fortune, chid her from me,
 And turned her loose; yet still she came again.
 My careless days, and my luxurious nights,
 At length have wearied her, and now she's gone,
 Gone, gone, divorced for ever. Help me, sol-
 To curse this madman, this industrious fool,
 Who laboured to be wretched. Pr'ythee curse me.

Vent. No.

Ant. Why?

Vent. You are too sensible already
 Of what you have done, too conscious of your failings,

And, like a scorpion, whipt by others first
 To fury, sting yourself in mad revenge.
 I would bring balm, and pour it in your wounds,
 Cure your distempered mind, and heal your fortunes.

Ant. I know thou wouldst.

Vent. I will.

Ant. Ha, ha, ha, ha!

Vent. You laugh.

Ant. I do, to see officious love
 Give cordials to the dead.

Vent. You would be lost then?

Ant. I am.

Vent. I say you are not. Try your fortune.

Ant. I have to the utmost. Dost thou think me desperate

Without just cause? No, when I found all lost
 Beyond repair, I hid me from the world,
 And learned to scorn it here, which now I do
 So heartily, I think it is not worth
 The cost of keeping.

Vent. Cæsar thinks not so;

He'll thank you for the gift he could not take.
 You would be killed like Tully, would you?
 Do;

Hold out your throat to Cæsar, and die tamely.

Ant. No, I can kill myself, and so resolve.

Vent. I can die with you too, when time shall serve;

But fortune calls upon us now to live,
 To fight, to conquer.

Ant. Sure thou dreamest, Ventidius.

Vent. No, 'tis you dream; you sleep away your hours

In desperate sloth, miscalled philosophy.

Up, up, for honour's sake! twelve legions wait
 you,

And long to call you chief: by painful journies
 I led them, patient both of heat and hunger,
 Down from the Parthian marches of the Nile:
 'Twill do you good to see their sunburnt faces,
 Their scarred cheeks, and chopt hands: there's virtue in them:

They'll sell those mangled limbs at dearer rates
 Than yon trim bands can buy.

Ant. Where left you them?

Vent. I said in Lower Syria.

Ant. Bring them hither;

There may be life in these.

Vent. They will not come.

Ant. Why didst thou mock my hopes with promised aids

To double my despair? they are mutinous.

Vent. Most firm and loyal.

Ant. Yet they will not march

To succour me? Oh trifter!

Vent. They petition

You would make haste to head them.

Ant. I'm besieged.

Vent. There's but one way shut up—How came
 I hither?

Ant. I will not stir.

Vent. They would perhaps desire
 A better reason.

Ant. I have never used

My soldiers to demand a reason of My actions. Why did they refuse to march?

Vent. They said they would not fight for Cleopatra.

Ant. What was it they said?

Vent. They said they would not fight for Cleopatra:

Why should they fight indeed to make her conquer,

And make you more a slave? to gain you kingdoms,

Which for a kiss, at your next midnight feast,
 You'll sell to her?—Then she new-names her
 jewels,

And calls this diamond such or such a tax;

Each pendant in her ear shall be a province.

Ant. Ventidius, I allow your tongue free licence

On all my other faults, but, on your life,
 No word of Cleopatra! she deserves
 More worlds than I can lose.

Vent. Behold, you powers!

To whom you have entrusted humankind;
 See Europe, Afric, Asia, put in balance,
 And all weighed down by one light worthless
 woman!

I think the gods are Antonies, and give,

Like prodigals, this nether world away

To none but wasteful hands.

Ant. You grow presumptuous.

Vent. I take the privilege of plain love to speak.

Ant. Plain love! plain arrogance, plain insolence!

Thy men are cowards, thou an envious traitor,
 Who, under seeming honesty, hath vented

The burden of thy rank o'erflowing gall.

Oh that thou wert my equal, great in arms

As the first Cæsar was, that I might kill thee,
 Without stain to my honour!

Vent. You may kill me:

You have done more already, called me traitor.

Ant. Art thou not one?

Vent. For shewing you yourself,

Which none else durst have done? But had I
 been

That name, which I disdain to speak again,

I needed not have sought your abject fortunes,

Come to partake your fate, to die with you.
What hindered me to have led my conquering eagles

To fill Octavia's bands? I could have been
A traitor then, a glorious happy traitor,
And not have been so called.

Ant. Forgive me, soldier;
I have been too passionate.

Vent. You thought me false,
Thought my old age betrayed you. Kill me,
sir,
Pray kill me: yet you need not; your unkindness

Has left your sword no work.

Ant. I did not think so;
I said it in my rage: prithee forgive me.
Why didst thou tempt my anger by discovery
Of what I would not hear?

Vent. No prince, but you,
Could merit that sincerity I used;
Nor durst another man have ventured it:
But you, ere love misled your wandering eyes,
Were sure the chief and best of human race.
Framed in the very pride and boast of nature;
So perfect, that the gods, who formed you, wondered

At their own skill, and cried, 'A lucky hit
Has mended our design!' Their envy hindered,
Else you had been immortal, and a pattern.
When heaven would work for ostentation sake,
To copy out again.

Ant. But Cleopatra—
Go on, for I can bear it now.

Vent. No more.

Ant. Thou dar'st not trust my passion, but thou mayest:
Thou only lovest, the rest have flattered me.

Vent. Heaven's blessing on your heart for that kind word!

May I believe you love me? Speak again.

Ant. Indeed I do. Speak this, and this, and this. [Embracing him.]

Thy praises were unjust: but I'll deserve them,
And yet mend all. Do with me what thou wilt:
Lead me to victory; thou knowest the way.

Vent. And will you leave this—

Ant. Prithee do not curse her,
And I will leave her, though heaven knows I
love

Beyond life, conquest, empire, all but honour:
But I will leave her.

Vent. That is my royal master.
And shall we fight?

Ant. I warrant thee, old soldier;
Thou shalt behold me once again in iron,
And at the head of our old troops, that beat
The Parthians, cry aloud, 'Come, follow me.'

Vent. Oh, now I hear my emperor! In that word

Octavius fell. Gods! let me see that day,
And if I have ten years behind, take all;
I'll thank you for the exchange.

Ant. Oh, Cleopatra!

Vent. Again!

Ant. I have done; in that last sigh she went.
Cæsar shall know what it is to force a lover
From all he holds most dear.

Vent. Methinks you breathe
Another soul; your looks are most divine;
You speak a hero, and you move a god.

Ant. Oh, thou hast fired me! my soul's up in arms,

And man's each part about me. Once again
That noble eagerness of fight has seized me,
That eagerness, with which I darted upward
To Cassius' camp: in vain the steepy hill
Opposed my way, in vain a war of spears
Sung round my head, and planted all my shield;
I won the trenches, while my foremost men
Lagged on the plain below.

Vent. Ye gods, ye gods,
For such another honour!

Ant. Come on, my soldier;
Our hearts and arms are still the same! I long
Once more to meet our foes, that thou and I,
Like time and Death, marching before our troops,

May taste fate to them, mow them out a passage,

And, entering where the foremost squadrons
yield,

Begin the noble harvest of the field. [Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A grand Saloon.

Enter Cleopatra, Iras, and Alexas.

Cleo. What shall I do, or whither shall I turn!
Ventidius has o'ercome, and he will go.

Alex. He goes to fight for you.

Cleo. Then he would see me ere he went to fight.

Flatter me not; if once he goes, he is lost,
And all my hopes destroyed.

Alex. Does this weak passion
Become a mighty queen?

Cleo. I am no queen:
Is this to be a queen, to be besieged
By yon insulting Roman, and to wait
Each hour the victor's chain? These ills are small,

For Antony is lost, and I can mourn
For nothing else but him. Now come, Octavius;
I have no more to lose; prepare thy bands;
I am fit to be a captive: Antony
Has taught my mind the fortune of a slave.

Iras. Call reason to assist you.

Cleo. I have none,
And none would have: my love's a noble mad-
ness,
Which shows the cause deserved it. Moderate
sorrow

Fits vulgar love, and for a vulgar man;
But I have loved with such transcendent passion,

I soared at first quite out of reason's view,
And now am lost above it—No, I am proud
'Tis thus: would Antony could see me now!

Think you, he would not sigh? Though he must leave me,
Sure he would sigh; for he is noble-natured,
And bears a tender heart: I know him well:
Ah no! I know him not: I knew him once,
But now 'tis past.

Iras. Let it be past with you:
Forget him, madam.

Cleo. Never, never, Iras:
He once was mine, and once, though now it is gone,
Leaves a faint image of possession still.

Alex. Think him inconstant, cruel, and ungrateful.

Cleo. I cannot; if I could, those thoughts were vain:

Faithless, ungrateful, cruel, though he be,
I still must love him.

Enter Charmion.

Now, what news, my Charmion?
Will he be kind? and will he not forsake me?
Am I to live or die? Nay, do I live,
Or am I dead? for when he gave his answer,
Fate took the word, and then I lived or died.

Char. I found him, madam—

Cleo. A long speech preparing!
If thou bringest comfort, haste and give it me,
For never was more need.

Iras. I know he loves you.

Cleo. Had he been kind, her eyes had told me so,
Before her tongue could speak it: now she studies
To soften what he said: but give me death
Just as he sent it, Charmion, undisguised,
And in the words he spoke.

Char. I found him then,
Uncompassed round, I think, with iron statues,
So mute, so motionless, his soldiers stood,
While awfully he cast his eyes about,
And every leader's hopes and fears surveyed.
Methought he looked resolved, and yet not pleased:

When he beheld me struggling in the crowd,
He blushed, and bade make way.

Alex. There's comfort yet. [sage]

Char. Ventidius fixed his eyes upon my passage, as he meant to frown me back,
And sullenly gave place. I told my message,
Just as you gave it, broken and disordered;
I numbered in it all your sighs and tears,
And while I moved your pitiful request,
That you but only begged a last farewell,
He fetched an inward groan, and every time
I named you, sighed, as if his heart were break-
ing,

But shunned my eyes, and guiltily looked down.
He seemed not now that awful Antony,
Who shook an armed assembly with his nod,
But making show as he would rub his eyes,
Disguised and blotted out a falling tear.

Cleo. Did he then weep, and was I worth a tear?

If that thou hast to say be not as pleasing,
Tell me no more, but let me die contented.

Char. He bid me say, he knew himself so well,
He could deny you nothing, if he saw you,
And therefore—

Cleo. Thou wouldst say he would not see me!

Char. And therefore begged you not to use a power,

Which he could ill resist; yet he should ever
Respect you as he ought.

Cleo. Is that a word

For Antony to use to Cleopatra?
Oh, that faint word respect! How I disdain it!
Disdain myself for loving after it!

He should have kept that word for cold Octavia;
Respect is for a wife. Am I that thing,
That dull insipid lump, without desires,
And without power to give them?

Alex. You misjudge;

You see through love, and that deludes your
sight,

As what is straight seems crooked through the water;

But I, who bear my reason undisturbed,
Can see this Antony, this dreaded man,
A fearful slave, who fain would run away,
And shuns his master's eyes; if you pursue him,
My life on it, he still drags a chain along,
That needs must clog his flight.

Cleo. Could I believe thee—

Alex. By every circumstance I know he loves.
True, he is hard prest by interest and honour;
Yet he but doubts and parleys, and casts out
Many a long look for succour.

Cleo. He sends word
He fears to see my face.

Alex. And would you more?

He shows his weakness, who declines the combat;

And you must urge your fortune. Could he speak
More plainly? to my ears the message sounds,
'Come to my rescue, Cleopatra, come!
Come, free me from Ventidius, from my tyrant;
See me, and give me a pretence to leave him.'

[A march.

I hear his trumpets. This way he must pass.
Please you retire a while; I'll work him first,
That he may bend more easy.

Cleo. You shall rule me,
But all, I fear, in vain. [Exit with Char. and Iras.]

Alex. I fear so too,
Though I concealed my thoughts to make her
bold;

But it is our utmost means, and fate befriend it.
[Withdraws. A march till all are on.]

Enter Lictors with fasces, one bearing the Eagle; then enter Antony and Ventidius, followed by other Commanders.

Ant. Octavius is the minion of blind chance,
But holds from virtue nothing.

Vent. Has he courage?

Ant. But just enough to season him from coward.

Oh! 'tis the coldest youth upon a charge,
The most deliberate fighter! if he ventures
(As in Illyria once they said he did)

To storm a town, 'tis when he cannot chuse,
When all the world have fixed their eyes upon
him;

And then he lives on that for seven years after:
But at a close revenge he never fails.

Vent. I heard you challenged him.

Ant. I did, Ventidius:

What thinkest thou was his answer? 'twas so tame

—He said, he had more ways than one to die,
I had not.

Vent. Poor!

Ant. He has more ways than one,
But he would chuse them all before that one.

Vent. He first would chuse an ague or a fever.

Ant. No, it must be an ague, not a fever;
He has not warmth enough to die by that.

Vent. Or old age and a bed.

Ant. Ay, there's his choice;

He would live like a lamp to the last wink,
And crawl upon the utmost verge of life.
Oh, Hercules! why should a man like this,
Who dares not trust his fate for one great action,
Be all the care of heaven? why should he lord it
O'er fourscore thousand men, of whom each one
Is braver than himself?

Vent. You conquered for him;

Philippi knows it: there you shared with him
That empire, which your sword made all your own.

Ant. Fool that I was! upon my eagle's wings
I bore this wren till I was tired with soaring,
And now he mounts above me.

Good heavens! is this, is this the man, who braves
me,

Who bids my age make way, drives me before
him

To the world's ridge, and sweeps me off like rubbish?

Vent. Sir, we lose time; the troops are mounted all.

Ant. Then give the word to march:

I long to leave this prison of a town,
To join thy legions, and in open field
Once more to show my face. Lead, my deliverer!

Enter Alexus.

Alex. Great emperor,

In mighty arms renowned above mankind,
But, in soft pity to the oppressed, a god,
This message sends the mournful Cleopatra
To her departing lord.

Vent. Smooth sycophant!

Alex. A thousand wishes, and ten thousand prayers,

Millions of blessings, wait you to the wars;
Millions of sighs and tears she sends you too,
And would have sent -

As many embraces to your arms,
As many dear parting kisses to your lips,
But those, she fears, have wearied you already.

Vent. [Aside] False crocodile!

Alex. And yet she begs not now, you would not leave her;

That were a wish too mighty for her hopes,

And too presuming (for her low fortune and your ebbing love);
That were a wish for her most prosperous days,
Her blooming beauty, and your growing kindness.

Ant. [Aside.] Well I must man it out—What would the queen?

Alex. First to these noble warriors, who attend

Your daring courage in the chase of fame.
(Too daring and too dangerous for her quiet)
She humbly recommends all she holds dear,
All her own cares and fears, the care of you.

Vent. Yes, witness Actium.

Ant. Let him speak, Ventidius.

Alex. You, when his matchless valour bears him forward

With ardour, too heroic, on his foes;
Fall down, as she would do, before his feet,
Lie in his way, and stop the paths of death;
Tell him this god is not invulnerable,
That absent Cleopatra bleeds in him;
And, that you may remember her petition,
She begs you wear these trifles as a pawn,
Which, at your wished return, she will redeem.

[Gives jewels to the Commanders.]

With all the wealth of Egypt.

This to the great Ventidius she presents,
Whom she can never count her enemy,
Because he loves her lord.

Vent. Tell her I'll none of it;

I am not ashamed of honest poverty:

Not all the diamonds of the East can bribe

Ventidius from his faith. I hope to see

These and the rest of all her sparkling store,
Where they shall more deservedly be placed.

Ant. And who must wear them then?

Vent. The wronged Octavia.

Ant. You might have spared that word.

Vent. And she that bribe.

Ant. But have I no remembrance?

Alex. Yes, a dear one;

Your slave, the queen——

Ant. My mistress.

Alex. Then your mistress.

Your mistress would, she says, have sent her
soul,

But that you had long since; she humbly begs
This ruby bracelet, set with bleeding hearts,
(The emblems of her own) may bind your arm.

[Presenting a bracelet.]

Vent. Now, my best lord, in honour's name I
ask you,

For manhood's sake, and for your own dear safety,
Touch not these poisoned gifts,

Infected by the sender! touch them not!

Myriads of bluest plagues lie underneath them,
And more than aconite has dipt the silk.

Ant. Nay, now you grow too cynical, Venti-
dus;

A lady's favours may be worn with honour.

What to refuse her bracelet! on my soul,

When I lie pensive in my tent alone,

'Twill pass the wakeful hours of winter nights

To tell these pretty beads upon my arm,
To count for every one a soft embrace,
A melting kiss at such and such a time,
And now and then the fury of her love,
When—And what harm's in this?

Alex. None, none, my lord,
But what's to her, that now 'tis past for ever.

Ant. [Going to tie it.] We soldiers are so awkward—help me to tie it.

Alex. In faith, my lord, we courtiers too are awkward

In these affairs; so are all men indeed;
But shall I speak?

Ant. Yes, freely.

Alex. Then, my lord, fair hands alone
Are fit to tie it; she, who sent it, can.

Vent. Hell! death! this eunuch pandar ruins you.

You will not see her? [Alexas whispers an attendant, who goes out.]

Ant. But to take my leave.

Vent. Then I have washed an Ethiop. You are undone!

You're in the toils! you're taken! you're destroyed!

Her eyes do Cæsar's work.

Ant. You fear too soon:

I am constant to myself: I know my strength;
And yet she shall not think me barbarous neither,
Born in the deeps of Afric: I'm a Roman,
Bred to the rules of soft humanity.

A guest, and kindly used, should bid farewell.

Vent. You do not know

How weak you are to her, how much an infant;
You are not proof against a smile or glance;
A sigh will quite disarm you.

Ant. See, she comes!

Now you shall find your error. Gods! I thank you;

I formed the danger greater than it was,
And now 'tis near 'tis lessened.

Vent. Mark the end yet.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmion, and Iras.

Ant. Well, madam, we are met.

Cleo. Is this a meeting!

Then we must part!

Ant. We must.

Cleo. Who says we must?

Ant. Our own hard fates.

Cleo. We make those fates ourselves.

Ant. Yes, we have made them: we have loved each other,

Into our mutual ruin.

Cleo. The gods have seen my joys with envious eyes;

I have no friends in heaven; and all the world
(As 'twere the business of mankind to part us)
Is armed against my love; even you yourself
Join with the rest: you, you are armed against me.

Ant. I will be justified in all I do
To late posterity, and therefore hear me,
If I mix a lie

With any truth, reproach me freely with it,
Else favour me with silence.

Cleo. You command me,
And I am dumb.

Vent. I like this well: he shows authority.

Ant. That I derive my ruin
From you alone——

Cleo. Oh, heavens! I ruin you!

Ant. You promised me your silence, and you break it,

Ere I have scarce begun.

Cleo. Well, I obey you.

Ant. When I beheld you first, it was in Egypt,
Ere Cæsar saw your eyes: you gave me love,
And were too young to know it. That I settled

Your father in his throne was for your sake;
I left the acknowledgment for time to ripen.
Cæsar stepped in, and, with a greedy hand,
Plucked the green fruit, ere the first blush of red,

Yet cleaving to the bough. He was my lord,
And was beside too great for me to rival;
But I deserved you first, though he enjoyed you.
When after I beheld you in Cilicia,
An enemy to Rome, I pardoned you.

Cleo. I cleared myself——

Ant. Again you break your promise!
I loved you still, and took your weak excuses,
Took you into my bosom, stained by Cæsar,
And not half mine: I went to Egypt with you,
And hid me from the business of the world,
Shut out inquiring nations from my sight,
To give whole years to you.

Vent. Yes, to your shame to be it spoken!
[Aside.]

Ant. How I loved,

Witness ye days and nights, and all ye hours,
That danced away with down upon your feet,
As all your business were to count my passion.
One day passed by, and nothing saw but love;
Another came, and still 'twas only love:
The suns were wearied out with looking on,
And I untired with loving.
I saw you every day, and all the day,
And every day was still but as the first,
So eager was I still to see you more.

Vent. 'Tis all too true.

Ant. Fulvia, my wife, grew jealous,
As she indeed had reason, raised a war
In Italy, to call me back.

Vent. But yet
You went not.

Ant. While within your arms I lay,
The world fell mouldering from my hands each hour,
And left me scarce a grasp; I thank your love for't.

Vent. Well pushed: that last was home.

Cleo. Yet may I speak?

Ant. If I have urged a falsehood, yes; else not.

Your silence says I have not. Fulvia died:

(Pardon, you gods ! with my unkindness died.)
To set the world at peace, I took Octavia,
This Cæsar's sister. In her pride of youth
And flower of beauty did I wed that lady,
Whom, blushing, I must praise, although I left
her.

You called ; my love obeyed the fatal summons :
This raised the Roman arms ; the cause was yours.
I would have fought by land, where I was stronger ;

You hindered it ; yet, when I fought by sea,
Forsook me fighting ; and—oh stain to honour !
Oh lasting shame ! I knew not that I fled,
But fled to follow you.

Vent. What haste she made to hoist her purple sails !

And to appear magnificent in flight,
Drew half our strength away.

Ant. All this you caused :

And would you multiply more ruins on me ?
This honest man, my best, my only friend,
Has gathered up the shipwreck of my fortunes :
Twelve legions I have left, my last recruits,
And you have watched the news, and bring your eyes

To seize them too. If you have aught to answer,
Now speak, you have free leave.

Alex. She stands confounded :

Despair is in her eyes. [Aside.

Vent. Now lay a sigh in the way to stop his passage ;

Prepare a tear, and bid it for his legions :
'Tis like they shall be sold.

Cleo. How shall I plead my cause, when you,
my judge,
Already have condemned me ? Shall I bring
The love, you bore me, for my advocate ?
That now is turned against me, that destroys
me ;

For love, once past, is, at the best, forgotten,
But oftener sours to hate. It will please my lord

To ruin me, and therefore I'll be guilty ;
But could I once have thought it would have pleased you,

That you would pry with narrow searching eyes
Into my faults, severe to my destruction,
And watching all advantages with care,
That serve to make me wretched ! Speak, my
lord,

For I end here. Though I deserve this usage,
Was it like you to give it ?

Ant. Oh, you wrong me,
To think I sought this parting, or desired
To accuse you more than what will clear myself,

And justify this breach.

Cleo. Thus low I thank you,
And, since my innocence will not offend,
I shall not blush to own it.

Vent. After this,

I think she'll blush at nothing.

Cleo. You seem grieved

(And therein you are kind) that Cæsar first Enjoyed my love, though you deserved it better ;

For had I first been yours, it would have saved
My second choice ; I never had been his,
And ne'er had been but yours. But Cæsar
first,

You say, possessed my love. Not so, my lord :
He first possessed my person, you my love :

Cæsar loved me, but I loved Antony :

If I endured him after, 'twas because
I judged it due to the first name of men ;
And, half constrained, I gave, as to a tyrant,
What he would take by force.

Vent. Oh, siren ! siren !

Yet grant that all the love she boasts were true,
Has she not ruined you ? I still urge that,
The fatal consequence.

Cleo. The consequence indeed,

For I dare challenge him, my greatest foe,
To say it was designed. It is true I loved you,
And kept you far from an uneasy wife,
Such Fulvia was.

Yes ; but he'll say you left Octavia for me :
And can you blame me to receive that love,
Which quitted such desert for worthless me ?

How often have I wished some other Cæsar,
Great as the first, and as the second young,
Would court my love, to be refused for you !

Vent. Words, words ! but Actium, sir, remember Actium !

Cleo. Ev'n there I dare his malice. True, I counselled

To fight at sea ; but I betrayed you not :
I fled, but not to the enemy. 'Twas fear :

Would I had been a man not to have feared !
For none would then have envied me your friendship,

Who envy me your love.

Ant. We are both unhappy :

If nothing else, yet our ill fortune parts us,
Speak ! would you have me perish by my stay ?

Cleo. If, as a friend, you ask my judgment, go ;
If, as a lover, stay. If you must perish—

'Tis a hard word—but stay. [Love !

Vent. See now the effects of her so boasted
She strives to drag you down to ruin with her ;
But could she 'scape without you, oh, how soon
Would she let go her hold, and haste to shore,
And never look behind !

Cleo. Then judge my love by this.

[Giving Antony a writing.

Could I have borne

A life or death, a happiness or woe,
From yours divided, this had given me means.

Ant. By Hercules the writing of Octavius !
I know it well : 'tis that proscribing hand,
Young as it was, that led the way to mine,
And left me but the second place in murder—
See, see, Ventidius ! here he offers Egypt,
And joins all Syria to it as a present,
So in requital she forsakes my fortunes,
And joins her arms with his.

Cleo. And yet you leave me!

You leave me, Antony; and yet I love you!
Indeed I do! I have refused a kingdom,
That's a trifle;
For I could part with life, with any thing,
But only you. Oh let me die but with you!
Is that a hard request?

Ant. Next living with you

'Tis all, that heaven can give.

Alex. He melts; we conquer.

Cleo. No, you shall go; your interest calls you hence:

Yes, your dear interest pulls too strong for these Weak arms to hold you here— [Takes his hand.]
Go, leave me, soldier,
(For you're no more a lover) leave me dying;
Push me all pale and panting from your bosom,
And, when your march begins, let one run after,
Breathless almost for joy, and cry, 'She's dead!'
The soldiers shout. You then perhaps may sigh,

And muster all your Roman gravity;
Ventidius chides, and straight your brow clears
up,

As I had never been.

Ant. Gods! 'tis too much! too much for man to bear!

Cleo. What is it for me then,

A weak forsaken woman and a lover?

Here let me breathe my last; envy me not

This minute in your arms! I'll die apace,

As fast as e'er I can, and end your trouble.

Ant. Die!—rather let me perish, loosened nature

Leap from its hinges, sink the props of heaven,
And fall the skies to crush the nether world!

My eyes! my soul! my all!— — [Embraces her.]

Vent. And what's this toy,

In balance with your fortune, honour, fame?

Ant. What is it, Ventidius? it outweighs them all.

Why, we have more than conquered Cæsar now;

My queen's not only innocent, but loves me.

This, this is she, who drags me down to ruin!

But, could she escape without me, with what haste

Would she let slip her hold, and make to shore,
And never look behind!

Down on thy knees, blasphemer as thou art,

And ask forgiveness of wronged innocence.

Vent. I'll rather die than take it. Will you go?

Ant. Go! whither? go from all that's excellent!

Faith, honour, virtue, all good things, forbid
That I should go from her, who sets my love
Above the price of kingdoms. Give, you gods!

Give to your boy, your Cæsar,

This rattle of a globe to play withal,

This gewgaw world, and put him cheaply off;

I'll not be pleased with less than Cleopatra.

Cleo. She's wholly yours. My heart's so full of joy,

That I shall do some wild extravagance
Of love in public, and the foolish world,
Which knows not tenderness, will think me
mad.

Vent. Oh women! women! women! all the gods

Have not such power of doing good to man

As you of doing harm.

[Exit.]

Ant. Our men are armed:

Unbar the gate that looks to Cæsar's camp;

I would revenge the treachery he meant me,

And long security makes conquest easy.

I'm eager to return before I go,

For all the pleasures I have known beat thick
On my remembrance. * * * *

[Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmion, Iras, Alexas, and a train of Egyptians, Antony and Romans; Cleopatra crowns Antony.

Ant. I Thought how those white arms would fold me in,

And strain me close and melt me into love:

So pleased with that sweet image I sprung forwards,

And added all my strength to every blow.

Cleo. Come to me, come, my soldier, to my arms!

You have been too long away from my embraces;

But when I have you fast, and all my own,

With broken murmurs and with amorous sighs,

I'll say you are unkind, and punish you.

And mark you red with many an eager kiss.

Ant. My brighter Venus!

Cleo. Oh, my greater Mars!

Ant. Thou joinest us well, my love.

Suppose me come from the Phlegrean plains,

Where gasping giants lay cleft by my sword,

And mountain-tops par'd off each other blow

To bury those I slew; receive me, goddess!

Let Cæsar spread his subtle nets, like Vulcan;

In thy embraces I would be beheld

By heaven and earth at once,

And make their envy what they meant their
sport,

Let those, who took us, blush; I would love on,

With awful state, regardless of their frowns,
As their superior god.

There's no satiety of love in thee;

Enjoyed, thou still art new; perpetual spring

Is in thy arms; the ripened fruit but falls,

And blossoms rise to fill its empty place,

And I grow rich by giving.

Enter Ventidius and stands apart.

Alex. Oh, now the danger's past, your general comes;
He joins not in your joys, nor minds your triumphs,

But with contracted brows, looks frowning on,
As envying your success.

Ant. Now, on my soul, he loves me, truly loves me;

He never flattered me in any vice,
But awes me with his virtue: even this minute,
Methinks, he has a right of chiding me.
Lead to the temple; I'll avoid his presence;
It checks too strong upon me. Exeunt the rest.

[As Antony is going, Ventidius pulls him by the robe.

Vent. Emperor!

Ant. 'Tis the old argument; I prithee spare me.

[Looking back.

Vent. But this one hearing, emperor.

Ant. Let go

My robe, or by my father Hercules——

Vent. By Hercules' father—that's yet greater,
I bring you somewhat you would wish to know.

Ant. Thou seest we are observed; attend me here,

And I'll return.

[Exit.

Vent. I'm waning in his favour, yet I love him;

I love this man, who runs to meet his ruin!
And sure the gods, like me, are fond of him:
His virtues lie so mingled with his crimes,
As would confound their choice to punish one,
And not reward the other.

Enter Antony.

Ant. We can conquer,

You see, without your aid:

We have dislodged their troops.

They look on us at distance, and like curs,
'Scaped from the lion's paws, they bay far off,
And lick their wounds, and faintly threaten war.
Five thousand Romans, with their faces upward,
Lie breathless on the plain.

Vent. 'Tis well; and he

Who lost them could have spared ten thousand more:

Yet if by this advantage you could gain
An easier peace, while Cæsar doubts the chance
Of arms——

Ant. Oh, think not on it, Ventidius!

The boy pursues my ruin; he'll no peace!

His malice is considerate in advantage:

Oh, he's the coolest murderer! so staunch,
He kills and keeps his temper.

Vent. Have you no friend

In all his army, who has power to move him?

Mecænas or Agrippa might do much.

Ant. They're both too deep in Cæsar's interests.

We'll work it out by dint of sword, or perish.

Vent. Fain I would find some other.

Ant. Thank thy love.

Some four or five such victories as this
Will save thy farther pains.

Vent. Expect no more; Cæsar is on his guard.
I know, sir, you have conquered against odds;
But still you draw supplies from one poor town,

And of Egyptians; he has all the world,
And at his beck nations come pouring in
To fill the gaps you make. Pray think again.

Ant. Why dost thou drive me from myself to search

For foreign aids, to hunt my memory,
And range all o'er a wide and barren place,
To find a friend? The wretched have no friends——

Yet I have one, the bravest youth of Rome,
Whom Cæsar loves beyond the love of women;
He could resolve his mind, as fire does wax,
From that hard rugged image melt him down,
And mould him in what softer form he pleased.

Vent. Him would I see, that man of all the world!

Just such a one we want.

Ant. He loved me too;

I was his soul; he lived not but in me:
We were so closed within each other's breasts,
The rivets were not found, that joined us first,
That does not reach us yet: we were so mixt
As meeting streams, both to ourselves were lost:
We were one mass: we could not give or take
But from the same; for he was I, I he.

Vent. He moves as I would wish him. [Aside.

Ant. After this

I need not tell his name: 'twas Dolabella.

Vent. He is now in Cæsar's camp.

Ant. No matter where,
Since he is no longer mine. He took unkindly,
That I forbade him Cleopatra's sight,
Because I feared he loved her. He confest
He had a warmth, which for my sake he stifled;
For 'twere impossible, that two, so one,
Should not have loved the same. When he departed,

He took no leave, and that confirmed my thoughts.

Vent. It argues, that he loved you more than her,

Else he had staid; but he perceived you jealous,
And would not grieve his friend. I know he loves you.

Ant. I should have seen him, then, ere now.

Vent. Perhaps

He has thus long been labouring for your peace.

Ant. Would he were here!

Vent. Would you believe he loved you?

I read your answer in your eyes, you would.

Not to conceal it longer, he has sent

A messenger from Cæsar's camp with letters.

Ant. Let him appear.

Vent. I'll bring him instantly.

[Exit Ventidius, and re-enters immediately with Dolabella.

Ant. 'Tis he himself, himself! by holy friendship!

[Runs to embrace him.

Art thou returned at last, my better half!

Come, give me all myself!

Let me not live,

If the young bridegroom, longing for his night,
Was ever half so fond!

Dol. I must be silent, for my soul is busy

About a nobler work. She's new come home,
Like a long absent man, and wanders o'er
Each room, a stranger to her own, to look
If all be safe.

Ant. Thou hast what's left of me,
For I am now so sunk from what I was,
Thou findest me at my lowest watermark :
The rivers, that ran in, and raised my fortunes,
Are all dried up, or take another course :
What I have left is from my native spring ;
I have still a heart, that swells, in scorn of fate,
And lifts me to my bahks.

Dol. Still you are lord of all the world to me.

Ant. Why then, I yet am so, for thou art all !
If I had any joy, when thou wert absent,
I grudged it to myself : methought I robbed
Thee of thy part. But oh, my Dolabella !
Thou hast beheld me other than I am—
Hast thou not seen my morning chambers filled
With scepter'd slaves, who waited to salute me ?
With eastern monarchs, who forgot the sun,
To worship my uprising ? Menial kings
Ran coursing up and down my palace-yard,
Stood silenced in my presence, watched my eyes,
And, at my least command, all started out,
Like racers to the goal.

Dol. Slaves to your fortune.

Ant. Fortune is Cæsar's now ; and what am I ?

Vent. What you have made yourself : I will not flatter.

Ant. Is this friendly done ?

Dol. Yes, when his end is so : I must join with
him,

Indeed I must, and yet you must not chide :
Why am I else your friend ?

Ant. Take heed, young man,
How thou upbraidest my love ! the queen has
eyes,

And thou too hast a soul ! Canst thou remember
When, swelled with hatred, thou beheldest her
first,

As accessory to thy brother's death ?

Dol. Spare my remembrance ! 'twas a guilty
day,
And still the blush hangs here.

Ant. To clear herself

For sending him no aid, she came from Egypt.
Her galley down the silver Sydnos rowed,
The tackling silk, the streamers waved with gold,
The gentle winds were lodged in purple sails,
Her nymphs, like Nereids, round her couch were placed,

Where she, another sea-born Venus, lay.

Dol. No more ! I would not hear it !

Ant. Oh, you must !

She lay, and leant her cheek upon her hand,
And cast a look so languishingly sweet,
As if, secure of all beholders' hearts,
Neglecting she could take them. Boys, like Cupids,
Stood fanning with their painted wings the winds,
That played about her face ; but if she smiled,

A darting glory seemed to blaze abroad,
That men's desiring eyes were never wearied,
But hung upon the object ! To soft flutes
The silver oars kept time, and while they played,
The hearing gave new pleasure to the sight,
And both to thought. 'Twas heaven, or somewhat more !

For she so charmed all hearts, that gazing crowds
Stood panting on the shore, and wanted breath
To give their welcome voice.

Then, Dolabella, where was then thy soul ?
Was not thy fury quite disarmed with wonder ?
Didst thou not shrink behind me from those eyes,
And whisper in my ear, Oh, tell her not,
That I accused her of my brother's death !

Dol. And should my weakness be a plea for yours ?

Mine was an age, when love might be excused,
When kindly warmth, and when my springing youth

Made it a debt to nature : yours —

Vent. Speak boldly :

Yours, he would say, in your declining age,
When no more heat was left but what you forced,
When all the sap was needful for the trunk,
When it went down, then they constrained the
course,

And robbed from nature to supply desire.

In you (I would not use so harsh a word)
'Tis but plain dotage.

Ant. Ha !

Dol. 'Twas urged too home.

But yet the loss was private that I made ;
'Twas but myself I lost ; I lost no legions ;
I had no world to lose, no people's love.

Ant. This from a friend ?

Dol. Yes, Antony, a true one ;

A friend so tender, that each word I speak
Stabs my own heart before it reach your ear.
Oh ! judge me not less kind, because I chide.
To Cæsar I excuse you.

Ant. Oh, ye gods !

Have I then lived to be excused to Cæsar !

Dol. As to your equal.

Ant. Well, he's but my equal :

While I wear this, he never shall be more.

Dol. I bring conditions from him.

Ant. Are they noble ?

[yet he
Methinks thou shouldst not bring them else ;
Is full of deep dissembling, knows no honour
Divided from his interest. Fate mistook him.
For Nature meant him for an usurer :
He's fit indeed to buy, not conquer kingdoms.

Vent. Then, granting this,
What power was theirs, who wrought so hard a temper

To honourable terms ?

Ant. It was my Dolabella, or some god.

Dol. Not I, nor yet Mecænas nor Agrippa ;
They were your enemies, and I, a friend,
Too weak alone ; yet 'twas a Roman deed.

Ant. 'Twas like a Roman done. Show me that man,

Who has preserved my life, my love, my honour ;

Let me but see his face !

Vent. That task is mine,
And heaven ! thou know'st how pleasing.

[Exit Vent.]

Dol. You'll remember,
To whom you stand obliged ?

Ant. When I forget it,
Be thou unkind, and that's my greatest curse.
My queen shall thank him too.

Dol. I fear she will not.

Ant. But she shall do it, The queen, my Dolabella !

Hast thou not still some grudgings of thy fever ?

Dol. I would not see her lost.

Ant. When I forsake her,
Leave me my better stars, for she has truth
Beyond her beauty. Cæsar tempted her
At no less price than kingdoms to betray me ;
But she resisted all : and yet thou chidest me
For loving her too well. Could I do so ?

Dol. Yes ; there's my reason.

Re-enter Ventidius with Octavia, leading Antony's two little daughters.

Ant. Where—Octavia there ! [Starting back.]

Vent. What ! is she poison to you ? a disease ?
Look on her, view her well, and those she brings :
Are they all strangers to your eyes ? has Nature
No secret call, no whisper, they are yours ?

Dol. For shame, my lord, if not for love, receive them

With kinder eyes. If you confess a man,
Meet them, embrace them, bid them welcome to you.

Your arms should open, even without your knowledge,
To clasp them in ; your feet should turn to wings

To bear you to them ; and your eyes dart out,
And aim a kiss, ere you could reach their lips.

Ant. I stood amazed to think how they came hither.

Vent. I sent for them ; I brought them in, unknown

To Cleopatra's guards.

Dol. Yet are you cold ?

Oct. Thus long have I attended for my welcome,

Which, as a stranger, sure I might expect.

Who am I ?

Ant. Cæsar's sister.

Oct. That's unkind !

Had I been nothing more than Cæsar's sister,
Know I had still remained in Cæsar's camp :
But your Octavia, your much injured wife,
Though banished from your bed, driven from your house,

In spite of Cæsar's sister still is yours.

'Tis true, I have a heart disdains your coldness,
And prompts me not to seek what you should offer ;

But a wife's virtue still surmounts that pride :

I come to claim you as my own, to show
My duty first, to ask, nay beg, your kindness.
Your hand, my lord ; 'tis mine, and I will have it.

[Taking his hand.]

Vent. Do take it, thou deservest it.

Dol. On my soul,

And so she does. She's neither too submissive,
Nor yet too haughty ; but so just a mean
Shows, as it ought, a wife and Roman too.

Ant. I fear, Octavia, you have begged my life.

Oct. Begged it, my lord !

Ant. Yes, begged it, my ambassadress ;
Poorly and basely begged it of your brother.

Oct. Poorly and basely I could never beg,
Nor could my brother grant.

Ant. Shall I, who to my kneeling slave could say,

Rise up and be a king, shall I fall down
And cry, 'Forgive me, Cæsar ?' Shall I set
A man, my equal, in the place of Jove,
As he could give me being ? No ; that word,
Forgive, would choke me up,
And die upon my tongue.

Dol. You shall not need it.

Ant. I will not need it. Come, you have all betrayed me—

My friend too ! to receive some vile conditions.
My wife has bought me with her prayers and tears,

And now I must become her branded slave :
In every peevish mood she will upbraid
The life she gave : if I but look awry,
She cries, 'I'll tell my brother.'

Oct. My hard fortune

Subjects me still to your unkind mistakes :
But the conditions I have brought are such
You need not blush to take. I love your honour,
Because 'tis mine. It never shall be said
Octavia's husband was her brother's slave.
Sir, you are free, free even from her you loathe ;
For though my brother bargains for your love,
Makes me the price and cement of your peace,
I have a soul like yours ; I cannot take
Your love as alms, nor beg what I deserve.
I'll tell my brother we are reconciled ;
He shall draw back his troops, and you shall march

To rule the east. I may be dropt at Athens ;
No matter where ; I never will complain,
But only keep the barren name of wife,
And rid you of the trouble.

Vent. Was ever such a strife of sullen honour !
Both scorn to be obliged.

Dol. Oh, she has touched him in the tenderest part :

See how he reddens with despite and shame,
To be outdone in generosity !

Vent. See how he winks ! how he dries up a tear

That fain would fall !

Ant. Octavia, I have heard you, and must praise

The greatness of your soul,

But cannot yield to what you have proposed ;
For I can ne'er be conquered but by love,
And you do all for duty. You would free me,
And would be dropt at Athens ; was it not so ?

Oct. It was my lord.

Ant. Then I must be obliged
To one, who loves me not, who to herself
May call me thankless and ungrateful man.
I'll not endure it ; no.

Vent. I'm glad it pinches there. [virtue ?]

Oct. Would you triumph o'er poor Octavia's
That pride was all I had to bear me up,
That you might think you owed me for your life,
And owed it to my duty, not my love.
I have been injured, and my haughty soul
Could brook but ill the man, who slights my bed.

Ant. Therefore, you love me not.

Oct. Therefore, my lord,
I should not love you.

Ant. Therefore you would leave me.

Oct. And therefore I should leave you—if I could.

Dol. Her soul's too great, after such injuries,
To say she loves, and yet she lets you see it.
Her modesty and silence plead her cause.

Ant. Oh, Dolabella ! which way shall I turn ?
I find a secret yielding in my soul ;
But Cleopatra, who would die with me,
Must she be left ? Pity pleads for Octavia,
But does it not plead more for Cleopatra ?

Vent. Justice and pity both plead for Octavia,
For Cleopatra neither.
One would be ruined with you, but she first
Had ruined you ; the other you have ruined,
And yet she would preserve you.

In every thing their merits are unequal.

Ant. Oh, my distracted soul !

Oct. Sweet heaven, compose it !

Come, come, my lord, if I can pardon you,
Methinks you should accept it. Look on these ;
Are they not yours ? or stand they thus neglected
As they are mine ? Go to him, children, go ;
Kneel to him, take him by the hand, speak to
him,

For you may speak, and he may own you too
Without a blush ; and so he cannot all
His children. Go, I say, and pull him to me,
And pull him to yourselves, from that bad
woman :

You Agrippina, hang upon his arms,
And you, Antonia, clasp about his waist ;
If he will shake you off, if he will dash you
Against the pavement, you must bear it, children.

For you are mine, and I was born to suffer.

[Here the children go to him, &c.]

Vent. Was ever sight so moving ! Emperor !

Dol. Friend !

Oct. Husband !

Both child. Father !

Ant. I am vanquished : take me,
Octavia, take me, children, share me all.

[Embracing them.]

I have been a thriftless debtor to your loves,
And run out much in riot from your stock ;
But all shall be amended.

Oct. Oh, blest hour !

Dol. Oh, happy change !

Vent. My joy stops at my tongue !
But it has found two channels here for one,
And bubbles out above.

Ant. [To Oct.] This is thy triumph : lead me
where thou wilt,
Even to thy brother's camp.

Oct. All there are yours.

Enter Alexus hastily.

Alex. The queen, my mistress, sir, and yours—

Ant. 'Tis past. Octavia, you shall stay this
night ;

To-morrow Cæsar and we are one.

[Exit, leading Oct. Dol. and the children follow.]

Vent. There is news for you ! Run, my officious eunuch !

Be sure to be the first ; haste forward ;

Haste, my dear eunuch, haste ! [Exit.]

Alex. This downright fighting fool, this thickskulled hero,

This blunt unthinking instrument of death,
With plain dull virtue, has outgone my wit.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmion, Iras, and train.

Oh, madam ! I have seen what blasts my eyes ;
Octavia is here !

Cleo. Peace with thy raven's note !

I know it too, and now am in
The pangs of death.

Alex. You are no more a queen,
Egypt is lost.

Cleo. What tellest thou me of Egypt !

My life, my soul is lost. Octavia has him !

Oh, fatal name to Cleopatra's love !

My kisses, my embraces, now are her's,
While I—But thou hast seen my rival ; speak,
Does she deserve this blessing ? is she fair ?
Bright as a goddess ? and is all perfection
Confined to her ? It is. Poor I was made
Of that coarse matter, which, when she was finished,

The gods threw by for rubbish.

Alex. She is indeed a very miracle.

Cleo. Death to my hopes, a miracle !

Alex. A miracle— [Bowing.]
I mean of goodness ; for in beauty, madam,
You make all wonder cease.

Cleo. I was too rash :

Take this in part of recompence. But oh !

I fear thou flatterest me. [Giving a ring.]

Char. She comes ! she's here !

Iras. Fly, madam ! Cæsar's sister !

Cleo. Were she the sister of the thunderer
Jove,

And bore her brother's lightning in her eyes,
Thus would I face my rival.

Enter Octavia with Ventidius. Octavia bears up to Cleopatra.

Oct. I need not ask, if you are Cleopatra ;
Your haughty carriage—

Cleo. Shews I am a queen.
Nor need I ask who you are.

Oct. A Roman;
A name, that makes and can unmake a queen.

Cleo. Your lord, the man who serves me, is a Roman.

Oct. He was a Roman, till he lost that name
To be a slave in Egypt; but I come
To free him hence.

Cleo. Peace, peace, my lover's Juno!
When he grew weary of that household clog,
He chose my easier bonds.

Oct. I wonder not
Your bonds are easy; you have long been practised
In that lascivious art. He is not the first,
For whom you spread your snares; let Cæsar witness.

Cleo. I loved not Cæsar; it was but gratitude
I paid his love: the worst your malice can,
Is but to say the greatest of mankind
Has been my slave. The next, but far above him

In my esteem, is he, whom law calls yours.
But whom his love made mine.

Oct. I would view nearer [Coming up close to her.]

That face, which has so long usurped my right,
To find the inevitable charms, that catch
Mankind so sure, that ruined my dear lord.

Cleo. Oh, you do well to search; for had you known

But half these charms, you had not lost his heart.
Oct. Far be their knowledge from a Roman lady,

Far from a modest wife. Shame of our sex!
Dost thou not blush to own those black endearments,

That make sin pleasing?

Cleo. You may blush you want them.
If bounteous nature, if indulgent heaven,
Have given me charms to please the bravest man,

Should I not thank them? should I be ashamed,
And not be proud? I am, that he has loved me;
And, when I love not him, heaven change this face

For one like that!

Oct. Thou lovest him not so well.

Cleo. I love him better, and deserve him more.

Oct. You do not, cannot: you have been his ruin.

Who made him cheap at Rome, but Cleopatra?
Who made him scorned abroad, but Cleopatra?
At Actium who betrayed him? Cleopatra.
Who made his children orphans, and poor me
A wretched widow?—only Cleopatra.

Cleo. Yet she, who loves him best, is Cleopatra.

If you have suffered, I have suffered more.
You bear the specious title of a wife,
To gild your cause, and draw the pitying world
To favour it: the world contemns poor me,

For I have lost my honour, lost my fame,
And stained the glory of my royal house,
And all to bear the branded name of mistress.
There wants but life, and that too I would lose
For him I love.

Oct. Be it so then; take thy wish.

[Exit with Vent.]

Cleo. And 'tis my wish,
Now he is lost, for whom I lived.
My sight grows dim, and every object dances
And swims before me in the maze of death.
My spirits, while they were opposed, kept up;
They could not sink beneath a rival's scorn:
But now she's gone they faint.

Alex. Mine have had leisure
To recollect their strength, and furnish counsel
To ruin her, who else must ruin you.

Cleo. Vain promiser!
Lead me, my Charmion; nay, your hand too, Iras.
My grief has weight enough to sink you both.
Conduct me to some solitary chamber,
And draw the curtains round,
Then leave me to myself, to take alone
My fill of grief;
There I till death will his unkindness weep,
As harmless infants mourn themselves asleep.

[Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—A Saloon.

Enter Antony and Dolabella.

Dol. Why would you shift it from yourself on me?

Can you not tell her you must part?

Ant. I cannot;

I could pull out an eye and bid it go,
And the other should not weep. Oh, Dolabella!
How many deaths are in this word 'Depart!'
I dare not trust my tongue to tell her so:
One look of her's would thaw me into tears,
And I should melt, till I were lost again.

Dol. Then let Ventidius;
He's rough by nature.

Ant. Oh, he'll speak too harshly,
He'll kill her with the news: thou, only thou.

Dol. Nature has cast me in so soft a mould,
That but to hear a story, feigned for pleasure,
Of some sad lover's death, moistens my eyes,
And robs me of my manhood.—I should speak
So faintly, with such fear to grieve her heart,
She'd not believe it earnest.

Ant. Therefore, therefore
Thou, only thou, art fit. Think thyself me,
And when thou speakest (but let it first be long),
Take off the edge from every sharper sound,
And let our parting be as gently made
As other loves begin. Wilt thou do this?

Dol. What you have said so sinks into my soul,
That, if I must speak, I shall speak just so.

Ant. I leave you then to your sad task. Farewell!

I sent her word to meet you.

[Goes to the door, and comes back.]

I forgot :

Let her be told, I'll make her peace with mine :
Her crown and dignity shall be preserved,
If I have power with Cæsar—Oh ! be sure
To think on that !

Dol. Fear not, I will remember.

[Antony goes again to the door, and comes back.

Ant. And tell her too, how much I was constrained ;

I did not this but with extremest force.

Desire her not to hate my memory,

For I'll still cherish hers—insist on that.

Dol. Trust me, I'll not forget it.

Ant. Then that's all.

[Goes out and returns again.

Wilt thou forgive my fondness this once more ?

Tell her, though we shall never meet again,

If I should hear she took another love, [go,

The news would break my heart—Now I must

For every time I have returned, I feel

My soul more tender, and my next command

Would be to bid her stay, and ruin both. [Exit.

Dol. Men are but children of a larger growth,

Our appetites as apt to change as theirs,

And full as craving too, and full as vain ;

And yet the soul, shut up in her dark room,

Viewing so clear abroad, at home sees nothing,

But, like a mole in earth, busy and blind,

Works all her folly up, and casts it outward

To the world's open view. Thus I discovered,

And blamed the love of ruined Antony,

Yet wish, that I were he, to be so ruined.

Enter Ventidius above.

Vent. Alone, and talking to himself ! Concerned too !

Perhaps my guess is right : he loved her once,
And may pursue it still.

Dol. Oh, friendship ! friendship !

I'll canst thou answer this, reason worse :

Unfaithful in the attempt, hopeless to win,

And, if I win, undone. Mere madness all.

And yet the occasion fair. What injury

To him, to wear the robe, which he throws by ?

Vent. None, none at all. This happens as I wish,

To ruin her yet more with Antony. [Aside.

Enter Cleopatra, talking with Alexas, Charmion, and Iras, on the other side.

Dol. She comes ! what charms have sorrow on that face !

Sorrow seems pleased to dwell with so much sweetness ;

Yet now and then a melancholy smile

Breaks loose, like lightning in a winter's night,

And shows a moment's day.

Vent. If she should love him too ! Her eunuch there !

That porcupine bodes ill weather. Draw, draw nearer,

Sweet devil ! that I may hear.

Alex. Believe me ; try

[Dolabella goes over to Charmion and

Iras, seems to talk with them.

2 s

To make him jealous ; jealousy is like
A polished glass, held to the lips, when life's in doubt :

If there be breath, 'twill catch the lamp and show it.

Cleo. I grant you jealousy's a proof of love,

But 'tis a weak and unavailing medicine ;

It puts out the disease, and makes it show,

But has no power to cure.

Alex. 'Tis your last remedy, and strongest too :

And then this Dolabella, who so fit

To practise on ? He's handsome, valiant, young,

And looks as he were laid for nature's bait

To catch weak women's eyes.

He stands already more than half suspected

Of loving you : the least kind word or glance,

You give this youth, will kindle him with love ;

Then, like a burning vessel set adrift,

You'll send him down amain before the wind,

To fire the heart of jealous Antony.

Cleo. Can I do this ? ah, no ! my love's so true,

That I can neither hide it, where it is,

Nor show it, where it is not. Nature meant me

A wife, a silly, harmless household dove,

Fond without art, and kind without deceit ;

But fortune, that has made a mistress of me,

Has thrust me out to the wide world, unfurnished

Of falsehood to be happy.

Alex. Force yourself ;

The event will be, your lover will return

Doubly desirous to possess the good,

Which once he feared to lose.

Cleo. I must attempt it ;

But oh, with what regret !

[Exit Alex. She comes up to Dolabella.

Vent. So now the scene draws near ; they're in my reach.

Cleo. to Dol. Discoursing with my women !

Might not I

Share in your entertainment ?

Char. You have been

The subject of it, madam.

Cleo. How ! and how ?

Iras. Such praises of your beauty !

Cleo. Mere poetry :

Your Roman wits, your Gallus and Tibullus,

Have taught you this from Cytheris and Delia.

Dol. Those Roman wits have never been in Egypt.

Cytheris and Delia else had been unsung :

I, who have seen—had I been born a poet,

Should chuse a nobler name.

Cleo. You flatter me ;

But it is your nation's vice : all of your country

Are flatterers, and all false. Your friend is like you ;

I am sure he sent you not to speak these words.

Dol. No madam ; yet he sent me—

Cleo. Well, he sent you—

Dol. On a less pleasing errand.

Cleo. How ! less pleasing ?

Less to yourself or me ?

Dol. Madam, to both ;
For you must mourn, and I must grieve to cause it.

Cleo. You, Charmion, and your fellow, stand at distance.

Hold up, my spirits ! [Aside.]—Well, now your mournful matter,

For I am prepared, perhaps can guess it too.

Dol. I wish you would, for 'tis a thankless office

To tell ill news ; and I, of all your sex,
Most fear displeasing you.

Cleo. Of all your sex,
I soonest could forgive you, if you should.

Vent. Most delicate advances ! Woman ! woman !

Dear, damned unconstant sex !

Cleo. In the first place,
I am to be forsaken ; is it not so ?

Dol. I wish I could not answer to that question.

Cleo. Then pass it over, because it troubles you :

I should have been more grieved another time.
Next, I am to lose my kingdom—Farewell,
Egypt !

Yet is there any more ?

Dol. Madam, I fear

Your too deep sense of grief has turned your reason.

Cleo. No, no, I am not run mad ; I can bear fortune ;

And love may be expelled by other love,
As poisons are by poisons.

Dol. —You overjoy me, madam,
To find your griefs so moderately borne.

You have the worst : all are not false like him.

Cleo. No, heaven forbid they should.

Dol. Some men are constant.

Cleo. And constancy deserves reward, that is certain.

Dol. Deserves it not, but give it leave to hope.

Vent. I'll swear thou hast my leave. I have enough :

But how to manage this ! Well, I'll consider.

[Exit.]

Dol. I came prepared
To tell you heavy news ; now which I thought
Would fright the blood from your pale cheeks to hear ;

But you have met it with a cheerfulness,
That makes my task more easy ; and my tongue,
Which on another's message was employed,
Would gladly speak its own.

Cleo. Hold, Dolabella.

First tell me, were you chosen by my lord,
Or sought you this employment ?

Dol. He picked me out, and, as his bosom-
friend,

He charged me with his words.

Cleo. The message then
I know was tender, and each accent smooth.
To mollify that rugged word 'Depart !'

Dol. Oh ! you mistake : he chose the harshest words :

With fiery eyes, and with contracted brows,
He coined his face in the severest stamp,
And fury shook his fabric like an earthquake :
He heaved for vent, and burst, like bellowing
Etna,

In sounds scarce human, 'Hence, away for ever !

'Let her begone, the blot of my renown,

'And bane of all my hopes !

[All the time of this speech Cleopatra seems more and more concerned, till she sinks quite down.]

'Let her be driven, as far as men can think,

'From man's commerce : she'll poison to the centre.'

Cleo. Oh, I can bear no more ! [Faints.]

Dol. Help, help ! Oh wretch ! oh cursed, cursed wretch !

Char. Help ! chafe her temples, Iras.

Iras. Bend, bend her forward quickly.

Char. Heaven be praised,

She comes again !

Cleo. Oh, let him not reproach me !

Why have you brought me back to this loathed
being,

The abode of falsehood, violated vows,

And injured love ! For pity let me go ;

For, if there be a place of long repose,

I am sure I want it. My disdainful lord

Can never break that quiet, nor awake

The sleeping soul with hollowing in my tomb

Such words as fright her hence. Unkind ! unkind !

Dol. Believe me 'tis against myself I speak ;

That sure deserves belief. I injured him ;
My friend ne'er spoke these words. Oh ! had you seen

How often he came back, and every time
With something more obliging and more kind

To add to what he said ; what dear farewells,
How almost vanquished by his love he parted,

And leaned to what unwillingly he left :

I, traitor as I was, for love of you,

(But what can you not do, who made me false !)
I forged that lie, for whose forgiveness kneels

This self-accused, self-punished criminal.

Cleo. With how much ease believe we what we wish !

Rise, Dolabella ; if you have been guilty,
I have contributed, and too much love

Has made me guilty too.

The advance of kindness, which I made, was feigned,

To call back fleeting love by jealousy ;

But it would not last ! Oh ! rather let me lose,
Than so ignobly trifle with his heart.

Dol. I find your breast fenced round from human reach,

Transparent as a rock of solid crystal,

Seen through, but never pierced. My friend,

my friend !

What endless treasure hast thou thrown away,
And scattered, like an infant, in the ocean
Vain sums of wealth, which none can gather thence!

Cleo. Could you not beg
An hour's admittance to his private ear?
Like one, who wanders through long barren
wolds,
And yet foreknows no hospitable inn
Is near to succour hunger,
Eats his fill before his painful march,
So would I feed a while my famished eyes
Before we part, for I have far to go,
If death be far, and never must return.

Ventidius, with Octavia, behind.

Vent. From whence you may discover—Oh, sweet, sweet!
Would you indeed! the pretty hand in earnest?

Dol. I will, for this reward: [Takes her hand.
—Draw it not back;
'Tis all I e'er will beg.

Vent. They turn upon us.

Oct. What quick eyes has guilt!

Vent. Seem not to have observed them, and go on.

They enter.

Dol. Saw you the emperor, Ventidius?

Vent. No;

I sought him, but I heard, that he was private,
None with him but Hipparchus, his freed man.

Dol. Know you his business?

Vent. Giving him instructions
And letters to his brother, Cæsar.

Dol. Well,
He must be found. [Exeunt Dolabella and Cleopatra.

Oct. Most glorious impudence!

Vent. She looked, methought,

As she would say, 'Take your old man, Octavia;
'Thank you, I am better here.'

Well, but what use

Make we of this discovery?

Oct. Let it die.

Vent. I pity Dolabella! but she is dangerous;
Her eyes have power beyond Thessalian charms
To draw the moon from heaven; for eloquence
The sea-green Sirens taught her voice their flattery;

And, while she speaks, night steals upon the day,
Unmarked of those, that hear: then she's so charming,

Age buds at sight of her, and swells to youth:
The holy priests gaze on her when she smiles,
And with heaved hands, forgetting gravity,
They bless her wanton eyes: even I, who hate
her,

With a malignant joy behold such beauty,
And, while I curse, desire it. Antony
Must needs have some remains of passion still,
Which may ferment into a worse relapse,
If now not fully cured—But see, he comes—

2 s 2

I know this minute

With Cæsar he is endeavouring her peace.

Oct. You have prevailed—but for a farther purpose [Walks off.

I'll prove how he will relish this discovery.

What, make a strumpet's peace! it swells my
heart:

It must not, shall not be.

Vent. His guards appear.

Let me begin, and you shall second me.

Enter Antony.

Ant. Octavia, I was looking for you, my love.

What, are your letters ready? I have given
My last instructions.

Oct. Mine; my lord, are written.

Ant. Ventidius! [Drawing him aside.

Vent. My lord?

Ant. A word in private.

When saw you Dolabella?

Vent. Now, my lord.

He parted hence, and Cleopatra with him.

Ant. Speak softly; 'twas by my command he went,

To hear my last farewell.

Vent. It looked indeed

Like your farewell.

Ant. More softly—My farewell!

What secret meaning have you in these words,
Of 'my farewell!' He did it by my order.

Vent. Then he obeyed your order, I suppose.
[Aloud.

You bid him do it with all gentleness,
All kindness, and all—love.

Ant. How she mourned!

The poor forsaken creature!

Vent. She took it as she ought; she bore your parting,

As she did Cæsar's, as she would another's,
Were a new love to come.

Ant. Thou dost belie her,

Most basely and maliciously belie her.

Vent. I thought not to displease you: I have done.

Oct. You seem disturbed, my lord. [Coming up.

Ant. A very trifle.

Retire, my love.

Vent. It was indeed a trifle.

He sent—

Ant. No more. Look how thou disobey'st me;
Thy life shall answer it. [Angrily.

Oct. Then 'tis no trifle.

Vent. [To Oct.] 'Tis less; a very nothing:
you too saw it

As buds as I, and therefore 'tis no secret.

Ant. She saw it!

Vent. Yes; she saw young Dolabella—

Ant. Young Dolabella!

Vent. Young? I think him young,

And handsome too; and so do others think him.
But what of that? he went by your command,
Indeed, 'tis probable, with some kind message,
For she received it graciously: She smiled;
And then he grew familiar with her hand,

Squeezed it, and worried it with ravenous kisses;
She blushed, and sighed, and smiled, and blushed
again;

At last she took occasion to talk softly,
And brought her cheek up close, and leaned on his,

At which he whispered kisses back on hers;
And then she cried aloud, 'that constancy
Should be rewarded!'—This I saw and heard.

Ant. What woman was it, whom you heard and saw

So playful with my friend?
Not Cleopatra?

Vent. Even she, my lord.

Ant. My Cleopatra!

Vent. Your Cleopatra,
Dolabella's Cleopatra,
Every man's Cleopatra.

Ant. 'Tis false.

Vent. I do not lie, my lord.

Is this so strange? should mistresses be left,
And not provide against a time of change?
You know she's not much used to lonely nights.

Ant. I'll think no more of it.

I know 'tis false, and see the plot betwixt you.
You need not have gone this way, Octavia;
What harms it you, that Cleopatra's just?
She's mine no more. I see and I forgive;
Urge it no farther, love.

Oct. Are you concerned,
That she's found false?

Ant. I should be, were it so;

For, though 'tis past, I would not, that the world
Should tax my former choice; that I loved one
Of so light note; but I forgive you both.

Vent. What has my age deserved, that you should think

I would abuse your ears with perjury?
If heaven be true, she's false.

Ant. Though heaven and earth
Should witness it, I'll not believe her tainted.

Vent. I'll bring you, then, a witness
From hell, to prove her so. Nay, go not back, [Seeing Alexas just entering, and starting back.
For stay you must and shall.

Alex. What means my lord?

Vent. To make you do what most you hate, speak truth.

You are of Cleopatra's private counsel,
Of her bed counsel, her lascivious hours,
Are conscious of each nightly change she makes,
And watch her as Chaldeans do the moon,
Can tell what signs she passes through what day.

Alex. My noble lord!

Vent. My most illustrious pandar!

No fine set speech, no cadence, no turned periods,
But a plain homespun truth, is what I ask:
I did myself o'erhear your queen make love
To Dolabella: speak, for I will know,
By your confession, what more passed betwixt them, [ment,
How near the business draws to your employ-
And when the happy hour?

Ant. Speak truth, Alexas; whether it offend
Or please Ventidius, care not. Justify
Thy injured queen from malice: dare his worst.

Oct. [Aside.] See how he gives him courage,
how he fears

To find her false, and shuts his eyes to truth,
Willing to be misled!

Alex. As far as love may plead for woman's frailty,

Urged by desert and greatness of the lover,
So far, divine Octavia, may my queen
Stand even excused to you for loving him,
Who is your lord; so far from brave Ventidius
May her past actions hope a fair report.

Ant. 'Tis well and truly spoken. Mark, Ven-tidius.

Alex. To you, most noble emperor, her strong passion

Stands not excused, but wholly justified.

Her beauty's charms alone, without her crown,
From Ind and Meroe drew the distant vows
Of sighing kings, and at her feet were laid
The sceptres of the earth, exposed on heaps,
To chuse where she would reign;
She thought a Roman only would deserve her,
And, of all Romans, only Antony;
And, to be less than wife to you, disdained
Their lawful passion.

Ant. 'Tis but truth.

Alex. And yet though love and your unmatched desert

Have drawn her from the due regard of honour,
At last heaven opened her unwilling eyes
To see the wrongs, she offered fair Octavia,
Whose holy bed she lawlessly usurped:
The sad effects of this unprosperous war
Confirmed those pious thoughts.

Vent. [Aside.] Oh, wheel you there?

Observe him now; the man begins to mend,
And talk substantial reason. Fear not, eunuch;
The emperor has given thee leave to speak.

Alex. Else had I never dared to offend his ears

With what the last necessity has urged
On my forsaken mistress; yet I must not Presume to say, her heart is wholly altered.

Ant. No, dare not for thy life! I charge thee, dare not

Pronounce that fatal word!

Oct. Must I bear this? Good heaven! afford me patience! [Aside.]

Vent. Oh, sweet eunuch! my dear half man, proceed!

Alex. Yet Dolabella

Has loved her long; he, next my godlike lord, Deserves her best; and should she meet his
passion,

Rejected, as she is, by him she loved——

Ant. Hence from my sight, for I can bear no
more!

Let furies drag thee quick to hell! each torturing hand

Do thou employ till Cleopatra comes,

Then join thou too, and help to torture her!

[Exit Alexas, thrust out by Antony.]

Oct. 'Tis not well!

Indeed, my lord, 'tis much unkind to me,
To shew this passion, this extreme concernment,
For an abandoned, faithless prostitute.

Ant. Octavia, leave me! I am much disorder'd!

Leave me, I say!

Oct. My lord!

Ant. I bid you leave me.

Vent. Obey him, madam; best withdraw a while,

And see how this will work.

Oct. Wherein have I offended you, my lord,
That I am bid to leave you? am I false
Or infamous? am I a Cleopatra?

Were I she,

Base as she is, you would not bid me leave you,
But hang upon my neck, take slight excuses,
And fawn upon my falsehood.

Ant. 'Tis too much,
Too much, Octavia! I am prest with sorrows,
Too heavy to be borne, and you add more!
I would retire, and recollect what's left
Of man within, to aid me.

Oct. You would mourn

In private for your love, who has betrayed you.
You did but half return to me; your kindness
Lingered behind with her. I hear, my lord,
You make conditions for her,
And would include her treaty; wondrous proofs
Of love to me!

Ant. Are you my friend, Ventidius?

Or are you turned a Dolabella too,
And let this fury loose?

Vent. Oh, be advised,
Sweet madam! and retire.

Oct. Yes, I will go, but never to return;
You shall no more be haunted with this fury.
My lord, my lord! love will not always last,
When urged with long unkindness and disdain.
Take her again, whom you prefer to me;
She stays but to be called. Poor cozened man!
Let a feigned parting give her back your heart,
Which a feigned love first got; for injured me,
Though my just sense of wrongs forbid my stay,
My duty shall be yours.
To the dear pledges of our former love
My tenderness and care shall be transferred,
And they shall cheer by turns my widowed nights.

So take my last farewell! for I despair
To have you whole, and scorn to take you half.

[Exit.]

Vent. I combat heaven, which blasts my best designs!

My last attempt must be to win her back;

But oh! I fear in vain.

Ant. Was I framed with this plain honest heart,

Which knows not to disguise its griefs and weakness,

But bears its workings outward to the world?

I should have kept the mighty anguish in,
And forced a smile at Cleopatra's falsehood;
Octavia had believed it, and had staid.
But I am made a shallow-forded stream,
Seen to the bottom, all my clearness scorned,
And all my faults exposed.—See, where he comes,

Enter Dolabella.

Who has profaned the sacred name of friend,
And worn it into vileness!

With how secure a brow and specious form
He gilds the secret villain! Sure that face
Was meant for honesty, but heaven mismatch'd it,
And furnished treason out with nature's pomp,
To make its work more easy.

Dol. O my friend!

Ant. Well, Dolabella, you performed my message?

Dol. I did, unwillingly.

Ant. Unwillingly!

Was it so hard for you to bear our parting?
You should have wished it.

Dol. Why!

Ant. Because you love me;
And she received my message with as true,
With as unfeigned a sorrow as you brought it?

Dol. She loves you even to madness.

Ant. Oh! I know it.

You, Dolabella, do not better know
How much she loves me. And should I
Forsake this beauty, this all perfect creature?

Dol. I could not, were she mine.

Ant. And yet you first

Persuaded me. How come you altered since?

Dol. I said at first I was not fit to go:
I could not hear her sighs, and see her tears,
But pity must prevail; and so perhaps
It may again with you; for I have promised,
That she should take her last farewell; and see,
She comes to claim my word.

Enter Cleopatra.

Ant. False Dolabella!

Dol. What's false, my lord?

Ant. Why, Dolabella's false,
And Cleopatra's false; both false and faithless.
Draw near, you well-joined wickedness, you serpents,

Whom I have in my kindly bosom warmed,
Till I am stung to death!

Dol. My lord, have I

Deserved to be thus used?

Cleo. Can heaven prepare
A newer torment? can it find a curse
Beyond our separation?

Ant. Yes, if fate

Be just, much greater: Heaven should be ingenious

In punishing such crimes. The rolling stone
And gnawing vulture were slight pains, invented
When Jove was young, and no examples known
Of mighty ills; but you have ripened sin
To such a monstrous growth, 'twill pose the gods

To find an equal torture. Two, two such !
 Oh, there's no farther name ; two such to me,
 To me, who locked my soul within your breasts,
 Had no desires, no joys, no life but you ;
 When half the globe was mine, I gave it you
 In dowry with my heart : I had no use,
 No fruit, of all but you : a friend and mistress
 Was what the world could give. Oh, Cleopatra !
 Oh, Dolabella ! how could you betray
 This tender heart, which, with an infant fond-
 ness,

Lay lulled betwixt your bosoms, and there slept
 Secure of injured faith ?

Dol. If she has wronged you,
 Heaven, hell, and you, revenge it !

Ant. If she has wronged me !
 Thou wouldst evade thy part of guilt : but swear
 Thou lovest not her.

Dol. Not so as I love you.

Ant. Not so ? Swear, swear, I say, thou dost not love her.

Dol. No more than friendship will allow.

Ant. No more !

Friendship allows thee nothing : thou art perjured—

And yet thou didst not swear thou lovest her
 not ;

But not so much, no more. Oh, trifling hypocrite !

Who durst not own to her thou dost not love,
 Nor own to me thou dost ! Ventidius heard it,
 Octavia saw it.

Cleo. They are enemies.

Ant. Alexas is not so ; he, he confest it ;
 He, who next hell best knew it, he avowed it.
 Why do I seek a proof beyond yourself ?

[To Dol.

You, whom I sent to bear my last farewell,
 Returned to plead her stay.

Dol. What shall I answer ?

If to have loved be guilt, then I have sinned ;
 But if to have repented of that love
 Can wash away my crime, I have repented ;
 Yet, if I have offended past forgiveness,
 Let her not suffer : she is innocent.

Cleo. Ah, what will not a woman do, who loves !

What means will she refuse to keep that heart,
 Where all her joys are placed ! 'Twas I encouraged,

'Twas I blew up the fire, that scorched his soul,
 To make you jealous, and by that regain you :
 But all in vain ; I could not counterfeit :
 In spite of all the dams, my love broke o'er,
 And drowned my heart again. Fate took the occasion,

And thus one minute's feigning has destroyed
 My whole life's truth.

Ant. Thin cobweb arts of falsehood,
 Seen and broke through at first.

Dol. Forgive your mistress.

Cleo. Forgive your friend.

Ant. You have convinced yourselves ;

You plead each other's cause. What witness have you,

That you but meant to raise my jealousy ?

Cleo. Ourselves and heaven.

Ant. Guilt witnesses for guilt ! Hence love and friendship !

You have no longer place in human breasts ;
 These two have driven you out : avoid my sight !
 I would not kill the man, whom I have loved,
 And cannot hurt the woman ; but avoid me !
 I do not know how long I can be tame ;
 For, if I stay one minute more to think
 How I am wronged, my justice and revenge
 Will cry so loud within me, that my pity
 Will not be heard for either.

Dol. Heaven has but

Our sorrow for our sins, and then delights
 To pardon erring man ; sweet mercy seems
 Its darling attribute, which limits justice,
 As if there were degrees in infinite,
 And infinite would rather want perfection,
 Than punish to extent.

Ant. I can forgive

A foe, but not a mistress and a friend :
 Treason is there in its most horrid shape,
 Where trust is greatest ; and the soul resigned
 Is stabbed by its own guards. I'll hear no more :
 Hence from my sight for ever !

Cleo. How ? for ever !

I cannot go one moment from your sight,
 And must I go for ever ?

My joys, my only joys, are centred here :
 What place have I to go to ? my own kingdom ?
 That I have lost for you ; or to the Romans ?
 They hate me for your sake : or must I wander
 The wide world o'er, a helpless banished woman,
 Banished for love of you, banished from you ;
 Ay, there's the banishment ! Oh, hear me, hear
 me,

With strictest justice, for I beg no favour,
 And, if I have offended you, then kill me,
 But do not banish me !

Ant. I must not hear you ;

I have a fool within me takes your part,
 But honour stops my ears.

Cleo. For pity hear me !

Would you cast off a slave, who followed you,
 Who crouched beneath your spurn ? He has no pity !

See, if he gives one tear to my departure,
 One look, one kind farewell : oh, iron heart !
 Let all the gods look down and judge betwixt us,
 If he did ever love !

Ant. No more. Alexas !

Dol. A perjured villain !

Ant. to Cleo. Your Alexas ! yours !

Cleo. Oh, 'twas his plot ; his ruinous design
 To engage you in my love by jealousy.

Hear him ; confront him with me ; let him speak.

Ant. I have, I have.

Cleo. And if he clear me not—

Ant. Your creature ! one, who hangs upon your smiles,

Watches your eye, to say or to unsay
Whate'er you please. I am not to be moved.

Cleo. Then must we part? farewell, my cruel lord!

The appearance is against me; and I go,
Unjustified, for ever from your sight.
How I have loved, you know; how yet I love,
My only comfort is, I know, myself:
I love you more, even now you are unkind,
Than when you loved me most; so well, so truly,
I'll never strive against, but die pleased
To think you once were mine.

Ant. Good Heaven! they weep at parting.
Must I weep too? that calls them innocent.
I must not weep; and yet I must, to think,
That I must not forgive —
Live, but live wretched; 'tis but just you should,
Who made me so: live from each other's sight;
Let me not hear you meet. Set all the earth
And all the seas betwixt your sundered loves;
View nothing common but the sun and skies.
Now all take several ways,
And each your own sad fate with mine deplore,
That you were false, and I could trust no more.
[Exeunt severally.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The Temple.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmion, and Iras.

Char. Be just, heaven! such virtue, punished thus,

Will make us think, that chance rules all above,
And shuffles, with a random hand, the lots,
Which man is forced to draw.

Cleo. I could tear out these eyes, that gained his heart,
And had not power to keep it. Oh, the curse
Of doating on, even when I find it dotage!
Bear witness, gods! you heard him bid me go;
You, whom he mocked, with imprecating vows.
Of promised faith—I'll die, I will not bear it.
You may hold me—

[She pulls out her dagger, and they hold her.
But I can keep my breath; I can die inward,
And choke this love.

Enter Alexas.

Iras. Help, oh, Alexas, help!
The queen grows desperate, her soul struggles
in her,

With all the agonies of love and rage,
And strives to force its passage.

Cleo. Let me go.
Art thou there, traitor!—Oh,
Oh for a little breath to vent my rage!
Give, give me way, and let me loose upon him.

Alex. Yes, I deserve it for my ill-timed truth.
Was it for me to prop
The ruins of a falling majesty,
To place myself beneath the mighty flaw,
Thus to be crushed and pounded into atoms,
By its overwhelming weight? 'Tis too presum-
ing

For subjects to preserve that wilful power,
Which courts its own destruction.

Cleo. I would reason
More calmly with you. Did you not o'errule
And force my plain, direct, and open love
Into these crooked paths of jealousy?
Now what's the event? Octavia is removed;
But Cleopatra banished. Thou, thou villain,
Hast pushed my boat to open sea, to prove,
At my sad cost, if thou canst steer it back.
It cannot be; I am lost too far; I am ruined:
Hence! thou impostor, traitor, monster, devil—
I can no more: thou and my griefs have sunk
Me down so low, that I want voice to curse thee.

Alex. Suppose some ship-wrecked seaman near the shore,
Dropping and faint with climbing up the cliff,
If, from above, some charitable hand
Pull him to safety, hazarding himself
To draw the other's weight, would he look back
And curse him for his pains? The case is yours;
But one step more, and you have gained the
height.

Cleo. Sunk, never more to rise.

Alex. Octavia's gone, and Dolabella banished.
Believe me, madam, Antony is yours:
His heart was never lost, but started off
To jealousy, love's last retreat, and covert,
Where it lies hid in shades, watchful in silence,
And listening for the sound, that calls it back.
Some other, any man, 'tis so advanced,
May perfect this unfinished work, which I (Unhappy only to myself) have left
So easy to his hand.

Cleo. Look well thou dost, else—

Alex. Else what your silence threatens—Antony
Is mounted up the Pharos, from whose turret
He stands surveying our Egyptian gallies
Engaged with Cæsar's fleet: now death or conquest!

If the first happen, fate acquits my promise:
If we o'ercome, the conqueror is yours.

[A distant shout within.]

Char. Have comfort, madam: did you mark that shout? [Second shout nearer.]

Iras. Hark! they redouble it.

Alex. 'Tis from the port;
The loudness shows it near. Good news, kind heavens!

Cleo. Osiris make it so!

Enter Serapion.

Ser. Where, where's the queen?

Alex. How frightfully the holy coward stares!
As if not yet recovered of the assault,
When all his gods, and what's more dear to him,
His offerings, were at stake.

Ser. Oh, horror, horror!
Egypt has been; the latest hour is come.
The queen of nations from her ancient seat
Is sunk for ever in the dark abyss:
Time has unrolled her glories to the last,
And now closed up the volume.

Cleo. Be more plain !

Say whence thou camest ! though Fate is in thy face,

Which from thy haggard eyes looks wildly out,
And threatens ere thou speakest.

Ser. I came from Pharos,

From viewing (spare me, and imagine it)

Our land's last hope, your navy——

Cleo. Vanquished ?

Ser. No ;

They fought not.

Cleo. Then they fled.

Ser. Nor that : I saw,

With Antony, your well-appointed fleet

Row out, and thrice he waved his hand on high,

And thrice, with cheerful cries, they shouted back :

'Twas then false Fortune, like a fawning strumpet,

About to leave the bankrupt prodigal,

With a dissembled smile would kiss at parting,

And flatter to the last : the well-timed oars

Now dipped from every bark, now smoothly run

To meet the foe ; and soon indeed they met,

But not as foes. In few, we saw their caps

On either side thrown up : the Egyptian galleies,

Received like friends, past through, and fell behind

The Roman rear ; and now they all come forward,

And ride within the port.

Cleo. Enough, Serapion ;

I have heard my doom. This needed not, you gods !

When I lost Antony, your work was done.

'Tis but superfluous malice. Where's my lord ?

How bears he this last blow ?

Ser. His fury cannot be expressed by words :

Thrice he attempted headlong to have fallen

Full on his foes, and aimed at Cæsar's galley :

Withheld, he raves on you, cries he's betrayed.

Should he now find you——

Alex. Shun him, seek your safety,

Till you can clear your innocence.

Cleo. I'll stay.

[ment,

Alex. You must not ; haste you to the monument
While I make speed to Cæsar.

Cleo. Cæsar ! no ;

I have no business with him.

Alex. I can work him.

To spare your life, and let this madman perish.

Cleo. Base fawning wretch ! wouldst thou betray him too ?

Hence from my sight ! I will not hear a traitor :

'Twas thy design brought all this ruin on us.

Serapion, thou art honest ; counsel me :

But haste, each moment's precious.

Ser. Retire ; you must not see Antony.

He, who began this mischief,

'Tis just he tempt the danger : let him clear you ;

And since he offered you his servile tongue

To gain a poor precarious life from Cæsar,

Let him expose that fawning eloquence,

And speak to Antony.

Alex. Oh heavens ! I dare not :

I meet my certain death.

Cleo. Slave, thou deservest it.

Not that I fear my lord will I avoid him ;

I know him noble : when he banished me,

And thought me false, he scorned to take my life :

But I'll be justified, and then die with him.

Alex. Oh ! pity me, and let me follow you !

Cleo. To death, if thou stir hence. Speak, if thou canst,

Now for thy life, which basely thou wouldst save,

While mine I prize at this. Come, good Serapion.

[Exeunt Cleo. Ser. Char. and Eras.

Alex. Oh, that I less could fear to lose this being,

Which, like a snow-ball in my coward hand,

The more 'tis grasped the faster melts away.

Poor reason ! what a wretched aid art thou !

For still, in spite of thee,

These two long lovers, soul and body, dread

Their final separation. Let me think ;

What can I say to save myself from death ?

No matter what becomes of Cleopatra.

Ant. Which way ? where ?

[Within.

Vent. This leads to the monument.

[Within.

Alex. Ah me ! I hear him : yet I'm unprepared :

My gift of lying's gone ;

And this court-devil, which I so oft have raised,

Forsakes me at my need. I dare not stay,

Yet cannot go far hence.

[Exit.

Enter Antony and Ventidius.

Ant. Oh, happy Cæsar ! thou hast men to lead.

Think not 'tis thou hast conquered Antony,

But Rome has conquered Egypt. I'm betrayed.

Vent. Curse on this treacherous train !

Their soil and heaven infect them all with baseness,

And their young souls come tainted to the world,

With the first breath they draw.

Ant. The original villain sure no god created ;

He was a bastard of the Sun by Nile ;

Aped into man with all his mother's mud

Crusted about his soul.

Vent. The nation is

One universal traitor, and their queen

The very spirit and extract of them all.

Ant. Is there yet left

A possibility of aid and valour ?

Is there one god unsworn to my destruction,

The least unmortgaged hope ? for, if there be,

Methinks I cannot fall beneath the fate

Of such a boy as Cæsar.

The world's one half is yet in Antony,

And from each limb of it, that's hew'd away,

The soul comes back to me.

Vent. There yet remain

Three legions in the town ; the last assault

Lopt off the rest. If death be your design,

As I must wish it now, these are sufficient

To make a heap about us of dead foes,

An honest pile for burial.

Ant. They're enough.

We'll not divide our stars, but side by side
Fight emulous, and with malicious eyes
Survey each other's acts: so every death
Thou givest, I'll take on me as a just debt,
And pay thee back a soul.

Vent. Now you shall see I love you. Not a word

Of chiding more. By my few hours of life,
I am so pleased with this brave Roman fate,
That I would not be Cæsar to outlive you!
When we put off this flesh, and mount together,
I shall be shewn to all the ethereal crowd,
'Lo! this is he, who died with Antony!'

Ant. Who knows but we may pierce through all their troops,

And reach my veterans yet? 'Tis worth the tempting

To o'erleap this gulf of fate,
And leave our wandering destinies behind.

Enter Alexus, trembling.

Vent. See, see that villain!

See Cleopatra stamp'd upon that face,
With all her cunning, all her arts of falsehood!
How she looks out through those dissembling
eyes!

How he has set his countenance for deceit,
And promises a lie before he speaks!

Let me dispatch him first. [Drawing.]

Alex. Oh, spare me, spare me!

Ant. Hold; he's not worth your killing. On thy life,

(Which thou mayest keep, because I scorn to take it)

No syllable to justify thy queen;

Save thy base tongue its office.

Alex. Sir, she's gone

Where she shall never be molested more,
By love or you.

Ant. Fled to her Dolabella!

Die, traitor! I revoke my promise; die!

[Going to kill him.]

Alex. Oh, hold; she is not fled.

Ant. She is; my eyes

Are open to her falsehood. My whole life
Has been a golden dream of love and friendship;
But now I wake, I'm like a merchant roused
From soft repose, to see his vessel sinking
And all his wealth cast o'er. Ungrateful woman!
Who followed me but as the swallow summer,
Hatching her young ones in my kindly beams,
Singing her flatteries to my morning wake;
But now my winter comes, she spreads her wings,
And seeks the spring of Cæsar.

Alex. Think not so;

Her fortunes have in all things mixed with yours:
Had she betrayed her naval force to Rome,
How easily might she have gone to Cæsar;
Secure by such a bribe?

Vent. She sent it first,
To be more welcome after.

Ant. 'Tis too plain,
Else would she have appeared to clear herself.

2 T

Alex. Too fatally she has; she could not bear
To be accused by you, but shut herself
Within her monument, looked down and sighed,
While from her unchanged face the silent tears
Dropt, as they had not leave, but stole their
parting,
Some undistinguished words she inly murmur-
ed;

At last she raised her eyes, and with such looks
As dying Lucrece cast—

Ant. My heart forebodes—

Vent. All for the best. Go on.

Alex. She snatched her poniard,
And, ere we could prevent the fatal blow,
Plunged it within her breast; then turned to
me;

'Go, bear my lord,' said she, 'my last farewell,
And ask him if he yet suspect my faith.'

More she was saying, but death rushed betwixt.
She half pronounced your name with her last breath,

And buried half within her.

Vent. Heaven be praised!

Ant. Then art thou innocent, my poor dear
love!

And art thou dead?

Oh, those two words! their sound should be divided.

Hadst thou been false and died, or hadst thou lived

And hadst been true—But innocence and death!
This shows not well above. Then what am I?
The murderer of this truth, this innocence!
Thoughts cannot form themselves in words so horrid

As can express my guilt!

Vent. Is it come to this? The gods have been too gracious,

And thus you thank them for it.

Ant. [To Alex.] Why stay'st thou here?

Is it for thee to spy upon my soul,
And see its inward mourning? Get thee hence!
Thou art not worthy to behold what now
Becomes a Roman emperor to perform.

Alex. He loves her still; [Aside.]
His grief betrays it. Good! the joy to find She's yet alive completes the reconciliation:
I have saved myself and her. But oh! the Romans!

Fate comes too fast upon my wit,
Hunts me too hard, and meets me at each double.

Vent. Would she had died a little sooner though,

Before Octavia went; you might have treated;
Now 'twill look tame, and would not be received.

Come, rouse yourself, and let's die warm together.

Ant. I will not fight; there's no more work
for war;

The business of my angry hours is done.

Vent. Cæsar is at your gate.

Ant. Why, let him enter:
He's welcome now.

Vent. What lethargy has crept into your soul?

Ant. 'Tis but a scorn of life, and just desire
To free myself from bondage.

Vent. Do it bravely.

Ant. I will, but not by fighting. Oh, Ventidius,

What should I fight for now? my queen is dead:
I was but great for her: my power, my empire,
Were but my merchandise to buy her love,
And conquered kings my factors. Now she's dead,

Let Cæsar take the world—
An empty circle, since the jewel's gone,
Which made it worth my strife: my being's nauseous,

For all the bribes of life are gone away.

Vent. Would you be taken?

Ant. Yes, I would be taken;

But as a Roman ought; dead, my Ventidius—
For I'll convey my soul from Cæsar's reach.
And lay down life myself. 'Tis time the world
Should have a lord, and know, whom to obey.
We two have kept its homage in suspense,
And bent the globe, on whose each side we trod,
Till it was dinted inwards. Let him walk
Alone upon it: I'm weary of my part.
My torch is out, and the world stands before me
Like a black desert at the approach of night:
I'll lay me down and stray no farther on.

Vent. I could be grieved,
But that I'll not outlive you. Chuse your death,
For I have seen him in such various shapes,
I care not which I take: I'm only troubled
The life I bear is worn to such a rag,
'Tis scarce worth giving. I could wish indeed
We threw it from us with a better grace,
That, like two lions taken in the toils,
We might at least thrust out our paws, and wound

The hunters, that enclose us.

Ant. I have thought on it;

Ventidius, you must live.

Vent. I must not, sir.

Ant. Wilt thou not live to speak some good of me?

To stand by my fair fame, and guard the approaches

From the ill tongues of men?

Vent. Who shall guard mine

For living after you?

Ant. Say, I command it.

Vent. If we die well, our deaths will speak themselves,

And need no living witness.

Ant. Thou hast loved me,

And fain I would reward thee. I must die;

Kill me, and take the merit of my death,

To make thee friends with Cæsar.

Vent. Thank your kindness!

You said I loved you, and in recompense

You bid me turn a traitor! Did I think

You would have used me thus! that I should die

With a hard thought of you!

Ant. Forgive me, Roman.

Since I have heard of Cleopatra's death.

My reason bears no rule upon my tongue,

But lets my thoughts break all at random out.

I have thought better; do not deny me twice.

Vent. By heaven I will not!

Let it not be to outlive you.

Ant. Kill me first,

And then die thou; for 'tis but just thou serve
Thy friend before thyself.

Vent. Give me your hand—

We soon shall meet again. Now, farewell, emperor! [Embrace.]

Method that word's too cold to be my last:
Since death sweeps all distinctions, farewell,
friend!

That's all—

I will not make a business of a trifle—

And yet I cannot look on you and kill you:

Pray turn your face.

Ant. I do: strike home; be sure.

Vent. Home as my sword will reach.

[Kills himself.]

Ant. Oh, thou mistakest!

That wound was none of thine; give it me back:
Thou robbest me of my death.

Vent. I do indeed;

But think, 'tis the first time I e'er deceived you,
If that may plead my pardon. And you, gods!
Forgive me; if you will: for I die perjured,
Rather than kill my friend. [Dies.]

Ant. Farewell! ever my leader, even in death!

My queen and thou have got the start of me,
And I'm the lag of honour.—Gone so soon!
Is death no more! He used him carelessly,
With a familiar kindness; ere he knocked,
Ran to the door, and took him in his arms,
As who should say, you're welcome at all hours,
A friend need give no warning—Books had spoiled him,

For all the learned are cowards by profession.

'Tis not worth

My further thought; for death, for aught I know
Is but to think no more. Here's to be satisfied.

[Falls on his sword.]

I have missed my heart—Oh, unperforming
hand!

Thou never couldst have erred in a worse time.

My fortune jades me to the last; and death,

Like a great man, takes state, and makes me wait

For my admittance—

[Trampling within.]

Some, perhaps, from Cæsar!

If he should find me living, and suspect,

That I played booty with my life! I'll mend

My work ere they can reach me.

[Rises upon his knees.]

Enter Cleopatra, Charmion, and Iras.

Cleo. Where is my lord? where is he?

Char. There he lies,
And dead Ventidius by him.

Cleo. My fears were prophets ! I am come too late !

Oh, that accursed Alexas ! [Runs to him.

Ant. Art thou living ?

Or am I dead before I knew, and thou

The first kind ghost, that meets me ?

Cleo. Help me seat him !

Send quickly, send for help !

[They place him in a chair.

Ant. I am answered :

We live both. Sit thee down, my Cleopatra !

I'll make the most I can of life, to stay
A moment more with thee.

Cleo. How is it with you ?

Ant. 'Tis, as with a man

Removing in a hurry ; all packed up

But one dear jewel, that his haste forgot,

And he for that returns upon the spur ;

So I come back for thee.

Cleo. Too long, ye heavens ! you have been cruel to me !

*Oh, now be kind, and give me back
His fleeting life !*

Ant. It will not be, my love !

I keep my soul by force.

Say but thou art not false !

Cleo. 'Tis now too late

To say I'm true ; I'll prove it and die with
you.

Unknown to me Alexas feigned my death,
Which, when I knew, I hasted to prevent
This fatal consequence. My fleet betrayed
Both you and me.

Ant. And Dolabella—

Cleo. Scarce esteemed before he loved, but hated now.

Ant. Enough ! my life's not long enough for
more.

Thou say'st, thou wilt come after : I believe
thee ;

For I can now believe whate'er thou say'st,
That we may part more kindly.

Cleo. I will come ;

Doubt not, my life ! I'll come, and quickly too !
Cæsar shall triumph o'er no part of thee.

Ant. But grieve not, while thou stayest,
My last disastrous times !

Think we have had a clear and glorious day,
And heaven did kindly to delay the storm,
Just till our close of evening. Ten years love,
And not a moment lost, but all improved
To the utmost joys ! What ages have we lived !
And now to die each other's ! and so dying,
While hand in hand we walk in groves below,
Whole troops of lovers' ghosts shall flock about
us,

And all the train be ours.

Cleo. Your words are like the notes of dying swans,

Too sweet to last. Were there so many hours
For your unkindness, and not one for love !

2 T 2

Ant. No, not a minute—this one kiss—more worth

Than all I leave to Cæsar.— [Dies.

Cleo. Oh, tell me so again !

And take ten thousand kisses for that word—
My lord ! my lord ! speak if you yet have being !

Sign to me if you cannot speak ! or cast

One look ! do any thing, that shows you live !

Iras. He is gone too far to hear you,
And this, you see, a lump of senseless clay,
The leavings of a soul.

Char. Remember, madam,
He charged you not to grieve.

Cleo. And I'll obey him.

I have not loved a Roman not to know

What should become his wife—his wife, my Charmion !

For 'tis to that high title I aspire ;

And now I'll not die less. Let dull Octavia
Survive, to mourn him dead : my noble fate
Shall knit our spousals with a tie too strong
For Roman laws to break.

Iras. Will you then die ?

Cleo. Why shouldst thou make that question ?
Fly both, and bring the cure of all our ills.

Iras. Cæsar is merciful.—

Cleo. Let him be so

To those, that want his mercy. My poor lord
Made no such covenant with him to spare me,
When he was dead. Yield me to Cæsar's pride !
What ! to be led in triumph through the streets,
A spectacle to base plebeian eyes,
While some dejected friend of Antony's,
Close in a corner, shakes his head, and mutters
A secret curse on her, who ruined him !
I'll none of that.

Char. Whatever you resolve,
I'll follow, even to death.

Iras. I only feared

For you, but more should fear to live without
you.

Cleo. Why, now 'tis as it should be. Quick my friends,
Dispatch ! ere this the town's in Cæsar's hands :
My lord looks down concerned, and fears my
stay,

Lest I should be surprised :

Keep him not waiting for his love too long.

You, Charmion, bring my crown and richest
jewels ;

With them the wreath of victory I made
(Vain augury !) for him, who now lies dead :
You Iras, bring the cure of all our ills.

Iras. The aspicks, madam ?

Cleo. Must I bid you twice ?

[Ex. Char. and Iras.

'Tis sweet to die, when they would force life on
me,

To rush into the dark abode of death
And seize him first ! If he be like my love,
He is not frightful sure !

We are now alone, in secrecy and silence,

And is not this like lovers? I may kiss
These pale cold lips—Octavia does not see me;
And oh! 'tis better far to have him thus,
Than see him in her arms!—O welcome, welcome!

Enter Charmion and Iras, with the aspicks, &c.

Char. What must be done?

Cleo. Short ceremony, friends;
But yet it must be decent. First, this laurel Shall crown my hero's head: he fell not basely,
Nor left his shield behind him. Only thou
Couldst triumph o'er thyself, and thou alone
Wert worthy so to triumph.

Char. To what end
These ensigns of your pomp and royalty?

Cleo. Dull, that thou art! why, 'tis to meet my love,

As when I saw him first on Cydno's bank,
All sparkling like a goddess, so adorned,
I'll find him once again; my second spousals
Shall match my first in glory. Haste, haste
both,

And dress the bride of Antony!

Char. 'Tis done.

Cleo. Now set me by my lord; I claim this
place,

For I must conquer Cæsar, too, like him,
And win my share of the world. Hail, you dear relics

Of my immortal love!

Oh, let no impious hand remove you hence,
But rest for ever here! let Egypt give
His death that peace, which it denied his life!
Reach me the casket.

Iras. Underneath the fruit the aspicks lies.

Cleo. Welcome, thou kind deceiver!

[Putting aside the leaves.]

Thou best of thieves! who with an easy key
Dost open life, and, unperceived by us,
Even steals us from ourselves, discharging so
Death's dreadful office better than himself,
Touching our limbs so gently into slumber,
That Death stands by, deceived by his own image,

And thinks himself but sleep.

Ser. The queen, where is she? [Within.]
The town is yielded, Cæsar's at the gates.

Cleo. He comes too late to invade the rights of death.

Haste, haste, my friend, and rouse the serpent's
fury.

[Holds out her arm, and draws it back.]

Coward flesh—

Wouldst thou conspire with Cæsar to betray me,
As thou wert none of mine? I'll force thee to
it.

And not be sent by him,

And bring myself, my soul, to Antony.

[Turns aside, and then shows her arm bloody.]
Take hence: the work is done!

Ser. Break ope the door, [Within.]

And guard the traitor well.

Char. The next is ours.

Iras. Now, Charmion, to be worthy
Of our great queen and mistress.

[They apply the aspicks.]
Cleo. Already, death, I feel thee in my veins;
I go with such a will to find my lord,
That we shall quickly meet.

A heavy numbness creeps through every limb,
And now 'tis at my head: my eyelids fall,
And my dear love is vanished in a mist!
Where shall I find him, where? oh! turn me
to him,

And lay me on his breast!—Cæsar, thy worst!
Now part us if thou canst. [Dies.]

[Iras sinks down at her feet and dies, Charmion stands behind her chair as dressing her head.]

Enter Serapion, two Priests, Alexas, bound, and Egyptians.

2 Priest. Behold, Serapion, what havoc death has made!

Ser. 'Twas what I feared.
Charmion, is this well done?

Char. Yes, 'tis well done, and like a queen, the last
Of her great race. I follow her.

[Sinks down. Dies.]

Alex. 'Tis true,
She has done well: much better thus to die,
Than live to make a holiday in Rome.

Ser. See how the lovers lie in state together,
As they were giving laws to half mankind!
The impression of a smile, left in her face,
Shows she died pleased with him, for whom she lived,

And went to charm him in another world.
Cæsar's just entering; grief has now no leisure.
Secure that villain, as our pledge of safety,
To grace the imperial triumph. Sleep, blest pair!

Secure from human chance, long ages out,
While all the storms of fate fly o'er your tomb:
And fame to late posterity shall tell,
No lovers lived so great, or died so well.

[Exeunt omnes.]

TO MR. EDWARD HOWARD, ON HIS INCOMPARABLE, INCOMPREHENSIBLE POEM, CALLED "THE BRI-TISH PRINCES."

COME on, ye Critics, find one fault who dares;
For read it backward, like a witch's prayers,
'Twill do as well; throw not away your jests
On solid nonsense that abides all tests.
Wit, like tierce-claret, when't begins to pall Neglected lies, and 's of no use at all,

But, in its full perfection of decay,
Turns vinegar, and comes again in play.
Thou hast a brain, such as it is indeed ;
On what else should thy worm of fauce feed ?
Yet in a filbert I have often known
Maggots survive, when all the kernel's gone.
This simile shall stand in thy defence,
'Gainst those dull rogues who now and then write
sense.

The style's the same, whatever be thy theme,
As some digestions turn all ment to phlegm :
They lie, dear Ned, who say thy brain is barren,
Where deep conceits, like maggots, breed in carrion.

Thy stumbling founder'd jade can trot as high
As any other Pegasus can fly :
So the dull eel moves nimbler in the mud,
Than all the swift-finn'd racers of the flood.

As skilful divers to the bottom fall
Sooner than those that cannot swim at all ;
So in this way of writing, without thinking,
Thou hast a strange alacrity in sinking.
Thou writ'st below ev'n thy own natural parts, }
And with acquir'd dulness and new arts }
Of study'd nonsense, tak'st kind readers hearts }
Therefore, dear Ned, at my advice, forbear }
Such loud complaints 'gainst Criticos to prefer, }
Since thou art turn'd an arrant libeller ; }
Thou sett'st thy name to what thyself dost write :
Did ever libel yet so sharply bite ?

SONG,

Written at Sea, in the first Dutch War, 1665, the night before the Engagement.

To all you ladies now at land,
We men, at sea, indite ;
But first would have you understand,
How hard it is to write ;
The Muses now, and Neptune too,
We must implore to write to you,
With a fa, la, la, la, la.

For though the Muses should prove kind,
And fill our empty brain ;
Yet if rough Neptune rouse the wind,
To wave the azure main,
Our paper, pen, and ink, and we,
Roll up and down our ships at sea.
With a fa, &c.

Then if we write not by each post,
Think not we are unkind ;
Nor yet conclude your ships are lost,
By Dutchmen, or by wind :
Our tears we'll send a speedier way,
The tide shall bring them twice a-day.
With a fa, &c.

The king with wonder and surprise,
Will swear the seas grow bold ;
Because the tides will higher rise,
Then e'er they us'd of old :
But let him know, it is our tears
Bring floods of grief to Whitehall stairs.
With a fa, &c.

Should foggy Opdam chance to know
Our sad and dismal story ;
The Dutch would scorn so weak a foe,
And quit their fort at Goree ;
For what resistance can they find
From men, who've left their hearts behind !
With a fa, &c.

Let wind and weather do its worst,
Be you to us but kind ;
Let Dutchmen vapour, Spaniards curse,
No sorrow we shall find :
'Tis then no matter how things go,
Or who's our friend, or who's our foe,
With a fa, &c.

To pass our tedious hours away,
We throw a merry main ;
Or else at serious ombre play ;
But, why should we in vain
Each other's ruin thus pursue ?
We were undone when we left you.
With a fa, &c.

But now our fears tempestuous grow,
And cast our hopes away ;
Whilst you, regardless of our woe,
Sit careless at a play :
Perhaps, permit some happier man
To kiss your hand, or flirt your fan.
With a fa, &c.

When any mournful tune you hear,
That dies in every note ;
As if it sigh'd with each man's care,
For being so remote ;
Think how often love we've made
To you when all those tunes were play'd.
With a fa, &c.

In justice you cannot refuse,
To think of our distress ;
When we for hopes of honour lose
Our certain happiness ;
All those designs are but to prove
Ourselves more worthy of your love.
With a fa, &c.

And now we've told you all our loves,
And likewise all our fears ;
In hopes this declaration moves
Some pity from your tears ;
Let's hear of no inconstancy
We have too much of that at sea.
With a fa, la, la, la, la.

KNOTTING.

At noon, in a sunshiny day,
The brighter lady of the May,
Young Chloris innocent and gay,
Sat knotting in a shade:

Each slender finger play'd its part,
With such activity and art,
As would inflame a youthful heart,
And warm the most decay'd.

Her favourite swain, by chance, came by,
He saw no anger in her eye;
Yet when the bashful boy drew nigh,
She would have seem'd afraid.

She let her ivory needle fall,
And hurl'd away the twisted ball:
But straight gave Strephon such a call,
As would have rais'd the dead.

Dear gentle youth, is't none but thee?
With innocence I dare be free;
By so much truth and modesty
No nymph was e'er betray'd.

Come lean thy head upon my lap;
While thy smooth cheeks I stroke and clap,
Thou may'st securely take a nap;
Which he, poor fool, obey'd.

She saw him yawn, and heard him snore,
And found him fast asleep all o'er.
She sigh'd, and could endure no more.
But starting up, she said,

Such virtue shall rewarded be:
For this thy dull fidelity,
I'll trust you with my flocks, not me,
Pursue thy grazing trade;

Go, milk thy goats, and shear thy sheep,
And watch all night thy flocks to keep;
Thou shalt no more be lull'd asleep
By me, mistaken maid.

JOHN PHILIPS.

THE SPLENDID SHILLING.

"Sing, heavenly Muse!
Things unattempted yet, in prose or rhyme,"
A shilling, breeches, and chimeras dire.

HAPPY the man, who, void of cares and strife,
In silken or in leathern purse retains
A Splendid Shilling: he nor hears with pain
New oysters cry'd, nor sighs for cheerful ale;
But with his friends, when nightly mists arise,

To Juniper's Magpye, or Town-hall * repairs:
Where, mindful of the nymph, whose wanton eye
Transfix'd his soul, and kindled amorous flames,
Cloe or Phyllis, he each circling glass
Wisheth her health, and joy, and equal love.
Meanwhile, he smokes, and laughs at merry tale,

Or pun ambiguous, or conundrum quaint.
But I, whom gripping penury surrounds,
And hunger, sure attendant upon want,
With scanty offals, and small acid tiff,
(Wretched repast!) my meagre corpse sustain:
Then solitary walk, or doze at home
In garret vile, and with a warming puff
Regale chill'd fingers; or from tube as black
As winter-chimney, or well-polish'd jet,
Exhale mundungus, ill-perfuming scent:
Not blacker tube, nor of a shorter size.
Smokes Cambro-Briton (vers'd in pedigree,
Sprung from Cadwallador and Arthur, kings Full famous in romantic tale) when he
O'er many a craggy hill and barren cliff,
Upon a cargo of fam'd Cestrian cheese,
High over-shadowing rides, with a design
To vend his wares, or at th' Arvonian mart,
Or Maridunum, or the ancient town
Yclep'd Brechinia, or where Vaga's stream
Encircles Ariconium, fruitful soil!
Whence flow nectareous wines, that well may vie

With Massic, Setin, or renown'd Falern.

Thus while my joyless minutes tedious flow,
With looks demure, and silent pace, a Dun,
Horrible monster! hated by gods and men,
To my aerial citadel ascends,
With vocal heel thrice thundering at my gate,
With hideous accent thrice he calls; I know
The voice ill-boding, and the solemn sound.
What should I do? or whither turn? Amaz'd,
Confounded, to the dark recess I fly
Of wood-hole; straight my bristling hairs erect
Through sudden fear; a chilly sweet bedews
My shuddering limbs, and (wonderful to tell!)
My tongue forgets her faculty of speech;
So horrible he seems! His faded brow
Entrench'd with many a frown, and conic beard,
And spreading band, admir'd by modern saints,
Disastrous acts forbode; in his right hand
Long scrolls of paper solemnly he waves,
With characters and figures dire inscrib'd;
Grievous to mortal eyes; (ye gods, avert Such plagues from righteous men!) Behind him stalks

Another monster, not unlike himself,
Sullen of aspect, by the vulgar call'd
A Catchpole, whose polluted hands the gods
With force incredible, and magic charms,
First have endued: if he his ample palm
Should haply on ill-fated shoulder lay
Of debtor, strait his body, to the touch
Obsequious (as whilom knights were wont)

* Two noted ale-houses in Oxford, 1700.

To some enchanted castle is convey'd,
Where gates impregnable, and coercive chains,
In durance strict detain him, till, in form
Of money, Pallas sets the captive free.

Beware ye debtors ! when ye walk, beware,
Be circumspect ; oft with insidious ken
The catiff eyes your steps aloof, and oft
Lies perdue in a nook or gloomy cave,
Prompt to inchant, some inadvertent wretch
With his unhallow'd touch. So (poets sing)
Grimalkin, to domestic vermin sworn
An everlasting foe, with watchful eye
Lies nightly brooding o'er a chinky gap,
Protending her fell claws, to thoughtless mice
Sure ruin. So her disembowel'd web
Arachne, in a hall or kitchen, spreads
Obvious to vagrant flies : she secret stands
Within her woven cell ; the humming prey,
Regardless of their fate, rush on the toils
Inextricable, nor will aught avail
Their arts, or arms, or shapes of lovely hue :
The wasp insidious, and the buzzing drone,
And butterfly proud of expanded wings
Distinct with gold, entangled in her snares,
Useless resistance make : with eager strides,
She towering flies to her expected spoils ;
Then, with envenom'd jaws, the vital blood
Drinks of reluctant foes, and to her cave
Their bulky carcasses triumphant drags.

So pass my days. But, when nocturnal shades
This world envelop, and th' inclement air
Persuades men to repel benumbing frosts
With pleasant wines, and crackling blaze of
wood ;

Me, lonely sitting, nor the glimmering light
Of make-weight candle, nor the joyous talk
Of loving friend, delights ; distress'd, forlorn,
Amidst the horrors of the tedious night,
Darkling I sigh, and feed with dismal thoughts
My anxious mind ; or sometimes mournful verse
Indite, and sing of groves and myrtle shades,
Or desperate lady near a purling stream,
Or lover pendent on a willow-tree.
Meanwhile I labour with eternal drought,
And restless wish, and rave ; my parched throat
Finds no relief, nor heavy eyes repose :
But if a slumber haply does invade
My weary limbs, my fancy's still awake,
Thoughtful of drink, and eager, in a dream,
Tipples imaginary pots of ale,
In vain ; awake I find the settled thirst
Still gnawing, and the pleasant phantom curse.

Thus do I live, from pleasure quite debarr'd,
Nor taste the fruits that the sun's genial rays
Mature, john-apple, nor the downy peach,
Nor walnut in rough-furrow'd coat secure.
Nor medlar fruit delicious in decay ;
Afflictions great ! yet greater still remain :
My Galligaskins, that have long withstood
The winter's fury, and encroaching frosts,
By time subdued (what will not time subdue !)
An horrid chasm disclos'd with orifice
Wide, discontinuous ; at which the winds

Eurus and Auster, and the dreadful force
Of Boreas, that congeals the Cronan waves,
Tumultuous enter with dire chilling blasts,
Portending agues. Thus a well-fraught ship,
Long sail'd secure, or through th' Ægean deep,
Or the Ionian, till cruising near
The Lilybean shore, with hideous crush
On Scylla, or Charybdis (dangerous rocks !)
She strikes rebounding ; whence the shatter'd
oak,

So fierce a shock unable to withstand,
Admits the sea ; in at the gaping side
The crowding waves gush with impetuous rage,
Resistless, overwhelming ; horrors seize
The mariners ; death in their eyes appears,
They stare, they lave, they pump, they swear,
they pray :
(Vain efforts !) still the battering waves rush in,
Implacable, till, delug'd by the foam,
The ship sinks foundering in the vast abyss.

THOMAS PARNELL.

Born 1679.—Died 1717.

THE HERMIT.

FAR in a wild, unknown to public view,
From youth to age a reverend hermit grew ;
The moss his bed, the cave his humble cell,
His food the fruits, his drink the crystal well :
Remote from men, with God he pass'd his days,
Prayer all his business, all his pleasure praise.

A life so sacred, such serene repose,
Seem'd heaven itself, till one suggestion rose ;
That vice should triumph, virtue vice obey,
This sprung some doubt of Providence's sway :
His hopes no more a certain prospect boast,
And all the tenour of his soul is lost :
So when a smooth expanse receives imprest
Calm nature's image on its watery breast,
Down bend the banks, the trees depending grow,
And skies beneath with answering colours glow :
But if a stone the gentle sea divide,
Swift ruffling circles curl on every side,
And glimmering fragments of a broken sun,
Banks, trees, and skies in thick disorder run.

To clear this doubt, to know the world by
sight,

To find if books, or swains, report it right,
(For yet by swains alone the world he knew,
Whose feet came wandering o'er the nightly dew)
He quits his cell ; the pilgrim staff he bore,
And fix'd the scallop in his hat before ;
Then with the sun a rising journey went,
Sedate to think, and watching each event.

The morn was wasted in the pathless grass,
And long and lonesome was the wild to pass ;
But when the southern sun had warm'd the day,
A youth came posting o'er a crossing way ;
His raiment decent, his complexion fair,

And soft in graceful ringlets wav'd his hair.
Then near approaching, Father, hail! he cry'd,
And hail, my son, the reverend sire reply'd;
Words follow'd words, from question answer
flow'd,

And talk of various kind deceiv'd the road;
Till each with other pleas'd, and loth to part,
While in their age they differ, join in heart.
Thus stands an aged elm in ivy bound,
Thus youthful ivy clasps an elm around.

Now sunk the sun; the closing hour of day
Came onward, mantled o'er with sober grey;
Nature in silence bid the world repose;
When near the road a stately palace rose:
There, by the moon, through ranks of trees they
pass,

Whose verdure crown'd their sloping sides of grass.

It chanc'd the noble master of the dome
Still made his house the wandering stranger's
home:

Yet still the kindness, from a thirst of praise,
Prov'd the vain flourish of expensive ease.
The pair arrive: the livery'd servants wait;
Their lord receives them at the pompous gate,
The table groans with costly piles of food,
And all is more than hospitably good.

Then led to rest, the day's long toil they drown,
Deep sunk in sleep, and silk, and heaps of down.

At length 'tis morn, and at the dawn of day,
Along the wide canals the zephyrs play:
Fresh o'er the gay parterres the breezes creep,
And shake the neighbouring wood to banish sleep.
Up rise the guests, obedient to the call:
An early banquet deck'd the splendid hall;
Rich luscious wine a golden goblet grac'd,
Which the kind master forc'd the guests to taste.
Then, pleas'd and thankful, from the porch they
go;

And, but the landord, none had cause of woe;
His cup was vanish'd; for in secret guise
The younger guest purloin'd the glittering prize.

As one who spies a serpent in his way,
Glistening and basking in the summer ray,
Disorder'd stops to shun the danger near,
Then walks with faintness on, and looks with
fear;

So seem'd the sire; when far upon the road,
The shining spoil his wily partner show'd.
He stop'd with silence, walk'd with trembling
heart,

And much he wish'd, but durst not ask to part:
Murmuring he lifts his eyes, and thinks it hard,
That generous actions meet a base reward.

While thus they pass, the sun his glory shrouds
The changing skies hang out their sable clouds;
A sound in air presag'd approaching rain,
And beasts to covert scud across the plain.
Warn'd by the signs, the wandering pair retreat,
To seek for shelter at a neighbouring seat.

'Twas built with turrets, on a rising ground,
And strong, and large, and unimprov'd around;
Its owner's temper, timorous and severe,

Unkind and griping, caus'd a desert there.

As near the miser's heavy doors they drew,
Fierce rising gusts with sudden fury blew;
The nimbling lightning mix'd with flowers began,
And o'er their heads loud rolling thunders ran.
Here long they knock, but knock or call in vain,
Driven by the wind, and batter'd by the rain.
At length some pity warm'd the master's breast
('Twas then his threshold first receiv'd a guest);
Slow creaking turns the door with jealous care,
And half he welcomes in the shivering pair;
One frugal faggot lights the naked walls,
And nature's fervour through their limbs recalls:
Bread of the coarsest sort, with eager wine,
(Each hardly granted) serv'd them both to dine;
And when the tempest first appear'd to cease,
Already warning bid them part in peace.

With still remark the pondering hermit view'd,
In one so rich, a life so poor and rude;
And why should such, within himself he cry'd,
Look the lost wealth a thousand want beside?
But what new marks of wonder soon took place,
In every settling feature of his face;
When from his vest the young companion bore
That cup, the generous landlord own'd before,
And prind proudly with the precious bowl
The stinted kindness of this churlish soul.

But now the clouds in airy tumult fly;
The sun emerging opes an azure sky;
A fresher green the smelling leaves display,
And, glittering as they tremble, cheer the day:
The weather courts them from the poor retreat,
And the glad master bolts the wary gate.

While hence they walk, the pilgrim's bosom
wrought

With all the travail of uncertain thought;
His partner's acts without their cause appear,
'Twas their a vice and seem'd a madness here:
Detesting that, and pitying this, he goes,
Lost and confounded with the various shows.

Now night's dim shades again involve the sky }
Again the wanderers want a place to lie,
Again they search, and find a lodging nigh. }
The soil improv'd around, the mansion neat,
And neither poorly low, nor idly great:
It seem'd to speak its master's turn of mind,
Content, and not to praise, but virtue kind.

Hither the walkers turn with weary feet,
Then bless the mansion, and the master greet:
Their greeting fair, bestow'd with modest guise,
The courteous master hears, and thus replies:

Without a vain, without a grudging heart,
To him who gives us all, I yield a part;
From him you come, for him accept it here,
A frank and sober, more than costly cheer.
He spoke, and bid the welcome table spread,
Then talk of virtue till the time of bed,
When the grave household round his hall repair, Warn'd by a bell, and close the hours with prayer.

At length the world, renew'd by calm repose,
Was strong for toil; the dappled morn arose;
Before the pilgrims part, the younger crept,

Near the clos'd cradle where an infant slept,
And writh'd his neck: the landlord's little pride,
O strange return! grew black, and gasp'd, and died.

Horror of horrors! what! his only son!
How look'd our hermit when the fact was done;
Not hell, though hell's black jaws in sunder part,
And breathe blue fire, could more assault his heart.

Confus'd, and struck with silence at the deed,
He flies, but trembling fails to fly with speed.
His steps the youth pursues; the country lay
Perplex'd with roads, a servant show'd the way:
A river cross'd the path; the passage o'er
Was nice to find; the servant trod before;
Long arms of oaks an open bridge supply'd,
And deep the waves beneath the bending glide.
The youth, who seem'd to watch a time to sin,
Approach'd the careless guide, and thrust him in;
Plunging he falls, and rising lifts his head,
Then flashing turns, and sinks among the dead.

Wild, sparkling rage inflames the father's eyes,

He bursts the hands of fear, and madly cries,
Detested wretch!—But scarce his speech began,
When the strange partner seem'd no longer man:
His youthful face grew more serenely sweet;
His robe turn'd white, and flow'd upon his feet;
Fair rounds of radiant points invest his hair;
Celestial odours breathe through purpl'd air;
And wings, whose colours glitter'd on the day,
Wide at his back their gradual plumes display.
The form ethereal burst upon his sight,
And moves in all the majesty of light.

'Though loud at first the pilgrim's passion grew,
Sudden he gaz'd, and wist not what to do;
Surprise in secret chains his words suspends,
And in a calm his settling temper ends.
But silence here the beauteous angel broke
(The voice of music ravish'd as he spoke).

Thy prayer, thy praise, thy life to vice unknown,

In sweet memorial rise before the throne:
These charms, success in our bright region find,
And force an angel down, to calm thy mind;
For this, commission'd, I forsook the sky,
Nay, cease to kneel—Thy fellow-servant I.

Then know the truth of government divine,
And let these scruples be no longer thine.

The maker justly claims that world he made,
In this the right of Providence is laid;
Its sacred majesty through all depends
On using second means to work his ends:
'Tis thus, withdrawn in state from human eye,
The Power exerts his attributes on high,
Your actions uses nor controls your will,
And bids the doubting sons of men be still.

What strange events can strike with more surprise,

Than those which lately struck thy wondering
Yet, taught by these, confess th' Almighty just,
And where you can't unriddle, learn to trust!

The great, vain man, who far'd on costly food,
Whose life was too luxurious to be good;
Who made his ivory stands with goblets shine,
And forc'd his guest to morning draughts of wine,

Has, with the cup, the graceless custom lost,
And still he welcomes, but with less of cost.

The mean, suspicious wretch, whose bolted door

Ne'er mov'd in duty to the wandering poor;
With him I left the cup, to teach his mind
That heaven can bless, if mortals will be kind.
Conscious of wanting worth, he views the bowl,
And feels compassion touch his grateful soul.
Thus artists melt the sullen ore of lead,
With heaping coals of fire upon its head;
In the kind warmth the metal learns to glow,
And loose from dross the silver runs below.

Long had our pious friend in virtue trod,
But now the child half wean'd his heart from God:

(Child of his age) for him he liv'd in pain,
And measur'd back his steps to earth again.
To what excesses had his dotage run?

But God, to save the father, took the son.
To all but thee, in fits he seem'd to go,
(And 'twas my ministry to deal the blow)
The poor fond parent, humbled in the dust,
Now owns in tears the punishment was just.

But now had all his fortune felt a wrack,
Had that false servant sped in safety back;
This night his treasur'd heaps he meant to steal,

And what a fund of charity would fail!
Thus Heaven instructs thy mind: this trial o'er,
Depart in peace, resign, and sin no more.

On sounding pinions here the youth withdrew,
The sage stood wondering as the seraph flew.
Thus look'd Elisha when, to mount on high,
His master took the chariot of the sky;
The fiery pomp ascending left to view;
The prophet gaz'd and wish'd to follow too.

The bending hermit here a prayer begun,
Lord! as in heaven, on earth thy will be done:
Then, gladly turning, sought his ancient place:
And pass'd a life of piety and peace.

A NIGHT-PIECE ON DEATH.

By the blue taper's trembling light,
No more I waste the wakeful night,
Intent with endless view to pore
The schoolmen and the sages o'er:
Their books from wisdom widely stray,
Or point at best the longest way.
I'll seek a readier path, and go
Where wisdom's surely taught below.

How deep yon azure dyes the sky!
Where orbs of gold unnumber'd lie,
While through their ranks in silver pri
The nether crescent seems to glide.
The slumbering breeze forgets to breathe

The lake is smooth and clear beneath,
 Where once again the spangled show
 Descends to meet our eyes below.
 The grounds, which on the right aspire,
 In dimness from the view retire :
 The left presents a place of graves,
 Whose wall the silent water laves,
 That steeple guides thy doubtful sight
 Among the livid gleams of night.
 There pass with melancholy state
 By all the solemn heaps of fate,
 And think, as softly-sad you tread
 Above the venerable dead,
Time was, like thee, they life possess,
And time shall be, that thou shalt rest.

Those with bending osier bound,
 That nameless heave the crumbled ground,
 Quick to the glancing thought disclose,
 Where toil and poverty repose.

The flat smooth stones that bear a name,
 The chissel's slender help to fame
 (Which ere our set of friends decay
 Their frequent steps may wear away) ;
 A middle race of mortals own,
 Men, half ambitious, all unknown.

The marble tombs that rise on high,
 Whose dead in vaulted arches lie,
 Whose pillars swell with sculptur'd stones,
 Arms, angels, epitaphs, and bones,
 These, all the poor remains of state,
 Adorn the rich, or praise the great ;
 Who, while on earth in fame they live,
 Are senseless of the fame they give.
 • Ha ! while I gaze, pale Cynthia fades,
 The bursting earth unveils the shades !
 All slow, and wan, and wrapped with shrouds,
 They rise in visionary crowds,
 And all with sober accent cry,
Think, mortal, what it is to die.

Now from yon black and funeral yew,
 That bathes the charnel-house with dew,
 Methinks, I hear a voice begin ;
 (Ye ravens, cease your croaking din,
 Ye tolling clocks, no time resound
 O'er the long lake and midnight ground !)
 It sends a peal of hollow groans,
 Thus speaking from among the bones.

When men my scythe and darts supply,
 How great a king of fears am I !
 They view me like the last of things ;
 They make, and then they draw, my strings.
 Fools ! if you less provok'd your fears,
 No more my spectre form appears.
 Death's but a path that must be trod,
 If man would ever pass to God :
 A port of calma, a state to ease
 From the rough rage of swelling seas.

Why then thy flowing sable stoles,
 Deep pendant cypress, mourning poles,
 Loose scarfs to fall athwart thy weeds,
 Long palls, drawn hearses, cover'd steeds,
 And plumes of black, that, as they tread,
 Nod o'er the 'scutcheons of the dead ?

Nor can the parted body know,
 Nor wants the soul these forms of woe ;
 As men who long in prison dwell,
 With lamps that glimmer round the cell,
 Whene'er their suffering years are run,
 Spring forth to greet the glittering sun :
 Such joy, though far transcending sense,
 Have pious souls at parting hence.
 On earth, and in the body plac'd,
 A few, and evil years, they waste :
 But when their chains are cast aside,
 See the glad scene unfolding wide,
 Clap the glad wing, and tower away,
 And mingle with the blaze of day.

HYMN TO CONTENTMENT.

LOVELY, lasting peace of mind !
 Sweet delight of human kind !
 Heavenly born, and bred on high,
 To crown the favourites of the sky
 With more of happiness below,
 Than victors in a triumph know !
 Whither, O whither art thou fled,
 To lay thy meek contented head ;
 What happy region dost thou please
 To make the seat of calms and ease !
 Ambition searches all its sphere
 Of pomp and state, to meet thee there.
 Encreasing avarice would find
 Thy presence in its gold inshrin'd.
 The bold adventurer ploughs his way,
 Through rocks amidst the foaming sea,
 To gain thy love ; and then perceives
 Thou wert not in the rocks and waves.
 The silent heart, which grief assails,
 Treads soft and lonesome o'er the vales,
 Sees daisies open, rivers run,
 And seeks (as I have vainly done)
 Amusing thought ; but learns to know
 That solitude's the nurse of woe.
 No real happiness is found
 In trailing purple o'er the ground :
 Or in a soul exalted high,
 To range the circuit of the sky,
 Converse with stars above, and know
 All nature in its forms below ;
 The rest it seeks, in seeking dies,
 And doubts at last, for knowledge, rise.

Lovely, lasting peace, appear !
 This world itself, if thou art here,
 Is once again with Eden blest,
 And man contains it in his breast.

'Twas thus, as under shade I stood,
 I sung my wishes to the wood,
 And, lost in thought, no more perceiv'd
 The branches whisper as they wav'd :
 It seem'd as all the quiet place
 Confess'd the presence of his grace.
 When thus she spoke—Go rule thy will Bid thy wild passions all be still,

Know God—and bring thy heart to know
The joys which from religion flow :
Then every grace shall prove its guest,
And I'll be there to crown the rest.

Oh ! by yonder mossy seat,
In my hours of sweet retreat,
Might I thus my soul employ,
With sense of gratitude and joy :
Rais'd as ancient prophets were,
In heavenly vision, praise, and prayer ;
Pleasing all men, hurting none,
Pleas'd and bless'd with God alone :
Then while the gardens take my sight,
With all the colours of delight ;
While silver waters glide along,
To please my ear, and court my song :
I'll lift my voice, and tune my string,
And thee, great source of nature, sing.

The sun that walks his airy way,
To light the world, and give the day ;
The moon that shines with borrow'd light ;
The stars that gild the gloomy night ;
The seas that roll unnumber'd waves ;
The wood that spreads its shady leaves ;
The field whose ears conceal the grain,
The yellow treasure of the plain ;
All of these, and all I see,
Should be sung, and sung by me :
They speak their Maker as they can,
But want and ask the tongue of man.

Go search among your idle dreams,
Your busy or your vain extremes ;
And find a life of equal bliss,
Or own the next begun in this.

THE FAIR PENITENT.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

Men.

Sciolto, a nobleman of Genoa.
Altamont, a young lord in love with Calista.
Horatio, his friend.
Lothario, a young lord, and enemy to Altamont.
Rossano, his friend.

Women.

Calista, daughter to Sciolto.
Lavinia, sister to Altamont, and wife to Horatio.
Lucinda, confidant to Calista.

SCENE.—Sciolto's palace and garden, with some part of the street near it, in Genoa.

ACT I.

Alt. LET this auspicious day be ever sacred,
No mourning, no misfortunes happen on it :
Let it be marked for triumphs and rejoicings ;
Let happy lovers ever make it holy,
Chuse it to bless their hopes, and crown their wishes,
This happy day, that gives me my Calista !

2 U 2

Hor. Yes, Altamont ; to-day thy better stars
Are joined to shed their kindest influence on thee ;

Sciolto's noble hand, that raised thee first,
Half dead and drooping o'er thy father's grave,
Completes it's bounty, and restores thy name
To that high rank and lustre which it boasted,
Before ungrateful Genoa had forgot
The merit of thy god-like father's arms ;
Before that country, which he long had served,
In watchful councils, and in winter-camps,
Had cast off his white age to want and wretchedness,

And made their court to faction by his ruin.

Alt. Oh, great Sciolto ! Oh, my more than father !

Let me not live, but at thy very name,
My eager heart springs up, and leaps with joy.
When I forget the vast, vast debt I owe thee—
Forget ! (but 'tis impossible) then let me
Forget the use and privilege of reason,
Be driven from the commerce of mankind,
To wander in the desert among brutes,
To bear the various fury of the seasons,
The night's unwholesome dew, and noon-day's heat,

To be the scorn of earth and curse of heaven !

Hor. So open, so unbounded was his goodness,
It reached even me, because I was thy friend.
When that great man I loved, thy noble father,
Bequeathed thy gentle sister to my arms,
His last dear pledge and legacy of friendship,
That happy tie made me Sciolto's son ;
He called us his, and, with a parent's fondness,
Indulged us in his wealth, blessed us with plenty,
Healed all our cares, and sweetened love itself.

Alt. By Heaven, he found my fortunes so abandoned,

That nothing but a miracle could raise them :
My father's bounty, and the state's ingratitude,
Had stripped him bare, not left him even a grave.
Undone myself and sinking with his ruin,
I had no wealth to bring, nothing to succour him,

But fruitless tears.

Hor. Yet what thou couldst, thou didst,
And didst it like a son ; when his hard creditors,
Urged and assisted by Lothario's father,
(Foe to thy house, and rival of thy greatness)
By sentence of the cruel law forbid
His venerable corpse to rest in earth,
Thou gav'st thyself a ransom for his bones ;
With piety uncommon didst give up
Thy hopeful youth to slaves, who ne'er knew mercy,

Sour, unrelenting, money-loving villains,
Who laugh at human nature and forgiveness,
And are, like fiends, the factors of destruction.
Heaven, who beheld the pious act, approved it,
And bade Sciolto's bounty be its proxy,
To bless thy filial virtue with abundance.

Alt. But see, he comes, the author of my happiness,

The man who saved my life from deadly sorrow,
Who bids my days be blest with peace and plenty,
And satisfies my soul with love and beauty!
Enter Sciolto; he runs to Altamont, and embraces him.

Sci. Joy to thee, Altamont! Joy to myself!
Joy to this happy morn that makes thee mine;
That kindly grants what nature had denied me,
And makes me father of a son like thee!

Alt. My father! Oh, let me unlade my breast,
Pour out the fulness of my soul before you;
Shew every tender, every grateful thought,
This wondrous goodness stirs. But it is impossible,

And utterance all is vile; since I can only
Swear you reign here, but never tell how much.

Sci. It is enough; I know thee, thou art honest;
Goodness innate, and worth hereditary,
Are in thy mind; thy noble father's virtues
Spring freshly forth, and blossom in thy youth.

Alt. Thus Heaven from nothing raised his faint creation.

And then, with wondrous joy, beheld its beauty.
Well pleased to see the excellence he gave.

Sci. O, noble youth! I swear, since first I knew thee,

Even from that day of sorrows when I saw thee,
Adorned and lovely in thy filial tears,
The mourner and redeemer of thy father,
I set thee down, and sealed thee for my own:
Thou art my son, even near me as Calista.
Horatio and Lavinia too are mine;

[Embraces Horatio.
All are my children, and shall share my heart.
But wherefore waste we thus this happy day?
The laughing minutes summon thee to joy,
And with new pleasures court thee as they pass;
Thy waiting bride even chides thee for delaying,
And swears thou com'st not with a bridegroom's
haste.

Alt. Oh! could I hope there was one thought of Altamont,
One kind remembrance in Calista's breast,
The wind, with all their wings, would be too slow
To bear me to her feet. For Oh, my father!

Amidst the stream of joy that hears me on,
Blest as I am, and honoured in your friendship,
There is one pain that hangs upon my heart.

Sci. What means my son?

Alt. When at your intercession,
Last night, Calista yielded to my happiness,
Just ere we parted, as I sealed my vows
With rapture on her lips, I found her cold,
As a dead lover's statue on his tomb;
A rising storm of passion shook her breast,
Her eyes a piteous shower of tears let fall,
And then she sighed, as if her heart were breaking.

With all the tenderest eloquence of love,
I begged to be a sharer in her grief:

But she, with looks averse, and eyes that froze
me,

Sadly replied, her sorrows were her own,
Nor in a father's power to dispose of.

Sci. Away! it is the cozenage of their sex;
One of the common arts they practise on us:
To sigh and weep then when their hearts beat
high

With expectation of the coming joy.
Thou hast in camps and fighting fields been bred,
Unknowing in the subtleties of women.

The virgin bride, who swoons with deadly fear,
To see the end of all her wishes near,
When blushing, from the light and public eyes,
To the kind covert of the night she flies,
With equal fires to meet the bridegroom moves,
Melts in his arms, and with a loose she loves.

[Exeunt.

Enter Lothario and Rossano.

Loth. The father, and the husband!

Ros. Let them pass.

They saw us not.

Loth. I care not if they did;
Ere long I mean to meet them face to face,
And gall them with my triumph o'er Calista.

Ros. You lov'd her once.

Loth. I liked her, would have married her,
But that it pleased her father to refuse me,
To make this honourable fool her husband:
For which, if I forget him, may the shame
I mean to brand his name with, stick on mine!

Ros. She, gentle soul, was kinder than her father?

Loth. She was, and oft in private gave me hearing;

Till, by long listening to the soothing tale,
At length her easy heart was wholly mine.

Ros. I have heard you oft describe her, haughty, insolent,
And fierce with high disdain: it moves my wonder,

That virtue, thus defended, should be yielded
A prey to loose desires.

Loth. Hear then, I will tell thee:

Once in a lone and secret hour of night,
When every eye was closed, and the pale moon
And stars alone shone conscious of the theft,
Hot with the Tuscan grape, and high in blood,
Haply I stole unheeded to her chamber.

Ros. That minute sure was lucky.

Loth. Oh, it was great!

I found the fond, believing, love-sick maid,
Loose, unattired, warm, tender, full of wishes;
Fierceness and pride, the guardians of her honour,

Were charmed to rest, and love alone was wak-
ing.

Within her rising bosom all was calm,
As peaceful seas that know no storms, and only
Are gently lifted up and down by tides.

I snatched the glorious golden opportunity,
And with prevailing, youthful ardour pressed her,
Till with short sighs, and murmuring reluctance,
The yielding fair one gave me perfect happiness.
Even all the live-long night we passed in bliss,

In ecstasies too fierce to last for ever ;
At length the morn and cold indifference came ;
When, fully sated with the luscious banquet,
I hastily took leave, and left the nymph
To think on what was past, and sigh alone.

Ros. You saw her soon again ?

Loth. Too soon I saw her :

For, Oh ! that meeting was not like the former :
I found my heart beat high no more with transport,

No more I sighed, and languished for enjoyment ;
'Twas past, and reason took her turn to reign,
While every weakness fell before her throne.

Ros. What of the lady ?

Loth. With uneasy fondness

She hung upon me, wept, and sighed, and swore
She was undone ; talked of a priest, and marriage ;

Of flying with me from her father's power ;
Called every saint, and blessed angel down,
To witness for her that she was my wife.
I started at that name.

Ros. What answer made you ?

Loth. None ; but pretending sudden pain and illness,

Escaped the persecution. Two nights since,
By message urged and frequent importunity,
Again I saw her. Straight with tears and sighs,
With swelling breasts, with swooning, with distraction,

With all the subtleties and powerful arts
Of wilful woman, labouring for her purpose,
Again she told the same dull nauseous tale.
Unmoved, I begged her spare the ungrateful subject,

Since I resolved, that love and peace of mind
Might flourish long inviolate betwixt us,
Never to load it with the marriage chain ;
That I would still retain her in my heart,
My ever gentle mistress and my friend !
But for those other names of wife and husband,
They only meant ill-nature, cares, and quarrels.

Ros. How bore she this reply ?

Loth. Even as the earth,
When, winds pent up, or eating fires beneath,
Shaking the mass, she labours with destruction.
At first her rage was dumb, and wanted words ;
But when the storm found way, it was wild and
loud.

Mad as the priestess of the Delphic god,
Enthusiastic passion swelled her breast,
Enlarged her voice, and ruffled all her form.
Proud, and disdainful of the love I proffered,
She called me villain ! monster ! base betrayer !
At last, in very bitterness of soul,
With deadly imprecations on herself,
She vowed severely never to see me more ;
Then bid me fly that minute : I obeyed,
And, bowing, left her to grow cool at leisure.

Ros. She has relented since, else why this message

To meet the keeper of her secrets here
This morning ?

Loth. See the person whom you named !

Enter Lucilla.

Well, my ambassadress, what must we treat of ?
Come you to menace war, and proud defiance,
Or does the peaceful olive grace your message ?
Is your fair mistress calmer ! Does she soften ?
And must we love again ? Perhaps she means
To treat in juncture with her new ally,
And make her husband party to the agreement.

Luc. Is this well done, my lord ! Have you put off

All sense of human nature ? Keep a little,
A little pity, to distinguish manhood,
Lest other men, though cruel, should disclaim
you,

And judge you to be numbered with the brutes.

Loth. I see thou hast learned to rail.

Luc. I have learned to weep :

That lesson my sad mistress often gives me :
By day she seeks some melancholy shade,
To hide her sorrows from the prying world ;
At night she watches all the long, long hours,
And listens to the winds and beating rain,
With sighs as loud, and tears that fall as fast ;
Then, ever and anon, she wrings her hands,
And cries, false, false Lothario !

Loth. Oh, no more !

I swear thou wilt spoil thy pretty face with cry-
ing,
And thou hast beauty that may make thy fortune :

Some keeping cardinal shall doat upon thee,
And barter his church treasure for thy freshness.

Luc. What ! shall I sell my innocence and
youth,

For wealth or titles, to perfidious man !
To man who makes his mirth of our undoing !
The base, profest betrayer of our sex !
Let me grow old in all misfortunes else,
Rather than know the sorrows of Calista !

Loth. Does she send thee to chide in her behalf ?

I swear thou dost it with so good a grace,
That I could almost love thee for thy frowning.

Luc. Read there, my lord, there, in her own sad lines, [Giving a letter.

Which best can tell the story of her woes,
That grief of heart which your unkindness gives
her.

[Loth. reads.]—' Your cruelty—Obedience to my father—Give my hand to Altamont.'

By heaven it is well ! such ever be the gifts,
With which I greet the man whom my soul hates.

[Aside.

But to go on !

' Wish—heart—honour—too faithless—

Weakness—to-morrow—last trouble—lost Calista.'

Women, I see, can change as well as men.

She writes me here, forsaken as I am,

That I should bind my brow with mournful willow,

For she has given her hand to Altamont :

Yet tell the fair inconstant——

Luc. How, my lord!

Loth. Nay, no more angry words: say to Calista,

The humblest of her slaves shall wait her pleasure;

If she can leave her happy husband's arms,
To think upon so lost a thing as I am.

Luc. Alas! for pity, come with gentler looks;
Wound not her heart with this unmanly triumph:
And, though you love her not, yet swear you do,
So shall dissembling once be virtuous in you.

Loth. Ha! who comes here?

Luc. The bridegroom's friend, Horatio.

He must not see me here. To-morrow early
Be at the garden gate.

Loth. Bear to my love

My kindest thoughts, and swear I will not fail
her.

[Lothario putting up the letter hastily, drops it as he goes out.]

[Exeunt Lothario and Rossano one way, and Lucilla another.]

Enter Horatio.

Hor. Sure it is the very error of my eyes;
Waking I dream, or I beheld Lothario;
He seemed conferring with Calista's woman:
At my approach they started, and retired.
What business could he have here, and with her?
I know he bears the noble Altamont
Profest and deadly hate—What paper's this?

[Taking up the letter.]

Ha! To Lothario!—'s death! Calista's name!

[Opening it.]

Confusion and misfortunes!

'Your cruelty has at length determined me,
and I have resolved this morning to yield a perfect obedience to my father, and to give my hand to Altamont, in spite of my weakness for the false Lothario. I could almost wish I had that heart and that honour to bestow with it, which you have robbed me of:

Damnation! to the rest—

[Reads again.]

'But, Oh! I fear, could I retrieve them, I should again be undone by the too faithless, yet too lovely Lothario. This is the last weakness of my pen, and to-morrow shall be the last in which I will indulge my eyes. Lucilla shall conduct you, if you are kind enough to let me see you; it shall be the last trouble you shall meet with from

'The lost CALISTA.'

The lost, indeed! for thou art gone as far
As there can be perdition. Fire and sulphur!
Hell is the sole avenger of such crimes.
Oh, that the ruin were but all thy own!
Thou wilt even make thy father curse his age;
At sight of this black scroll, the gentle Altamont
(For, Oh! I know his heart is set upon thee)
Shall droop, and hang his discontented head,
Like merit scorned by insolent authority,
And never grace the public with his virtues.
Perhaps even now he gazes fondly on her,
And, thinking soul and body both alike,

Blesses the perfect workmanship of Heaven!

Then sighing, to his every care speaks peace,
And bids his heart be satisfied with happiness.
Oh, wretched husband! while she hangs about
thee

With idle blandishments, and plays the fond one,
Even then her hot imagination wanders,
Contriving riot, and loose 'scapes of love;
And whilst she clasps thee close, makes thee a monster!

What if I give this paper to her father?

It follows, that his justice dooms her dead,
And breaks his heart with sorrow! hard return
For all the good his hand has heaped upon us!
Hold, let me take a moment's thought—

Enter Lavinia.

Luc. My lord!

Trust me, it joys my heart that I have found you.
Enquiring wherefore you had left the company,
Before my brother's nuptial rites were ended,
They told me you had felt some sudden illness.
Where are you sick? Is it your head? your
heart?

Tell me, my love, and ease my anxious thoughts,
That I may take you gently in my arms,
Soothe you to rest, and soften all your pains.

Hor. It were unjust—No, let me spare my
friend,

Lock up the fatal secret in my breast,
Nor tell him that which will undo his quiet.

Lav. What means my lord?

Hor. Ha! saidst thou, my Lavinia?

Lav. Alas! you know not what you make me suffer.

Why are you pale? Why did you start and tremble?

Whence is that sigh? and wherefore are your
eyes

Severely raised to Heaven! The sick man thus Acknowledging the summons of his fate,
Lifts up his feeble hands and eyes for mercy,
And, with confusion, thinks upon his exit.

Hor. Oh, no! thou hast mistook my sickness quite;

These pangs are of the soul. Would I had met
Sharpest convulsions, spotted pestilence,
Or any other deadly foe to life,
Rather than heave beneath this load of thought!

Lav. Alas! what is it? Wherefore turn you
from me?

Why did you falsely call me your Lavinia,
And swear I was Horatio's better half.
Since now you mourn unkindly by yourself,
And rob me of my partnership of sadness?
Witness, ye holy powers who know my truth,
There cannot be a chance in life so miserable,
Nothing so very hard, but I could bear it,
Much rather than my love should treat me coldly,
And use me like a stranger to his heart.

Hor. Seek not to know what I would hide from
all,

But most from thee. I never knew a pleasure,
Aught that was joyful, fortunate, or good,

But straight I ran to bless thee with the tidings,
And laid up all my happiness with thee :
But wherefore, wherefore should I give thee
pain ?

Then spare me, I conjure thee ; ask no further ;
Allow my melancholy thoughts this privilege,
And let them brood in secret o'er their sorrows.

Lav. It is enough ; chide not, and all is well !
Forgive me if I saw you sad, Horatio,
And ask to weep out part of your misfortunes :
I would not press to know what you forbid me.
Yet, my loved lord, yet you must grant me this,
Forget your cares for this one happy day ;
Devote this day to mirth, and to your Altamont ;
For his dear sake, let peace be in your looks.
Even now the jocund bridegroom waits your wishes ;

He thinks the priest has but half blessed his marriage,

Till his friend hails him with the sound of joy.

Hor. Oh, never, never, never ! Thou art innocent :

Simplicity from ill, pure native truth,
And candour of the mind, adorn thee ever ;
But there are such, such false ones, in the
world,

'Twould fill thy gentle soul with wild amazement,
To hear their story told.

Lav. False ones, my lord !

Hor. Fatally fair they are, and in their smiles
The graces, little loves, and young desires, inhabit ;

But all that gaze upon them are undone ;
For they are false, luxurious in their appetites,
And all the Heaven they hope for, is variety :
One lover to another still succeeds.

Another, and another after that,
And the last fool is welcome as the former ;
Till, having loved his hour out, he gives
place,

And mingles with the herd that went before him.

Lav. Can there be such, and have they peace of mind ?

Have they, in all the series of their changing,
One happy hour ? If women are such things,
How was I formed so different from my sex ?
My little heart is satisfied with you ;
You take up all her room, as in a cottage
Which harbours some benighted princely stranger,

Where the good man, proud of his hospitality,
Yields all his homely dwelling to his guests,
And hardly keeps a corner for himself,

Hor. Oh ! were they all like thee, men would adore them,

And all the business of their lives be loving ;
The nuptial band should be the pledge of
peace,

And all domestic cares and quarrels cease ;
The world should learn to love by virtuous rules,

And marriage be no more the jest of fools.

[Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A Hall.

Enter Calista and Lucilla.

Cal. Be dumb for ever, silent as the grave,
Nor let thy fond officious love disturb
My solemn sadness with the sound of joy !
If thou wilt soothe me, tell me some dismal tale
Of pining discontent, and black despair ;
For, oh ! I've gone around through all my
thoughts,

But all are indignation, love, or shame,
And my dear peace of mind is lost for ever !

Luc. Why do you follow still that wandering
fire,

That has misled your weary steps, and leaves
you

Benighted in a wilderness of woe,
That false Lothario ? Turn from the deceiver ;
Turn, and behold were gentle Altamont,
Kind as the softest virgin of our sex,
And faithful as the simple village swain,
That never knew the courtly vice of changing,
Sighs at your feet, and woos you to be happy.

Cal. Away ! I think not of him. My sad soul
Has formed a dismal melancholy scene,
Such a retreat as I would wish to find ;
An unfrequented vale, o'ergrown with trees,
Mossy and old, within whose lonesome shade
Ravens, and birds ill-omened, only dwell :
No sound to break the silence, but a brook
That, bubbling, winds among the weeds : no mark

Of any human shape that had been there,
Unless a skeleton of some poor wretch,
Who had long since, like me, by love undone,
Sought that sad place out, to despair and die in !

Luc. Alas, for pity !

Cal. There I fain would hide me
From the base world, from malice, and from shame !

For 'tis the solemn counsel of my soul
Never to live with public loss of honour :
'Tis fixed to die, rather than bear the insolence
Of each affected she that tells my story,
And blesses her good stars that she is virtuous.
To be a tale for fools ! Scorned by the women,
And pitied by the men ! Oh, insupportable !

Luc. Can you perceive the manifest destruction,

The gaping gulf that opens just before you,
And yet rush on, though conscious of the danger ?
Oh, hear me, hear your ever faithful creature !
By all the good I wish, by all the ill
My trembling heart forebodes, let me intreat
you,

Never to see this faithless man again ;
Let me forbid his coming.

Cal. On thy life

I charge thee no : my genius drives me on ;
I must, I will behold him once again :
Perhaps it is the crisis of my fate,
And this one interview shall end my cares.

My labouring heart, that swells with indignation,
Heaves to discharge the burden ; that once done,
The busy thing shall rest within its cell,
And never beat again :

Luc. Trust not to that :

Rage is the shortest passion of our souls :
Like narrow brooks, that rise with sudden shows,

It swells in haste, and falls again as soon ;
Still, as it ebbs, the softer thoughts flow in,
And the deceiver Love supplies its place.

Cal. I have been wronged enough to arm my temper

Against the smooth delusion ; but alas !
(Chide not my weakness, gentle maid, but pity me)

A woman's softness hangs about me still :
Then let me blush, and tell thee all my folly.
I swear I could not see the dear betrayer
Kneel at my feet, and sigh to be forgiven,
But my relenting heart would pardon all,
And quite forget 'twas he that had undone me.

Luc. Ye sacred powers, whose gracious providence

Is watchful for our good, guard me from men,
From their deceitful tongues, their vows, and flatteries !

Still let me pass neglected by their eyes,
Let my bloom wither, and my form decay,
That none may think it worth his while to ruin me,

And fatal love may never be my bane ! [Exit.]

Cal. Ha, Altamont ! Calista, now be wary,
And guard thy soul's accesses with dissembling :
Nor let this hostile husband's eyes explore
The warring passions, and tumultuous thoughts,
That rage within thee, and deform thy reason.

Enter Altamont.

Alt. Begone, my cares, I give you to the winds,

Far to be borne, far from the happy Altamont ;
For from this sacred æra of my love,
A better order of succeeding days
Comes smiling forward, white and lucky all.
Calista is the mistress of the year ;

She crowns the season with auspicious beauty,
And bids even all my hours be good and joyful.

Cal. If I were ever mistress of such happiness,
Oh ! wherefore did I play the unthrifty fool,
And, wasting all on others, leave myself
Without one thought of joy to give me comfort !

Alt. Oh, mighty Love ! Shall that fair face profane

This thy great festival with frowns and sadness !
I swear it shall not be, for I will woo thee
With sighs so moving, with so warm a transport.

That thou shalt catch the gentle flame from me,
And kindle into joy.

Cal. I tell thee, Altamont,
Such hearts as ours were never paired above :
Ill-suited to each other ; joined, not matched ;
Some sullen influence, a foe to both,

Has wrought this fatal marriage to undo us.
Mark but the frame and temper of our minds,
How very much we differ. Even this day,
That fills thee with such ecstasy and transport,
To me brings nothing that should make me
bless it,

Or think it better than the day before,
Or any other in the course of time,
That duly took its turn, and was forgotten.

Alt. If to behold thee as my pledge of happiness,

To know none fair, none excellent but thee :
If still to love thee with unwearied constancy,
Through every season, every change of life,
Through wrinkled age, through sickness and misfortune,

Be worth the least return of grateful love,
Oh, then let my Calista bless this day,
And set it down for happy.

Cal. 'Tis the day
In which my father gave my hand to Altamont ;
As such, I will remember it for ever.

Enter Sciolto, Horatio, and Lavinia.

Scio. Let mirth go on, let pleasure know no pause,

But fill up every minute of this day !
'Tis yours, my children, sacred to your loves ;
The glorious sun himself for you looks gay ;
He shines for Altamont and for Calista.

Let there be music ; let the master touch
The sprightly string, and softly-breathing flute,
'Till harmony rouse every gentle passion,
Teach the cold maid to loose her fears in love,
And the fierce youth to languish at her feet.
Begin ; even age itself is cheered with music ;
It wakes a glad remembrance of our youth,
Calls back past joys, and warms us into transport. [Music.]

SONG.

*Ah, stay ! ah, turn ! ah, whither would you fly,
Too charming, too relentless maid ?
I follow, not to conquer, but to die ;
You of the fearful are afraid.
In vain I call ; for she, like fleeting air,
When pressed by some tempestuous wind,
Flies swifter from the voice of my despair,
Nor casts one pitying look behind.*

Sci. Take care my gates be open, bid all welcome ;

All who rejoice with me to-day are friends :
Let each indulge his genius, each be glad,
Jocund and free, and swell the feast with mirth ;
The sprightly bowl shall cheerfully go round,
None shall be grave, nor too severely wise ;
Losses and disappointments, cares and poverty,
The rich man's insolence, and great man's scorn,
In wine shall be forgotten all. To-morrow
Will be too soon to think, and to be wretched.
Oh, grant ye powers, that I may see these happy,

[Pointing to Alt. and Cal.]
Completely blest, and I have life enough ;
And leave the rest indifferently to fate. [Exeunt.]

Hor. What if, while all are here intent on revelling,
I privately went forth, and sought Lothario?
This letter may be forged; perhaps the wantonness
Of his vain youth, to stain a lady's fame;
Perhaps his malice to disturb my friend.
Oh, no! my heart forebodes it must be true.
Methought, even now, I marked the starts of guilt
That shook her soul; though damned dissimulation
Screened her dark thoughts, and set to public view
A specious face of innocence and beauty.
Oh, false appearance! What is all our sovereignty,
Our boasted power? When they oppose their arts,
Still they prevail, and we are found their fools.
With such smooth looks, and many a gentle word,
The first fair she beguiled her easy lord;
Too blind with love and beauty to beware,
He fell unthinking in the fatal snare;
Nor could believe that such a heavenly face
Had bargained with the devil, to damn her wretched race. [Exit.]

SCENE II.—The street near Sciolto's Palace.

Enter Lothario and Rossano.

Loth. To tell thee then the purport of my thoughts;
The loss of this fond paper would not give me
A moment of disquiet, were it not
My instrument of vengeance on this Altamont:
Therefore I mean to wait some opportunity
Of speaking with the maid we saw this morning.
Ros. I wish you, sir, to think upon the danger
Of being seen; to-day their friends are round them;
And any eye that lights by chance on you,
Shall put your life and safety to the hazard.
[They confer aside.]

Enter Horatio.

Hor. Still I must doubt some mystery of mischief,
Some artifice beneath. Lothario's father!
I knew him well; he was sagacious, cunning,
Fluent in words, and bold in peaceful counsels,
But of a cold, inactive hand in war;
Yet, with these coward's virtues, he undid
My unsuspecting, valiant, honest friend.
This son, if fame mistakes not, is more hot,
More open and unartful—Ha! he is here!

[Seeing him.]

Loth. Damnation! He again! This second time
To-day he has crossed me, like my evil genius.
Hor. I sought you, sir.
Loth. 'Tis well, then, I am found.
Hor. 'Tis well you are. The man who wrongs
my friend,

To the earth's utmost verge I would pursue.
No place, though e'er so holy, should protect him;
No shape, that artful fear e'er formed, should hide him,
Till he fair answer made, and did me justice.
Loth. Ha! dost thou know me, that I am Lothario?

As great a name as this proud city boasts of?
Who is this mighty man, then, this Horatio,
That I should basely hide me from his anger,
Lest he should chide me for his friend's displeasure?

Hor. The brave, it is true, do never shun the light;
Just are their thoughts, and open are their tempers,
Freely without disguise they love and hate,
Still are they found in the fair face of day,
And Heaven and men are judges of their actions.

Loth. Such let them be of mine; there is not a purpose,
Which my soul ever framed, or my hand acted,
But I could well have bid the world look on,
And what I once durst do, have dared to justify.

Hor. Where was this open boldness, this free spirit,
When but this very morning I surprised thee,
In base, dishonest privacy, consulting
And bribing a poor mercenary wretch,
To sell her lady's secrets, stain her honour,
And with a forged contrivance, blast her virtue?
At sight of me thou fled'st.

Loth. Ha! fled from thee?

Hor. Thou fled'st, and guilt was on thee, like a thief,
A pilferer, descried in some dark corner,
Who there had lodged, with mischievous intent,
To rob and ravish at the hour of rest,
And do a midnight murder on the sleepers!

Loth. Slave! villain!

[Offers to draw, Rossano holds him.]

Ros. Hold, my lord! think where you are,
Think how unsafe and hurtful to your honour
It were to urge a quarrel in this place,
And shock the peaceful city with a broil.

Loth. Then, since thou dost provoke my vengeance, know,
I would not, for this city's wealth, for all
Which the sea wafts to our Ligurian shore,
But that the joys I reaped with that fond wanton,
The wife of Altamont, should be as public
As is the noon-day sun, air, earth, or water,
Or any common benefit of nature.
Think'st thou I meant the shame should be concealed?

Oh, no! by hell and vengeance, all I wanted
Was some fit messenger to bear the news
To the dull doating husband: now I have found him,

And thou art he.

Hor. I hold thee base enough
To break through law, and spurn at sacred order,

And do a brutal injury like this ;
Yet mark me well, young lord ; I think Calista
Too nice, too noble, and too great a soul.
To be the prey of such a thing as thou art.
'Twas base and poor, unworthy of a man,
To forge a scroll so villainous and lose,
And mark it with a noble lady's name :
These are the mean dishonest arts of cowards,
Strangers to manhood, and to glorious dangers ;
Who, bred at home in idleness and riot,
Ransack for mistresses the unwholesome stews,
And never know the worth of virtuous love.

Loth. Think'st thou I forged the letter ?
Think so still,

Till the broad shame come staring in thy face,
And boys shall hoot the cuckold as he passes.

Hor. Away ! no woman could descend so low :
A skipping, dancing, worthless tribe you are ;
Fit only for yourselves, you herd together ;
And when the circling glass warms your vain
hearts,

You talk of beauties that you never saw,
And fancy raptures that you never knew.
Legends of saints, who never yet had being,
Or, being, ne'er were saints, are not so false
As the fond tales which you recount of love.

Loth. But that I do not hold it worth my leisure,

I could produce such damning proof——

Hor. 'Tis false !

You blame the fair with lies, because they scorn
you,

Hate you like age, like ugliness and impotence :
Rather than make you blest, they would die
virgins,

And stop the propagation of mankind.

Loth. It is the curse of fools to be secure ;
And that be thine and Altamont's. Dream on ;
Nor think upon my vengeance till thou feel'st it.

Hor. Hold, sir ! another word, and then farewell ;

Though I think greatly of Calista's virtue,
And hold it far beyond thy power to hurt ;
Yet, as she shares the honour of my Altamont,
That treasure of a soldier, bought with blood,
And kept at life's expence, I must not have (Mark me, young sir) her very name profaned.
Learn to restrain the licence of your speech ;
'Tis held you are too lavish. When you are met

Among your set of fools, talk of your dress,
Of dice, of whores, of horses, and yourselves ;
'Tis safer, and becomes your understandings.

Loth. What if we pass beyond this solemn order,

And, in defiance of the stern Horatio,
Indulge our gayer thoughts, let laughter loose,
And use his sacred friendship for our mirth ?

Hor. 'Tis well, sir, you are pleasant——

Loth. By the joys

Which my soul yet has uncontrolled pursued,
I would not turn aside from my least pleasure,
Though all thy force were armed to bar my way ;
But, like the birds, great Nature's happy commoners,

That haunt in woods, in meads, and flowery gardens,

Rife the sweets, and taste the choicest fruits,
Yet scorn to ask the lordly owner's leave.

Hor. What liberty has vain presumptuous
youth,

That thou shouldst dare provoke me unchastised ?
But henceforth, boy, I warn thee, shun my walks !

If, in the bounds of yon forbidden place,
Again thou art found, expect a punishment,
Such as great souls, impatient of an injury,
Exact from those who wrong them ; even death,
Or something worse : an injured husband's vengeance

Shall print a thousand wounds, tear thy fair
form,

And scatter thee to all the winds of Heaven !

Loth. Is, then, my way in Genoa prescribed
By a dependent on the wretched Altamont,
A talking sir, that brawls for him in taverns,
And vouches for his valour's reputation ?

Hor. Away ! thy speech is fouler than thy manners.

Loth. Or, if there be a name more vile, his parasite ;

A beggar's parasite !

Hor. Now, learn humanity,

[Offers to strike him, Rossano interposes.
Since brutes and boys are only taught with blows.

Loth. Damnation ! [They draw.

Ros. Hold, this goes no further here.

Horatio, 'tis too much ; already see
The crowd are gathering to us.

Loth. Oh, Rossano !

Or give me way, or thou art no more my friend.

Ros. Sciolto's servants, too, have ta'en the alarm ;

You'll be oppressed by numbers. Be advised,
Or I must force you hence. Take it on my word,
You shall have justice done you on Horatio.
Put up, my lord.

Loth. This will not brook delay :

West of the town a mile, among the rocks,
Two hours ere noon, to-morrow, I expect thee,
Thy single hand to mine.

Hor. I'll meet thee there.

Loth. To-morrow, oh, my better stars ! tomorrow

Exert your influence : shine strongly for me ;

'Tis not a common conquest I would gain,
Since love, as well as arms, must grace my triumph. [Exeunt Lothario and Rossano.

Hor. Two hours ere noon to-morrow ! ha !
ere that

He sees Calista ! Oh, unthinking fool——

What if I urged her with the crime and danger ?

If any spark from Heaven remain unquenched Within her breast, my breath, perhaps, may wake it.

Could I but prosper there, I would not doubt
My combat with that loud vain-glorious boaster.
Were you, ye fair, but cautious whom ye trust,
Did you but think how seldom fools are just,
So many of your sex would not, in vain,
Of broken vows, and faithless men, complain:
Of all the various wretches love has made,
How few have been by men of sense betrayed!
Convinced by reason, they your power confess,
Pleased to be happy, as you're pleased to bless,
And, conscious of your worth, can never love you less.

[Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—An apartment in Sciolto's palace.

Enter Sciolto and Calista.

Sci. Now, by my life, my honour, 'tis too much!

Have I not marked thee, wayward as thou art,
Perverse and sullen all this day of joy?
When every heart was cheered, and mirth went round,

Sorrow, displeasure, and repining anguish,
Sat on thy brow, like some malignant planet,
Foe to the harvest and the healthy year,
Who scowls adverse, and lours upon the world;
When all the other stars, with gentle aspect,
Propitious shine, and meaning good to man.

Cal. Is then the task of duty half performed?
Has not your daughter given herself to Altamont,

Yielded the native freedom of her will
To an imperious husband's lordly rule,
To gratify a father's stern command?

Sci. Dost thou complain?

Cal. For pity do not frown then,
If, in despite of all my vowed obedience,
A sigh breaks out, or a tear falls by chance:
For, oh! that sorrow, which has drawn your anger,

Is the sad native of Calista's breast:
And once possessed, will never quit its dwelling,
Till life, the prop of all, shall leave the building,
To tumble down, and moulder into ruin.

Sci. Now by the sacred dust of that dear saint
That was thy mother; by her wondrous good-
ness,

Her soft, her tender, most complying sweetness,
I swear, some sullen thought, that shuns the
light,

Lurks underneath that sadness in thy visage.
But mark me well! though, by yon Heaven, I love thee

As much, I think, as a fond parent can; [bid]
Yet shouldst thou, (which the power above for-
E'er stain the honour of thy name with infamy,
I'll cast thee off, as one whose impious hands
Had rent asunder nature's dearest ties,
Which, once divided, never join again.

2 x 2

To-day I've made a noble youth thy husband!
Consider well his worth: reward his love;
Be willing to be happy, and thou art so.

[Exit Sciolto.

Cal. How hard is the condition of our sex,
Through every state of life the slaves of man!
In all the dear delightful days of youth
A rigid father dictates to our wills,
And deals out pleasure with a scanty hand.
To his, the tyrant husband's reign succeeds;
Proud with opinion of superior reason,
He holds domestic business and devotion
All we are capable to know, and shuts us,
Like cloistered ideots, from the world's acquaintance,

And all the joys of freedom. Wherefore are we

Born with high souls, but to assert ourselves,
Shake off this vile obedience they exact,
And claim an equal empire o'er the world?

Enter Horatio.

Hor. She's here! yet, oh! my tongue is at a loss.

Teach me, some power, that happy art of speech,
To dress my purpose up in gracious words;
Such as may softly steal upon her soul,
And never waken the tempestuous passions.
By Heaven she weeps!—Forgive me, fair
Calista,

If I presume on privilege of friendship,
To join my grief to yours, and mourn the evils
That hurt your peace, and quench those eyes in tears.

Cal. To steal, unlooked for, on my private sorrow,
Speaks not the man of honour, nor the friend,
But rather means the spy.

Hor. Unkindly said!

For, oh! as sure as you accuse me falsely,
I come to prove myself Calista's friend.

Cal. You are my husband's friend, the friend
of Altamont.

Hor. Are you not one? Are you not joined by Heaven,

Each interwoven with the other's fate?
Are you not mixt, like streams of meeting rivers,
Whose blended waters are no more distinguished,
But roll into the sea, one common flood?
Then who can give his friendship but to one?
Who can be Altamont's and not Calista's?

Cal. Force, and the wills of our imperious rulers,

May bind two bodies in one wretched chain;
But minds will still look back to their own choice.

So the poor captive in a foreign realm,
Stands on the shore, and sends his wishes back
To the dear native land from whence he came.

Hor. When souls, that should agree to will
the same,

To have one common object for their wishes,
Look different ways, regardless of each other,
Think what a train of wretchedness ensues:

Love shall be banished from the genial bed,
The night shall all be lonely and unquiet,
And every day shall be a day of cares.

Cal. Then all the boasted office of thy friendship.

Was but to tell Calista what a wretch she is.
Alas! what needed that?

Hor. Oh! rather say,

I came to tell her how she might be happy;
To soothe the secret anguish of her soul:
To comfort that fair mourner, that forlorn one,
And teach her steps to know the paths of peace.

Cal. Say thou, to whom this paradise is known,
Where lies the blissful region? Mark my way to it,

For, oh! 'tis sure I long to be at rest.

Hor. Then—to be good is to be happy—Angels

Are happier than mankind, because they're better.

Guilt is the source of sorrow! 'tis the fiend,
The avenging fiend, that follows us behind,
With whips and stings. The blest know none of this,

But rest in everlasting peace of mind,
And find the height of all their heaven is goodness.

Cal. And what bold parasite's officious tongue
Shall dare to tax Calista's name with guilt?

Hor. None should; but 'tis a busy, talking
world,

That, with licentious breath, blows, like the wind,

As freely on the palace as the cottage.

Cal. What mystic riddle lurks beneath thy words,

Which thou would'st seem unwilling to express.
As if it meant dishonour to my virtue?

Away with this ambiguous shuffling phrase,
And let thy oracle be understood.

Hor. Lothario!

Cal. Ha! what would'st thou mean by him?

Hor. Lothario and Calista! thus they join

Two names, which Heaven decreed should never meet.

Hence have the talkers of this populous city
A shameful tale to tell, for public sport,
Of an unhappy beauty, a false fair one,
Who plighted to a noble youth her faith,
When she had given her honour to a wretch.

Cal. Death and confusion! Have I lived to this?

Thus to be treated with unmanly insolence!
To be the sport of a loose ruffian's tongue!
Thus to be used! thus! like the vilest creature,
That ever was a slave to vice and infamy!

Hor. By honour and fair truth, you wrong me
much;

For on my soul, nothing but strong necessity
Could urge my tongue to this ungrateful office.
I came with strong reluctance, as if death
Had stood across my way, to save your honour,
Your's and Sciolto's, your's and Altamont's;

Like one who ventures through a burning pile,
To save his tender wife, with all her brood
Of little fondlings, from the dreadful ruin.

Cal. Is this the famous friend of Altamont,
For noble worth and deeds of arms renowned?
Is this the tale-bearing officious fellow,
That watches for intelligence from eyes;
This wretched Argus of a jealous husband,
That fills his easy ears with monstrous tales,
And makes him toss, and rave, and wreak at length

Bloody revenge on his defenceless wife,
Who guiltless dies, because her fool ran mad?

Hor. Alas! this rage is vain; for if your fame
Or peace be with your care, you must be calm,
And listen to the means are left to save them.
'Tis now the lucky minute of your fate.

By me your genius speaks, by me it warns you,
Never to see that curst Lothario more;
Unless you mean to be despised, be shunned
By all our virtuous maids and noble matrons;
Unless you have devoted this rare beauty
To infamy, diseases, prostitution—

Cal. Dishonour blast thee, base, unmannered slave!

That darest forget my birth, and sacred sex,
And shock me with the rude, unhallowed sound!

Hor. Here kneel, and in the awful face of
Heaven

Breathe out a solemn vow, never to see,
Nor think, if possible, on him that ruined thee;
Or, by my Altamont's dear life, I swear,
This paper; nay, you must not fly—This paper, [Holding her.

This guilty paper shall divulge your shame—

Cal. What meanest thou by that paper? What contrivance

Hast thou been forging to deceive my father;
To turn his heart against his wretched daughter,
That Altamont and thou may share his wealth?
A wrong like this will make me even forget
The weakness of my sex.—Oh, for a sword,
To urge my vengeance on the villain's hand,
That forged the scroll!

Hor. Behold! Can this be forged?

See where Calista's name—

[Shewing the letter near.

Cal. To atoms thus, [Tearing it.
Thus let me tear the vile, detested falsehood,
The wicked, lying evidence of shame.

Hor. Confusion!

Cal. Henceforth, thou officious fool,
Meddle no more, nor dare, even on thy life,
To breathe an accent that may touch my virtue.
I am myself the guardian of my honour,
And will not bear so insolent a monitor.

Enter Altamont.

Alt. Where is my life, my love, my charming
bride,

Joy of my heart, and pleasure of my eyes,
The wish, and care, and business of my youth?
Oh, let me find her, snatch her to my breast,
And tell her she delays my bliss too long,

Till my soft soul even sickens with desire.
 Disordered!—and in tears!—Horatio too!
 My friend is in amaze—What can it mean?
 Tell me, Calista, who has done thee wrong,
 That my swift sword may find out the offender,
 And do thee ample justice.

Cal. Turn to him.

Alt. Horatio!

Cal. To that insolent.

Alt. My friend!

Could he do this? He, who was half myself?
 One faith has ever bound us, and one reason Guided our wills. Have I not found him just,
 Honest as truth itself? And could he break
 The sanctity of friendship? Could he wound
 The heart of Altamont in his Calista?

Cal. I thought what justice I should find from thee!

Go fawn upon him, listen to his tale,
 Applaud his malice, that would blast my fame,
 And treat me like a common prostitute.
 Thou art perhaps confederate in his mischief,
 And wilt believe the legend, if he tells it.

Alt. Oh, impious! what presumptuous wretch shall dare

To offer at an injury like that?
 Priesthood, nor age, nor cowardice itself,
 Shall save him from the fury of my vengeance.

Cal. The man who dared to do it was Horatio;
 Thy darling friend; 'twas Altamont's Horatio.
 But mark me well; while thy divided heart
 Doats on a villain that has wronged me thus,
 No force shall drag me to thy hated bed.
 Nor can my cruel father's power do more
 Than shut me in a cloister: there, well pleased,
 Religious hardships will I learn to bear,
 To fast and freeze at midnight hours of prayer;
 Nor think it hard, within a lonely cell,
 With melancholy, speechless saints to dwell;
 But bless the day I to that refuge ran,
 Free from the marriage chain, and from that tyrant man. [Exit Calista.]

Alt. She's gone; and, as she went, ten thousand fires

Shot from her angry eyes; as if she meant
 Too well to keep the cruel vow she made.
 Now, as thou art a man, Horatio, tell me,
 What means this wild confusion in thy looks,
 As if thou wert at variance with thyself,
 Madness and reason combating within thee,
 And thou wert doubtful which should get the better?

Hor. I would be dumb for ever; but thy fate
 Has otherwise decreed it. Thou hast seen
 That idol of thy soul, that fair Calista;
 Thou hast beheld her tears.

Alt. I have seen her weep;

I have seen that lovely one, that dear Calista,
 Complaining, in the bitterness of sorrow,
 That thou, my friend, Horatio, thou hast wronged her.

Hor. That I have wronged her! had her eyes been fed

From that rich stream which warms her heart, and numbered

For every falling tear a drop of blood,
 It had not been too much; for she has ruined
 thee,

Even thee, my Altamont. She has undone thee.

Alt. Dost thou join ruin with Calista's name?

What is so fair, so exquisitely good?

Is she not more than painting can express,

Or youthful poets fancy when they love?

Does she not come, like wisdom, or good fortune,
 Replete with blessings, giving wealth and honour?

The dowry which she brings is peace and pleasure,

And everlasting joys are in her arms.

Hor. It had been better thou had'st lived a beggar,

And fed on scraps at great men's surly doors,
 Than to have matched with one so false, so fatal.— [thee.]

Alt. It is too much for friendship to allow Because I tamely bore the wrong thou didst her,
 Thou dost avow the barbarous, brutal part,
 And urge the injury even to my face!

Hor. I see she has got possession of thy heart;
 She has charmed thee, like a siren, to her bed,
 With looks of love, and with enchanting sounds:
 Too late the rocks and quicksands will appear,
 When thou art wrecked upon the faithless shore,
 Then vainly wish thou had'st not left thy friend,
 To follow her delusion.

Alt. If thy friendship
 Do churlishly deny my love a room,
 It is not worth my keeping; I disclaim it.

Hor. Canst thou so soon forget what I've been to thee?

I shared the task of nature with thy father,
 And formed with care thy inexperienced youth
 To virtue and to arms.

Thy noble father, oh, thou light young man!
 Would he have used me thus? One fortune fed
 us;

For his was ever mine, mine his, and both
 Together flourished, and together fell.

He called me friend, like thee: would he have left me

Thus, for a woman, and a vile one, too?

Alt. Thou canst not, dar'st not, mean it? Speak
 again!

Say, who is vile; but dare not name Calista.

Hor. I had not spoke at first, unless compelled,

And forced to clear myself; but since thus urged,
 I must avow, I do not know a viler.

Alt. Thou wert my father's friend; he loved thee well;

A kind of venerable mark of him
 Hangs round thee, and protects thee from my vengeance.

I cannot, dare not, lift my sword against thee,
 But henceforth never let me see thee more.

[Exit out.]

Hor. I love thee still, ungrateful as thou art,
And must and will preserve thee from dishonour,
Even in despite of thee. [Holds him.]

Alt. Let go my arm ! [live]

Hor. If honour be thy care, if thou would'st
Without the name of credulous, wittol husband,
Avoid thy bride, shun her detested bed,
The joys it yields are dashed with poison—

Alt. Off!

To urge me but a minute more is fatal.

Hor. She is polluted, stained—

Alt. Madness and raging!

But hence—

Hor. Dishonoured by the man you hate—

Alt. I prithee loose me yet, for thy own sake.
If life be worth the keeping—

Hor. By Lothario.

Alt. Perdition take thee, villain, for the falsehood ! [Strikes him.]

Now, nothing but thy life can make atonement.

Hor. A blow ! thou hast used me well—

[Draus.]

Alt. This to thy heart—

Hor. Yet hold—By Heaven, his father's in his face!

Spite of my wrongs, my heart runs o'er with tenderness

And I could rather die myself than hurt him.

Alt. Defend thyself; for, by my much wronged love,

I swear, the poor evasion shall not save thee.

Hor. Yet hold—thou know'st I dare—think how we've lived—

[They fight; Altamont presses on Horatio who retires.]

Nay then, 'tis brutal violence; and thus,
Thus Nature bids me guard the life she gave.

[They fight.]

Lavinia enters, and runs between their swords.

Lav. My brother, my Horatio! Is it possible!
Oh, turn your cruel swords upon Lavinia!

If you must quench your impious rage in blood,
Behold, my heart shall give you all her store,
To save those dearer streams that flow from
yours.

Alt. 'Tis well thou hast found a safe-guard;
none but this,

No power on earth could save thee from my fury.

Lav. O fatal, deadly sound!

Hor. Safety from thee!

Away, vain boy! Hast thou forgot the reverence
Due to my arm, thy first, thy great example,
Which pointed out thy way to noble daring,
And shewed thee what it was to be a man?

Lav. What busy, meddling fiend, what foe to goodness,

Could kindle such a discord? Oh, lay by
Those most ungente looks, and angry weapons,
Unless you mean my griefs and killing fears
Should stretch me out at your relentless feet,
A wretched corse, the victim of your fury.

Hor. Ask'st thou what made us foes? 'Twas base ingratitude,

'Twas such a sin to friendship, as Heaven's mercy,

That strives with man's untoward, monstrous wickedness,

Unwearied with forgiving, scarce could pardon.
He, who was all to me, child, brother, friend,
With barbarous, bloody malice, sought my life.

Alt. Thou art my sister, and I would not make
thee

The lonely mourner of a widowed bed;

Therefore, thy husband's life is safe! but warn
him,

No more to know this hospitable roof.

He has but ill repaid Sciolto's bounty.

We must not meet; 'tis dangerous. Farewell.

[He is going out, Lavinia holds him.]

Lav. Stay, Altamont, my brother, stay; if ever

Nature, or what is nearer much than nature,

The kind consent of our agreeing minds,

Have made us dear to one another, stay,

And speak one gentle word to your Horatio!

Behold, his anger melts, he longs to love you,
To call you friend, then press you hard, with
all

The tender, speechless joy of reconciliation.

Alt. It cannot, shall not be—you must not hold me.

Lav. Look kindly, then.

Alt. Each minute that I stay,

Is a new injury to fair Calista.

From thy false friendship to her arms I'll fly;

There, if in any pause of love I rest,

Breathless with bliss, upon her panting breast,

In broken, melting accents, I will swear.

Henceforth to trust my heart with none but her;

Then own, the joys which on her charms attend,

Have more than paid me for my faithless friend.

[Altamont breaks from Lavinia, and exit.]

Hor. Oh, raise thee, my Lavinia, from the earth!

It is too much; this tide of flowing grief,

This wondrous waste of tears, too much to give
To an ungrateful friend, and cruel brother.

Lav. Is there not cause for weeping? Oh, Horatio!

A brother and a husband were my treasure;

'Twas all the little wealth that poor Lavinia Saved from the shipwreck of her father's fortunes.

One half is lost already. If thou leav'st me;
If thou should'st prove unkind to me, as Altamont,

Whom shall I find to pity my distress,

To have compassion on a helpless wanderer,

And give her where to lay her wretched head?

Hor. Why dost thou wound me with thy soft complaining?

Though Altamont be false, and use me hardly,

Yet think not I impute his crimes to thee.

Talk not of being forsaken; for I'll keep thee.

Next to my heart, my certain pledge of happiness.

Heaven formed thee gentle, fair, and full of goodness,
And made thee all my portion here on earth :
It gave thee to me, as a large amends
For fortune, friends, and all the world beside.

Lav. Then you will love me still, cherish me ever,

And hide me from misfortune in your bosom ?
Here end my cares, nor will I lose one thought,
How we shall live, or purchase food and raiment
The holy Power, who cloathes the senseless earth

With woods, with fruits, with flowers, and verdant grass,

Whose bounteous hand feeds the whole brute creation,

Knows all our wants, and has enough to give us.

Hor. From Genoa, from falsehood and inconsistency,

To some more honest, distant clime we'll go.

Nor will I be beholden to my country,

For aught but thee, the partner of my flight.

Lav. Yes, I will follow thee ; forsake, for thee,

My country, brother, friends, even all I have.

Though mine's a little all, yet were it more,

And better far, it should be left for thee,

And all that I would keep, should be Horatio.

So, when a merchant sees his vessel lost,

'Though richly freighted from a foreign coast,

Gladly, for life, the treasure he would give,

And only wishes to escape, and live :

Gold, and his gains, no more employ his mind ;

But, driving o'er the billows with the wind,

Cleaves to one faithful plank, and leaves the rest behind. [Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—A Garden.

Enter Altamont.

Alt. With what unequal tempers are we formed ?

One day the soul, supine with ease and fulness,
Revels secure, and fondly tells herself

The hour of evil can return no more ;

Then next, the spirits, palled and sick of riot,

Turn all to discord, and we hate our beings,

Curse the past joy, and think it folly all,

And bitterness and anguish. Oh, last night !

What has ungrateful beauty paid me back,
For all the mass of friendship which I squandered ?

Coldness, aversion, tears, and sullen sorrow,
Dashed all my bliss, and damped my bridal bed.

Scarcely the morning dawned, she vanished from me,

Relentless to the gentle call of love.

I've lost a friend, and I have gained—a wife !

Turn not to thought, my brain ! but let me find

Some unfrequented shade ; there lay me down,

And let forgetful dulness steal upon me,

To soften and assuage this pain of thinking. [Exit.]

Lothario and Calista discovered.

Loth. Weep not, my fair ; but let the god of love

Laugh in thy eyes, and revel in thy heart,

Kindle again his torch, and hold it high,

To light us to new joys. Nor let a thought

Of discord, or disquiet past, molest thee ;

But to a long oblivion give thy cares,

And let us melt the present hour in bliss.

Cal. Seek not to soothe me with thy false endearments,

To charm me with thy softness : 'tis in vain :

Thou can'st no more betray, nor I be ruined.

The hours of folly, and of fond delight,

Are wasted all, and fled ; those that remain

Are doomed to weeping, anguish, and repentance.

I come to charge thee with a long account,

Of all the sorrows I have known already,

And all I have to come ; thou hast undone me.

Loth. Unjust Calista ! dost thou call it ruin,

To love as we have done ; to melt, to languish,

To wish for somewhat exquisitely happy,

And then be blest even to that wish's height ?

To die with joy, and straight to live again ;

Speechless to gaze, and with tumultuous transport—

Cal. Oh ; let me hear no more ! I cannot bear it ;

'Tis deadly to remembrance. Let that night,

That guilty night, be blotted from the year !

Let not the voice of mirth or music know it !

Let it be dark and desolate ; no stars

To glitter o'er it ! let it wish for light,

Yet want it still, and vainly wait the dawn !

For 'twas the night that gave me up to shame,

To sorrow, to the false Lothario.

Loth. Hear this, ye powers ! mark, how the fair deceiver

Sadly complains of violated truth ;

She calls me false, even she, the faithless she,

Whom day and night, whom heaven and earth have heard

Sighing to vow, and tenderly protest,

Ten thousand times, she would be only mine ;

And yet, behold, she has given herself away,

Fled from my arms, and wedded to another ;

Even to the man whom most I hate on earth.—

Cal. Art thou so base to upbraid me with a crime,

Which nothing but thy cruelty could cause ?

If indignation, raging in my soul,

For thy unmanly insolence and scorn,

Urged me to a deed of desperation,

And wound myself to be revenged on thee,

Think whom I should devote to death and hell,

Whom curse as my undoer, but Lothario !

Hadst thou been just, not all Sciolto's power,

Not all the vows and prayers of sighing Altamont,

Could have prevailed, or won me to forsake thee.

Loth. How have I failed in justice, or in love ?

Burns not my flame as brightly as at first ?

Even now my heart beats high, I languish for thee,

My transports are as fierce, as strong my wishes,
As if thou ne'er hadst blest me with thy beauty.

Cal. How! didst thou dare to think that I would live

A slave to base desires, and brutal pleasures,
To be a wretched wanton for thy leisure,
To toy, and waste an hour of idle time with?
My soul disdains thee for so mean a thought.

Loth. The driving storm of passion will have way,

And I must yield before it. Wert thou calm,
Love, the poor criminal, whom thou hast doomed,
Has yet a thousand tender things to plead,
To charm thy rage, and mitigate his fate.

Enter behind them Altamont.

Alt. I have lost my peace—Ha! do I live and wake?

Cal. Hadst thou been true, how happy had I been!

Not Altamont, but thou, hadst been my lord.
But wherefore named I happiness with thee?
It is for thee, for thee, that I am curst;
For thee my secret soul each hour arraigns me,

Calls me to answer for my virtue stained,
My honour lost to thee: for thee it haunts me,
With stern Sciolto vowing vengeance on me,
With Altamont complaining for his wrongs—

Alt. Behold him here! [Coming forward.

Cal. Ah! [Starting.

Alt. The wretch, whom thou hast made!

Curses and sorrows hast thou heaped upon him,
And vengeance is the only good that's left.

[Drawing.

Loth. Thou hast taken me somewhat unawares,
'tis true:

But love and war take turns, like day and night,
And little preparation serves my turn,
Equal to both, and armed for either field.

We've long been foes, this moment ends our quarrel; [bat!

Earth, Heaven, and fair Calista judge the com-

Cal. Distraction! Fury! Sorrow! Shame! and death!

Alt. Thou hast talked too much, thy breath is poison to me;

It taints the ambient air; this for my father—
This for Sciolto—and this last for Altamont.

[They fight; Lothario is wounded once or twice, and then falls.

Loth. Oh, Altamont! thy genius is the stronger!

Thou hast prevailed!—My fierce ambitious soul
Declining droops, and all her fires grow pale;
Yet let not this advantage swell thy pride;
I conquered in my turn, in love I triumphed.
Those joys are lodged beyond the reach of fate;
That sweet revenge comes smiling to my thoughts,

Adorns my fall, and cheers my heart in dying.

[Dies.

Cal. And what remains for me, beset with shame,

Encompassed round with wretchedness? There is

But this one way to break the toil, and 'scape.

[She catches up Lothario's sword, and offers to kill herself; Altamont runs to her, and wrests it from her.

Alt. What means thy frantic rage?

Cal. Off! let me go.

Alt. Oh! thou hast more than murdered me; yet still,

Still art thou here! and my soul starts with horror,

At thought of any thing that may reach thee.

Cal. Think'st thou I mean to live to be forgiven?

Oh, thou hast known but little of Calista!

If thou hadst never heard my shame, if only
The midnight moon and silent stars had seen it,
I would not bear to be reproached by them,
But dig down deep to find a grave beneath,
And hide me from their beams.

Sciolto within. What, ho! my son!

Alt. It is Sciolto calls; come near and find me;
The wretchedest thing of all my kind on earth.

Cal. Is it the voice of thunder, or my father!

Madness! Confusion! let the storm come on,

Let the tumultuous roar drive all upon me;

Dash my devoted bark, ye surges, break it!

'Tis for my ruin that the tempest rises.

When I am lost, sunk to the bottom low,

Peace shall return, and all be calm again.

Enter Sciolto.

Sci. Even now Rossano leaped the garden wall—

Ha! Death has been among you—Oh, my fears!
Last night thou had'st a difference with thy friend;

The cause thou gavest me was a damned one,
Didst thou not wrong the man who told the truth?

Answer me quick.

Alt. Oh! press me not to speak;

Even now my heart is breaking, and the mention

Will lay me dead before thee. See that body,
And guess my shame, my ruin! Oh, Calista!

Sci. It is enough! But I am slow to execute,
And justice lingers in my lazy hand;

Thus let me wipe dishonour from my name,
And cut thee from the earth, thou stain to goodness—

[Offers to kill Calista, Altamont holds him.

Alt. Stay thee, Sciolto! thou rash father, stay!

Or turn the point on me, and through my breast
Cut out the bloody passage to Calista!

So shall my love be perfect, while for her

I die, for whom I wished to live.

Cal. No, Altamont; my heart, that scorned thy love,

Shall never be indebted to thy pity.

Thus torn, defaced, and wretched as I seem,
Still I have something of Sciolto's virtue.
Yes, yes, my father, I applaud thy justice;
Strike home, and I will bless thee for the blow!
Be merciful, and free me from my pain;
'Tis sharp, 'tis terrible, and I could curse
The cheerful day, men, earth, and heaven, and
thee,
Even thee, thou venerable good old man,
For being author of a wretch like me.

Alt. Listen not to the wildness of her rav-
ing;
Remember nature! Should thy daughter's murder

Defile that hand, so just, so great in arms,
Her blood would rest upon thee to posterity,
Pollute thy name, and sully all thy wars.

Cal. Have I not wronged his gentle nature
much?

And yet behold him pleading for my life!
Lost as thou art to virtue, oh, Calista!
I think thou can'st not bear to be outdone;
Then haste to die, and be obliged no more.

Sci. Thy pious care has given me time to think,
And saved me from a crime; then rest, my
sword:

To honour have I kept thee ever sacred,
Nor will I stain thee with a rash revenge.
But mark me well! I will have justice done;
Hope not to bear away thy crimes unpunished:
I will see justice executed on thee,
Even to a Roman strictness; and thou, Nature,
Or whatsoever thou art, that plead'st within me,
Be still; thy tender strugglings are in vain.

Cal. Then I am doomed to live, and bear your triumph?

To groan beneath your scorn and fierce upbraid-
ing,

Daily to be reproached, and have my misery
At morn, at noon, at night, told over to me,
Lest my remembrance might grow pitiful,
And grant a moment's interval of peace!
Is this, is this the mercy of a father?
I only beg to die, and he denies me.

Sci. Hence, from my sight! thy father cannot bear thee;

Fly with thy infamy to some dark cell,
Where, on the confines of eternal night,
Mourning, misfortune, cares, and anguish dwell;
Where ugly shame hides her opprobrious head,
And death and hell detested rule maintain;
There howl out the remainder of thy life,
And wish thy name may be no more remembered!

Cal. Yes, I will fly to some such dismal place,
And be more cursed than you can wish I were;
This fatal form, that drew on my undoing,
Fasting, and tears, and hardships shall destroy;
Nor light, nor food, nor comfort will I know,
Nor ought that may continue hated life.
Then, when you see me meagre, wan, and changed,

Stretched at my length, and dying in my cave,
On that cold earth I mean shall be my grave,
Perhaps you may relent, and sighing say,
At length her tears have washed her stains away;
At length 'tis time her punishment should cease;

Die, thou poor suffering wretch, and be at peace.
[Exit Calista.]

Sci. Who of my servants wait there?

Enter two or three Servants.

Raise that body, and bear it in. On your lives
Take care my doors be guarded well, that none
Pass out, or enter, but by my appointment.

[Exeunt Servants with Lothario's body.]

Alt. There is a fatal fury in your visage;
It blazes fierce, and menaces destruction.
My father, I am sick of many sorrows,
Even now my easy heart is breaking with them;
Yet, above all, one fear distracts me most;
I tremble at the vengeance which you meditate
On the poor, faithless, lovely, dear Calista.

Sci. Hast thou not read what brave Virginus did?

With his own hand he slew his only daughter,
To save her from the fierce Decemvir's lust.
He slew her, yet unspotted, to prevent
The shame which she might know. Then what should I do?

But thou hast tied my hand.—I will not kill her;
Yet, by the ruin she has brought upon us,
The common infamy that brands us both,
She shall not 'scape.

A.t. You mean that she shall die then?

Sci. Ask me not what, nor how, I have resolved,

For all within is anarchy and uproar!
Oh, Altamont! What a vast scheme of joy
Has this one day destroyed? Well did I hope
This daughter would have blest my latter days;
That I should live to see you the world's wonder,

So happy, great, and good, that none were like
you.

While I, from busy life and care set free,
Had spent the evening of my age at home,
Among a little prattling race of yours!
There, like an old man, talked awhile, and then Lain down and slept in peace. Instead of this,
Sorrow and shame must bring me to my grave—
Oh, damn her! damn her!

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Arm yourself, my lord:

Rossano, who but now escaped the garden,
Has gathered in the street a band of rioters,
Who threaten you, and all your friends, with ruin,

Unless Lothario be returned in safety. [Exit.]

Sci. By Heaven, their fury rises to my wish,
Nor shall misfortune know my house alone,
But thou, Lothario, and thy race, shall pay me
For all the sorrows which my age is cursed with!
I think my name as great, my friends as potent,

As any in the state ; all shall be summoned ;
I know that all will join their hands to ours,
And vindicate thy vengeance. When our force
Is full, and armed, we shall expect thy sword
To join with us, and sacrifice to justice. —

[Exit Sciolto.]

Alt. There is a stupid weight upon my senses ;
A dismal sullen stillness, that succeeds
The storm of rage and grief, like silent death,
After the tumult and the noise of life.
Would it were death, as sure 'tis wondrous like
it,

For I am sick of living ; my soul's palled,
She kindles not with anger and revenge :
Love was the informing, active fire within :
Now that is quenched, the mass forgets to move,
And longs to mingle with its kindred earth.

[A tumultuous noise, with clashing of swords, as at a little distance.]

Enter Lavinia, with two Servants, their swords drawn.

Lav. Fly swiftly fly, to my Horatio's aid,
Nor lose your vain officious cares on me !
Bring me my lord, my husband, to my arms !
He is Lavinia's life ! bring him me safe,
And I shall be at ease, be well, and happy.

[Exeunt Servants.]

Alt. Art thou Lavinia ? Oh ! what barbarous
hand
Could wrong thy poor defenceless innocence,
And leave such marks of more than savage
fury ?

Lav. My brother ! Oh my heart is full of
fears ;
Perhaps even now my dear Horatio bleeds ! —
Nor far from hence, as passing to the port,
By a mad multitude we were surrounded,
Who ran upon us with uplifted swords,
And cried aloud for vengeance, and Lothario.
My lord, with ready boldness, stood the shock,
To shelter me from danger ; but in vain,
Had not a party from Sciolto's palace Rushed out, and snatched me from amidst the fray.

Alt. What of my friend ?

Lav. Ha ! by my joys, 'tis he ! [Looking out.]
He lives, he comes to bless me ! he is safe !

Enter Horatio, with two or three Servants, their swords drawn.

1st Serv. 'Twere at the utmost hazard of your life

To venture forth again, till we are stronger :
Their number trebles ours.

Hor. No matter ; let it :
Death is not half so shocking as that traitor.
My honest soul is mad with indignation,
To think her plainness could be so abused,
As to mistake that wretch, and call him friend ;
I cannot bear the sight !

Alt. Open, thou earth,
Gape wide, and take me down to thy dark bosom,
To hide me from Horatio !

Hor. Oh, Lavinia !

Believe not but I joy to see thee safe :
Would our ill-fortune had not drove us hither :
I could even wish we rather had been wrecked
On any other shore, than saved on this.

Lav. Oh, let us bless the mercy that preserved us,
That gracious power that saved us for each
other :

And, to adorn the sacrifice of praise,
Offer forgiveness too ; be thou like Heaven,
And put away the offences of thy friend,
Far, far from thy remembrance.

Alt. I have marked him,
To see if one forgiving glance stole hither ;
If any spark of friendship were alive,
That would, by sympathy, at meeting glow,
And strive to kindle up the flame anew ;
'Tis lost, 'tis gone ; his soul is quite estranged,
And knows me for its counterpart no more !

Hor. Thou know'st thy rule, thy empire in Horatio ;

Nor canst thou ask in vain, command in vain,
Where nature, reason, nay, where love is judge ;
But when you urge my temper to comply
With what it most abhors, I cannot do it.

Lav. Where didst thou get this sullen gloomy hate ?

It was not in thy nature to be thus ;
Come, put it off, and let thy heart be cheerful !
Be gay again, and know the joys of friendship,
The trust, security, and mutual tenderness,
The double joys, where each is glad for both ;
Friendship, the wealth, the last retreat and
strength,

Secure against ill-fortune, and the world.

Hor. I am not apt to take a light offence,
But patient of the failings of my friends,
And willing to forgive ; but when an injury
Stabs to the heart, and rouses my resentment,
(Perhaps it is the fault of my rude nature)
I own I cannot easily forgive it.

Alt. Thou hast forgot me !

Hor. No.

Alt. Why are thy eyes
Impatient of me then, scornful, and fierce ?

Hor. Because they speak the meaning of my
heart ;

Because they are honest, and disdain a villain !

Alt. I've wronged thee much, Horatio.

Hor. True, thou hast.

When I forget it, may I be a wretch,
Vile as thyself, a false perfidious fellow,
An infamous, believing, British husband.

Alt. I've wronged thee much, and Heaven has well avenged it.

I have not, since we parted, been at peace,
Nor known one joy sincere ; our broken friendship

Pursued me to the last retreat of love,
Stood glaring like a ghost, and made me cold with horror.

Misfortunes on misfortunes press upon me,

Swell o'er my head like waves, and dash me down;

Sorrow, remorse, and shame, have torn my soul;
They hang, like winter, on my youthful hopes,
And blast the spring and promise of my year.

Lav. So flowers are gathered to adorn a grave,
To lose their freshness amongst bones and rottenness,

And have their odours stifled in the dust.
Canst thou hear this, thou cruel, hard Horatio?
Canst thou behold thy Altamont undone?
That gentle, that dear youth! canst thou behold him,

His poor heart broken, death in his pale visage,
And groaning out his woes, yet stand unmoved?

Hor. The brave and wise I pity in misfortune

But when ingratitude and folly suffers,
'Tis weakness to be touched.

Att. I will not ask thee
To pity or forgive me; but confess,
This scorn, this insolence of hate, is just;
'Tis constancy of mind, and manly in thee.
But, Oh! had I been wronged by thee, Horatio,
There is a yielding softness in my heart
Could ne'er have stood it out; but I had ran,
With streaming eyes, and open arms, upon thee,
And pressed thee close, close!

Hor. I must hear no more;
Thy weakness is contagious; I shall catch it.
And be a tame, fond wretch.

Lav. Where wouldst thou go?
Wouldst thou part thus? you shall not, 'tis impossible;

For I will bar thy passage, kneeling thus:
Perhaps, thy cruel hand may spurn me off,
But I will throw my body in thy way,
And thou shalt trample over my faithful bosom,
Tread on me, wound me, kill me, ere thou pass.

Att. Urge not in vain thy pious suit, Lavinia,
I have enough to rid me of my pain.

Calista, thou hadst reached my heart before;
To make all sure, my friend repeats the blow:
But in the grave our cares shall be forgotten,
There love and friendship cease. [Falls.]

[Lavinia runs to him, and endeavours to raise him.]

Lav. Speak to me, Altamont!
He faints! He dies! Now, turn and see thy triumph!

My brother! But our cares shall end together;
Here will I lay me down by thy dear side,
Bemoan thy too hard fate, then share it with thee,
And never see my cruel lord again.

[Horatio runs to Altamont, and raises him in his arms.]

Hor. It is too much to bear! Look up, my Altamont!

My stubborn, unrelenting heart has killed him.
Look up and bless me! tell me that thou livest!
Oh! I have urged thy gentleness too far;

[He revives.]

Do thou and my Lavinia both forgive me;
A flood of tenderness comes o'er my soul;
I cannot speak—I love, forgive, and pity thee—
Att. I thought that nothing could have stayed my soul:

That long ere this her flight had reached the stars;

But thy known voice has lured her back again.
Methinks, I fain would set all right with thee,
Make up this most unlucky breach, and then,
With thine and Heaven's forgiveness on my soul,

Shrink to my grave, and be at ease for ever.

Hor. By Heaven, my heart bleeds for thee; even this moment,

I feel thy pangs of disappointed love.
Is it not pity that this youth should fall,
That all his wondrous goodness should be lost,
And the world never know it? Oh, my Altamont!
Give me thy sorrows, let me bear them for thee,
And shelter thee from ruin!

Lav. Oh, my brother,
Think not but we will share in all thy woes;
We'll sit all day, and tell sad tales of love:
And when we light upon some faithless woman,
Some beauty, like Calista, false and fair,
We'll fix our grief, and our complaining there;
We'll curse the nymph that drew the ruin on,
And mourn the youth that was, like thee, undone. [Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—A Room hung with black; on one side Iothario's body on a bier; on the other a table, with a skull and other bones, a book and a lamp on it.

Calista is discovered on a couch, in black; her hair hanging loose and disordered. After soft music, she rises and comes forward.

SONG.

Hear, you midnight phantoms, hear,
You who pale and wan appear,
And fill the wretch who wakes with fear;
You, who wander, scream and groan
Round the mansions once your own;
You, who still your crimes upbraid;
You, who rest not with the dead;

From the coverts where you stray,
Where you lurk and shun the day,
From the charnel and the tomb,
Hither haste ye, hither come.
Chide Calista for delay,
Tell her, 'tis for her you stay;
Bid her die and come away.
See the sexton with his spade,
See the grave already made;
Listen, fair one, to thy knell,
'This music is thy passing bell.

Cal. 'Tis well! these solemn sounds, this pomp of horror,
Are fit to feed the frenzy in my soul.
Here's room for meditation even to madness;

Till the mind burst with thinking. This dull flame

Sleeps in the socket. Sure the book was left
To tell me something; for instruction then—
He teaches holy sorrow and contrition,
And penitence. Is it become an art, then?
A trick, that lazy, dull, luxurious gownmen
Can teach us to do over? I'll no more on't;

[Throwing away the book.]

I have more real anguish in my heart,
Than all their pedant discipline ever knew.
What charnel has been rifled for these bones?
Fie! this is pageantry; they look uncouthly.
But what of that, if he or she, that owned
them,

Safe from disquiet sit, and smile to see
The farce their miserable relics play?
But here's a sight is terrible indeed!
Is this that haughty, gallant, gay Lothario?
That dear perfidious—Ah! how pale he looks!
How grim with clotted blood, and those dead
eyes!

Ascend, ye ghosts, fantastic forms of night,
In all your different dreadful shapes ascend,
And match the present horror, if ye can!

[Enter Sciolto.]

Sci. This dead of night, this silent hour of darkness,

Nature for rest ordained, and soft repose;
And yet distraction, and tumultuous jars,
Keep all our frighted citizens awake:

The senate, weak, divided, and irresolute,
Want power to succour the afflicted state.
Vainly in words and long debates they are wise, While the fierce factions scorn their peaceful orders,

And drown the voice of law in noise and anarchy.

Amidst the general wreck, see where she stands,
[Pointing to Calista.]

Like Helen, in the night when Troy was sacked,
Spectatress of the mischief which she made.

Cal. It is Sciolto! Be thyself, my soul;
Be strong to bear his fatal indignation,
That he may see thou art not lost so far,
But somewhat still of his great spirit lives
In the forlorn Calista.

Sci. Thou wert once
My daughter.

Cal. Happy were it had I died,
And never lost that name.

Sci. That's something yet;
Thou wert the very darling of my age:
I thought the day too short to gaze upon thee,
That all the blessings I could gather for thee,
By cares on earth, and by my prayers to Heaven,

Were little for my fondness to bestow;
Why didst thou turn to folly, then, and curse
me?

Cal. Because my soul was rudely drawn from
yours;

A poor imperfect copy of my father,

Where goodness, and the strength of manly virtue,

Was thinly planted, and the idle void
Filled up with light belief, and easy fondness;
It was, because I loved, and was a woman.

Sci. Hadst thou been honest, thou hadst been a cherubim;

But of that joy, as of a gem long lost,
Beyond redemption gone, think we no more.
Hast thou e'er dared to meditate on death?

Cal. I have, as on the end of shame and sorrow.

Sci. Ha! answer me! Say, hast thou coolly
thought?

'Tis not the stoick's lessons got by rote,
The pomp of words, and pedant dissertations,
That can sustain thee in that hour of terror;
Books have taught cowards to talk nobly of it,
But when the trial comes, they stand aghast;
Hast thou considered what may happen after
it?

How thy account may stand, and what to answer? [self,

Cal. I have turned my eyes inward upon my-
Where foul offence and shame have laid all
waste;

Therefore my soul abhors the wretched dwell-
ing,

And longs to find some happy place of rest.

Sci. 'Tis justly thought, and worthy of that spirit,

That dwelt in ancient Latian breasts, when Rome

Was mistress of the world. I would go on
And tell thee all my purpose; but it sticks
Here at my heart, and cannot find a way.

Cal. Then spare the telling, if it be a pain,
And write the meaning with your poignard here.

Sci. Oh! truly guessed—see'st thou, this trembling hand— [Holding up a dagger.
Thrice justice urged—and thrice the slackening sinews

Forgot their office, and confessed the father.
At length the stubborn virtue has prevailed,
It must, it must be so—Oh! take it then,

And know the rest untaught! [Giving the dagger.

Cal. I understand you.

It is but thus, and both are satisfied.

[She offers to kill herself: Sciolto catches hold of her arm.]

Sci. A moment, give me yet a moment's space.
The stern, the rigid judge has been obeyed;
Now nature, and the father, claim their turns.
I've held the balance with an iron hand,
And put off every tender human thought,
To doom my child to death; but spare my eyes
The most unnatural sight, lest their strings crack,

My old brain split, and I grow mad with horror!

Cal. Ha! Is it possible! and is there yet
Some little dear remnant of love and tenderness
For poor, undone Calista, in your heart!

Sci. Oh! when I think what pleasure I took in thee,
What joys thou gavest me in thy prattling infancy,
Thy sprightly wit, and early blooming beauty!
How have I stood, and fed my eyes upon thee,
Then, lifting up my hands, and wondering, blest
thee—
By my strong grief, my heart even melts within
me;

I could curse Nature, and that tyrant, honour,
For making me thy father, and thy judge;
Thou art my daughter still!

Cal. For that kind word,
Thus let me fall, thus humbly to the earth,
Weep on your feet, and bless you for this goodness.

Oh! 'tis too much for this offending wretch,
This parricide, that murders with her crimes,
Shortens her father's age, and cuts him off,
Ere little more than half his years be numbered.

Sci. Would it were otherwise—but thou must die—

Cal. That I must die, it is my only comfort;
Death is the privilege of human nature,
And life without it were not worth our taking:
Thither the poor, the prisoner, and the mourner,
Fly for relief, and lay their burthens down.
Come then, and take me into thy cold arms,
Thou meagre shade; here let me breathe my
last,

Charmed with my father's pity and forgiveness,
More than if angels tuned their golden viols,
And sung a requiem to my parting soul.

Sci. I am summoned hence; ere this my friends expect me.

There is I know not what of sad presage,
That tells me, I shall never see thee more;
If it be so, this is our last farewell,
And these the parting pangs, which nature feels,

When anguish rends the heart-strings—Oh,
my daughter!

Cal. Now think, thou cursed Calista! now behold

The desolation, horror, blood, and ruin,
Thy crimes and fatal folly spread around,
That loudly cry for vengeance on thy head.
Yet Heaven, who knows our weak, imperfect natures,

How blind with passions, and how prone to evil,
Makes not too strict inquiry for our offences,
But is atoned by penitence and prayer:
Cheap recompense! here 'twould not be received,

Nothing but blood can make the expiation,
And cleanse the soul from inbred, deep pollution.

And see, another injured wretch is come,
To call for justice from my tardy hand.

Enter Altamont.

Alt. Hail to you, horrors! hail, thou house of death!

And thou, the lonely mistress of the shades,
Whose beauty gilds the more than midnight
darkness,

And makes it grateful as the dawn of day,
Oh, take me in, a fellow-mourner, with thee,
I'll number groan for groan, and tear for tear;
And when the fountain of thy eyes is dry,
Mine shall supply the stream, and weep for
both.

Cal. I know thee well; thou art the injured
Altamont;

Thou comest to urge me with the wrongs I've done thee;

But know, I stand upon the brink of life,
And in a moment mean to set me free
From shame and thy upbraiding.

Alt. Falsely, falsely

Dost thou accuse me! When did I complain,
Or murmur at my fate? For thee I have Forgot the temper of Italian husbands,
And fondness has prevailed upon revenge.
I bore my load of infamy with patience,
As holy men do punishment from Heaven:
Nor thought it hard, because it came from thee.
Oh, then, forbid me not to mourn thy loss,
To wish some better fate had ruled our loves,
And that Calista had been mine, and true.

Cal. Oh, Altamont! 'tis hard for souls like mine,

Haughty and fierce, to yield they've done amiss.
But, oh, behold! my proud disdainful heart
Bends to thy gentler virtue. Yes, I own,
Such is thy truth, thy tenderness, and love,
Such are the graces that adorn thy youth,
That, were I not abandoned to destruction,
With thee I might have lived for ages blessed,
And died in peace within thy faithful arms.

Alt. Then happiness is still within our reach.
Here let remembrance lose our past misfortune
Tear all records that hold the fatal story;
Here let our joys begin, from hence go on,
In long successive order.

Cal. What! in death?

Alt. Then, art thou fixed to die?—But be it
so;

We'll go together; my adventurous love
Shall follow thee to those uncertain beings.
Whether our lifeless shades are doomed to wander

In gloomy groves, with discontented ghosts;
Or whether through the upper air we flit,
And tread the fields of light; still I'll pursue
thee,

'Till fate ordains that we shall part no more.

Cal. Oh, no! Heaven has some other belot in store

To crown thee with. Live, and be happy long;
Live, for some maid that shall deserve thy good-
ness,

Some kind, unpractised heart, that never yet
Has listened to the false ones of thy sex,
Nor known the arts of ours; she shall reward
thee,

Meet thee with virtues equal to thy own,
 Charm thee with sweetness, beauty, and with
 truth ;
 Be blest in thee alone, and thou in her.

Enter Horatio.

Hor. Now, mourn indeed, ye miserable pair ;
 For now the measure of your woes is full.

Alt. What dost thou mean, Horatio ?

Hor. Oh, 'tis dreadful !

The great the good Sciolto dies this moment.

Cal. My father !

Alt. That's a deadly stroke, indeed.

Hor. Not long ago he privately went forth,
 Attended but by few, and those unbidden.
 I heard which way he took, and straight pursued
 him ;

But found him compassed by Lothario's faction,
 Almost alone, amidst a croud of foes.

Too late we brought him aid, and drove them
 back ;

Ere that, his frantic valour had provoked
 The death he seemed to wish for from their swords.

Cal. And dost thou bear me yet, thou patient
 earth ?

Dost thou not labour with thy murtherous weight ?
 And you, ye glittering, heavenly host of stars,
 Hide your fair heads in clouds, or I shall blast
 For I am all contagion, death, and ruin, [you ;
 And nature sickens at me. Rest, thou world,
 This parricide shall be thy plague no more ;
 Thus, thus I set thee free. [Stabs herself.

Hor. Oh, fatal rashness !

Alt. Thou dost instruct me well. To lengthen
 life,

Is but to trifle now.

[Altamont offers to kill himself. Horatio prevents him, and wrests his sword from him.

Hor. Ha ! what means

The frantic Altamont ? Some foe to man
 Has breathed on every breast contagious fury,
 And epidemic madness.

Enter Sciolto, pale and bloody, supported by servants.

Cal. Oh, my heart !

Well may'st thou fail ; for see, the spring that fed

Thy vital stream is wasted, and runs low.
 My father ! will you now, at last, forgive me,
 If, after all my crimes, and all your suffering,
 I call you once again by that dear name ?
 Will you forget my shame, and those wide
 wounds ?

Lift up your hand, and bless me, ere I go
 Down to my dark abode ?

Sci. Alas, my daughter !

Thou hast rashly ventured on a stormy sea,
 Where life, fame, virtue, all were wrecked and lost.

But sure thou hast borne thy part in all the anguish,

And smarted with the pain. Then rest in peace ;
 Let silence and oblivion hide thy name,

And save thee from the malice of posterity ;
 And may'st thou find with Heaven the same forgiveness,

As with thy father here.—Die, and be happy.

Cal. Celestial sounds ! Peace dawns upon my
 soul,

And every pain grows less—Oh, gentle Altamont !

Think not too hardly of me when I'm gone ;

But pity me—Had I but early known

Thy wond'rous worth, thou excellent young man,

We had been happier both—Now, 'tis too late ;

And yet my eyes take pleasure to behold thee ;

Thou art their last dear object—Mercy, Heaven !
 [She dies.

Alt. Cold ! dead, and cold ! and yet thou art not changed,

But lovely still. Hadst thou a thousand faults,

What heart so hard, what virtue so severe,

But at the beauty must of force relent,

Melted to pity, love, and to forgiveness ?

Sci. Oh, turn thee from that fatal object, Altamont !

Come near, and let me bless thee, ere I die.

To thee, and brave Horatio, I bequeath

My fortunes—Lay me by thy noble father,

And love my memory, as thou hast his ;

For thou hast been my son—Oh, gracious Heaven !

Thou that hast endless blessings still in store

For virtue, and for filial piety,

Let grief, disgrace, and want be far away ;

But multiply thy mercies on his head.

Let honour, greatness, goodness, still be with him,

And peace in all his ways—

[He dies.

Alt. Take, take it all :

To thee, Horatio, I resign the gift,

Whilst I pursue my father, and my love,

And find my only portion in the grave.

Hor. The storm of grief bears hard upon his youth,

And bends him, like a drooping flower, to earth.

By such examples are we taught to prove

The sorrows, that attend unlawful love.

Death, or some worse misfortune, soon divide,

The injured bridegroom from his guilty bride.

If you would have the nuptial union last,

Let virtue be the bond that ties it fast.

[Ereunt omnes.

COLIN'S COMPLAINT.

A SONG.

To the Tune of " Grim King of the Ghosts."

DESPAIRING beside a clear stream,

A shepherd forsaken was laid ;

And while a false nymph was his theme,

A willow supported his head.

The wind that blew over the plain,

To his sighs with a sigh did reply ;

And the brook, in return to his pain,

Ran mournfully murmuring by.

Alas, silly swain that I was!

Thus sadly complaining, he cried,
When first I beheld that fair face,
"Twere better by far I had died.
She talk'd, and I bless'd the dear tongue;
When she smil'd, 'twas a pleasure too great;
I listen'd, and cry'd, When she sung,
Was nightingale ever so sweet?

How foolish was I to believe
She could doat on so lowly a clown,
Or that her fond heart would not grieve,
To forsake the fine folk of the town!
To think that a beauty so gay,
So kind and so constant would prove;
Or go clad like our maidens in grey,
Or live in a cottage on love!

What though I have skill to complain,
Though the Muses my temples have crown'd;
What though, when they hear my soft strain,
The virgins sit weeping around!
Ah, Colin, thy hopes are in vain,
Thy pipe and thy laurel resign;
Thy false one inclines to a swain,
Whose music is sweeter than thine.

And you, my companions so dear,
Who sorrow to see me betrayed,
Whatever I suffer, forbear,
Forbear to accuse the false maid.
Though through the wide world I should range,
'Tis in vain from my fortune to fly;
'Twas hers to be false and to change,
'Tis mine to be constant and die.

If while my hard fate I sustain,
In her breast any pity is found,
Let her come with the nymphs of the plain,
And see me laid low in the ground.
The last humble boon that I crave,
Is to shade me with cypress and yew;
And when she looks down on my grave,
Let her own that her shepherd was true.

Then to her new love let her go,
And deck her in golden array,
Be finest at every fine show,
And frolic it all the long day;
While Colin, forgotten and gone,
No more shall be talk'd of, or seen,
Unless when beneath the pale moon,
His ghost shall glide over the green.

A LETTER FROM ITALY,

To the Right Honorable Charles Lord Halifax, in the year 1701.

WHILE you, my Lord, the rural shades admire,
And from Britannia's public posts retire,
Nor longer, her ungrateful sons to please,
For their advantage sacrifice your ease:
Me into foreign realms my fate conveys,
Through nations fruitful of immortal lays,
Where the soft season and inviting clime
Conspire to trouble your repose with rhyme.
For wheresoe'er I turn my ravish'd eyes,
Gay gilded scenes and shining prospects rise,
Poetic fields encompass me around,
And still I seem to tread on classic ground;
For here the Muse so oft her harp has strung,
That not a mountain rears its head unsung,
Renown'd in verse each shady thicket grows,
And every stream in heavenly numbers flows.

How am I pleas'd to search the hills and woods
For rising springs and celebrated floods!
To view the Nar, tumultuous in his course,
And trace the smooth Clitumnus to his source,
To see the Mincio draw his watery store,
Through the long windings of a fruitful shore,
And hoary Albula's infected tide
O'er the warm bed of smoking sulphur glide.

Fir'd with a thousand raptures, I survey
Eridanus through flowery meadows stray,
The king of floods! that, rolling o'er the plains,
The towering Alps of half their moisture drains,
And proudly swolln with a whole winter's snows,
Distributes wealth and plenty where he flows.

Sometimes, misguided by the tanelful throng,
I look for streams immortalis'd in song,
That lost in silence and oblivion lie.
(Dumb are their fountains and their channels dry)
Yet run for ever by the Muse's skill,
And in the smooth description murmur still.

Sometimes to gentle Tiber I retire,
And the fam'd river's empty shores admire,
That destitute of strength derives its course
From thirsty urns, and an unfruitful source;
Yet sung so often in poetic lays,
With scorn the Danube and the Nile surveys;
So high the deathless Muse exalts her theme!
Such was the Boyne, a poor inglorious stream,
That in Hibernian vales obscurely stray'd,
And unobserv'd in wild meanders play'd;
Till by your lines and Nassau's sword renown'd,
Its rising billows through the world resound.
Where'er the hero's godlike acts can pierce,
Or where the fame of an immortal verse.

Oh could the Muse my ravish'd breast inspire
With warmth like yours, and raise an equal fire,
Unnumber'd beauties in my verse should shine,
And Virgil's Italy should yield to mine!

See how the golden groves around me smile,
That shun the coast of Britain's stormy isle,
Or, when transplanted and preserv'd with care,
Curse the cold clime, and starve in northern air.
Here kindly warmth their mountain juice fer-
ments

To nobler tastes, and more exalted scents:
Ev'n the rough rocks with tender myrtle bloom,
And trodden weeds send out a rich perfume.
Bear me, some god, to Baia's gentle seats,
Or cover me in Umbria's green retreats;
Where western gales eternally reside,
And all the seasons lavish all their pride:
Blossoms, and fruits, and flowers together rise,
And the whole year in gay confusion lies.

Immortal glories in my mind revive,
And in my soul a thousand passions strive,
When Rome's exalted beauties I descry,
Magnificent in piles of ruin lie.
An amphitheatre's amazing height
Here fills my eye with terror and delight,
That on its public shows unpeopled Rome,
And held, uncrowded, nations in its womb:
Here pillars rough with sculpture pierce the skies,
And here the proud triumphal arches rise,
Where the old Roman's deathless acts display'd,
Their base degenerate progeny upbraid:
Whole rivers here forsake the fields below,
And wandering at their height through airy channels flow.

Still to new scenes my wandering Muse retires,
And the dumb show of breathing rocks admires;
Where the smooth chisel all its force has shown,
And soften'd into flesh the rugged stone.
In solemn silence, a majestic band,
Heroes, and gods, and Roman consuls stand,
Stern tyrants, whom their cruelties renown,
And emperors in Parian marble frown; [sued,
While the bright dames, to whom they humbly
Still show the charms that their proud hearts subdued.

Fain would I Raphael's godlike art rehearse,
And show th' immortal labours in my verse,
Where from the mingled strength of shade and
light

A new creation rises to my sight,
Such heavenly figures from his pencil flow,
So warm with life his blended colours glow.
From theme to theme with secret pleasure tost,
Amidst the soft variety I'm lost:
Here pleasing airs my ravish'd soul confound
With circling notes and labyrinths of sound;
Here domes and temples rise in distant views,
And opening palaces invite my Muse.

How has kind heaven adorn'd the happy
land,
And scatter'd blessing with a wasteful hand!
But what avail her unexhausted stores,
Her blooming mountains, and her sunny shores,

With all the gifts that heaven and earth impart,
The smiles of nature, and the charms of art,
While proud oppression in her valleys reigns,
And tyranny usurps her happy plains?

The poor inhabitant beholds in vain,
The reddening orange and the swelling grain:
Joyless he sees the growing oils and wines,
And in the myrtle's fragrant shade repines:
Starves, in the midst of nature's bounty curst,
And in the loaden vineyard dies for thirst.

Oh liberty, thou goddess heavenly bright,
Profuse of bliss, and pregnant with delight!
Eternal pleasures in thy presence reign,
And smiling plenty leads thy wanton train:
Eas'd of her load subjection grows more light,
And poverty looks cheerful in thy sight;
Thou mak'st the gloomy face of nature gay,
Giv'st beauty to the sun and pleasure to the
day.

Thee, goddess, thee, Britannia's isle adores;
How has she oft exhausted all her stores,
How oft in fields of death thy presence sought,
Nor thinks the mighty prize too dearly bought!
On foreign mountains may the sun refine
The grape's soft juice, and mellow it to wine,
With citron groves adorn a distant soil,
And the fat olive swell with floods of oil:
We envy not the warmer clime, that lies
In ten degrees of more indulgent skies,
Nor at the coarseness of our heaven repine,
Though o'er our heads the frozen Pleiads shine:
'Tis liberty that crowns Britannia's isle,
And makes her barren rocks and her bleak mountains smile.

Others with towering piles may please the sight,
And in their proud aspiring domes delight;
A nicer touch to the stretched canvas give,
Or teach their animated rocks to live:
'Tis Britain's care to watch o'er Europe's fate,
And hold in balance each contending state,
To threaten bold presumptuous kings with war,
And answer her afflicted neighbour's prayer.
The Dane and Swede, rous'd up by fierce alarms,
Bless the wise conduct of her pious arms:
Soon as her fleets appear, their terrors cease,
And all the northern world lies hush'd in peace.

Th' ambitious Gaul beholds with secret dread
Her thunder aim'd at his aspiring head,
And fain her godlike sons would disunite
By foreign gold, or by domestic spite:
But strives in vain to conquer or divide,
Whom Nassau's arms defend and counsels guide.

Fir'd with the name, which I so oft have found
The distant climes and different tongues re-
sound,

I bridle in my struggling muse with pain,
That longs to launch into a bolder strain.

But I've already troubled you too long,
Nor dare attempt a more adventurous song.
My humble verse demands a softer theme,
A painted meadow, or a purling stream;
Unfit for heroes: whom immortal lays,
And lines like Virgil's, or like yours, should praise.

TO SIR GODFREY KNELLER, ON HIS PICTURE OF THE KING.

KNELLER, with silence and surprise
We see Britannia's monarch rise,
A godlike form, by thee display'd
In all the force of light and shade ;
And, aw'd by thy decisive hand,
As in the presence chamber stand.

The magic of thy art calls forth
His secret soul and hidden worth,
His probity and mildness shows,
His care of friends, and scorn of foes :
In every stroke, in every line,
Does some exalted virtue shine,
And Albion's happiness we trace
Through all the features of his face.

O may I live to hail the day,
When the glad nation shall survey
Their sovereign, through his wide command,
Passing in progress o'er the land !
Each heart shall bend, and every voice
In loud applauding shouts rejoice,
Whilst all his gracious aspect praise,
And crowds grow loyal as they gaze.

The image on the medal plac'd,
With its bright round of titles grac'd,
And stamp'd on British coins shall live,
To richest ores the value give,
Or, wrought within the curious mould,
Shape and adorn the running gold.
To bear this form, the genial sun
Has daily since his course begun,
Rejoic'd the metal to refine,
And ripen'd the Peruvian mine.

Thou, Kneller, long with noble pride,
The foremost of thy art, hast vi'd
With nature in a generous strife,
And touch'd the canvas into life.

Thy pencil has, by monarchs sought,
From reign to reign in ermine wrought,
And, in the robes of state array'd,
The kings of half an age display'd.

Here swarthy Charles appears, and there
His brother with dejected air :
Triumphant Nassau here we find,
And with him bright Maria join'd ;
There Anna, great as when she sent
Her armies through the continent,
Ere yet her Hero was disgrac'd :
O may fam'd Brunswick be the last,
(Though heaven should with my wish agree,
And long preserve thy art in thee,)
The last, the happiest British king,
Whom thou shalt paint, or I shall sing !

Wise Phidias thus, his skill to prove,
Through many a god advanc'd to Jove,
And taught the polished rocks to shine
With airs and lineaments divine ;
Till Greece, amaz'd, and half afraid,
Th' assembled deities survey'd.

Great Pan, who went to chace the fair,
And lov'd the spreading oak, was there,
Old Saturn too with upcast eyes

2 z

Beheld his abdicated skies ;
And mighty Mars, for war renown'd,
In adamantine armour frown'd ;
By him the childless goddess rose,
Minerva, studious to compose
Her twisted threads : the web she strung,
And o'er a loom of marble hung :
Thetis, the troubled ocean's queen,
Match'd with a mortal, next was seen,
Reclining on a funeral urn,
Her short-liv'd darling son to mourn.
The last was he, whose thunder slew
The Titan-race, a rebel crew,
That from a hundred hills allied
In impious leagues their king defied.

This wonder of the sculptor's hand
Produced, his art was at a stand :
For who would hope new fame to raise,
Or risk his well-establish'd praise,
That, his high genius to approve,
Had drawn a George, or carv'd a Jove ?

AN ODE.

THE spacious firmament on high,
With all the blue ethereal sky,
And spangled heavens, a shining frame,
Their great original proclaim.
Th' unweary'd sun, from day to day,
Does his Creator's power display ;
And publishes, to every land,
The work of an Almighty hand.

Soon as the evening shades prevail,
The moon takes up the wondrous tale ;
And nightly, to the listening earth,
Repeats the story of her birth :
Whilst all the stars that round her burn,
And all the planets, in their turn,
Confirm the tidings as they roll,
And spread the truth from pole to pole.

What though, in solemn silence, all
Move round the dark terrestrial ball ;
What though, no real voice, nor sound,
Amidst their radiant orbs be found :
In reason's ear they all rejoice,
And utter forth a glorious voice :
For ever singing as they shine,
The hand that made us is divine.

AN ODE.

How are thy servants blest, O Lord !
How sure is their defence !
Eternal wisdom is their guide,
Their help Omnipotence.

In foreign realms, and lands remote,
Supported by thy care,
Through burning climes I pass'd unhurt,
And breath'd in tainted air.

Thy mercy sweeten'd every soil,
Made every region please ;
The hoary Alpine hills it warm'd,
And smooth'd the Tyrrhene seas.

Think, O my soul, devoutly think,
How, with affrighted eyes,
Thou saw'st the wide-extended deep,
In all its horrors rise.

Confusion dwelt on every face,
And fear in every heart ;
When waves on waves, and gulfs on gulfs,
O'ercame the pilot's art.

Yet then from all my griefs, O Lord !
Thy mercy set me free ;
Whilst in the confidence of prayer,
My soul took hold on thee.

For though in dreadful whirls we hung
High on the broken wave,
I knew thou wert not slow to hear,
Nor impotent to save.

The storm was laid, the winds retir'd
Obedient to thy will ;
The sea, that roar'd at thy command,
At thy command was still.

In midst of dangers, fears, and death,
Thy goodness I'll adore ;
And praise thee for thy mercies past,
And humbly hope for more.

My life, if thou preserv'st my life,
Thy sacrifice shall be ;
And death, if death must be my doom,
Shall join my soul to thee.

SCENE, a large Hall in the Governor's Palace of Utica.

ACT I. SCENE I.

Portius, Marcus.

Por. The dawn is over-cast, the morning lowers,
And heavily in clouds brings on the day,
The great th' important day ; big with the fate
Of Cato and of Rome.—Our father's death
Would fill up all the guilt of civil war,
And close the scene of blood. Already Cæsar

Has ravag'd more than half the globe, and sees
Mankind grown thin by his destructive sword :
Should he go further, numbers would be want-
ing,

To form new battles, and support his crimes.
Ye gods, what havoc does ambition make
Among your works !

Marc. Thy steady temper, Portius,
Can look on guilt, rebellion, fraud, and Cæsar,
In the calm lights of mild philosophy ;
I'm tortur'd ev'n to madness, when I think
On the proud victor : every time he's nam'd
Pharsalia rises to my view—I see
Th' insulting tyrant prancing o'er the field
Strow'd with Rome's citizens, and drench'd in slaughter,

His horse's hoofs wet with Patrician blood.
Oh Portius, is there not some chosen curse,
Some hidden thunder in the stores of heaven
Red with uncommon wrath, to blast the man
Who owes his greatness to his country's ruin ?

Por. Believe me, Marcus, 'tis an impious greatness,

And mixed with too much horror to be envied :
How does the lustre of our father's actions,
Through the dark cloud of ills that cover him,
Break out, and burn with more triumphant brightness !

His sufferings shine, and spread a glory round
him ;

Greatly unfortunate, he fights the cause
Of honour, virtue, liberty and Rome.
His sword ne'er fell but on the guilty head ;
Oppression, tyranny, and power usurp'd,
Draw all the vengeance of his arm upon them.

Marc. Who knows not this ; But what can Cato do

Against a world, a base degenerate world,
That courts the yoke, and bows the neck to Cæsar ?

Pent up in Utica, he vainly forms
A poor epitome of Roman greatness,
And, covered with Numidian guards directs
A feeble army, and an empty senate,
Remnants of mighty battles fought in vain.
By heavens, such virtues, joined with such success,

Distract my very soul : our father's fortune
Would almost tempt us to renounce his precepts.

Por. Remember what our father oft has told
us :

The ways of heaven are dark and intricate ;
Puzzled in mazes, and perplex'd with errors,
Our understanding traces them in vain,
Lost and bewilder'd in the fruitless search ;
Nor sees with how much art the windings run,
Nor where the regular confusion ends.

Marc. These are suggestions of a mind at
ease :

Oh Portius, didst thou taste but half the griefs
That wring my soul, thou could'st not talk thus coldly.

Passion unpity'd and successful love
Plant daggers in my heart, and aggravate
My other griefs. Were but my Lucia kind!—

Por. Thou see'st not that thy brother is thy rival:

But I must hide it, for I know thy temper.

[Aside.
Now, Marcus, now, thy virtue's on the proof:
Put forth thy utmost strength, work every nerve,

And call up all thy father in thy soul:
To quell the tyrant love, and guard thy heart
On this weak side, where most our nature fails,
Would be a conquest worthy Cato's son.

Marc. Portius, the counsel which I cannot take,

Instead of healing, but upbraids my weakness.
Bid me for honour plunge into a war
Of thickest foes, and rush on certain death,
Then shalt thou see that Marcus is not slow
To follow glory, and confess his father.
Love is not to be reason'd down, or lost
In high ambition, and a thirst of greatness;
'Tis second life, it grows into the soul,
Warms every vein, and beats in every pulse.
I feel it here: my resolution melts—

Por. Behold young Juba, the Numidian
prince!

With how much care he forms himself to glory,
And breaks the fierceness of his native temper
To copy out our father's bright example.
He loves our sister Marcia, greatly loves her;
His eyes, his looks, his actions, all betray it:
But still the smother'd fondness burns within
him,

When most it swells and labours for a vent,
The sense of honour and desire of fame
Drive the big passion back into the heart.
What! shall an African, shall Juba's heir,
Reproach great Cato's son, and shew the world
A virtue wanting in a Roman soul?

Marc. Portius, no more! your words leave stings behind them

Whene'er did Juba, or did Portius, shew
A virtue that has cast me at a distance,
And thrown me out in the pursuits of honour?

Por. Marcus, I know thy generous temper
well;

Fling but th' appearance of dishonour on it,
It strait takes fire, and mounts into a blaze.

Marc. A brother's sufferings claim a brother's pity.

Por. Heaven knows I pity thee: behold my Ev'n whilst I speak.—Do they not swim in
tears?

Were but my heart as naked to thy view,
Marcus would see it bleed in his behalf.

Marc. Why then dost treat me with rebukes, instead

Of kind condoling cares and friendly sorrow?

Por. O Marcus, did I know the way to ease
Thy troubled heart, and mitigate thy pains,
Marcus, believe me, I could die to do it.

2 z 2

Marc. Thou best of brothers, and thou best of friends:

Pardon a weak distemper'd soul, that swells
With sudden gusts, and sinks as soon in calms,
The sport of passions—But Sempronius comes:
He must not find this softness hanging on me.
[Exit.

SCENE II.

Enter Sempronius.

Sem. Conspiracies no sooner should be form'd
Than executed. What means Portius here?
I like not that cold youth. I must dissemble,
And speak a language foreign to my heart.

Good morrow, Portius! let us once embrace,
Once more embrace; whilst yet we both are free.

To-morrow should we thus express our friendship,

Each might receive a slave into his arms.
This sun perhaps, this morning sun's the last
That e'er shall rise on Roman liberty.

Por. My father has this morning call'd together

To this poor hall his little Roman senate
(The leavings of Pharsalia), to consult
If yet he can oppose the mighty torrent
That bears down Rome, and all her gods, before
it,

Or must at length give up the world to Cæsar.

Sem. Not all the pomp and majesty of Rome
Can raise her senate more than Cato's presence.
His virtues render our assembly awful,
They strike with something like religious fear,
And make ev'n Cæsar tremble at the head
Of armies flash'd with conquest: O my Portius,
Could I but call that wondrous man my father,
Would but thy sister Marcia be propitious

To thy friend's vows; I might be bless'd indeed!

Por. Alas! Sempronius, would'st thou talk
of love

To Marcia, whilst her father's life's in danger?
Thou might'st as well court the pale trembling
vestal,

When she beholds the holy flame expiring.

Sem. The more I see the wonders of thy race,
The more I'm charm'd. 'Thou must take heed,
my Portius!

The world has all its eyes on Cato's son.

Thy father's merit sets thee up to view,
And shews thee in the fairest point of light,
To make thy virtues or thy faults conspicuous.

Por. Well dost thou seem to check my lingering here

On this important hour—I'll strait away;
And while the fathers of the senate meet
In close debate, to weigh th' events of war,
I'll animate the soldier's drooping courage,
With love of freedom, and contempt of life.
I'll thunder in their ears their country's cause,
And try to rouse up all that's Roman in them.

'Tis not in mortals to command success :

But we'll do more, Sempronius ; we'll deserve it. [Exit.

Sem. Curse on the stripling ! How he apes his sire !

Ambitiously sententious !—But I wonder Old Syphax comes not ; his Numidian genius Is well dispos'd to mischief, were he prompt And eager on it ; but he must be spur'd, And every moment quicken'd to the course. Cato has us'd me ill : he has refus'd His daughter Marcia to my ardent vows. Besides, his baffled arms and ruin'd cause Are bars to my ambition. Cæsar's favour, That showers down greatness on his friends, will raise me To Rome's first honours. If I give up Cato, I claim in my reward his captive daughter. But Syphax comes !—

SCENE III.

Enter Syphax.

Syp. —Sempronius, all is ready. I've sounded my Numidians, man by man, And find them ripe for a revolt : they all Complain aloud of Cato's discipline, And wait but the command to change their master.

Sem. Believe me, Syphax, there's no time to waste ;

Ev'n whilst we speak, our conqueror comes on, And gathers ground upon us every moment. Alas ! thou know'st not Cæsar's active soul, With what a dreadful course he rushes on From war to war : in vain has nature form'd Mountains and oceans to oppose his passage ; He bounds o'er all, victorious in his march ; The Alps and Pyreneans sink before him ; Through winds, and waves, and storms, he works his way, Impatient for the battle : one day more Will set the victor thundering at our gates. But tell me, hast thou yet drawn o'er young Juba ?

That still would recommend thee more to Cæsar, And challenge better terms—

Syp. —Alas ! he's lost. He's lost, Sempronius ; all his thoughts are full Of Cato's virtues—But I'll try once more (For every instant I expect him here) If yet I can subdue those stubborn principles Of faith, of honour, and I know not what, That have corrupted his Numidian temper, And struck th' infection into all his soul.

Sem. Be sure to press upon him every motive.

Juba's surrender, since his father's death Would give up Africa into Cæsar's hands, And make him lord of half the burning Zone.

Syp. But is it true, Sempronius, that your senate Is call'd together ? Gods ! thou must be cautious !

Cato has piercing eyes, and will discern Our frauds, unless they're cover'd thick with art.

Sem. Let me alone, good Syphax, I'll conceal My thoughts in passion ('tis the surest way) ; I'll bellow out for Rome and for my country, And mouth at Cæsar till I shake the senate. Your cold hypocrisy's a stale device, A worn-out trick : wouldst thou be thought in earnest, Clothe thy feign'd zeal in rage, in fire, in fury !

Syp. In truth, thou'rt able to instruct grey-hairs,

And teach the wily African deceit.

Sem. Once more, be sure to try thy skill on Juba ;

Meanwhile I'll hasten to my Roman soldiers, In flame the mutiny, and underhand Blow up their discontents, till they break out Unlook'd for, and discharge themselves on Cato.

Remember, Syphax, we must work in haste : O think what anxious moments pass between The birth of plots, and their last fatal periods. Oh ! 'tis a dreadful interval of time, Fill'd up with horror all, and big with death ! Destruction hangs on every word we speak, On every thought, till the concluding stroke Determines all, and closes our design. [Exit.

Syp. I'll try if yet I can reduce to reason This head-strong youth, and make him spurn at Cato.

The time is short, Cæsar comes rushing on us— But hold ! young Juba sees me, and approaches.

SCENE IV.

Enter Juba.

Juba. Syphax, I joy to meet thee thus alone. I have observ'd of late thy looks are fallen, O'ercast with gloomy cares, and discontent ; Then tell me, Syphax, I conjure thee, tell me, What are the thoughts that knit thy brow in frowns,

And turn thine eye thus coldly on thy prince ?

Syp. 'Tis not my talent to conceal my thoughts, Nor carry smiles and sun-shine in my face, When discontent sits heavy at my heart. I have not yet so much the Roman in me.

Juba. Why dost thou cast out such ungenerous terms

Against the lords and sovereigns of the world ? Dost thou not see mankind fall down before them,

And own the force of their superior virtue ?

Is there a nation in the wilds of Afric, Amidst our barren rocks and burning sands, That does not tremble at the Roman name ?

Syp. Gods ! where's the worth that sets this people up

Above your own Numidia's tawny sons ? Do they with tougher sinews bend the bow ? Or flies the javelin swifter to its mark, Launch'd from the vigour of a Roman arm ? Who like our active African instructs

The fiery steed, and trains him to his hand?
Or guides in troops th' embattled elephant,
Loaden with war? These, these are arts, my Prince,

In which your Zama does not stoop to Rome.

Juba. These all are virtues of a meaner rank,
Perfections that are placed in bones and nerves;
A Roman soul is bent on higher views:
To civilize the rude unpolish'd world,
And lay it under the restraint of laws;
To make man mild and sociable to man;
To cultivate the wild licentious savage
With wisdom, discipline, and liberal arts;
Th' embellishments of life: virtues like these
Make human nature shine, reform the soul,
And break our fierce barbarians into men.

Syp. Patience, kind heavens!—Excuse an old man's warmth.

What are these wondrous civilizing arts,
This Roman polish, and this smooth behaviour,
That render man thus tractable and tame?
Are they not only to disguise our passions,
To set our looks at variance with our thoughts,
To check the starts and sallies of the soul,
And break off all its commerce with the tongue;
In short, to change us into other creatures
Than what our nature and the gods design'd us?

Juba. To strike thee dumb: turn up thine eyes to Cato!

There may'st thou see to what a godlike height
The Roman virtues lift up mortal man.
While good, and just, and anxious for his
friends,

He's still severely bent against himself;
Renouncing sleep, and rest, and food, and ease,
He strives with thirst and hunger, toil and
heat;

And when his fortune sets before him all
The pomps and pleasures that his soul can wish
His rigid virtue will accept of none.

Syp. Believe me Prince, there's not an African
That traverses our vast Numidian deserts
In quest of prey, and lives upon his bow,
But better practises these boasted virtues.
Coarse are his meals, the fortune of the chase,
Amidst the running stream he slakes his thirst,
Tis all the day, and at the approach of night
On the first friendly bank he throws him down,
Or rests his head upon a rock till morn:
Then rises fresh, pursues his wonted game,
And if the following day he chance to find
A new repast, or an untasted spring,
Blesses his stars, and thinks it luxury.

Juba. Thy prejudices, Syphax, won't discern
What virtues grow from ignorance and choice,
Nor how the hero differs from the brute.
But grant that others could with equal glory
Look down on pleasures and the baits of sense,
Where shall we find the man that bears affliction,

Great and majestic in his griefs, like Cato?
Heavens, with what strength, what steadiness
of mind,

He triumphs in the midst of all his sufferings!
How does he rise against a load of woes,
And thank the gods that threw the weight
upon him!

Syp. 'Tis pride, rank pride, and haughtiness of soul:

I think the Romans call it Stoicism.

Had not your royal father thought so highly
Of Roman virtue, and of Cato's cause,
He had not fall'n by a slave's hand inglorious:
Nor would his slaughter'd army now have lain
On Afric's sands, disfigur'd with their wounds,
To gorge the wolves and vultures of Numidia.

Juba. Why do'st thou call my sorrows up afresh?

My father's name brings tears into my eyes.

Syp. Oh, that you'd profit by your father's ills!

Juba. What wouldst thou have me do?

Syp. Abandon Cato.

Juba. Syphax, I should be more than twice an orphan

By such a loss.

Syp. Ay, there's the tie that binds you!
You long to call him father. Marcia's charms
Work in your heart unseen, and plead for Cato.
No wonder you are deaf to all I say.

Juba. Syphax, your zeal becomes importunate;

I've hitherto permitted it to rave,
And talk at large; but learn to keep it in,
Lest it should take more freedom than I'll give
it.

Syp. Sir, your great father never us'd me thus.
Alas, he's dead! but can you e'er forget
The tender sorrows, and the pangs of nature,
The fond embraces, and repeated blessings
Which you drew from him in your last farewell?
Still must I cherish the dear sad remembrance,
At once to torture and to please my soul.
The good old king, at parting, wrung my hand,
(His eyes brim full of tears) then sighing
cry'd,

Pr'ythee be careful of my son!—his griefs
Swell'd up so high, he could not utter more.

Juba. Alas, thy story melts away my soul.
That best of fathers! how shall I discharge
The gratitude and duty which I owe him!

Syp. By laying up his counsels in your heart.

Juba. His counsels bade me yield to thy directions:

Then, Syphax, chide me in severest terms,
Vent all thy passion, and I'll stand its shock,
Calm and unruffled as a summer sea,
When not a breath of wind flies o'er its surface.

Syp. Alas, my prince, I'd guide you to your safety.

Juba. I do believe thou wouldst; but tell me how?

Syp. Fly from the fate that follows Cæsar's foes.

Juba. My father scorn'd to do't.

Syp. And therefore died.

Juba. Better to die ten thousand thousand deaths,
Than wound my honour.

Syp. Rather say your love.

Juba. Syphax, I've promis'd to preserve my temper.

Why wilt thou urge me to confess a flame
I long have stifled, and would fain conceal?

Syp. Believe me, Prince, 'tis hard to conquer
love,

But easy to divert and break its force:

Absence might cure it, or a second mistress

Light up another flame, and put out this.

The glowing dames of Zama's royal court,

Have faces flushed with more exalted charms.

The sun, that rolls his chariot o'er their heads,

Works up more fire and colour in their cheeks:

Were you with these, my Prince, you'd soon forget

The pale unripen'd beauties of the north.

Juba. 'Tis not a set of features, or complexion,
The tincture of a skin, that I admire.

Beauty soon grows familiar to the lover.

Fades in his eye, and falls upon the sense.

The virtuous Marcia towers above her sex:

True, she is fair, (oh, how divinely fair!)

But still the lovely maid improves her charms

With inward greatness, unaffected wisdom,

And sanctity of manners. Cato's soul

Shines out in every thing she acts or speaks,

While winning mildness and attractive smiles

Dwell in her looks, and with becoming grace

Softens the rigour of her father's virtues.

Syp. How does your tongue grow wanton in her praise!

But on my knees I beg you would consider—

Enter Marcia and Lucia.

Juba. Hah! Syphax, is't not she!—She moves
this way:

And with her Lucia, Lucius's fair daughter.

My heart beats thick—I pr'y thee, Syphax, leave
me.

Syp. Ten thousand curses fasten on them
both!

Now will this woman with a single glance

Undo what I've been labouring all this while.

[Exit.]

Juba. Hail charming maid, how does thy beauty smooth

The face of war, and make ev'n horror smile!

At sight of thee my heart shakes off its sorrows;

I feel a dawn of joy break in upon me,

And for a while forget th' approach of Cæsar.

Mar. I should be griev'd, young prince, to think my presence

Unbent your thoughts, and slacken'd them to
arms,

While, warm with slaughter, our victorious foe
Threatens aloud, and calls you to the field.

Juba. O Marcia, let me hope thy kind concerns

And gentle wishes follow me to battle!

The thought will give new vigour to my arm,

Add strength and weight to my descending
sword,

And drive it in a tempest on the foe.

Mar. My prayers and wishes always shall attend

The friends of Rome, the glorious cause of virtue,

And men approv'd of by the gods and Cato.

Juba. That Juba may deserve thy pious cares,
I'll gaze for ever on thy godlike father,

Transplanting, one by one, into my life

His bright perfections, till I shine like him.

Mar. My father never at a time like this

Would lay out his great soul in words, and waste

Such precious moments.

Juba.

Thy reproofs are just,
Thou virtuous maid; I'll hasten to my troops,

And fire their languid souls with Cato's virtue;

If e'er I lead them to the field, when all

The war shall stand rang'd in its just array,

And dreadful pomp: then will I think on thee!

O lovely maid, then will I think on thee!

And, in the shock of charging hosts, remember What glorious deeds should grace the man, who hopes

For Marcia's love.

[Exit.]

Luc.

Marcia, you're too severe:
How could you chide the young good-natur'd

prince,

And drive him from you with so stern an air,

A prince that loves and dotes on you to death?

Mar. 'Tis therefore, Lucia, that I chide him
from me.

His air, his voice, his looks, and honest soul,

Speak all so movingly in his behalf,

I dare not trust myself to hear him talk.

Luc.

Why will you fight against so sweet a
passion,

And steel your heart to such a world of charms?

Mar.

How, Lucia! would'st thou have me sink away

In pleasing dreams, and lose myself in love,

When every moment Cato's life's at stake?

Cæsar comes arm'd with terror and revenge,

And aims his thunder at my father's head:

Should not the sad occasion swallow up

My other cares, and draw them all into it?

Luc.

Why have not I this constancy of mind,
Who have so many griefs to try its force?

Sure, nature form'd me of her softest mould,

Enfeebled all my soul with tender passions,

And sunk me ev'n below my own weak sex:

Pity and love, by turns, oppress my heart.

Mar.

Lucia, disburthen all thy cares on me,

And let me share thy most retir'd distress;

Tell me who raises up this conflict in thee.

Luc.

I need not blush to name them, when I tell thee

They're Marcia's brothers, and the sons of Cato.

Mar.

They both behold thee with their
sister's eyes;

And often have reveal'd their passion to me.

But tell me, whose address thou favour'st most?
I long to know, and yet I dread to hear it.

Luc. Which is it Marcia wishes for?

Mar. For neither—

And yet for both—The youths have equal share
In Marcia's wishes, and divide their sister:
But tell me which of them is Lucia's choice?

Luc. Marcia, they both are high in my esteem,
But in my love—Why wilt thou make me name
him?

Thou know'st, it is a blind and foolish passion,
Pleas'd and disgusted with it knows not what.

Mar. O Lucia, I'm perplex'd: O tell me which

I must hereafter call my happy brother?

Luc. Suppose 'twere Portius, could you blame my choice?

O Portius, thou hast stol'n away my soul!
With what a graceful tenderness he loves!
And breathes the softest, the sincerest vows!
Complacency, and truth, and manly sweetness,
Dwell ever on his tongue, and smooth his
thoughts,

Marcus is over-warm, his fond complaints
Have so much earnestness and passion in them,
I hear him with a secret kind of dread,
And tremble at his vehemence of temper.

Mar. Alas, poor youth! how can'st thou throw him from thee?

Lucia, thou know'st not half the love he bears
thee;

Whene'er he speaks of thee, his heart's in flames,
He sends out all his soul in every word,
And thinks, and talks, and looks like one transported.

Unhappy youth! how will thy coldness raise
Tempest and storms in his afflicted bosom!
I dread the consequence—

Luc. You seem to plead

Against your brother Portius—

Mar. Heaven forbid!

Had Portius been the unsuccessful lover,
The same compassion would have fall'n on him.

Luc. Was ever virgin love distress like mine!
Portius himself oft falls in tears before me,
As if he mourn'd his rival's ill success,
Then bids me hide the motions of my heart,
Nor shew which way it turns. So much he fears.

The sad effects that it would have on Marcus.

Mar. He knows too well how easily he's fir'd,
And would not plunge his brother in despair,
But waits for happier times, and kinder moments.

Luc. Alas! too late I find myself involv'd
In endless griefs and labyrinths of woe,
Born to afflict my Marcia's family,
And sow dissension in the hearts of brothers.
Tormenting thought! it cuts into my soul.

Mar. Let us not, Lucia, aggravate our sorrows,

But to the gods permit th' event of things.
Our lives, discolour'd with our present woes,

May still grow bright, and smile with happier hours.

So the pure limpid stream, when foul with stains

Of rushing torrents, and descending rains,
Works itself clear, and, as it runs, refines;
Till, by degrees the floating mirror shines,
Reflects each flower that on the border grows,
And a new heaven in its fair bosom shows.

[Exeunt.]

ACT II. SCENE I.

The Senate.

Sem. Rome still survives in this assembled senate!

Let us remember we are Cato's friends,
And act like men who claim that glorious title.

Luc. Cato will soon be here and open to us
Th' occasion of our meeting. Hark! he comes!

[A sound of trumpets.]

May all the guardian gods of Rome direct him!
Enter Cato.

Cato. Fathers, we once again are met in council.

Cæsar's approach has summon'd us together,
And Rome attends her fate from our resolves:
How shall we treat this bold aspiring man?
Success still follows him, and backs his crimes:
Pharsalia gave him Rome; Egypt has since
Receiv'd his yoke, and the whole Nile is Cæsar's.
Why should I mention Juba's overthrow,
And Scipio's death? Numidia's burning sands Still smoke with blood. 'Tis time we should decree

What course to take. Our foe advances on
us,

And envies us ev'n Libia's sultry deserts.

Fathers, pronounce your thoughts; are they still fixed

To hold it out, and fight it to the last?

Or are your hearts subdued at length, and wrought

By time and ill success to a submission?

Sempronius, speak.

Sem. My voice is still for war.

Gods can a Roman senate long debate

Which of the two to choose, slavery or death!

No, let us rise at once, gird on our swords,

And, at the head of our remaining troops,

Attack the foe, break through the thick array
Of his throng'd legions, and charge home upon
him;

Perhaps some arm, more lucky than the rest,
May reach his heart, and free the world from bondage.

Rise, fathers, rise; 'tis Rome demands your help;

Rise, and revenge her slaughter'd citizens,

Or share their fate: the corps of half her senate

Manure the fields of Thessaly, while we

Sit here, deliberating in cold debates,

If we should sacrifice our lives to honour,

Or wear them out in servitude and chains.

Before my face, in Cato's great example,
Subdues my soul, and fills my eyes with tears.

Cato. It is an honest sorrow, and becomes thee.

Juba. My father drew respect from foreign climes:

The kings of Afric sought him for their friend,
Kings far remote, that rule, as fame reports,
Behind the hidden sources of the Nile,
In distant worlds, on t'other side the sun:
Oft have their black ambassadors appear'd,
Loaden with gifts, and fill'd the courts of Zama.

Cato. I am no stranger to thy father's greatness.

Juba. I would not boast the greatness of my father,

But point out new alliances to Cato.
Had we not better leave this Utica,
To arm Numidia in our cause, and court
Th' assistance of my father's powerful friends?
Did they know Cato, our remotest kings
Would pour embattled multitudes about him;
The swarthy hosts would darken all our

Plains,
Double the native horrors of the war,
And make death more grim.

Cato. Ah! canst thou think
Cato will fly before the sword of Cæsar?
Reduc'd, like Hannibal, to seek relief
From court to court, and wander up and down,
A vagabond in Art?

Juba. Cato, perh'ps
I'm too officious; but my forward cares
Would fain preserve a man of so much value.
My heart is wounded, when I see such virtue
Afflicted by the weight of so many misfortunes.

Cato. Thy nobleness of soul oblige me.
But know, young prince, that valour soars above

What the world calls misfortune and affliction.
These are not ills; else would they never fall
On heaven's first favourites, and the best of men:

The gods, in bounty, work up storms about us,
That give mankind occasion to exert
Their hidden strength, and throw out into practice

Virtues, that shun the day, and lie conceal'd
In the smooth seasons, and the calms of life.

Juba. I'm charm'd whene'er thou talk'st! I pant for virtue!

And all my soul endeavours at perfection.

Cato. Dost thou love watchings, abstinence, and toil,
Laborious virtues all? learn them from Cato:
Success and fortune must thou learn from Cæsar.

Juba. The best good-fortune that can fall on Juba,

The whole success at which my heart aspires,
Depends on Cato.

Cato. What does Juba say?
Thy words confound me.

Juba. I would fain retract them,
Give them me back again. They aim'd at nothing.

Cato. Tell me thy wish, young prince; make not my ear

A stranger to thy thoughts.

Juba. Oh! they're extravagant;
Still let me hide them.

Cato. What can Juba ask
That Cato will refuse?

Juba. I fear to name it.

Marcia—inherits all her father's virtues.

Cato. What would'st thou say?

Juba. Cato, thou hast a daughter.

Cato. Adieu, young prince! I would not hear a word

Should lessen thee in my esteem: remember
The hand of fate is over us, and heaven
Exacts severity from all our thoughts:
It is not now a time to talk of aught
But chains, or conquest; liberty, or death.

[Exit.]

Enter Syphax.

Syp. How's this, my prince! what, cover'd with confusion?

You look as if von stern philosopher
Had just now chid you.

Juba. Syphax, I'm undone!

Syp. I know it well.

Juba. Cato thinks meanly of me.

Syp. And so will all mankind.

Juba. I've open'd to him

The weakness of my soul—my love for Marcia.

Syp. Cato's a proper person to intrust
A love-tale with!

Juba. Oh, I could pierce my heart,
My foolish heart! Was ever wretch like Juba?

Syp. Alas! my prince, how are you chang'd of late!

I've known young Juba rise before the sun,

To beat the thicket where the tiger slept,

Or seek the lion in his dreadful haunts:

How did the colour mount into your cheeks,

When first you rous'd him to the chace! I've seen you

Ev'n in the Libyan dog-days, hunt him down,
Then charge him close, provoke him to the rage
Of fangs and claws, and, stooping from your horse,

Rivet the panting savage to the ground.

Juba. Pity thee, no more!

Syp. How would the old king smile

To see you weigh the paws, when tipp'd with gold,

And throw the shaggy spoils about your shoulders!

Juba. Syphax, this old man's talk (though honey flow'd

In every word) would now lose all its sweetness.
Cato's displeas'd, and Marcia lost for ever!

Syp. Young prince, I yet could give you good advice;

Marcia might still be yours.

Juba. What say'st thou, Syphax?
By heavens, thou turn'st me all into attention.
Syp. Marcia might still be yours.

Juba. As how dear Syphax?

Syp. Juba commands Numidia's hardy troops,
Mounted on steeds, unus'd to the restraint
Of curbs or bits, and fleetier than the winds:
Give but the word, we'll snatch this damsel up,
And bear her off.

Juba. Can such dishonest thoughts
Rise up in man! would'st thou seduce my youth
To do an act that would destroy my honour?

Syp. Gods I could tear my beard to hear you talk!

Honour's a fine imaginary notion,
That draws in raw and unexperienced men
To real mischiefs, while they hunt a shadow.

Juba. Would'st thou degrade thy prince into a ruffian?

Syp. The boasted ancestors of these great
men,
Whose virtues you admire, were all such ruffians.

This dread of nations, this almighty Rome,
That comprehends in her wide empire's bounds
All under heaven, was founded on a rape.
Your Scipios, Cæsars, Pompeys, and your Catos

(These gods on earth), are all the spurious brood
Of violated maids, of ravish'd Sabines.

Juba. Syphax, I fear that hoary head of thine
Abounds too much in our Numidian wiles.

Syp. Indeed, my prince; you want to know
the world,

You have not read mankind: your youth admires

The throes and swellings of a Roman soul,
Cato's bold flights, th' extravagance of virtue.

Juba. If knowledge of the world makes man perfidious,

May Juba ever live in ignorance!

Syp. Go, go, you're young.

Juba. Gods, must I tamely bear

This arrogance unanswer'd! thou'rt a traitor,
A false old traitor.

Syp. I have gone too far. [Aside.]

Juba. Cato shall know the baseness of thy soul.

Syp. I must appease this storm, or perish in it.
[Aside.]

Young prince, behold these locks that are grown white

Beneath a helmet in your father's battles.

Juba. Those locks shall ne'er protect thy insolence.

Syp. Must one rash word, th' infirmity of age,
Throw down the merit of my better years?
This the reward of a whole life of service!

Curse on the boy! how steadily he hears me!
[Aside.]

Juba. Is it because the throne of my forefathers

Still stands unfill'd, and that Numidia's crown

Hangs doubtful yet, whose head it shall enclose Thou thus presum'st to treat thy prince with scorn?

Syp. Why will you rive my heart with such expressions?

Does not old Syphax follow you to war?

What are his aims? why does he load with darts

His trembling hand, and crush beneath a casque
His wrinkled brows? what is it he aspires to?
Is it not this? to shed the slow remains,
His last poor ebb of blood, in your defence?

Juba. Syphax, no more! I would not hear you talk.

Syp. Not hear me talk! what, when my faith to Juba,

My royal master's son, is call'd in question?

My prince may strike me dead, and I'll be
dumb:

But, whilst I live, I must not hold my tongue,
And languish out old age in his displeasure.

Juba. Thou know'st the way too well into my
heart;

I do believe thee loyal to thy prince.

Syp. What greater instance can I give? I've offer'd

To do an action which my soul abhors,
And gain you whom you love at any price.

Juba. Was this thy motive? I have been too hasty.

Syp. And 'tis for this my prince has call'd me traitor.

Juba. Sure thou mistak'st; I did not call thee so.

Syp. You did indeed, my prince: you call'd me traitor:

Nay, further, threaten'd you'd complain to Ca-
to.

Of what, my prince, would you complain to Ca-
to?

That Syphax loves you, and would sacrifice

His life, nay more, his honour, in your service?

Juba. Syphax, I know thou lov'st me, but indeed

Thy zeal for Juba carried thee too far.

Honour's a sacred tie, the law of kings,

The noble mind's distinguishing perfection,

That aids and strengthens virtue, where it meets
her,

And imitates her actions, where she is not:

It ought not to be sported with.

Syp. By heavens!

I'm ravish'd when you talk thus, though you chide me.

Alas, I've hitherto been us'd to think

A blind officious zeal to serve my king

The ruling principle, that ought to burn

And quench all others in a subject's heart.

Happy the people who preserve their honour

By the same duties that oblige their prince!

Juba. Syphax, thou now beginn'st to speak thyself,

Numidia's grown a scorn among the nations

For breach of public vows. Our puny faith
Is infamous, and branded to a proverb.
Syphax, we'll join our cares, to purge away
Our country's crimes, and clear her reputation.

Syp. Believe me, prince, you make old Syphax
weep

To hear you talk—but 'tis with tears of joy.
If e'er your father's crown adorn your brows,
Numidia will be blest by Cato's lectures.

Juba. Syphax, thy hand! we'll mutually forget

The warmth of youth, and frowardness of age:
Thy prince esteems thy worth, and loves thy person.

If e'er the sceptre comes into my hand,
Syphax shall stand the second in my kingdom.

Syp. Why will you overwhelm my age with kindness?

My joy grows burthensome, I sha'n't support it.

Juba. Syphax, farewell. I'll hence, and try to find

Some blest occasion that may set me right
In Cato's thoughts. I'd rather have that man
Approve my deeds, than worlds for my admirers.

[Exit.]

Syp. Young men soon give, and soon forget affronts;

Old age is slow in both—a false old traitor!
Those words, rash boy, may chance to cost thee dear:

My heart had still some foolish fondness for thee:

But hence! 'tis gone: I give it to the winds:—
Cæsar, I'm wholly thine—

Enter Sempronius.

Syp. All hail, Sempronius!
Well, Cato's senate is resolv'd to wait
The fury of a siege, before it yields.

Sem. Syphax, we both were on the verge of fate;

Lucius declar'd for peace, and terms were offer'd

To Cato by a messenger from Cæsar.
Should they submit, ere our designs are ripe,
We both must perish in the common wreck,
Lost in a general undistinguish'd ruin.

Syp. But how stands Cato?

Sem. Thou hast seen Mount Atlas:
While storms and tempests thunder on its brows,
And oceans break their billows at its feet,
It stands unmov'd, and glories in its height.
Such is that haughty man; his towering soul,
'Midst all the shocks and injuries of fortune,
Rises superior, and looks down on Cæsar.

Syp. But what's this messenger?

Sem. I've practis'd with him,
And found a means to let the victor know
That Syphax and Sempronius are his friends.
But let me now examine in my turn:
Is Juba fix'd?

Syp. Yes, but it is to Cato.
I've try'd the force of every reason on him,
Sooth'd and caress'd, been angry, sooth'd again,

Laid safety, life, and interest, in his sight;
But all are vain, he scorns them all for Cato.

Sem. Come, 'tis no matter, we shall do without him.

He'll make a pretty figure in a triumph,
And serve to trip before the victor's chariot,
Syphax, I now may hope thou hast forsook
Thy Juba's cause, and wishest Marcia mine.

Syp. May she be thine as fast as thou wouldst have her!

Sem. Syphax, I love that woman; though I curse

Her and myself, yet, spite of me, I love her.

Syp. Make Cato sure, and give up Utica:
Cæsar will ne'er refuse thee such a trifle.

But are thy troops prepar'd for a revolt?
Does the sedition catch from man to man,
And run among their ranks?

Sem. All, all is ready.

The factious leaders are our friends, that spread
Murmurs and discontents among the soldiers.
They count their toilsome marches, long fatigues,

Unusual fastings; and will bear no more
This medley of philosophy and war.

Within an hour they'll storm the senate-house.

Syp. Mean-while I'll draw up my Numidian troops

Within the square, to exercise their arms,
And, as I see occasion, favour thee.

I laugh to think how your unshaken Cato
Will look aghast, while unforeseen destruction
Pours in upon him thus from every side.

So, where our wide Numidian wastes extend,
Sudden th' impetuous hurricanes descend,
Wheel through the air, in circling eddies play,
Tear up the sands, and sweep whole plains away.

The helpless traveller, with wild surprise,
Sees the dry desert all around him rise,
And, smother'd in the dusty whirlwind, dies. }

ACT III—SCENE I.

Enter Marcus and Portius.

Marc. Thanks to my stars, I have not rang'd about

The wilds of life, ere I could find a friend;
Nature first pointed out my Portius to me,
And early taught me, by her secret force,
To love thy person, ere I knew thy merit;
Till what was instinct, grew up into friendship.

Por. Marcus, the friendships of the world are oft

Confederacies in vice, or leagues of pleasure;
Ours has severest virtue for its basis,
And such a friendship ends not but with life.

Marc. Portius, thou know'st my soul in all its weakness;

Then pr'ythee spare me on its tender side,
Indulge me but in love, my other passions
Shall rise and fall by virtue's nicest rules.

Por. When love's well-tim'd, 'tis not a fault to love.

The strong, the brave, the virtuous, and the wise,

Sink in the soft captivity together.

I would not urge thee to dismiss thy passion, (I know 'twere vain) but to suppress its force, Till better times may make it look more graceful.

Marc. Alas! thou talk'st like one who never felt

Th' impatient throbs and longings of a soul, That pants and reaches after distant good.

A lover does not live by vulgar time:

Believe me Portius, in my Lucia's absence Life hangs upon me, and becomes a burden; And yet when I behold the charming maid, I'm ten times more undone; while hope, and fear,

And grief, and rage, and love, rise up at once, And with variety of pain distract me,

Por. What can thy Portius do to give thee help?

Marc. Portius, thou oft enjoy'st the fair one's presence;

Then undertake my cause, and plead it to her With all the strength and heat of eloquence, Fraternal love and friendship can inspire.

Tell her thy brother languishes to death, And fades away, and withers in his bloom; That he forgets his sleep, and loathes his food, That youth, and health, and war, are joyless to him:

Describe his anxious days and restless nights, And all the torments that thou see'st me suffer.

Por. Marcus, I beg thee, give me not an office

That suits with me so ill. Thou know'st my temper.

Marc. Wilt thou behold me sinking in my woes?

And wilt thou not reach out a friendly arm, To raise me from amidst this plunge of sorrows?

Por. Marcus, thou canst not ask what I'd refuse.

But here, believe me, I've a thousand reasons—

Marc. I know thou'lt say, my passion's out of season,

That Cato's great example and misfortunes Should both conspire to drive it from my thoughts.

But what's all this to one who loves like me?

Oh, Portius, Portius, from my soul I wish Thou didst but know thyself what 'tis to love! Then wouldst thou pity and assist thy brother.

Por. What should I do! If I disclose my passion,

Our friendship's at an end: if I conceal it, The world will call me false to a friend and brother. [Aside.]

Marc. But see where Lucia, at her wonted hour,

Amid the cool of yon high marble arch,

Enjoys the noon-day breeze! Observe her, Portius!

That face, that shape, those eyes, that heaven of beauty!

Observe her well, and blame me if thou canst.

Por. She sees us, and advances—

Marc. I'll withdraw, And leave you for a while. Remember, Portius, Thy brother's life depends upon thy tongue. [Exit.]

Enter Lucia.

Luc. Did not I see your brother Marcus here? Why did he fly the place, and shun my presence?

Por. Oh, Lucia, language is too faint to show His rage of love; it preys upon his life; He pines, he sickens, he despairs, he dies: His passions and his virtues lie confus'd, And mix'd together in so wild a tumult, That the whole man is quite disfigur'd in him. Heavens! would one think 'twere possible for love

To make such ravage in a noble soul!

Oh, Lucia, I'm distress'd! my heart bleeds for him;

Ev'n now, while thus I stand blest in thy presence,

A secret damp of grief comes o'er my thoughts, And I'm unhappy, though thou smil'st upon me.

Luc. How wilt thou guard thy honour, in the shock

Of love and friendship? Think betimes, my Portius,

Think how the nuptial tie, that might ensure Our mutual bliss, would raise to such a height

Thy brother's griefs, as might perhaps destroy him.

Por. Alas, poor youth! what dost thou think, my Lucia?

His generous, open, undesigning heart

Has begg'd his rival to solicit for him.

Then do not strike him dead with a denial,

But hold him up in life, and cheer his soul

With the faint glimmering of a doubtful hope: Perhaps, when we have pass'd these gloomy hours, And weather'd out the storm that beats upon us—

Luc. No, Portius, no! I see thy sister's tears, Thy father's anguish, and thy brother's death,

In the pursuit of our ill-fated loves.

And, Portius, here I swear, to heaven I swear, To heaven, and all the powers that judge man-

kind,

Never to mix my plighted hands with thine,

While such a cloud of mischief hangs about us:

But to forget our loves, and drive thee out

From all my thoughts, as far—as I am able.

Por. What hast thou said! I'm thunderstruck—recall

Those hasty words, or I am lost for ever.

Luc. Has not the vow already pass'd my lips?

The gods have heard it, and 'tis seal'd in heaven.

May all the vengeance, that was ever pour'd
On perjur'd heads, o'erwhelm me, if I break it!

Por. Fixed in astonishment, I gaze upon thee,
Like one just blasted by a stroke from heaven,
Who pants for breath, and stiffens, yet alive,
In dreadful looks; a monument of wrath!

Luc. At length I've acted my severest part;
I feel the woman breaking in upon me,
And melt about my heart; my tears will flow.
But, oh, I'll think no more! the hand of fate
Has torn thee from me, and I must forget thee.

Por. Hard-hearted, cruel maid!

Luc. Oh, stop those sounds,
Those killing sounds! Why dost thou frown upon me?

My blood runs cold, my heart forgets to heave,
And life itself goes out at thy displeasure.
The gods forbid us to indulge our loves;
But, oh! I cannot bear thy hate, and live.

Por. Talk not of love, thou never knew'st its force.

I've been deluded, led into a dream
Of fancied bliss. Oh, Lucia, cruel maid!
Thy dreadful vow, loaden with death, still sounds
In my stunned ears. What shall I say or do?
Quick let us part! Perdition's in thy presence,
And horror dwells about thee! Ha! she faints!
Wretch that I am, what has my rashness done!
Lucia, thou injured innocence! thou best
And loveliest of thy sex! awake, my Lucia,
Or Portius rushes on his sword to join thee.
—Her imprecations reach not to the tomb,
They shut not out society in death—
But ah! she moves, life wanders up and down
Through all her face, and lights up every charm.

Luc. Oh Portius, was this well—to frown on
her

That lives upon thy smiles? To call in doubt
The faith of one expiring at thy feet,
That loves thee more than ever woman loved?
—What do I say? My half-recovered sense
Forgets the vow in which my soul was bound.
Destruction stands betwixt us; we must part.

Por. Name not the word! my frightened thoughts run back,
And startle into madness at the sound.

Luc. What wouldst thou have me do? Consider well

The train of ills our love would draw behind it.
Think Portius, think thou seest thy dying brother
Stabbed at his heart, and all besmeared with blood,

Storming at Heaven and thee! Thy awful sire
Sternly demands the cause, the accursed cause,
That robs him of his son: poor Marcia trembles,
Then tears her hair, and, frantic in her griefs,
Calls out on Lucia. What could Lucia answer,
Or how stand up in such a scene of sorrow?

Por. To my confusion, and eternal grief,
I must approve the sentence that destroys me.

The mist, that hung upon my mind, clears up;
And now, athwart the terrors that thy vow
Has planted round thee, thou appear'st more fair,

More amiable, and risest in thy charms.
Loveliest of women! Heaven is in thy soul;
Beauty and virtue shine for ever round thee,
Brightening each other: thou art all divine.

Luc. Portius, no more; thy words shoot through my heart,

Melt my resolves, and turn me all to love.

Why are those tears of fondness in thy eyes?

Why heaves thy heart? Why swells thy soul with sorrow?

It softens me too much—farewell, my Portius;
Farewell, though death is in the word—for ever.

Por. Stay, Lucia, stay? What dost thou say?
for ever?

Luc. Have I not sworn? If, Portius, thy success

Must throw thy brother on his fate, farewell—
Oh, how shall I repeat the word! for ever.

Por. Thus o'er the dying lamp the unsteady
flame

Hangs quivering on a point, leaps off by fits,
And falls again, as loth to quit its hold.

—Thou must not go, my soul still hovers o'er
thee,

And can't get loose.

Luc. If the firm Portius shake

To hear of parting, think what Lucia suffers!

Por. 'Tis true, unruffled and serene, I've met
The common accidents of life; but here
Such an unlooked-for storm of ills falls on me,
It beats down all my strength. I cannot bear it.
We must not part.

Luc. What dost thou say? Not part!

Hast thou forgot the vow that I have made?

Are there not heavens, and gods, that thunder o'er us?

—But see, thy brother Marcus bends this way:
I sicken at the sight. Once more, farewell,
Farewell! and know thou wrong'st me if thou think'st

Ever was love, or ever grief like mine.

[Exit Lucia.]

Enter Marcus.

Marc. Portius, what hopes? How stands she?
Am I doomed

To life or death?

Por. What wouldst thou have me say?

Marc. What means this pensive posture?
Thou appearest

Like one amazed and terrified.

Por. I've reason.

Marc. Thy down-cast looks, and thy disordered thoughts,

Tell me my fate. I ask not the success

My cause has found.

Por. I'm grieved I undertook it.

Marc. What? does the barbarous maid insult
my heart,

*My aching heart, and triumph in my pains ?
That I could cast her from my thoughts for ever !*

Por. Away, you're too suspicious in your griefs ;

Lucia, though sworn never to think of love,
Compassionates your pains, and pities you.

Marc. Compassionates my pains, and pities
me !

What is compassion, when 'tis void of love ?
Fool that I was to chuse so cold a friend
To urge my cause !—Compassionates my pains !
Priest, what art, what rhetoric didst thou use
To gain this mighty boon ?—She pities me !
To one that asks the warm returns of love,
Compassion's cruelty, 'tis scorn, 'tis death—

Por. Marcus, no more ; have I deserved this treatment ?

Marc. What have I said ! Oh, Portius, oh forgive me !

A soul, exasperated in ills, falls out
With every thing, its friend, itself—but, hah !
What means that shout, big with the sounds of
war ?

What new alarm ?

Por. A second, louder yet,
Swells in the wind, and comes more full upon us.

Marc. Oh, for some glorious cause to fall in battle !

Lucia, thou hast undone me ; thy disdain
Has broke my heart : tis death must give me
ease.

Por. Quick, let us hence. Who knows if Cato's life

Stands sure ? O, Marcus, I am warmed, my
heart

Leaps at the trumpet's voice, and burns for glory. [Exeunt.]

Enter Sempronius, with the Leaders of the mutiny.

Sem. At length the winds are raised, the storm blows high ;

Be it your care, my friends, to keep it up
In its full fury, and direct it right,
Till it has spent itself on Cato's head.

Mean-while I'll herd amongst his friends, and seem

One of the number, that whate'er arrive,
My friends and fellow-soldiers my be safe.

[Exit.]
1 Lead. We are all safe, Sempronius is our friend.

Sempronius is as brave a man as Cato.
But hark ! he enters. Bear up boldly to him :
Be sure you beat him down, and bind him fast.
This day will end our toils, and give us rest :
Fear nothing, for Sempronius is our friend.

Re-enter Sempronius, with Cato, Lucius, Portius, and Marcus.

Cato. Where are those bold intrepid sons of
war,

That greatly turn their backs upon their foe,
And to their general send a brave defiance ?

Sem. Curse on their dastard souls, they stand astonished ! [Aside.]

Cato. Perfidious men ! And will you thus dishonour

Your past exploits, and sully all your wars ?

Do you confess 'twas not a zeal for Rome,

Nor love of liberty, nor thirst of honour,

Drew you thus far ; but hopes to share the spoil

Of conquered towns, and plundered provinces ?

Fired with such motives, you do well to join

With Cato's foes, and follow Cæsar's banners.

Why did I 'scape the envenomed asp's rage,

And all the fiery monsters of the desert,

To see this day ? Why could not Cato fall

Without your guilt ? Behold, ungrateful men,

Behold my bosom naked to your swords,

And let the man that's injured strike the blow.

Which of you all suspects that he is wronged ?

Or thinks he suffers greater ills than Cato ?

Am I distinguished from you but by toils,

Superior toils, and heavier weight of cares ?

Painful pre-eminence !

Sem. By heavens they droop !

Confusion to the villains ! all is lost ! [Aside.]

Cato. Have you forgotten Lybia's burning

waste,

Its barren rocks, parched earth, and hills of sand,

Its tainted air, and all its broods of poison ?

Who was the first to explore the untrodden path,

When life was hazarded in every step ?

Or, fainting in the long laborious march,

When, on the banks of an unlooked for stream,

You sunk the river with repeated draughts,

Who was the last of all your host that thirsted ?

Sem. If some penurious source by chance appeared.

Scanty of waters, when you scooped it dry,

And offered the full helmet up to Cato,

Did he not dash the untasted moisture from
him ?

Did he not lead you through the mid-day sun,

And clouds of dust ? Did not his temples glow

In the same sultry winds, and scorching heats ?

Cato. Hence, worthless men ! hence ! and complain to Cæsar,

You could not undergo the toil of war,

Nor bear the hardships that your leader bore.

Luc. See, Cato, see the unhappy men ; they weep !

Fear and remorse, and sorrow for their crime,
Appear in every look, and plead for mercy.

Cato. Learn to be honest men, give up your leaders,

And pardon shall descend to all the rest.

Sem. Cato, commit these wretches to my care :

First let them each be broken on the rack,

Then, with what life remains, impaled, and left

To writhe at leisure round the bloody stake ;

There let them hang, and taint the southern
wind.

The partners of their crime will learn obedience,
When they look up, and see their fellow-traitors

Stuck on a fork, and blackening in the sun.

Luc. Sempronius, why, why wilt thou urge the fate

Of wretched men?

Sem. How! wouldst thou clear rebellion?

Lucius (good man) pities the poor offenders,
That would imbrue their hands in Cato's blood!

Cato. Forbear, Sempronius!—see they suffer death,

But, in their deaths, remember they are men;
Strain not the laws to make their tortures grievous.

Lucius, the base degenerate age requires
Severity, and justice in its rigour:

This awes an impious, bold, offending world,
Commands obedience, and gives force to laws.
When, by just vengeance, guilty mortals perish,
The gods behold the punishment with pleasure,
And lay the uplifted thunderbolt aside.

Sem. Cato, I execute thy will with pleasure.

Cato. Mean-while we'll sacrifice to Liberty.
Remember, O my friends! the laws, the rights,
The generous plan of power delivered down
From age to age, by your renowned forefathers,
(So dearly bought, the price of so much blood:)
Oh, let it never perish in your hands!
But piously transmit it to your children.
Do thou, great Liberty, inspire our souls,
And make our lives, in thy possession, happy,
Or our deaths glorious in thy just defence.

[Exeunt Cato, &c.]

1 Lead. Sempronius, you have acted like yourself.

One would have thought you had been half in earnest.

Sem. Villain, stand off! base, grovelling, worthless wretches,

Mongrels in faction, poor faint-hearted traitors!

2 Lead. Nay, now you carry it too far, Sempronius;

Throw off the mask; there are none here but friends.

Sem. Know, villains, when such paltry slaves presume

To mix in treason, if the plot succeeds,
They're thrown neglected by: but if it fails,
They are sure to die like dogs, as you shall do.
Here, take these factious monsters, drag them forth

To sudden death!

1 Lead. Nay, since it comes to this—

Sem. Dispatch them quick, but first pluck out their tongues,

Lest, with their dying breath, they sow sedition.

[Exeunt guards, with their leaders.]

Enter Syphax.

Syp. Our first design, my friend, has proved abortive:

Still there remains an after-game to play.

My troops are mounted; their Numidian steeds
Snuff up the wind, and long to scour the desert:
Let but Sempronius head us in our flight,

We'll force the gate where Marcus keeps his guard,

And hew down all that would oppose our passage,
A day will bring us into Cæsar's camp.

Sem. Confusion! I have failed of half my purpose.

Marcia, the charming Marcia's left behind!

Syp. How! will Sempronius turn a woman's slave?

Sem. Think not thy friend can ever feel the soft

Unmanly warmth and tenderness of love.

Syphax, I long to clasp that haughty maid,
And bend her stubborn virtue to my passion:
When I have gone thus far, I'd cast her off.

Syp. Well said! that's spoken like thyself,
Sempronius.

What hinders, then, but that thou find her out,
And hurry her away by manly force?

Sem. But how to gain admission? For access
Is given to none but Juba, and her brothers.

Syp. Thou shalt have Juba's dress, and Juba's guards;

The doors will open when Numidia's prince
Seems to appear before the slaves that watch them.

Sem. Heavens, what a thought is there! Marcia's my own!

How will my bosom swell with anxious joy,
When I behold her struggling in my arms,
With glowing beauty, and disordered charms,
While fear and anger, with alternate grace,
Pant in her breast, and vary in her face!
So Pluto, seized of Proserpine, conveyed
To hell's tremendous gloom the affrighted maid;
There grimly smiled, pleased with the beautiful prize,

Nor envied Jove his sunshine and his skies.

[Exeunt.]

ACT IV. SCENE I.

Enter Lucia and Marcia.

Luc. Now tell me, Marcia, tell me from thy soul,

If thou believest 'tis possible for woman
To suffer greater ills than Lucia suffers?

Mar. Oh, Lucia, Lucia, might my big swollen heart,

Vent all its griefs, and give a loose to sorrow,
Marcia could answer thee in sighs, keep pace
With all thy woes, and count out tear for tear.

Luc. I know thou art doomed alike to be beloved

By Juba, and thy father's friend, Sempronius:
But which of these has power to charm like Portius!

Mar. Still I must beg thee not to name Sempronius;

Lucia, I like not that loud boisterous man:

Juba, to all the bravery of a hero,
Adds softest love, and more than female sweetness;

Juba might make the proudest of our sex,
Any of woman kind, but Marcia, happy.

Luc. And why not Marcia? Come, you strive
in vain

To hide your thoughts from one who knows too
well

The inward glowings of a heart in love.

Mar. While Cato lives, his daughter has no right

To love or hate, but as his choice directs.

Luc. But should this father give you to Sem-pronius?

Mar. I dare not think he will: but if he should—

Why wilt thou add, to all the griefs I suffer,
Imaginary ills, and fancied tortures?
I hear the sound of feet! they march this way:
Let us retire, and try if we can drown
Each softer thought in sense of present danger:
When love once pleads admission to our hearts,
In spite of all the virtues we can boast,
The woman, that deliberates, is lost. [Exeunt.

Enter Sempronius, dressed like Juba, with Numidian guards.

Sem. The deer is lodged, I've tracked her to her covert.

Be sure you mind the word, and when I give it,
Rush in at once, and seize upon your prey.

Let not her cries or tears have force to move
you.

—How will the young Numidian rave to see
His mistress lost! If ought could glad my soul,
Beyond the enjoyment of so bright a prize,
'T would be to torture that young, gay barbarian.
—But hark! what noise! Death to my hopes!
'tis he,

'Tis Juba's self! there is but one way left—
He must be murdered, and a passage cut Through those his guards—Ha! dastards, do you tremble;—

Or act like men, or by yon azure heaven—
Enter Juba.

Juba. What do I see? Who's this, that dares usurp

The guards and habit of Numidia's prince?

Sem. One that was born to scourge thy arrogance,

Presumptuous youth!

Juba. What can this mean? Sempronius!

Sem. My sword shall answer thee. Have at thy heart!

Juba. Nay, then, beware thy own, proud, barbarous man.

[Sem. falls. His guards surrender.

Sem. Curse on my stars! Am I then doomed to fall

By a boy's hand, disfigured in a vile
Numidian dress, and for a worthless woman?
Gods, I'm distracted! This my close of life!
Oh! for a peal of thunder, that would make Earth, sea, and air, and heaven, and Cato, tremble!

[Dies.

Juba. With what a spring his furious soul broke loose,
And left the limbs still quivering on the ground!
Hence let us carry off those slaves to Cato,
That we may there at length unravel all
This dark design, this mystery of fate.

[Exit Juba, with prisoners, &c.

Enter Lucia and Marcia.

Luc. Sure 'twas the clash of swords: my troubled heart

Is so cast down, and sunk amidst its sorrows,
It throbs with fear, and aches at every sound.
Oh, Marcia, should thy brothers, for my sake!—
I die away with horror at the thought.

Mar. See, Lucia, see! here's blood! here's blood and murder!

Ha! a Numidian! Heaven preserve the prince!
The face lies muffled up within the garment,
But, ha! death to my sight! a diadem,
And royal robes! O gods! 'tis he, 'tis he!
Juba, the loveliest youth that ever warmed
A virgin's heart, Juba lies dead before us!

Luc. Now, Marcia, now call up to thy assistance

Thy wonted strength and constancy of mind!
Thou canst not put it to a greater trial.

Mar. Lucia, look there, and wonder at my patience;

Have I not cause to rave, and beat my breast,
To rend my heart with grief, and run distracted!

Luc. What can I think or say to give thee comfort?

Mar. Talk not of comfort! 'tis for lighter
ills:

Behold a sight that strikes all comfort dead!

Enter Juba listening.

I will indulge my sorrows, and give way
To all the pangs and fury of despair;
That man, that best of men, deserved it from
me.

Juba. What do I hear? And was the false
Sempronius
That best of men? Oh, had I fallen like him,
And could have been thus mourned, I had been happy.

Luc. Here will I stand, companion in thy woes,

And help thee with my tears; when I behold
A loss like thine, I half forget my own.

Mar. 'Tis not in fate to ease my tortured
breast;

This empty world, to me a joyless desert,
Has nothing left to make poor Marcia happy.

Juba. I'm on the rack! Was he so near her
heart?

Mar. Oh, he was all made up of love and charms!

Whatever maid could wish, or man admire:
Delight of every eye; when he appeared,
A secret pleasure gladdened all that saw him;
But when he talked, the proudest Roman blush-
ed

To hear his virtues, and old age grew wise.

Juba. I shall run mad —

Mar. Oh, Juba! Juba! Juba!

Juba. What means that voice? Did she not call on Juba?

Mar. Why do I think on what he was! he's dead!

He's dead and never knew how much I loved him.

Lucia, who knows but his poor bleeding heart,
Amidst its agonies, remembered Marcia,
And the last words he uttered, called me cruel!
Alas! he knew not, hapless youth, he knew not Marcia's whole soul was full of love and Juba!

Juba. Where am I? Do I live? or am indeed
What Marcia thinks? All is Elysium round me!

Mar. Ye dear remains of the most loved of men,

Nor modesty nor virtue here forbid

A last embrace, while thus —

Juba. See, Marcia, see,

[Throwing himself before her.]

The happy Juba lives! He lives to catch
That dear embrace, and to return it too
With mutual warmth and eagerness of love.

Mar. With pleasure and amaze I stand transported!

Sure 'tis a dream! dead and alive at once!
If thou art Juba, who lies there?

Juba. A wretch,

Disguised like Juba on a cursed design.

The tale is long, nor have I heard it out:

Thy father knows it all. I could not bear
To leave thee in the neighbourhood of death,
But flew, in all the haste of love, to find thee;
I found thee weeping and confess this once,
Am rapt with joy to see my Marcia's tears.

Mar. I've been surprised in an unguarded hour,

But must not now go back; the love, that lay
Half smothered in my breast, has broke through all

Its weak restraints, and burns in its full lustre.
I cannot, if I would, conceal it from thee.

Juba. I'm lost in ecstasy! and dost thou love,
Thou charming maid? —

Mar. And dost thou live to ask it?

Juba. This, this is life indeed! life worth preserving,

Such life as Juba never felt 'till now!

Mar. Believe me, prince, before I thought thee dead,

I did not know myself how much I loved thee.

Juba. Oh, fortunate mistake!

Mar. O happy Marcia!

Juba. My joy, my best beloved, my only wish!

How shall I speak the transport of my soul!

Mar. Lucia, thy arm. Oh, let me rest upon it!

The vital blood, that had forsook my heart,
Returns again in such tumultuous tides,
It quite overcomes me. Lead me to my apartment —

Oh, prince! I blush to think what I have said,
But fate has wrested the confession from me;
Go on, and prosper in the paths of honour.
Thy virtue will excuse my passion for thee,
And make the gods propitious to our love.

[Exeunt Mar. and Luc.]

Juba. I am so blest, I fear 'tis all a dream.
Fortune, thou now hast made amends for all
Thy past unkindness: I absolve my stars.
What though Numidia add her conquered towns
And provinces to swell the victor's triumph,
Juba will never at his fate repine:
Let Cæsar have the world, if Marcia's mine.

[Exit.]

A march at a distance.—Enter Cato and Lucius.

Luc. I stand astonished! What, the bold Sempronius,
That still broke foremost through the crowd of patriots,

As with a hurricane of zeal transported,
And virtuous even to madness —

Cato. Trust me, Lucius

Our civil discords have produced such crimes,
Such monstrous crimes! I am surprised at nothing.

—Oh, Lucius, I am sick of this bad world!

The day-light and the sun grow painful to me.

Enter Portius.

But see where Portius comes: what means this haste?

Why are thy looks thus changed?

Por. My heart is grieved,

I bring such news as will affect my father.

Cato. Has Cæsar shed more Roman blood?

Por. Not so.

The traitor Syphax, as within the square

He exercised his troops, the signal given,

Flew off at once, with his Numidian horse,

To the south gate, where Marcus holds the watch;

I saw, and called to stop him, but in vain:

He tossed his arm aloft, and proudly told me,
He would not stay and perish like Sempronius.

Cato. Perfidious man! But haste, my son, and see

Thy brother Marcus acts a Roman's part.

[Exit Por.]

—Lucius, the torrent bears too hard upon me;
Justice gives way to force: the conquered world
Is Cæsar's! Cato has no business in it.

Luc. While pride, oppression, and injustice reign,

The world will still demand her Cato's presence.

In pity to mankind submit to Cæsar,

And reconcile thy mighty soul to life!

Cato. Would Lucius have me live to swell the number

Of Cæsar's slaves, or, by a base submission,

Give up the cause of Rome, and own a tyrant?

Luc. The victor never will impose on Cato

Ungenerous terms. His enemies confess

The virtues of humanity are Cæsar's.

Cato. Curse on his virtues! they have undone his country.

Such popular humanity is treason—

But see young Juba; the good youth appears, Full of the guilt of his perfidious subjects!

Luc. Alas, poor prince! his fate deserves compassion.

Enter Juba.

Juba. I blush, and am confounded to appear Before thy presence, Cato.

Cato. What's thy crime?

Juba. I am a Numidian.

Cato. And a brave one too.

Thou hast a Roman soul.

Juba. Hast thou not heard

Of my false countrymen?

Cato. Alas, young prince!

Falsehood and fraud shoot up in every soil, The product of all climes—Rome has its Cæsars.

Juba. 'Tis generous thus to comfort the distressed.

Cato. 'Tis just to give applause where 'tis deserved;

Thy virtue, prince, has stood the test of fortune,

Like purest gold, that, tortured in the furnace, Comes out more bright, and brings forth all its weight.

Juba. What shall I answer thee? My ravished heart

O'erflows with sacred joy: I would rather gain Thy praise, O Cato! than Numidia's empire.

Enter Portius.

Por. Misfortune on misfortune! grief on grief!

My brother Marcus—

Cato. Ha! what has he done?

Has he forsook his post? Has he given way?

Did he look tamely on, and let them pass?

Por. Scarce had I left my father, but I met him

Borne on the shields of his surviving soldiers, Breathless and pale, and covered o'er with wounds.

Long, at the head of his few faithful friends, He stood the shock of a whole host of foes;

Till, obstinately brave, and bent on death, Oppressed with multitudes, he greatly fell.

Cato. I am satisfied.

Por. Nor did he fall before

His sword had pierced through the false heart of Syphax.

Yonder he lies. I saw the hoary traitor Grin in the pangs of death, and bite the ground.

Cato. Thanks to the gods, my boy has done his duty!

—Portius, when I am dead, be sure you place His urn near mine.

Por. Long may they keep asunder!

Luc. Oh, Cato, arm thy soul with all its patience?

See where the corpse of thy dead son approaches!

3 B 2

The citizens and senators, alarmed, Have gathered round it, and attend it weeping.

Cato, meeting the corpse.

Cato. Welcome, my son! Here lay him down, my friends,

Full in my sight, that I may view at leisure The bloody corse, and count those glorious wounds.

—How beautiful is death, when earned by virtue!

Who would not be that youth? What pity is it

That we can die but once to serve our country!

—Why sits this sadness on your brows, my friends?

I should have blushed if Cato's house had stood Secure, and flourished in a civil war.

—Portius, behold thy brother, and remember Thy life is not thy own, when Rome demands it.

Juba. Was ever man like this!

Cato. Alas, my friends,

Why mourn you thus! let not a private loss

Afflict your hearts. 'Tis Rome requires our tears,

The mistress of the world, the seat of empire, The nurse of heroes, the delight of gods

That humbled the proud tyrants of the earth,

And set the nations free, Rome is no more!

Oh, liberty! Oh, virtue! Oh, my country!

Juba. Behold that upright man! Rome fills his eyes

With tears, that flowed not o'er his own dead son. [Aside.]

Cato. Whate'er the Roman virtue has subdued,

The sun's whole course, the day and year are Cæsar's:

For him the self-devoted Decii died,

The Fabii fell, and the great Scipios conquered;

Even Pompey fought for Cæsar. Oh, my friends,

How is the toil of fate, the work of ages,

The Roman empire, fallen! Oh, cursed ambition!

Fallen into Cæsar's hand: our great forefathers.

Had left him nought to conquer but his country.

Juba. While Cato lives, Cæsar will blush to see

Mankind enslaved, and be ashamed of empire.

Cato. Cæsar ashamed! has he not seen Pharsalia!

Luc. Cato, 'tis time thou save thyself and us.

Cato. Lose not a thought on me; I am out of danger;

Heaven will not leave me in the victor's hand.

Cæsar shall never say he conquered Cato.

But, oh, my friends! your safety fills my heart

With anxious thoughts; a thousand secret terrors

Rise in my soul. How shall I save my friends?

'Tis now, O Cæsar, I begin to fear thee!

Luc. Cæsar has mercy if we ask it of him.

Cato. Then ask it, I conjure you ! let him know
 What'er was done against him, Cato did it.
 And, if you please, that I request it of him,
 That I myself, with tears, request it of him,
 The virtue of my friends may pass unpunished.
Juba, my heart is troubled for thy sake.
 Should I advise thee to regain Numidia,
 Or seek the conqueror ?—

Juba. If I forsake thee
 Whilst I have life, may Heaven abandon Juba !

Cato. Thy virtues, prince, if I foresee aright,
 Will one day make thee great ; at Rome hereafter,

'Twill be no crime to have been Cato's friend.
Portius, draw near : my son, thou oft hast seen
 Thy sire engaged in a corrupted state,
 Wrestling with vice and faction : now thou see'st me

Spent, overpowered, despairing of success ;
 Let me advise thee to retreat betimes
 To thy paternal seat, the Sabine field,
 Where the great Censor toiled with his own hands,

And all our frugal ancestors were blessed
 In humble virtues, and a rural life ;
 There live retired, pray for the peace of Rome ;
 Content thyself to be obscurely good.
 When vice prevails, and impious men bear sway
 The post of honour is a private station.

Por. I hope my father does not recommend
 A life to Portius, that he scorns himself ?

Cato. Farewell, my friends ! If there be any of you,

Who dare not trust the victor's clemency,
 Know there are ships prepared by my command
 (Their sails already opening to the winds),
 That shall convey you to the wished-for port.
 Is there aught else, my friends, I can do for
 you ?

The conqueror draws near. Once more farewell !

If e'er we meet hereafter, we shall meet
 In happier climes, and on a safer shore,
 Where Cæsar never shall approach us more.

[Pointing to his dead son.
 There, the brave youth, with love of virtue fired,
 Who greatly in his country's cause expired,
 Shall know he conquered. The firm patriot
 there,

Who made the welfare of mankind his care,
 Though still by faction, vice, and fortune crost,
 Shall find the generous labour was not lost.

[Exeunt.

ACT V. SCENE I.

Cato solus, sitting in a thoughtful posture : in his hand Plato's book on the Immortality of the Soul. A drawn sword on the table by him.

It must be so—Plato, thou reasonest well.
 Else whence this pleasing hope, this fond desire,
 This longing after immortality ?
 Or whence this secret dread, and inward horror

Of falling into nought ? Why shrinks the soul
 Back on herself, and startles at destruction ?
 'Tis the divinity that stirs within us ;
 'Tis Heaven itself, that points out an hereafter,
 And intimates eternity to man.

Eternity ! thou pleasing, dreadful thought !
 Through what variety of untried being,
 Through what new scenes and changes must we
 pass ?

The wide, the unbounded prospect lies before
 me :

But shadows, clouds, and darkness rest upon it.
 Here will I hold. If there's a Power above,
 (And that there is all nature cries aloud,
 Through all her works) he must delight in virtue ;

And that which he delights in must be happy.
 But when ! or where—this world was made for Cæsar.

I'm weary of conjectures—this must end them.

[Laying his hand on his sword.

Thus I am doubly armed : my death and life,
 My bane and antidote, are both before me.

This in a moment brings me to an end :
 But this informs me I shall never die.

The soul, secured in her existence, smiles
 At the drawn dagger, and defies its point.
 The stars shall fade away, the sun himself
 Grow dim with age, and nature sink in years,
 But thou shalt flourish in immortal youth,
 Unhurt amidst the war of elements,

The wreck of matter, and the crush of worlds.
 What means this heaviness that hangs upon me ?

This lethargy that creeps through all my senses ?
 Nature oppressed, and harassed out with care,
 Sinks down to rest. 'Tis once I'll favour her,
 That my awakened soul may take her flight,
 Renewed in all her strength, and fresh with life,
 An offering fit for heaven. Let guilt or fear Disturb man's rest ; Cato knows neither of
 them ;

Indifferent in his choice to sleep or die.

[Enter Portius.

But ha ! who's this ? my son ! Why this intrusion ?

Were not my orders that I would be private ?
 Why am I disobeyed ?

Por. Alas, my father !

What means this sword, this instrument of
 death ?

Let me convey it hence.

Cato. Rash youth, forbear !

Por. Oh, let the prayers, the intreaties of your friends,

Their tears, their common danger, wrest it from
 you !

Cato. Wouldst thou betray me ? Wouldst thou give me up

A slave, a captive into Cæsar's hands ?

Retire, and learn obedience to a father,

Or know, young man !—

Por. Look not thus sternly on me ;

You know I'd rather die than disobey you.

Cato. 'Tis well? again I'm master of myself. Now, Cæsar, let thy troops beset our gates, And bar each avenue; thy gathering fleets O'erspread the sea, and stop up every port; Cato shall open to himself a passage, And mock thy hopes—

Por. Oh, sir! forgive your son, Whose grief hangs heavy on him. Oh, my father!

How am I sure it is not the last time I e'er shall call you so! Be not displeased, Oh, be not angry with me whilst I weep, And, in the anguish of my heart, beseech you To quit the dreadful purpose of your soul!

Cato. Thou hast been ever good and dutiful. [Embracing him.]

Weep not, my son, all will be well again; The righteous gods, whom I have sought to please,

Will succour Cato, and preserve his children.

Por. Your words give comfort to my drooping heart.

Cato. Portius, thou may'st rely upon my conduct:

Thy father will not act what misbecomes him. But go, my son, and see if aught be wanting Among thy father's friends; see them embarked,

And tell me if the winds and seas befriend them.

My soul is quite weighed down with care, and asks

The soft refreshment of a moment's sleep.

Por. My thoughts are more at ease, my heart revives. [Exit Cato.]

Enter Marcia.

Oh, Marcia! Oh, my sister, still there is hope! Our father will not cast away a life, So needful to us all and to his country. He is retired to rest, and seems to cherish Thoughts full of peace. He has dispatched me hence,

With orders that bespeak a mind composed, And studious for the safety of his friends. Marcia, take care that none disturb his slumbers. [Exit.]

Mar. Oh, ye immortal powers! that guard the just,

Watch round his couch, and soften his repose; Banish his sorrows, and becalm his soul With easy dreams; remember all his virtues, And shew mankind that goodness is your care!

Enter Lucia.

Luc. Where is your father, Marcia, where is Cato?

Mar. Lucia, speak low, he is retired to rest. Lucia, I feel a gentle dawning hope Rise in my soul. We shall be happy still.

Luc. Alas! I tremble when I think on Cato! In every view, in every thought, I tremble! Cato is stern and awful as a god; He knows not how to wink at human frailty, Or pardon weakness that he never felt.

Mar. Though stern and awful to the foes of Rome,

He is all goodness, Lucia, always mild, Compassionate and gentle to his friends. Filled with domestic tenderness, the best, The kindest father I have ever found him, Easy and good, and bounteous to my wishes.

Luc. 'Tis his consent alone can make us blessed:

Marcia, we both are equally involved In the same intricate, perplexed distress.

The cruel hand of fate, that has destroyed Thy brother Marcus, whom we both lament—

Mar. And ever shall lament; unhappy youth!

Luc. Has set my soul at large, and now I stand

Loose of my vow. But who knows Cato's thoughts?

Who knows how yet he may dispose of Portius, Or how he has determined of thyself?

Mar. Let him but live, commit the rest to heaven.

Enter Lucius.

Lucius. Sweet are the slumbers of the virtuous man!

Oh, Marcia, I have seen thy godlike father! Some power invisible supports his soul, And bears it up in all its wonted greatness. A kind refreshing sleep is fallen upon him; I saw him stretched at ease, his fancy lost In pleasing dreams; as I drew near his couch, He smiled, and cried, Cæsar, thou canst not hurt me.

Mar. His mind still labours with some dreadful thought.

Lucius. Lucia, why all this grief, these floods of sorrow?

Dry up thy tears, my child; we all are safe While Cato lives—his presence will protect us.

Enter Juba.

Juba. Lucius, the horsemen are returned from viewing

The number, strength, and posture of our foes, Who now encamp within a short hour's march; On the high point of yon bright western tower We ken them from afar; the setting sun Plays on their shining arms and burnished helmets,

And covers all the field with gleams of fire.

Lucius. Marcia, 'tis time we should awake thy father;

Cæsar is still disposed to give us terms, And waits at distance till he hears from Cato.

Enter Portius.

Portius, thy looks speak somewhat of importance.

What tidings dost thou bring? Methinks I see Unusual gladness sparkling in thy eyes.

Por. As I was hasting to the port, where now My father's friends, impatient for a passage, Accuse the lingering winds, a sail arrived From Pompey's son, who through the realms of Spain

Calls out for vengeance on his father's death,
And rouses the whole nation up to arms.
Were Cato at their head, once more might

Rome
Assert her rights, and claim her liberty.
But, hark! what means that groan! Oh, give me way,

And let me fly into my father's presence. [Exit.]

Lucius. Cato, amidst his slumbers, thinks on Rome,

And in the wild disorder of his soul
Mourns o'er his country. Ha! a second groan—
Heaven guard us all!—

Mar. Alas! 'tis not the voice
Of one who sleeps; 'tis agonizing pain,
'Tis death is in that sound.

Re-enter Portius.

Por. Oh, sight of woe!
Oh, Marcia, what we feared is come to pass!
Cato is fallen upon his sword.

Lucius. Oh, Portius,
Hide all the horrors of thy mournful tale,
And let us guess the rest.

Por. I've raised him up,
And placed him in his chair, where, pale and faint, [him,
He gasps for breath, and, as his life flows from Demands to see his friends. His weeping servants,

Obsequious to his orders, bear him hither.

Mar. Oh, Heaven! assist me in this dreadful
hour,

To pay the last sad duties to my father!

Juba. These are thy triumphs, thy exploits,
O Cæsar!

Lucius. Now is Rome fallen indeed!

Cato brought in on a chair.

Cato. Here set me down—

Portius, come near me—Are my friends embarked?

Can any thing be thought of for their service?
Whilst I yet live, let me not live in vain.

Oh, Lucius, art thou here? Thou art too good—Let this our friendship live between our children;

Make Portius happy in thy daughter Lucia.

Alas! poor man, he weeps! Marcia, my daughter—

Oh, bend me forward! Juba loves thee, Marcia.
A senator of Rome, while Rome survived,

Would not have matched his daughter with a
king,

But Cæsar's arms have thrown down all distinction;

Whoe'er is brave and virtuous is a Roman—

I'm sick to death—Oh, when shall I get loose
From this vain world, the abode of guilt and sorrow!

And yet, methinks, a beam of light breaks in

On my departing soul. Alas, I fear

I've been too hasty. Oh, ye powers, that search

The heart of man, and weigh his inmost thoughts

If I have done amiss, impute it not—

The best may err, but you are good, and—Oh!

[Dies.]

Lucius. There fled the greatest soul that ever warmed

A Roman breast; oh, Cato! oh, my friend!

Thy will shall be religiously observed.

But let us bear this awful corpse to Cæsar,

And lay it in his sight, that it may stand

A fence betwixt us and the victor's wrath;

Cato, though dead, shall still protect his friends.

From hence, let fierce contending nations know
What dire effects from civil discord flow:

'Tis this that shakes our country with alarms,

And gives up Rome a prey to Roman arms,

Produces fraud, and cruelty, and strife,

And robs the guilty world of Cato's life.

[Exeunt omnes.]

MATTHEW PRIOR.

Born 1664.—Died 1721.

THE LADY'S LOOKING-GLASS.

CELIA and I, the other day,

Walk'd o'er the sand-hills to the sea:

The setting sun adorn'd the coast,

His beams entire, his fierceness lost:

And, on the surface of the deep,

The winds lay only not asleep:

The nymph did like the scene appear,

Serenely pleasant, calmly fair:

Soft fell her words, as flew the air.

With secret joy I heard her say,

That she would never miss one day

A walk so fine, a sight so gay.

But, oh the change! the winds grow high,

Impending tempests charge the sky;

The lightning flies, the thunder roars;

And big waves lash the frighten'd shores.

Struck with the horror of the sight,

She turns her head, and wings her flight;

And, trembling, vows she'll ne'er again

Approach the shore, or view the main.

Once more at least look back, said I,

Thyself in that large glass descry:

When thou art in good-humour dress;

When gentle reason rules thy breast;

The sun upon the calmest sea

Appears not half so bright as thee:

'Tis then that with delight I rove

Upon the boundless depth of love:

I bless my chain; I hand my oar;

Nor think on all I left on shore.

But when vain doubt and groundless fear

Do that dear foolish bosom tear;

When the big lip and watery eye

Tell me, the rising storm is nigh;

"Tis then, thou art yon' angry main,
Deformed by winds, and dash'd by rain;
And the poor sailor, that must try
Its fury, labours less than I.

Shipwrecked, in vain to land I make,
While love and fate still drive me back:
Forced to doat on thee thy own way,
I chide thee first, and then obey.
Wretched when from thee, vex'd when nigh,
I with thee, or without thee, die.

TO A LADY ON HER REFUSING TO CONTINUE A DISPUTE WITH ME.

Spare, generous victor, spare the slave,
Who did unequal war pursue;
That more than triumph he might have,
In being overcome by you.

In the dispute whate'er I said,
My heart was by my tongue belied;
And in my looks you might have read
How much I argued on your side.

You far from danger as from fear,
Might have sustain'd an open fight:
For seldom your opinions err,
Your eyes are always in the right.

Why, fair one, would you not rely
On reason's force with beauty's join'd?
Could I their prevalence deny,
I must at once be deaf and blind.

Alas! not hoping to subdue,
I only to the fight aspir'd:
To keep the beauteous foe in view
Was all the glory I desir'd.

But she, howe'er of victory sure,
Contemns the wreath too long delay'd:
And, arm'd with more immediate power,
Calls cruel silence to her aid.

Deeper to wound, she shuns the fight;
She drops her arms, to gain the field;
Secures her conquest by her flight;
And triumphs, when she seems to yield.

So when the Parthian turn'd his steed,
And from the hostile camp withdrew,
With cruel skill the backward reed
He sent; and, as he fled, he slew.

AN ENGLISH PADLOCK

Miss Danaë, when fair and young,
(As Horace has divinely sung)
Could not be kept from Jove's embrace
By doors of steel, and walls of brass.
The reason of the thing is clear,
Would Jove the naked truth aver.

Cupid was with him of the party;
And show'd himself sincere and hearty;
For, give that whipster but his errand,
He takes my lord Chief Justice' warrant;
Dauntless as death away he walks;
Breaks the doors open, snaps the locks;
Searches the parlour, chamber, study;
Nor stops till he has culprit's body.

Since this has been authentic truth,
By age deliver'd down to youth;
Tell us, mistaken husband, tell us,
Why so mysterious, why so jealous?
Does the restraint, the bolt, the bar,
Make us less curious, her less fair?
The spy, which does this treasure keep,
Does she ne'er say her prayers, nor sleep?
Does she to no excess incline?
Does she fly music, mirth, and wine?
Or have not gold and flattery power
To purchase one unguarded hour?

Your care does further yet extend:
That spy is guarded by your friend.—
But has this friend nor eye nor heart?
May he not feel the cruel dart,
Which, soon or late, all mortals feel?
May he not, with too tender zeal,
Give the fair prisoner cause to see,
How much he wishes she were free?
May he not craftily infer
The rules of friendship too severe,
Which chain him to a hated trust;
Which make him wretched, to be just?
And may not she, this darling she,
Youthful and healthy, flesh and blood,
Easy with him, ill us'd by thee,
Allow this logic to be good?

Sir, will your questions never end?
I trust to neither spy nor friend.
In short, I keep her from the sight
Of every human face.—She'll write.
From pen and paper she's debarr'd.—
Has she a bodkin and a card?
She'll prick her mind.—She will, you say:
But how shall she that mind convey?
I keep her in one room: I lock it:
The key (look here) is in this pocket.
The key-hole, is that left? Most certain.
She'll thrust her letter through—Sir Martin.
Dear angry friend, what must be done?
Is there no way?—There is but one.

Send her abroad: and let her see,
That all this mingled mass, which she,
Being forbidden, longs to know,
Is a dull farce, an empty show,
Powder, and pocket-glass, and beau:
A staple of romance and lies,
False tears and real perjuries;
Where sighs and looks are bought and sold,
And love is made but to be told:
Where the fat bawd and lavish heir
The spoils of ruin'd beauty share:
And youth, seduc'd from friends and fame;
Must give up age to want and shame.

Let her behold the frantic scene,
The women wretched, false the men :
And when, these certain ills to shun,
She would to thy embraces run ;
Receive her with extended arms,
Seem more delighted with her charms ;
Wait on her to the park and play,
Put on good-humour ; make her gay ;
Be to her virtues very kind ;
Be to her faults a little blind ;
Let all her ways be unconfin'd ;
And clap your padlock—on her mind.

ALMA, OR THE PROGRESS OF THE MIND.

[From Canto III.]

HERE, Richard, how could I explain
The various labyrinths of the brain !
Surprise my readers, whilst I tell 'em
Of cerebrum and cerebellum !
How could I play the commentator
On dura and on pia mater !
Where hot and cold, and dry and wet,
Strive each the other's place to get ;
And with incessant toil and strife,
Would keep possession during life.
I could demonstrate every pore,
Where memory lays up all her store ;
And to an inch compute the station
'Twixt judgment and imagination.
O friend ! I could display much learning,
At least to men of small discerning.
The brain contains ten thousand cells :
In each some active fancy dwells ;
Which always is at work, and framing
The several follies I was naming.
As in a hive's vimineous dome
Ten thousand bees enjoy their home,
Each does her studious actions vary,
To go and come, to fetch and carry ;
Each still renews her little labour,
Nor justles her assiduous neighbour :
Each—whilst this thesis I maintain,
I fancy, Dick, I know thy brain.
O, with the mighty theme affected,
Could I but see thy head dissected !
My head ! quoth Dick, to serve your whim !
Spare that, and take some other limb.
Sir, in your nice affairs of system,
Wise men propose ; but fools assist 'em.
Says Matthew, Richard, keep thy head,
And hold thy peace ; and I'll proceed.
Proceed ! quoth Dick : Sir, I aver,
You have already gone too far.
When people once are in the wrong,
Each line they add is much too long.
Who fastest walks, but walks astray,
Is only furthest from his way.
Bless your conceits ! must I believe,
How'er absurd, what you conceive ;
And, for your friendship, live and die
A papist in philosophy !
I say, whatever you maintain

Of Alma in the heart or brain,
The plainest man alive may tell ye,
Her seat of empire is the belly :
From hence she sends out those supplies,
Which make us either stout or wise ;
The strength of every other member
Is founded on your belly-timber ;
The qualms or raptures of your blood
Rise in proportion to your food ;
And, if you would improve your thought,
You must be fed as well as taught.
Your stomach makes your fabric roll,
Just as the bias rules the bowl.
The great Achilles might employ
The strength design'd to ruin Troy ;
He dined on lion's marrow, spread
On toasts of ammunition bread :
But, by his mother sent away,
Amongst the Thracian girls to play,
Effeminate he sat, and quiet :
Strange product of a cheese-cake diet !
Now give my argument fair play,
And take the thing the other way :
The youngster, who at nine and three
Drinks with his sisters milk and tea,
From breakfast reads till twelve o'clock,
Burnet, and Heylin, Hobbes, and Locke :
He pays due visits after noon
To cousin Alice and uncle John ;
At ten from coffee-house or play
Returning, finishes the day.
But, give him port and potent sack,
From milk-sop he starts up Mohack ;
Holds that the happy know no hours ;
So through the street at midnight scowrs,
Breaks watchmen's heads and chairmen's glasses,
And thence proceeds to nicking sashes ;
Till, by some tougher hand o'ercome,
And first knock'd down, and then led home,
He damns the footman, strikes the maid,
And decently reels up to bed.
Observe the various operations
Of food and drink in several nations.
Was ever Tartar fierce or cruel
Upon the strength of water-gruel ?
But who shall stand his rage and force,
If first he rides, then eats his horse ?
Sallads, and eggs, and lighter fare,
Tune the Italian spark's guitar.
And, if I take Dan Congreve right,
Pudding and beef make Britons fight.
Tokay and coffee cause this work
Between the German and the Turk ;
And both, as they provisions want,
Chicane, avoid, retire and faint.
Hunger and thirst, or guns and swords,
Give the same death in different words.
To push this argument no further ;
To starve a man, in law is murder.
As in a watch's fine machine,
Though many artful springs are seen ;
The added movements, which declare
How full the moon, how old the year,

Derive their secondary power
 From that which simply points the hour.
 For, though those gim-cracks were away,
 (Quare would not swear, but Quare would say)
 However more reduced and plain,
 The watch would still a watch remain :
 But, if the horal orbit ceases,
 The whole stands still, or breaks to pieces ;
 Is now no longer what it was,
 And you may e'en go sell the case.
 So, if unprejudic'd you scan
 The goings of this clock-workman,
 You find a hundred movements made
 By fine devices in his head ;
 But 'tis the stomach's solid stroke
 That tells his being what's o'clock.
 If you take off this rhetoric trigger,
 He talks no more in mode and figure ;
 Or, clog his mathematic-wheel,
 His buildings fall, his ship stands still ;
 Or, lastly break his politic-weight,
 His voice no longer rules the state.
 Yet if these finer whims are gone,
 Your clock, though plain, would still go on ;
 But spoil the engine of digestion,
 And you entirely change the question.
 Alma's affairs no power can mend ;
 The jest, alas ! is at an end :
 Soon ceases all the worldly bustle,
 And you consign the corpse to Russel.
 Now make your Alma come or go
 From leg to hand, from top to toe,
 Your system, without my addition,
 Is in a very sad condition.
 So harlequin extoll'd his horse,
 Fit for the war, or road, or course ;
 His mouth was soft, his eye was good,
 His foot was sure as ever trod :
 One fault he had (a fault indeed !) ;
 And what was that ? the horse was dead.
 Dick, from these instances and fetches,
 Thou mak'st of horses, clocks, and watches,
 Quoth Mat, to me thou seem'st to mean,
 That Alma is a mere machine :
 That, telling others what's o'clock,
 She knows not what herself has struck ;
 But leaves to standers-by the trial
 Of what is mark'd upon her dial.
 Here hold a blow, good friend, quoth Dick,
 And rais'd his voice exceeding quick.
 Fight fair, sir : what I never meant
 Don't you infer. In argument
 Similies are like songs in love :
 They much describe ; they nothing prove.

SOLOMON ON THE VANITY OF THE WORLD.
 [From Book III.]

As smoke that rises from the kindling fires
 Is seen this moment, and the next expires ;
 As empty clouds by rising winds are tost,
 Their fleeting forms scarce sooner found than lost ;

S c

So vanishes our state, so pass our days ;
 So life but opens now, and now decays :
 The cradle and the tomb, alas ! so nigh,
 To live, is scarce distinguish'd from to die.
 Cure of the miser's wish, and coward's fear,
 Death only shows us what we knew was near.
 With courage therefore view the pointed hour,
 Dread not death's anger, but expect his power ;
 Nor nature's law with fruitless sorrow mourn,
 But die, O mortal man ! for thou wast born.
 Cautious through doubt, by want of courage
 wise,
 To such advice the reasoner still replies.
 Yet measuring all the long continued space,
 Every successive day's repeated race,
 Since time first started from his pristine goal,
 Till he had reach'd that hour wherein my soul
 Join'd to my body swell'd the womb ; I was (At least I think so) nothing : must I pass
 Again to nothing, when this vital breath,
 Ceasing, consigns me o'er to rest and death ?
 Must the whole man, amazing thought ! return
 To the cold marble, or contracted urn ?
 And never shall those particles agree,
 That were in life this individual he ?
 But sever'd, must they join the general mass,) Through other forms and shapes ordain'd to)
 pass,
 Nor thought nor image kept of what he was ?)
 Does the great word, that gave him sense, or-dain
 That life shall never wake that sense again ?
 And will no power his sinking spirit save
 From the dark caves of death, and chambers of the grave ?
 Each evening I behold the setting sun
 With downward speed into the ocean run :
 Yet the same light (pass but some fleeting hours)
 Exerts his vigour, and renews his powers ;
 Starts the bright race again : his constant flame
 Rises and sets, returning still the same.
 I mark the various fury of the winds ;
 These neither seasons guide, nor order binds ;
 They now dilate, and now contract their force ;
 Various their speed, but endless is their course.
 From his first fountain and beginning ouze,
 Down to the sea each brook and torrent flows :
 Though sundry drops or leave or swell the
 stream,
 The whole still runs, with equal pace, the same ;
 Still other waves supply the rising urns,
 And the eternal flood no want of water mourns.
 Why then must man obey the sad decree,
 Which subjects neither sun, nor wind, nor sea ?
 A flower, that does with opening morn arise,
 And, flourishing the day, at evening dies ;
 A winged eastern blast, just skimming o'er
 The ocean's brow, and sinking on the shore ;
 A fire, whose flames through crackling stubble
 fly ;
 A meteor shooting from the summer sky ;
 A bowl adown the bending mountain roll'd ;
 A bubble breaking, and a fable told ;

A noon-tide shadow, and a midnight dream ;
Are emblems, which with semblance apt proclaim

Our earthly course : but, O my soul ! so fast
Must life run off, and death for ever last ?
This dark opinion, sure is too confined ;
Else whence this hope, and terror of the mind ?
Does something still, and somewhere yet remain,

Reward or punishment, delight or pain ?
Say : shall our relicks second birth receive ?
Sleep we to wake, and only die to live ?
When the sad wife has clos'd her husband's eyes,

And pierc'd the echoing vault with doleful cries,

Lies the pale corpse not yet entirely dead,
The spirit only from the body fled ;
The grosser part of heat and motion void,
To be by fire, or worm, or time, destroyed ;
The soul, immortal substance, to remain,
Conscious of joy, and capable of pain ?
And, if her acts have been directed well,
While with her friendly clay she deign'd to dwell,

Shall she with safety reach her pristine seat ?
Find her rest endless, and her bliss complete ?
And, while the buried man we idly mourn,
Do angels joy to see his better half return ?
But, if she has deform'd this earthly life
With murderous rapine, and seditious strife.
Amazed, repulsed, and by those angels driven
From the ethereal seat, and blissful heaven,
In everlasting darkness must she lie,
Still more unhappy, that she cannot die ?

Amid two seas, on one small point of land,
Wearied, uncertain, and amazed, we stand :
On either side our thoughts incessant turn ;
Forward we dread, and looking back we mourn ;
Losing the present in this dubious haste,
And lost ourselves betwixt the future and the past.

These cruel doubts contending in my breast,
My reason staggering, and my hopes oppress'd,
Once more, I said, once more I will inquire,
What is this little, agile, perversive fire,
This fluttering motion, which we call the mind ?
How does she act ? and where is she confin'd ?
Have we the power to guide her as we please ?
Whence then those evils, that obstruct our ease ?
We happiness pursue ; we fly from pain ;
Yet the pursuit, and yet the flight, is vain :
And, while poor nature labours to be blest,
By day with pleasure, and by night with rest,
Some stronger power eludes our sickly will,
Dashing our rising hope with certain ill ;
And makes us with reflective trouble see,
That all is destin'd, which we fancy free.

That power superior then, which rules our mind,

Is his decree by human prayer inclin'd ?
Will he for sacrifice our sorrows ease ?
And can our tears reverse his firm decrees ?

Then let religion aid, where reason fails ;
Throw loads of incense in, to turn the scales ;
And let the silent sanctuary show,
What from the babbling schools we may not know,
How man may shun or bear his destin'd part of woe.

What shall amend, or what absolve, our fate ?
Anxious we hover in a mediate state,
Betwixt infinity and nothing, bounds,
Or boundless terms, whose doubtful sense confounds.

Unequal thought ! whilst all we apprehend
Is, that our hopes must rise, our sorrows end,
As our Creator deigns to be our friend.

I said ;—and instant had the priests prepare
The ritual sacrifice and solemn prayer.
Select from vulgar herds, with garlands gay,
A hundred bulls ascend the sacred way.
The artful youth proceed to form the choir :
They breathe the flute, or strike the vocal wire.
The maids in comely order next advance ;
They beat the timbrel, and instruct the dance.
Follows the chosen tribe from Levi sprung,
Chaunting, by just return, the holy song.
Along the choir in solemn state they past :

—The anxious king came last.

The sacred hymn perform'd, my promised vow
I paid ; and bowing at the altar low,
Father of heaven ! (I said) and Judge of earth !
Whose word call'd out this universe to birth ;
By whose kind power and influencing care
The various creatures move, and live, and are :
But, ceasing once that care, withdrawn that power,

They move (alas !) and live, and are no more :
Omniscient Master, Omnipresent King,
To thee, to thee, my last distress I bring.

Thou, that canst still the raging of the seas,
Chain up the winds, and bid the tempests cease !

Redeem my shipwreck'd soul from raging gusts
Of cruel passion and deceitful lusts :

From storms of rage, and dangerous rocks of pride,
Let thy strong hand this little vessel guide
(It was thy hand that made it) through the tide
Impetuous of this life : let thy command
Direct my course, and bring me safe to land !

If, while this wearied flesh draws fleeting breath,

Not satisfied with life, afraid of death,
It haply be thy will, that I should know
Glimpse of delight, or pause from anxious woe ;
From now, from instant now, great Sire ! dispel
The clouds that press my soul ; from now reveal

A gracious beam of light ; from now inspire
My tongue to sing, my hand to touch the lyre ;
My open thought to joyous prospects raise,
And for thy mercy let me sing thy praise.
Or, if thy will ordains I still shall wait
Some new hereafter, and a future state,

Permit me strength my weight of woe to bear,
And raise my mind superior to my care.
Let me, how'er unable to explain
The secret labyrinths of thy ways to man,
With humble zeal confess thy awful power ;
Still weeping hope, and wondering still adore.
So in my conquest be thy might declar'd,
And for thy justice be thy name rever'd.

My prayer scarce ended, a stupendous gloom
Darkens the air ; loud thunder shakes the dome.
To the beginning miracle succeed
An awful silence and religious dread.
Sudden breaks forth a more than common day ;
The sacred wood, which on the altar lay,
Untouch'd, unlighted, glows—
Ambrosial odour, such as never flows
From Arab's gum, or the Sabæan rose,
Does round the air evolving scents diffuse :
The holy ground is wet with heavenly dew :
Celestial music (such Jessides' lyre,
Such Miriam's timbrel, would in vain require)
Strikes to my thought through my admiring ear,
With ecstasy too fine, and pleasure hard to bear.
And lo ! what sees my ravish'd eye ? what feels
My wond'ring soul ? An opening cloud reveals
An heavenly form, embody'd, and array'd
With robes of light. I heard. The angel said :

Cease, man of woman born, to hope relief
From daily trouble and continued grief ;
Thy hope of joy deliver to the wind,
Suppress thy passions, and prepare thy mind ;
Free and familiar with misfortune grow,
Be us'd to sorrow, and inur'd to woe ;
By weakening toil and hoary age o'ercome,
See thy decrease, and hasten to thy tomb ;
Leave to thy children tumult, strife, and war,
Portions of toil, and legacies of care ;
Send the successive ills through ages down,
And let each weeping father tell his son,
That deeper struck, and more distinctly griev'd,
He must augment the sorrows he receiv'd.

* * * * *

Illustrious wretch ! repine not, nor reply
View not what heaven ordains with reason's
eye.
Too bright the object is ; the distance is too
high.
The man, who would resolve the work of fate,
May limit number, and make crooked straight ;
Stop thy inquiry then, and curb thy sense,
Nor let dust argue with Omnipotence.
'Tis God who must dispose, and man sustain,
Born to endure, forbidden to complain.
Thy sum of life must his decrees fulfil ;
What derogates from his command, is ill ;
And that alone is good which centres in his will.

* * * * *

Now, Solomon ! remembering who thou art,
Act through thy remnant life the decent part.
Go forth : be strong : with patience and with care

Perform, and suffer : to thyself severe,

Gracious to others, thy desires suppress'd,
Diffus'd thy virtues ; first of men ! be best.
Thy sum of duty let two words contain ;
(O may they graven in thy heart remain !)
Be humble, and be just. The angel said.—
With upward speed his agile wings he spread ;
Whilst on the holy ground I prostrate lay,
By various doubts impell'd, or to obey,
Or to object : at length (my mournful look Heaven-ward erect) determin'd thus I spoke :
Supreme, all-wise, eternal Potentate !
Sole Author, sole Disposer of our fate !
Enthron'd in light and immortality,
Whom no man fully sees, and none can see !
Original of beings ! Power divine !
Since that I live, and that I think, is thine !—
Benign Creator ! let thy plastic hand
Dispose its own effect ; let thy command
Restore, Great Father ! thy instructed son ;
And in my act may thy great will be done !

FRIDAY ; OR, THE DIRGE*.

PASTORAL V.

Bumkinet, Grubbinol.

Bumk. Why, Grubbinol, dost thou so wistful seem ?

There's sorrow in thy look, if right I deem.
'Tis true, yon oaks with yellow tops appear,
And chilly blasts begin to nip the year ;
From the tall elm a shower of leaves is borne,
And their lost beauty riven beeches mourn.
Yet ev'n this season pleasance blithe affords,
Now the squeez'd press foams with our apple hoards.

Come let us hie, and quaff a cheery bowl,
Let cyder new "wash sorrow from thy soul."

Grub. Ah, Bumkinet ! since thou from hence wert gone,

From these sad plains all merriment is flown ;
Should I reveal my grief, 'twould spoil thy cheer,
And make thine eye o'erflow with many a tear.

* " Next year (1713) he published The Shepherd's Week, six English pastorals, in which the images are drawn from real life, such as it appears among the rustics in parts of England remote from London. Steele, in some papers of 'The Guardian,' had praised Ambrose Philips, as the pastoral writer that yielded only to Theocritus, Virgil, and Spenser. Pope, who had also published pastorals, not pleased to be overlooked, drew up a comparison of his own compositions with those of Philips, in which he covertly gave himself the preference, while he seemed to disown it. Not content with this, he is supposed to have incited Gay to write. 'The Shepherd's Week' to show, that if it be necessary to copy nature with minuteness, rural life must be exhibited such as grossness and ignorance have made it." * *

" But the effect of reality and truth became conspicuous, even when the intention was to show them grovelling and degraded. These pastorals became popular, and were read with delight, as just representations of rural manners and occupations, by those who had no interest in the rivalry of poets, nor knowledge of the critical dispute."—Johnson's Life of Gay.

Bumk. "Hang sorrow!" Let's to yonder hut repair.

And with trim sonnets "cast away our care."
"Gillian of Croydon" well thy pipe can play;
Thou sing'st most sweet, "O'er hills and far a-way."

Of "Patient Grissel" I devise to sing,
And catches quaint shall make the vallies ring
Come Grubbinol, beneath this shelter come:
From hence we view our flocks securely roam.

Grub. Yes, blithsome lad, a tale I mean to sing,

But with my woe shall distant vallies ring.
The tale shall make our kiddings droop their head,

For, woe is me!—our Blouzelind is dead.

Bumk. Is Blouzelinda dead? farewell, my glee!
No happiness is now reserv'd for me.

As the wood-pigeon cooes without his mate,
So shall my doleful dirge bewail her fate.
Of Blouzelinda fair I mean to tell,
The peerless maid that did all maids excel.

Henceforth the morn shall dewy sorrow shed,
And evening tears upon the grass be spread:
The rolling streams with watery grief shall flow,
And winds shall moan aloud—when loud they blow.

Henceforth, as oft' as autumn shall return,
The dropping trees, whene'er it rains, shall mourn,

The season quite shall strip the country's pride,
For 'twas in autumn Blouzelinda died.

Where'er I gad, I Blouzelind shall view,
Woods, dairy, barn, and mows, our passion knew.

When I direct my eyes to yonder wood,
Fresh rising sorrow curdles in my blood.
Thither I've often been the damsel's guide,
When rotten sticks our fuel have supply'd:
There I remember how her faggots large
Were frequently these happy shoulders' charge.
Sometimes this crook drew hazel-boughs adown,
And stuff'd her apron wide with nuts so brown;
Or when her feeding hogs had miss'd their way,
Or wallowing 'mid a feast of acorns lay:
Th' untoward creatures to the sty I drove,
And whistled all the way—or told my love.

If by the dairy's hatch I chanc'd to lie,
I shall her goodly countenance espy;
For there her goodly countenance I've seen,
Set off with kerchief starch'd and pinnars clean.
Sometimes, like wax, she rolls her butter round,
Or with the wooden lily prints the pound.
Whilom I've seen her skim the clouted cream,
And press from spungy curds the milky stream:
But now alas! these ears shall hear no more
The whining swine surround the dairy door;
No more her care shall fill the hollow tray,
To fat the guzzling hogs with floods of whey.
Lament ye swine, in grunting spend your grief,
For you, like me, have lost your sole relief.

When in the barn the sounding flail I ply,
Where from her sieve the chaff was wont to fly;

The poultry there will seem around to stand,
Waiting upon her charitable hand.
No succour meet the poultry now can find,
For they, like me, have lost their Blouzelind.

Whenever by yon harley-mow I pass,
Before my eyes will trip the tidy lass,
I pitch'd the sheaves, (oh, could I do so now!)
Which she in rows pil'd on the growing mow.
There every deale my heart by love was gain'd,
There the sweet kiss my courtship has explain'd.
Ah, Blouzelind! that mow I ne'er shall see,
But thy memorial will revive in me.

Lament, ye fields, and rueful symptoms show;
Henceforth let not the smelling primrose grow;
Let weeds, instead of butter-flowers appear,
And meads, instead of daisies, hemlock bear;
For crowslips sweet, let dandelions spread;
For Blouzelinda, blithsome maid, is dead!
Lament, ye swains, and o'er her grave bemoan,
And spell ye right this verse upon her stone:
"Here Blouzelinda lies—Alas, alas!
Weep, shepherds—and remember flesh is grass."

Grub. Albeit thy songs are sweeter to mine ear,

Than to the thirsty cattle rivers clear;
Or winter porridge to the labouring youth,
Or buns and sugar to the damsel's tooth;
Yet Blouzelinda's name shall tune my lay,
Of her I'll sing forever and for aye.

When Blouzelind expir'd, the wether's bell
Before the drooping flock toll'd forth her knell;
The solemn death-watch click'd the hour she died,

And shrilling crickets in the chimney cry'd;
The boding raven on her cottage sate,
And with hoarse croaking warn'd us of her fate;
The lambkin, which her wonted tendance bred,
Dropp'd on the plains that fatal instant dead;
Swarm'd on a rotten stick the bees I spy'd,
Which erst I saw when Goody Dobson died.

How shall I, void of tears of death relate,
When on her darling's bed her mother sate!
These words the dying Blouzelinda spoke,
And of the dead let none the will revoke:

"Mother, quoth she, let not the poultry need,
And give the goose wherewith to raise her breed:
Be these my sister's care—and every morn
Amid the ducklings let her scatter corn;
The sickly calf that's hous'd be sure to tend,
Feed him with milk, and from bleak colds defend.

Yet ere I die—see, mother, yonder shelf,
There secretly I've hid my worldly pelf.
Twenty good shillings in a rag I laid:
Be ten the parson's, for my sermon paid.
The rest is yours—my spinning-wheel and rake
Let Susan keep for her dear sister's sake;
My new straw hat, that's trimly lin'd with green
Let Peggy wear, for she's a damsel clean.
My leathern bottle, long in harvests try'd,
Be Grubbinol's—this silver ring beside:
Three silver pennies, and a nine pence bent,
A token kind Bumkinet is sent."

Thus spoke the maiden, while the mother
cry'd ;
And peaceful, like the harmless lamb, she died.
To show their love, the neighbours far and
near

Follow'd with wistful look the damsel's bier.
Sprigg'd rosemary the lads and lasses bore,
While dismally the parson walk'd before.
Upon her grave the rosemary they threw,
The daisy, butter-flower, and endive blue.

After the good man warn'd us from his text,
That none could tell whose turn would be the next ;

He said, that heaven would take her soul, no doubt,

And spoke the hour-glass in her praise—quite out.

To her sweet memory, flowery garlands strung,
O'er her now empty seat aloft were hung.
With wicker rods we fenc'd her tomb around,
'To ward from man and beast the hallow'd ground ;
Lest her new grave the parson's cattle raze,
For both his horse and cow the church-yard graze.

Now we trudg'd homeward to her mother's farm,

To drink new cyder mull'd, with ginger warm.
For Gaffer Treadwell told us, by the bye
" Excessive sorrow is exceeding dry."

While bullsbear horns upon their curled brow,
Or lasses with soft stroakings milk the cow ;
While paddling ducks the standing lake desire,
Or battening hogs roll in the sinking mire ;
While moles the crumbled earth in hillocks raise ;
So long shall swains tell Blouzelinda's praise.

'Thus wail'd the louts in melancholy strain,
'Till bonny Susan sneed across the plain.
They seiz'd the lass in apron cleau array'd,
And to the ale-house forc'd the willing maid ;
In ale and kisses they forget their cares,
And Susan Blouzelinda's loss repairs.

EPISTLE

To Mr. Pope, on his having finished his Translation of Homer's Iliad.

A WELCOME FROM GREECE.

LONG hast thou, friend ! been absent from my
soil,

Like patient Ithacus at siege of Troy ;
I have been witness of thy six years' toil,
Thy daily labours, and thy night's annoy,
Lost to thy native land, with great turmoil,
On the wide sea, oft threatening to destroy :
Methinks with thee I've trod Sigæan ground,
And heard the shores of Hellespont resound.

Did I not see thee when thou first sett'st sail
To seek adventures fair in Homer's land ?
Did I not see thy sinking spirits fail,
And wish thy bark had never left the strand ?
Ev'n in mid ocean often didst thou quail,

And oft lift up thy holy eye and hand,
Praying the virgin dear, and saintly choir,
Back to the port to bring thy bark entire.

Cheer up, my friend ! thy dangers now are o'er ;
Methinks—nay, sure the rising coasts appear :
Hark ! how the guns salute from either shore,
As thy trim vessel cuts the Thames so fair :
Shouts answering shouts from Kent and Essex
roar,

And bells break loud through every gust of
air :

Bonfires do blaze, and bones and cleavers ring,
As at the coming of some mighty king.

Now pass we Gravesend with a friendly wind,
And Tilbury's white fort, and long Black-
wall ;
Greenwich, where dwells the friend of human-
kind,

More visited than or her park or hall,
Withers the good, and (with him ever join'd)
Fareitious Disney, greet thee first of all ;
I see his chimney smoke, and hear him say,
Duke* ! that's the room for Pope, and that for Gay.

Come in, my friends ! here shall ye dine and lie,
And here shall breakfast, and here dine again ;
And sup and breakfast on (if ye comply),
For I have still some dozens of champaign :
His voice still lessens as the ship sails by ;
He waves his hand to bring us back in vain ;
For now I see, I see proud London's spires ;
Greenwich is lost, and Deptford dock retires.

Oh, what a concourse swarms on yonder quay !
'The sky re-echoes with new shouts of joy ;
By all this show, I ween, 'tis Lord Mayor's-
day ;

I hear the voice of trumpet and hautboy.—
No, now I see them near—Oh, these are they
Who come in crowds to welcome thee from Troy.

Hail to the bard, whom long as lost we mourn'd ;
From siege, from battle, and from storm re-turn'd !

Of goodly dames, and courteous knights, I view
The silken petticoat, and broider'd vest ;
Yea peers, and mighty dukes, with ribbands blue

(True blue, fair emblem of unstained breast).
Others I see, as noble, and more true,
By no court-badge distinguish'd from the rest :

First see I Methuen, of sincerest mind
As Arthur grave, as soft as womankind.

What lady's that, to whom he gently bends ?
Who knows not her ? ah ! those are Wortley's
eyes ;

* He was usually called ' Duke Disney.'

How art thou honour'd, number'd with her friends!

For she distinguishes the good and wise.
The sweet-tongu'd Murray near her side attends;

Now to my heart the glance of Howard flies;
Now Harvey, fair of face, I mark full well,
With thee youth's youngest daughter, sweet Lepell.

I see two lovely sisters, hand in hand,
The fair-hair'd Martha, and Teresa brown;
Madge Bellenden, the tallest of the land;
And smiling Mary, soft and fair as down.
Yonder I see the cheerful duchess stand.

For friendship, zeal, and blithesome humours known:
Whence that loud shout in such a hearty strain?
Why, all the Hamiltons are in her train.

See next the decent Scudamore advance,
With Winchelsea, still meditating song;
With her perhaps Miss Howe came there by chance,

Nor knows with whom or why she comes along.
Far off from these see Santlow, fam'd for dance;
And frolic Bicknell, and her sister young;
With other names by me not to be nam'd,
Much lov'd in private, not in public fam'd!

But now behold the female band retire,
And the shrill music of their voice is still'd!
Methinks I see fam'd Buckingham admire,
That in Troy's ruin thou hadst not been kill'd;

Sheffield, who knows to strike the living lyre
With hand judicious, like thy Homer skill'd,
Bathurst impetuous hastens to the coast,
Whom you and I strive who shall love the most.

See generous Burlington with goodly Bruce
(But Bruce comes wafted in a soft sedan);
Dan Prior next, belov'd by every Muse;
And friendly Congreve, unreprouchful man!
(Oxford by Cunningham hath sent excuse);
See hearty Watkins comes with cup and can;
And Lewis, who has never friend forsaken:
And Laughton whispering asks—Is Troy town taken?

Earl Warwick comes, of free and honest mind;
Bold, generous Craggs, whose heart was ne'er disguis'd:

Ah why, sweet St. John, cannot I thee find!
St. John, for every social virtue priz'd.—
Alas! to foreign climates he's confin'd,
Or else to see thee here I well surmis'd:
Thou too, my Swift, dost breathe Æolian air:
When wilt thou bring back wit and humour here?

Harcourt I see, for eloquence renown'd,
The mouth of justice, oracle of law!
Another Simon is beside him found,
Another Simon, like as straw to straw.
How Lansdown smiles, with lasting laurel crown'd?

What mitred prelate there commands our awe?
See Rochester approving nods his head.
And ranks one modern with the mighty dead.

Carleton and Chandos thy arrival grace;
Hammer, whose eloquence th' unbiass'd sways;
Harley, whose goodness opens in his face,
And shows his heart the seat where virtue stays,
Ned Blount advances next, with busy pace,
In haste, but sauntering, hearty in his ways;
I see the friendly Carylls come by dozens,
Their wives, their uncles, daughters, sons, and cousins.

Arbuthnot there I see, in physic's art,
As Galen learn'd or famed Hippocrate;
Whose company drives sorrow from the heart,
As all disease his medicines dissipate:
Kneller amid the triumph bears his part,
Who could (were mankind lost) anew create:
What can th' extent of his vast soul confine?
A painter, critic, engineer, divine!

Thee Jervas hails, robust and debonair,
Now have [we] conquer'd Homer, friends, he cries:
Darteneuf, grave joker, joyous Ford is there,
And wondering Maine, so fat with laughing eyes, (Gay, Maine, and Cheney, boon companions dear, Gay fat, Maine, fatter, Cheney huge of size)
Yea Dennis, Gildon (hearing thou hast riches),
And honest, hatless Cromwell, with red breeches.

O Wanley, whence com'st thou with shorten'd hair,
And visage from thy shelves with dust besprent
"Forsooth (quoth he) from placing Homer there,
For ancients to compyle is myne entente:
Of ancients only hath Lord Harley care;
But hither me hath my meekle lady sent:—
In manuscript of Greeke rede we thilke same,
But book yprint best plesyth myn gude dame."

Yonder I see, among th' expecting crowd,
Evans with laugh jocose, and tragic Young;
High-buskin'd Booth, grave Mawbert, wandering Frowde,
And Titcomb's belly waddles slow along.
See Digby faints at Southerne talking loud,
Yea Steele and Tickell mingle in the throng:
Tickell, whose skiff (in partnership they say)
Set forth for Greece, but founderd in the way.

Lo the two Doncastles in Berkshire known!
 Lo Bickford, Fortescue, of Devon land!
 Lo Tooker, Eckershall, Sykes, Rawlinson!
 See hearty Morley takes thee by the hand;
 Ayrs, Graham, Buckridge, joy thy voyage
 done;
 But who can count the leaves, the stars, the sand?
 Lo Stonor, Fenton, Caldwell, Ward, and Broome!
 Lo thousands more; But I want rhyme and
 room!

How lov'd! how honour'd thou! yet be not
 vain

And sure thou art not, for I hear thee say,
 All this, my friends, I owe to Homer's strain,
 On whose strong pinions I exalt my lay.
 What from contending cities did he gain?
 And what rewards his grateful country pay?
 None, none were paid—why then all this for
 me?
 These honours, Homer, had been just to thee.

SWEET WILLIAM'S FAREWELL TO BLACK-EYED SUSAN.

ALL in the downs the fleet was moor'd,
 The streamers waving in the wind,
 When black-ey'd Susan came aboard.
 Oh! where shall I my true-love find?
 Tell me, ye jovial sailors, tell me true,
 If my sweet William sails among the crew.
 William, who high upon the yard
 Rock'd with the billow to and fro,
 Soon as her well-known voice he heard,
 He sigh'd, and cast his eyes below:
 The cord slides swiftly through his glowing
 hands,
 And (quick as lightning) on the deck he stands.

So the sweet lark, high pois'd in air,
 Shuts close his pinions to his breast
 ('If chance his mate's shrill call he hear)
 And drops at once into her nest.
 The noblest captain in the British fleet
 Might envy William's lip those kisses sweet.

O Susan, Susan, lovely dear,
 My vows shall ever true remain;
 Let me kiss off that falling tear;
 We only part to meet again.
 Change, as ye list, ye winds; my heart shall be
 The faithful compass that still points to thee.

Believe not what the landmen say,
 Who tempt with doubts thy constant mind.
 They'll tell thee, sailors, when away,
 In every port a mistress find:
 Yee, yes, believe them when they tell thee so,
 For thou art present wheresoe'er I go.

If to fair India's coast we sail,
 Thy eyes are seen in diamonds bright,
 Thy breath is Afric's spicy gale,
 Thy skin is ivory so white.
 Thus every beauteous object that I view,
 Wakes in my soul some charm of lovely Sue.

Though battle call me from thy arms,
 Let not my pretty Susan mourn;
 Though cannons roar, yet, safe from harms,
 William shall to his dear return.
 Love turns aside the balls that round me fly,
 Lest precious tears should drop from Susan's
 eye.

The boatswain gave the dreadful word,
 The sails their swelling bosom spread;
 No longer must she stay aboard:
 They kiss'd, she sigh'd, he hung his head.
 Her lessening boat unwilling rows to land:
 Adieu! she cries: and wav'd her lily hand.

A BALLAD.

'T WAS when the seas were roaring
 With hollow blasts of wind;
 A damsel lay deploring,
 All on a rock reclined.
 Wide o'er the foaming billows
 She cast a wistful look;
 Her head was crown'd with willows,
 That trembled o'er the brook.

Twelve months are gone and over,
 And nine long tedious days.
 Why didst thou, venturous lover,
 Why didst thou trust the seas;
 Cease, cease, thou cruel ocean,
 And let my lover rest:
 Ah! what's thy troubled motion
 To that within my breast?

The merchant robb'd of pleasure,
 Sees tempests in despair;
 But what's the loss of treasure,
 To losing of my dear?
 Should you some coast be laid on,
 Where gold and diamonds grow,
 You'd find a richer maiden,
 But none that loves you so.

How can they say that nature
 Has nothing made in vain;
 Why then beneath the water
 Should hideous rocks remain?
 No eyes the rocks discover,
 That lurk beneath the deep,
 To wreck the wandering lover,
 And leave the maid to weep.

All melancholy lying,
 Thus wail'd she for her dear;
 Repay'd each blast with sighing,
 Each billow with a tear;
 When o'er the white wave stooping,
 His floating corpse she spy'd;
 Then, like a lilly drooping,
 She bow'd her head, and dy'd.

THE LADY'S LAMENTATION.

A BALLAD.

PHYLLIDA, that lov'd to dream
 In the grove, or by the stream;
 Sigh'd on velvet pillow.
 What alas! should fill her head,
 But a fountain, or a mead,
 Water and a willow?

Love in cities never dwells,
 He delights in rural cells
 Which sweet woodbine covers.
 What are your assemblies then?
 There, 'tis true, we see more men;
 But much fewer lovers.

Oh, how chang'd the prospect grows!
 Flocks and herds to fops and beaux,
 Coxcombs without number!
 Moon and stars that shone so bright,
 To the torch and waxen light,
 And whole nights at ombre.

Pleasant as it is, to hear
 Scandal tickling in our ear,
 Ev'n of our own mothers;
 In the chit-chat of the day,
 To us is paid, when we're away,
 What we lent to others.

Though the favourite toast I reign;
 Wine, they say, that prompts the vain,
 Heightens defamation.
 Must I live 'twixt spite and fear,
 Every day grow handsomer,
 And lose my reputation?

Thus the fair to sighs gave way,
 Her empty purse beside her lay.
 Nymph, ah, cease thy sorrow.
 Though curst fortune frown to-night,
 This odious town can give delight,
 If you win to-morrow.

THE MISER AND PLUTUS.

THE wind was high, the window shakes,
 With sudden start the miser wakes;
 Along the silent room he stalks,
 Looks back, and trembles as he walks.

Each lock and every bolt he tries,
 In every creek and corner pries;
 Then opes the chest with treasure stor'd,
 And stands in rapture o'er his hoard.
 But now, with sudden qualms possess'd,
 He wrings his hands, he beats his breast;
 By conscience stung, he wildly stares,
 And thus his guilty soul declares:

"Had the deep earth her stores confin'd,
 This heart had known sweet peace of mind,
 But virtue's sold. Good gods! what price
 Can recompense the pangs of vice!
 O bane of good! seducing cheat!
 Can man, weak man, thy power defeat?
 Gold banish'd honour from the mind,
 And only left the name behind;
 Gold sow'd the world with every ill;
 Gold taught the murderer's sword to kill:
 'I was gold instructed coward hearts
 In treachery's more pernicious arts.
 Who can recount the mischiefs o'er?
 Virtue resides on earth no more!"

He spoke, and sigh'd. In angry mood
 Plutus, his god, before him stood.
 The miser, trembling, lock'd his chest:
 The vision frown'd, and thus address'd:
 "Whence is this vile ungrateful rant,
 Each sordid rascal's daily cant?
 Did I, base wretch! corrupt mankind?
 The fault's in thy rapacious mind.
 Because my blessings are abus'd,
 Must I be censur'd, curs'd, accus'd?
 Ev'n virtue's self by knaves is made
 A cloak to carry on the trade;
 And power (when lodg'd in their possession)
 Grows tyranny, and rank oppression.
 Thus, when the villain crams his chest,
 Gold is the canker of the breast;
 'Tis avarice, insolence, and pride,
 And every shocking vice beside.
 But, when to virtuous hands 'tis given,
 It blesses, like the dews of heaven:
 Like heaven, it hears the orphan's cries,
 And wipes the tears from widows' eyes.
 Their crimes on gold shall misers lay,
 Who pawn'd their sordid souls for pay?
 Let bravos, then, when blood is spilt,
 Upbraid the passive soul with guilt."

THE PAINTER WHO PLEASED NOBODY AND EVERY BODY.

LEST men suspect your tale untrue,
 Keep probability in view.
 The traveller leaping o'er those bounds,
 The credit of his book confounds,
 Who with his tongue hath armies routed,
 Makes even his real courage doubted.
 But flattery never seems absurd;
 The flatter'd always take your word:
 Impossibilities seem just;
 They take the strongest praise on trust.

Hyperboles, though ne'er so great,
Will still come short of self-conceit.

So very like a painter drew,
That every eye the picture knew,
He hit complexion, feature, air,
So just, the life itself was there.
No flattery with his colours laid,
To bloom restor'd the faded maid ;
He gave each muscle all its strength ;
The mouth, the chin, the nose's length ;
His honest pencil touch'd with truth,
And mark'd the date of age and youth.

He lost his friends, his practice fail'd ;
Truth should not always be reveal'd :
In dusty piles his pictures lay,
For no one sent the second pay.
Two bustos, fraught with every grace,
A Venus' and Apollo's face,
He plac'd in view ; resolv'd to please,
Whoever sat he drew from these,
From these corrected every feature,
And spirited each awkward creature.
All things were set ; the hour was come,
His pallet ready o'er his thumb.
My lord appeared ; and seated right,
In proper attitude and light,
The painter look'd, he sketched the piece,
Then dipped his pencil, talk'd of Greece,
Of Titian's tints, of Guido's air ;
Those eyes, my lord, the spirit there
Might well a Raphael's hand require,
To give them all the native fire ;
The features, fraught with sense and wit,
You'll grant, are very hard to hit ;
But yet with patience you shall view
As much as paint and art can do."

Observe the work. My Lord replied,
"Till now I thought my mouth was wide ;
Besides, my nose is somewhat long :
Dear Sir, for me, 'tis far too young."

"Oh ! pardon me, the artist cried ;
In this we painters must decide.
The piece ev'n common eyes must strike,
I warrant it extremely like."

My Lord examin'd it anew
No looking-glass seem'd half so true.

A lady came with borrow'd grace
He from his Venus form'd her face.
Her lover praised the painter's art ;
So like the picture in his heart !
To every age some charm he lent ;
Ev'n beauties were almost content.

Through all the town his art they praised ;
His custom grew, his price was raised.
Had he the real likeness shown,
Would any man the picture own ?
But, when thus happily he wrought,
Each found the likeness in his thought.

THE SICK MAN AND THE ANGEL.

"Is there no hope?" the sick man said.
The silent doctor shook his head,

3 D

And took his leave with signs of sorrow,
Despairing of his fee to-morrow.

When thus the man, with gasping breath ;
"I feel the chilling wound of death.

Since I must bid the world adieu,
Let me my former life review.

I grant my bargains well were made,
But all men over-reach in trade ;

'Tis self-defence in each profession :
Sure self-defence is no transgression.

The little portion in my hands,
By good security on lands

Is well increas'd. If, unawares,

My justice to myself and heirs

Hath let my debtor rot in jail,

For want of good sufficient bail ;

If I, by writ, or bond or deed,

Reduc'd a family to need ;

My will hath made the world amends ;

My hope on charity depends ;

When I am number'd with the dead,

And all my pious gifts are read,

By heaven and earth 'twill then be known

My charities were amply shown."

An angel came. "Ah, friend! (he cried).

No more in flattering hope confide.

Can thy good deeds in former times

Outweigh the balance of thy crimes ?

What widow or what orphan prays

To crown thy life with length of days ?

A pious action's in thy power,

Embrace with joy the happy hour.

Now, while you draw the vital air,

Prove your intention is sincere :

This instant give a hundred pound :

Your neighbours want, and you abound."

"But why such haste, the sick man whines ;

Who knows as yet what Heaven designs ?

Perhaps I may recover still,

That sum and more are in my will."

"Fool, says the vision, now 'tis plain

Your life, your soul, your Heaven, was gain.

From every side, with all your might,

You scrap'd, and scrap'd beyond your right ;

And after death would fain atone,

By giving what is not your own."

"While there is life, there's hope, he cried ;

Then why such haste?" so groan'd and died.

THE JUGGLERS.

A JUGGLER long through all the town

Had raised his fortune and renown ;

You'd think (so far his art transcends)

The devil at his fingers' ends.

Vice heard his fame, she read his bill ;

Convinc'd of his inferior skill,

She sought his booth, and from the crowd

Defy'd the man of art aloud.

"Is this then he so famous for sleight ?

Can this slow bungler cheat your sight ?

Dares he with me dispute the prize ?

I leave it to impartial eyes."

Provoked, the Juggler cried, "'Tis done;
In science I submit to none."

Thus said, the cups and balls he played;
By turns this here, that there, conveyed.
The cards, obedient to his words,
Are by a flip turned to birds.

His little boxes change the grain:
Trick after trick deludes the train.
He shakes his bag, he shows all fair;
His fingers spread, and nothing there;
Then bids it rain with showers of gold;
And now his ivory eggs are told;
But, when from thence the hen he draws,
Amazed spectators hum applause.

Vice now stept forth, and took the place,
With all the forms of his grimace.

"This magic looking-glass, she cries,
(There, hand it round) will charm your eyes."
Each eager eye the sight desired,
And every man himself admired.

Next, to a senator addressing,
"See this bank-note; observe the blessing.
Breathe on the bill. Heigh, pass! 'Tis gone."
Upon his lips a padlock shone.

A second puff the magic broke;
The padlock vanished and he spoke.

Twelve bottles ranged upon the board
All full, with heady liquor stored,
By clean conveyance disappear,
And now two bloody swords are there.

A purse she to a thief exposed;
At once his ready fingers closed.
He opes his fist, the treasure's fled;
He sees a halter in its stead.

She bids ambition hold a wand;
He grasps a hatchet in his hand.

A box of charity she shows.
"Blow here;" and a church-warden blows.
'Tis vanish'd with conveyance neat,
And on the table smokes a treat.

She shakes the dice, the board she knocks,
And from all pockets fills her box.

She next a meagre rake address.
"This picture see; her shape, her breast!
What youth, and what inviting eyes!
Hold her, and have her." With surprise,
His hand exposed a box of pills,
And a loud laugh proclaimed his ills.

A counter, in a miser's hand,
Grew twenty guineas at command.
She bids his heir the sum retain,
And 'tis a counter now again.

A guinea with her touch you see
Take every shape but charity;
And not one that you saw, or drew,
But changed from what was first in view.

The Juggler now, in grief of heart,
With this submission owned her art.
"Can I such watchless sleight withstand!

How practice hath improved your hand!
But now and then I cheat the throng;
You every day, and all day long."

THE HARE AND MANY FRIENDS.

FRIENDSHIP, like love, is but a name,
Unless to one you stint the flame.
The child, whom many fathers share,
Hath seldom known a father's care.
'Tis thus in friendships; who depend
On many, rarely find a friend.

A hare who, in a civil way,
Complied, with every thing, like Gay,
Was known by all the bestial train
Who haunt the wood, or graze the plain;
Her care was never to offend;
And every creature was her friend.

As forth she went at early dawn,
To taste the dew-besprinkled lawn,
Behind she hears the hunter's cries,
And from the deep-mouthed thunder flies.
She starts, she stops, she pants for breath;
She hears the near advance of death;
She doubles to mislead the hound,
And measures back her mazy round;
Till, fainting in the public way,
Half dead with fear she gasping lay.

What transport in her bosom grew,
When first the horse appeared in view!

"Let me, says she, your back ascend,
And owe my safety to a friend.
You know my feet betray my flight;
To friendship every burden's light."

The horse replied, "Poor honest puss,
It grieves my heart to see thee thus:
Be comforted, relief is near,
For all your friends are in the rear."

She next the stately buli implor'd;
And thus replied the mighty lord;
"Since every beast alive can tell
That I sincerely wish you well,
I may without offence, pretend
To take the freedom of a friend.
Love calls me hence; a favourite cow
Expects me near yon barley-mow;
And, when a lady's in the case,
You know, all other things give place.
To leave you thus might seem unkind;
But see, the goat is just behind."

The goat remarked "her pulse was high
Her languid head, her heavy eye:
My back, says he, may do you harm;
The sheep's at hand, and wool is warm."

The sheep was feeble, and complained
"His sides a load of wool sustained;
Said, he was slow, confessed his fears;
For hounds eat sheep as well as hares."

She now the trotting calf addressed,
To save from death a friend distressed.

"Shall I, says he, of tender age,
In this important care engage?
Older and abler pass'd you by;
How strong are those! how weak am I!
Should I presume to bear you hence,
Those friends of mine may take offence.

Excuse me, then ; you know my heart ;
But dearest friends, alas ! must part.
How shall we all lament ! Adieu ;
For see the hounds are just in view."

THE SPLEEN.

[Extracts.]

To cure the mind's wrong bias, spleen,
Some recommend the bowling-green ;
Some, hilly walks ; all, exercise ;
Fling but a stone, the giant dies ;
Laugh and be well. Monkeys have been Extreme good doctors for the spleen ;
And kitten, if the humour hit,
Has harlequin'd away the fit.
* * * *

Music has charms, we all may find,
Ingratiate deeply with the mind.
When art does sound's high pow'r advance,
To music's pipe the passions dance ;
Motions unwill'd its pow'rs have shown,
Tarantulated by a tune.
Many have held the soul to be
Nearly allied to harmony.
Her have I known indulging grief.
And shunning company's relief,
Unveil her face, and, looking round,
Own by neglecting sorrow's wound,
The consanguinity of sound.

In rainy days keep double guard,
Or spleen will surely be too hard ;
Which, like those fish by sailors met,
Fly highest, while their wings are wet.
In such dull weather, so unfit
To enterprise a work of wit,
When clouds one yard of azure sky,
That's fit for simile, deny,
I dress my face with studious looks.
And shorten tedious hours with books.
* * * *

I never game, and rarely bet,
Am loth to lend, or run in debt.
No computer-writes me agitate ;
Who moralizing pass the gate,
And there mine eyes on spendthrifts turn,
Who vainly o'er their bondage mourn.
Wisdom, before beneath their care,
Pays her upbraiding visits there,
And forces folly through the grate,
Her panegyric to repeat.
This view, profusely when inclin'd,
Enters a caveat in the mind :
Experience join'd with common sense,
To mortals is a providence.
* * * *

Yet philosophic love of ease
I suffer not to prove disease,
But rise up in the virtuous cause
Of a free press and equal laws.
The press restrain'd ! nefarious thought !
In vain our sires have nobly fought :
While free from force the press remains,
Virtue and freedom cheer our plains,
And learning largesses bestows,
And keeps uncensured open house.
We to the nation's public mart
Our works of wit, and schemes of art,
And philosophic goods this way,
Like water-carriage, cheap convey.
This tree, which knowledge so affords,
Inquisitors with flaming swords
From lay approach with zeal defend,
Lest their own paradise should end.
The press from her fecundous womb
Brought forth the arts of Greece and Rome ;
Her offspring, skilled in logic war,
Truth's banner waved in open air ;
The monster superstition fled,
And hid in shades its Gorgon head ;
And lawless power, the long-kept field,
By reason quelled, was forc'd to yield.
This nurse of arts, and freedom's fence,
To chain, is treason against sense ;
And, liberty, thy thousand tongues
None silence, who design no wrongs :
For those, who use the gag's restraint,
First rob, before they stop complaint.

Since disappointment galls within,
And subjugates the soul to spleen.
Most schemes, as money-snares, I hate,
And bite not at projectors' bait ;
Sufficient wrecks appear each day,
And yet fresh fools are cast away.
Ere well the bubbled can turn round,
Their painted vessel runs aground ;
Or in deep seas it oversets
By a fierce hurricane of debts ;
Or helm directors in one trip,
Freight first embezzled, sink the ship.
* * * *

Contentment, parent of delight,
So much a stranger to our sight,
Say, goddess, in what happy place
Mortals behold thy blooming face ;
Thy gracious auspices impart,
And for thy temple choose my heart.
They, whom thou deignest to inspire,
Thy science learn, to bound desire ;
By happy alchymy of mind
They turn to pleasure all they find ;
They both disdain in outward mien
The grave and solemn garb of spleen,
And meretricious arts of dress,
To feign a joy, and hide distress ;
Unmoved when the rude tempest blows.
Without an opiate they repose ;
And, covered by your shield, defy
The whizzing shafts, that round them fly :

Nor meddling with the god's affairs,
Concern themselves with distant cares ;
But place their bliss in mental rest,
And feast upon the good possessed.

In one, no object of our sight,
Immutable, and infinite,
Who can't be cruel or unjust,
Calm and resign'd, I fix my trust ;
To him my past and present state
I owe, and must my future fate.
A stranger into life I'm come,
Dying may be our going home,
Transported here by angry fate,
The convicts of a prior state.
Hence I no anxious thoughts bestow
On matters I can never know ;
Through life's foul way, like vagrant passed,
He'll grant a settlement at last,
And with sweet ease the wearied crown,
By leave to lay his being down.
If doom'd to dance th' eternal round
Of life no sooner lost but found,
And dissolution soon to come,
Like sponge, wipes out life's present sum,
But can't our state of pow'r bereave
An endless series to receive ;
Then, if hard dealt with here by Fate,
We balance in another state,
And consciousness must go along,
And sign th' acquittance for the wrong.
He for his creatures must decree
More happiness than misery,
Or he supposed to create.
Curious to try, what 'tis to hate :
And do an act, which rage infers,
'Cause lameness halts, or blindness errs.

THOMAS TICKELL.

Born 1686.—Died 1740.

ON THE DEATH OF MR. ADDISON.

IF dumb too long, the drooping muse hath staid,
And left her debt to Addison unpaid,
Blame not her silence, Warwick, but bemoan,
And judge, oh judge, my bosom by your own.
What mourner ever felt poetic fires !
Slow comes the verse that real woe inspires :
Grief unaffected suits but ill with art,
Or flowing numbers with a bleeding heart.
Can I forget the dismal night that gave
My soul's best part for ever to the grave !
How silent did his old companions tread,
By midnight lamps, the mansions of the dead,
Through breathing statues then unheeded things,
Through rows of warriors, and through walks of kings !
What awe did the slow solemn knell inspire ;
The pealing organ, and the pausing choir ;

The duties by the lawn-rebed prelate paid ;
And the last words that dust to dust conveyed !
While speechless o'er thy closing grave we bend,
Accept these tears, thou dear departed friend.
Oh, gone for ever ; take this long adieu ;
And sleep in peace, next thy lov'd Montague.
To strew fresh laurels, let the task be mine,
A frequent pilgrim, at thy sacred shrine ;
Mine with true sighs thy absence to bemoan,
And grave with faithful epitaphs thy stone.
If e'er from me thy loved memorial part,
May shame afflict this alienated heart ;
Of thee forgetful if I form a song,
My lyre be broken, and untun'd my tongue.
My grief be doubled from thy image free,
And mirth a torment, unchastised by thee.

Oft let me range the gloomy aisles alone,
Sad luxury ! to vulgar minds unknown,
Along the walls where speaking marbles show
What worthies form the hallowed mould below ;
Proud names, who once the reins of empire
held ;

In arms who triumphed ; or in arts excelled ;
Chiefs, graced with scars, and prodigal of blood ;
Stern patriots, who for sacred freedom stood ;
Just men, by whom impartial laws were given ;
And saints who taught, and led, the way to
heaven ;

Ne'er to these chambers, where the mighty rest,
Since their foundation, came a nobler guest ;
Nor e'er was to the bowers of bliss conveyed
A fairer spirit or more welcome shade.

In what new region, to the just assigned,
What new employments please th' unbodied mind ?
A winged Virtue, through th' ethereal sky,
From world to world unwearied does he fly ?
Or curious trace the long laborious maze
Of Heaven's decrees, where wondering angels gaze ?

Does he delight to hear bold seraphs tell
How Michael battled, and the dragon fell ;
Or, mixed with milder cherubim, to glow
In hymns of love, not ill essayed below ?
Or dost thou warn poor mortals left behind,
A task well suited to thy gentle mind ?
Oh ! if sometimes thy spotless form descend :
To me thy aid, thou guardian genius, lend !
When rage misguides me, or when fear alarms,
When pain distresses, or when pleasure charms,
In silent whisperings purer thoughts impart,
And turn from ill, a frail and feeble heart ;
Lead through the paths thy virtue trod before,
Till bliss shall join, nor death can part us more.

That awful form, which, so the Heavens decree,
Must still be lov'd and still deplored by me ;
In nightly visions seldom fails to rise,
Or roused by fancy, meets my waking eyes.
If business calls, or crowded courts invite,
Th' unblemished statesman seems to strike my
sight ;

If in the stage I seek to sooth my care,
I meet his soul which breathes in Cato there ;

If pensive to the rural shades I rove,
His shape o'ertakes me in the lonely grove ;
'Twas there of just and good he reasoned strong,
Cleared some great truth, or raised some serious
song ;

There patient showed us the wise course to steer,
A candid censor, and a friend severe ;
There taught us how to live ; and (oh ! too
high

The price for knowledge) taught us how to die,
Thou hill, whose brow the antique structures
grace,

Rear'd by bold chiefs of Warwick's noble race,
Why, once so lov'd, when'er thy bower appears,
O'er my dim eyeballs glance the sudden tears !
How sweet were once thy prospects fresh and
fair,

Thy sloping walks, and unpolluted air !
How sweet the glooms beneath thy aged trees,
Thy noontide shadow, and thy evening breeze !
His image thy forsaken bowers restore ;
Thy walks and airy prospects charm no more ;
No more the summer in thy glooms allayed,
Thy evening breezes, and thy noon-day shade.

From other hills, however fortune frowned ;
Some refuge in the muse's art I found :
Reluctant now I touch the trembling string,
Bereft of him, who taught me how to sing ;
And these sad accents, murmured o'er his urn,
Betray that absence they attempt to mourn.
O ! must I then (now fresh my bosom bleeds,
And Craggs in death to Addison succeeds)
The verse, begun to one lost friend, prolong,
And weep a second in th' unfinish'd song !

'These works divine, which on his death-bed laid,

To thee, O Craggs, th' expiring sage convey'd,
Great, but ill-omen'd, monument of fame,
Nor he surviv'd to give, nor thou to claim.
Swift after him thy social spirit flies,
And close to his, how soon ! thy coffin lies.
Blest pair ! whose union future bards shall tell
In future tongues : each other's boast ! farewell.
Farewell ! whom joined in fame, in friendship tried,

No chance could sever, nor the grave divide.

COLIN AND LUCY.

A BALLAD.

OF Leinster, fam'd for maidens fair,
Bright Lucy was the grace ;
Nor e'er did Liffy's limpid stream
Reflect so sweet a face :
Till luckless love, and pining care,
Impair'd her rosy hue,
Her coral lips, and damask cheeks,
And eyes of glossy blue.

Oh ! have you seen a lily pale,
When beating rains descend,
So droop'd the slow-consuming maid,
Her life now near its end.

By Lucy warn'd, of flattering swains
Take heed, ye easy fair :
Of vengeance due to broken vows,
Ye perjurd swains, beware.

Three times, all in the dead of night,
A bell was heard to ring ;
And shrieking at her window thrice,
The raven flapp'd his wing.
Too well the lovelorn maiden knew
The solemn boding sound :
And thus, in dying words, bespoke
The virgins weeping round :

" I hear a voice, you cannot hear,
Which says, I must not stay ;
I see a hand, you cannot see,
Which beckons me away.

By a false heart, and broken vows,
In early youth I die :
Was I to blame, because his bride
Was thrice as rich as I ?

" Ah, Colin ! give not her thy vows,
Vows due to me alone :
Nor thou, fond maid, receive his kiss,
Nor think him all thy own.
To-morrow, in the church to wed,
Impatient, both prepare !
But know, fond maid ; and know, false man,
That Lucy will be there !

" Then bear my corse, my comrades, bear,
This bridegroom blithe to meet,
He in his wedding-trim so gay,
I in my winding-sheet."
She spoke, she died, her corse was borne,
The bridegroom blithe to meet,
He in his wedding-trim so gay,
She in her winding-sheet.

Then what were perjurd Colin's thoughts ?
How were these nuptials kept ?
The bridesmen flock'd round Lucy dead,
And all the village wept.
Confusion, shame, remorse, despair,
At once his bosom swell :
The damps of death bedew'd his brow,
He shook, he groan'd, he fell.

From the vain bride, ah, bride no more !
The varying crimson fled,
When, stretch'd before her rival's corse,
She saw her husband dead.
Then to his Lucy's new-made grave,
Conveyed by trembling swains,
One mould with her, beneath one sod,
For ever he remains.

Of't at this grave, the constant hind
And plighted maid are seen ;
With garlands gay, and true-love knots,
They deck the sacred green :
But, swain forsworn, who'er thou art,
This hallow'd spot forbear ;
Remember Colin's dreadful fate,
And fear to meet him there.

THE CHASE.

[From Book II.]

Instinct—Autumn preparations for the chase.

NOW will it less delight th' attentive sage
T' observe that Instinct, which unerring guides
The brutal race, which mimics reason's lore,
And oft transcends: Heaven-taught the roebuck swift

Loiters at ease before the driving pack
And mocks their vain pursuit; nor far he flies,
But checks his ardour, till the steaming scent
That freshens on the blade provokes their rage.
Urg'd to their speed, his weak deluded foes
Soon flag fatigued; strained to excess each
nerve,

Each slackened sinew fails: they pant, they foam;

Then o'er the lawn he bounds, o'er the high hills

Stretches secure, and leaves the scattered crowd
To puzzle in the distant vale below.

'Tis Instinct that directs the jealous hare
To choose her soft abode. With step reversed
She forms the doubling maze; then, ere the morn

Peeps through the clouds, leaps to her close recess.

As wandering shepherds on th' Arabian plains
No settled residence observe, but shift
Their moving camp, now, on some cooler hill
With cedars crowned, court the refreshing breeze:

And then, below, where trickling streams distil
From some penurious source, their thirst allay.
And feed their fainting flocks: so the wise hares

Oft quit their seats, lest some more curious eye
Should mark their haunts, and by dark treacherous wiles

Plot their destruction; or perchance in hopes
Of plenteous forage, near the ranker mead,
Or matted blade, wary and close they sit.

When spring shines forth, season of love and
joy,

In the moist marsh, 'mong beds of rushes hid,
They cool their boiling blood. When summer suns

Bake the cleft earth, to thick wide-waving fields

Of corn full-grown, they lead their helpless
young:

But when autumnal torrents and fierce rains
Deluge the vale, in the dry crumbling bank
Their forms they delve, and cautiously avoid
The dripping covert: yet when winter's cold
Their limbs benumbs, thither with speed returned

In the long grass they skulk, or shrinking creep
Among the withered leaves, thus changing still,
As fancy prompts them, or as food invites.

But every season carefully observed,
Th' inconstant winds, the fickle element,
The wise experienced huntsman soon may find
His subtle, various game, nor waste in vain
His tedious hours, till his impatient hounds,
With disappointment vex'd, each springing lark
Babbling pursue, far scattered o'er the fields.

Now golden Autumn from her open lap
Her fragrant bounties showers; the fields are shorn;

Inwardly smiling, the proud farmer views
The rising pyramids that grace his yard,
And counts his large increase; his barns are stored

And groaning staddles bend beneath their load.
All now is free as air, and the gay pack

In the rough bristly stubbles range unblam'd:
No widow's tears o'erflow, no secret curse

Swells in the farmer's breast, which his pale lips
Trembling conceal, by his fierce landlord aw'd:

But courteous now he levels every fence.
Joins in the common cry, and halloos loud.

Charm'd with the rattling thunder of the field.
Oh bear me, some kind power invisible!

To that extended lawn, where the gay court
View the swift racers, stretching to the goal;

Games more renown'd and a far nobler train,
Than proud Elean fields could boast of old.

Oh! were a Theban lyre not wanting here,
And Pindar's voice, to do their merit right!

Or to those spacious plains, where the strain'd
eye,

In the wide prospect lost, beholds at last
Sarum's proud spire, that o'er the hills ascends,

And pierces through the clouds. Or to thy downs,

Fair Cotswold, where the well-breathed beagle climbs

With matchless speed thy green aspiring brow,
And leaves the lagging multitude behind.

Hail, gentle Dawn! mild blushing goddess,
hail!

Rejoic'd I see thy purple mantle spread
O'er half the skies, gems pave thy radiant way

And orient pearls from every shrub depend.
Farewell, Cleora; here deep sunk in down

Slumber secure, with happy dreams amus'd
Till grateful steams shall tempt thee to receive

Thy early meal, or thy officious maids,
The toilet plac'd, shall urge thee to perform

Th' important work. Me other joys invite.
The horn sonorous calls, the pack awak'd

Their mattins chaunt, nor brook my long delay.
My courser hears their voice; see there, with ears

And tail erect, neighing he paws the ground;
Fierce rapture kindles in his reddening eyes,

And boils in every vein. As captive boys
Cov'd by the ruling rod and haughty frowns

Of pedagogues severe, from their hard tasks

If once dismissed, no limits can contain
 The tumult rais'd within their little breasts,
 But give a loose to all their frolic play :
 So from their kennel rush the joyous pack ;
 A thousand wanton gaieties express
 Their inward ecstasy, their pleasing sport
 Once more indulged, and liberty restored.
 The rising sun, that o'er th' horizon peeps,
 As many colours from their glossy skins
 Beaming reflects, as paint the various bow
 When April showers descend. Delightful scene !
 Where all around is gay, men, horses, dogs,
 And in each smiling countenance appears
 Fresh blooming health, and universal joy.

RICHARD WEST.

AD AMICOS*.

Yes, happy youths, on Camus' sedgy side,
 You feel each joy that friendship can divide ;
 Each realm of science and of art explore,
 And with the ancient blend the modern lore.
 Studious alone to learn whate'er may tend
 To raise the genius, or the heart to mend ;
 Now pleased along the cloister'd walk you rove,
 And trace the verdant mazes of the grove,
 Where social oft, and oft alone, ye chuse
 To catch the zephyr, and to court the muse.
 Mean time at me (while all devoid of art
 These lines give back the image of my heart)
 At me the power that comes or soon or late,
 Or aims, or seems to aim, the dart of fate ;
 From you remote, methinks, alone I stand,
 Like some sad exile in a desert land :
 Around no friends their lenient care to join
 In mutual warmth, and mix their hearts with mine.
 Or real pains, or those which fancy raise,
 For ever blot the sunshine of my days ;
 To sickness still, and still to grief a prey,
 Health turns from me her rosy face away.
 Just heav'n ! what sin, ere life begins to bloom,
 Devotes my head untimely to the tomb ?
 Did e'er this hand against a brother's life
 Drag the dire bowl, or point the murd'rous
 knife ?
 Did e'er this tongue the slanderer's tale pro-
 claim,
 Or madly violate my Maker's name ?

* An imitation of Elegy V. 3rd book of Tibullus.

Did e'er this heart betray a friend or foe,
 Or know a thought but all the world might
 know ?

As yet just started from the lists of time,
 My growing years have scarcely told their prime ;

Useless, as yet, through life I've idly run,
 No pleasures tasted, and few duties done.
 Ah, who, ere autumn's mellowing suns appear,
 Would pluck the promise of the vernal year ;
 Or, ere the grapes their purple hue betray,
 Tear the crude cluster from the mourning spray ?
 Stern Power of Fate, whose ebon sceptre rules
 The Stygian deserts and Cimmerian pools,
 Forbear, nor rashly smite my youthful heart,
 A victim yet unworthy of thy dart ;
 Ah, stay till age shall blast my withering face,
 Shake in my head, and falter in my pace ;
 Then aim the shaft, then meditate the blow,
 And to the dead my willing shade shall go.

How weak is man to Reason's judging eye !
 Born in this moment, in the next we die ;
 Part mortal clay, and part ethereal fire,
 Too proud to creep, too humble to aspire.
 In vain our plans of happiness we raise,
 Pain is our lot, and patience is our praise ;
 Wealth, lineage, honours, conquest, or a throne,
 Are what the wise would fear to call their own.
 Health is at best a vain precarious thing,
 And fair-fac'd youth is ever on the wing :
 'Tis like the stream, beside whose wat'ry bed
 Some blooming plant exalts his flow'ry head,
 Nurs'd by the wave the spreading branches
 rise,

Shade all the ground, and flourish to the skies :
 The waves the while beneath in secret flow,
 And undermine the hollow bank below ;
 Wide and more wide the waters urge their way,
 Bare all the roots, and on their fibres prey.
 Too late the plant bewails his foolish pride,
 And sinks, untimely, in the whelming tide.

But why repine ? Does life deserve my sigh ?
 Few will lament my loss whene'er I die.
 For those the wretches I despise or hate,
 I neither envy nor regard their fate.
 For me, whene'er all-conquering Death shall spread

His wings around my unrepining head,
 I care not ; though this face be seen no more, *
 The world will pass as cheerful as before ;
 Bright as before the day-star will appear,
 The fields as verdant, and the skies as clear
 Nor storms nor comets will my doom declare,
 Nor signs on earth, nor portents in the air ;
 Unknown and silent will depart my breath,
 Nor Nature e'er take notice of my death.
 Yet some there are (ere spent my vital days)
 Within whose breasts my tomb I wish to raise.
 Lov'd in my life, lamented in my end,
 Their praise would crown me as their precepts
 mend ;

To them may these fond lines my name endear,
 Not from the Poet but the Friend sincere.

RICHARD SAVAGE.

Born 1698.—Died 1743.

THE VOLUNTEER LAUREAT.

A poem on her Majesty's Birth-day, 1731-2.

No. I.

Twice twenty tedious moons have rolled away.
Since hope, kind flatterer ! tuned my pensive lay,
Whispering, that you, who raised me from despair,
Meant, by your smiles, to make life worth my care ;
With pitying hand an orphan's tears to screen,
And o'er the motherless extend the queen.
'Twill be—the prophet guides the poet's strain !
Grief never touch'd a heart like your's in vain :
Heaven gave you power, because you love to bless ;

And pity, when you feel it, is redress.
Two fathers join'd to rob my claim of one !
My mother too thought fit to have no son !
The senate next, whose aid the helpless own,
Forgot my infant wrongs, and mine alone !
Yet parents pityless, nor peers unkind,
Nor titles lost, nor woes mysterious join'd,
Strip me of hope—by Heav'n thus lowly laid,
To find a Pharaoh's daughter in the shade.

You cannot hear unmov'd, when wrongs implore,
Your heart is woman, though your mind be more ;
Kind, like the power who gave you to our prayers,
You would not lengthen life to sharpen cares ;
They who a barren leave to live bestow,
Snatch but from death to sacrifice to woe.
Hated by her from whom my life I drew,
Whence should I hope, if not from Heaven and you ?

Nor dare I groan beneath affliction's rod,
My queen my mother, and my father—God.
The pitying muses saw me wit pursue ;
A bastard-son, alas ! on that side too,
Did not your eyes exalt the poet's fire,
And what the muse denies, the queen inspire ?
While rising thus your heavenly soul to view,
I learn, how angels think, by copying you.

Great princess ! 'tis decreed—once every year
I march uncalled your Laureat Volunteer ;
Thus shall your poet his low genius raise,
And charm the world with truths too vast for praise.

Nor need I dwell on glories all your own,
Since surer means to tempt your smiles are known ;
Your poet shall allot your lord his part,
And paint him in his noblest throne—your heart.
Is there a greatness that adorns him best,
A rising wish, that ripens in his breast ?

Has he foremeant some distant age to bless,
Disarm oppression, or expel distress ?
Plans he some scheme to reconcile mankind,
People the seas, and busy every wind ?
Would he by pity the deceiv'd reclaim,
And smile contending factions into shame ?
Would his example lend his laws a weight,
And breathe his own soft morals o'er his state ?
The muse shall find it all, shall make it seen,
And teach the world his praise, to charm his queen.

Such be the annual truths my verse imparts,
Nor frown, fair favourite of a people's hearts !
Happy if, placed, perchance, beneath your eye,
My muse, unpensioned, might her pinions try ;
Fearless to fail, whilst you indulge her flame,
And bid me proudly boast your Laureat's name ;
Renobled thus by wreaths my queen bestows,
I lose all memory of wrongs and woes.

JONATHAN SWIFT.

Born 1667.—Died 1744.

ON THE DEATH OF DR. SWIFT.

OCCASIONED BY READING THE FOLLOWING MAXIM IN ROCHEFOUCAULT :

Dans l'adversité de nos meilleurs amis, nous trouvons toujours quelque chose qui ne nous déplaît pas.

" In the adversity of our best friends, we always find something that doth not displease us."

As Rochefoucault his maxims drew
From nature, I believe them true :
They argue no corrupted mind
In him : the fault is in mankind.

This maxim more than all the rest
Is thought too base for human breast :
" In all distresses of our friends,
We first consult our private ends ;
While nature, kindly bent to ease us,
Points out some circumstance to please us."

If this perhaps your patience move,
Let reason and experience prove.

We all behold with envious eyes
Our equals raised above our size.
Who would not at a crowded show
Stand high himself, keep others low ?
I love my friend as well as you :
But why should he obstruct my view ?
Then let me have the higher post ;
Suppose it but an inch at most.

If in a battle you should find
One, whom you love of all mankind,
Had some heroic action done,
A champion killed or trophy won ;
Rather than thus be over-tapt,
Would you not wish his laurels cropt ?
Dear honest Ned is in the gout,
Lies rack'd with pain, and you without :

How patiently you hear him groan !
How glad the case is not your own !

What poet would not grieve to see
His brother write as well as he ?
But, rather than they should excel,
Would wish his rivals all in hell ?

Her end when emulation misses,
She turns to envy, stings, and hisses :
The strongest friendship yields to pride,
Unless the odds be on our side.

Vain human-kind ! fantastic race !

Thy various follies who can trace ;

Self-love, ambition, envy, pride,

Their empire in our heart divide.

Give others riches, power, and station,

'Tis all to me an usurpation.

I have no title to aspire ;

Yet, when you sink, I seem the higher.

In Pope I cannot read a line,

But with a sigh I wish it mine :

When he can in one couplet fix

More sense than I can do in six ;

It gives me such a jealous fit,

I cry, " Pox take him and his wit ! "

I grieve to be outdone by Gay

In my own humourous biting way.

Arbutnot is no more my friend,

Who dares to irony pretend,

Which I was born to introduce,

Refin'd at first, and show'd its use.

St. John, as well as Pulteney, knows

That I had some repute for prose ;

And, till they drove me out of date,

Could maul a minister of state.

If they have mortified my pride,

And made me throw my pen aside ;

If with such talents Heaven hath bless'd em,

Have I not reason to detest'em ?

To all my foes, dear Fortune, send

Thy gifts ; but never to my friend :

I tamely can endure the first ;

But this with envy makes me burst.

Thus much may serve by way of proem ;

Proceed we therefore to our poem.

The time is not remote when I

Must by the course of nature die ;

When, I foresee, my special friends

Will try to find their private ends :

And, though 'tis hardly understood

Which way my death can do them good,

Yet thus, methinks, I hear them speak :

" See how the Dean begins to break !

Poor gentleman, he droops apace !

You plainly find it in his face.

That old vertigo in his head

Will never leave him till he's dead.

Besides, his memory decays :

He recollects not what he says ;

He cannot call his friends to mind ;

Forgets the place where last he din'd ;

Plies you with stories o'er and o'er ;

He told them fifty times before.

3 M

How does he fancy we can sit
To hear his out-of-fashion wit ?

But he takes up with younger folks,

Who for his wine will bear his jokes.

Faith ! he must make his stories shorter,

Or change his comrades once a quarter ;

In half the time he talks them round,

There must another set be found.

" For poetry, he's past his prime ;

He takes an hour to find a rhyme :

His fire is out, his wit decay'd,

His fancy sunk, his Muse a jade.

I'd have him throw away his pen ;

But there's no talking to some men ! "

And then their tenderness appears

By adding largely to my years :

" He's older than he would be reckon'd,

And well remembers Charles the Second.

He hardly drinks a pint of wine ;

And that, I doubt, is no good sign.

His stomach too begins to fail ;

Last year we thought him strong and hale ;

But now he's quite another thing :

I wish he may hold out till spring ! "

They hug themselves, and reason thus :

" It is not yet so bad with us ! "

In such a case they talk in tropes,

And by their fears express their hopes.

Some great misfortune to portend,

No enemy can match a friend.

With all the kindness they profess,

The merit of a lucky guess

(When daily how-d'ye's come of course

And servants answer, " Worse and worse ! ")

Would please them better, than to tell,

That, " God be prais'd, the Dean is well."

Then he who prophesied the best,

Approves his foresight to the rest :

" You know I always fear'd the worst,

And often told you so at first."

He'd rather choose that I should die,

Than his predictions prove a lie.

Not one foretells I shall recover ;

But, all agree to give me over.

Yet should some neighbour feel a pain

Just in the parts where I complain ;

How many a message would he send !

What hearty prayers that I should mend !

Inquire what regimen I kept ?

What gave me ease, and how I slept ?

And more lament, when I was dead,

Than all the snivellers round my bed.

My good companions, never fear ;

For, though you may mistake a year,

Though your prognostics run too fast,

They must be verified at last.

Behold the fatal day arrive !

" How is the Dean ? " — " He's just alive."

Now the departing prayer is read ;

He hardly breathes—the Dean is dead.

Before the passing-bell begun,

The news through half the town is run.

" Oh ! may we all for death prepare !

What has he left ? and who's his heir ? "

"I know no more than what the news is;

'Tis all bequeath'd to public uses."

"To public uses! there's a whim!

What had the public done for him?

Mere envy, avarice, and pride:

He gave it all—but first he died.

And had the Dean, in all the nation,

No worthy friend, no poor relation?

So ready to do strangers good,

Forgetting his own flesh and blood!"

Now Grub-street wits are all employ'd;

With elegies the town is cloy'd:

Some paragraph in every paper,

To curse the Dean, or bless the Drapier.

The doctors, tender of their fame,

Wisely on me lay all the blame.

"We must confess, his case was nice;

But he would never take advice.

Had he been rul'd for aught appears,

He might have liv'd these twenty years:

For, when we open'd him, we found

That all his vital parts were sound."

From Dublin soon to London spread,

'Tis told at court, "The Dean is dead."

And Lady Suffolk in the spleen,

Runs laughing up to tell the queen.

The queen, so gracious, mild, and good,

Cries, "Is he gone! 'tis time he should.

He's dead, you say: then let him rot:

I'm glad the medals* were forgot.

I promis'd him, I own, but when?

I only was the princess then;

But now, as consort of the king;

You know, 'tis quite another thing."

Now Chartres, at Sir Robert's levee,

Tells with a sneer the tidings heavy:

"Why, if he died without his shoes,"

Cries Bob, "I'm sorry for the news:

Oh, were the wretch but living still,

And in his place my good friend Will!

Or had a mitre on his head,

Provided Bolingbroke were dead!"

Now Curll his shop from rubbish drains:

Three genuine tomes of Swift's remains!

And then, to make them pass the glibber,

Revised by Tibbald†, Moore, and Cibber.

He'll treat me as he does my betters,

Publish my will, my life, my letters;

Revive the libels born to die:

Which Pope must bear as well as I.

Here shift the scene, to represent

How those I love my death lament.

Poor Pope will grieve a month, and Gay

A week, and Arbuthnot a day.

St. John himself will scarce forbear

To bite his pen, and drop a tear.

The rest will give a shrug, and cry,

"I'm sorry—but we all must die!"

Indifference, clad in wisdom's guise,

All fortitude of mind supplies:

For how can stony bowels melt

In those who never pity felt!

When we are lash'd, they kiss the rod,

Resigning to the will of God.

The fools; my juniors by a year,

Are tortur'd with suspense and fear;

Who wisely thought my age a screen,

When death approach'd, to stand between:

The screen remov'd, their hearts are trembling;

They mourn for me without dissembling.

My female friends, whose tender hearts

Have better learn'd to act their parts,

Receive the news in doleful dumps:

The Dean is dead: (Pray what is trumps?)

Then, Lord have mercy on his soul!

(Ladies, I'll venture for the vole.)

Six deans, they say, must bear the pall:

(I wish I knew what king to call.)

Madam, your husband will attend

The funeral of so good a friend?

No, madam, 'tis a shocking sight:

And he's engag'd to-morrow night:

My lady (hub will take it ill,

If he should fail her at quadrille.

He lov'd the Dean—(I lead a heart:)

But dearest friends, they say, must part.

His time was come; he ran his race;

We hope he's in a better place."

Why do we grieve that friends should die?

No loss more easy to supply.

One year is past; a different scene!

No farther mention of the Dean,

Who now, alas! no more is miss'd,

Than if he never did exist.

Where's now the favorite of Apollo?

Departed:—and his works must follow;

Must undergo the common fate;

His kind of wit is out of date.

Some country squire to Lintot goes,

Inquires for Swift in verse and prose.

Says Lintot, "I have heard the name;

He died a year ago."—"The same."

He searches all the shop in vain.

Sir, you may find them in Duck-lane*:

I sent them, with a load of books,

Last Monday, to the pastry-cook's.

To fancy they could live a year!

I find you're but a stranger here.

The Dean was famous in his time,

And had a kind of knack at rhyme.

His way of writing now is past:

The town has got a better taste.

I keep no antiquated stuff;

But spick and span I have enough.

Pray, do but give me leave to show 'em:

Here's Colley Cibber's birth-day poem.

This ode you never yet have seen,

By Stephen Duck, upon the queen.

Then here's a letter finely penn'd

Against the craftsman, and his friend:

It clearly shows that all reflection

On ministers is disaffection.

* Which the Dean had in vain expected in return for a small present he had sent to the Princess.

† Or Theobald.

* A place where old and second-hand books were sold.

Next, here's Sir Robert's vindication,
And Mr. Henley's last oration.

The hawkers have not got them yet :
Your honour, please to buy a set ?

" Here's Wolston's tracts, the twelfth edition ;

"Tis read by every politician :

The country-members, when in town,
To all their boroughs send them down ;

You never met a thing so smart ;
The courtiers have them all by heart ;

Those maids of honour who can read,
Are taught to use them for their creed.

The reverend author's good intention
Hath been rewarded with a pension :

He doth an honour to his gown,
By bravely running priestcraft down.

He shows, as sure as God's in Gloucester,
That Moses was a grand impostor ;

That all his miracles were cheats,
Perform'd as jugglers do their feats :

The church had never such a writer ;
A shame he hath not got a mitre !"

Suppose me dead ; and then suppose
A club assembled at the Rose ;

Where, from discourse of this and that,
I grow the subject of their chat.

And while they toss my name about,
With favour some and some without ;

One, quite indifferent in the cause,
My character impartial draws.

" The Dean, if we believe report,
Was never ill receiv'd at court,

Although, ironically grave,
He sham'd the fool, and lash'd the knave :

To steal a hint was never known,
But what he writ was all his own."

" Sir, I have heard another story ;
He was a most confounded Tory.

And grew, or he is much belied,
Extremely dull, before he died."

" Can we the Drapier then forget ?
Is not our nation in his debt ?

"Twas he that writ the Drapier's letters !"—
" He should have left them for his betters :

We had a hundred abler men.

Nor need depend upon his pen. —

Say what you will about his reading,
You never can defend his breeding ;

Who, in his satires running riot,
Could never leave the world in quiet ;

Attacking, when he took the whim,
Court, city, camp—all one to him,—

But why would he, except he slobber'd
Offend our patriot, great Sir Robert,

Whose counsels and the sovereign power
To save the nation every hour !

What scenes of evil he unravels,
In satires, libels, lying travels ;

Not sparing his own clergy cloth,
But eats into it, like a moth !"

" Perhaps I may allow the Dean
Had too much satire in his vein,

3 E 2

And seem'd determin'd not to starve it,
Because no age could more deserve it.

Yet malice never was his aim ;
He lash'd the vice, but spar'd the name.

No individual could resent,
Where thousands equally were meant ;

His satire points at no defect,
But what all mortals may correct ;

For he abhorr'd the senseless tribe
Who call it humour when they gibe :

He spar'd the hump, or crooked nose,
Whose owners set not up for beaux.

True genuine dullness mov'd his pity,
Unless it offer'd to be witty.

Those who their ignorance confest,
He ne'er offended with a jest ;

But laugh'd to hear an idiot quote
A verse from Horace learn'd by rote.

Vice, if it e'er can be abash'd,
Must be or ridicul'd or lash'd,

If you resent it, who's to blame ?

He neither knows you, nor your name.
Should vice expect to scape rebuke,

Because its owner is a duke ?

His friendships, still to few confin'd,
Were always of the middling kind ;

No fools of rank, or mongrel breed,
Who fain would pass for lords indeed :

Where titles give no right or power,
And peerage is a wither'd flower ;

He would have deem'd it a disgrace,
If such a wretch had known his face.

On rural squires, that kingdom's bane,
He vented oft his wrath in vain ;

 squires to market brought,
Who sell their souls and * for nought ;

The  go joyful back,

To rob the church, their tenants rack ;
Go snacks with  justices,

And keep the peace to pick up fees ;
In every job to have a share,

A goal or turnpike to repair ;

And turn  to public roads
Commodious to their own abodes.

" He never thought an honour done him,
Because a peer was proud to own him ;

Would rather slip aside, and choose
To talk with wits in dirty shoes ;

And scorn the tools with stars and garters
So often seen caressing Chartres*.

He never courted men in station,
Nor persons held in admiration ;

Of no man's greatness was afraid.
Because he sought for no man's aid.

Though trusted long in great affairs,
He gave himself no haughty airs :

Without regarding private ends,
Spent all his credit for his friends ;

* Fr. Chartres, a man notorious for almost every kind of vice. By cheating at the gaming table and lending money at exorbitant interest he made a large fortune. It is observed in his epitaph, written by Arbuthnot, that " Providence seems to have conniv'd at his execrable designs to give to after ages a conspicuous proof and example of how small estimation is exorbitant wealth in the sight of God, by his bestowing it on the most unworthy of all mortals."

And only chose the wise and good ;
 No flatterers ; no lies in blood :
 But succour'd virtue in distress,
 And seldom fail'd of good success ;
 As numbers in their hearts must own,
 Who, but for him, had been unknown

" He kept with princes due decorum :
 Yet never stood in awe before 'em,
 He follow'd David's lesson just ;
 In princes never put his trust ;
 And, would you make him truly sour,
 Provoke him with a slave in power.
 The Irish senate if you nam'd,
 With what impatience he declaim'd
 Fair LIBERTY was all his cry ;
 For her he stood prepar'd to die :
 For her he boldly stood alone ;
 For her he oft expos'd his own.
 Two kingdoms, just as faction led,
 Had set a price upon his head ;
 But not a traitor could be found,
 To sell him for six hundred pound.

" Had he but spar'd his tongue and pen,
 He might have rose like other men :
 But power was never in his thought.
 And wealth he valued not a groat :
 Ingratitude he often found,
 And pitied those who meant the wound ;
 But kept the tenour of his mind,
 To merit well of human-kind ;
 Nor made a sacrifice of those
 Who still were true, to please his foes.
 He labour'd many a fruitless hour,
 To reconcile his friends in power ;
 Saw mischief by a faction brewing,
 While they pursued each other's ruin.
 But, finding vain was all his care,
 He left the court in mere despair.

" And, oh ! how short are human schemes !
 Here ended all our golden dreams.
 What St. John's skill in state affairs,
 What Ormond's valour, Oxford's cares,
 To save their sinking country lent,
 Was all destroy'd by one event.
 Too soon that precious life was ended,
 On which alone our weal depended,
 When up a dangerous faction starts,
 With wrath and vengeance in their hearts ;
 By solemn league and covenant bound,
 To ruin, slaughter, and confound ;
 To turn religion to a fable,
 And make the government a Babel ;
 Pervert the laws, disgrace the gown,
 Corrupt the senate, rob the crown ;
 To sacrifice Old England's glory,
 And make her infamous in story ;
 When such a tempest shook the land,
 How could ungarded virtue stand !

" With horror, grief, despair, the Dean
 Beheld the dire destructive scene :
 His friends in exile, or the Tower,
 Himself within the frown of power ;
 Pursued by base envenom'd pens,
 Far to the land of s— and fens :

A servile race in folly nurs'd
 Who truckled most, when treated worst.

" By innocence and resolution,
 He bore continual persecution ;
 While numbers to preferment rose,
 Whose merit was to be his foes ;
 When ev'n his own familiar friends,
 Intent upon their private ends,
 Like renegadoes now he feels,
 Against him lifting up their heels.

" The Dean did, by his pen, defeat
 An infamous destructive cheat ;
 Taught fools their interest how to know,
 And gave them arms to ward the blow.
 Envy hath own'd it was his doing,
 To save that hapless land from ruin ;
 While they who at the steerage stood,
 And reap'd the profit, sought his blood.

" To save them from their evil fate,
 In him was held a crime of state.
 A wicked monster on the bench,
 Whose fury blood could never quench ;
 As vile and profligate a villain,
 As modern Scroggs, or old Tressilian ;
 Who long all justice had discarded,
 Nor fear'd he God, nor man regarded ;
 Vow'd on the Dean his rage to vent ;
 And make him of his zeal repent :
 But Heaven his innocence defends,
 The grateful people stand his friends ;
 Nor strains of law, nor judges' frown,
 Nor topics brought to please the crown,
 Nor witness hir'd, nor jury pick'd,
 Prevail to bring him in convict.

" In exile, with a steady heart,
 He spent his life's declining part ;
 Where folly, pride, and faction sway,
 Remote from St. John, Pope, and Gay."

" Alas, poor Dean ! his only scope
 Was to be held a misanthrope.
 This into general odium drew him,
 Which if he lik'd, much good may't do him.
 His zeal was not to lash our crimes,
 But discontent against the times :
 For, had we made him timely offers,
 To raise his post, or fill his coffers,
 Perhaps he might have truckled down,
 Like other brethren of his gown ;
 For party he would scarce have bled :—
 I say no more—because he's dead.—
 What writings has he left behind ?"

" I hear they're of a different kind :
 A few in verse ; but most in prose—"

" Some high-flown pamphlets, I suppose :—
 All scribbled in the worst of times,
 To palliate his friend Oxford's crimes ;
 To praise queen Anne, nay more defend her,
 As never favoring the Pretender :
 Or libels yet conceal'd from sight,
 Against the court to show his spite :
 Perhaps his travels, part the third ;
 A lie at every second word—
 Offensive to a loyal ear :—
 But—not one sermon, you may swear.

"He knew an hundred pleasing stories,
With all the turns of Whigs and Tories :
Was cheerful to his dying day ;
And friends would let him have his way.

"As for his works in verse or prose.
I own myself no judge of those.
Nor can I tell what critics thought them ;
But this I know, all people bought them,
As with a moral view design'd
To please and to reform mankind ;
And if he often miss'd his aim,
The world must own it to their shame,
The praise is his, and theirs the blame.
He gave the little wealth he had
To build a house for fools and mad ;
To show, by one satiric touch,
No nation wanted it so much.
That kingdom he hath left his debtor ;
I wish it soon may have a better,
And, since you dread no further lashes,
Methinks you may forgive his ashes."

HORACE, BOOK II. SAT. VI.

I've often wish'd that I had clear,
For life, six hundred pounds a-year,
A handsome house to lodge a friend,
A river at my garden's end,
A terrace walk, and half a rood
Of land set out to plant a wood.

Well, now I have all this and more,
I ask not to increase my store ;
"But here a grievance seems to lie,
All this is mine but till I die ;
I can't but think 'twould sound more clever,
To me and to my heirs for ever.

If I ne'er got or lost a groat,
By any trick, or any fault ;
And if I pray by reason's rules,
And not like forty other fools :
As thus, 'Vouchsafe, O gracious Maker !
To grant me this and t'other acre ;
Or, if it be thy will and pleasure,
Direct my plough to find a treasure !'
But only what my station fits,
And to be kept in my right wits,
Preserve, Almighty Providence !
Just what you gave me, competence :
And let me in these shades compose
Something in verse as true as prose ;
Remov'd from all th' ambitious scene,
Nor puff'd by pride, nor sunk by spleen."

In short, I'm perfectly content,
Let me but live on this side Trent ;
Nor cross the Channel twice a year,
To spend six months with statesmen here.

I must by all means come to town,
'Tis for the service of the Crown.
"Lewis, the Dean will be of use ;
Send for him up, take no excuse."
The toil, the danger of the seas,
Great ministers ne'er think of these ;
Or let it cost five hundred pound,
No matter where the money's found,

It is but so much more in debt,
And that they ne'er consider'd yet.

"Good Mr. Dean, go change your gown, Let my Lord know you're come to town."

I hurry me in haste away,
Not thinking it is levee-day ;
And find his honour in a pound,
Hemm'd by a triple circle round,
Chequer'd with ribbons blue and green :
How should I thrust myself between ?
Some wag observes me thus perplex'd,
And, smiling whispers to the next,
"I thought the Dean had been too proud,
To jostle here among the crowd !"
Another, in a surly fit,
Tells me I have more zeal than wit ;
"So eager to express your love,
You ne'er consider whom you shove,
But rudely press before a duke."
I own I'm pleased with this rebuke.
And take it kindly meant, to show
What I desire the world should know.

I get a whisper, and withdraw ;
When twenty fools I never saw
Come with petitions fairly penn'd,
Desiring I would stand their friend.

This humbly offers me his case—
That begs my interest for a place—
A hundred other men's affairs,
Like bees are humming in my ears.
"To-morrow my appeal comes on ;
Without your help the cause is gone—
The duke expects my lord and you,
About some great affair, at two—"
"Put my lord Bolingbroke in mind,
To get my warrant quickly sign'd :
Consider, 'tis my first request."—
Be satisfied, I'll do my best.

Then presently he falls to teaze,
"You may for certain, if you please :
I doubt not, if his lordship knew—
And, Mr. Dean, one word from you—"

'Tis (let me see) three years and more,
(October next it will be four)
Since Harley bid me first attend,
And chose me for an humble friend ;
Would take me in his coach to chat,
And question me of this and that ;
As, "What's o'clock ?" and, "How's the
wind ?"

"Whose chariot's that we left behind ?"
Or gravely try to read the lines
Writ underneath the country signs ;
Or, "Have you nothing new to-day
From Pope, from Parnell, or from Gay ?"
Such tattle often entertains
My Lord and me as far as Staines,
As once a week we travel down
To Windsor, and again to town,
Where all that passes inter nos
Might be proclaim'd at Charing-cross.

Yet some I know with envy swell,
Because they see me us'd so well :
"How think you of our friend the dean ?"

I wonder what some people mean.
My lord and he are grown so great,
Always together, tête-à-tête ;
What ! they admire him for his jokes !—
See but the fortune of some folks !”

There flies about a strange report
Of some express arriv'd at court :
I'm stopp'd by all the fools I meet,
And catechis'd in every street.
“ You, Mr. Dean, frequent the great ;
Inform us, will the emperor treat ?
Or do the prints and papers lie ?”
“ Faith, sir, you know as much as I.”
“ Ah, doctor, how you love to jest !
’Tis now no secret”—“ I protest
’Tis one to me”—“ Then tell us, pray,
When are the troops to have their pay ?”
And, though I solemnly declare
I know no more than my lord mayor,
They stand amaz'd, and think me grown
The closet mortal ever known.

Thus in a sea of folly tost,
My choicest hours of life are lost ;
Yet always wishing to retreat,
Oh, could I see my country seat !
There leaning near a gentle brook,
Sleep, or peruse some ancient book ;
And there in sweet oblivion drown
Those cares that haunt the court and town.

ESSAY ON CRITICISM.

’Tis hard to say, if greater want of skill
Appear in writing or in judging ill ;
But of the two, less dangerous is the offence
To tire our patience, than mislead our sense.
Some few in that, but numbers err in this.
Ten censure wrong for one who writes amiss ;
A fool might once himself alone expose,
Now one in verse makes many more in prose.

’Tis with our judgments as our watches ; none
Go just alike, yet each believes his own.
In poets as true genius is but rare,
True taste as seldom is the critic’s share ;
Both must alike from Heaven derive their light,
These born to judge, as well as those to write.
Let such teach others who themselves excel,
And censure freely who have written well :
Authors are partial to their wit, ’tis true ;
But are not critics to their judgment too ?

Yet, if we look more closely, we shall find
Most have the seeds of judgment in their mind ;
Nature affords at least a glimmering light ;
The lines, though touch’d but faintly are drawn
right ;

But as the slightest sketch, if justly trac’d
Is by ill colouring but the more disgrac’d,
So by false learning is good sense defac’d :

Some are bewilder’d in the maze of schools,
And some made coxcombs nature meant but fools.

In search of wit these lose their common sense,
And then turn critics in their own defence :
Each burns alike, who can, or cannot write,
Or with a rival’s, or an eunuch’s spite.
All fools have still an itching to deride,
And fain would be upon the laughing side.
If Mævius scribble in Apollo’s spite,
There are who judge still worse than he can write.

Some have at first for wits, then poets past ;
Turn’d critics next, and prov’d plain fools at last.
Some neither can for wits nor critics pass,
As heavy mules are neither horse nor ass.
Those half-learn’d witlings, numerous in our isle.
As half-form’d insects on the banks of Nile ;
Unfinished things, one knows not what to call,
Their generation’s so equivocal :
To tell them would a hundred tongues require,
Or one vain wit’s, that might a hundred tire.

But you, who seek to give and merit fame,
And justly bear a critic’s noble name,
Be sure yourself and your own reach to know,
How far your genius, taste, and learning, go ;
Launch not beyond your depth, but be discreet,
And mark that point where sense and dulness
meet.

Nature to all things fix’d the limits fit,
And wisely curb’d proud man’s pretending wit ;
As on the land while here the ocean gains,
In other parts it leaves wide sandy plains ;
Thus in the soul while memory prevails,
The solid power of understanding fails ;
Where beams of warm imagination play,
The memory’s soft figures melt away.
One science only will one genius fit ;
So vast is art, so narrow human wit :
Not only bounded to peculiar arts,
But oft in those confin’d to single parts.
Like kings, we lose the conquests gain’d before,
By vain ambition still to make them more :
Each might his several province well command,
Would all but stoop to what they understand.

First follow nature ; and your judgment frame

By her just standard, which is still the same :
Unerring nature, still divinely bright,
One clear, unchang’d, and universal light,
Life, force, and beauty, must to all impart,
At once the source, and end, and test of art.
Art from that fund each just supply provides,
Works without shew, and without pomp presides ;

In some fair body thus th’ informing soul
With spirits feeds, with vigour fills the whole.
Each motion guides, and every nerve sustains,
Itself unseen, but in th’ effects remains.
Some, to whom Heaven in wit has been profuse,
Want as much more, to turn it to its use ;
For wit and judgment often are at strife,
Though meant each other’s aid, like man and wife

'Tis more to guide, than spur the muse's steed ;
 Restrain his fury, than provoke his speed :
 The wing'd courser, like a generous horse,
 Shows most true mettle when you check his course.

Those rules of old discover'd, not devis'd,
 Are nature still, but nature methodis'd :
 Nature, like liberty, is but restrained
 By the same laws which first herself ordain'd.

Hear how learn'd Greece her useful rules endites,

When to repress, and when indulge our flights :
 High on Parnassus' top her sons she shew'd,
 And pointed out those arduous paths they trod :
 Held from afar, aloft, th' immortal prize,
 And urg'd the rest by equal steps to rise.
 Just precepts thus from great examples given,
 She drew from them what they deriv'd from
 heaven.

The generous critic fann'd the poets fire,
 And taught the world with reason to admire.
 Then criticism the muse's handmaid prov'd,
 To dress her charms, and make her more belov'd :
 But following wits from that intention stray'd,
 Who could not win the mistress woo'd the maid ;

Against the poets their own arms they turn'd.
 Sure to hate most the men from whom they learn'd.

So modern 'pothecaries taught the art
 By doctors bills to play the doctor's part,
 Bold in the practice of mistaken rules,
 Prescribe, apply, and call their masters fools.
 Some on the leaves of ancient authors prey,
 'Nor time nor moths e'er spoil'd so much as they :
 Some drily plain, without invention's aid,
 Write dull receipts how poems may be made.
 These leave the sense, their learning to display,
 And those explain the meaning quite away.

You then whose judgment the right course would steer,

Know well each ancient's proper character :
 His fable, subject, scope in every page ;
 Religion, country, genius of his age :
 Without all these at once before your eyes,
 'Avail you may, but never criticise.

Be Homer's works your study and delight
 Read them by day, and meditate by night ;
 Thence form your judgment, thence your maxims bring,

And trace the muses upward to their spring ;
 Still with itself compar'd, his text peruse ;
 And let your comment be the Mantuan muse.

When first young Maro, in his boundless mind

A work t' outlast immortal Rome design'd,
 Perhaps he seem'd above the critic's law,
 And but from nature's fountain scorn'd to
 draw :

But when t' examine every part he came,
 Nature and Homer were, he found, the same.
 Convinc'd, amaz'd, he checks the bold design ;
 And rules as strict his labour'd work confine,
 As if the Stagyrite o'erlook'd each line.

Learn hence for ancient rules a just esteem ;
 To copy nature, is to copy them.

Some beauties yet no precepts can declare,
 For there's a happiness as well as care.

Music resembles poetry ; in each
 Are nameless graces which no methods teach,
 And which a master-hand alone can reach. }
 If, where the rules not far enough extend, (Since rules were made but to promote their end,)

Some lucky license answer to the full
 Th' intent proposed, that license is a rule.

Thus Pegasus, a nearer way to take,
 May boldly deviate from the common track ;
 From vulgar bounds with brave disorder part,
 And snatch a grace beyond the reach of art,
 Which, without passing through the judgment, gains

The heart, and all its end at once attains.

In prospects thds, some objects please our
 eyes,

Which out of nature's common order rise,
 The shapeless rock, or hanging precipice. }
 Great wits sometimes may gloriously offend,
 And rise to faults true critics dare not mend.
 But though the ancients thus their rules invade (As kings dispense with laws themselves have made) ;

Moderns, beware ! or, if you must offend
 Against the precept, ne'er transgress its end :
 Let it be seldom, and compell'd by need ;
 And have, at least, their precedent to plead.
 The critic else proceeds without remorse,
 Seizes your fame, and puts his laws in force.

I know there are, to whose presumptuous
 thoughts

Those freer beauties, ev'n in them, seem faults.
 Some figures monstrous and mis-shap'd appear,
 Considered singly, or beheld too near,
 Which, but proportioned to their light, or place,
 Due distance reconciles to form and grace.

A prudent chief not always must display
 His powers in equal ranks, and fair array,
 But with th' occasion and the place comply.
 Conceal his force, nay sometimes seem to fly,
 Those oft are stratagems which errors seem,
 Nor is it Homer nods, but we that dream.

Still green with bays each ancient altar
 stands,

Above the reach of sacrilegious hands ;
 Secure from flames, from envy's fiercer rage,
 Destructive war, and all-involving age.
 See from each clime the learn'd their incense
 bring !

Hear in all tongues consenting Pæans ring !

In praise so just let every voice be join'd,
 And fill the general chorus of mankind.
 Hail, bards triumphant ! born in happier days ;
 Immortal heirs of universal praise !

Whose honours with increase of ages grow,
 As streams roll down, enlarging as they flow ;
 Nations unborn your mighty names shall sound,
 And worlds applaud that must not yet be
 found !

O may some spark of your celestial fire,
The last, the meanest of your sons inspire,
(That, on weak wings, from far pursues your flights,

Glow while he reads, but trembles as he writes)
To teach vain wits a science little known,
T' admire superior sense, and doubt their own.

Of all the causes which conspire to blind
Man's erring judgment, and misguide the mind,
What the weak head with strongest bias rules,
Is pride, the never-failing vice of fools,
Whatever nature has in worth denied,
She gives in large recruits of needful pride!
For as in bodies, thus in souls, we find What wants in blood and spirits, swell'd with
wind:

Pride, where wit fails, steps in to our defence,
And fills up all the mighty void of sense.
If once right reason drives that cloud away,
Truth breaks upon us with resistless day.
Trust not yourself; but, your defects to know,
Make use of every friend—and every foe.

A little learning is a dangerous thing!
Drink deep, or taste not the Pierian spring:
There shallow draughts intoxicate the brain,
And drinking largely sobers us again.

Fir'd at first sight with what the muse imparts
In fearless youth we tempt the heights of arts,
While, from the bounded level of our mind,
Short views we take, nor see the lengths behind;
But more advanc'd, behold with strange surprise
New distant scenes of endless science rise!
So pleas'd at first the towering Alps we try,
Mount o'er the vales, and seem to tread the sky;

Th' eternal snows appear already past,
And the first clouds and mountains seem the
last;

But those attain'd, we tremble to survey
The growing labours of the lengthen'd way;
Th' increasing prospect tires our wandering
eyes,

Hills peep o'er hills, and Alps on Alps arise!

A perfect judge will read each work of wit
With the same spirit that its author writ;
Survey the whole, nor seek slight faults to find Where nature moves, and rapture warms the
mind;

Nor lose, for that malignant dull delight,
The generous pleasure to be charm'd with wit.
But in such lays as neither ebb nor flow,
Correctly cold, and regularly low,
That shunning faults, one quiet tenour keep;
We cannot blame, indeed—but we may sleep.
In wit, as nature what effects our hearts
Is not th' exactness of peculiar parts;
'Tis not a lip, or eye, we beauty call,
But the joint force and full result of all.
Thus when we view some well-proportion'd dome,

(The world's just wonder, and ev'n thine, O Rome!)

No single parts unequally surprise,
All comes united to th' admiring eyes;

No monstrous height, or breadth, or length appear:

The whole at once is bold, and regular.

Whoever thinks a faultless piece to see,
Thinks what ne'er was, nor is, nor e'er shall be.
In every work regard the writer's end,
Since none can compass more than they intend;
And if the means be just, the conduct true,
Applause, in spite of trivial faults, is due.
As men of breeding, sometimes men of wit,
T' avoid great errors must the less commit;
Neglect the rules each verbal critic lays,
For not to know some trifles, is a praise.

Most critics, fond of some subservient art,
Still make the whole depend upon a part:
They talk of principles, but notions prize,
And all to one lov'd fully sacrifice.

Once on a time, La Mancha's knight, they say,
A certain bard encountering on the way,
Discours'd in terms as just, with looks as sage,
As e'er could Dennis, of the Grecian stage;
Concluding all were desperate sots and fools,
Who durst depart from Aristotle's rules.

Our author, happy in a judge so nice,
Produc'd his play, and begg'd the knight's advice:

Made him observe the subject, and the plot,
The manners, passions, unities; what not?
All which, exact to rule, were brought about,
Were but a combat in the lists left out.
"What! leave the combat out?" exclaims the knight.

Yes, or we must renounce the stagirite.

"Not so, by heaven! (he answers in a rage)
"Knights, squires, and steeds, must enter on the "stage."

So vast a throng the stage can ne'er contain.

"Then build a new, or act it in a plain."

Thus critics, of less judgment than caprice,
Curious, not knowing, not exact but nice,
Form short ideas; and offend in arts
(As most in manners) by a love to parts.

Some to conceit alone their taste confine,
And glittering thoughts struck out at every line;

Pleased with a work were nothing's just or fit;
One glaring chaos and wild heap of wit.

Poets like painters, thus unskilled to trace

The naked nature, and the living grace,
With gold and jewels cover every part,
And hide with ornaments their want of art.

True wit is nature to advantage dress'd,
What oft was thought, but ne'er so well ex-
press'd;

Something, whose truth convinc'd at sight we
find,

That gives us back the image of our mind.

As shades more sweetly recommend the light,
So modest plainness sets off sprightly wit;
For works may have more wit than does them
good,

As bodies perish through excess of blood.

Others for language all their care express,
And value books as women men, for dress:

Their praise is still—the style is excellent :
The sense, they humbly take upon content.
Words are like leaves ; and where they most abound,

Much fruit of sense beneath is rarely found.
False eloquence, like the prismatic glass,
Its gaudy colours spreads on every place :
The face of nature we no more survey,
All glares alike, without distinction gay ;
But true expression, like th' unchanging sun,
Clears and improves whate'er it shines upon :
It gilds all objects, but it alters none.
Expression is the dress of thought, and still Appears more decent, as more suitable ;
A vile conceit in pompous words express'd,
Is like a clown in regal purple dress'd :
For different styles with different subjects sort,
As several garbs, with country, town, and court.
Some by old words to fame have made pretence,
Ancients in phrase, mere moderns in their
sense ;

Such labour'd nothings, in so strange a style,
Amaze th' unlearn'd, and make the learned smile.

Unlucky as Fungosa in the play,
These sparks with awkward vanity display
What the fine gentleman wore yesterday ;
And but so mimic ancient wits at best,
As apes our grandsires in their doublets drest.
In words, as fashions, the same rule will hold ;
Alike fantastic, if too new or old :
Be not the first by whom the new are try'd,
Nor yet the last to lay the old aside.

But most by numbers judge a poet's song ;
And smooth or rough, with them, is right or
wrong :

In the bright muse though thousand charms
conspire,

Her voice is all these tuneful fools admire ;
Who haunt Parnassus but to please their ear,
Not mend their minds ; as some to church repair,

Not for the doctrine, but the music there.
These equal syllables alone require.

Though oft the ear the open vowels tire ;
While expletives their feeble aid do join,
And ten low words oft creep in one dull line :
While they ring round the same unvary'd chimes,

With sure returns of still expected rhymes ;
Where'er you find " the cooling western breeze,"
In the next line 't " whispers through the trees : " [creep,"

If crystal streams " with pleasing murmurs
The reader's threaten'd (not in vain) with
" sleep : "

Then at the last and only couplet fraught
With some unmeaning thing they call a thought,
A needless Alexandrine ends the song,
That, like a wounded snake, drags its slow
length along. [know

Leave such to tune their own dull rhymes, and
What's roundly smooth, or languishingly slow ;

S F

And praise the easy vigour of a line,
Where Denham's strength and Waller's sweetness join.

True ease in writing comes from art, not chance,
As those move easiest who have learn'd to dance,

'Tis not enough no harshness gives offence,
The sound must seem an echo to the sense :
Soft is the strain when zephyr gently blows,
And the smooth stream in smoother numbers
flows ;

But when loud surges lash the sounding shore,
The hoarse, rough verse should like the torrent
roar.

When Ajax strives some rock's vast weight to throw,

The line too labours, and the words move slow :
Not so when swift Camilla scours the plain,
Flies o'er th' unbending corn, and skims along the main.

Hear how 'Timotheus' varied lays surprise,
And bid alternate passions fall and rise !
While, at each change, the son of Libyan Jove
Now burns with glory, and then melts with love ;
Now his fierce eyes with sparkling fury glow,
Now sighs steal out, and tears begin to flow :
Persians and Greeks like turns of nature found,
And the world's victor stood subdued by sound !
The power of music all our hearts allow,
And what Timotheus was, is Dryden now.

Avoid extremes ; and shun the fault of such,
Who still are pleas'd too little or too much.

At every trifle scorn to take offence,
That always shows great pride, or little sense ;
Those heads, as stomachs, are not sure the best,
Which nauseate all, and nothing can digest.

Yet let not each gay turn thy rapture move ;
For fools admire, but men of sense approve :
As things seem large which we through mist
descrie,

Dulness is ever apt to magnify.

Some foreign writers, some our own despise ;
The ancients only, or the moderns prize :

Thus wit, like faith, by each man is apply'd
To one small sect, and all are damned beside.
Meanly they seek the blessing to confine,
And force that sun but on a part to shine,
Which not alone the southern wit sublimes,
But ripens spirits in cold northern climes ;
Which from the first has shone on ages past,
Enlights the present, and shall warm the last ;
Though each may feel increases and decays,
And see now clearer and now darker days.

Regard not then if wit be old or new.
But blame the false, and value still the true.

Some ne'er advance a judgment of their own,
But catch the spreading notion of the town ;
They reason and conclude by precedent,
And own stale nonsense which they ne'er invent. [then

Some judge of authors' names, not works, and
Nor praise nor blame the writings, but the men.
Of all this servile herd, the worst is he -
That in proud dulness joins with quality ;

A constant critic at the great man's board,
To fetch and carry nonsense for my lord.
What woful stuff this madrigal would be,
In some starv'd hackney-sonneteer, or me !
But let a lord once own the happy lines,
How the wit brightens ! how the style refines !
Before his sacred name flies every fault,
And each exalted stanza teems with thought !

The vulgar thus through imitation err ;
As oft the learn'd by being singular ;
So much they scorn the crowd, that if the throng
By chance go right, they purposely go wrong :
So schismatics the plain believers quit,
And are but damn'd for having too much wit.
Some praise at morning what they blame at night,
But always think the last opinion right.
A muse by these is like a mistress us'd,
This hour she's idoliz'd, the next abus'd ;
While their weak heads, like towns unfortified,
'Twixt sense and nonsense daily change their side.

Ask them the cause ; they're wiser still they say ;
And still to-morrow's wiser than to-day.
We think our fathers fools, so wise we grow ;
Our wiser sons, no doubt, will think us so.
Once school divines this zealous isle o'erspread ;
Who knew most sentences was deepest read.
Faith, gospel, all, seem'd made to be disputed.
And none had sense enough to be confuted :
Scotists and Thomists, now in peace remain,
Amidst their kindred cobwebs in Duck-lane.
If faith it-self has different dresses worn,
What wonder modes in wit should take their turn ?

Oft, leaving what is natural and fit,
The current folly proves the ready wit ;
And authors think their reputation safe,
Which lives as long as fools are pleas'd to laugh.

Some, valuing those of their own side or mind,

Still make themselves the measure of mankind :
Fondly we think we honour merit then,
When we but praise ourselves in other men.
Parties in wit attend on those of state,
And public faction doubles private hate.
Pride, malice, folly, against Dryden rose,
In various shapes of parsons, critics, beaux :
But sense surviv'd, when merry jests were past ;
For rising merit will buoy up at last.
Might he return, and bless once more our eyes,
New Blackmores and new Milbourns must arise :

Nay, should great Homer lift his awful head,
Zoilus again would start up from the dead.
Envy will merit, as its shade, pursue ;
But, like a shadow, proves the substance true ;
For envied wit, like Sol eclips'd, makes known
Th' opposing body's grossness, not its own.
When first that sun too powerful beams displays,
It draws up vapours which obscure its rays :
But ev'n those clouds at last adorn its way,
Reflect new glories, and augment the day.

Be thou the first, true merit to befriend ;
His praise is lost, who stays till all commend.

Short is the date, alas, of modern rhymes,
And 'tis but just to let them live betimes.
No longer now that golden age appears,
When patriarch-wits surviv'd a thousand years :
Now length of fame (our second life) is lost,
And bare threescore is all ev'n that can boast ;
Our sons their fathers failing language see.
And such as Chaucer is, shall Dryden be.
So when the faithful pencil has design'd
Some bright idea of the master's mind,
Where a new world leaps out at his command,
And ready nature waits upon his hand ;
When the ripe colours soften and unite,
And sweetly melt into just shade and light ;
When mellowing years their full perfection give,
And each bold figure just begins to live ;
The treacherous colours the fair art betray,
And all the bright creation fades away !

Unhappy wit, like most mistaken things,
Atones not for that envy which it brings ;
In youth alone its empty praise we boast,
But soon the short-liv'd vanity is lost :
Like some fair flower the early spring supplies,
That gaily blooms, but ev'n in blooming dies.
What is this wit, which must our cares employ ?
The owner's wife, that other men enjoy ;
The most our trouble still when most admir'd,
And still the more we give, the more requir'd ;
Whose fame with pains we guard, but lose with ease.

Sure some to vex, but never all to please ;
'Tis what the vicious fear, the virtuous shun ;
By fools 'tis hated, and by knaves undone !

If wit so much from ignorance undergo,
Ah, let not learning too commence its foe !
Of old, those met rewards, who could excel,
And such were prais'd who but endeavour'd well ;
Though triumphs were to generals only due,
Crowns were reserv'd to grace the soldiers too.
Now, they who reach Parnassus' lofty crown,
Employ their pains to spurn some others down ;
And while self-love each jealous writer rules,
Contending wits become the sport of fools :
But still the worst with most regret commend,
For each ill author is as bad a friend.
To what base ends, and by what abject ways,
Are mortals urg'd through sacred lust of praise !
Ah, ne'er so dire a thirst of glory boast,
Nor in the critic let the man be lost.
Good-nature and good-sense must ever join ;
To err, is human ; to forgive, divine.

But if in noble minds some dregs remain,
Not yet purg'd off, of spleen and sour disdain ;
Discharge that rage on more provoking crimes,
Nor fear a dearth in these flagitious times.
No pardon vile obscenity should find,
Though wit and art conspire to move your mind ;
But dulness with obscenity must prove
As shameful sure as impotence in love.
In the fat age of pleasure, wealth, and ease,
Sprang the rank weed, and thriv'd with large increase ;

When love was all an easy monarch's care ;
Seldom at council, never in a war :

Jilts rul'd the state, and statesmen farces writ ;
 Nay wits had pensions, and young lords had wit :
 The fair sat panting at a courtier's play,
 And not a mask went unimprov'd away :
 The modest fan was lifted up no more,
 And virgins smil'd at what they blush'd before.
 The following license of a foreign reign
 Did all the dregs of bold Socinus drain ;
 Then unbelieving priests reform'd the nation,
 And taught more pleasant methods of salvation ;
 Where heaven's free subjects might their rights dispute,

Lest God himself should seem too absolute :
 Pulpits their sacred satire learn'd to spare,
 And vice admir'd to find a flatterer there !
 Encourag'd thus, wit's Titans brav'd the skies,
 And the press groan'd with licens'd blasphemies.
 These monsters, critics ! with your darts engage,
 Here point your thunder, and exhaust your rage !

Yet shun their fault, who, scandalously nice,
 Will needs mistake an author into vice ;
 All seems infected that th' infected spy,
 As all looks yellow to the jaundic'd eye.

Learn then what morals critics ought to show ;
 For 'tis but half a judge's task, to know.
 'Tis not enough, taste, judgment, learning,
 join ;

in all you speak, let truth and candour shine ;
 That not alone what to your sense is due
 All may allow, but seek your friendship too.

Be silent always, when you doubt your sense ;
 And speak, though sure, with seeming diffidence :

Some positive, persisting fops we know,
 Who, if once wrong, will needs be always so ;
 But you, with pleasure, own your errors past,
 And make each day a critic on the last.

'Tis not enough your counsel still be true ;
 Blunt truths more mischief than nice falsehoods
 do ;

Men must be taught as if you taught them not,
 And things unknown propos'd as things forgot.
 Without good breeding truth is disapprov'd ;
 That only makes superior sense belov'd.

Be niggards of advice on no pretence ;
 For the worst avarice is that of sense.
 With mean complacence, ne'er betray your trust,

Nor be so civil as to prove unjust.
 Fear not the anger of the wise to raise ;
 Those best can bear reproof, who merit praise.

'Twere well might critics still this freedom
 take :

But Appius reddens at each word you speak,
 And stares tremendous, with a threatening eye,
 Like some fierce tyrant in old tapestry.
 Fear most to tax an honourable fool,
 Whose right it is, uncensur'd to be dull !
 Such, without wit, are poets when they please,
 As without learning they can take degrees.
 Leave dangerous truths to unsuccessful satires,
 And flattery to fulsome dedicators,

Whom, when they praise, the world believes no
 more

Than when they promise to give scribbling o'er.
 'Tis best sometimes your censure to restrain ;
 And charitably let the dull be vain .

Your silence there is better than your spite,
 For who can rail so long as they can write ?
 Still humming on their drowsy course they keep,
 And lash'd so long, like tops, are lash'd asleep.
 False steps but help them to renew the race,
 As, after stumbling jades will mend their pace.
 What crowds of these, impenitently bold,
 In sounds and jingling syllables grown old,
 Still run on poets, in a raging vein,
 Ev'n to the dregs and squeezings of the brain,
 Strain out the last dull dropping of their sense,
 And rhyme with all the rage of impotence !

Such shameless bards we have : and yet 'tis true,

There are as mad, abandon'd critics too.
 The bookful blockhead, ignorantly read,
 With loads of learned lumber in his head,
 With his own tongue still edifies his ears,
 And always listening to himself appears.
 All books he reads, and all he reads assails,
 From Dryden's Fables down to Dufey's Tales :
 With him, most authors steal their works or buy,
 Garth did not write his own Dispensary.
 Name a new play, and he's the poet's friend,
 Nay show'd his faults—but when would poets
 mend ?

No place so sacred from such fops is barr'd,
 Nor is Paul's church more safe than Paul's churchyard :

Nay, fly to altars ; there they'll talk you dead ;
 For fools rush in where angels fear to tread.
 Distrustful sense with modest caution speaks,
 It still looks home, and short excursions makes :

But rattling nonsense in full volleys breaks,
 And, never shock'd, and never turn'd aside,
 Bursts out, resistless, with a thundering tide.

But where's the man, who counsel can bestow, Still pleas'd to teach, and yet not proud to
 know ?

Unbiass'd, or by favour, or by spite ;
 Not dully prepossess'd, nor blindly right ;
 Though learn'd, well-bred ; and though well-bred, sincere :

Modestly bold, and humanly severe :
 Who to a friend his faults can freely show.
 And gladly praise the merit of a foe ?
 Best with a taste exact, yet unconfin'd ;
 A knowledge both of books and human kind ;
 Generous converse ; a soul exempt from pride ;
 And love to praise, with reason on his side ?

Such once were critics ; such the happy few
 Athens and Rome in better ages knew :
 The mighty Stagyrte first left the shore,
 Spread all his sails, and durst the deeps explore ;
 He steer'd securely, and discover'd far,
 Led by the light of the Mæonian star.
 Poets, a race long unconfin'd and free,
 Still fond and proud of savage liberty,

Receiv'd his laws; and stood convinc'd 'twas fit,
 Who conquer'd nature, should preside o'er wit.
 Horace still charms with graceful negligence,
 And without method talks us into sense,
 Will, like a friend, familiarly convey
 The truest notions in the easiest way.
 He, who supreme in judgment, as in wit,
 Might boldly censure, as he boldly writ,
 Yet judg'd with coolness, though he sung with
 fire;

His precepts teach but what his works inspire.
 Our critics take a contrary extreme.
 They judge with fury, but they write with phlegm:

Nor suffers Horace more in wrong translations
 By wits, than critics in as wrong quotations.

See Dionysius Homer's thoughts refine,
 And call new beauties forth from every line!
 Fancy and art in gay Petronius please,
 The scholar's learning, with the courtier's ease.

In grave Quintilian's copious work, we find
 The justest rules and clearest method join'd:
 Thus useful arms in magazines we place,
 All rang'd in order, and dispos'd with grace,
 But less to please the eye, than arm the hand,
 Still fit for use, and ready at command.

Thee, bold Longinus! all the Nine inspire.
 And bless their critic with a poet's fire.
 An ardent judge, who, zealous in his trust,
 With warmth gives sentence, yet is always just;
 Whose own example strengthens all his laws;
 And is himself that great sublime he draws.

Thus long succeeding critics justly reign'd,
 License repress'd, and useful laws ordain'd.
 Learning and Rome alike in empire grew,
 And arts still follow'd where her eagles flew:
 From the same foes, at last, both felt their doom,
 And the same age saw learning fall, and Rome.
 With tyranny, then superstition join'd,
 As that the body, this enslav'd the mind;
 Much was believ'd but little understood.
 And to be dull was construed to be good:

A second deluge learning thus o'er-ran,
 And the Monks finished what the Goths began.

At length Erasmus, that great injur'd name,
 (The glory of the priesthood, and the shame!)
 Stemm'd the wild torrent of a barbarous age,
 And drove those holy Vandals off the stage.

But see! each muse, in Leo's golden days,
 Starts from her trance, and trims her wither'd bays;

Rome's ancient genius, o'er its ruins spread,
 Shakes off the dust, and rears his reverend head.
 Then sculpture and her sister arts revive;
 Stones leapt to form, and rocks began to live;
 With sweeter notes each rising temple rung;
 A Raphael painted, and a Vida sung.
 Immortal Vida! on whose honour'd brow
 The poet's bays and critic's ivy grow:
 Cremona now shall ever boast thy name,
 As next in place to Mantua, next in fame!

But soon, by impious arms from Latium chas'd:

Their ancient bounds the banish'd muses pass'd;

Thence arts o'er all the northern world advance,
 But critic-learning flourish'd most in France:
 The rules a nation, born to serve, obeys;
 And Boileau still in right of Horace aways.
 But we, brave Britons, foreign laws despis'd,
 And kept unconquer'd, and unciviliz'd;
 Fierce for the liberties of wit, and bold,
 We still defied the Romans, as of old.

Yet some there were among the sounder few
 Of those who less presum'd and better knew,
 Who durst assert the juster ancient cause,
 And here restor'd wit's fundamental laws.
 Such was the muse, whose rules and practice
 tell,

"Nature's chief master-piece is writing well."
 Such was Roscommon, not more learn'd than
 good,

With manners generous as his noble blood;
 To him the wit of Greece and Rome was known,
 And every author's merit but his own.
 Such late was Walsh—the muse's judge and
 friend.

Who justly knew to blame or to commend;
 To failings mild, but zealous for desert;
 The clearest head, and the sincerest heart.
 This humble praise, lamented shade! receive,
 This praise at least a grateful muse may give:
 The muse, whose early voice you taught to sing,
 Prescrib'd her heights, and prun'd her tender
 wing.

(Her guide now lost) no more attempts to rise,
 But in low numbers short excursions tries;
 Content, if hence th' unlearn'd their wants may
 view.

The learn'd reflect on what before they knew.
 Careless of censure, nor too fond of fame;
 Still pleas'd to praise, yet not afraid to blame;
 Averse alike, to flatter or offend;
 Not free from faults, nor yet too vain to mend.

● RAPE OF THE LOCK.

Canto 1.

WHAT dire offence from amorous causes springs,
 What mighty contests rise from trivial things,
 I sing—this verse to Caryl, muse! is due:
 This ev'n Belinda may vouchsafe to view:
 Slight is the subject, but not so the praise,
 If she inspire, and he approve my lays.

Say what strange motive, goddess! could compel

A well-bred lord t' assault a gentle belle?

O say what stranger cause, yet unexplor'd,

Could make a gentle belle reject a lord?

In tasks so bold, can little men engage?

And in soft bosoms dwells such mighty rage?

Sol through white curtains shot a timorous ray,

And ope'd those eyes that must eclipse the day;

Now lap-dogs give themselves the rousing shake,

And sleepless lovers, just at twelve, awake:

Thrice rung the bell, the slipper knock'd the
 ground,

And the press'd watch return'd a silver sound.

Belinda still her downy pillow prest,
 Her guardian sylph prolong'd the balmy rest:
 'Twas he had summon'd to her silent bed
 The morning dream that hover'd o'er her head.
 A youth more glittering than a birth-night beau
 (That ev'n in slumber caus'd her cheek to glow)
 Seem'd to her ear his winning lips to lay,
 And thus in whispers said, or seem'd to say:

Fairest of mortals, thou distinguish'd care
 Of thousand bright inhabitants of air!
 If e'er one vision touched thy infant thought,
 Of all the nurse and all the priest have taught;
 Of airy elves by moonlight shadows seen,
 The silver token, and the circled green,
 Or virgins visited by angel-powers,
 With golden crowns and wreaths of heavenly
 flowers;

Hear and believe! thy own importance know,
 Nor bound thy narrow views to things below,
 Some secret truths, from learned pride conceal'd,
 To maids alone and children are reveal'd;
 What though no credit doubting wits may give?
 The fair and innocent shall still believe.

Know then, unnumber'd spirits round thee fly,
 The light militia of the lower sky:
 These, though unseen are ever on the wing,
 Hang o'er the box, and hover round the ring.
 Think what an equipage thou hast in air.
 And view with scorn two pages and a chair.
 As now your own, our beings were of old,
 And once enclos'd in woman's beauteous mould;
 Thence, by a soft transition, we repair
 From earthly vehicles to these of air.
 Think not, when women's transient breath is
 fled,

That all her vanities at once are dead.
 Succeeding vanities she still regards,
 And though she plays no more, o'erlooks the cards.

Her joy in gilded chariots, when alive,
 And love of ombre, after death survive,
 For when the fair in all their pride expire,
 To their first elements their souls retire:
 The sprites of fiery termagants in flame
 Mount up, and take a salamander's name.
 Soft yielding minds to water glide away,
 And sip, with nymphs, their elemental tea.
 The graver prude sinks downward to a gnome,
 In search of mischief still on earth to roam.
 The light coquettes in sylphs aloft appear,
 And sport and flutter in the fields of air.

Know farther yet; whoever fair and chaste
 Rejects mankind, is by some sylph embrac'd:
 For, spirits, freed from mortal laws, with ease
 Assume what sexes and what shape they please.
 What guards the purity of melting maids,
 In courtly balls, and midnight masquerades,
 Safe from the treacherous friend, the daring
 spark,

The glance by day, the whisper in the dark,
 When kind occasion prompts their warm desires
 When music softens, and when dancing fires?
 'Tis but their sylph, the wise celestials know,
 Though honour is the word with men below.

Some nymphs there are, too conscious of their
 face,
 For life predestin'd to the gnomes embrace.
 These swell their prospects, and exalt their
 pride,

When offers are disdain'd, and love deny'd:
 Then gay ideas crowd the vacant brain,
 While peers, and dukes, and all their sweeping
 train,

And garters, stars, and coronets appear,
 And in soft sounds, your Grace salutes their ear.
 'Tis these that early taint the female soul,
 Instruct the eyes of young coquettes to roll,
 Teach infant cheeks a bidden blush to know,
 And little hearts to flutter at a beau.

Oft, when the world imagine women stray,
 The sylphs through mystic mazes guide their way.
 Through all the giddy circle they pursue,
 And old impertinence expel by new.

What tender maid but must a victim fall
 To one man's treat, but for another's ball?
 When Florio speaks, what virgin could withstand,

If gentle Damon did not squeeze her hand?
 With varying vanities, from every part,
 They shift the moving toy-shop of the heart;
 Where wigs with wigs, with sword-knots swordknots strive,

Beaux banish beaux, and coaches coaches drive.
 This erring mortals levity may call;
 Oh, blind to truth! the sylphs contrive it all.

Of these am I, who thy protection claim,
 A watchful sprite, and Ariel is my name.
 Late, as I rang'd the crystal wilds of air,
 In the clear mirror of thy ruling star
 I saw, alas! some dread event impend,
 Ere to the main this morning sun descend;
 But heaven reveals not what, or how, or where:
 Warn'd by the sylph, oh pious maid, beware!
 This to disclose is all thy guardian can;
 Beware of all, but most beware of man!

He said; when Shock, who thought she slept too long,
 Leap'd up, and wak'd his mistress with his tongue.

'Twas then, Belinda, if report say true,
 Thy eyes first open'd on a billet doux;
 Wounds, charms, and ardours, were no sooner
 read,

But all the vision vanish'd from thy head.

And now, unveil'd, the toilet stands display'd,
 Each silver vase in mystic order laid.
 First rob'd in white, the nymph intent adores,
 With head uncover'd, the cosmetic powers.
 A heavenly image in the glass appears,
 To that she bends, to that her eyes she rears;
 Th' inferior priestess, at her altar's side,
 Trembling, begins the sacred rites of pride.
 Unnumber'd treasures ope at once, and here
 The various offerings of the world appear;
 From each she nicely culls with curious toil,
 And decks the goddess with the glittering spoil.
 This casket India's glowing gems unlocks,
 And all Arabia breathes from yonder box.

The tortoise here and elephant unite,
Transform'd to combs, the speckled and the white.

Here files of pins extend their shining rows,
Puffs, powders, patches, bibles, billet-doux.
Now awful beauty puts on all its arms;
The fair each moment rises in her charms,
Repairs her smiles, awakens every grace,
And calls forth all the wonders of her face:
Sees by degrees a purer blush arise;
And keener lightnings quicken in her eyes.
The busy sylphs surround their darling care;
These set the head, and those divide the hair;
Some fold the sleeve, whilst others plait the gown;

And Betty's prais'd for labours not her own.

Canto II.

Not with more glories in th' ethereal plain,
The sun first rises o'er the purpled main,
Than, issuing forth, the rival of his beams
Launch'd on the bosom of the silver Thames.
Fair nymphs and well-dress'd youths around her shone,

But every eye was fix'd on her alone.
On her white breast a sparkling cross she wore,
Which Jews might kiss, and Infidels adore.
Her lively looks a sprightly mind disclose,
Quick as her eyes, and as unfix'd as those:
Favours to none, to all she smiles extends;
Oft she rejects, but never once offends.
Bright as the sun, her eyes the gazers strike,
And, like the sun, they shine on all alike.
Yet graceful ease, and sweetness void of pride,
Might hide her faults, if belles had faults to hide.
If to her share some female errors fall,
Look on her face, and you'll forget them all.

This nymph to the destruction of mankind,
Nourish'd two locks, which graceful hung behind

In equal curls, and well conspir'd to deck
With shining ringlets the smooth ivory neck.
Love in these labyrinths his slaves detains,
And mighty hearts are held in slender chains.
With hairy springes we the birds betray;
Slight lines of hair surprise the finny prey;
Fair tresses man's imperial race insnare,
And beauty draws us with a single hair.

Th' adventurous baron the bright locks admird;

He saw, he wish'd, and to the prize aspir'd.
Resolv'd to win, he meditates the way,
By force to ravish, or by fraud betray;
For when success a lover's toil attends,
Few ask, if fraud or force attain'd his ends.

For this, ere Iphæbus rose, he had implor'd
Propitious heav'n, and every power ador'd;
But chiefly Love—to Love an altar built,
Of twelve vast French romances neatly gilt.
There lay three garters, half a pair of gloves,
And all the trophies of his former loves.
With tender billet-doux he lights the pyre,
And breathes three amorous sighs to raise the fire.

Then prostrate falls, and begs with ardent eyes
Soon to obtain, and long possess the prize.

The powers gave ear, and granted half his prayer;

The rest, the winds dispers'd in empty air.

But now secure the painted vessel glides,
The sun-beams trembling on the floating tides:
While melting music steals upon the sky,
And soften'd sounds along the waters die;
Smooth flow the waves, the zephyrs gently play,
Belinda smil'd, and all the world was gay,
All but the sylph—with careful thoughts oppress'd,
The impending woe sat heavy on his breast.

He summons strait his denizens of air;
The lucid squadrons round the sails repair;
Soft o'er the shrouds ærial whispers breathe,
That seem'd but zephyrs to the train beneath.
Some to the sun their insect wings unfold,
Waft on the breeze, or sink in clouds of gold;
Transparent forms, too fine for mortal sight,
Their fluid bodies half dissolv'd in light.
Loose to the wind their airy garments flew,
Thin glittering textures of the filmy dew,
Dipp'd in the richest tinctures of the skies,
Where light disports in ever-mingling dyes,
While every beam new transient colours flings,
Colours that change whene'er they wave their wings.

Amid the circle on the gilded mast,
Superior by the head was Ariel plac'd:
His purple pinions opening to the sun,
He rais'd his azure wand and thus begun:

Ye sylphs and sylphids, to your chief give ear;
Fays, fairies, genii, elves, and dæmons, hear!
Ye know the spheres, and various tasks assign'd
By laws eternal to th' aerial kind.
Some in the fields of purest æther play,
And bask and whiten in the blaze of day;
Some guide the course of wondering orbs on high,

Or roll the planets through the boundless sky;
Some, less refin'd, beneath the moon's pale light

Pursue the stars that shoot athwart the night,
Or suck the mists in grosser air below,
Or dip their pinions in the painted bow,
Or brew fierce tempests on the wintry main,
Or o'er the globe distil the kindly rain.
Others on earth o'er human race preside,
Watch all their ways, and all their actions guide:

Of these the chief the care of nations own,
And guard with arms divine the British throne.

Our humbler province is to tend the fair,
Not a less pleasing, though less glorious care:
To save the powder from too rude a gale,
Nor let th' imprison'd essences exhale;
To draw fresh colours from the vernal flowers;
To steal from rainbows, ere they drop in showers,

A brighter wash; to curl their waving hairs,
Assist their blushes, and inspire their airs;
Nay oft, in dreams, invention we bestow,
To change a founce, or add a furbelow.

This day, black omens threat the brightest
fair

That e'er deserv'd a watchful spirit's care ;
Some dire disaster, or by force, or flight ;
But what, or where, the fates have wrapp'd in
night.

Whether the nymph shall break Diana's law,
Or some frail China-jar receive a flaw ;
Or stain her honour, or her new brocade ;
Forget her prayers, or miss a masquerade ;
Or lose her heart, or necklace at a ball ;
Or whether Heaven has deem'd that Shock must fall.

Haste then, ye spirits ! to your charge repair :
The fluttering fan be Zephyretta's care ;
The drops to thee, Brillante, we consign ;
And Momentilla, let the watch be thine ;
Do thou, Crispissa, tend her favourite lock ;
Ariel himself shall be the guard of Shock.
To fifty chosen sylphs, of special note,
We trust th' important charge, the petticoat ;
Oft have we known that seven-fold fence to fail,
Though stiff with hoops, and arm'd with ribs of whale.

Form a strong line about the silver bound,
And guard the wide circumference around.

Whatever spirit, careless of his charge,
His post neglects, or leaves the fair at large,
Shall feel sharp vengeance soon o'ertake his sins,
Be stopp'd in vials, or transfix'd with pins ;
Or plung'd in lakes of bitter washes lie,
Or wedg'd whole ages in a bodkin's eye ;
Gums and pomatums shall his flight restrain,
While clogg'd he beats his silken wings in
vain ;

Or aum styptics with contracting power
Shrink his thin essence like a shrivell'd flower :
Or, as Ixion fix'd, the wretch shall feel
The giddy motion of the whirling mill,
In fumes of burning chocolate shall glow,
And tremble at the sea that froths below !

He spoke ; the spirits from the sails descend :
Some, orb in orb, around the nymph extend ;
Some thread the mazy ringlets of her hair ;
Some hang upon the pendants of her ear ;
With beating hearts the dire event they wait,
Anxious, and trembling for the birth of fate.

Canto III.

Close by those meads, for ever crown'd with
flowers,
Where Thames with pride surveys his rising
towers,
There stands a structure of majestic frame,
Which from the neighbouring Hampton takes its name.

Here Britain's statesmen oft the fall foredoom
Of foreign tyrants, and of nymphs at home ;
Here thou, great Anna ! whom three realms obey,
Dost sometimes counsel take—and sometimes
tear.

Hither the heroes and the nymphs resort,
To taste awhile the pleasures of a court ;

In various talk th' instructive hours they past,
Who gave the ball, or paid the visit last ;
One speaks the glory of the British queen,
And one describes a charming Indian screen ;
A third interprets motions, looks, and eyes ;
At every word a reputation dies.

Snuff, or the fan, supply each pause of chat,
With singing, laughing, ogling, and all that.

Meanwhile, declining from the noon of day,
The sun obliquely shoots his burning ray ;
The hungry judges soon the sentence sign,
And wretches hang, that jurymen may dine ;
The merchant from th' Exchange returns in
peace,

And the long labours of the toilet cease.
Belinda now, whom thirst of fame invites,
Burns to encounter two adventurous knights,
At ombre singly to decide their doom ;
And swells her breast with conquests yet to come.
Straight the three bands prepare in arms to join,
Each band the number of the sacred nine,
Soon as she spreads her hand, th' ærial guard
Descend, and sit on each important card ;
First Ariel perch'd upon a Matadore,
Then each according to the rank they bore :
For sylphs, yet mindful of their ancient race,
Are, as when women, wondrous fond of place.

Behold, four kings in majesty rever'd,
With hoary wiskers and a forked beard ;
And four fair queens, whose hands sustain a
flower,

Th' expressive emblem of their softer power ;
Four knaves in garbs succinct, a trusty band ;
Caps on their heads, and halberts in their hand ;
And party-coloured troops, a shining train ;
Drawn forth to combat on the velvet plain.

The skillful nymph reviews her force with care ;
Let spades be trumps ! she said, and trumps they were.

Now move to war her sable Matadores,
In show like leaders of the swarthy Moors.
Spadillio first, unconquerable lord :
Led off two captive trumps, and swept the board ;
As many more Manillio forc'd to yield,
And march'd a victor from the verdant field.
Him Basto follow'd, but his fate more hard,
Gain'd but one trump, and one Plebeian card.
With his broad sabre next, a chief in years,
The hoary majesty of spades appears,
Puts forth one manly leg, to sight reveal'd,
The rest, his many-colour'd robe conceal'd.
The rebel knave, who dares his prince engage,
Proves the just victim of his royal rage.
Ev'n mighty Pam, that kings and queens o'er-threw,

And mow'd down armies in the fights of Lu,
Sad chance of war ! now destitute of aid,
Falls undistinguish'd by the victor spade !
Thus far both armies to Belinda yield ;
Now to the Baron fate inclines the field.
His warlike Amazon her host invades,
Th' imperial consort of the crown of spades.
The club's black tyrant first her victim died,
Spite of his haughty mien, and barbarous pride :

What boots the regal circle on his head,
His giant limbs in state unwieldy spread :
That long behind he trails his pompous robe,
And, of all monarchs, only grasps the globe ?
The baron now his diamonds pours apace ;
Th' embroider'd king who shows but half his face.

And his refulgent queen with powers combin'd,
Of broken troops an easy conquest find.
Clubs, diamonds, hearts, in wild disorder seen,
With throngs promiscuous strew the level green.
Thus when dispers'd a routed army runs,
Of Asia's troops, and Afric's sable sons,
With like confusion different nations fly,
Of various habit, and of various dye,
The pierc'd battalions disunited fall,
In heaps on heaps ; one fate o'whelms them all.

The knave of diamonds tries his wily arts,
And wins (oh shameful chance !) the queen of hearts.

At this, the blood the virgin's face forsook,
A livid paleness spreads o'er all her look ;
She sees, and trembles at th' approaching ill,
Just in the jaws of ruin, and codille.

And now (as oft in some distempered state)
On one nice trick depends the general fate,
An ace of hearts steps forth : the king unseen
Lurk'd in her hand, and mourn'd his captive
queen :

He springs to vengeance with an eager pace,
And falls like thunder on the prostrate ace.
The nymph exulting fills with shouts the sky ;
The walls, the woods, and long canals reply.

O thoughtless mortals ! ever blind to fate,
Too soon dejected, and too soon elate.
Sudden, these honours shall be snatch'd away,
And curs'd for ever this victorious day.

For lo ! the board with cups and spoons is
crown'd,

The berries crackle, and the mill turns round :
On shining altars of Japan they raise
The silver lamp ; the fiery spirits blaze :
From silver spouts the grateful liquors glide,
While China's earth receives the smoking
tide :

At once they gratify their scent and taste,
And frequent cups prolong the rich repast.
Strait hover round the fair her airy band ;
Some, as she sipp'd, the fuming liquor fann'd ;
Some o'er her lap their careful plumes display'd,
Trembling, and conscious of the rich brocade.
Coffee (which makes the politician wise,
And see through all things with his half-shut
eyes)

Sent up in vapours to the baron's brain
New stratagems, the radiant lock to gain.
Ah cease, rash youth ! desist ere 'tis too late,
Fear the just gods, and think of Scylla's fate !
Chang'd to a bird, and sent to flit in air,
She dearly pays for Nisus injured hair !

But when to mischief mortals bend their will,
How soon they find fit instruments of ill !
Just then, Clarissa drew with tempting grace
A two-edg'd weapon from her shining case

So ladies, in romance, assist their knight,
Present the spear, and arm him for the fight.
He takes the gift with reverence, and extends,
The little engine on his fingers' ends ;
This just behind Belinda's neck he spread,
As o'er the fragrant steams she bends her head.

Swift to the lock a thousand sprites repair,
A thousand wings, by turns, blow back the hair ;
And thrice they twitch'd the diamond in her ear ;
Thrice she look'd back, and thrice the foe drew
near,

Just in that instant, anxious Ariel sought
The close recesses of the virgin's thought :
As on the nosegay in her breast reclin'd,
He watch'd th' ideas rising in her mind,
Sudden he view'd, in spite of all her art,
An earthly lover lurking at her heart.
Amaz'd, confus'd, he found his power expir'd ;
Resign'd to fate, and with a sigh retir'd.

The peer now spreads the glittering forfex
wide,

T' inclose the lock ; now joins it, to divide.
Ev'n then, before the fatal engine clos'd,
A wretched sylph too fondly interpos'd ;
Fate urg'd the sheers, and cut the sylph in twain
(But airy substance soon unites again) ;
The meeting points the sacred hair dis sever
From the fair head, for ever, and for ever !
Then flash'd the living lightning from her eyes,
And screams of horror rend th' affrighted skies.
Not louder shrieks to pitying heaven are cast,
When husbands, or when lapdogs, breathe their
last !

Or when rich China vessels, fall'n from high,
In glittering dust and painted fragments lie !

Let wreaths of triumph now my temples twine
(The victor cry'd), the glorious prize is mine !
While fish in streams or birds delight in air,
Or in a coach and six the British fair,
As long as Atalantis shall be read,
Or the small pillow grace a lady's bed,
While visits shall be paid on solemn days,
When numerous wax-lights in bright order
blaze,

While nymphs take treats, or assignations give,
So long my honour, name, and praise, shall live !
What time would spare, from steel receives its date,

And monuments, like men, submit to fate !
Steel could the labour of the gods destroy.
And strike to dust th' imperial powers of Troy :
Steel could the works of mortal pride confound,
And hew triumphal arches to the ground.
What wonder then, fair nymph ! thy hairs should feel

The conquering force of unresisted steel ?

Canto IV.

But anxious cares the pensive nymph oppress'd,
And secret passions labour'd in her breast.
Not youthful kings in battle seiz'd alive,
Not scornful virgins who their charms survive,

Not ardent lovers robb'd of all their bliss,
 Not ancient ladies when refus'd a kiss,
 Not tyrants fierce that unrepenting die,
 Not Cynthia when her manteau's pinn'd awry,
 E'er felt such rage, resentment, and despair,
 As thou, sad virgin! for thy ravish'd hair.

For, that sad moment, when the sylphs with-drew,

And Ariel weeping from Belinda flew,
 Umbriel, a dusky, melancholy sprite,
 As ever sullied the fair face of light,
 Down to the central earth, his proper scene,
 Repair'd to search the gloomy cave of spleen.

Swift on his sooty pinions flits the gnome,
 And in a vapour reach'd the dismal dome.
 No cheerful breeze this sullen region knows,
 The dreaded east is all the wind that blows.
 Here in a grotto, shelter'd close from air,
 And screen'd in shades from day's detested glare,
 She sighs for ever on her pensive bed,
 Pain at her side, and Megrim at her head,

Two handmaids wait the throne: alike in place,
 But differing far in figure and in face,
 Here stood ill-nature like an ancient maid,
 Her wrinkled form in black and white array'd;
 With store of prayers, for mornings, nights, and noons,

Her hand is fill'd; her bosom with lampoons.
 There Affectation, with a sickly mien,
 Shows in her cheek the roses of eighteen,
 Practis'd to lisp, and hang the head aside,
 Faints into airs, and languishes with pride,
 On the rich quilt sinks with becoming woe
 Wrapt in a gown, for sickness, and for show.
 T' e fair ones feel such maladies as these,
 When each new night-dress gives a new disease.

A constant vapour o'er the palace flies;
 Strange phantoms rising as the mists arise;
 Dreadful, as hermits' dreams in haunted shades,
 Or bright, as visions of expiring maids.
 Now glaring fiends, and snakes on rolling spires,
 Pale spectres, gaping tombs, and purple fires:
 Now lakes of liquid gold, Elysian scenes,
 And crystal domes, and angels in machines.

Unnumber'd throngs on every side are seen,
 Of bodies chang'd to various forms by spleen.
 Here living tea-pots stand, one arm held out,
 One bent; the handle this, and that the spout;
 A pipkin there, like Homer's tripod, walks;
 Here sighs a jar, and there a goose-pie talks;
 Men prove with child, as powerful fancy works,
 And maids, turn'd bottles, call aloud for corks.

Safe past the gnome through this fantastic band,
 A branch of healing spleen-wort in his hand,
 Then thus address'd the power—"Hail, wayward
 queen!

Who rule the sex to fifty from fifteen:
 Parent of vapours, and of female wit,
 Who give th' hysteric, or poetic fit,
 On various tempers act by various ways,
 Make some take physic, others scribble plays;
 Who cause the proud their visits to delay,
 And send the godly in a pet to pray.

3 c

A nymph there is, that all thy power disdains,
 And thousands more in equal mirth maintains.
 But, oh! if e'er thy gnome could spoil a grace,
 Or raise a pimple on a beauteous face,
 Like citron-waters, matrons' cheeks inflame,
 Or change complexions at a losing game;
 If e'er with airy horns I planted heads,
 Or rumpled petticoats, or tumbled beds,
 Or caus'd suspicion where no soul was rude,
 Or discompos'd the head-dress of a prude,
 Or e'er to costive lap-dog gave disease,
 Which not the tears of brightest eyes could ease:
 Hear me, and touch Belinda with chagrin:
 That single act gives half the world the spleen."

The goddess with a discontented air
 Seems to reject him, though she grants his prayer.
 A wondrous bag with both her hands she binds,
 Like that where once Ulysses held the winds;
 There she collects the force of female lungs,
 Sighs, sobs, and passions, and the war of tongues:
 A vial next she fills with fainting fears,
 Soft sorrows, melting griefs, and flowing tears.
 The gnome rejoicing bears her gifts away,
 Spreads his black wings, and slowly mounts to-
 day.

Sunk in Thalestris' arms the nymph he found,
 Her eyes dejected, and her hair unbound.
 Full o'er their heads the swelling bag he rent,
 And all the furies issued at the vent.
 Belinda burns with more than mortal ire,
 And fierce Thalestris fans the rising fire.

"O wretched maid!" she spread her hands, and cried, [plied:]

(While Hampton's echoes, wretched maid! re-
 "Was it for this you took such constant care
 The bodkin, comb, and essence, to prepare?
 For this your locks in paper durance bound,
 For this with torturing irons wreath'd around?
 For this with fillets strain'd your tender head,
 And bravely bore the double loads of lead?
 Gods! shall the rhvisher display your hair,
 While the fops envy, and the ladies stare?
 Honour forbid! at whose unrivall'd shrine
 Ease, pleasure, virtue, all our sex resign.
 Methinks already I your tears survey,
 Already hear the horrid things they say,
 Already see you a degraded toast,
 And all your honour in a whisper lost!
 How shall I, then, your helpless fame defend?
 'Twill then be infamy to seem your friend!
 And shall this prize, th' inestimable prize,
 Expos'd through crystal to the gazing eyes,
 And heighten'd by the diamond's circling rays,
 On that rapacious hand for ever blaze?
 Sooner shall grass in Hyde-Park circus grow,
 And wits take lodgings in the sound of Bow!
 Sooner let earth, air, sea, to chaos fall,
 Men, monkeys, lap-dogs, parrots, perish all!"

She said; then raging to Sir Plume repairs,
 And bids her beau demand the precious hairs:
 (Sir Plume of amber snuff-box justly vain,
 And the nice conduct of a clouded cane,
 With earnest eyes, and round unthinking face,
 He first the snuff-box open'd, then the case,

And thus broke out :—" My Lord, why, what the devil ?

Z—ds ! damn the Lock ! 'Fore Gad, you must be civil !

Plague on't ! 'tis past a jest—nay pr'ythee, pox ! Give her the hair"—he spoke, and rapp'd his box.

" It grieves me much (he replied the peer again), Who speaks so well should ever speak in vain ; But by this Lock, this sacred Lock, I swear (Which never more shall join its parted hair ; Which never more its honours shall renew, Clipp'd from the lovely head where late it grew,) That while my nostrils draw the vital air, This hand, which won it, shall for ever wear." He spoke, and speaking, in proud triumph spread The long-contented honours of her head.

But Umbriel, hateful gnome ! forbears not so ; He breaks the vial whence the sorrows flow.

Then see ! the nymph in beauteous grief appears, Her eyes half-languishing, half-drown'd in tears ; On her heav'd bosom hung her drooping head, Which, with a sigh, she rais'd ; and thus she said :

" For ever curs'd be this detested day, Which snatch'd my best, my favorite curl away ! Happy ! ah, ten times happy had I been, If Hampton-Court these eyes had never seen ! Yet am not I the first mistaken maid

By love of courts to numerous ills betray'd. Oh, had I rather unadmir'd remain'd In some lone isle, or distant northern land ; Where the gilt chariot never marks the way, Where none learn ombre, none e'er taste bohea ! There kept my charms conceal'd from mortal eye, Like roses, that in deserts bloom and die.

What mov'd my mind with youthfull lords to roam ? Oh had I stay'd, and said my prayers at home.

'Twas this, the morning omens seem'd to tell, Thrice from my trembling hand the patch-box fell ;

The tottering china shook without a wind, Nay, Poll sat mute, and Shock was most unkind ! A sylph too warn'd me of the threats of fate, In mystic visions, now believ'd too late !

See the poor remnants of these slighted hairs ! My hand shall rend what ev'n thy rapine spares : These in two sable ringlets taught to break, Once gave new beauties to the snowy neck ; The sister-lock now sits uncouth, alone, And in its fellow's fate foresees its own ; Uncurl'd it hangs, the fatal shears demands, And tempts, once more, thy sacrilegious hands. Oh hadst thou, cruel ! been content to seize Hairs less in sight, or any hairs but these !"

— Canto V.

She said : the pitying audience melt in tears : But fate and Jove had stopp'd the baron's ears. In vain Thalestris with reproach assails, For who can move when fair Belinda fails ? Not half so fix'd the Trojan could remain, While Anna begg'd and Dido rag'd in vain. Then grave Clarissa graceful wav'd her fan ; Silence ensued, and thus the nymph began.

" Say, why are beauties prais'd and honour'd most,

The wise man's passion, and the vain man's toast ? Why deck'd with all that land and sea afford, Why angels call'd, and angel-like ador'd ?

Why round our coaches crowd the white-glov'd beaux ?

Why bows the side-box from its inmost rows ? How vain are all these glories, all our pains, Unless good sense preserve what beauty gains : That men may say, when we the front-box grace Behold the first in virtue as in face !

Oh ! if to dance all night and dress all day, Charm'd the small pox, or chac'd old age away : Who would not scorn what housewife's cares produce,

Or who would learn one earthly thing of use ? To patch, nay ogle, might become a saint ; Nor could it sure be such a sin to paint.

But since, alas ! frail beauty must decay ; Curl'd or uncurl'd, since locks will turn to grey ; Since painted, or not painted, all shall fade,

And she who scorns a man must die a maid ; What then remains, but well our power to use, And keep good humour still, whate'er we lose ? And trust me, dear ! good-humour can prevail, When airs, and flights, and screams, and scolding fail ;

Beauties in vain their pretty eyes may roll ; Charms strike the sight, but merit wins the soul."

So spoke the dame, but no applause ensued ; Belinda frown'd, Thalestris call'd her prude.

To arms, to arms ! the fierce Virago cries, And swift as lightning to the combat flies.

All side in parties, and begin th' attack ; Fans clap, silks rustle, and tough whalebones crack ;

Heroes' and heroines' shouts confus'dly rise, And bass and treble voices strike the skies.

No common weapon in their hands are found ; Like gods they fight, nor dread a mortal wound.

So when bold Homer makes the gods engage, And heavenly breasts with human passions rage ;

'Gainst Pallas, Mars ; Latona, Hermes arms ; And all Olympus rings with loud alarms ;

Jove's thunder roars, heaven trembles all around, Blue Neptune storms, the bellowing deeps resound :

Earth shakes her nodding towers, the ground gives way,

And the pale ghosts start at the flash of day ! Triumphant Umbriel on a scone's height

Clapp'd his glad wings, and sat to view the fight ; Propp'd on their bodkin spears, the sprites survey

The growing combat, or assist the fray.

While through the press enrag'd Thalestris flies,

And scatters death around from both her eyes, A beau and witling perish'd in the throng,

One dy'd in metaphor, and one in song. " O cruel nymph ! a living death I bear,"

Cried Dapperwit, and sunk beside his chair. A mournful glance Sir Fopling upwards cast,

" Those eyes are made so killing — was his last.

Thus on Mæander's flowery margin lies
Th' expiring swan, and as he sings he dies.

When bold Sir Plume had drawn Clarissa down,
Chloe stepp'd in, and kill'd him with a frown;
She smil'd to see the doughty hero slain,
But, at her smile, the beau reviv'd again.

Now Jove suspends his golden scales in air,
Weighs the men's wits against the lady's hair;
The doubtful beam long nods from side to side;
At length the wits mount up, the hairs subside.

See, fierce Belinda on the Baron flies,
With more than usual lightning in her eyes:
Nor fear'd the chief th' unequal fight to try,
Who sought no more than on his foe to die.
But this bold lord, with manly strength endued,
She with one finger and a thumb subdued:
Just where the breath of life his nostrils drew,
A charge of snuff the wily virgin threw;
The gnomes direct, to every atom just,
The pungent grains of titillating dust.
Sudden, with starting tears each eye o'erflows,
And the high dome re-echoes to his nose.

Now meet thy fate, incens'd Belinda cried,
And drew a deadly bodkin from her side.
(The same, his ancient personage to deck,
Her great-great-grand sire wore about his neck,
In three seal-rings; which after, melted down,
Form'd a vast buckle for his widow's gown:
Her infant grandame's whistle next it grew,
The bells she jingled, and the whistle blew;
Then in a bodkin grac'd her mother's hairs,
Which long she wore, and now Belinda wears.)

Boast not my fall (he cried), insulting foe!
Thou by some other shalt be laid as low.
Nor think, to die defects my lofty mind:
All that I dread is leaving you behind!
Rather than so, ah! let me still survive,
And burn in Cupid's flames—but burn alive.

"Restore the Lock," she cries; and all around,
"Restore the Lock!" the vaulted roofs rebound.
Not fierce Othello in so loud a strain
Roar'd for the handkerchief that caus'd his pain.
But see how oft ambitious aims are cross'd,
And chiefs contend till all the prize is lost!
The Lock, obtain'd with guilt, and kept with
pain,

In every place is sought, but sought in vain:
With such a prize no mortal must be blest,
So heaven decrees! with heaven who can contest?

Some thought it mounted to the lunar sphere,
Since all things lost on earth are treasur'd there.
There heroes' wits are kept in ponderous vases,
And beaux in snuff-boxes and tweezer cases:
There broken vows and death-bed alms are found,
And lovers' hearts with ends of ribband bound;
The courtier's promises, and sick man's prayers,
The smiles of harlots, and the tears of heirs,
Cages for gnats, and chains to yoke a flea,
Dried butterflies, and tomes of casuistry.

But trust the muse—she saw it upward rise,
Though mark'd by none but quick, poetic eyes:
(So Rome's great founder to the heavens with-
To Proculus alone confess'd in view;) [drew,

A sudden star, it shot through liquid air,
And drew behind a radiant trail of hair.
Not Berénice's locks first rose so bright,
The heaven bespangling with dishevell'd light.
The sylphs behold it kindling as it flies,
And pleas'd pursue its progress through the skies.

This the beau-monde shall from the Mall survey,

And hail with music its propitious ray.
This the blest lover shall for Venus take,
And send up vows from Rosamonda's lake.
This Partridge* soon shall view in cloudless skies,
When next he looks through Galileo's eyes;
And hence th' egregious wizard shall foredoom
The fate of Louis, and the fall of Rome.

Then cease, bright nymph! to mourn thy ravish'd hair,

Which adds new glory to the shining sphere!
Not all the tresses that fair head can boast,
Shall draw such envy as the Lock you lost.
For, after all the murders of your eye,
When, after millions slain, yourself shall die;
When those fair suns shall set, as set they must,
And all those tresses shall be laid in dust,
This Lock, the muse shall consecrate to fame,
And midst the stars inscribe Belinda's name.

PROLOGUE TO THE SATIRES.

P. SHUT, shut the door, good John! fatigued
I said,

Tie up the knocker, say I'm sick, I'm dead.
The dog-star rages! nay, 'tis past a doubt,
All Bedlam, or Parnassus, is let out:
Fire in each eye, and papers in each hand,
They rave, recite, and madden round the land.

What walls can guard me, or what shades can hide?

They pierce my thickets, through my grot they glide.

By land, by water, they renew the charge;
They stop the chariot, and they board the barge.
No place is sacred, not the church is free,
Ev'n Sunday shines no sabbath-day to me;
Then from the mint walks forth the man of rhyme†,

Happy! to catch me, just at dinner-time.

Is there a parson, much bemus'd in beer,
A maudlin poetess, a rhyming peer,
A clerk, foredoom'd his father's soul to cross,
Who pens a stanza, when he should engross?
Is there, who, lock'd from ink and paper, scrawls
With desperate charcoal round his darken'd walls?

All fly to Twit'nam, and in humble strain
Apply to me, to keep them mad or vain.
Arthur, whose giddy son neglects the laws,
Imputes to me and my damn'd works the cause:
Poor Cornus sees his frantic wife elope,
And curses wit, and poetry, and Pope.

* A foolish star-gazer and prophet.

† A place to which insolvent debtors retired to enjoy an illegal protection.

Friend to my life! (which did you not prolong,
The world had wanted many an idle song),
What drop or nostrum can this plague remove?
Or which must end me, a fool's wrath or love?
A dire dilemma? either way I'm sped;
If foes, they write, if friends, they read me dead.
Seiz'd and tied down to judge, how wretched I?

Who can't be silent, and who will not lie:
To laugh, were want of goodness and of grace;
And to be grave, exceeds all power of face.
I sit with sad civility; I read
With honest anguish and an aching head;
And drop at last, but in unwilling ears,
This saving counsel, "Keep your piece nine years."

"Nine years," cries he, who high in Drury-lane,
Lull'd by soft zephyrs through the broken pane,
Rhymes e'er he wakes, and prints before term ends,

Oblig'd by hunger, and request of friends:
"The piece, you think, is incorrect? why take it;

I'm all submission; what you'd have it, make it."

Three things another's modest wishes bound,
My friendship, and a prologue, and ten pound.

Pitholeon sends to me: "You know his grace,
I want a patron: ask him for a place."

Pitholeon libell'd me—"but here's a letter
Informs you, Sir, 'twas when he knew no better.
Dare you refuse him? Curll invites to dine.
He'll write a journal, or he'll turn divine."

Bless me! a packet.—"'Tis a stranger sues,
A virgin tragedy, an orphan muse."

If I dislike it, "furies, death and rage!"
If I approve, "commend it to the stage."

There (thank my stars) my whole commission ends,

The players and I are, luckily, no friends.

Fir'd that the house reject him, "Sdeath! I'll print it,

And shame the fools—your interest, Sir, with Lintot."

Lintot, dull rogue! will think your price too much:

"Not, Sir, if you revise it, and retouch."

All my demurs but double his attacks:

At last he whispers, "Do; and we go snacks."

Glad of a quarrel; straight I clap the door,

"Sir, let me see your works and you no more."

'Tis sung, when Midas' ears began to spring
(Midas, a sacred person and a king.)

His very minister, who spied them first,

(Some say his queen) was forc'd to speak, or burst.

And is not mine, my friend, a sorer case,

When every coxcomb perks them in my face?

A. Good friend, forbear! you deal in dangerous things,

I'd never name queens, ministers, or kings;

Keep close to ears, and those let asses prick,

'Tis nothing—

P. Nothing? if they bite and kick?

Out with it, Dunciad! let the secret pass,
That secret to each fool, that he's an ass:
The truth once told (and wherefore should we lie?)

The queen of Midas slept, and so may I.

You think this cruel? Take it for a rule,
No creature smarts so little as a fool.

Let peals of laughter, Codrus! round thee break,
Thou unconcern'd canst hear the mighty crack:

Pit box, and gallery, in convulsions hurl'd,
Thou stand'st unshook amidst a bursting world.

Who shames a scribbler? Break one cobweb through,

He spins the slight, self-pleasing thread anew:
Destroy his fib or sophistry; in vain,

The creature's at his dirty work again,
Thron'd on the centre of his thin designs,

Proud of a vast extent of flimsy lines!
Whom have I hurt? has poet yet, or peer,

Lost the arch'd eyebrow, or Parnassian sneer?
And has not Colley still his lord, and whore?

His butchers Henley, his free-masons Moore?
Does not one table Bavius still admit?

Still to one bishop Philips seem a wit?
Still Sappho—Hold! for God's sake—you'll offend,

No names—be calm—learn prudence of a friend:
I too could write, and I am twice as tall;

But foes like these—P. One flatterer's worse than all.

Of all mad creatures if the learn'd are right,
It is the slaver kills, and not the bite.

A fool quite angry is quite innocent:
Alas! 'tis ten times worse when they repent.

One dedicates in high heroic prose,
And ridicules beyond a hundred foes:

One from all Grub-street will my fame defend,
And, more abusive, calls himself my friend.

This prints my letters, that expects a bribe,
And others roar aloud, "Subscribe, subscribe!"

There are, who to my person pay their court:
I cough like Horace, and, though lean, am short.

Ammon's great son one shoulder had too high,
Such Ovid's nose, and, "Sir! you have an eye!"—

Go on, obliging creature, make me see
All that disgrac'd my betters, met in me.

Say for my comfort, languishing in bed,
"Just so immortal Maro held his head;"

And when I die, be sure you let me know
Great Homer died three thousand years ago.

Why did I write? what sin to me unknown
Dipp'd me in ink, my parents', or my own?

As yet a child, nor yet a fool to fame,
I lisp'd in numbers, for the numbers came.

I left no calling for this idle trade,
No duty broke, no father disobey'd: [wife;

The muse but serv'd to ease some friend, no,
To help me through this long disease, my life;

To second, Arbuthnot! thy art and care,
And teach, the being you preserv'd, to bear.

But why then publish? Granville the polite,
And knowing Walsh, would tell me I could write;

Well-natur'd Garth inflam'd with early praise,
And Congreve lov'd, and Swift endur'd my lays ;
The courtly Talbot, Somers, Sheffield read,
Ev'n mitred Rochester would nod the head.
And St. John's self (great Dryden's friends
before),

With open arms receiv'd one poet more.
Happy my studies, when by these approv'd !
Happier their author, when by these belov'd !
From these the world will judge of men and books,

Not from the Burnets, Oldmixons, and Cooks.

Soft were my numbers : who could take offence
While pure description held the place of sense ?
Like gentle Fanny's was my flowery theme,
A painted mistress, or a purling stream.
Yet then did Gildon draw his venal quill ;
I wish'd the man a dinner, and sate still.
Yet then did Dennis rave in furious fret ;
I never answer'd, I was not in debt.
If want provok'd, or madness made them print,
I wag'd no war with bedlam or the mint.

Did some more sober critic come abroad ;
If wrong, I smil'd ; if right, I kiss'd the rod.
Pains, reading, study, are their just pretence,
And all they want is spirit, taste, and sense.
Commas and points they set exactly right,
And 'twere a sin to rob them of their mite.
Yet ne'er one sprig of laurel grac'd these ribalds,
From slashing Bentley down to piddling Tibalds :
Each wight, who reads not, and but scans and spells,

Each word-catcher, that lives on syllables,
Ev'n such small critics some regard may claim,
Preserv'd in Milton's or in Shakspeare's name.
Pretty ! in amber to observe the forms
Of hairs, or straws, or dirt, or grubs, or worms !
The things we know are neither rich nor rare,
But wonder how the devil they got there.

Were others angry : I excus'd them too ;
Well might they rage, I gave them but their
A man's true merit 'tis not hard to find ; [due.
But each man's secret standard in his mind,
That casting-weight pride adds to emptiness,
This, who can gratify ? for who can guess ?
The bard whom pilfer'd pastorals renown,
Who turns a Persian tale for half a crown,
Just writes to make his barrenness appear,
And strains from hard-bound brains, eight lines
a year ;

He, who, still wanting, though he lives on theft,
Steals much, spends little, yet has nothing left :
And he, who, now to sense, now nonsense lean-
ing,

Means not, but blunders round about a meaning :
And he, whose fustian's so sublimely bad,
It is not poetry, but prose run mad :

All these, my modest satire bade translate,
And own'd that nine such poets made a Tate.
How did they fume, and stamp, and roar, and chafe !

And swear, not Addison himself was safe.

Peace to all such ! but were there one whose fires
True genius kindles, and fair fame inspires ;

Blest with each talent and each art to please,
And born to write, converse, and live with ease :
Should such a man, too fond to rule alone,
Bear, like the Turk, no brother near the throne,
View him with scornful, yet with jealous eyes,
And hate for arts that caus'd himself to rise ;
Damn with faint praise, assent with civil leer,
And, without sneering, teach the rest to sneer ;
Willing to wound, and yet afraid to strike,
Just hint a fault, and hesitate dislike ;
Alike reserv'd to blame, or to commend,
A timorous foe, and a suspicious friend ;
Dreading ev'n fools, by flatterers besieg'd,
And so obliging, that he ne'er oblig'd ;
Like Cato, give his little senate laws,
And sit attentive to his own applause ;
While wits and templars every sentence raise,
And wonder with a foolish face of praise—
Who but must laugh, if such a man there be !
Who would not weep, if Atticus were he !

What, though my name stood rubric on the walls,

Or plaster'd posts, with claps, in capitals ?
Or smoking forth a hundred hawkers' load,
On wings of winds came flying all abroad ?
I sought no homage from the race that write ;
I kept, like Asian monarchs, from their sight ;
Poems I heeded (now berhym'd so long)
No more than thou, great George ! a birth-day
song.

I ne'er with wits or witlings pass'd my days,
To spread about the itch of verse and praise ;
Nor, like a puppy, daggled through the town,
To fetch and carry sing-song up and down ;
Nor at rehearsals sweat, and mouth'd and cried,
With handkerchief and orange at my side ;
But, sick of fops, and poetry, and prate,
To Bufo left the whole Castalian state.

Proud as Apollo on his forked hill,
Sate full-blown Bufo, puff'd by every quill ;
Fed with soft dedication all day long,
Horace and he went hand in hand in song.
His library (where busts of poets dead
And a true Pindar stood without a head),
Receiv'd of wits an undistinguish'd race,
Who first his judgment ask'd, and then a place ;
Much they extoll'd his pictures, much his seat,
And flatter'd every day, and some days eat ;
Till, grown more frugal in his riper days,
He paid some bards with port, and some with
praise,

To some a dry rehearsal was assign'd,
And others (harder still) he paid in kind.
Dryden alone (what wonder !) came not nigh,
Dryden alone escap'd this judging eye :
But still the great have kindness in reserve,
He help'd to bury whom he help'd to starve.

May some choice patron bless each grey goosequill !

May every Bavius have his Bufo still !
So when a statesman wants a day's defence,
Or envy holds a whole week's war with sense,
Or simple pride for flattery makes demands,
May dunce by dunce be whistled off my hands.

Blest be the great ! for those they take away,
And those they left me ; for they left me Gay :
Left me to see neglected genius bloom,
Neglected die, and tell it on his tomb :
Of all thy blameless life the sole return
My verse, and Queensberry weeping o'er thy urn !

Oh, let me live my own, and die so too !
(To live and die is all I have to do :)
Maintain a poet's dignity and ease,
And see what friends, and read what books I please :

Above a patron, though I condescend
Sometimes to call a minister my friend.
I was not born for courts or great affairs :
I pay my debts, believe, and say my prayers ;
Can sleep without a poem in my head,
Nor know, if Dennis be alive or dead.

Why am I ask'd what next shall see the light ?
Heavens ! was I born for nothing but to write ?
Has life no joys for me ? or (to be grave)
Have I no friend to serve, no soul to save ?

"I found him close with Swift—indeed ? no doubt

(Cries prating Balbus) something will come
'Tis all in vain, deny it as I will :

"No, such a genius never can lie still ;"
And then for mine obligingly mistakes
The first lampoon Sir Will or Bubo makes.
Poor, guiltless I ! and can I choose but smile,
When every coxcomb knows me by my style ?

Curst be the verse, how well soe'er it flow,
That tends to make one worthy man my foe,
Give virtue scandal, innocence a fear,
Or from the soft-ey'd virgin steal a tear !
But he who hurts a harmless neighbour's peace,
Insults fall'n worth, or beauty in distress,
Who loves a lie, lame slander helps about,
Who writes a libel, or who copies out :
That fop, whose pride affects a patron's name,
Yet absent, wounds an author's honest fame :
Who can your merit selfishly approve,
And show the sense of it without the love ;
Who has the vanity to call you friend,
Yet wants the honour, injur'd, to defend ;
Who tells whate'er you think, whate'er you say,

And, if he lie not, must at least betray :
Who to the dean and silver bell can swear,
And sees at Cannons* what was never there ;
Who reads but with a lust to misapply,
Make satire a lampoon, and fiction lie ;
A lash like mine no honest man shall dread,
But all such babbling blockheads in his stead.

* Pope had been accused of ridiculing in his " Epistle on the Use of Riches," his friend the duke of Chandos. Cannons was the name of his grace's estate. The following is the passage that Pope asserts was improperly applied to the duke's establishment :

And now the Chapel's silver bell you hear,
That summons you to all the pride of prayer :
Light quirks of music, broken and uneven,
Make the soul dance upon a jig to heaven.
On painted ceilings you devoutly stare,
Where sprawl the saints of Verrio and Laguerre,
On gilded clouds in fairy expansion lie,
And bring all paradise before your eye.
To rest, the cushion and soft dean invite,
Who never mentions hell to ears polite.

Let Sporus tremble—A. What ? that thing of silk,

Sporus, that mere white curd of ass's milk ?
Satire of sense, alas ! can Sporus feel ?
Who breaks a butterfly upon a wheel ?

P. Yet let me flap this bug with gilded wings,
This painted child of dirt, that stinks and stings ;

Whose buzz the witty and the fair annoys,
Yet wit ne'er tastes, and beauty ne'er enjoys :
So well-bred spaniels civilly delight
In mumbling of the game they dare not bite.
Eternal smiles his emptiness betray,
As shallow streams run dimpling all the way.
Whether in florid impotence he speaks,
And, as the prompter breathes, the puppet squeaks ;

Or at the ear of Eve, familiar toad,
Half froth, half venom, spits himself abroad,
In puns, or politics, or tales, or lies,
Or spite, or smut, or rhymes, or blasphemies.
His wit all see-saw, between that and this,
Now high, now low, now master up, now miss,
And he himself one vile antithesis.

Amphibious thing ! that, acting either part,
The trifling head ! or the corrupted heart,
Fop at the toilet, flatterer at the board,
Now trips a lady, and now struts a lord.
Eve's temper thus the Rabbins have exprest,
A cherub's face, a reptile all the rest.

Beauty that shocks you, parts that none will trust,
Wit that can creep, and pride that licks the dust.

Not fortune's worshipper, nor fashion's fool,
Not lucre's madman, nor ambition's tool,
Not proud, nor servile ; be one poet's praise,
That, if he pleas'd, he pleas'd by manly ways :
That flattery, ev'n to kings, he held a shame,
And thought a lie in verse or prose the same ;
That not in fancy's maze he wander'd long,
But stoop'd to truth, and moraliz'd his song :
That not for fame, but virtue's better end,
He stood the furious foe, the timid friend,
The damning critic, half-approving wit,
The coxcomb hit, or searing to be hit ;
Laugh'd at the loss of friends he never had,
The dull, the proud, the wicked, and the mad ;
The distant threats of vengeance on his head,
The blow unfelt, the tear he never shed ;
The tale reviv'd, the lie so oft o'erthrown,
Th' imputed trash and dulness not his own ;
The morals blacken'd when the writings 'scape,
The libell'd person, and the pictur'd shape ;
Abuse, on all he lov'd, or lov'd him, spread,
A friend in exile, or a father dead :

The whisper, that, to greatness still too near,
Perhaps, yet vibrates on his sovereign's ear—
Welcome for thee, fair virtue ! all the past :
For thee, fair virtue ! welcome ev'n the last !

A. But why insult the poor, affront the great ?

P. A knave's a knave, to me, in every state :
Alike my scorn, if he succeed or fail ;
Sporus at court, or Japhet in a jail.

A hireling scribbler, or a hireling peer,
Knight of the post corrupt, or of the shire;
If on a pillory, or near a throne,
He gain his prince's ear, or lose his own.

Yet soft by nature, more a dupe than wit,
Sappho can tell you how this man was bit:
This dreaded sat'rist Dennis will confess
Foe to his pride, but friend to his distress:
So humble, he has knock'd at Tibbald's door,
Has drunk with Cibber, nay, has rhym'd for Moore.

Full ten years slander'd, did he once reply? [lie.
Three thousand suns went down on Welsted's
To please his mistress one aspers'd his life;
He lash'd him not, but let her be his wife:
Let Buggell charge low Grub-street on his quill,
And write whate'er he pleas'd, except his will*;
Let the two Curlls of town and court, abuse
His father, mother, body, soul and muse.
Yet why? that father held it for a rule,
It was a sin to call our neighbour fool:
That harmless mother thought no wife a whore,
Hear this, and spare his family, James Moore!
Unspotted names, and memorable long;
If there be force in virtue, or in song.

Of gentle blood (part shed in honour's cause,
While yet in Britain honour had applause)
Each parent sprung—What, fortune, pray—
Their own,

And better got, than Bestia's from the throne.
Born to no pride, inheriting no strife,
Nor marrying discord in a noble wife;
Stranger to civil and religious rage,
The good man walk'd innoxious through his age.
To courts he saw, no suits would ever try,
Nor dar'd an oath, nor hazarded a lie.
Unlearn'd, he knew no schoolmen's subtle art,
No language, but the language of the heart.
By nature honest, by experience wise;
Healthy by temperance, and by exercise;
His life, though long, to sickness past unknown,
His death was instant, and without a groan.
O grant me thus to live, and thus to die!
Who sprung from kings shall know less joy than I.

Oh friend! may each domestic bliss be thine!
Be no unplesing melancholy mine:
Me, let the tender office long engage,
To rock the cradle of reposing age,
With lenient arts extend a mother's breath,
Make languor smile, and smooth the bed of death,

Explore the thought, explain the asking eye,
And keep awhile one parent from the sky!
On cares like these if length of days attend,
May Heaven, to bless those days, preserve my friend,
Preserve him social, cheerful, and serene,
And just as rich as when he serv'd a queen!

A. Whether that blessing be denied or given,
Thus far was right, the rest belongs to Heaven.

* Buggell was suspected of having forged Dr. Tindal's will, by which he came into the possession of a considerable sum of money.

ELOISA TO ABELARD.

In these deep solitudes and awful cells,
Where heavenly-pensive contemplation dwells,
And ever-musing melancholy reigns;
What means this tumult in a vestal's veins?
Why rove my thoughts beyond this last retreat?
Why feels my heart its long forgotten heat?
Yet, yet I love!—From Abelard it came,
And Eloisa yet must kiss the name.

Dear, fatal name! rest ever unreveal'd,
Nor pass these lips in holy silence seal'd;
Hide it, my heart, within that close disguise,
Where, mix'd with God's, his lov'd idea lies:
O, write it not, my hand—the name appears
Already written—wash it out my tears!
In vain lost Eloisa weeps and prays,
Her heart still dictates, and her hand obeys.

Relentless walls! whose darksome round contains Repentant sighs, and voluntary pains:
Ye rugged rocks! which holy knees have worn;
Ye grotts and caverns shagg'd with horrid thorn!
Shrines! where their vigils pale-eyed virgins keep;

And pitying saints, whose statues learn to weep!
Though cold like you, unmov'd and silent grown,
I have not yet forgot myself to stone.
All is not Heaven's while Abelard has part,
Still rebel Nature holds out half my heart:
Nor prayers, nor fasts, its stubborn pulse restrain,
Nor tears, for ages taught to flow in vain.

Soon as thy letters trembling I uncloze,
That well-known name awakens all my woes.
Oh, name for ever sad! for ever dear!
Still breath'd in sighs, still usher'd with a tear.
I tremble too, where'er my own I find,
Some dire misfortune follows close behind.
Line after line my gushing eyes o'erflow,
Led through a sad variety of woe:
Now warm in love, now withering in my bloom,
Lost in a convent's solitary gloom! [flame,
There stern religion quench'd th' unwilling
There died the best of passions, love and fame.

Yet write, oh write me all, that I may join
Griefs to thy griefs, and echo sighs to thine.
Nor foes nor fortune take this power away;
And is my Abelard less kind than they?
Tears still are mine, and those I need not spare,
Love but demands what else were shed in prayer;
No happier task these faded eyes pursue;
To read and weep is all they now can do.

Then share thy pain, allow that sad relief;
Ah, more than share it, give me all thy grief.
Heaven first taught letters for some wretch's aid,
Some banish'd lover, or some captive maid;
They live, they speak, they breathe what love inspires,

Warm from the soul, and faithful to its fires,
The virgin's wish without her fears impart,
Excuse the blush, and pour out all the heart,
Speed the soft intercourse from soul to soul,
And waft a sigh from Indus to the pole. [flame
Thou know'st how guiltless first I met thy

When love approach'd me under friendship's
name ;

My fancy form'd thee of angelic kind,
Some emanation of th' all-beauteous mind.
Those smiling eyes, attenuating every ray,
Shone sweetly lambent with celestial day.
Guiltless I gaz'd ; Heaven listen'd while you sung ;

And truths divine came mended from that tongue.

From lips like those what precept fail'd to move ?
Too soon they taught me 'twas no sin to love :
Back through the paths of pleasing sense I ran,
Nor wish'd an angel whom I lov'd a man.
Dim and remote the joys of saints I see,
Nor envy them that heaven I lose for thee.

How oft, when press'd to marriage, have I said,

Curse on all laws but those which love has made !
Love, free as air, at sight of human ties
Spreads his light wings, and in a moment flies.
Let wealth, let honour, wait the wedded dame,
August her deed, and sacred be her fame ;
Before true passion all those views remove ;
Fame, wealth, and honour ! what are you to
love ?

The jealous god, when we profane his fires,
Those restless passions in revenge inspires,
And bids them make mistaken mortals groan,
Who seek in love for aught but love alone.
Should at my feet the world's great master fall,
Himself, his throne, his world, I'd scorn them all :
Not Cæsar's empress would I deign to prove ;
No, make me mistress to the man I love.

If there be yet another name more free,
More fond than mistress, make me that to thee !
Oh, happy state ! when souls each other draw,
When love is liberty, and nature law :
All then is full, possessing and possess'd,
No craving void left aching in the breast :
Ev'n thought meets thought, ere from the lips it part,

And each warm wish springs mutual from the
heart.

This sure is bliss (if bliss on earth there be)
And once the lot of Abelard and me.

Alas, how chang'd ! what sudden horrors rise !
A naked lover bound and bleeding lies !
Where, where was Eloise ? her voice, her hand,
Her poniard had oppos'd the dire command.
Barbarian, stay ! that bloody stroke restrain ;
The crime was common, common be the pain.
I can no more ; by shame, by rage suppress'd,
Let tears and burning blushes speak the rest.

Canst thou forget that sad, that solemn day,
When victims at yon altar's foot we lay ?
Canst thou forget what tears that moment fell,
When, warm in youth, I bade the world farewell ?

As with cold lips I kiss'd the sacred veil,
The shrines all trembled and the lamps grew pale :

Heaven scarce believ'd the conquest it survey'd,
And saints with wonder heard the vows I made.

Yet then, to those dread altars as I drew,
Not on the cross my eyes were fix'd, but you :
Not grace, or zeal, love only was my call ;
And if I lose thy love, I lose my all.
Come ! with thy looks, thy words, relieve my woe ;
Those still at least are left thee to bestow.
Still on that breast enamour'd let me lie,
Still drink delicious poison from thy eye,
Pant on thy lip, and to thy heart be press'd ;
Give all thou canst—and let me dream the rest.
Ah, no ! instruct me other joys to prize,
With other beauties charm my partial eyes,
Full in my view set all the bright abode,
And make my soul quit Abelard for God.

Ah ! think at least thy flock deserves thy care,
Plants of thy hand, and children of thy prayer.
From the false world in early youth they fled,
By thee to mountains, wilds, and deserts led.
You rais'd these hallow'd walls ; the desert smil'd,
And paradise was open'd in the wild.
No weeping orphan saw his father's stores
Our shrines irradiate, or emblaze the floors ;
No silver saints, by dying misers given,
Here bribe the rage of ill-requited Heaven ;
But such plain roofs as piety could raise,
And only vocal with the Maker's praise.
In these lone walls, (their days' eternal bound,) These moss-grown domes with spiry turrets
crown'd,

Where awful arches make a noon-day night,
And the dim windows shed a solemn light ;
Thy eyes diffus'd a reconciling ray,
And gleams of glory brighten'd all the day.
But now no face divine contentment wears,
'Tis all blank sadness, or continual tears.
See how the force of others' prayers I try,
(O pious fraud of amorous charity !)
But why should I on others' prayers depend ?
Come thou, my father, brother, husband, friend ?
Ah, let thy handmaid, sister, daughter, move,
And all those tender names in one, thy love !
The darksome pines that o'er yon rocks reclind
Wave high, and murmur to the hollow wind,
The wandering streams that shine between the
hills,

The grotts that echo to the tinkling rills,
The dying gales that pant upon the trees,
The lakes that quiver to the curling breeze ;
No more these scenes my meditation aid
Or lull to rest the visionary maid :
But o'er the twilight groves and dusky caves,
Long-sounding aisles, and intermingled graves,
Black melancholy sits, and round her throws
A death-like silence, and a dread repose ;
Her gloomy presence saddens all the scene,
Shades every flower and darkens every green ;
Deepens the murmur of the falling floods,
And breathes a browner horror on the woods.

Yet here for ever, ever must I stay ;
Sad proof how well a lover can obey !
Death, only death, can break the fasting chain ;
And here, ev'n then, shall my cold dust remain ;
Here all its frailties, all its flames resign,
And wait till 'tis no sin to mix with thine

Ah, wretch ! believ'd the spouse of God in
vain,
Confess'd within the slave of love and man.
Assist me, Heaven ! but whence arose that prayer ?

Sprung it from piety, or from despair ?
Ev'n here where frozen chastity retires,
Love finds an altar for forbidden fires.
I ought to grieve, but cannot what I ought ;
I mourn the lover, not lament the fault ;
I view my crime, but kindle at the view,
Repent old pleasures, and solicit new ;
Now turn'd to Heaven, I weep my past offence,
Now think of thee, and curse my innocence.
Of all affliction taught a lover yet,
'Tis sure the hardest science to forget !
How shall I lose the sin, yet keep the sense,
And love th' offender, yet detest th' offence ?
How the dear object from the crime remove,
Or how distinguish penitence from love ?
Unequal task ! a passion to resign,
For hearts so touch'd, so pierc'd, so lost as mine !
Ere such a soul regains its peaceful state,
How often must it love, how often hate !
How often hope, despair, resent, regret,
Conceal, disdain,—do all things but forget !
But let Heaven seize it, all at once 'tis fir'd :
Not touch'd, but rapt ; not waken'd, but in-spir'd !

Oh ! come, oh, teach me nature to subdue,
Renounce my love, my life, myself—and you.
Fill my fond heart with God alone, for he Alone can rival, can succeed to thee.

How happy is the blameless vestal's lot ;
The world forgetting, by the world forgot !
Eternal sun-shine of the spotless mind !
Each prayer accepted, and each wish resign'd ;
Labour and rest that equal periods keep ;
" Obedient slumbers that can wake and weep ;"
Desires compos'd, affections ever even ;
Tears that delight, and sighs that waft to heaven.

Grace shines around her with serenest beams,
And whispering angels prompt her golden
dreams.

For her th' unfading rose of Eden blooms,
And wings of seraphs shed divine perfumes ;
For her the spouse prepares the bridal ring ;
For her white virgins hymenæals sing :
To sounds of heavenly harps she dies away,
And melts in visions of eternal day.

Far other dreams my erring soul employ,
Far other raptures of unholy joy :
When, at the close of each sad, sorrowing day,
Fancy restores what vengeance snatch'd away,
Then conscience sleeps, and leaving nature free,
All my loose soul unbounded springs to thee.
O curse, dear horrors of all-conscious night !
How glowing guilt exalts the keen delight !
Provoking demons all restraint remove,
And stir within me every source of love.
I hear thee, view thee, gaze o'er all thy charms,
And round thy phantom glue my claspings arms.

3 M

I wake :—no more I hear, no more I view,
The phantom flies me, as unkind as you.
I call aloud ; it hears not what I say :
I stretch my empty arms ; it glides away.
To dream once more I close my willing eyes ;
Ye soft illusions, dear deceits, arise !
Alas, no more ! methinks we wandering go Through dreary wastes, and weep each other's woe,
Where round some mouldering tower pale ivy
creeps,
And low-brow'd rocks hang nodding o'er the deeps.

Sudden you mount, you beckon from the skies :
Clouds interpose, waves roar, and winds arise.
I shriek, start up, the same sad prospect find,
And wake to all the griefs I left behind.

For thee the fates, severely kind, ordain
A cool suspense from pleasure and from pain ;
Thy life a long dead calm of fix'd repose :
No pulse that riots, and no blood that glows.
Still as the sea, ere winds were taught to blow,
Or moving spirit bade the waters flow ;
Soft as the slumbers of a saint forgiven,
And mild as opening gleams of promis'd heaven.

Come, Abelard ! for what hast thou to dread ?
The torch of Venus burns not for the dead.
Nature stands check'd ; religion disapproves ;
Ev'n thou art cold—yet Eloisa loves.

Ah, hopeless, lasting flames ! like those that burn
To light the dead, and warm th' unfruitful urn.

What scenes appear where'er I turn my view !
The dear ideas, where I fly, pursue,
Rise in the grove, before the altar rise,
Stain all my soul, and wanton in my eyes.
I waste the matin lamp in sighs for thee,
Thy image steals between my God and me,
Thy voice I seem in every hymn to hear,
With every bead I drop too soft a tear.
When from the censor clouds of fragrance roll,
And swelling organs lift the rising soul,
One thought of thee puts all the pomp to flight,
Priests, tapers, temples, swim before my sight :
In seas of flame my plunging soul is drown'd,
While altars blaze, and angels tremble round.

While prostrate here in humble grief I lie,
Kind, virtuous drops just gathering in my eye,
While, praying, trembling, in the dust I roll,
And dawning grace is opening on my soul :
Come, if thou dar'st, all-charming as thou art !
Oppose thyself to Heaven ; dispute my heart ;
Come, with one glance of those deluding eyes
Blot out each bright idea of the skies ;
Take back that grace, those sorrows, and those
tears ;

Take back my fruitless penitence and prayers ;
Snatch me, just mounting, from the blest abode ;
Assist the gods, and tear me from my God !

No, fly me, fly me, far as pole from pole ;
Rise Alps between us ! and whole oceans roll !
Ah, come not, write not, think not once of me,
Nor share one pang of all I felt for thee.
Thy oaths I quit, thy memory resign ;
Forget, renounce me, hate what'er was mine,

Fair eyes, and tempting looks (which yet I view !)

Long lov'd, ador'd ideas, all adieu !
O, grace serene ! O virtue heavenly fair !
Divine oblivion of low-thoughted care !
Fresh-blooming hope, gay daughter of the sky !

And faith, our early immortality !
Enter, each mild, each amicable guest ;
Receive and wrap me in eternal rest !

See in her cell sad Eloisa spread,
Propt on some tomb, a neighbour of the dead.
In each low wind methinks a spirit calls,
And more than echoes talk along the walls.
Here, as I watch'd the dying lamps around,
From yonder shrine I heard a hollow sound.
"Come sister, come !" (it said, or seem'd to say)
"Thy place is here, sad sister, come away !
Once like thyself, I trembled, wept, and pray'd,
Love's victim then, though now a sainted maid :
But all is calm in this eternal sleep ;
Here grief forgets to groan, and love to weep :
Ev'n superstition loses every fear ;
For God, not man, absolves our frailties here."

I come, I come ! prepare your roseate bowers,
Celestial palms, and ever-blooming flowers.
Thither, where sinners may have rest, I go,
Where flames refin'd in breasts seraphic glow ;
Thou, Abelard ! the last sad office pay,
And smooth my passage to the realms of day ;
See my lips tremble, and my eye-balls roll,
Suck my last breath, and catch my flying soul.
Ah, no—in sacred vestments may'st thou stand,
The hollow'd taper trembling in thy hand,
Present the cross before my lifted eye,
Teach me at once, and learn of me to die.
Ah then, thy once-lov'd Eloisa see !
It will be then no crime to gaze on me.
See from my cheek the transient roses fly !
See the last sparkle languish in my eye !
Till every motion, pulse, and breath be o'er ;
And ev'n my Abelard to lov'd no more.
Oh death all eloquent ! you only prove
What dust we doat on, when 'tis man we love.

Then too, when fate shall thy fair frame destroy,
(That cause of all my guilt, and all my joy.)
In trance ecstatic may thy pangs be drown'd,
Bright clouds descend, and angels watch thee
round,

From opening skies may streaming glories shine,
And saints embrace thee with a love like mine !

May one kind grave unite each hapless name,
And graft my love immortal on thy fame !

Then, ages hence, when all my woes are o'er,
When this rebellious heart shall beat no more ;
If ever chance two wandering lovers brings
To Paraclete's white walls and silver springs,
O'er the pale marble shall they join their heads,
And drink the falling tears each other sheds ;
Then sadly say with mutual pity mov'd,
"O, may we never love as these have lov'd !"
From the full choir, when loud hosannas rise,
And swell the pomp of dreadful sacrifice,

Amid that scene if some relenting eye
Glance on the stone where our cold relics lie, Devotion's self shall steal a thought from heaven,

One human tear shall drop, and be forgiven.
And sure if fate some future hard shall join
In sad similitude of griefs to mine,
Condemn'd whole years in absence to deplore,
And image charms he must behold no more ;
Such if there be, who loves so long, so well ;
Let him our sad, our tender story, tell !
The well-sung woes will soothe my pensive ghost ;

He best can paint them who shall feel them most.

ELEGY TO THE MEMORY OF AN UNFORTUNATE LADY.
WHAT beckoning ghost, along the moonlight
shade,

Invites my steps, and points to yonder glade ?
'Tis she !—but why that bleeding bosom gor'd,
Why dimly gleams the visionary sword ?
Oh ever beauteous, ever friendly ! tell,
Is it in heaven, a crime to love too well ?
To bear too tender, or too firm a heart,
To act a lover's or a Roman's part ?
Is there no bright reversion in the sky,
For those who greatly think, or bravely die ?

Why bade ye else, ye Powers ! her soul aspire

Above the vulgar flight of low desire ?
Ambition first sprung from your blest abodes ;
The glorious fault of angels and of gods :
Thence to their images on earth it flows,
And in the breasts of kings and heroes glows.
Most souls, 'tis true, but peep out once an age,
Dull sullen prisoners in the body's cage :
Dim lights of life, that burn a length of years,
Useless, unseen, as lamps in sepulchres ;
Like eastern kings a lazy state they keep,
And close confin'd to their own palace, sleep.

From these perhaps (ere nature bade her die)
Fate snatch'd her early to the pitying sky.

As into air the purer spirits flow,
And separate from their kindred dregs below ;
So flew the soul to its congenial place,
Nor left one virtue to redeem her race.

But thou, false guardian of a charge too good,
Thou mean deserter of thy brother's blood !
See on these ruby lips the trembling breath,
These cheeks now fading at the blast of death ;
Cold is that breast which warm'd the world before,

And those love-darting eyes must roll no more.
Thus, if eternal justice rules the ball, [fall :
Thus shall your wives, and thus your children
On all the line a sudden vengeance wait,
And frequent hearers shall besiege your gates ;
There passengers shall stand, and pointing say,
(While the long funerals blacken all the way)
Lo ! these were they, whose souls the furies
steel'd,

And curst with hearts unknowing how to yield.

Thus unlamented pass the proud away,
The gaze of fools, and pageant of a day!
So perish all, whose breasts ne'er learn'd to glow
For others good, or melt at others woe.

What can atone (oh, ever-injur'd shade!)
Thy fate unpitied, and thy rites unpaid?
No friend's complaint, no kind domestic tear
Pleas'd thy pale ghost or grac'd thy mournful bier:

By foreign hands thy dying eyes were closed,
By foreign hands thy decent limbs composed,
By foreign hands thy humble grave adorned,
By strangers honoured, and by strangers mourn-
ed!

What though no friends in sable weeds appear;
Grieve for an hour, perhaps, then mourn a year,
And bear about the mockery of woe
To midnight dances and the public show?
What though no weeping loves thy ashes grace,
Nor polish'd marble emulate thy face?
What though no sacred earth allow thee room,
Nor hallow'd dirge be mutter'd o'er thy tomb?
Yet shall thy grave with rising flowers be drest,
And the green turf lie lightly on thy breast:
There shall the morn her earliest tears bestow,
There the first roses of the year shall blow;
While angels with their silver wings o'ershade
The ground now sacred by thy relics made.

So, peaceful rests, without a stone, a name,
What once had beauty, titles, wealth, and fame.
How lov'd, how honour'd once, avails thee not,
To whom related, or by whom begot;
A heap of dust alone remains of thee,
'Tis all thou art, and all the proud shall be!

Poets themselves must fall, like those they sung, [tongue,
Deaf the prais'd ear, and mute the tuneful
Ev'n he, whose soul now melts in mournful lays Shall shortly want the generous tear he pays;
Then from his closing eyes thy form shall part,
And the last pang shall tear thee from his heart,
Life's idle business at one gasp be o'er,
The Muse forgot, and thou belov'd no more!

TO MR. GAY,

WHO HAD CONGRATULATED MR. POPE ON FINISHING HIS HOUSE AND GARDENS.

AM, friend! 'tis true—this truth you lovers
know—

In vain my structures rise, my gardens grow,
In vain fair Thames reflects the double scenes
Of hanging mountains, and of sloping greens:
Joy lives not here, to happier seats it flies,
And only dwells where Wortley casts her eyes.
What are the gay parterre, the chequer'd shade,
The morning bower, the evening colonnade,
But soft recesses of uneasy minds,
To sigh unheard in, to the passing winds?
So the struck deer in some sequester'd part
Lies down to die, the arrow at his heart,
He, stretch'd, unseen, in covert hid from day,
Bleeds drop by drop, and pants his life away.

PROLOGUE TO MR. ADDISON'S TRAGEDY OF CATO.

To wake the soul by tender strokes of art,
To raise the genius, and to mend the heart;
To make mankind in conscious virtue bold,
Live o'er each scene, and be what they behold:
For this the Tragic Muse first trod the stage,
Commanding tears to stream through every age;
Tyrants no more their savage nature kept,
And foes to virtue wonder'd how they wept.
Our author shuns by vulgar springs to move
The hero's glory, or the virgin's love;
In pitying love, we hut our weakness show,
And wild ambition well deserves its woe.
Here tears shall flow from a more generous cause,
Such tears as patriots shed for dying laws:
He bids your breasts with ancient ardour rise,
And calls forth Roman drops from British eyes.
Virtue confess'd in human shape he draws,
What Plato thought, and godlike Cato was:
No common object to your sight displays,
But what with pleasure Heaven itself surveys,
A brave man struggling in the storms of fate,
And greatly falling with a falling state.
While Cato gives his little senate laws,
What bosom beats not in his country's cause?
Who sees him act, but envies every deed?
Who hears him groan, and does not wish to bleed?
Ev'n when proud Cæsar midst triumphal cars,
The spoils of nations, and the pomp of wars,
Ignobly vain, and impotently great,
Show'd Rome her Cato's figure drawn in state:
As her dead father's reverend image past,
The pomp was darken'd, and the day o'ercast;
The triumph ceas'd, tears gush'd from ev'ry
eye;

The world's great victor pass'd unheeded by;
Her last good man dejected Rome ador'd,
And honour'd Cæsar's less than Cato's sword.
Britons, attend: be worth like this approv'd,
And show, you have the virtue to be mov'd.
With honest scorn the first fam'd Cato view'd
Rome learning arts from Greece, whom she subdued;

Your scene precariously subsists too long
On French translation, and Italian song.
Dare to have sense yourselves; assert the stage,
Be justly warm'd with your own native rage;
Such plays alone should win a British ear,
As Cato's self had not disdain'd to hear.

EPISTLE TO ROBERT EARL OF OXFORD, AND EARL MORTIMER.

Sent to the Earl of Oxford, with Dr. Parnell's Poems published by our Author, after the Earl's imprisonment in the Tower, and Retreat into the Country, in the Year 1721.

SUCH were the notes thy once-lov'd poet sung,
Till Death untimely stopp'd his tuneful tongue.
Oh just beheld, and lost! admir'd, and mourn'd!
With softest manners, gentlest arts adorn'd!
Blest in each science, blest in every strain!
Dear to the Muse! to Harley dear—in vain!

For him, thou oft hast bid the world attend,
Fond to forget the statesman in the friend;

For Swift and him, despis'd the farce of state,
The sober follies of the wise and great ;
Dext'rous, the craving, fawning crowd to quit,
And pleas'd to 'scape from flattery to wit.

Absent or dead, still let a friend be dear,
(A sigh the absent claims, the dead a tear,) Recall those nights that clos'd thy toilsome days,
Still hear thy Parnell in his living lays,
Who, careless now of interest, fame or fate,
Perhaps forgets that Oxford e'er was great ;
Or, deeming meanest what we greatest call,
Beholds thee glorious only in thy fall.

And sure, if aught below the seats divine
Can touch immortals, 'tis a soul like thine :
A soul supreme, in each hard instance tried,
Above all pain, all passion, and all pride,
'The rage of power, the blast of public breath,
The lust of lucre, and the dread of death.

In vain to deserts thy retreat is made ;
The Muse attends thee to thy silent shade :
'Tis hers, the brave man's latest steps to trace,
Rejudge his acts, and dignify disgrace,
When interest calls off all her sneaking train,
And all th' oblig'd desert, and all the vain ;
She waits, or to the scaffold, or the cell,
When the last lingering friend has bid farewell.
Ev'n now, she shades thy evening-walk with bays,
(No hireling she, no prostitute to praise) ;
Ev'n now, observant of the parting ray,
Eyes the calm sun-set of thy various day,
Through fortune's cloud one truly great can see,
Nor fears to tell, that Mortimer is he.

THE DUNCIAD.

[Book IV.]

YET, yet a moment, one dim ray of light
Indulge, dread chaos, and eternal night !
Of darkness visible so much be lent,
As half to show, half veil the deep intent.
Ye powers ! whose mysteries restor'd I sing,
To whom time bears me on his rapid wing,
Suspend a while your force inertly strong,
Then take at once the poet and the song.

Now flam'd the dog-star's unpropitious ray,
Smote every brain, and wither'd every bay ;
Sick was the sun, the owl forsook his bower,
The moon-struck prophet felt the madding hour :
Then rose the seed of chaos, and of night,
To blot out order, and extinguish light,
Of dull and venal a new world to mould,
And bring Saturnian days of lead and gold.

She mounts the throne ; her head a cloud conceal'd,

In broad effulgence all below reveal'd
('Tis thus aspiring Dulness ever shines)

Soft on her lap her laureate son^a reclines.

Beneath her foot-stool, science groans in chains,

And wit dreads exile, penalties, and pains.

There foam'd rebellious logic, gagg'd and bound ;
There, stript, fair rhetoric languish'd on the ground,

His blunted arms by sophistry are borne,
And shameless Billingsgate her robes adorn.
Morality, by her false guardians drawn,
Chicane in furs, and casuistry in lawn,
Gasps, as they straiten at each end the cord,
And dies, when Dulness gives her page the word.
Mad Matheſis alone was unconfin'd,
Too mad for mere material chains to bind,
Now to pure space lifts her ecstatic stare,
Now running round the circle, finds it square.
But held in tenfold bonds the muses lie,
Watch'd both by envy's and by flattery's eye ;
There to her heart sad tragedy address
The dagger wont to pierce the tyrant's breast ;
But sober history restrain'd her rage,
And promis'd vengeance on a barbarous age.
There sunk Thalia, nerveless, cold, and dead,
Had not her sister Satire held her head
Nor could'st thou, Chesterfield ! a tear refuse,
Thou wept'st, and with thee wept each gentle muse.

When lo ! a harlot form soft sliding by,
With mincing step, small voice and languid eye :
Foreign her air, her robe's discordant pride
In patchwork fluttering, and her head aside ;
By singing peers upheld on either hand,
She tripp'd and laugh'd, too pretty much to stand :

Cast on the prostrate Nine a scornful look.

Then thus in quaint recitativo spoke.

O Cara ! Cara ! silence all that train :

Joy to great chaos ! let division reign :

Chromatic tortures soon shall drive them hence,
Break all their nerves, and fritter all their sense :

One trill shall harmonise joy, grief and rage,
Wake the dull church, and lull the ranting stage :

To the same notes thy sons shall hum, or snore,
And all thy yawning daughters cry, encore.

Another Phœbus, thy own Phœbus, reigns,
Joys in my jigs, and dances in my chains.
But soon, ah soon, rebellion will commence,
If music meanly borrows aid from sense :

Strong in new arms, lo ! giant Handel stands,
Like bold Briareus, with a hundred hands ;
To stir, to rouse, to shake the soul he comes,
And Jove's own thunders follow Mars's drums.
Arrest him, empress, or you sleep no more—
She heard, and drove him to th' Hibernian shore.

And now had fame's posterior trumpet blown,
And all the nations summon'd to the throne.

The young, the old, who feel her inward sway,
One instinct seizes, and transports away.

None need a guide, by sure attraction led,

And strong impulsive gravity of head :

None want a place, for all their centre found,

Hung to the goddess, and coher'd around.

Not closer orb in orb, conglob'd are seen

The buzzing bees about their dusky queen.

The gathering number, as it moves along,

Involves a vast involuntary throng,

Who, gently drawn, and struggling less and less,

Roll in her vortex, and her power confess.

^a Colley Cibber.

Not those alone who passive own her laws,
But who, weak rebels, more advance her cause.
Whate'er of dunce in college or in town
Sneers at another, in toupee or gown;
Whate'er of mongrel no one class admits,
A wit with dunces, and a dunce with wits.

Nor absent they, no members of her state,
Who pay her homage in her sons, the great;
Who, false to Phœbus, bow the knee to Baal;
Or impious, preach his word without a call,
Patrons, who sneak from living worth to dead,
Withhold the pension, and set up the head;
Or vest dull flattery in the sacred gown;
Or give from foot to fool the laurel crown.
And (last and worse) with all the cant of wit,
Without the soul, the muses hypocrite.

There march'd the bard and blockhead side
by side,

Who rhym'd for hire, and patroniz'd for pride.
Narcissus, prais'd with all a parson's power,
Look'd a white lily sunk beneath a shower.
There mov'd Montalto* with superior air;
His stretch'd-out arm display'd a volume fair;
Courtiers and patriots in two ranks divide,
Through both he pass'd, and bow'd from side to
side:

But as in graceful act, with awful eye,
Compos'd he stood, bold Benson† thrust him by:
On two unequal crutches propt he came,
Milton's on this, on that one Johnston's name.
The decent knight retir'd with sober rage,
Withdrew his hand, and clos'd the pompous page.
But (happy for him as the times went then)
Appear'd Apollo's mayor and aldermen,
On whom three hundred gold-capt youths await,
To lug the ponderous volume off in state.

When Dulness smiling, "Thus revive the wits!

But murder first, and mince them all to bits;
As erst Medea (cruel, so to save!)
A new edition of old Æson gave;
Let standard-authors, thus, like trophies borne,
Appear more glorious, as more hack'd and torn.
And you, my critics! in the chequer'd shade,
Admire new light through holes yourselves have made.

"Leave not a foot of verse, a foot of stone,
A page, a grave, that they can call their own;
But spread, my sons, your glory thin or thick,
On passive paper, or on solid brick.
So by each bard, an alderman shall sit,
A heavy lord shall hang at every wit,
And while on Fame's triumphal car they ride,
Some slave of mine be pinion'd to their side."

Now crowds on crowds around the goddess press,
Each eager to present the first address.
Dunce scorning dunce beholds the next advance,
But fop shows fop superior complaisance.
When lo! a spectre rose, whose index-hand
Held forth by virtue of the dreadful wand;

His beaver'd brow a birchen garland wears,
Dropping with infant's blood, and mother's tears.
O'er every vein a shuddering horror runs;
Eaton and Winton shake through all their sons.
All flesh is humbled, Westminster's bold race
Shrink, and confess the genius of the place:
The pale boy-senator yet tingling stands,
And holds his breeches close with both his hands.

Then thus: "Since man from beast by words is known,

Words are man's province, words we teach alone.
When reason doubtful, like the Samian letter*,
Points him two ways, the narrower is the better.
Placed at the door of learning, youth to guide,
We never suffer it to stand too wide.

To ask, to guess, to know, as they commence
As fancy opens the quick springs of sense,
We ply the memory, we load the brain,
Blind rebel wit, and double chain on chain,
Confine the thought, to exercise the breath;
And keep them in the pale of words till death.
Whate'er the talents, or howe'er design'd,
We hang one jingling padlock on the mind:
A poet the first day, he dips his quill;
And what the last? a very poet still.

Pity! the charm works only in our wall,
Lost, lost too soon in yonder house or hall.
There truant Windham every muse gave o'er,
There Talbot sunk, and was a wit no more!
How sweet an Ovid, Murray was our boast!
How many martials were in Pulteney lost!
Else sure some bard, to our eternal praise,
In twice ten thousand rhyming nights and days,
Had reach'd the work, the all that mortal can;
And South beheld that masterpiece of mant.

"Oh! (cry'd the goddess) 'for some pedant reign!
Some gentle James, to bless the land again;
To stick the Doctor's chair into the throne,
Give law to words, or war with words alone,
Senates and courts with Greek and Latin rule,
And turn the council to a Grammar School!
For sure, if dulness sees a grateful day,
'Tis in the shade of arbitrary sway.
O! if my sons may learn one earthly thing,
Teach but that one, sufficient for a king;
That which my priests, and mine alone, maintain,

Which, as it dies, or lives, we fall, or reign:
May you, my Cam, and Isis, preach it long,
"The Right Divine of Kings to govern wrong."

Prompt at the call, around the goddess roll
Broad hats, and hoods, and caps, a sable shoal:
Thick and more thick the black blockade extends,

A hundred head of Aristotle's friends.
Nor wert thou, Isis! wanting to the day,
[Though Christ-church long kept prudishly
away.]

Each staunch polemic, stubborn as a rock,
Each fierce logician, still expelling Locke,

* Sir Thomas Haxner, a commentator on Shakespeare.

† Mr. Benson encouraged translations of Milton, and patronized Arthur Johnston's version of the Psalms.

* The letter Y, used by Pythagoras as an emblem of the different roads of vice and virtue.

† An epigram: Dr. South thought a perfect epigram as difficult as an epic poem.

Came whip and spur, and dash'd through thin
and thick

On German Crouzaz, and Dutch Burgersdyck.
As many quit the streams that murmuring fall
To lull the sons of Margaret and Clare-hall,
Where Bentley late tempestuous wont to sport
In troubled waters, but now sleeps in port.
Before them march'd that awful Aristarch;
Plough'd was his front with many a deep remark,
His hat, which never vail'd to human pride,
Walker with reverence took, and laid aside.
Low bow'd the rest: he, kingly, did but nod:
So upright Quakers please both man and God.
Mistress! dismiss that rabble from your throne:
Avant — is Aristarchus yet unknown?
The mighty scholiast, whose unweary'd pains
Made Horace dull, and humbled Milton's strains.
Turn what they will to verse, their toil is vain,
Critics like me shall make it prose again.
Roman and Greek grammarians! know your
better:

Author or something yet more great than letter;
While tow'ring o'er your alphabet like Saul
Stands our Digamma*, and o'ertops them all.
'Tis true, on words is still our whole debate,
Disputes of me or te, or aut or at,
To sound or sink in canto O or A,
Or give up Cicero to C or K.
Let Friend affect to speak as Terence spoke,
And Alsop never but like Horace joke:
For me, what Virgil, Pliny may deny,
Manilius or Solinus shall supply:
For Attic phrase in Plato let them seek,
I poach in Suidas for unlicens'd Greek.
In ancient sense if any needs will deal,
Be sure I give them fragments, not a meal;
What Gellius or Stobæus hash'd before,
Or chew'd by blind old scholiasts o'er and o'er,
The critic eye, that microscope of wit,
Sees hairs and pores, examines hit by hit:
How parts relate to parts, or they to whole;
The body's harmony, the beaming soul,
Are things which Kuster, Burman, Waffe shall
see,

When man's whole frame is obvious to a flea.

Ah, think not, mistress! more true dullness lies
In folly's cap, than wisdom's grave disguise.
Like buoys, that never sink into the flood,
On learning's surface we but lie and nod,
Thine is the genuine head of many a house,
And much divinity without a Novus.
Nor could a Barrow work on every block,
Nor has one Atterbury spoil'd the flock.
See! still thy own, the heavy canon roll,
And metaphysic smokes involve the pole.
For thee we dim the eye, and stuff the head
With all such reading as was never read:
For thee explain a thing till all men doubt it,
And write about it, goddess, and about it:
So spins the silk-worm small its slender store,
And labours, till it clouds itself all o'er.

* This alludes to Bentley's boasted restoration of the Eolic Digamma, in his long projected edition of Homer. Pope calls it something more than letter, on account of its size, being one Gamma set upon the shoulders of another. — Warburton.

What though we let some better sort of fool
Thrid ev'ry science, run through every school?
Never by tumbler through the hoops was shown
Such skill in passing all and touching none.
He may indeed (if sober all this time)

Plague with dispute, or persecute with rhyme.
We only furnish what he cannot use,
Or wed to what he must divorce, a muse:
Full in the midst of Euclid dip at once,
And petrify a genius to a dunce;
Or set on metaphysic ground to prance,
Show all his paces not a step advance.
With the same cement, ever sure to bind,
We bring to one dead level every mind.
Then take him to develope if you can,
And hew the block off, and get out the man.
But wherefore waste I words? I see advance
Whore, pupil, and lac'd governor, from France.
Walker! our hat—nor more he deign'd to say,
But stern as Ajax's spectre, strode away.

In flow'd at once a gay embroider'd race,
And tittering push'd the pedants off the place:
Some would have spoken, but the voice was drown'd

By the French horn, or by the opening hound,
The first came forwards, with as easy mien,
As if he saw St. James's and the Queen.
When thus th' attendant orator begun,
Receive, great empress! thy accomplish'd son:

Thine from the birth, and sacred from the rod,
A dauntless infant! never scar'd with God.
The sire saw one by one, his virtues wake:
The mother begg'd the blessing of a rake.
Thou gav'st that ripeness, which so soon began,
And ceas'd so soon, he ne'er was boy, nor man.
Through school and college, thy kind cloud o'ercast.

Safe and unseen the young Æneas past:
Thence bursting glorious, all at once let down,
Stunn'd with his giddy larum half the town.
Intrepid then, o'er seas and lands he flew:
Europe he saw, and Europe saw him too.
There all thy gifts and graces we display,
Thou, only thou, directing all our way:
To where the Seine, obsequious as she runs,
Pours at great Bourbon's feet her silken sons:
Or Tyber, now no longer Roman, rolls,
Vain of Italian arts, Italian souls:
To happy convents, bosom'd deep in vines,
Where slumber abbots, purple as their wines:
To isles of fragrance, lily-silver'd vales,
Diffusing languor in the panting gales:
To lands of singing, or of dancing slaves,
Love-whispering woods, and lute-resounding waves.

But chief her shrine where naked Venus keeps,
And Cupids ride the Lion of the deeps,
Where, eas'd of fleets, the Adriatic main
Wafts the smooth eusuch and enamour'd swain.
Led by my hand, he saunter'd Europe round,
And gather'd every vice on Christian ground;
Saw every court, heard every king declare
His royal sense of operas, or the fair;

The stews and palace equally explor'd,
Intrigued with glory, and with spirit whor'd ;
Tried all hors d'œuvres, all liqueurs defin'd
Judicious drank, and greatly-daring din'd ;
Dropt the dull lumber of the Latin store,
Spoil'd his own language, and acquir'd no more ;
All classic learning lost on classic ground ;
And last turn'd air, the echo of a sound :
See now, half cur'd and perfectly well-bred,
With nothing but a solo in his head ;
As much estate, and principle, and wit,
As Jansen, Fleetwood, Cibber, shall think fit ;
Stol'n from a duel, follow'd by a nun,
And, if a borough choose him, not undone !
See, to my country happy I restore
This glorious youth, and add one Venus more.
Her too receive (for her my soul adores),
So may the sons of sons of sons of whores
Prop thine, O empress ! like each neighbour
throne,

And make a long posterity thy own.
Pleas'd she accepts the hero and the dame,
Wraps in her veil, and frees from sense or shame.

Then look'd and saw a lazy, lolling sort,
Unseen at church, at senate, or at court,
Of ever-listless loiterers, that attend
No cause, no trust, no duty, and no friend.
Thee too, my Paridel ! she mark'd thee there,
Stretch'd on the rack of a too easy chair,
And heard thy everlasting yawn confess
The pains and penalties of idleness.
She pity'd ! but her pity only shed
Benign influence on thy nodding head.

But Annius, crafty seer, with ebon wand,
And well-dissembled emerald on his hand,
False as his gems, and canker'd as his coins,
Came, cramm'd with capon, from where Pollio
Soft, as the wily fox is seen to creep, [dines,
Where bask on sunny banks the simple sheep,
Walk round and round, now prying here, now
there,

So he ; but pious, whisper'd first his prayer.

Grant, gracious goddess ! grant me still to cheat,

O may thy cloud still cover the deceit !
Thy choicer mists on this assembly shed,
But pour them thickest on the noble head.
So shall each youth, assisted by our eyes,
See other Cæsars, other Homers rise ;
Through twilight ages hunt th' Athenian fowl,
Which Chalcis, gods, and mortals call an owl,
Now see an Attys, now a Cæcrops clear,
Nay, Mahomet ! the pigeon at thine ear :
Be rich in ancient brass, though not in gold,
And keep his lares, though his house be sold ;
To headless Phœbe his fair bride postpone,
Honour a Syrian prince above his own ;
Lord of an Otho, if I vouch it true ;
Blest in one Niger, till he knows of two.

Mummius e'er heard him ; Mummius, fool-re-
nown'd,

Who like his Cheops stinks above the ground,
Fierce as a startled adder, swell'd, and said,
Rattling an ancient sistrum at his head :

Speak'st thou of Syrian princes ? traitor base !
Mine, goddess ! mine is all the horned race.
True he had wit, to make their value rise ;
From foolish Greeks to steal them, was as wise :
More glorious yet, from barbarous hands to keep,
When Saltee rovers chas'd him on the deep,
Then taught by Hermes, and divinely bold.
Down his own throat he risk'd the Grecian gold,
Received each demi-god, with pious care,
Deep in his entrails—I rever'd them there ;
I bought them, shrouded in that living shrine,
And at their second birth, they issue mine.

Witness great Ammon ! by whose horns I swore,

(Replied soft Annius) this our paunch before
Still bears them, faithful ; and that thus I eat,
Is to refund the medals with the meat.

To prove me, goddess ! clear of all design,
Bid me with Pollio sup, as well as dine :
There all the learn'd shall at the labour stand,
And Douglas lend his soft obstetric hand.

The goddess smiling seem'd to give consent ;
So back to Pollio, hand in hand, they went.

Then thick as locusts blackening all the
ground,

A tribe, with weeds and shells fantastic crown'd,
Each with some wond'rous gift approach'd the
power,

A nest, a toad, a fungus, or a flower.

But far the foremost, two, with earnest zeal,
And aspect ardent, to the throne appeal.

The first thus open'd : Hear thy suppliant's
call,

Great queen, and common mother of us all !
Fair from its humble bed, I rear'd this flower,
Suckled and cheer'd with air, and sun, and show-
Soft on the paper ruff its leaves I spread, [er :
Bright with the gilded button tipt its head.
Then throned in glass, and named it Caroline :
Each maid cried, charming, and each youth divine !

Did nature's pencil ever blend such rays,
Such varied light in one promiscuous blaze !
Now prostrate ! dead ! behold that Caroline :
No maid cries, charming ! and no youth, divine !
And lo the wretch ! whose vile, whose insect lust
Laid this gay daughter of the spring in dust.
Oh, punish him, or to th' Elysian shades
Dismiss my soul, where no carnation fades !
He ceas'd, and wept. With innocence of mien
Th' accus'd stood forth, and thus address'd the queen :

Of all th' enamell'd race, whose silvery wing
Waves to the tepid zephyrs of the spring,
Or swims along the fluid atmosphere,
Once brightest shin'd this child of heat and air.
I saw, and started from its vernal bower
The rising game, and chased from flow'r to flower.
It fled, I follow'd ; now in hope, now pain ;
It stopp'd, I stopp'd ; it mov'd, I mov'd again.
At last it fixt, 'twas on what plant it pleas'd,
And where it fixt, the beauteous bird I seiz'd :
Rose or carnation was below my care ;
I meddle, goddess ! only in my sphere.

I tell the naked fact without disguise,
And, to excuse it, need but show the prize;
Whose spoils this paper offers to your eye,
Fair ev'n in death! this peerless butterfly.
My sons! (she answer'd) both have done your parts:

Live happy both, and long promote our arts.
But hear a mother, when she recommends
To your fraternal care our sleeping friends.
The common soul, of Heaven's more frugal make,
Serves but to keep fools pert, and knaves awake;
A drowsy watchman, that just gives a knock,
And breaks our rest, to tell us what's a clock.
Yet by some object every brain is stirr'd;
The dull may waken to a humming-bird;
The most recluse, discreetly open'd find
Congenial matter in the cockle kind;
The mind in metaphysics at a loss,
May wander in a wilderness of moss:
The head that turns at superlunar things*,
Pois'd with a tail, may steer on Wilkins' wings.

O, would the sons of men once think their eyes
And reason giv'n them but to study flies!
See nature in some partial narrow shape,
And let the author of the whole escape;
Learn but to trifle; or who must observe,
To wonder at their Maker, not to serve.

Be that my task (replies a gloomy clerk,
Sworn foe to mystery, yet divinely dark;
Whose pious hope aspires to see the day
When moral evidence shall quite decay,
And damns implicit faith, and holy lies,
Prompt to impose, and fond to dogmatise:)
Let others creep by timid steps, and slow,
On plain experience lay foundations low,
By common sense to common knowledge bred,
And last, to nature's cause through nature led.
All-seeing in thy mists, we want no guide,
Mother of arrogance, and source of pride!
We nobly take the high priori road,
And reason downward, till we doubt of God:
Make nature still encroach upon his plan;
And shove him off as far as e'er we can:
Thrust some mechanic cause into his place,
Or bind in matter, or diffuse in space.
Or, at one bound o'erleaping all his laws,
Make God man's image, man the final cause,
Find Virtue local, all relation scorn,
See all in self, and but for self be born:
Of nought so certain as our reason still,
Of nought so doubtful as of soul and will.
Or hide the God still more! and make us see
Such as Lucretius drew, a god like thee:
Wrapt up in self, a god without a thought,
Regardless of our merit or default.
Or that bright image to our fancy draw,
Which Theocles in raptur'd vision saw,
While through poetic scenes the genius roves,
Or wanders wild in academic groves;
That nature our society adores,
Where Tindal dictates, and Silenus snores.

Rous'd at his name, up rose the bowy sire,
And shook from out his pipe the seeds of fire;

* A wild projector who thought we might fly to the moon.

Then snapp'd his box, and strek'd his belly down,
Rosy and reverend, though without a gown.
Bland and familiar to the throne he came,
Led up the youth, and call'd the goddess dame.
Then thus: From priestcraft happily set free,
Lo! every finish'd son returns to thee;

First slave to words, then vassal to a name,
Then dupe to party; child and man the same;
Bounded by nature, narrow'd still by art,
A trifling head, and a contracted heart.
Thus bred, thus taught, how many have I seen,
Smiling on all, and smil'd on by a queen!
Mark'd out for honour, honour'd for their birth,
To thee the most rebellious things on earth:
Now to thy gentle shadow all are shrunk,
All melted down in pension, or in punk!
So K*, so B*, sneak'd into the grave,
A monarch's half, and half a harlot's slave.
Poor W* * *, nipt in Folly's broadest bloom,
Who praises now? his chaplain on his tomb.
Then take them all, oh take them to thy breast!
Thy Magus, goddess! shall perform the rest.

With that a wizard old his cup extends
Which whoso tastes, forgets his former friends,
Sire, ancestors, himself. One casts his eyes
Up to a star, and like Endymion dies;
A feather, shooting from another's head,
Extracts his brain; and principle is fled;
Lost is his God, his country, every thing;
And nothing left but homage to a king!
The vulgar herd turn off to roll with hogs,
To run with horses, or to hunt with dogs;
But sad example! never to escape
Their infamy, still keep the human shape.

But she, good goddess, sent to every child
Firm impudence, or stupefaction mild;
And strait succeeded, leaving shame no room,
Cibberian forehead, or Cimmerian gloom,

Kind self-conceit to some her glass applies,
Which no one looks in with another's eyes;
But as the flatterer or dependant paint,
Beholds himself a patriot, chief, or saint.

On others interest her gay livery flings,
Interest, that waves on party-colour'd wings:
Turn'd to the sun, she casts a thousand dyes,
And, as she turns, the colours fall or rise.

Others the syren-sisters warble round,
And empty heads console with empty sound.
No more, alas! the voice of fame they hear,
The balm of dulness trickling in their ear.
Great C*, H* * P*, R*, K*,
Why all your toils? your sons have learn'd to sing.

How quick Ambition hastes to ridicule!
The sire is made a peer, the son a fool.

On some a priest, succinct in amice white,
Attends; all flesh is nothing in his sight!
Beeves, at his touch, at once to jelly turn,
And the huge boar is shrunk into an urn:
The board with specious miracles he loads,
Turns hares to larks, and pigeons into toads.
Another (for in all what one can shine?)
Explains the sève and verdeur of the vine.

† Philip Duke of Wharton.

What cannot copious sacrifice atone ?
 Thy treuffles, Perigord ! thy hams, Bayonne ?
 With French libation, and Italian strain
 Wash Bladen white, and expiate Hays's stain.
 Knight lifts the head : for what are crowds un-
 done,

To three essential partridges in one ?
 Gone every blush, and silent all reproach,
 Contending princes mount them in their coach.

Next, bidding all draw near on bended knees,
 The queen confers her titles and degrees.
 Her children first of more distinguish'd sort,
 Who study Shakespeare at the inns of court,
 Impale a glow-worm, or Vertu profess,
 Shine in the dignity of F. R. S.
 Some, deep free-masons, join the silent race
 Worthy to fill Pythagoras's place :
 Some botanists, or florists at the least,
 Or issue members of an annual feast.
 Nor past the meanest unregarded, one
 Rose a Gregorian, one a Gormogon,
 The last, not least in honour or applause,
 Isis and Cam made Doctors of her laws.

Then blessing all, Go, children of my care !
 To practice now from theory repair.
 All my commands are easy, short, and full :
 My sons ! be proud, be selfish, and be dull.
 Guard my prerogative, assert my throne :
 This nod confirms each privilege your own.
 The cap and switch be sacred to his Grace ;
 With staff and pumps the Marquis leads the
 race ;

From stage to stage the licens'd Earl may run,
 Pair'd with his fellow-charioteer the sun ;
 The learned Baron butterflies design,
 Or draw to silk Arachne's subtle line ;
 The judge to dance his brother se jeant call ;
 The senator at cricket urge the ball ;
 The bishop stow (pontific luxury ?)
 An hundred souls of turkeys in a pie ;
 The sturdy 'squire to Gallic masters stoop,
 And drown his lands and manors in a soup.
 Others import yet nobler arts from France,
 Teach kings to fiddle, and make senates dance.
 Perhaps more high some daring son may soar,
 Proud to my list to add one monarch more :
 And, nobly conscious, princes are but things
 Born for first ministers, as slaves for kings,
 Tyrant supreme ! shall three estates command,
 And make one mighty Dunciad of the land !

More she had spoke, but yawn'd—All Nature
 nods :

What mortal can resist the yawn of gods ?
 Churches and chapels instantly it reach'd :
 (St. James's first, for leaden G — preach'd)
 Then catch'd the schools ; the hall scarce kept awake ;

The convocation gap'd, but could not speak ;
 Lost was the nation's sense, nor could be found,
 While the long solemn unison went round :
 Wide, and more wide, it spread o'er all the realm ;

Ev'n Palinurus nodded at the helm.

The vapour mild o'er each committee crept ;
 Unfinish'd treaties in each office slept ;
 And chiefless armies doz'd out the campaign !
 And navies yawn'd for orders on the main.

O Muse ! relate (for you can tell alone,
 Wits have short memories, and dunces none)
 Relate, who first, who last resign'd to rest ;
 Whose heads she partly, whose completely blest ;
 What charms could faction, what ambition lull,
 The venal quiet, and entrance the dull ;
 Till drown'd was sense, and shame, and right,
 and wrong—

O sing, and hush the nations with thy song !

* * * * *

In vain, in vain, the all-composing hour
 Resistless falls : the muse obeys the power.
 She comes ! she comes ! the sable throne behold
 Of night primæval, and of chaos old !
 Before her fancy's gilded clouds decay,
 And all its varying rain-bows die away,
 Wit shoots in vain its momentary fires,
 The meteor drops and in a flash expires.
 As one by one at dread Medea's strain,
 The sickening stars fade off th' ethereal plain ;
 As Argus' eyes by Hermes' wand oppress,
 Clos'd one by one to everlasting rest ;
 Thus at her felt approach, and secret might,
 Art after Art goes out, and all is night :
 See sculking Truth to her old cavern fled,
 Mountains of casuistry heap'd o'er her head !
 Philosophy that lean'd on heaven before,
 Shrinks to her second cause, and is no more.
 Physic of metaphysic begs defence,
 And metaphysic calls for aid on sense ?
 See mystery to mathematics fly !
 In vain ! they gaze, turn giddy, rave, and die.
 Religion blushing veils her sacred fires,
 And unawares morality expires.
 Nor public flame, nor private dares to shine :
 Nor human spark is left, nor glimpse divine !
 Lo ! thy dread empire, chaos ! is restor'd,
 Light dies before thy uncreating word :
 Thy hand, great Anarch ! lets the curtain fall ;
 And universal darkness buries all.

SHOOTING AND ANGLING.

[From the Windsor Forest.]

SEE ! from the brake the whirring pheasant
 springs,
 And mounts exulting on triumphant wings :
 Short is his joy ; he feels the fiery wound,
 Flutters in blood, and panting beats the ground.
 Ah ! what avail his glossy varying dies,
 His purple crest, and scarlet circled eyes,
 The vivid green his shining plumes unfold,
 His painted wings, and breast that flames with
 gold ?

Nor yet when moist Arcturus clouds the sky,
The woods and fields their pleasing toils deny.
To plains with well-breath'd beagles we repair,
And trace the mazes of the circling hare :
(Beasts, urg'd by us, their fellow beasts pursue,
And learn of man each other to undo) :
With slaughtering guns th' unwearied fowler
roves,

When frosts have whiten'd all the naked groves ;
Where doves and flocks the leafless trees o'er-
shade,

And lonely woodcocks haunt the watery glade.
He lifts the tube, and levels with his eye ;
Strait a short thunder breaks the frozen sky :
Oft, as in airy rings they skim the heath,
The clamorous lapwings feel the leaden death ;
Oft, as the mounting larks their notes prepare,
They fall, and leave their little lives in air.

In genial spring, beneath the quivering shade,
Where cooling vapours breathe along the mead,
The patient fisher takes his silent stand,
Intent, his angle trembling in his hand :
With looks unmov'd, he hopes the scaly breed,
And eyes the dancing cork and bending reed.
Our plenteous streams a various race supply,
The bright-ey'd perch with fins of Tyrian dye,
The silver eel, in shining volumes roll'd,
The yellow carp, in scales bedropp'd with gold,
Swift trouts, diversifi'd with crimson stains,
And pike, the tyrants of the watery plains.

MAN'S BLINDNESS TO THE FUTURE.

[From the Essay on Man.]

HEAVEN from all creatures hides the book of fate,

All but the page prescrib'd, their present state :
From brutes what men, from men what spirits
know :

Or who could suffer being here below ?
The lamb thy riot dooms to bleed to-day,
Had he thy reason, would he skip and play ?
Pleas'd to the last, he crops the flowery food,
And licks the hand just rais'd to shed his blood.
Oh, blindness to the future ! kindly given,
That each may fill the circle mark'd by heaven :
Who sees with equal eye, as God of all,
A hero perish, or a sparrow fall,
Atoms or systems into ruin hurl'd,
And now a bubble burst, and now a world. [soar ;

Hope humbly then ; with trembling pinions
Wait the great teacher death ; and God adore.
What future bliss, he gives not thee to know,
But gives that hope to be thy blessing now.
Hope springs eternal in the human breast :
Man never is, but always to be blest :
The soul, uneasy, and confin'd from home,
Rests and expatiates in a life to come.

Lo, the poor Indian ! whose untutor'd mind
Sees God in clouds, or hears him in the wind ?
His soul proud science never taught to stray
Far as the solar walk, or milky way ;
Yet simple nature to his hope has given,
Behind the cloud-topt hill, an humbler heaven ;

Some safer world in depth of woods embrac'd,
Some happier island in the watery waste,
Where slaves once more their native land behold,
No fiends torment, no Christians thirst for gold.
To be, contents his natural desire,
He asks no angel's wing, no seraph's fire ;
But thinks, admitted to that equal sky,
His faithful dog shall bear him company.

THE SUBORDINATION OF ALL CREATURES TO MAN.

[From the Same.]

WHAT would this man ? Now upward will he soar,

And, little less than angel, would be more ;
Now looking downwards, just as griev'd appears.
To want the strength of bulls, the fur of bears.

Made for his use all creatures if he call,
Say what their use, had he the powers of all ?
Nature to these, without profusion, kind,
The proper organs, proper powers assign'd ;
Each seeming want compensated of course,
Here with degrees of swiftness, there of force ;
All in exact proportion to the state ;
Nothing to add, and nothing to abate.
Each beast, each insect, happy in its own ;
Is heaven unkind to man, and man alone ?
Shall he alone, whom rational we call,
Be pleas'd with nothing, if not blest with all ?

The bliss of man (could pride that blessing
find.)

Is not to act or think beyond mankind ;
No powers of body or of soul to share.
But what his nature and his state can bear.
Why has not man a microscopic eye ?
For this plain reason, man is not a fly.
Say, what the use, were finer optics given,
T' inspect a mite, not comprehend the heaven ?
Or touch, if tremblingly alive all o'er,
To smart and agonise at every pore ?
Or quick effluvia darting through the brain,
Die of a rose in aromatic pain ?
If nature thunder'd in his opening ears,
And stunn'd him with the music of the spheres.
How would he wish that heaven had left him
still

The whispering zephyr, and the purling rill !
Who finds not Providence all good and wise,
Alike in what it gives, and what denies ?

Far as creation's ample range extends,
The scale of sensual, mental powers ascends :
Mark how it mounts to man's imperial race
From the green myriads in the peopled grass :
What modes of sight betwixt each wide extreme,
The mole's dim curtain, and the lynx's beam ;
Of smell, the headlong lioness between,
And hound sagacious on the tainted green :
Of hearing, from the life that fills the flood,
To that which warbles through the vernal wood !
The spider's touch, how exquisitely fine !
Feels at each thread, and lives along the line :
In the nice bee, what sense so subtly true
From poisonous herbs extracts the healing dew !

How instinct varies in the grovelling swine,
 Compar'd, half-reasoning elephant, with thine!
 'Twixt that, and reason, what a nice barrier!
 For ever separate, yet for ever near!
 Remembrance and reflection how allied;
 What thin partitions sense from thought divide;
 And middle natures, how they long to join,
 Yet never pass th' insuperable line!
 Without this just gradation, could they be Subjected, these to those, or all to thee?
 The powers of all subdued by thee alone,
 Is not thy reason all these powers in one?

THE REWARD OF VIRTUE.

[From the Same.]

BUT sometimes virtue starves, while vice is fed.

What then? Is the reward of virtue bread?
 That, vice may merit, 'tis the price of toil;
 The knave deserves it, when he tills the soil;
 The knave deserves it, when he tempts the main,
 Where folly fights for kings, or dives for gain.
 The good man may be weak, be indolent:
 Nor is his claim to plenty, but content.
 But grant him riches, your demand is o'er?
 "No—shall the good want health, the good want power?"

Add health and power, and every earthly thing,
 "Why bounded power? why private? why no
 king?"

Nay, why external for internal given?
 Why is not man a God, and earth a heaven?
 Who ask and reason thus, will scarce conceive
 God gives enough, while he has more to give;
 Immense the power, immense were the demand;
 Say, at what part of nature will they stand?

What nothing earthly gives, or can destroy,
 The soul's calm sunshine, and the heartfelt joy,
 Is virtue's prize: a better would you fix?
 Then give humility a coach and six,
 Justice a conqueror's sword, or truth a gown,
 Or public spirit its great cure, a crown.
 Weak, foolish man! will Heaven reward us there
 With the same trash mad mortals wish for here?
 The boy and man an individual makes,
 Yet sigh'st thou now for apples and for cakes?
 Go, like the Indian, in another life
 Expect thy dog, thy bottle, and thy wife;
 As well as dream such trifles are assign'd,
 As toys and empires, for a godlike mind.
 Rewards, that either would to virtue bring
 No joy, or be destructive of the thing;
 How oft by these at sixty are undone
 The virtues of a saint at twenty-one!
 To whom can riches give repute, or trust,
 Content, or pleasure, but the good and just?
 Judges and senates have been bought for gold;
 Esteem and love were never to be sold.
 Oh fool! to think God hates the worthy mind,
 The lover and the love of human kind,
 Whose life is healthful, and whose conscience clear
 Because he wants a thousand pounds a year.

A COLD-HEARTED PRUDENCE.

[From the Moral Essays.]

"YET Chloe sure was form'd without a spot."—
 Nature in her then err'd not but forgot.
 "With every pleasing, every prudent part,
 Say, what can Chloe want?"—She wants a heart.
 She speaks, behaves, and acts just as she ought;
 But never, never, reach'd one generous thought.
 Virtue she finds too painful an endeavour,
 Content to dwell in decencies for ever.
 So very reasonable, so unmov'd,
 As never yet to love, or to be lov'd.
 She, while her lover pants upon her breast,
 Can mark the figures on an Indian chest;
 And when she sees her friend in deep despair,
 Observes how much a chintz exceeds mohair.
 Forbid it, Heaven, a favour or a debt
 She e'er should cancel—but she may forget.
 Safe is your secret still in Chloe's ear;
 But none of Chloe's shall you ever hear,
 Of all her dears she never slander'd one,
 But cares not if a thousand are undone.
 Would Chloe know if you're alive or dead?
 She bids her footman put it in her head.
 Chloe is prudent—would you too be wise?
 Then never break your heart, when Chloe dies.

THE MAN OF ROSS.

[From the Same.]

BUT all our praises why should lords engross!
 Rise, honest muse; and sing the Man of Ross:
 Pleas'd Vaga echoes through her winding bounds,
 And rapid Severn hoarse applause resounds.
 Who hung with woods yon mountain's sultry
 brow?

From the dry rock who bade the waters flow?
 Not to the skies in useless columns tost,
 Or in proud falls magnificently lost,
 But clear and artless, pouring through the plain
 Health to the sick, and solace to the swain.
 Whose causeway parts the vale with shady rows?
 Whose seats the weary traveller repose?
 Who taught that heaven-directed spire to rise!
 "The Man of Ross," each lisping babe replies.
 Behold the market-place with poor o'erspread!
 The Man of Ross divides the weekly bread:
 He feeds yon alms-house, neat, but void of state,
 Where age and want sit smiling at the gate;
 Him portion'd maids, apprentic'd orphans blest,
 The young who labour, and the old who rest.
 Is any sick? the man of Ross relieves, Prescribes, attends, the medicine makes, and gives.

Is there a variance? enter but his door,
 Balk'd are the courts, and contest is no more.
 Despairing quacks with curses fled the place,
 And vile attorneys, now an useless race.

B. Thrice happy man! enabled to pursue
 What all so wish, but want the power to do!
 Oh say, what sums that generous hand supply?
 What mines to swell that boundless charity!

P. Of debts and taxes, wife and children clear,
This man possess—five hundred pounds a-year.
Blush, grandeur, blush! proud courts, withdraw your blaze!

Ye little stars! hide your diminish'd rays.

B. And what! no monument, inscription, stone?
His race, his form, his name almost unknown?

P. Who builds a church to God, and not to
fame,

Will never mark the marble with his name:
Go, search it there, where to be born and die,
Of rich and poor makes all the history;
Enough, that virtue fill'd the space between;
Prov'd by the ends of being, to have been.

THE POET.

[From the Same]

Of little use the man you may suppose,
Who says in verse what others say in prose:
Yet let me show, a poet's of some weight,
And, though no soldier, useful to the state.
What will a child learn sooner than a song?
What better teach a foreigner the tongue?
What's long or short, each accent where to place,
And speak in public with some sort of grace.
I scarce can think him such a worthless thing,
Unless he praise some monster of a king:
Or virtue, or religion turn to sport,
To please a lewd, or unbelieving court.
Unhappy Dryden!—In all Charles's days,
Roscommon only boasts unspotted bays;
And in our own (excuse some courtly stains)
No whiter page than Addison's remains;
He from the taste obscene reclaims our youth,
And sets the passions on the side of truth,
Forms the soft bosom with the gentlest art,
And pours each human virtue in the heart.
Let Ireland tell, how wit upheld her cause,
Her trade supported, and supplied her laws;
And leave on Swift this grateful verse engrav'd,
"The rights a court attack'd, a poet sav'd."
Behold the hand that wrought a nation's cure,
Stretch'd to relieve the idiot and the poor,
Proud vice to brand, or injur'd worth adorn,
And stretch the ray to ages yet unborn.

THE TRUE POET DISTINGUISHED FROM THE MAN OF RHYMES.

[From the Same]

YET, lest you think I rally more than teach,
Or praise malignly arts I cannot reach,
Let me for once presume t' instruct the times,
To know the poet from the man of rhymes:
'Tis he who gives my breast a thousand pains,
Can make me feel each passion that he feigns;
Enrage, compose, with more than magic art;
With pity, and with terror, tear my heart;
And snatch me, o'er the earth, or through the air,
To Thebes, to Athens, when he will, and where.

THE UNIVERSAL PRAYER.

FATHER of all! in every age,
In every clime ador'd,
By saint, by savage, and by sage,
Jehovah, Jove or Lord!

Thou Great First Cause, least understood:
Who all my sense confin'd
To know but this, that thou art good,
And that myself am blind;

Yet gave me, in this dark estate,
To see the good from ill;
And, binding nature fast in fate,
Left free the human will:

What conscience dictates to be done,
Or warns me not to do,
This, teach me more than hell to shun,
That, more than heaven pursue.

What blessings thy free bounty gives,
Let me not cast away;
For God is paid when man receives,
T' enjoy is to obey.

Yet not to earth's contracted span
Thy goodness let me bound,
Or think thee Lord alone of man,
When thousand worlds are round:

Let not this weak, unknowing hand
Presume thy bolts to throw,
And deal damnation round the land,
On each I judge thy foe.

If I am right, thy grace impart,
Still in the right to stay:
If I am wrong, oh, teach my heart
To find that better way!

Save me alike from foolish pride,
Or impious discontent,
At aught thy wisdom has deny'd,
Or aught thy goodness lent.

Teach me to feel another's woe,
To hide the fault I see;
That mercy I to others show,
That mercy show to me.

Mean though I am, not wholly so,
Since quicken'd by thy breath;
O, lead me wheresoe'er I go,
Through this day's life or death.

This day, be bread and peace my lot:
All else beneath the sun,
Thou know'st if best bestow'd or not,
And let thy will be done.

To thee, whose temple is all space,
Whose altar, earth, sea, skies!
One chorus let all beings raise!
All nature's incense rise!

JAMES THOMSON.

Born 1700.—Died 1748.

EXTRACTS FROM "THE SEASONS."

SPRING.

As yet the trembling year is unconfirm'd,
And WINTER oft at eve resumes the breeze;
Chills the pale morn, and bids his driving sleets
Deform the day delightless; so that scarce
The bittern knows his time, with bill ingulph'd
To shake the sounding marsh; or from the shore

The plovers when to scatter o'er the heath,
And sing their wild notes to the listening waste.

At last from Aries rolls the bounteous sun,
And the bright Bull receives him. Then no more

Th' expansive atmosphere is cramp'd with cold;
But, full of life and vivifying soul,
Lifts the light clouds sublime, and spreads them thin,

Fleecy and white, o'er all-surrounding heaven.

Forth fly the tepid airs; and unconfin'd,
Unbinding earth, the moving softness strays.
Joyous, th' impatient husbandman perceives
Relenting Nature, and his lusty steers
Drives from their stalls, to where the well-us'd plough

Lies in the furrow, loosened from the frost;
There, unrefusing, to the harness'd yoke
They lend their shoulder, and begin their toil,
Cheer'd by the simple song and soaring lark.
Meanwhile incumbent o'er the shining share
The master leans, removes th' obstructing clay,
Wheels the whole work, and sidelong lays the glebe.

White thro' the neighb'ring fields the sower stalks,
With measur'd step; and liberal throws the grain

Into the faithful bosom of the ground:
The harrow follows harsh, and shuts the scene.

Be gracious, HEAVEN! for now laborious man
Has done his part. Ye fostering breezes! blow;
Ye softening dews! ye tender showers! descend;
And tamper all, thou world-reviving sun!
Into the perfect year. Nor ye who live
In luxury and ease, in pomp and pride,
Think these lost themes unworthy of your ear:
Such themes as these the rural Man sung
To wide-imperial Rome, in the full height
Of elegance and taste, by GREECE refin'd.

THE PLOUGH.

In ancient times, the sacred plough employ'd
The kings, and awful fathers of mankind:
And some, with whom compar'd your insect tribes

Are but the beings of a summer's day,
Have held the scale of empire, rul'd the storm
Of mighty war; then, with unwearied hand,
Disdaining little delicacies, seiz'd
The plough, and greatly independent liv'd.

Ye generous Barons, venerate the plough;
And o'er your hills, and long withdrawing vales,
Let Autumn spread his treasures to the sun,
Luxuriant and unbounded: as the sea,
Far through his azure turbulent domain,
Your empire owns; and from a thousand shores
Wafts all the pomp of life into your ports;
So with superior boon may your rich soil,
Exuberant, Nature's better blessings pour
O'er every land; the naked nations clothe;
And be th' exhaustless granary of a world.

SPRING SHOWERS.

The North-east spends his rage; he now shut up
Within his iron cave, th' effusive South
Warms the wide air; and o'er the void of heaven
Breathes the big clouds with vernal showers distant.

At first a dusky wreath they seem to rise,
Scarce staining ether; but by swift degrees,
In heaps on heaps, the doubling vapour sails
Along the loaded sky, and, mingling deep,
Sits on th' horizon round a settled gloom:
Not such as wintry storms on mortals shed,
Oppressing life: but lovely, gentle, kind,
And full of every hope and every joy,
The wish of Nature. Gradual sinks the breeze
Into a perfect calm; that not a breath
Is heard to quiver through the closing woods,
Or rustling turn the many-twinkling leaves
Of aspen tall. Th' uncurling floods, diffus'd
In glassy breadth, seem through delusive lapse
Forgetful of their course. 'Tis silence all,
And pleasing expectation. Herds and flocks
Drop the dry sprig, and mute-imploing eye
The falling verdure. Hush'd in short suspense,
The plumed people streak their wings with oil,
To throw the lucid moisture trickling off;
And wait th' approaching sign to strike, at once,
Into the general choir. Ev'n mountains, vales,
And forests seem, impatient, to demand
The promis'd sweetness. Man superior walks
Amid the glad creation, musing praise,
And looking lively gratitude. At last,
The clouds consign their treasures to the fields;
And, softly shaking on the dimpled pool
Prelusive drops, let all their moisture flow,
In large effusion, o'er the freshened world.

ANGLING.

Now when the first foul torrent of the brooks,
Swell'd with the vernal rains, is ebb'd away;
And, whitening, down their mossy-tinctur'd
stream
Descends the billowy foam: now is the time,
While yet the dark-brown water aids the guile,
To tempt the trout. The well-dissembled fly,
The rod fine-tapering with elastic spring,
Snatch'd from the hoary steed the floating line,
And all thy slender wat'ry stores prepare.
But let not on thy hook the tortur'd worm,
Convulsive, twist in agonizing folds;
Which, by rapacious hunger swallow'd deep,
Gives, as you tear it from the bleeding breast
Of the weak helpless uncomplaining wretch,
Harsh pain and horror to the tender hand.

When with his lively ray the potent sun
Has pierc'd the streams, and rous'd the finny
race

Then, issuing cheerful, to thy sport repair ;
Chief should the western breezes curling play,
And light o'er ether bear the shadowy clouds.
High to their fount, this day, amid the hills,
And woodlands warbling round, trace up the brooks ;

The next, pursue their rocky channel'd maze,
Down to the river, in whose ample wave
Their little naiads love to sport at large.

Just in the dubious point, where with the pool
Is mix'd the trembling stream, or where it boils
Around the stone, or from the hollow'd bank
Reverted plays in undulating flow,
There throw, nice-judging, the delusive fly ;
And as you lead it round in artful curve,
With eye attentive mark the springing game.
Strait as above the surface of the flood

They wanton rise, or urg'd by hunger leap,
Then fix, with gentle twitch, the barbed hook :
Some lightly tossing to the grassy bank,
And to the shelving shore slow-dragging some,
With various hand proportion'd to their force.

If yet too young, and easily deceiv'd,
A worthless prey scarce bends your pliant rod :
Him, piteous of his youth and the short space
He has enjoy'd the vital light of heaven,
Soft disengage ; and back into the stream
The speckled captive throw. But should you lure

From his dark haunt, beneath the tangled roots
Of pendent trees, the monarch of the brook,
Behoves you then to ply your finest art.
Long time he, following cautious, scans the fly
And oft attempts to seize it, but as oft
The dimpled water speaks his jealous fear.
At last, while haply o'er the shaded sun
Passes a cloud, he desperate takes the death,
With sullen plunge. At once he darts along,
Deep struck, and runs out all the lengthened line : [weed,

Then seeks the farthest ooze, the sheltering
The cavern'd bank, his old secure abode ;
And flies aloft, and flounces round the pool,
Indignant of the guile. With yielding hand,
That feels him still, yet to his furious course
Gives way, you, now retiring, following now
Across the stream, exhaust his idle rage :
Till floating broad upon his breathless side,
And to his fate abandon'd, to the shore
You gaily drag your unresisting prize.

BIRD-NESTING.

Be not the Muse asham'd, here to bemoan
Her brothers of the grove, by tyrant man
Inhuman caught, and in the narrow cage
From liberty confin'd, and boundless air.
Dull are the pretty slaves, their plumage dull,
Ragged, and all its brightening lustre lost :
Nor is that sprightly wildness in their notes,
Which, clear and vigorous, warbles from the beech.

Oh then, ye friends of love and love-taught song,

Spare the soft tribes, this barbarous art forbear ;
If on your bosom innocence can win,
Music engage, or piety persuade.

But let not chief the nightingale lament
Her ruin'd care, too delicately fram'd
To brook the harsh confinement of the cage.
Oft when, returning with her loaded bill,
Th' astonish'd mother finds a vacant nest,
By the hard hand of unrelenting clowns
Robb'd, to the ground the vain provision falls ;
Her pinions ruffle, and low-drooping scarce
Can bear the mourner to the poplar shade ;
Where, all abandon'd to despair, she sings
Her sorrows through the night ; and, on the bough,

Sole-sitting, still at every dying fall
Takes up again her lamentable strain
Of winding woe ; till wide around the woods
Sigh to her song, and with her wail resound.

SUMMER INSECTS.

Gradual, from these what numerous kinds
descend,

Evading ev'n the microscopic eye !
Full nature swarms with life ; one wondrous mass
Of animals, or atoms organiz'd,
Waiting the vital breath, when PARENT HEAVEN
Shall bid his spirit blow. The hoary fen,
In putrid steams, emits the living cloud
Of pestilence. Through subterranean cells,
Where searching sun-beams scarce can find a way
Earth animated heaves. The flowery leaf
Wants not its soft inhabitants. Secure,
Within its winding citadel, the stone
Holds multitudes. But chief the forest-boughs,
That dance unnumber'd to the playful breeze ;
The downy orchard, and the melting pulp
Of mellow fruit, the nameless nations feed
Of evanescent insects. Where the pool
Stands mantled o'er with green, invisible,
Amid the floating verdure millions stray.

Each liquid too, whether it pierces, soothes,
Inflames, refreshes, or exalts the taste,
With various forms abounds. Nor is the stream
Of purest crystal, nor the lucid air,
Though one transparent vacancy it seems,
Void of their unseen people. These, conceal'd
By the kind art of forming HEAVEN, escape
The grosser eye of man : for, if the worlds
In worlds inclos'd should on his senses burst,
From cates ambrosial, and the nectar'd bowl,
He would abhorrent turn ; and in dead night,
When silence sleeps o'er all, be stunn'd with noise.

HAY-MAKING.

Now swarms the village o'er the jovial mead :
The rustic youth, brown with meridian toil,
Healthful and strong ; full as the summer-rose
Blown by prevailing suns, the ruddy maid,
Half-naked, swelling on the sight, and all
Her kindled graces burning o'er her cheek.
Even stooping age is here ; and infant hands
Trail the long rake, or with the fragrant load
O'ercharg'd, amid the kind oppression roll.
Wide flies the tedded grain ; all in a row

Advancing broad, or wheeling round the field,
They spread the breathing harvest to the sun,
That throws refreshful round a rural smell :
Or, as they rake the green-appearing ground,
And drive the dusky wave along the mead,
The russet hay-cock rises thick behind,
In order gay. While heard from dale to dale,
Waking the breeze, resounds the blended voice
Of happy labour, love, and social glee.

SHEEP-SHEARING.

Or rushing thence, in one diffusive band,
They drive the troubled flocks, by many a dog
Compell'd, to where the mazy-running brook
Forms a deep pool ; this bank abrupt and high,
And that fair-spreading in a pebbled shore.
Urg'd to the giddy brink, much is the toil,
The clamour much, of men, and boys, and dogs,
Ere the soft fearful people to the flood
Commit their woolly sides. And oft the swain,
On some impatient seizing, hurls them in :
Embolden'd then, nor hesitating more,
Fast, fast, they plunge amid the flashing wave,
And panting labour to the farthest shore.
Repeated this, till deep the well-wash'd fleece
Has drunk the flood, and from his lively haunt
The trout is banish'd by the sordid stream ;
Heavy, and dripping, to the breezy brow
Slow move the harmless race ; where, as they spread

Their swelling treasures to the sunny ray,
Inly disturb'd, and wondering what this wild
Outrageous tumult means, their loud complaints
The country fill ; and, toss'd from rock to rock,
Incessant bleatings run around the hills.

At last, of snowy white, the gathered flocks
Are in the wattled pen innumerable press'd,
Head above head : and rang'd in lusty rows
The shepherds sit, and whet the sounding shears.
The housewife waits to roll her fleecy stores,
With all her gay-drest maids attending round
Ore, chief, in gracious dignity enthron'd, Shines o'er the rest, the pastoral queen, and rays

Her smiles, sweet-beaming, on her shepherd-
king ;

While the glad circle round them yield their souls

To festive mirth, and wit that knows no gall.
Meantime, their joyous task goes on apace :
Some mingling stir the melted tar, and some,
Deep on the new-shorn vagrant's heaving side,
To stamp his master's cipher ready stand ;
Others th' unwilling wether drag along ;
And, glorying in his might, the sturdy boy
Holds by the twisted horns th' indignant ram.
Behold where bound, and of its robe bereft,
By needy man, that all-depending lord,
How meek, how patient, the mild creature lies !
What softness in its melancholy face,
What dumb complaining innocence appears !
Fear not, ye gentle tribes, 'tis not the knife
Of horrid slaughter that is o'er you wav'd ;
No, 'tis the tender swain's well-guided shears,
Who having now, to pay his annual care,

Borrow'd your fleece, to you a cumbrous load,
Will send you bounding to your hills again.

A simple scene ! yet hence BRITANNIA sees
Her solid grandeur rise : hence she commands
Th' exalted stores of every brighter clime,
The treasures of the sun without his rage :
Hence, fervent all, with culture, toil, and arts,
Wide glows her land : her dreadful thunder
hence

Rides o'er the waves sublime ; and now, ev'n
now,

Impending hangs o'er Gallia's humbled coast ;
Hence rules the circling deep, and awes the
world.

THE SHEPHERD AND HIS FLOCK.

Around th' adjoining brook, that curls along
The vocal grove, now fretting o'er a rock,
Now scarcely moving through a reedy pool,
Now starting to a sudden stream, and now
Gently diffus'd into a limpid plain ;

A various group the herds and flocks compose,
Rural confusion ! On the grassy bank
Some ruminating lie ; while others stand
Half in the flood, and often bending sip
The circling surface. In the middle droops

The strong laborious ox, of honest front,
Which in compos'd he shakes ; and from his sides
The troublous insects lashes with his tail,
Returning still. Amid his subjects safe,

Slumbers the monarch-swain ; his careless arm
Thrown round his head, on downy moss sus-tain'd ;

Here laid his scrip, with wholesome viands
fill'd ;

There, listening every noise, his watchful dog.

BRITAIN.

Heavens ! what a goodly prospect spreads
around,

Of hills, and dales, and woods, and lawns, and spires,

And glittering towns, and gilded streams, till all
The stretching landskip into smoke decays !

Happy BRITANNIA ! where the QUEEN of ARTS,
Inspiring vigour LIBERTY abroad

Walks, unconfin'd, even to thy farthest cots,
And scatters plenty with unsparing hand.

Rich is thy soil, and merciful thy clime ;

Thy streams unfailing in the SUMMER's drought ;
Unmatch'd the guardian-oaks ; thy valleys float
With golden waves : and on thy mountains flocks

Bleat numberless ; while, roving round their sides,

Bellow the blackening herds in lusty droves.
Beneath, thy meadows glow, and rise unquell'd
Against the mower's scythe. On every hand Thy villas shine. Thy country teems with wealth ;

And property assures it to the swain,
Pleas'd and unwearied in his guarded toil.

Full are thy cities with the sons of art ;
And trade and joy, in every busy street,
Mingling are heard : even Drudgery himself,
As at the car he sweats, or dusty hews

The palace-stone, looks gay. Thy crowded ports,

Where rising masts an endless prospect yield,
With labour burn; and echo to the shouts
Of hurried sailor, as he hearty waves
His last adieu; and loosening every sheet,
Resigns the spreading vessel to the wind.

Bold, firm, and graceful, are thy generous
youth,

By hardship sinew'd, and by danger fir'd;
Scattering the nations where they go; and first
Or on the listed plain, or stormy seas.

Mild are thy glories too, as o'er the plans
Of thriving peace thy thoughtful sires preside;
In genius, and substantial learning, high;
For every virtue, every worth, renown'd;
Sincere, plain-hearted, hospitable, kind;
Yet like the mustering thunder when provok'd,
The dread of tyrants, and the sole resource
Of those that under grim oppression groan.

Thy Sons of GLORY many! ALFRED thine;
In whom the splendour of heroic war
And more heroic peace, when govern'd well,
Combine; whose hallow'd name the virtues
saint,

And his own Muses love; the best of kings!
With him thy EDWARDS and thy HENRYs shine,
Names dear to Fame; the first who deep impressed

On haughty Gaul the terror of thy arms,
That awes her genius still. In statesmen thou,
And patriots, fertile. Thine a steady MORE,
Who, with a generous though mistaken zeal,
Withstood a brutal tyrant's useful rage,
Like CATO firm, like ARISTIDES just,
Like rigid CINCINNATUS nobly poor;
A dauntless soul erect, who smiled on death.

Frugal, and wise, a WALSINGHAM is thine;
A DRAKE, who made thee mistress of the deep,
And bore thy name in thunder round the world.
Then flamed thy spirit high; but who can speak
The numerous worthies of the MAIDEN REIGN?
In RALEIGH mark their every glory mix'd;
RALEIGH, the scourge of Spain! whose breast with all

The sage, the patriot, and the hero burn'd.
Nor sunk his vigour, when a coward-reign
The warrior fetter'd; and at last resigned,
To glut the vengeance of a vanquish'd foe.
Then, active still and unrestrain'd, his mind
Explor'd the vast extent of ages past,
And with his prison-hours enrich'd the world;
Yet found no times, in all the long research,
So glorious, or so base, as those he prov'd,
In which he conquer'd, and in which he bled.

Nor can the Muse the gallant SINCEY pass,
The plume of war! with early laurels crown'd,
The lover's myrtle, and the poet's bay.

A HAMDEN too is thine, illustrious land!
Wise, strenuous, firm, of unsubmitting soul;
Who stemm'd the torrent of a downward age
To slavery prone, and bade thee rise again,
In all thy native pomp of freedom bold.
Bright, at his call, thy Age of Men effulg'd,

Of men on whom late time a kindling eye
Shall turn, and tyrants tremble while they read.

Bring every sweetest flower, and let me strew
The grave where RUSSEL lies; whose temper'd
blood,

With calmest cheerfulness for thee resign'd,
Stain'd the sad annals of a giddy reign;
Aiming at lawless power, though meanly sunk
In loose inglorious luxury. With him
His friend, the BARRIST Cassius, fearless bled;
Of high determin'd spirit, roughly brave,
By ancient learning to th' enlightened love
Of ancient freedom warm'd. Fair thy renown
In awful sages and in noble bards;
Soon as the light of dawning science spread
Her orient ray, and wak'd the Muses' song.

Thine is a BACON; hapless in his choice,
Unfit to stand the civil storm of state,
And through the smooth barbarity of courts,
With firm but pliant virtue, forward still
To urge his course; him for the studious shade
Kind Nature form'd; deep, comprehensive,
clear,

Exact, and elegant; in one rich soul,
PLATO, the SAGYRITE, and TULLY join'd.
The great deliverer he! who from the gloom
Of cloister'd monks, and jargon-teaching schools,
Led forth the true philosophy, there long
Held in the magic chain of words and forms,
And definitions void: he led her forth,
Daughter of HEAVEN! that slow-ascending still,
Investigating sure the chain of things,
With radiant finger points to HEAVEN again.

The generous ASHLEY thine, the friend of man;
Who scan'd his nature with a brother's eye,
His weakness prompt to shade, to raise his aim,
To touch the finer movements of the mind,
And with the moral beauty charm the heart.
Why need I name thy BOYLE, whose pious search
Amid the dark recesses of his works,
The great CREATOR sought? And why thy LOCKE
Who made the whole internal world his own?
Let NEWTON, pure intelligence! whom God
To mortals lent, to trace his boundless works
From laws sublimely simple, speak thy fame
In all philosophy. For lofty sense,
Creative fancy, and inspection keen
Through the deep windings of the human heart,
Is not wild SHAKESPEARE thine and nature's boast?

Is not each great, each amiable Muse
Of classic ages in thy MILTON met?
A genius universal as his theme;
Astonishing as chaos; as the bloom
Of blowing Eden fair; as HEAVEN sublime.

Nor shall my verse that elder bard forget,
The gentle SPENSER, fancy's pleasing son;
Who, like a copious river, pour'd his song
O'er all the mazes of enchanted ground:
Nor thee, his ancient master, laughing sage,
CHAUCER, whose native manners painting verse,
Well-moraliz'd, shines through the Gothic cloud
Of time and language o'er thy genius thrown.

AUTUMN.

When the bright Virgin gives the beauteous days,

And Libra weighs in equal scales the year ;
From heaven's high cope the fierce effulgence
Of parting summer, a sereener blue, [shook
With golden light enliven'd, wide invests
The happy world. Attemper'd suns arise,
Sweet-beam'd, and shedding oft through lucid clouds

A pleasing calm ; while broad, and brown, below
Extensive harvests hang the heavy head.
Rich, silent, deep, they stand ; for not a gale
Rolls its light billows o'er the bending plain :
A calm of plenty ! till the ruffled air
Falls from its poise, and gives the breeze to blow.
Rent is the fleecy mantle of the sky ;
The clouds fly different ; and the sudden sun
By fits effulgent gilds th' illumin'd field,
And black by fits the shadows sweep along.
A gaily-checker'd heart-expanding view,
Far as the circling eye can shoot around,
Unbounded tossing in a flood of corn.

REAPING.

Soon as the morning trembles o'er the sky.
And, unperceiv'd, unfolds the spreading day ;
Before the ripened field the reapers stand,
In fair array ; each by the lass he loves ;
To bear the rougher part, and mitigate
By nameless gentle offices her toil.
At once they stoop and swell the lusty sheaves ;
While through their cheerful band, the rural talk,
The rural scandal, and the rural jest,
Fly harmless ; to deceive the tedious time,
And steal unfelt the sultry hours away.
Behind the master walks, builds up the shocks ;
And, unconscious, glancing oft on every side
His sated eye, feels his heart heave with joy.
The gleaners spread around, and here and there,
Spike after spike, their scanty harvest pick.

Be not too narrow, husbandmen ; but fling
From the full sheaf, with charitable stealth.
The liberal handful. Think, oh grateful think !
How good the God of HARVEST is to you ;
Who pours abundance o'er your flowing fields ;
While these unhappy partners of your kind
Wide hover round you, like the fowls of heaven,
And ask their humble dole. The various turns
Of fortune ponder ; that your sons may want
What now, with hard reluctance, faint, ye give.

HUNTING THE HARE.

Poor is the triumph o'er the timid hare,
Scar'd from the corn, and now to some lone seat
Retir'd the rushy fen ; the ragged furze,
Stretch'd o'er the stony heath ; the stubble
chapt ;

The thistly lawn ; the thick-entangled broom ;
Of the same friendly hue, the wither'd fern ;
The fallow ground laid open to the sun,
Concoctive ; and the nodding sandy bank,
Hung o'er the mazes of the mountain brook.
Vain in her best precaution ; though she sits
Conceal'd, with folded ears ; unsleeping eyes,

By nature rais'd to take th' horizon in ;
And head couch'd close betwixt her hairy feet,
In act to spring away. The scented dew
Betrays her early labyrinth : and deep
In scatter'd sullen openings, far behind,
With every breeze she hears the coming storm.
But nearer, and more frequent, as it loads
The sighing gale, she springs amaz'd ; and all
The savage soul of game is up at once :
The pack full-opening, various ; the shrill horn
Resounded from the hills ; the neighing steed,
Wild for the chase ; and the loud hunter's shout ;
O'er a weak, harmless, flying creature, all
Mix'd in mad tumult, and discordant joy.

AUTUMNAL FOGS.

Now, by the cool declining year condens'd,
Descend the copious exhalations ; check'd
As up the middle sky unseen they stole ;
And roll the doubling fogs around the hill.
No more the mountain, horrid, vast, sublime,
Who pours a sweep of rivers from his sides,
And high between contending kingdoms rears
The rocky long division, fills the view
With great variety ; but in a night
Of gathering vapour, from the baffled sense
Sinks dark and dreary. Thence expanding far,
The huge dusk, gradual, swallows up the plain :
Vanish the woods ; the dim-seen river seems
Sullen, and slow, to roll the misty wave.
E'en in the height of noon oppress, the sun
Sheds weak, and blunt, his wide-refracted ray ;
Whence glaring oft, with many a broadened orb,
He frights the nations. Indistinct on earth,
Seen through the turbid air, beyond the life
Objects appear ; and, wilder'd, o'er the waste
The shepherd stalks gigantic. Till at last Wreath'd dun around, in deeper circles still Successive closing, sits the general fog
Unbounded o'er the world ; and mingling thick,
A formless grey confusion covers all.
As when of old (so sang the HEBREW BARD)
Light, uncollected, through the chaos urg'd
Its infant way ; nor Order yet had drawn
His lovely train from out the dubious gloom.

THE APPROACH OF WINTER.

Now when the cheerless empire of the sky
To Capricorn the Centaur Archer yields,
And fierce Aquarius stains th' inverted year ;
Hung o'er the farthest verge of heaven, the sun
Scarce spreads through ether the dejected day.
Faint are his gleams, and ineffectual shoot
His struggling rays, in horizontal lines,
Through the thick air ; as cloth'd in cloudy storm,
Weak, wan, and broad, he skirts the southern
sky :
And soon-descending to the long dark night,
Wide-shading all, the prostrate world resigns.
Nor is the night unwish'd ; while vital heat,
Light, life, and joy, the dubious day forsake.
Meantime, in sable cincture, shadows vast,
Deep-ting'd and damp, and congregated clouds,
And all the vapoury turbulence of heaven,
Involve the face of things. Thus Winter falls,

A heavy gloom oppressive o'er the world ;
Through Nature shedding influence malign,
And rouses up the seeds of dark disease.

The soul of man dies in him, loathing life,
And black with more than melancholy views.
The cattle droop ; and o'er the furrow'd land
Fresh from the plough, the dun discolour'd flocks,
Untended, spreading, crop the wholesome root.
Along the woods, along the moorish fens,
Sighs the sad genius of the coming storm ;
And up among the loose disjointed cliffs,
And fractur'd mountains wild, the brawling brook

And cave, presageful, send a hollow moan,
Resounding long in listening fancy's ear.

Then comes the father of the tempest forth,
Wrapt in black glooms. First joyless rains obscure,

Drive through the mingling skies with vapour foul ;

Dash on the mountain's brow, and shake the woods,

That grumbling wave below. Th' unsightly plain
Lies a brown deluge ; as the low-bent clouds
Pour flood on flood, yet unexhausted still Combine, and deep'ning into night, shut up
The day's fair face. The wanderers of heaven,
Each to his home, retire ; save those that love
To take their pastime in the troubled air ;
Or skimming flutter round the dimply pool.
The cattle from th' untasted fields return,
And ask, with meaning lowe, their wonted stalls,
Or ruminat in the contiguous shade.

Thither the household feathery people crowd,
The crested cock, with all his female train,
Pensive, and dripping ; while the cottage-hind
Hangs o'er th' enlivening blaze, and taleful there
Recounts his simple frolic : much he talks,
And much he laughs ; nor recks the storm that blows

Without, and rattles on his humble roof.

Wide o'er the brim, with many a torrent
swell'd,

And the mix'd ruin of its banks o'erspread,
At last the rous'd-up river pours along ;
Resistless, roaring, dreadful, down it comes,
From the rude mountain, and the mossy wild,
Tumbling through rocks abrupt, and sounding
far ;

Then o'er the sanded valley floating spreads,
Calm, sluggish, silent, till again, constrain'd
Between two meeting hills, it bursts away,
Where rocks and woods o'erhang the turbid
stream ;

There gathering triple force, rapid, and deep,
It boils, and wheels, and foams, and thunders through.

- SNOW.

The keener tempests rise : and fuming dun
From all the livid east, or piercing north,
Thick clouds ascend ; in whose capacious womb
A vapour deluge lies, to snow congeal'd.
Heavy they roll their fleecy world along ;
And the sky saddens with the gather'd storm.

Through the hush'd air the whitening shower
descends,

At first thin wavering ; till at last the flakes
Fall broad, and wide, and fast, dimming the
day,

With a continual flow. The cherish'd fields
Put on their winter-robe of purest white.

'Tis brightness all ; save where the new snow melts

Along the mazy current. Low, the woods
Bow their hoar head ; and, ere the languid sun
Faint from the west emits his evening ray,
Earth's universal face, deep hid, and chill,
Is one wild dazzling waste, that buries wide
The works of man. Drooping, the labourer-ox
Stands cover'd o'er with snow, and then demands
The fruit of all his toil. The fowls of heaven,
Tam'd by the cruel season, crowd around
The winnowing store, and claim the little boon
Which PROVIDENCE assigns them. One alone
The red-breast, sacred to the household gods,
Wisely regardful of th' embroiling sky,
In joyless fields and thorny thickets leaves
His shivering mates, and pays to trusted man
His annual visit. Half-afraid, he first Against the window beats ; then, brisk, alights
On the warm hearth ; then, hopping o'er the floor,

Eyes all the smiling family askance,
And pecks, and starts, and wonders where he is ;
Till more familiar grown, the table-crumbs
Attract his slender feet. The foodless wilds
Pour forth their brown inhabitants. The hare,
Though timorous of heart, and hard beset
By death in various forms, dark snares, and dog-

And more un pitying man, the garden seeks,
Urg'd on by fearless want. The bleating kind Eye the bleak heaven, and next the glistening
earth.

With looks of dumb despair : then, sad dispers'd.
Dig for the wither'd herb through heaps of snow.

Now, shepherds, to your helpless charge be
kind ;

Baffle the raging year, and fill their pens
With food at will ; lodge them below the storm,
And watch them strict : for from the bellowing
east,

In this dire season, oft the whirlwind's wing
Sweeps up the burden of whole wintry plains
At one wide waft ; and o'er the hapless flocks,
Hid in the hollow of two neighbouring hills,
The billowy tempest whelms ; till, upward urg'd,
The valley to a shining mountain swells,
Tipt with a wreath high-curling in the sky.

THE HUSBANDMAN LOST IN THE SNOW.

As thus the snows arise ; and foul, and fierce,
All Winter drives along the darken'd air ;
In his own loose-revolving fields, the swain
Disaster'd stands ; sees other hills ascend,
Of unknown joyless brow ; and other scenes,
Of horrid prospect, shag the trackless plain :
Nor finds the river, nor the forest, hid
Beneath the formless wild ; but wanders on

From hill to dale, still more and more astray
 Impatient flouncing through the drifted heaps,
 Stung with the thoughts of home ; the thoughts of home

Rush on his nerves, and call their vigour forth
 In many a vain attempt. How sinks his soul !
 What black despair, what horror fills his heart !
 When for the dusky spot, which fancy feign'd
 His tufted cottage rising through the snow,
 He meets the roughness of the middle waste,
 Far from the track, and blest abode of man ;
 While round him night resistless closes fast,
 And every tempest, howling o'er his head,
 Renders the savage wilderness more wild.
 Then through the busy shapes into his mind
 Of cover'd pits, unfathomably deep,
 A dire descent ! beyond the power of frost ;
 Of faithless bogs ; of precipices bage,
 Smooth'd up with snow : and, what is land, unknown.

What water, of the still unfrozen spring,
 In the loose marsh, or solitary lake,
 Where the fresh fountain from the bottom boils.
 These check his fearful steps ; and down he sinks
 Beneath the shelter of the shapeless drift,
 Thinking o'er all the bitterness of death ;
 Mix'd with the tender anguish nature shoots
 Through the wrung bosom of the dying man,
 His wife, his children, and his friends unseen.

In vain for him th' officious wife prepares
 The fire fair-blazing, and the vestment warm ;
 In vain his little children peeping out
 Into the mingling storm, demand their sire,
 With tears of artless innocence. Alas !
 Nor wife, nor children, more shall he behold ;
 Nor friends, nor sacred home. On every nerve
 The deadly winter seizes ; shut- up sense ;
 And, o'er his inmost vitals creeping cold,
 Lays him along the snows, a stiffen'd corse ;
 Stretch'd out, and bleaching in the northern blast.

FROST.

What art thou, frost ? and whence are thy keen stores
 Deriv'd, thou secret all-invading power !
 Whom ev'n th' illusive fluid cannot fly ?
 Is not thy potent energy, unseen,
 Myriad of little salts, or hook'd, or shap'd
 Like double wedges, and diffus'd immense
 Through water, earth, and ether ? Hence art
 eve,

Steam'd eager from the red horizon round,
 With the fierce rage of Winter deep suffus'd,
 An icy gale, oft shifting, o'er the pool
 Breathes a blue film, and in its mid career
 Arrests the bickering stream. The loosen'd ice,
 Let down the flood, and half dissolv'd by day,
 Rustles no more ; but to the sedgy bank
 Fast grows ; or gathers round the pointed stone,
 A crystal pavement, by the breath of heaven
 Cemented firm ; till, seiz'd from shore to shore,
 The whole imprison'd river grows below.
 Loud rings the frozen earth, and hard reflects

A double noise ; while, at his evening watch,
 The village dog deters the nightly thief ;
 The heifer lows ; the distant waterfall
 Swells in the breeze ; and, with the hasty tread
 Of traveller, the hollow-sounding plain
 Shakes from afar. The full ethereal round,
 Infinite worlds disclosing to the view,
 Shines out intensely keen ; and, all one cope
 Of starry glitter, glows from pole to pole.

From pole to pole the rigid influence falls,
 Through the still night, incessant, heavy, strong,
 And seizes nature fast. It freezes on ;
 Till morn, late rising o'er the drooping world
 Lifts her pale eye unjoyous. Then appears
 The various labour of the silent night :
 Prone from the dripping cave, and dumb cas-
 Whose idle torrents only seem to roar, [cade,
 The pendant icicle ; the frost-work fair,
 Where transient hues, and fancied figures rise ;
 Wide-spouted o'er the hill, the frozen brook,
 A livid track, cold-gleaming on the morn ;
 The forest bent beneath the plummy wave ;
 And by the frost refin'd the whiter snow,
 Incrusted hard, and sounding to the tread
 Of early shepherd, as he pensive seeks
 His pining flock ; or from the mountain top,
 Pleas'd with the slippery surface, swift descends.

HYMN TO THE SUPREME BEING.

THESE, as they change, Almighty Father ! these,
 Are but the varied God. The rolling year
 Is full of thee. Forth in the pleasing spring
 Thy beauty walks, thy tenderness and love.
 Wide flush the fields ; the softening air is balm ;
 Echo the mountains round ; the forest smiles ;
 And every sense, and every heart is joy.
 Then comes thy glory in the summer-months,
 With light and heat refulgent. Then thy sun
 Shoots full perfection through the swelling year :
 And oft thy voice in dreadful thunder speaks ;
 And oft at dawn, deep noon, or falling eve,
 By brooks and groves, in hollow-whispering gales.

Thy bounty shines in Autumn unconfined,
 And spreads a common feast for all that lives.
 In winter awful thou ! with clouds and storms
 Around thee thrown, tempest o'er tempest roll'd,
 Majestic darkness ! on the whirlwind's wing,
 Riding sublime, thou bidd'st the world adore,
 And humblest nature with thy northern blast.

Mysterious round ! what skill, what force divine,

Deep felt, in these appear ! a simple train,
 Yet so delightful mix'd with such kind art,
 Such beauty and beneficence combin'd ;
 Shade, unperceiv'd, so softening into shade ;
 And all so forming an harmonious whole ;
 That, as they still succeed, they ravish still.
 But wandering oft, with brute unconscious gaze,
 Man marks not thee ; marks not the mighty
 hand,
 That ever-busy, wheels the silent spheres ;

Works in the secret deep; shoots steaming,
thence

The fair profusion that o'erspreads the spring:
Flings from the sun direct the flaming day:
Feeds every creature; hurls the tempest forth;
And, as on earth this grateful change revolves,
With transport touches all the springs of life.

Nature, attend! join every living soul,
Beneath the spacious temple of the sky,
In adoration join; and, ardent, raise
One general song! To Him, ye vocal gales, Breathe soft; whose spirit in your freshness
breathes:

Oh talk of Him in solitary glooms!
Where, o'er the rock, the scarcely waving pine
Fills the brown shade with a religious awe.
And ye, whose bolder note is heard afar,
Who shake th' astonish'd world, lift high to heaven

Th' impetuous song, and say from whom you rage.
His praise, ye brooks, attune, ye trembling rills;
And let me catch it as I muse along.

Ye headlong torrents, rapid, and profound;
Ye softer floods, that lead the humid maze
Along the vale; and thou, majestic main,
A secret world of wonders in thyself,
Sound His stupendous praise; whose greater voice

Or bids you roar, or bids your roarings fall.
Soft roll your incense, herbs, and fruits, and flow'rs,

In mingled clouds to Him; whose sun exalts,
Whose breath perfumes you, and whose pencil paints.

Ye forests bend, ye harvests wave, to Him;
Breathe your still song into the reaper's heart,
As none he goes beneath the joyous moon.
Ye that keep watch in heaven, as earth asleep
Unconscious lies, effuse your mildest beams,
Ye constellations, while your angels strike,
Amid the spangled sky, the silver lyre.
Great source of day! best image here below
Of thy Creator, ever pouring wide,
From world to world, the vital ocean round;
On Nature write with every beam His praise.
The thunder rolls: be hush'd the prostrate
world;

While cloud to cloud returns the solemn hymn.
Bleat out afresh, ye hills: ye mossy rocks,
Retain the sound: the broad responsive lowe,
Ye valleys raise; for the Great Shepherd reigns;
And His unsuffering kingdom yet will come.

Ye woodlands all, awake: a boundless song
Bursts from the groves! and when the restless
day,

Expiring, lays the warbling world asleep,
Sweetest of birds! sweet Philomela, charm
The listening shades, and teach the night His praise.

Ye chief, for whom the whole creation smiles,
At once the head, the heart, and tongue of all,
Crown the great hymn! in swarming cities vast,
Assembled men, to the deep organ join
The long-resounding voice, oft-breaking clear,

At solemn pauses, through the swelling bass;
And, as each mingling flame increases each,
In one united ardour rise to heaven.
Or if you rather chuse the rural shade,
And find a fane in every sacred grove;
There let the shepherd's flute, the virgin's lay,
The prompting seraph, and the poet's lyre,
Still sing the God of Seasons, as they roll.

For me, when I forget the darling theme,
Whether the blossom blows, the summer ray
Russets the plain, inspiring autumn gleams,
Or winter rises in the blackening east;
Be my tongue mute, may fancy paint no more,
And, dead to joy, forget my heart to beat.

Should fate command me to the farthest verge
Of the green earth, to distant barbarous climes,
Rivers unknown to song; where first the sun
Gilds Indian mountains, or his setting beam
Flames on th' Atlantic isles; 'tis nought to me;
Since God is ever present, ever felt,
In the void waste as in the city full;
And where He vital breathes there must be joy.
When even at last the solemn hour shall come,
And wing my mystic flight to future worlds,
I cheerful will obey; there, with new powers,
Will rising wonders sing: I cannot go
Where Universal Love not smiles around,
Sustaining all yon orbs and all their suns;
From seeming evil still educating good,
And better thence again, and better still,
In infinite progression. But I lose
Myself in Him, in light ineffable!
Come then, expressive silence, muse His praise.

THE CASTLE OF INDOLENCE

[Canto I.]

O MORTAL man, who livest here by toil,
Do not complain of this thy hard estate;
That like an emmet thou must ever moil,
Is a sad sentence of an ancient date;
And, certes, there is for it reason great:
For, though sometimes it makes thee weep
and wail,
And curse thy star, and early drudge and
late,
Withouten that would come an heavier bale,
Loose life, unruly passions, and diseases pale.

In lowly dale, fast by a river's side,
With woody hill o'er hill encompass'd round,
A most enchanting wizard did abide,
Than whom a fiend more fell is no where
found.

It was, I ween, a lovely spot of ground:
And there a season between June and May,
Half pranked with spring, with summer half embrown'd,
A listless climate made, where, sooth to say,
No living wight could work, no cared ev'n for play.

Was nought around but images of rest :
 Sleep-soothing groves, and quiet lawns between ;
 And flowery beds that slumberous influence
 kest,
 From poppies breath'd ; and beds of pleasant
 green,
 Where never yet was creeping creature seen.
 Mean-time unnumber'd glittering streamlets
 play'd,
 And hurled every-where their waters sheen ;
 That, as they bicker'd through the sunny
 glade,
 Though restless still themselves, a lulling murmur made.

Join'd to the prattle of the purling rills,
 Were heard the lowing herds along the vale,
 And flocks loud-bleating from the distant
 hills,
 And vacant shepherds piping in the dale :
 And now and then sweet Philomel would wail,
 Or stock-doves plain amid the forest deep,
 That drowsy rustled to the sighing gale ;
 And still a coil the grass-hopper did keep ;
 Yet all these sounds yblent inclined all to sleep.

Full in the passage of the vale above,
 A sable, silent, solemn forest stood ;
 Where nought but shadowy forms was seen
 to move,
 As Idless fancied in her dreaming mood :
 And up the hills, on either side a wood
 Of blackening pines, ay waving to and fro,
 Sent forth a sleepy horror through the blood ;
 And where this valley winded out, below,
 The murmuring main was heard, and scarcely heard, to flow.

A pleasing land of drowsy-head it was,
 Of dreams that wave before the half-shut eye ;
 And of gay castles in the clouds that pass,
 For ever flushing round a summer-sky :
 There eke the soft delights, that witchingly
 Instil a wanton sweetness through the breast,
 And the calm pleasures always hover'd nigh ;
 But whate'er smack'd of noyance, or unrest,
 Was far far off expell'd from this delicious nest.

The landskip such, inspiring perfect ease,
 Where Indolence (for so the wizard hight)
 Close-hid his castle mid embowering trees,
 That half shut out the beams of Phœbus
 bright,
 And made a kind of checker'd day and night ;
 Mernwhile, unceasing at the massy gate,
 Beneath a spacious palm, the wicked wight
 Was plac'd ; and to his lute, of cruel fate,
 And labour harsh, complain'd, lamenting man's estate.

Thither continual pilgrims crowded still,
 From all the roads of earth that pass there by :

For, as they chanc'd to breathe on neighbouring hill,
 The freshness of this valley smote their eye,
 And drew them ever and anon more nigh ;
 Till clustering round th' enchanter false they hung,
 Ymolten with his syren melody ;
 While o'er th' enfeebling lute his hand he flung,
 And to the trembling chords these tempting verses sung :

" Behold ! ye pilgrims of this earth, behold !
 See all but man with unearn'd pleasure gay :
 See her bright robes the butterfly unfold,
 Broke from her wintery tomb in prime of
 May !
 What youthful bride can equal her array ?
 Who can with her for easy pleasure vie ?
 From mead to mead with gentle wing to stray,
 From flower to flower on balmy gales to fly,
 Is all she has to do beneath the radiant sky.

Behold the merry minstrels of the morn,
 The swarming songsters of the careless grove,
 Ten thousand throats ! that from the flowering thorn,
 Hymn their good God, and carol sweet of
 love,
 Such grateful kindly raptures them emove :
 They neither plough, nor sow : ne, fit for flail,
 E'er to the barn the nodding sheaves they drove ;
 Yet theirs each harvest dancing in the gale,
 Whatever crowns the hill, or smiles along the vale.

Outcast of nature, man ! the wretched thrall
 Of bitter dropping sweat, of sweltry pain,
 Of cares that eat away thy heart with gall,
 And of the vices, an inhuman train,
 That all proceed from savage thirst of gain :
 For when hard-hearted Interest first began
 To poison earth, Astræa left the plain ;
 Guile, violence, and murder seiz'd on man,
 And for soft milky streams, with blood the rivers ran.

Come, ye, who still the cumberous load of
 life
 Push hard up hill ; but as the farthest steep
 You trust to gain, and put an end to strife,
 Down thunders back the stone with mighty sweep,
 And hurls your labours to the valley deep,
 For ever vain : come, and, withouten fee,
 I in oblivion will your sorrows steep,
 Your cares, your toils, will steep you in a sea
 Of full delight : O come, ye weary wights, to
 me !

With me, you need not risé at early dawn,
 To pass the joyless day in various stounds :

Or, louting low, on upstart fortune fawn,
And sell fair honour for some paltry pounds ;
Or through the city take your dirty rounds,
To cheat, and dun, and lie, and visit pay,
Now flattering base, now giving secret
wounds :

Or prowl in courts of law for human prey,
In venal senate thief, or rob on broad high-
way.

No cocks, with me, to rustic labour call,
From village on to village sounding clear :
To tardy swain no shrill-voic'd matron's squall ;

No dogs, no babes, no wives, to stun your ear ;
No hammers thump ; no horrid blacksmith
fear,

Ne noisy tradesmen your sweet slumbers
start,

With sounds that are a misery to hear :

But all is calm, as would delight the heart
Of Sybarite of old, all nature, and all art.

Here nought but candour reigns, indulgent
ease,

Good-natur'd lounging, sauntering up and
down :

They who are pleas'd themselves must always
please ;

On others' ways they never squint a frown.

Nor heed what haps in hamlet or in town :

Thus from the source of tender indolence,

With milky blood the heart is overflown.

Is sooth'd and sweeten'd by the social sense ;
For interest, envy, pride, and strife are banish'd
hence.

What, what, is virtue, but repose of mind.

A pure ethereal calm, that knows no storm ;

Above the reach of wild ambition's wind,

Above the passions that this world deform,

And torture man, a proud malignant worm ?

But here, instead, soft gales of passion play,

And gently stir the heart, thereby to form

A quicker sense of joy ; as breezes stray

Across th' enliven'd skies, and make them still more gay.

The best of men have ever lov'd repose :

They hate to mingle in the filthy fray ;

Where the soul sours, and gradual rancour
grows,

Imbitter'd more from peevish day to day.

Ev'n those whom Fame has lent her fairest ray,

The most renown'd of worthy wights of yore,

From a base world at last have stol'n away :

So Scipio, to the soft Cumæan shore

Retiring, tasted joy he never knew before.

But if a little exercise you chuse,

Some zest for ease, 'tis not forbidden here.

Amid the groves you may indulge the muse,

Or tend the blooms, and deck the vernal year ;

Or softly stealing, with your watery gear,
Along the brook, the crimson spotted fry
You may delude : the whilst, amus'd, you hear

Now the hoarse stream, and now the zephyr's
sigh,

Attuned to the birds, and woodland melody.

O grievous folly ! to heap up estate,

Losing the days you see beneath the sun ;

When, sudden, comes blind unrelenting fate,

And gives th' untasted portion you have won,

With ruthless toil, and many a wretch un-
done.

To those who mock you gone to Pluto's reign,

There with sad ghosts to pine, and shadows
dun :

But sure it is of vanities most vain,

To toil for what you here untoiling may obtain."

He ceas'd. But still their trembling ears retain'd

The deep vibrations of his witching song ;

That, by a kind of magic power, constrain'd

To enter in, pell-mell, the listening throng,

Heaps pour'd on heaps, and yet they slept
along,

In silent ease ; as when beneath the beam

Of summer-moons, the distant woods among,

Or by some flood all silver'd with the gleam.

The soft-embodied fays through airy portal
stream :

By the smooth demon so it order'd was,

And here his baneful bounty first began :

Though some there were who would not farther pass,

And his alluring baits suspected han.

The wise distrust the too fair spoken man.

Yet through the gate they cast a wishful eye ;

Not to move on, perdie, is all they can ;

For do their very best they cannot fly,

But often each way look, and often sorely sigh.

When this the watchful wicked wizard saw,

With sudden spring he leap'd upon them strait ;

And soon as touch'd by his unhallow'd paw,

They found themselves within the cursed gate ;

Full hard to be repass'd, like that of fate.

Not stronger were of old the giant crew,

Who sought to pull high Jove from regal
state ;

Though feeble wretch he seem'd of sallow hue :

Certes, who bides his grasp, will that encounter rue.

For whomso'er the villain takes in hand,

Their joints unknot, their sinews melt apace ;

As lithe they grow as any willow-wand

And of their vanish'd force remains no trace :

So when a maiden fair, of modest grace,

In all her buxom blooming May of charms,

Is seized in some losel's hot embrace,
 She waxeth very weakly as she warms
 Then sighing yields her up to love's delicious harms.

Wak'd by the crowd, slow from his bench arose
 A comely full-spread porter, swoln with sleep:
 His calm, broad, thoughtless aspect breath'd
 repose;
 And in sweet torpor he was plunged deep,
 Ne could himself from ceaseless yawning
 keep;
 While o'er his eyes the drowsy liquor ran,
 Through which his half-wak'd soul would faintly peep.
 Then taking his black staff he call'd his man,
 And rous'd himself as much as rouse himself he can.

The lad leap'd lightly at his master's call.
 He was, to weet, a little roguish page,
 Save sleep and play who minded nought at all,
 Like most the untaught striplings of his age.
 This boy he kept each hand to disengage,
 Garters and buckles, task for him unfit.
 But ill-becoming his grave personage,
 And which his portly paunch would not permit,
 So this same limber page to all performed it.

Meantime the master-porter wide display'd
 Great store of caps, of slippers, and of gowns;
 Wherewith he those that enter'd in, array'd Loose, as the breeze that plays along the downs,
 And waves the summer-woods when evening
 trowns.
 O fair undress, best dress! it checks no vein,
 But every flowing limb in pleasure drowns,
 And heightens ease with grace. This done,
 right fain,
 Sir porter sat him down, and turn'd to sleep
 again.

Thus easy rob'd, they to the fountain sped,
 That in the middle of the court up-threw
 A stream, high-spouting from its liquid bed,
 And falling back again in drizzly dew:
 There each deep draughts, as deep he thirsted,
 drew.

It was a fountain of Nepenthe rare:
 Whence, as Dan Homer sings, huge plea-saunce grew.
 And sweet oblivion of vile earthly care;
 Fair gladsome waking thoughts, and joyous dreams more fair.

This rite perform'd, all inly pleas'd and still Withouten tromp, was proclamation made.
 "Ye sons of Indolence, do what you will;
 And wander where you list, through hall or
 glade!
 Be no man's pleasure for another staid;
 Let each as likes him best his hours employ,

And curs'd be he who minds his neighbour's trade!
 Here dwells kind ease and unreprieving joy:
 He little merits bliss who others can annoy."

Strait of these endless numbers, swarming
 round,
 As thick as idle motes in sunny ray,
 Not one oftsoons in view was to be found,
 But every man stroll'd off his own glad way,
 Wide o'er this ample court's blank area,
 With all the lodges that thereto pertain'd,
 No living creature could be seen to stray;
 While solitude and perfect silence reign'd:
 So that to think you dreamt you almost was con-strain'd.

As when a shepherd of the Hebrid-isles,
 Plac'd far amid the melancholy main,
 (Whether it be lone fancy him beguiles;
 Or that æriel beings sometimes deign
 To stand embodied, to our senses plain)
 Sees on the naked hill, or valley low,
 The whilst in ocean Phœbus dips his wain,
 A vast assembly moving to and fro;
 Then all at once in air dissolves the wondrous
 show.

Ye gods of quiet, and of sleep profound!
 Whose soft dominion o'er this castle sways,
 And all the widely-silent places round,
 Forgive me, if my trembling pen displays
 What never yet was sung in mortal lays.
 But how shall I attempt such arduous string,
 I who have spent my nights and nightly days,
 In this soul-deadening place, loose-loitering?
 Ah! how shall I for this uprear my molted wing?

Come on, my muse, nor stoop to low despair,
 Thou imp of Jove, touch'd by celestial fire!
 Thou yet shalt sing of war, and actions fair,
 Which the bold sons of Britain will inspire:
 Of ancient bards thou yet shall sweep the lyre;
 Thou yet shall tread in tragic pall the stage,
 Paint love's enchanting woes, the hero's ire,
 The sages calm, the patriot's noble rage,
 Dashing corruption down through every worthless age.

The doors, that knew no shrill alarming bell,
 Ne curs'd knocker ply'd by villain's hand,
 Self-open'd into halls, where, who can tell
 What elegance and grandeur wide expand
 The pride of Turkey and of Persia land?
 Soft quilts on quilts, on carpets carpets spread,
 And couches stretch'd around in seemly band;
 And endless pillows rise to prop the head;
 So that each spacious room was one full-swelling-bed.

And every where huge cover'd tables stood,
 With wines high flavour'd and rich viands
 crown'd;

Whatever sprightly juice or tasteful food
On the green-bosom of this earth are found,
And all old ocean genders in his round :
Some hand unseen these silently display'd,
Ev'n undemand'd by a sign or sound ;
You need but wish, and, instantly obey'd,
Fair ranged the dishes rose, and thick the glasses
play'd.

Here freedom reign'd, without the least alloy ;
Nor gossip's tale, nor ancient maiden's gall,
Nor saintly spleen durst murmur at our joy,
And with evenom'd tongue our pleasures pall.
For why? there was but one great rule for
all ;
To wit, that each should work his own desire,
And eat, drink, study, sleep, as it may fall,
Or melt the time in love, or wake the lyre,
And carol what, unbid, the muses might inspire.

The rooms with costly tapestry were hung,
Where was inwoven many a gentle tale ;
Such as of old the rural poets sung,
Or of Arcadian or Sicilian vale :
Reclining lovers, in the lonely dale,
Pour'd forth at large the sweetly-tortur'd
heart ;
Or, sighing tender passion, swell'd the gale,
And taught charm'd echo to resound their smart ;
While flocks, woods, streams, around, repose
and peace impart.

Those pleas'd the most, where, by a cunning
hand,
Depainted was the patriarchal age ;
What time Dan Abraham left the Chaldee
land.
And pastur'd on from verdant stage to stage.
Where fields and fountains fresh could best engage.
Toil was not then. Of nothing took they heed,
But with wild beasts the sylvan war to wage.
And o'er vast plains their herds and flocks to feed :
Blest sons of Nature they ! true golden age indeed !

Sometimes the pencil, in cool airy halls,
Bade the gay bloom of vernal landscapes rise,
Or autumn's varied shades embrown the walls :
Now the black tempest strikes th' astonish'd
eyes,
Now down the steep the flashing torrent flies ;
The trembling sun now plays o'er ocean blue,
And now rude mountains frown amid the skies ;
Whate'er Lorraine light-touch'd with softening hue,
Or savage Rosa dash'd, or learned Poussin drew.

Each sound too here, to languishment inclin'd,

Lull'd the weak bosom, and induced ease,
Aerial music in the warbling wind,
At distance rising oft by small degrees,
Nearer and nearer came, till o'er the trees
It hung, and breath'd such soul-dissolving
airs,
As did, alas ! with soft perdition please :
Entangled deep in its enchanting snares,
The listening heart forgot all duties and all cares.

A certain music, never known before,
Here lull'd the pensive melancholy mind ;
Full easily obtain'd. Behoves no more,
But sidelong, to the gently-waving wind,
To lay the well-tun'd instrument reclin'd ;
From which, with airy flying fingers light,
Beyond each mortal touch the most refin'd,
The god of winds drew sounds of deep delight
Whence, with just cause, the harp of Æolus it hight.

Ah me ! what hand can touch the string so fine ?
Who up the lofty diapason roll
Such sweet, such sad, such solemn airs divine,
Then let them down again into the soul ?
Now rising love they fann'd ; now pleasing dole
They breath'd, in tender musings, through the heart ;
And now a graver sacred strain they stole,
As when seraphic hands an hymn impart :
While warbling nature all, above the reach of
art !

Such the gay splendour, the luxurious state,
Of Caliphs old, who on the Tygris' shore,
In mighty Bagdat, populous and great,
Held their bright court, where was of ladies
store ;
And verse, love, music, still the garland wore :
When sleep was coy, the bard in waiting
there,
Chear'd the lone midnight with the muse's
love :
Composing music bade his dreams be fair,
And music lent new gladness to the morning
air.

Near the pavilions where we slept, still ran Soft-tinkling streams, and dashing waters
fell,
And sobbing breezes sigh'd, and oft began (So work'd the wizard) wintery storms to swell,
As heaven and earth they would together
mell :
At doors and windows, threatening seem'd to
The demons of the tempest, growing fell,
Yet the least entrance found they none at
all ;
Whence sweeter grew our sleep, secure in massy
hall.

And hither Morpheus sent his kindest dreams,
Raising a world of gayer tinct and grace ;
O'er which were shadowy cast Elysian gleams,
That play'd, in waving lights, from place to
place,
And shed a roseate smile on nature's face.
Not Titian's pencil e'er could so array,
So fierce with clouds the pure ethereal space :
Ne could it e'er such melting forms display,
As loose on flowery beds all languishingly lay.

No, fair illusions ! artful phantoms, no !
My muse will not attempt your fairy-land :
She has no colours that like you can glow :
To catch your vivid scenes too gross her
hand.
But sure it is, was ne'er a subtler band
Than these same guileful angel-seeming sprights,
Who thus in dreams, voluptuous, soft, and bland,
Pour'd all th' Arabian heaven upon her
nights,
And bless'd them oft besides with more refin'd delights.

They were in sooth a most enchanting train,
Ev'n feigning virtue ; skilful to unite
With evil good, and strew with pleasure pain.
But for those fiends, whom blood and broils delight ;
Who hurl the wretch, as if to hell outright,
Down, down black gulfs, where sullen waters
sleep,
Or hold him clambering all the fearful night
On beetling cliffs, or pent in ruins deep ;
They, till due time should serve, were bid far hence to keep.

Ye guardian spirits, to whom man is dear,
From these foul demons shield the midnight
gloom :
Angels of fancy and of love, be near,
And o'er the blank of sleep diffuse a bloom :
Evoke the sacred shades of Greece and Rome,
And let them virtue with a look impart :
But chief, awhile, O ! lend us from the tomb
These long-lost friends for whom in love we smart, [heart.
And fill with pious awe and joy-mixt woe the

Or are you sportive—Bid the morn of youth
Rise to new light, and beam afresh the days
Of innocence, simplicity, and truth ;
To cares estrang'd, and manhood's thorny
ways
What transport, to retrace our boyish plays,
Our easy bliss, when each thing joy supplied ;
The woods, the mountains, and the warbling
maze [wide,
Of the wild brooks !—But, fondly wandering
My muse, resume the task that yet doth thee abide.

One great amusement of our household was,
In a huge crystal magic globe to spy,
Still as you turn'd it, all things that do pass
Upon this ant-hill earth ; where constantly
Of idly-busy men the restless fry
Run bustling to and fro with foolish haste,
In search of pleasure vain that from them fly,
Or which obtain'd the caitiffs dare not taste :
When nothing is enjoy'd, can there be greater waste ?

"Of vanity the mirror" this was call'd,
Here you a muckworm of the town might see,
At his dull desk, amid his legers stall'd,
Eat up with carking care and penurie ;
Most like to carcase parch'd on gallow-tree.
"A penny saved is a penny got ;"
Firm to this scoundrel maxim keepeth he,
Ne of its rigour will he bate a jot,
Till it has quench'd his fire, and banished his pot.

Strait from the filth of this low grub, behold !
Comes fluttering forth a gaudy spendthrift heir,
All glossy gay, enamel'd all with gold,
The silly tenant of the summer-air,
In folly lost, of nothing takes he care ;
Pimps, lawyers, stewards, harlots, flatterers vile,
And thieving tradesmen him among them
share :
His father's ghost from limbo-lake, the while,
Sees this, which more damnation doth upon him pile.

This globe pourtray'd the race of learned
men,
Still at their books, and turning o'er the page,
Backwards and forwards : oft they snatch the
pen,
As if inspir'd, and in a Thespiau rage ;
Then write, and blot, as would your ruth engage.
Why, authors, all this scrawl and scribbling sore ?
To lose the present, gain the future age,
Praised to be when you can hear no more,
And much enrich'd with fame, when useless worldly store.

Then would a splendid city rise to view,
With carts, and cars, and coaches, roaring
all :
Wide pour'd abroad behold the giddy crew ;
See how they dash along from wall to wall !
At every door, hark how they thundering call !
Good Lord ! what can this giddy rout excite ?
Why, on each other with fell tooth to fall ;
A neighbour's fortune, fame, or peace, to blight,
And make new tiresome parties for the coming
night.

The puzzling sons of party next appear'd,
In dark cabals and nightly juntos met;
And now they whisper'd close, now shrugging,
rear'd

Th' important shoulder; then, as if to get
New light, their twinkling eyes were inward
set.

No sooner Lucifer recalls affairs,
Then forth they various rush in mighty fret;
When, lo! push'd up to power, and crown'd
their cares,
In comes another sett, and kicketh them down stairs.

But what most shew'd the vanity of life,
Was to behold the nations all on fire,
In cruel broils engag'd, and deadly strife:
Most Christian kings, inflam'd by black desire,
With honourable ruffians in their hire,
Cause war to rage, and blood around to pour:
Of this sad work when each begins to tire,
They sit them down just where they were before,
Till for new scenes of woe peace shall their force restore.

To number up the thousands dwelling here,
An useless were, and eke an endless task;
From kings, and those who at the helm appear,
To gypsies brown in summer-glades who bask.
Yea many a man perdie I could unmask,
Whose desk and table make a solemn show,
With tape-tied trash, and suits of fools that
ask
For place or pension laid in decent row;
But these I passen by, with nameless numbers moe.

Of all the gentle tenants of the place,
There was a man of special grave remark:
A certain tender gloom o'erspread his face,
Pensive, not sad, in thought involv'd, not dark,
As soon this man could sing as morning-lark,
And teach the noblest morals of the heart:
But these his talents were yburied stark;
Of the fine stores he nothing would impart,
Which or boon nature gave, or nature-painting
art.

To noontide shades incontinent he ran,
Where purls the brook with sleep-inviting
sound;
Or when Dan Sol to slope his wheels began,
Amid the broom he bask'd him on the ground,
Where the wild thyme and camomil are
found;
There would he linger, till the latest ray
Of light sat trembling on the welkin's bound;
Then homeward through the twilight shadows
stray,
Sauntering and slow. So had he passed many a
day.

Yet not in thoughtless slumber were they
past;
For oft the heavenly fire, that lay conceal'd
Beneath the sleeping embers, mounted fast,
And all its native light anew reveal'd:
Oft as he travers'd the cerulean field,
And markt the clouds that drove before the
wind,
Ten thousand glorious systems would he build,
Ten thousand great ideas fill'd his mind;
But with the clouds they fled, and left no trace behind.

With him was sometimes join'd, in silent
walk,
(Profoundly silent, for they never spoke)
One shyer still, who quite detested talk:
Oft, stung by spleen, at once away he broke,
To groves of pine, and broad o'ershadowing
oak;
There, inly thrill'd, he wander'd all alone,
And on himself his pensive fury wroke,
Ne ever utter'd word, save when first shone
The glittering star of eve—"Thank heaven! the day is done."

Here lurk'd a wretch, who had not crept abroad
For forty years, ne face of mortal seen;
In chamber brooding like a loathly toad:
And sure his linen was not very clean.
Through secret loop-holes, that had practis'd
been
Near to his bed, his dinner vile he took;
Unkempt, and rough, of squalid face and mien,
Our castle's shame! whence, from his filthy
nook,
We drove the villain out for fitter lair to look.

One day there chaunc'd into these halls to rove
A joyous youth who took you at first sight;
Him the wild wave of pleasure hither drove,
Before the sprightly tempest-tossing light:
Certes, he was a most engaging wight,
Of social glee, and wit humane, though keen.
Turning the night to day, and day to night:
For him the merry bells had rung, I ween,
If in this nook of quiet bells had ever been.

But not ev'n pleasure to excess is good:
What most elates then sinks the soul as low:
When spring-tide joy pours in with copious flood,
The higher still th' exulting billows flow,
The farther back again they flagging go,
And leave us grovelling on the dreary shore:
Taught by this son of joy we found it so;
Who, whilst he staid, kept in a gay uproar
Our madden'd castle all, th' abode of sleep no
more.

As when in prime of June a burnish'd fly,
Sprung from the meads, o'er which he sweeps
along,
Cheer'd by the breathing bloom and vital sky,
Tunes up amid these airy halls his song,
Soothing at first the gay reposing throng :
And oft he sips their bowl ; or, nearly drown'd,
He, thence recovering, drives their beds
among, [found ;
And scares their tender sleep, with trump pro-
Then out again he flies, to wing his mazy round.

Another guest there was, of sense refin'd,
Who felt each worth, for every worth he had ;
Serene, yet warm, humane, yet firm his mind,
As little touch'd as any man's with bad ;
Him through their inmost walks the muses led,
To him the sacred love of nature lent,
And sometimes would he make our valley glad
When as we found he would not here be pent,
To him the bettersort this friendly message sent !

" Come, dwell with us ! true son of virtue,
come !
But if, alas ! we cannot thee persuade,
To lie content beneath our peaceful dome,
Ne ever more to quit our quiet glade ;
Yet when at last thy toils but ill apaid
Shall dead thy fire, and damp its heavenly
spark,
Thou wilt be glad to seek the rural shade,
There to indulge the muse, and nature mark :
We then a lodge for thee will rear in Hagley-Park."

Here whilom ligg'd th' Esopus* of the age ;
But call'd by fame, in soul y^ericked deep.
A noble pride restor'd him to the stage,
And rous'd him like a giant from his sleep.
Ev'n from his slumbers we advantage reap,
With double force th' enliven'd scene he wakes, Yet quits not nature's bounds. He knows to keep
Each due decorum : now the heart he shakes,
And now with well-urg'd sense th' enlighten'd judgment takes.

A bard here dwelt more fat than bard be-seems ;
Whof, void of envy, guile, and lust of gain,
On virtue still and nature's pleasing themes,
Pour'd forth his unpremeditated strain :
The world forsaking with a calm disdain
Here laugh'd he careless in his easy seat ;
Here quaff'd he encircled with the joyous train,
Oft moralizing sage ; his ditty sweet
He loathed much to write, ne cared to repeat.

Full oft by holy feet our ground was trod,
Of clerks good plenty here you mote espy.
A little, round, fat, oily man of God,

* Mr. Quin.

† This character of Mr. Thomson was written by Lord Lyttleton.

Was one I chiefly mark'd among the fry :
He had a roguish twinkle in his eye,
And shone all glittering with ungodly dew,
If a tight damsel chanc'd to trippen by ;
Which when observ'd, he shrunk into his mew,
And strait would recollect his piety anew.

Nor be forgot a tribe, who minded nought
(Old inmates of the place) but state affairs :
They look'd, perdie, as if they deeply thought ;
And on their brow sat every nation's cares.
The world by them is parcell'd out in shares,
When in the hall of smoke they congress hold,
And the sage berry sun-burnt Mocha bears
Has clear'd their inward eye : then, smokeenroll'd,
Their oracles break forth mysterious as of old.

Here languid beauty kept her pale-fac'd court :
Bevies of dainty dames, of high degree,
From every quarter hither made resort ; [free,
Where, from gross mortal care and business
They lay, pour'd out in ease and luxury.
Or should they a vain show of work assume,
Alas ! and well-a-day ! what can it be ?
To knot, to twist, to range the vernal bloom,
But far is cast the distaff, spinning-wheel, and loom.

Their only labour was to kill the time ;
And labour dire it is, and weary woe.
They sit, they loll, turn o'er some idle rhyme ;
Then, rising sudden, to the glass they go,
Or saunter forth, with tottering step and slow.
This soon too rude an exercise they find ;
Strait on the couch their limbs again they throw. [clin'd,
Where hours and hours they sighing lie re-
And court the vapoury god soft-breathing in the wind.

Now must I mark the villany we found,
But ah ! too late, as shall eftsoons be shewn.
A place here was, deep, dreary, under ground ;
Where still our inmates, when displeasing grown,
Diseas'd, and loathsome, privily were thrown.
Far from the light of heaven, they languish'd
there.
Unpitied uttering many a bitter groan ;
For of these wretches taken was no care :
Fierce fiends, and hags of hell, their only nurses
were.

Alas ! the change ! from scenes of joy and rest,
To this dark den, where sickness toss'd alway.
Here lethargy, with deadly sleep oppress,
Stretch'd on his back, a mighty lubbard, lay,
Heaving his sides, and snored night and day ;
To stir him from his trauance it was not eath,
And his half-open'd eyne he shut straitway :
He led, I wot, the softest way to death,
And taught withouten pain and strife to yield the breath.

*Of limbs enormous, but withal unsound,
Soft swoln and pale, here lay the hydropsy :
Unwieldy man ; with belly monstrous round,
For ever fed with watery supply :
For still he drank, and yet he still was dry,
And moping here did hypochondria sit,
Mother of spleen, in robes of various dye,
Who vexed was full oft with ugly fit ;
And some her frantic deem'd, and some her deem'd a wit.*

*A lady proud she was, of ancient blood,
Yet oft her fear her pride made crouchen low :
She felt, or fancy'd in her fluttering mood,
All the diseases which the spittles know,
And sought all physic which the shops bestow.
And still new leaches and new drugs would try,
Her humour ever wavering to and fro ;
For sometimes she would laugh, and sometimes cry,
Then sudden waxed wroth, and all she knew not
why.*

*Fast by her side a listless maiden pin'd,
With aching head, and squeamish heart-burn-
ings ;
Pale, bloated, cold, she seem'd to hate man-
kind,
Yet lov'd in secret all forbidden things.
And here the tertian shakes his chilling wings ;
The sleepless gout here counts the crowing
cocks,
A wolf now gnaws him, now a serpent stings ;
Whilst apoplexy cram'd intemperance knocks
Down to the ground at once, as butcher felleth ox.*

AMBROSE PHILIPS.

Born 1671.—Died 1749.

TO THE EARL OF DORSET.

Copenhagen, March 9, 1709.

*From frozen climes, and endless tracts of snow,
From streams which northern winds forbid to
flow,
What present shall the muse to Dorset bring,
Or how, so near the pole, attempt to sing ?
The hoary winter here conceals from sight
All pleasing objects which to verse invite.
The hills and dales, and the delightful woods,
The flowery plains, and silver-streaming floods,
By snow disguis'd, in bright confusion lie,
And with one dazzling waste fatigue the eye.
No gentle breathing breeze prepares the
spring,
No birds within the desert region sing.
The ships, unmov'd, the boisterous winds defy,
While rattling chariots o'er the ocean fly.*

*The vast leviathan wants room to play,
And spout his waters in the face of day.
The starving wolves along the main sea prowl,
And to the moon in icy valleys howl.
O'er many a shining league the level main
Here spreads itself into a glassy plain :
There solid billows of enormous size,
Alps of green ice, in wild disorder rise.
And yet but lately have I seen, ev'n here,
The winter in a lovely dress appear.
Ere yet the clouds let fall the treasur'd snow,
Or winds begun through hazy skies to blow,
At evening a keen eastern breeze arose,
And the descending rain unsullied froze.
Soon as the silent shades of night withdrew,
The ruddy morn disclos'd at once to view
The face of Nature in a rich disguise,
And brighten'd every object to my eyes :
For every shrub, and every blade of grass,
And every pointed thorn, seem'd wrought in
glass ;
In pearls and rubies rich the hawthorns show,
While through the ice the crimson berries glow.
The thick-sprung reeds, which watery marshes
yield,
Seem'd polish'd lances in a hostile field.
The stag, in limpid currents, with surprise,
Sees crystal branches on his forehead rise :
The spreading oak, the beech, and towering
pine,
Glaz'd over, in the freezing ether shine.
The frighted birds the rattling branches shun,
Which wave and glitter in the distant sun.
When if a sudden gust of wind arise,
The brittle forest into atoms flies,
The crackling wood beneath the tempest bends,
And in a spangled shower the prospect ends :
Or, if a southern gale the region warm,
And by degrees unbund the wintery charm,
The traveller a miry country sees,
And journeys sad beneath the dropping trees :
Like some deluded peasant, Merlin leads Through fragrant bowers, and through delicious meads.*

*While here enchanted gardens to him rise,
And airy fabrics there attract his eyes,
His wandering feet the magic paths pursue,
And, while he thinks the fair illusion true,
The trackless scenes di-perse in fluid air,
And woods, and wilds, and thorny ways appear.
A tedious road the weary wretch returns,
And, as he goes, the transient vision mourns.*

A FRAGMENT OF SAPPHO.

*Bless'd as the immortal gods is he,
The youth who fondly sits by thee,
And hears and sees thee all the while Softly speak, and sweetly smile.
'Twas this depriv'd my soul of rest,
And rais'd such tumults in my breast ;
For while I gaz'd, in transport toss'd,
My breath was gone, my voice was lost.*

My bosom glow'd : the subtle flame
 Ran quickly through my vital frame ;
 O'er my dim eyes a darkness hung,
 My ears with hollow murmurs rung,
 In dewy damps my limbs were chill'd,
 My blood with gentle horrors thrill'd ;
 My feeble pulse forgot to play,
 I fainted, sunk, and dy'd away.

ECLOGUE.

HASSAN ; OR THE CAMEL DRIVER.

[SCENE.—The Desert. Time, Mid-Day.]

In silent horror o'er the boundless waste
 The driver Hassan with his camels past :
 One cruise of water on his back he bore,
 And his light scrip contain'd a scanty store :
 A fan of painted feathers in his hand,
 To guard his shaded face from scorching sand.
 The sultry sun had gain'd the middle sky,
 And not a tree and not an herb was nigh ;
 The beasts, with pain, their dusty way pursue,
 Shrill roar'd the winds, and dreary was the view !
 With desperate sorrow wild, th' affrighted man
 Thrice sigh'd, thrice struck his breast, and thus began :

" Sad was th' hour, and luckless was the day,
 When first from Schiraz' walls I bent my way !"

Ah ! little thought I of the blasting wind,
 The thirst, or pinching hunger, that I find !
 Bethink thee, Hassan, where shall thine assuage,
 When fails this cruise, his unrelenting rage ?
 Soon shall this scrip its precious load resign,
 Then what but tears and hunger shall be thine ?

Ye mute companions of my toils, that bear
 In all my griefs a more than equal share !
 Here, where no springs in murmurs break away,
 Or moss-crown'd fountains mitigate the day,
 In vain ye hope the green delights to know,
 Which plains more blest, or verdant vales bestow :

Here rocks alone, and tasteless sands are found,
 And faint and sickly winds for ever howl around.
 " Sad was the hour, and luckless was the day,
 When first from Schiraz' walls I bent my way !"

Curst be the gold and silver which persuade Weak men to follow far fatiguing trade !
 The lily peace outshines the silver store,
 And life is dearer than the golden ore ;
 Yet money tempts us o'er the desert brown,
 To every distant mart and wealthy town.
 Full oft we tempt the land, and oft the sea :
 And are we only yet repaid by thee ?
 Ah ! why was ruin so attractive made,
 Or why fond man so easily betray'd ?

Why heed we not, while mad we haste along,
 The gentle voice of peace, or pleasure's song ?
 Or wherefore think the flowery mountain's side,
 The fountain's murmurs, and the valley's pride,
 Why think we these less pleasing to behold,
 Than dreary deserts, if they lead to gold ?

" Sad was the hour, and luckless was the day,
 When first from Schiraz' walls I bent my way !"
 O cease, my fears !—all frantic as I go,
 When thought creates unnumber'd scenes of woe,
 What if the lion in his rage I meet !—

Of in the dust I view his printed feet :
 And, fearful ! oft, when day's declining light
 Yields her pale empire to the mourner night,
 By hunger rous'd, he scours the groaning plain,
 Gaunt wolves and sullen tigers in his train :
 Before them death with shrieks directs their way,
 Fills the wild yell, and leads them to their prey.
 " Sad was the hour, and luckless was the day,
 When first from Schiraz' walls I bent my way !"

At that dead hour the silent asp shall creep,
 If aught of rest I find, upon my sleep :
 Or some swollen serpent twist his scales around,
 And wake to anguish with a burning wound.
 Thrice happy they, the wise contented poor,
 From lust of wealth, and dread of death secure !
 They tempt no deserts, and no griefs they find ;
 Peace rules the day, where reason rules the mind.

" Sad was the hour, and luckless was the day,
 When first from Schiraz' walls I bent my way !"

O hapless youth ! for she thy love hath won,
 The tender Zara will be most undone !
 Big swell'd my heart, and own'd the powerful maid,

When fast she drops her tears, as thus she said :
 " Farewell the youth whom sighs could not detain,
 Whom Zara's breaking heart implor'd in vain !
 Yet as thou go'st, may every blast arise
 Weak and unfelt as these rejected sighs !
 Safe o'er the wild, no perils may'st thou see,
 No griefs endure, nor weep, false youth, like me."

O, let me safely to the fair return,
 Say with a kiss, she must not, shall not mourn ;
 O ! let me teach my heart to lose its fears,
 Recall'd by wisdom's voice, and Zara's tears.

He said, and call'd on heaven to bless the day,
 When back to Schiraz' walls he bent his way.

ODE TO FEAR.

THOU, to whom the world unknown
 With all its shadowy shapes is shown ;
 Who seest appall'd, th' unreal scene,
 While fancy lifts the veil between :
 Ah, Fear ! ah, frantic Fear !

I see, I see thee near.

I know thy hurried step, thy haggard eye !
 Like thee I start, like thee disorder'd fly,
 For, lo, what monsters in thy train appear !
 Danger, whose limbs of giant mould

What mortal eye can fix'd behold?
 Who stalks his round, an hideous form,
 Howling amidst the midnight storm,
 Or throws him on the ridgy steep
 Of some loose hanging rock to sleep:
 And with him thousand phantoms join'd,
 Who prompt to deeds accurs'd the mind:
 And those, the fiends, who near allied,
 O'er nature's wounds and wrecks preside;
 While vengeance in the lurid air,
 Lifts her red arm, expos'd and bare:
 On whom that ravening brood of fate,
 Who lap the blood of sorrow, wait;
 Who, Fear, this ghastly train can see,
 And look not madly wild, like thee?

In earliest Greece, to thee, with partial choice,
 The grief-full muse address her infant tongue;
 The maids and matrons, on her awful voice,
 Silent and pale, in wild amazement hung.

Yet he, the bard[†] who first invok'd thy name,
 Disdain'd in Marathon its power to feel:
 For not alone he nurs'd the poet's flame,
 But reach'd from virtue's hand the patriot's steel.

But who is he whom later garlands grace,
 Who left a while o'er Hybla's dews to rove,
 With trembling eyes thy dreary steps to trace,
 Where thou and furies shar'd the baleful grove?

Wrapt in thy cloudy veil th' incestuous queen †
 Sigh'd the sad call her son and husband heard,
 When once alone it broke the silent scene,
 And he the wretch of Thebes no more appear'd.

O Fear, I know thee by my throbbing heart,
 Thy withering power inspir'd each mournful
 line,
 Though gentle pity claim her mingled part,
 Yet all the thunders of the scene are thine.

Antistrophe.

Thou who such weary lengths hast past,
 Where wilt thou rest, mad nymph, at last?
 Say, wilt thou shroud in haunted cell,
 Where gloomy rape and murder dwell?
 Or in some hollow seat,
 Gain't which the big waves beat,
 Heardrowningseamen series in tempests brought!
 Dark power, with shuddering meek submitted
 thought,
 Be mine, to read the visions old,
 Which thy awakening bards have told,
 And, lest thou meet my blasted view,
 Hold each strange tale devoutly true;
 Ne'er be I found, by thee o'eraw'd,
 In that thrice-hallow'd eve abroad,
 When ghosts, as cottage maids believe,
 Their pebbled beds permitted leave,
 And goblins haunt from fire, or fen,
 Or mine, or flood, the walks of men!

* Æschylus.

† Jocasta.

O thou, whose spirit most possess
 The sacred seat of Shakspeare's breast!
 By all that from thy prophet broke,
 In thy divine emotions spoke!
 Hither again thy fury deal,
 Teach me but once like him to feel:
 His cypress wreath my meed decree,
 And I, O Fear, will dwell with thee!

ODE

Written in the year 1746.

How sleep the brave, who sink to rest,
 By all their country's wishes blest!
 When Spring, with dewy fingers cold,
 Returns to deck their hallow'd mould,
 She there shall dress a sweeter sod,
 Than Fancy's feet have ever trod.

By fairy hands their knell is rung,
 By forms unseen their dirge is sung;
 There Honour comes, a pilgrim gray,
 To bless the turf that wraps their clay,
 And freedom shall awhile repair,
 To dwell a weeping hermit there!

THE PASSIONS.

An ode for Music.

When Music, heavenly maid, was young,
 While yet in early Greece she sung,
 The Passions oft, to hear her shell,
 Throng'd around her magic cell,
 Exulting, trembling, raging, fainting,
 Possess'd beyond the muse's painting;
 By turns they felt the growing mind
 Disturb'd, delighted, rais'd, refin'd.
 Till once, 'tis said when all were fir'd,
 Fill'd with fury, rapt, inspir'd,
 From the supporting nyrtles round
 They snatch'd her instruments of sound,
 And as they oft had heard apart
 Sweet lessons of her forceful art,
 Each, for madness rul'd the hour,
 Would prove his own expressive power.

First Fear his hand, its skill to try,
 Amid the chords bewilder'd laid,
 And back recoil'd, he knew not why,
 Ev'n at the sound himself had made.

Next Anger rush'd his eyes on fire,
 In lightnings own'd his secret stings,
 In one rude clash he struck the lyre,
 And swept with hurried hand the strings.
 With woeful measures wan Despair—
 Low sullen sounds his grief beguil'd,
 A solemn, strange, and mingled air,
 'T was sad by fits, by starts 'twas wild.

But thou, O Hope, with eyes so fair,
 What was thy delighted measure ?
 Still it whisper'd promis'd Pleasure,
 And bade the lovely scenes at distance hail !
 Still would her touch the strain prolong,
 And from the rocks, the woods, the vale,
 She call'd on Echo still through all the song ;
 And where her sweetest theme she chose,
 A soft responsive voice was heard at every close,
 And Hope enchanted smil'd, and wav'd her golden hair.
 And longer had she sung—but, with a frown,
 Revenge impatient rose,
 He threw his blood-stain'd sword in thunder
 down,
 And with a withering look,
 The war-denouncing trumpet took,
 And blew a blast so loud and dread,
 Were ne'er prophetic sounds so full of woe.
 And ever and anon he beat
 The doubling drum with furious heat ;
 And though sometimes, each dreary pause between,
 Dejected Pity at his side
 Her soul-subduing voice applied,
 Yet still he kept his wild unalter'd mien,
 While each strain'd ball of sight seem'd bursting from his head.

Thy numbers, Jealousy, to nought were fix'd
 Sad proof of thy distressful state.
 Of differing themes the veering song was mix'd,
 And now it courted Love, now raving call'd on Hate.

With eyes up-rais'd, as one inspir'd,
 Pale Melancholy sat retir'd,
 And from her wild sequester'd seat,
 In notes by distance made more sweet,
 Pour'd through the mellow horn her pensive
 soul :
 And dashing soft from rocks around,
 Bubbling runnels join'd the sound ;
 Through glades and glooms the mingled measure stole,
 Or o'er some haunted streams with fond delay,
 Round an holy calm diffusing,
 I've of peace and lonely musing,
 In hollow murmurs died away.

But, O, how alter'd was its sprightlier tone !
 When Cheerfulness, a nymph of healthiest hue
 Her bow across her shoulder flung,
 Her buskins gemm'd with morning dew,
 Blew an inspiring air, that dale and thicket
 rung,
 The hunter's call to Faun and Dryad known ;
 The oak-crown'd sisters, and their chaste-eyed
 queen,
 Satyrs and sylvan boys were seen,
 Peeping from forth their alleys green ;
 Brown Exercise rejoic'd to hear,
 And Sport leapt up, and seized his beechen spear.

Last came Joy's ecstatic trial,
 He, with viny crown advancing,
 First to the lively pipe his hand address,
 But soon he saw the brisk-awakening viol,
 Whose sweet entrancing voice he lov'd the best.
 They would have thought, who heard the
 strain,
 They saw in Tempe's vale her native maids,
 Amidst the festal sounding shades,
 To some unwearied minstrel dancing,
 While, as his flying fingers kiss'd the strings,
 Love framed with Mirth a gay fantastic round,
 Loose were her tresses seen, her zone unbound,
 And he, amidst his frolic play,
 As if he would the charming air repay,
 Shook thousand odours from his dewy wings.

O Music, sphere-descended maid,
 Friend of pleasure, wisdom's aid,
 Why, goddess, why to us denied ?
 Lay'st thou thy ancient lyre aside ?
 As in that lov'd Athenian bower,
 You learn'd an all commanding power.
 Thy mimic soul, O nymph endear'd,
 Can well recal what then it heard.
 Where is thy native simple heart,
 Devote to Virtue. Fancy, Art ?
 Arise, as in that elder time,
 Warm, energetic, chaste, sublime !
 Thy wonders, in that godlike age,
 Fill thy recording sister's page—
 'Tis said, and I believe the tale,
 Thy humblest reed could more prevail,
 Had more of strength, diviner rage,
 Than all which charms this laggard age,
 Ev'n all at once together found
 Cecilia's mingled world of sound—
 O, bid our vain endeavours cease,
 Revive the just designs of Greece,
 Return in all thy simple state !
 Confirm the tales her sons relate !

GRONGAR HILL.

SILENT nymph, with curious eye !
 Who, the purple evening, lie
 On the mountain's lonely van,
 Beyond the noise of busy man ;
 Painting fair the form of things :
 While the yellow linnet sings ;
 Or the tuneful nightingale
 Charms the forest with her tale :
 Come, with all thy various dues,
 Come, and aid thy sister muse ;

Now, while Phœbus riding high,
Gives lustre to the land and sky!
Grongar Hill invites my song,
Draw the landskip bright and strong;
Grongar, in whose mossy cells,
Sweetly musing, quiet dwells;
Grongar in whose silent shade,
For the modest muses made,
So oft I have, the evening still,
At the fountain of a rill,
Sat upon a flowery bed,
With my hand beneath my head;
While stray'd my eyes o'er Towy's flood,
Over mead, and over wood,
From house to house, from hill to hill,
Till contemplation had her fill.

About his chequer'd sides I wind,
And leave his brooks and meads behind,
And groves, and grottoes where I lay,
And vistas shooting beams of day;
Wide and wider spreads the vale;
As circles on a smooth canal:
The mountains round, unhappy fate!
Sooner or later, of all height.
Withdraw their summits from the skies,
And lessen as the others rise:
Still the prospect wider spreads,
Adds a thousand woods and meads;
Still it widens, widens still,
And sinks the newly-risen hill.

Now, I gain the mountain's brow,
What a land-kip lies below!
No clouds, no vapours intervene;
But the gay, the open scene.
Does the face of nature show,
In all the hues of heaven's bow!
And, swelling to embrace the light,
Spreads around beneath the sight.

Old castles on the cliffs arise,
Proudly towering in the skies!
Rushing from the woods, the fires
Seen from hence ascending spires!
Half his beams Apollo sheds
On the yellow mountain-heads!
Gilds the fleeces of the flocks,
And glitters on the broken rocks!

Below me trees unnumber'd rise,
Beautiful in various dyes:
The gloomy pine, the poplar blue,
The yellow beech, the sable yew,
The slender fir, that taper grows,
The sturdy oak with broad-spread boughs.
And beyond the purple grove,
Haunt of Phyllis, queen of love!
Gaudy as the opening dawn,
Lies a long and level lawn,
On which a dark hill, steep and high,
Holds and charms the wandering eye!
Deep are his feet in Towy's flood,
His sides are cloth'd with waving wood,
And ancient towers crown his brow,
That cast an awful look below;
Whose ragged walls the ivy creeps,
And with her arms from falling keeps:

So both a safety from the wind
On mutual dependence find.
'Tis now the raven's bleak abode;
'Tis now th' apartment of the toad;
And there the fox securely feeds;
And there the poisonous adder breeds,
Conceal'd in ruins, moss, and weeds;
While, ever and anon, there falls
Huge heaps of hoary moulder'd walls.
Yet time has seen, that lifts the low,
And level lays the lofty brow,
Has seen this broken pile complete,
Big with the vanity of state;
But transient is the smile of fate!
A little rule, a little sway,
A sun-beam in a winter's day,
Is all the proud and mighty have
Between the cradle and the grave.

And see the rivers how they run,
Through woods and meads, in shade and sun,
Sometimes swift, sometimes slow,
Wave succeeding wave, they go
A various journey to the deep,
Like human life, to endless sleep!
Thus is nature's vesture wrought,
To instruct our wandering thought;
Thus she dresses green and gay,
To disperse our cares away.

Ever charming, ever new,
When will the landskip tire the view!
The fountain's fall, the river's flow,
The woody vallies, warm and low;
The windy summit, wild and high,
Roughly rushing on the sky!
The pleasant seat, the ruin'd tower,
The naked rock, the shady bower;
The town and village, dome and farm,
Each give each a double charm,
As pearls upon an Æthiop's arm.

See on the mountain's southern side,
Where the prospect opens wide,
Where the evening gilds the tide:
How close and small the hedges lie!
What streaks of meadows cross the eye!
A step methinks may pass the stream,
So little distant dangers seem;
So we mistake the future's face,
Eyed through hope's deluding glass;
As yon summits soft and fair,
Clad in colours of the air.
Which, to those who journey near,
Barren, brown, and rough appear:
Still we tread the same coarse way,
The present's still a cloudy day.

O may I with myself agree,
And never covet what I see:
Content me with an humble shade,
My passions tam'd, my wishes laid;
For, while our wishes wildly roll,
We banish quiet from the soul:
'Tis thus the busy beat the air,
And misers gather wealth and care.

Now, ev'n now, my joys run high,
As on the mountain-turf I lie;

While the wanton zephyr sings,
And in the vale perfumes his wings;
While the waters murmur deep;
While the shepherd charms his sheep;
While the birds unbounded fly,
And with music fill the sky,
Now, ev'n now, my joys run high.

Be full, ye courts; be great who will;
Search for peace with all your skill:
Open wide the lofty door,
Seek her on the marble floor.
In vain you search, she is not there;
In vain ye search the domes of care!
Grass and flowers Quiet treads,
On the meads and mountain-heads,
Along with Pleasure, close allied,
Ever by each other's side:
And often, by the murmuring rill
Hears the thrush, while all is still Within the groves of Groggar Hill.

THE SCHOOL-MISTRESS.

In Imitation of Spenser.

Ah me! full sorely is my heart forlorn,
To think how modest worth neglected lies.
While partial fame doth with her blasts adorn
Such deeds alone, as pride and pomp disguise;
Deeds of ill sort, and mischievous emprise:
Lend me thy clarion, goddess! let me try
To sound the praise of merit, ere it dies,
Such as I oft have chanced to espy,
Lost in the dreary shades of dull obscurity.

In every village mark'd with little spire, Embow'rd in trees, and hardly known to
fame
There dwells in lowly shed, and mean attire,
A matron old, whom we school-mistress name;
Who boasts unruly brats with birch to tame;
They griev'd sore, in piteous durance pent,
Awd by the power of this relentless dame;
And oft-times, on vagaries idly bent,
For unkempt hair, or task unconn'd, are sorely shent.

And all in sight doth rise a birchen tree,
Which Learning near her little dome did stowe;
Whilom a twig of small regard to see,
Though now so wide its waving branches
flow;
And work the simple vassals mickle woe;

3 M

For not a wind might curl the leaves that blew,
But their limbs shudder'd, and their pulse beat
low;
And as they look'd they found their horror
And shap'd it into rods, and tingled at the view.

So have I seen (who has not, may conceive)
A lifeless phantom near a garden plac'd;
So doth it wanton birds of peace bereave,
Of sport, of song, of pleasure, of repast;
They start, they stare, they wheel, they look aghast;
Sad servitude! such comfortless annoy
May no bold Briton's riper age e'er taste!
Ne superstition clog his dance of joy,
Ne vision empty, vain, his native bliss destroy.

Near to this dome is found a patch so green,
On which the tribe their gambols do display:
And at the door imprisoning-board is seen,
Lest weakly wights of smaller size should
stray;
Eager, perdie, to bask in sunny day!
The noises intermix'd, whence thence resound,
Do Learning's little tenement betray;
Where sits the dame, disguis'd in look pro-
found,
And eyes her fairy throng, and turns her wheel

Her cap, far whiter than the driven snow,
Emblem right meet of decency does yield:
Her apron dyed in grain, as blue. I trow,
As is the hare-bell that adorns the field:
And in her hand, for sceptre, she does wield
Tway birchen sprays; with anxious fear en-twind.
With dark distrust, and sad repentance fill'd:
And stedfast hate, and sharp affliction join'd,
And fury uncontrol'd, and chastisement unkind.

Few but have ken'd, in semblance meet pour-tray'd,
The childish faces of old Eol's train;
Libs, Notus, Auster: these in frowns array'd,
How then would fare or earth, or sky, or
main,
Were the stern god to give his slaves the rein?
And were not she rebellious breasts to quell,
And were not she her statutes to maintain,
The cot no more, I ween, were deem'd the cell.
Where comely peace of mind, and decent order

A russet stole was o'er her shoulders thrown;
A russet kirtle fenc'd the nipping air;
'Twas simple russet, but it was her own;
'Twas her own country bred the flock so fair!
'Twas her own labour did the fleece prepare;
And, sooth to say, her pupils, rang'd around,
Through pious awe, did term it passing rare;
For they in gaping wonderment abound,
And think, no doubt, she been the greatest wight on ground.

Albeit ne flattery did corrupt her truth,
Ne pompous title did debase her ear;
Goody, good-woman, gossip, n'aunt, forsooth,
Or dame, the sole additions she did hear;
Yet these she challeng'd, these she held right dear:

Ne would esteem him act as mought behove,
Who should not honour'd eke with these revere:

For never title yet so mean could prove,
But there was eke a mind which did that title love.

One ancient hen she took delight to feed,
The plodding pattern of the busy dame:
Which, ever and anon, impell'd by need,
Into her school, begirt with chickens, came!
Such favour did her past deportment claim:
And, if neglect had lavish'd on the ground
Fragment of bread, she would collect the same:

For well she knew, and quaintly could expound.

What sin it were to waste the smallest crumb
she found.

Herbs too she knew, and well of each could speak

That in her garden sipp'd the silvery dew;
Where no vain flower disclos'd a gawdy streak:

But herbs for use, and physic, not a few,
Of grey renown, within those borders grew:
The tufted basil, pun-provoking thyme,
Fresh baum, and marigold of cheerful hue:
The lowly gill, that never dares to climb;

And more I fain would sing, disdaining here to rhyme.

Yet euphrasy may not be left unsung,
That gives dim eyes to wander leagues around:

And pungent radish, biting infant's tongue;
And plantain rabb'd that heals the reaper's wound;

And marjoram sweet, in shepherd's posie found:

And lavender, whose spikes of azure bloom
Shall be, erewhile, in arid bundles bound,
To lurk amidst the labors of her loom,

And crown her kerchiefs clean, with mickle rare perfume.

And here trim rosemarine, that whilom crown'd
The daintiest garden of the proudest peer;
Ere, driven, from its envied site, it found
A sacred shelter for its branches here;
Where edg'd with gold its glittering skirts appear,

Oh wassel days! O customs meet and well!
Ere this was banish'd from its lofty sphere:
Simplicity then sought this humble cell,

Nor ever would she more with thane and lordling dwell.

Here oft the dame, on Sabbath's decent eve,
Hymned such psalms as Sternhold forth did mete,

If winter 'twere, she to her hearth did cleave,
But in her garden found a summer-seat;

Sweet melody! to hear her then repeat
How Israel's sons, beneath a foreign king,

While taunting foemen did a song entreat,
All, for the nonce, untuning every string,

Uphung their useless lyres—small heart had they to sing.

For she was just, and friend to virtuous lore,
And pass'd much time in truly virtuous deed;

And in those elfins' ears, would oft deplore
The times, when truth by popish rage did bleed:

And tortious death was true devotion's meed:
And simple faith in iron chains did mourn,

That mould on wooden image place her creed;
And lavny saints in smouldering flames did burn:

Ah! dearest Lord, forefend, thilk days should e'er return.

In elbow-chair, like that of Scottish stem
By the sharp tooth of canker'd old defac'd,

In which, when he receives his diadem,
Our sovereign prince and hefest hege is plac'd.

The matron sate; and some with rank she grac'd.

(The source of children's and of courtiers' pride!)

Redress'd affronts, for vile affronts there pass'd;

And warn'd them not the fretful to deride,
But love each other dear, whatever them betide.

Right well she knew each temper to decry;
To thwart the proud, and the submiss to raise:

Some with vile copper-prize exalt on high,
And some entice with pittance small of praise;

And other some with baleful sprig she 'frays;
E'en absent she the reins of power doth hold,

While with quaint arts the giddy crowd she sways:

Forewarn'd, if little bird their pranks behold,
'Twill whisper in her ear, and all the scene unfold.

Lo, now with state she utters the command!

Eftsoons the urchins to their tasks repair;
Their books of stature small they take in hand,

Which with pellucid horn secured are,
To save from finger wet the letters fair:

The work so gay that on their back is seen,
St. George's high achievements does declare;

On which thilk wight that has y-gazing been,
Kens the forthcoming rod, unpleasant sight, I ween!

Al! luckless he, and born beneath the beam
Of evil star! it irks me whilst I write:
As erst the bard* by Mulla's silver stream,
Of, as he told of deadly dolorous plight,
Sigh'd as he sung, and did in tears indite.
For brandishing the rod, she doth begin
To loose the brogues, the stripling's late delight!
And down they drop; appears his dainty skin,
Fair as the furry-coat of whitest ermin.

O ruthless scene! when from a nook obscure,
His little sister doth his peril see:
All playful as she sate, she grows demure;
She finds full soon her wonted spirits flee:
She meditates a prayer to set him free:
Nor gentle pardon could this dame deny,
(If gentle pardon could with dames agree)
To her sad grief that swells in either eye,
And wrings her so that all for pity she could die.

No longer can she now her shrieks command:
And hardly she forbears, through awful fear,
To rushen forth, and, with presumptuous
hand,
To stay harsh justice in its mid career.
On thee she calls, on thee her parent dear!
(Ah! too remote to ward the shameful blow!)
She sees no kind domestic visage near,
And soon a flood of tears begins to flow;
And gives a loose at last to unavailing woe.

But ah! what pen his piteous plight may trace?
Or what device his loud laments explain?
The form uncouth of his disguised face?
The pallid hue that dyes his looks amain?
The plenteous shower that does his cheek dis-
tain?
When he, in alject wise, implores the dame,
Ne hopeth aught of sweet reprieve to gain;
Or when from high she levels well her aim,
And, through the thatch, his cries each falling stroke proclaim.

The other tribe, aghast, with sore dismay,
Attend, and conn their tasks with mickle care:
By turns, astonished, every twig survey,
And, from their fellow's hateful wounds, beware;
Knowing, I wist, how each the same may share;
Till fear has taught them a performance meet,
And to the well-known chest the dame repair;
Whence oft with sugar'd cates she doth them
greet,
And ginger-bread y-rare; now certes, doubly
sweet!

See to their seats they hie with merry glee,
And in beseeemly order sitten there;
All but the wight of bum y-galled, he,
Abhorreth bench, and stool, and form, and chair:

Convulsions intermitting! does declare His grievous wrong; his dame's unjust behest;
And scorns her offer'd love, and shuns to be caress'd.

His face besprent with liquid crystal shines,
His blooming face that seems a purple flower,
Which low to earth its drooping head declines,
All smear'd and sullied by a vernal shower.
O the hard bosoms of despotic power!
All, all, but she, the author of his shame,
All, all, but she, regret this mournful hour:
Yet hence, the youth, and hence the flower,

Behind some door, in melancholy thought,
Mindless of food, he, dreary caitiff! pines,
Ne for his fellows' joyance careth aught,
But to the wind all merriment resigns;
And deems it shame if he to peace inclines:
And many a sullen look askance is sent,
Which for his dame's annoyance he designs:
And still the more to pleasure him she's bent,
The more doth he, perverse, her haviour past re-ent.

Al! me! how much I fear lest pride it be!
But if that pride it be, which thus inspires,
Beware, ye dames, with nice discernment see,
Ye quench not too the sparks of nobler fires:
Ah! better far than all the muses' lyres,
All coward arts, is valour's generous heat;
The firm fixt breast which fit and right requires.
Like Vernon's patriot soul! more justly great
Than craft that pimps for ill, or flowery false deceit.

Yet, nurs'd with skill, what dazzling fruits appear!
E'en now sagacious foresight points to show
A little bench of heedless bishops here,
And there a chancellor in embryo,
Or bard sublime, if bard may e'er be so,
As Milton, Shakspeare, names that ne'er shall die!
Though now he crawl along the ground so low,
Nor weeting how the muse should soar on
high,
Wisheth, poor starveling elf! his paper kite may
fly.

And this perhaps, who, censuring the design,
Low lays the house which that of cards doth build,
Shall Dennis be! if rigid fate incline,
And many an epic to his rage shall yield;
And many a poet quit th' Aonian field;

And, sour'd by age, profound he shall appear,
As he who now with 'sdainful fury thrill'd
Surveys mine work ; and levels many a sneer,
And furls his wrinkly front, and cries, " What stuff is here ?"

But now Dan Phœbus gains the middle skie,
And liberty unbars her prison-door ;
And like a rushing torrent out they fly,
And now the grassy cirque had cover'd o'er
With boisterous revel-rout and wild uproar ;
A thousand ways in wanton rings they run.
Heaven shield their short-liv'd pastimes, I implore !
For well may freedom erst so dearly won.
Appear to British elf more gladsome than the
sun.

Enjoy, poor imps ! enjoy your sportive trade,
And chase gay flies, and cull the fairest
flowers ;
For when my bones in grass-green sods are
laid,
For never may ye taste more careless hours
In knightly castles, or in ladies' bowers.
O vain to seek delight in earthly thing !
But most in courts where proud ambition
towers ;
Deluded wight ! who weens fair peace can
spring
Beneath the pompous dome of kesar or of
king.

See in each sprite some various bent appear !
These rudely carol most incondite lay ;
Those sauntering on the green, with jocund
leer
Salute the stranger passing on his way ;
Some builden fragile t' nements of clay ;
Some to the standing lake their courses bend,
With pebbles smooth at duck and drake to
play ;
Thilck to the huxter's savory cottage tend,
In pastry kings and queens th' allotted mite to spend.

Here, as each season yields a different store,
Each season's stores in order ranged been ;
Apples with cabbage-net y-cover'd o'er,
Galling full sore th' unmoney'd wight, are
seen ;
And goose-b'rie clad in livery red or green ;
And here of lovely dye, the catharine pear,
Fine pear ! as lovely for thy juice, I ween :
O may no wight e'er pennylesse come there,
Lest smit with ardent love he pine with hopeless care !

See ! cherries here, ere cherries yet abound,
With thread so white in tempting posies tied,
Scattering like blooming maid their glances
round,
With pamper'd look draw little eyes aside ;
And must be bought, though penury betide.

The plum all azure, and the nut all brown,
And here each season do those cakes abide,
Whose honour'd names* th' inventive city own Rendering through Britain's isle Salopia's praises
known ;

Admir'd Salopia ! that with venial pride
Eyes her bright form in Severn's ambient wave,
Fam'd for her loyal cares in perils tried,
Her daughters lovely, and her striplings
brave :
Ah ! 'midst the rest, may flowers adorn his grave,
Whose heart did first these dulcet cates display !
A motive fair to learning's imps he gave,
Who cheerless o'er her darkling region stray ;
Till reasons's morn arise, and light them on their way.

A PASTORAL BALLAD,

In four parts.

I.—ABSENCE.

YE shepherds so cheerful and gay,
Whose flocks never carelessly roam ;
Should Corydon's happen to stray,
Oh ! call the poor wanderers home.
Allow me to muse and to sigh,
Nor talk of the change that ye find ;
None once was so watchful as I ;
I have left my dear Phyllis behind.

Now I know what it is, to have strove
With the torture of doubt and desire ;
What it is to admire and to love,
And to leave her we love and admire.
Ah ! lead forth my flock in the morn,
And the damps of each evening repel ;
Alas ! I am faint and forlorn :
—I have bade my dear Phyllis farewell.

Since Phyllis vouchsaf'd me a look,
I never once dreamt of my vine :
May I lose both my pipe and my crook,
If I knew of a kid that was mine !
I priz'd ev'ry hour that went by,
Beyond all that had pleas'd me before ;
But now they are past, and I sigh ;
And I grieve that I priz'd them no more.

But why do I languish in vain ;
•Why wander thus pensively here ?
Oh ! why did I come from the plain,
Where I fed on the smiles of my dear ?
They tell me, my favorite maid,
The pride of that valley, is flown ;
Alas ! where with her I have stray'd,
I could wander with pleasure, alone.

* Shrewsbury cakes.

When forc'd the fair nymph to forego,
 What anguish I felt at my heart !
 Yet I thought—but it might not be so—
 'Twas with pain that she saw me depart.
 She gaz'd, as I slowly withdrew ;
 My path I could hardly discern ;
 So sweetly she bade me adieu,
 I thought that she bade me return.

The pilgrim that journeys all day
 To visit some far-distant shrine,
 If he bear but a relic away,
 Is happy, nor heard to repine.
 Thus widely remov'd from the fair,
 Where my vows, my devotion, I owe,
 Soft hope is the relic I bear,
 And my solace, wherever I go.

II.—HOPE.

My banks they are furnish'd with bees,
 Whose murmur invites one to sleep ;
 My grottoes are shaded with trees,
 And my hills are white over with sheep.
 I seldom have met with a loss,
 Such health do my fountains bestow :
 My fountains all border'd with moss,
 Where the hare-bells and violets grow.

Not a pine in my grove is there seen,
 But with tendrils of woodbine is bound :
 Not a beech's more beautiful green,
 But a sweet-brier entwines it around.
 Not my fields, in the prime of the year,
 More charms than my cattle unfold ;
 Not a brook that is limpid and clear,
 But it glitters with fishes of gold.

One would think she might like to retire
 To the bower I have labour'd to rear ;
 Not a shrub that I heard her admire,
 But I hasted and planted it there.
 O how sudden the jessamine strove
 With the lilac to render it gay !
 Already it calls for my love.
 To prune the wild branches away.

From the plains, from the woodlands and groves,
 What strains of wild melody flow !
 How the nightingales warble their loves
 From thickets of roses that blow !
 And when her bright form shall appear,
 Each bird shall harmoniously join
 In a concert so soft and so clear,
 As—she may not be fond to resign.

I have found out a gift for my fair ;
 I have found where the wood-pigeons breed :
 But let me that plunder forbear,
 She will say 'twas a barbarous deed.
 For he ne'er could be true, she averr'd,
 Who would rob a poor bird of its young :
 And I lov'd her the more when I heard
 Such tenderness fall from her tongue.

I have heard her with sweetness unfold
 How that pity was due to—a dove :
 That it ever-attended the bold ;
 And she call'd it the sister of love.
 But her words such a pleasure convey,
 So much I her accents adore,
 Let her speak, and whatever she say,
 Methinks I should love her the more.

Can a bosom so gentle remain
 Unmov'd when her Corydon sighs ?
 Will a nymph that is fond of the plain,
 These plains and this valley despise ?
 Dear regions of silence and shade !
 Soft scenes of contentment and ease ?
 Where I could have pleasingly stray'd,
 If aught, in her absence, could please.

But where does my Phyllida stray ?
 And where are her grots and her bowers ?
 Are the groves and the valleys as gay,
 And the shepherds as gentle as ours ?
 The groves may perhaps be as fair,
 And the face of the valleys as fine ;
 The swains may in manners compare,
 But their love is not equal to mine.

III.—SOLICITUDE.

Why will you my passion reprove ?
 Why term it a folly to grieve ?
 Ere I show you the charms of my love,
 She's fairer than you can believe.
 With her mien she enamours the brave ;
 With her wit she engages the free ;
 With her modesty pleases the grave ;
 She is every way pleasing to me.

O you that have been of her train,
 Come and join in my amorous lays ;
 I could lay down my life for the swain,
 That will sing but a song in her praise.
 When he sings may the nymphs of the town
 Come trooping, and listen the while ;
 Nay, on him let not Phyllida frown ;
 —But I cannot allow her to smile.

For when Paridel tries in the dance
 Any favor with Phyllis to find,
 O how, with one trivial glance,
 Might she ruin the peace of my mind !
 In ringlets he dresses his hair,
 And his crook is bestudded around ;
 And his pipe—oh my Phyllis, beware
 Of a magic there is in the sound.

'Tis his with mock passion to glow,
 'Tis his in smooth tales to unfold,
 How her face is as bright as the snow,
 And her bosom, be sure, is as cold.
 How the nightingales labour the strain,
 With the notes of his charmer to vie :
 How they vary their accents in vain,
 Repine at her triumphs, and die.

To the grove or the garden he strays,
And pillages every sweet ;
Then suiting the wreath to his lays,
He throws it at Phyllis's feet.
"O Phyllis," he whispers, "more fair,
More sweet than the jessamine's flower !
What are pinks in a morn to compare ?
What is eglantine after a shower ?

"Then the lily no longer is white ;
The rose is depriv'd of its bloom ;
Then the violets die with despite,
And the woodbines give up their perfume."
Thus glide the soft numbers along,
And he fancies no shepherd his peer ;
—Yet I never should envy the song,
Were not Phyllis to lend it an ear.

Let his crook be with hyacinths bound,
So Phyllis the trophy despise :
Let his forehead with laurels be crown'd,
So they shine not in Phyllis's eyes.
The language that flows from the heart,
Is a stranger to Paridel's tongue ;
—Yet may she beware of his art,
Or sure I must envy the song.

IV.—DISAPPOINTMENT.

YE shepherds, give ear to my lay,
And take no more heed of my sheep ;
They have nothing to do but to stray :
I have nothing to do but to weep.
Yet do not my folly reprove ;
She was fair—and my passion begun ;
She smil'd—and I could not but love ;
She is faithless—and I am undone.

Perhaps I was void of all thought ;
Perhaps it was plain to foresee,
That a nymph so complete would be sought
By a swain more engaging than me.
Ah ! love every hope can inspire ;
It banishes wisdom the while ;
And the lip of the nymph we admire
Seems for ever adorn'd with a smile.

She is faithless, and I am undone ;
Ye that witness the woes I endure,
Let reason instruct you to shun
What it cannot instruct you to cure.
Beware how you loiter in vain
Amid nymphs of a higher degree :
It is not for me to explain
How fair, and how fickle, they be.

Alas ! from the day that we met,
What hope of an end to my woes ?
When I cannot endure to forget
The glance that undid my repose.
Yet time may diminish the pain :
The flower, and the shrub, and the tree,
Which I rear'd for her pleasure in vain,
In time may have comfort for me.

The sweets of a dew-sprinkled rose,
The sound of a murmuring stream,
The peace which from solitude flows,
Henceforth shall be Corydon's theme.
High transports are shown to the sight,
But we're not to find them our own ;
Fate never bestow'd such delight,
As I with my Phyllis had known.

O ye woods, spread your branches apace
To your deepest recesses I fly ;
I would hide with the beasts of the chase ;
I would vanish from every eye.
Yet my reed shall resound through the grove
With the same sad complaint it begun ;
How she smil'd—and I could not but love ;
Was faithless—and I am undone !

CHARLES CHURCHILL.

Born 1731.—Died 1764.

THE ROSCIAD.

ROSCINUS deceas'd, each high aspiring play'r
Push'd all his int'rest for the vacant chair.
The buskin'd heroes of the mimic stage
No longer whine in love, and rant in rage ;
The monarch quits his throne, and condescends
Humbly to court the favour of his friends ;
For pity's sake tells undeserv'd mishaps,
And, their applause to gain, recounts his claps.
Thus the victorious chiefs of ancient Rome,
To win the mob, a suppliant's form assume,
In pompous strain fight o'er th' extinguish'd
war,

And show where honour bled in ev'ry scar.
But though bare merit might in Rome appear
The strongest plea for favour, 'tis not here ;
We form our judgment in another way ;
And they will best succeed, who best can pay :
Those, who would gain the votes of British tribes,

Must add to force of merit, force of bribes.
What can an actor give ? In ev'ry age
Cash hath been rudely banish'd from the stage ;
Monarchs themselves, to grief of ev'ry play'r,
Appear as often as their image there :
They can't, like candidate for other seat,
Pour seas of wine, and mountains raise of meat.
Wine ! they could bribe you with the world as
soon,

And of roast beef they only know the tune :
But what they have they give ; could Clive do
more,
Though for each million he had brought home four ?

Shuter keeps open house at Southwark fair,
And hopes the friends of humour will be there ;
In Smithfield, Yates prepares the rival treat
For those who laughter love instead of meat ;

Foot, at Old House, for even Foot will be
In self-conceit, an actor, bribes with tea ;
Which Wilkinson at second hand receives,
And at the New, pours water on the leaves.

The town divided, each runs several ways,
As passion, humour, int'rest, party sways.
Things of no moment, colour of the hair,
Shape of a leg, complexion brown or fair,
A dress well-chosen, or a patch misplac'd,
Conciliate favour, or create distaste.

From galleries loud peals of laughter roll,
And thunder Shuter's praises—he's so droll.
Embox'd, the ladies must have something smart,
Palmer ! Oh ! Palmer tops the jaunty part.
Seated in pit, the dwarf, with aching eyes,
Looks up, and vows that Barry's out of size ;
Whilst to six feet the vigorous stripling grown,
Declares that Garrick is another Coan*.

When place of judgment—by whim supplied,
And our opinions have their rise in pride ;
When, in discoursing on each mimic elf,
We praise and censure with an eye to self ;
All must meet friends, and Ackman bids as fair
In such a court as Garrick, for the chair.

At length agreed, all squabbles to decide,
By some one judge the cause was to be tried ;
But this their squabbles did afresh renew,
Who should be judge in such a trial ;—Who ?

For Johnson some, but Johnson, it was fear'd,
Would be too grave ; and Sterne too gay appear'd.

Others for Franklin voted : but 'twas known,
He sicken'd at all triumphs but his own :
For Colman many, but the peevish tongue
Of prudent age found out that he was young :
For Murphy some few pilf'ring wits declar'd,
Whilst folly clapp'd her hands, and wisdom
star'd, [womb,

To mischief train'd, ev'n from his mother's Grown old in fraud, though yet in manhood's
bloom,

Adopting arts by which gay villains rise,
And reach the heights which honest men despise ;

Mute at the bar, and in the senate loud,
Dull 'mongst the dullest, proudest of the proud ;
A pert, prim prater of the northern race,
Guilt in his heart, and famine in his face,
Stood forth ;—and thrice he wav'd his lily hand—
And thrice he twirl'd his tie—thrice strok'd his band— [aim,

“ At friendship's call (thus oft with trait'rous
Men void of faith, usurp faith's sacred name)
At friendship's call I come, by Murphy sent,
Who thus by me develops his intent,
But lest, transfus'd, the spirit should be lost,
That spirit which in storms of rhet'ric tost,
Bounces about, and flies like bottled beer,
In his own words his own intentions hear.

“ Thanks to my friends.—But to vile fortunes
born,

No robes of fur these shoulders must adorn.
Vain your applause, no aid from thence I draw ;

* John Coan, a dwarf, who died in 1764.

Vain all my wit, for what is wit in law ?
Twice (curs'd remembrance !) twice I strove to gain

Admittance 'mongst the law-instructed train,
Who, in the Temple and Gray's Inn, prepare
For clients' wretched feet the legal snare ;
Dead to those arts which polish and refine, *
Deaf to all worth, because that worth was mine,
Twice did those blockheads startle at my name,
And, foul rejection, gave me up to shame.
To laws and lawyers then I bade adieu,
And plans of far more lib'ral note pursue.
Who will may be a judge—my kindling breast
Burns for that chair which Roscius once possess'd.

Here give your votes, your int'rest here exert,
And let success for once attend desert.”

With sleek appearance, and with ambling
pace,

And, type of vacant head, with vacant face,
The Proteus Hill put in his modest plea—
“ Let favour speak for others, worth for me.”—
For who, like him, his various powers could call
Into so many shapes, and shine in all ?
Who could so nobly grace the motley list,
Actor, inspector, doctor, botanist ?
Knows any one so well—sure no one knows,—
At once to play, prescribe, compound, compose ?
Who can—But Woodward came,—Hill slipp'd
away.

Melting like ghosts, before the rising day.

plies.

And amply too, the place of being wise,
Which nature, kind, indulgent parent, gave
To qualify the blockhead for a knave ; [charms,
With that smooth falsehood, whose appearance
And reason of each wholesome doubt disarms,
Which to the lowest depths of guile descends,
By vilest means pursues the vilest ends,
Wears friendship's mask for purposes of spite,
Fawns in the day, and butchers in the night ;
With that malignant envy, which turns pale,
And sickens even if a friend prevail,
Which merit and success pursues with hate,
And damns, the worth it cannot imitate ;
With the cold caution of a coward's spleen,
Which fears not guilt, but always seeks a screen,
Which keeps this maxim ever in her view—
What's basely done, should be done safely too ;
With that dull, rooted, callous impudence,
Which, dead to shame, and ev'ry nicer sense,
Ne'er blush'd, unless, in spreading vice's snares,
She blunder'd on some virtue unawares :
With all these blessings, which we seldom find
Lavish'd by nature on one happy mind,
A motley figure, of the Fribble tribe,
Which heart can scarce conceive, or pen describe,
Came simpering on ; to ascertain whose sex
Twelvesage, impannell'd matrons would perplex.

† This severe character was intended for Mr. Fitzpatrick, a person who had rendered himself remarkable by his activity in the play-house riots of 1763, relative to the taking half prices. He was the hero of Garrick's Fribbleriad.

Nor male, nor female, neither, and yet both ;
Of neuter gender, though of Irish growth ;
A six foot suckling, mincing in its gait ;
Affected, peevish, prim, and delicate ;
Fearful it seem'd, though of athletic make,
Lest brutal breezes should too roughly shake
Its tender form, and savage motion spread,
O'er its pale cheeks, the horrid manly red.

Much did it talk, in its own pretty phrase,
Of genius and of taste, of play'rs and plays ;
Much too of writings, which itself had wrote,
Of special merit, though of little note ;
For fate in a strange humour, had decreed
That what it wrote, none but itself should read ;
Much too it chatter'd of dramatic laws,
Misjudging critics, and misplac'd applause ;
Then, with a self-complacent jutting air,
It smil'd, it smirk'd, it wriggled to the chair ;
And, with an awkward briskness not its own,
Looking around, and perking on the throne,
Triumphant seem'd, when that strange savage dame,

Known but to few, or only known by name,
Plain Common Sense appear'd by Nature there
Appointed, with plain Truth, to guard the chair.
The pageant saw, and blasted with her frown,
To its first state of nothing melted down.

Nor shall the muse (for even there the pride)
Of this vain nothing shall be mortified,
Nor shall the muse (should fate ordain her rhymes Fond, pleasing thought ! to live in after-times)
With such a trifler's name her pages blot ;
Known be the character, the thing forgot ;
Let it, to disappoint each future aim,
Live without sex, and die without a name !

Cold-blooded critics, by enervate sires
Scarce hammer'd out, when Nature's feeble fires
Glimmer'd their last ; whose sluggish blood, half froze,

[ne'er glows
Creeps lab'ring through the veins ; whose heart
With fancy-kindled heat ;—a servile race,
Who in mere want of fault, all merit place ;
Who blind obedience pay to ancient schools,
Bigots to Greece, and slaves to musty rules ;
With solemn consequence declar'd that none
Could judge that cause but Sophocles alone.
Dupes to their fancied excellence, the crowd,
Obsequious to the sacred dictate, bow'd.

When, from amidst the throng, a youth stood forth,

Unknown his person, not unknown his worth ;
His look bespoke applause ! alone he stood,
Alone he stemm'd the mighty critic flood,
He talk'd of ancients, as the man became
Who priz'd our own, but envied not their fame ;
With noble rev'rence spoke of Greece and Rome,
And scorn'd to tear the laurel from the tomb.

“ But more than just to other countries grown,
Must we turn base apostates to our own ?
Where do these words of Greece and Rome excel,

That England may not please the ear as well ?
What mighty magic's in the place or air,
That all perfection needs must centre there ?

In states, let strangers blindly be prefer'd ;
In state of letters, merit should be heard.
Genius is of no country, her pure ray
Spreads all abroad, as gen'ral as the day ;
Foe to restraint, from place to place she flies,
And may hereafter e'en in Holland rise,
May not (to give a pleasing fancy scope,
And cheer a patriot heart with patriot hope)
May not some great extensive genius raise
The name of Britain 'bove Athenian praise ;
And, whilst brave thirst of fame his bosom
warms,

Make England great in letters as in arms ?
There may—there hath—and Shakspeare's Muse aspires

Beyond the reach of Greece : with native fires
Mounting aloft, he wings his daring flight, Whilst Sophocles below stands trembling at his height.

“ Why should we then abroad for judges roam
When abler judges we may find at home ?
Happy in tragic and in comic pow'rs,
Have we not Shakspeare ?—Is not Jonson ours ?
For them, your nat'ral judges, Britons, vote ;
They'll judge like Britons, who like Britons wrote.”

He said, and conquer'd—Sense resum'd her sway,

And disappointed pedants stalk'd away.
Shakspeare and Jonson, with deserv'd applause,
Joint-judges were ordain'd to try the cause.
Meantime the stranger ev'ry voice employ'd,
To ask or tell his name—Who is it ?—Lloyd.

Thus when the aged friends of Job stood mute,
And, tamely prudent, gave up the dispute,
Elihu, with the decent warmth of youth,
Boldly stood forth the advocate of truth,
Confuted falsehood, and disabled pride,
Whilst baffled age stood snarling at his side.

The day of trial's fix'd, nor any fear
Lest day of trial should be put off here.
Causes but seldom for delay can call
In courts where forms are few, fees none at all.

The morning came, nor find I that the sun,
As he on other great events hath done,
Put on a brighter robe than what he wore
To go his journey in the way before.

Full in the centre of a spacious plain,
On plan entirely new, where nothing vain,
Nothing magnificent appear'd, but art
With decent modesty perform'd her part,
Rose a tribunal : from no other court
It borrow'd ornament, or sought support :
No juries here were pack'd to kill or clear,
No bribes were taken, nor oaths broken here ;
No gownsmen, partial to a client's cause,
To their own purpose tun'd the pliant laws.
Each judge was true and steady to his trust,
As Mansfield wise, and as old Foster* just.

In the first seat, in robe of various dyes,
A noble wildness flashing from his eyes,
Sat Shakspeare,—in one hand a wand he bore,
For mighty wonders fam'd in days of yore ;

* Sir Michael Foster, one of the Judges of the King's Bench.

The other held a globe, which, to his will Obedient turn'd; and own'd the master's skill:
Things of the noblest kind his genius drew,
And look'd through nature at a single view:
A loose he gave to his unbounded soul,
And taught new lands to rise, new seas to roll;
Call'd into being scenes unknown before,
And, passing nature's bounds, was something
more.

Next, Jonson sat, in ancient learning train'd,
His rigid judgment fancy's flights restrain'd,
Correctly prun'd each wild luxuriant thought,
Mark'd out her course, nor spar'd a glorious fault.

The book of man he read with nicest art,
And ransack'd all the secrets of the heart;
Exerted penetration's utmost force,
And trac'd each passion to its proper source;
Then strongly mark'd, in liveliest colors drew,
And brought each foible forth to public view.
The coxcomb felt a lash in ev'ry word,
And fools, hung out, their brother fools deterr'd.
His comic humour kept the world in awe,
And laughter frighten'd folly more than law.

But, hark!—The trumpet sounds, the crowd gives way,

And the procession comes in just array

Now should I, in some sweet poetic line,
Offer up incense at Apollo's shrine;
Invoke the muse to quit her calm abode,
And waken mem'ry with a sleeping ode.
For how should mortal man, in mortal verse,
Their titles, merits, or their names rehearse?
But give, kind Dullness, memory and rhyme,
We'll put off Genius till another time.

First, Order came—with solemn step, and slow,
In measured time his feet were taught to go.
Behind, from time to time, he cast his eye,
Lest this should quit his place, that step awry.
Appearances to save his only care;
So things seem right, no matter what they are.
In him his parents saw themselves renew'd,
Begotten by Sir Critic on Saint Prude.
Then came drum, trumpet, hautboy, fiddle,
flute:

Next snuffer, sweeper, shifter, soldier, mute:
Legions of angels all in white advance,
Fancies, all fire, come forward in a dance;
Pantomime figures then are brought to view,
Fools hand in hand with fools, go two by two.
Next came the treasurer, of either house;
One with full purse, t'other with not a sous.
Behind, a group of figures awe create,
Set off with all th' impertinence of state;
By lace and feather consecrate to fame,
Expletive kings, and queens without a name.

Here Havard, all serene, in the same strains,
Loves, hates, and rages, triumphs; and com-
plains;

His easy vacant face, proclaim'd a heart
Which could not feel emotions, nor im art.
With him came mighty Davies. On my life,
That Davies hath a very pretty wife:—

3 N

Statesman all over!—In plots famous grown!—
He mouths a sentence, as curs mouth a bone.

Next Holland came.—With truly tragic stalk,
He creeps, he flies.—A hero should not walk.
As if with heav'n he warr'd, his eager eyes
Planted their batteries against the skies;
Attitude, action, air, pause, start, sigh, groan,
He borrow'd, and made use of as his own.
By fortune thrown on any other stage,
He might, perhaps, have pleas'd an easy age;
But now appears a copy, and no more,
Of something better we have seen before.
The actor who would build a solid fame,
Must imitation's servile arts disclaim;
Act from himself, on his own bottom stand;
I hate e'en Garrick thus at second-hand.

Behind came King.—Bred up in modest lore,
Bashful and young he sought Hibernia's shore;
Hibernia, fam'd, 'bove ev'ry other grace,
For matchless intrepidity of face.

From her his features caught the gen'rous flame,
And bid defiance to all sense of shame.
'Tutor'd by her all rivals to surpass,
'Mongst Drury's sons he comes, and shines in brass.

Lo Yates!—Without the least finesse of art
He gets applause—I wish he'd get his part.
When hot impatience is in full career,
How vilely, "Hark'e! Hark'e!" grates the ear.
When active fancy from the brain is sent,
And stands on tip-toe for some wish'd event,
I hate those careless blunders which recal
Suspended sense, and prove it fiction all.

In characters of low and vulgar mould,
Where nature's coarsest features we behold,
Where, destitute of ev'ry decent grace,
Unmanner'd jests are blurted in your face,
There Yates with justice strict attention draws,
Acts truly from himself, and gains applause.
But when to please himself, or charm his wife,
He aims at something in politer life,
When, blindly thwarting nature's stubborn
plan,

He treads the stage, by way of gentleman,
The clown, who no one touch of breeding knows,
Looks like Tom Errand dress'd in Clincher's clothes.

Fond of his dress, fond of his person grown,
Laugh'd at by all, and to himself unknown,
From side to side he struts, he smiles, he prates,
And seems to wonder what's become of Yates.

Woodward, endow'd with various tricks of
face,

Great master in the science of grimace,
From Ireland ventures, fav'rite of the town,
Lur'd by the pleasing prospect of renown;
A speaking Harlequin, made up of whim,
He twists, he twines, he tortures ev'ry limb,
Plays to the eye with a mere monkey's art,
And leaves to sense the conquest of the heart.
We laugh indeed, but on reflection's birth,
We wonder at ourselves, and curse our mirth.
His walk of parts he fatally misplac'd,
And inclination fondly took for taste;

Hence hath the town so often seen display'd
Beau in burlesque, high life in masquerade.

But when bold wits, not such as patch up
plays,

Cold and correct, in these insipid days,
Some comic character, strong featur'd, urge
To probability's extremest verge,
Where modest judgment her decree suspends,
And for a time, nor censures, nor commends,
Where critics can't determine on the spot
Whether it is in nature found or not,
There Woodward safely shall his pow'rs exert,
Nor fail of favor where he shows desert.
Hence he in Bobadil such praises bore,
Such worthy praises, Kitley scarce had more.

By turns transform'd into all kind of shapes,
Constant to none, Foote laughs, cries, struts,
and scrapes:

Now in the centre, now in van or rear,
The Proteus shifts, bawd, parson, auctioneer.
His strokes of humour, and his burst of sport,
Are all contain'd in this one word, distort.

Doth a man stutter, look a-squint, or halt?
Mimics draw humour out of nature's fault,
With personal defects their mirth adorn,
And hang misfortunes out to public scorn.
E'en I, whom nature cast in hideous mould,
Whom, having made, she trembled to behold,
Beneath the load of mimicry may groan,
And find that nature's errors are my own.

Shadows behind of Foote and Woodward
came;

Wilkinson this, Obrien was that name.
Strange to relate, but wonderfully true,
That even shadows have their shadows too!
With not a single comic pow'r endu'd,
The first a mere mere mimic's mimic stood;
The last by nature form'd to please, who shows,
In Jonson's Stephen, which way genius grows,
Self quite put off, affects, with too much art,
To put on Woodward in each mangled part;
Adepts his shrug, his wink, his stare; nay,
more, [before.

His voice, and croaks; for Woodward croak'd
When a dull copier simple grace neglects
And rests his imitation in defects,
We readily forgive; but such vile arts
Are double guilt in men of real parts.

By nature form'd in her perversest mood,
With no one requisite of art endu'd,
Next Jackson came,—Observe that settled glare,
Which better speaks a puppet than a player;
List to that voice—did ever Discord hear
Sounds so well fitted to her untun'd ear?
When, to enforce some very tender part,
The right-hand sleeps by instinct on the heart;
His soul, of every other thought bereft,
Is anxious only where to place the left;
He sobs and pants to soothe his weeping spouse,
To soothe his weeping mother, turns and bows.
Awkward, embarrass'd, stiff, without the skill
Of moving gracefully, or standing still.
One leg, as if suspicious of his brother,
Desirous seems to run away from t'other.

Some errors, handed down from age to age,
Plead custom's force, and still possess the stage.
That's vile—Should we a parent's faults adore,
And err, because our fathers err'd before:

If inattentive to the author's mind,
Some actors made the jest they could not find;
If by low tricks they marr'd fair nature's mien;
And blurr'd the graces of the simple scene;
Shall we, if reason rightly is employ'd,
Not see their faults, or seeing not avoid;
When Falstaff stands detected in a lie,
Why, without meaning, rolls Love's glassy eye;
Why;—There's no cause—at least no cause we
know—

It was the fashion twenty years ago.
Fashion, a word which knaves and fools may use,

Their knavery and folly to excuse.

To copy beauties, forfeits all pretence
To fame—to copy faults, is want of sense.

Yet (though in some particulars he fails,
Some few particulars, where mode prevails)
If in these hallow'd times, when sober, sad,
All gentlemen are melancholy mad,
When 'tis not deem'd so great a crime by half
To violate a vestal, as to laugh,
Rude mirth may hope presumptuous to engage
An act of toleration for the stage,
And courtiers will, like reasonable creatures,
Suspend vain fashion, and unscrew their features, [more,
Old Falstaff, play'd by Love, shall please once
And humour set the audience in a roar.

Actors I've seen, and of no vulgar name,
Who, being from one part possess'd of fame,
Whether they are to laugh, cry, whine, or bawl,
Still introduce that fav'rite part in all.
Here, Love, be cautious—ne'er be thou betray'd
To call in that wag Falstaff's dangerous aid;
Like Goths of old, howe'er he seems a friend,
He'll seize that throne, you wish him to defend.
In a peculiar mould by humour cast,
For Falstaff fram'd—himself, the first and
last,—

He stands aloof from all—maintains his state,
And scorns, like Scotsmen, to assimilate.
Vain all disguise—too plain we see the trick,
Though the knight wears the weeds of Dominic.
And Boniface, disgrac'd, betrays the smack,
In Anno Domini, of Falstaff's sack.

Arms cross'd, brows bent, eyes fix'd, feet
marching slow,
A band of malcontents with spleen o'erflow;
Wrapt in conceit's impenetrable fog,
Which pride, like Phœbus, draws from ev'ry bog,

They curse the managers, and curse the town,
Whose partial favour keeps such merit down.

But if some man, more hardy than the rest,
Should dare attack these gnatlings in their
nest;

At once they rise with impotence of rage,
Whet their small stings, and buzz about the stage.

" 'Tis breach of privilege !—Shall any dare
To arm satiric truth against a player ?
Prescriptive rights we plead time out of mind ;
Actors, unlash'd themselves, may lash man-
kind."

What ! shall opinion then, of nature free
And lib'ral as the vagrant air, agree
To rust in chains like these, impos'd by things Which, less than nothing, ape the pride of kings ?

No—though half-poets with half-players join
To curse the freedom of each honest line ;
Though rage and malice dim their faded cheek ;
What the muse freely thinks, she'll freely speak.
With just disdain of ev'ry paltry sneer,
Stranger alike to flattery and fear,
In purpose fix'd, and to herself a rule,
Public contempt shall wait the public fool.

Austin would always glisten in French silks,
Ackman would Norris be, and Packer Wilks.
For who, like Ackman, can with humour please ?
Who can, like Packer, charm with sprightly
ease ?

Higher than all the rest, see Bransby strut :
A mighty Gulliver in Lilliput !
Ludicrous nature ! which at once could show
A man so very high, so very low.

If I forget thee, Blakes, or if I say
Aught hurtful, may I never see the play.
Let critics, with a supercilious air,
Decry thy various merit, and declare
Frenchman is still at top ;—but scorn that rage
Which, in attacking thee, attacks the age.
French follies, universally embrac'd,
At once provoke our mirth, and form our taste.

Long, from a nation ever hardly us'd,
At random censur'd, wantonly abus'd,
Have Britons drawn their sport, with partial
view

Form'd gen'ral notions from the rascal few ;
Condemn'd a people, as for vices known,
Which, from their country banish'd, seek our
own.

At length, howe'er, the slavish chain is broke,
And sense awaken'd, scorns her ancient yoke :
Taught by thee, Moody, we now learn to raise Mirth from their foibles ; from their virtues,
praise.

Next came the leg'ion, which our summer
Bayes,

From alleys, here and there, contriv'd to raise,
Flush'd with vast hopes, and certain to succeed
With wits who cannot write, and scarce can read.
Yet rans no more support the rotten cause,
No more from Elliot's worth they reap applause ;
Each on himself determines to rely,
Be Yates disbanded, and let Elliot fly :
Never did play'rs so well an author fit,
To nature dead, and foes declared to wit.
So loud each tongue, so empty was each head,
So much they talk'd, so very little said,
So wondrous dull, and yet so wondrous vain,
At once so willing, and unfit to reign,

3 N 2

That Reason swore, nor would the oath recal,
Their mighty master's soul inform'd them all.

As one with various disappointments sad,
Whom dullness only kept from being mad,
Apart from all the rest great Murphy came,
Common to fools and wits, the rage of fame.
What though the sons of nonsense hail him SIRE,
AUDITOR, AUTHOR, MANAGER, and SQUIRE,
His restless soul's ambition stops not there,
To make his triumphs perfect, dub him PLAYER.

In person tall, a figure form'd to please ;
If symmetry could charm, depriv'd of ease ;
When motionless he stands, we all approve ;
What pity 'tis the thing was made to move.

His voice, in one dull, deep, unvaried sound,
Seems to break forth from caverns under ground.
From hollow chest the low sepulchral note
Unwilling heaves, and struggles in his throat.

Could authors butcher'd give an actor grace,
All must to him resign the foremost place.
When he attempts, in some one fav'rite part,
To ape the feelings of a manly heart,
His honest features the disguise defy,
And his face loudly gives his tongue the lie.

Still in extremes, he knows no happy mean,
Or raving mad, or stupidly serene.

In cold-wrought scenes the lifeless actor flags,
In passion, tears the passion into rags.

Can none remember ?—Yes—I know all must—
When in the Moor he ground his teeth to dust,
When o'er the stage he Folly's standard bore, Whilst Common-Sense stood trembling at the door.

How few are found with real talents bless'd,
Fewer with nature's gifts contented rest.

Man from his sphere eccentric starts astray ;
All hunt for fame, but most mistake the way.
Bred at St. Omer's to the shuffling trade,
The hopeful youth a Jesuit might have made,
With various readings stor'd his empty skull,
Learn'd without sense, and venerably dull :
Or, at some banker's desk, like many more,
Content to tell that two and two make four,
His name had stood in CITY ANNALS fair,
And prudent Dullness mark'd him for a mayor.

What then could tempt thee, in a critic age,
Such blooming hopes to forfeit on a stage ;
Could it be worth thy wondrous waste of pains
To publish to the world thy lack of brains ?
Or might not Reason e'en to thee have shown
Thy greatest praise had been to live unknown ?
Yet let not vanity, like thine, despair :
Fortune makes folly her peculiar care.

A vacant throne high-plac'd in Smithfield view,
To sacred Dullness and her first-born due,
Thither with haste in happy hour repair,
Thy birth-right claim, nor fear a rival there.
Shuter himself shall own thy juster claim,
And venal ledgers puff their Murphy's name,
Whilst Vaughan* or Dapper, call him which you will,
Shall blow the trumpet, and give out the bill.

* A gentleman who published at this juncture a poem, entitled
' The Retort.'

There rule secure, from critics and from sense,
Nor once shall Genius rise to give offence ;
Eternal peace shall bless the happy shore,
And little factions break thy rest no more.
From Covent-Garden crowds promiscuous go,
Whom the Muse knows not, nor desires to know.

Vet'rans they seem'd, but knew of arms no more
Than if, till that time, arms they never bore :
Like Westminster militia train'd to fight,
They scarcely knew the left hand from the right.
Asham'd among such troops to show the head,
Their chiefs were scatter'd, and their heroes fled.

Sparks at his glass sat comfortably down
To se'parate frown from smile, and smile from frown ;

Smith, the genteel, the airy, and the smart,
Smith was just gone to school to say his part ;
Ross (a misfortune which we often meet)
Was fast asleep at dear Statira's feet ;
Statira, with her hero to agree,
Stood on her feet as fast asleep as he ;
Macklin, who largely deals in half-form'd sounds,
Who wantonly transgresses nature's bounds,
Whose acting's hard, affected, and constrain'd,
Whose features as each other they disdain'd,
At variance set, inflexible and coarse,
Ne'er know the workings of united force,
Ne'er kindly soften to each other's aid,
Nor show the mingled pow'rs of light and shade,
No longer for a thankless stage concern'd,
To worthier thoughts his mighty genius turn'd,
Harangu'd, gave lectures, made each simple elf
Almost as good a speaker as himself ;
Whilst the whole town, mad with mistaken zeal,
An awkward rage for elocution feel ;
Dull cits and grave divines his praise proclaim,
And join with Sheridan's their Macklin's name ;
Shuter, who never car'd a single pin
Whether he left out nonsense, or put in,
Who aim'd at wit, though, level'd in the dark,
The random arrow seldom hit the mark,
At Islington, all by the placid stream
Where city swains in lap of Dullness dream,
Where, quiet as her strains their strains do flow,
That all the patron by the bards may know,
Secret as night, with Rolt's experienc'd aid,
The plan of future operations laid,
Projected schemes the summer months to cheer :
And spin out happy folly through the year.

But think not, though these dastard chiefs
are fled,

That Covent-Garden troops shall want a head :
Harlequin comes their chief !—See from afar,
The hero seated in fantastic tur
Wedded to Novelty, his only arms
Are wooden swords, wands, talismans, and charms ;

On one side Folly sits, by some called Fun,
And on the other, his arch-patron, Lun.
Behind, for liberty athirst in vain,
Sense, helpless captive, drags the galling chain.
Six rude misshapen beasts the chariot draw.
Whom Reason loaths, and Nature never saw ;

Monsters, with tails of ice, and heads of fire :
Gorgons, and Hydras, and chimeras dire.
Each was bestrode by full as monstrous wight,
Giant, dwarf, genius, elf, hermaphrodite.
The town, as usual, met him in full cry ;
The town, as usual, knew no reason why.
But fashion so directs, and moderns raise
On fashion's mouldering base their transient praise.

Next, to the field a band of females draw
Their force ; for Britain owns no Salique law :
Just to their worth, we female rights admit,
Nor bar their claim to empire or to wit.

First, giggling, plotting chambermaids arrive,

Hoydens and romps, led on by gen'ral Clive.
In spite of outward blemishes, she shone
For humour fam'd, and humour all her own.
Easy, as if at home, the stage she trod,
Nor sought the critic's praise, nor fear'd his rod.
Original in spirit and in ease,
She pleas'd by hiding all attempts to please.
No comic actress ever yet could raise,
On humour's base, more merit or more praise.

With all the native vigour of sixteen,
Among the merry troop conspicuous seen,
See lively Pope advance in jig and trip,
Corinna, Cherry, Honeycomb, and Snip.
Not without art, but yet to nature true,
She charms the town with humour just, yet new.
Cheer'd by her promise, we the less deplore
The fatal time when Clive shall be no more.

Lo! Vincent comes—with simple grace array'd,
She laughs at paltry arts and scorns parade.
Nature through her is by reflection shown,
Whilst Gay once more knows Polly for his own.

Talk not to me of diffidence and fear—
I see it all, but must forgive it here.
Defects like these which modest terrors cause,
From impudence itself extort applause.
Candour and reason still take virtue's part ;
We love e'en foibles in so good a heart.
Let Tommy Arne, with usual pomp of style,
Whose chief, whose only merit's to compile,
Who, meanly pilfering here and there a bit,
Deals music out as Murphy deals out wit,
Publish proposals, laws for taste prescribe,
And chant the praise of an Italian tribe ;
Let him reverse kind Nature's first decrees,
And teach e'en Brent a method not to please ;
But never shall a truly British age
Bear a vile race of eunuchs on the stage.
The boasted work's call'd national in vain,
If one Italian voice pollutes the strain.
Where tyrants rule, and slaves with joy obey,
Let slavish minstrels pour th' enervate lay :
To Britons far more noble pleasures spring,
In native notes whilst Beard and Vincent sing.

Might figure give a title unto fame,
What rival should with Yates dispute her claim ;

But justice may not partial trophies raise,
Nor sink the actress in the woman's praise.

Still hand in hand her words and actions go,
And the heart feels more than the features show;
For, through the regions of that beauteous face,
We no variety of passions trace;
Dead to the soft emotions of the heart,
No kindred softness can those eyes impart;
The brow, still fix'd in sorrow's sullen frame,
Void of distinction, marks all parts the same.

What's a fine person, or a beauteous face,
Unless deportment gives them decent grace?
Bless'd with all other requisites to please,
Some want the striking elegance of ease:
The curious eye their awkward movement tires;
They seem like puppets led about by wires.
Others, like statues, in one posture still,
Give great ideas of the workman's skill;
Wond'ring, his art we praise the more we view,
And only grieve he gave not motion too.
Weak of themselves are what we beauties call,
It is the manner which gives strength to all.
This teaches every beauty to unite,
And brings them forward in the noblest light.
Happy in this, behold, amidst the throng,
With transient gleam of grace, Hart sweeps
along.

If all the wonders of external grace,
A person finely turn'd, a mould of face,
Where, union rare, expression's lively force
With beauty's softest magic holds discourse,
Attract the eye: if feelings, void of art,
Rouse the quick passions, and inflame the heart;
If music, sweetly breathing from the tongue,
Captives the ear, Bride must not pass unsung.

Wha a fear, which rank ill-nature terms conceit,

By time and custom conquer'd, shall retreat;
When judgment, tutor'd by experience sage,
Shall shoot abroad, and gather strength from
age;

When heav'n in mercy shall the stage release
From the dull slumbers of a still-life piece:
When some stale flow'r, disgraceful to the walk,
Which long hath hung, though wither'd on the stalk,

Shall kindly drop, then Bride shall make her way,
And merit find a passage to the day;
Brought into action, she at once shall raise
Her own renown, and justify our praise.

Form'd for the tragic scene, to grace the stage,
With rival excellence of love and rage,
Mistress of each soft art, with matchless skill
To turn and wind the passions as she will;
To melt the heart with sympathetic woe,
Awake the sigh, and teach the tear to flow;
To put on frenzy's wild distracted glare,
And freeze the soul with horror and despair;
With just desert enroll'd in endless fame,
Conscious of worth superior, Cibber came.

When poor Alicia's madd'ning brains are rack'd,
And strongly-imag'd griefs her mind distract:
Struck with her grief, I catch the madness too!
My brain turns round, the headless trunk I
view!

The roof cracks, shakes, and falls!—New horrors rise,

And Reason buried in the ruin lies.

Nobly disdainful of each slavish art,
She makes her first attack upon the heart:
Pleas'd with the summons, it receives her laws,
And all is silence, sympathy, applause.

But when, by fond ambition drawn aside,
Giddy with praise, and puff'd with female pride,
She quits the tragic scene, and, in pretence
To comic merit, breaks down nature's fence:
I scarcely can believe my ears or eyes,
Or find out Cibber through the dark disguise.

Pritchard, by nature for the stage design'd,
In person graceful, and in sense refin'd;
Her art as much as nature's friend became,
Her voice as free from blemish as her fame,
Who knows so well in majesty to please,
Attemper'd with the graceful charms of ease?

When Congreve's favor'd pantomime to grace,
She comes a captive queen of Moorish race;
When love, hate, jealousy, despair, and rage,
With wildest tumults in her breast engage;
Still equal to herself is Zara seen;
Her passions are the passions of a queen.

When she to murder whets the timorous
thane,

I feel ambition rush through ev'ry vein;
Persuasion hangs upon her daring tongue,
My heart grows flint, and ev'ry nerve's new-strung.

In comedy—"Nay there," cries critic, "hold,
Pritchard's for comedy too fat and old.

Who can, with patience, bear the grey coquette,
Or force a laugh with overgrown Juliet;
Her speech, look, action, humour, all are just:
But then, her age and figure give disgust."

Are foibles then, and graces of the mind,
In real life, to size, or age, confin'd?
Do spirits flow, and is good-breeding plac'd
In any set circumference of waist?
As we grow old, doth affectation cease,
Or gives not age new vigor to caprice?
If in originals these things appear,
Why should we bar them in the copy here?
The nice punctilio-mongers of this age,
The grand minute reformers of the stage,
Slaves to propriety of ev'ry kind,
Some standard-measure for each part should
find,

Which when the best of actors shall exceed,
Let it devolve to one of smaller breed.
All actors too upon the back should bear
Certificate of birth;—time, when;—place, where.
For how can critics rightly fix their worth,
Unless they know the minute of their birth?
An audience too, deceiv'd, may find too late
That they have clapp'd an actor out of date.
Figure, I own, at first may give offence,
And harshly strike the eye's too curious sense;
But when perfections of the mind break forth,
Humour's chaste sallies, judgment's solid worth;
When the pure genuine flame, by nature taught,
Springs into sense, and ev'ry action's thought;

Before such merit all objections fly ;
Pritchard's genteel, and Garrick's six feet high.

Of have I, Pritchard, seen thy wonderous skill,

Confess'd thee great, but find thee greater still.
That worth, which shone in scatter'd rays before,
Collected now, breaks forth with double pow'r.
The Jealous Wife ! on that thy trophies raise,
Inferior only to the author's praise.

From Dublin, fam'd in legends of romance
For mighty magic of enchanted lance.

With which her heroes arm'd victorious prove,
And like a flood rush o'er the land of love,
Mossop and Barry came—names ne'er design'd
By fate in the same sentence to be join'd.
Rais'd by the breath of popular acclaim,
They mounted to the pinnacle of fame ;
There the weak brain, made giddy with the height,

Spurr'd on the rival chiefs to mortal fight.
Thus sportive boys, around some bason's brim,
Behold the pipe-drawn bladders circling swim :
But if from lungs more potent, there arise
Two bubbles of a more than common size,
Eager for honour they for fight prepare,
Bubble meets bubble, and both sink to air.

Mossop, attach'd to military plan,
Still kept his eye fix'd on his right-hand man.
Whilst the mouth measures words with seeming skill,

The right hand labours, and the left lies still ;
For he resolv'd on scripture-grounds to go,
What the right doth, the left-hand shall not know.

With studied impropriety of speech,
He soars beyond the hackney critic's reach ;
To epithets allots emphatic state,
Whilst principals, ungrac'd, like lacqueys wait ;
In ways first trodden by himself excels,
And stands alone in indeclinables ;
Conjunction, preposition, adverb join
To stamp new vigour on the nervous line ;
In monosyllables his thunders roll,
He, SHE, IT, AND, WE, YE, THEY, fright the soul.

In person taller than the common size,
Behold where Barry draws admiring eyes !
When lab'ring passions, in his bosom pent,
Convulsive rage, and struggling heave for vent ;
Spectators, with imagin'd terrors warm,
Anxious expect the bursting of the storm :
But, all unft in such a pile to dwell,
His voice comes forth, like echo from her cell ;
To swell the tempest needful aid denies,
And all adown the stage in feeble murmurs dies.

What man, like Barry, with such pains, can err

In elocution, action, character ?

What man could give, if Barry was not here,
Such well-applauded tenderness to Lear ?
Who else can speak so very, very fine,
That sense may kindly end with ev'ry line ?

Some dozen lines before the ghost is there,
Behold him for the solemn scene prepare.

See how he frames his eyes, poises each limb,
Puts the whole body into proper trim.—
From whence we learn, with no great stretch of art,

Five lines hence comes a ghost, and, ha ! a start.

When he appears most perfect, still we find Something which jars upon, and hurts the mind,
Whatever lights upon a part are thrown,
We see too plainly they are not his own.
No flame from nature ever yet he caught ;
Nor knew a feeling which he was not taught ;
He rais'd his trophies on the base of art,
And conn'd his passions, as he conn'd his part.

Quin, from afar, lur'd by the scent of fame,
A stage Leviathan, put in his claim,
Pupil of Betterton and Booth. Alone,
Sullen he walk'd, and deem'd the chair his own.
For how should moderns, mushrooms of the day,
Who ne'er those masters knew, know how to play ?

Grey-bearded vet'rans, who, with partial tongue,
Extol the times when they themselves were young,

Who, having lost all relish for the stage,
See not their own defects, but lash the age,
Receiv'd with joyful murmur of applause,
Their darling chief, and lin'd his favourite cause.

Far be it from the candid Muse to tread
Insulting o'er the ashes of the dead,
But, just to living merit, she maintains,
And dares the test, whilst Garrick's genius reigns ;
Ancients in vain endeavour to excel,
Happily prais'd, if they could act as well.
But though prescription's force we disallow,
Nor to antiquity submissive bow ;
Though we deny imaginary grace,
Founded on accidents of time and place ;
Yet real worth of ev'ry growth shall bear
Due praise, nor must we, Quin, forget thee there.

His words, bore sterling weight, nervous and strong

In manly tides of sense they roll'd along.
Happy in art, he chiefly had pretence
To keep up numbers, yet not forfeit sense.
No actor ever greater heights could reach
In all the labour'd artifice of speech.
Speech ! Is that all ?—And shall an actor found
An universal fame on partial ground ?
Parrots themselves speak properly by rote,
And, in six months, my dog shall howl by note.
I laugh at those, who, when the stage they tread,

Neglect the heart, to compliment the head ;
With strict propriety their care's confin'd
To weigh out words, while passion halts behind.
To syllable dissectors they appeal,
Allow them accent, cadence,—fools may feel ;
But, spite of all the criticising elves,
Those who would make us feel, must feel themselves.

His eyes, in gloomy socket taught to roll,
Proclaim'd the sullen habit of his soul.

Heavy and phlegmatic he trod the stage,
Too proud for tenderness, too dull for rage.
When Hector's lovely widow shines in tears,
Or Rowe's gay rake dependant virtue jeers,
With the same cast of features he is seen
To chide the libertine, and court the queen.
From the tame scene, which without passion
flows,

With just desert his reputation rose ;
Nor less he pleas'd, when, on some surly plan,
He was, at once, the actor and the man.

In Brute he shone unequal'd : all agree
Garriek's not half so great a brute as he.
When Cato's labour'd scenes are brought to
view,

With equal praise the actor labour'd too ;
For still you'll find, trace passions to their root,
Small difference 'twixt the stoic and the brute.

In fancied scenes, as in life's real plan,
He could not, for a moment, sink the man.
In whate'er cast his character was laid,
Self still, like oil, upon the surface play'd.
Nature, in spite of all his skill, crept in :
Horatio, Dorax, Falstaff,—still 'twas Quin.

Next follows Sheridan—a doubtful name,
As yet unsettled in the rank of fame.
This, fondly lavish in his praises grown,
Gives him all merit : that allows him none.
Between them both we'll steer the middle course,
Nor, loving praise, rob judgment of her force.

Just his conceptions, natural and great :
His feelings strong, his words enforc'd with weight.

Was speech-fam'd Quin himself to hear him
speak,

Envy would drive the colour from his cheek :
But step-dame Nature, niggard of her grace,
Deny'd the social pow'rs of voice and face.
Fix'd in one frame of features, glare of eye,
Passions, like chaos, in confusion lie :
In vain the wonders of his skill are tried
To form distinctions nature hath denied.
His voice no touch of harmony admits,
Irregularly deep and shrill by fits :
The two extremes appear like man and wife,
Coupled together for the sake of strife.

His action's always strong, but sometimes such,

That candour must declare he acts too much.
Why must impatience fall three paces back ?
Why paces three return to the attack ?
Why is the right-leg too forbid to stir,
Unless in motion semicircular ?
Why must the hero with the nailor vie,
And hurl the close clench'd fist at nose or eye ?
In royal John, with Philip angry grown,
I thought he would have knock'd poor Davies
down.

Inhuman tyrant ! was it not a shame,
To fright a king so harmless and so tame ?
But, spite of all defects, his glories rise ;
And art, by judgment form'd, with nature vies :
Behold him sound the depth of Hubert's soul,
Whilst in his own contending passions roll ;

View the whole scene, with critic judgment scan,
And then deny him merit if you can.

Where he falls short, 'tis nature's fault alone ;
Where he succeeds, the merit's all his own.

Last Garrick came—Behind him throng a train
Of snarling critics, ignorant as vain.

One finds out,—“ He's of stature somewhat
low,—

Your hero always should be tall, you know.—
True nat'ral greatness all consists in height.”

Produce your voucher, critic.—“ Sergeant Kite.”

Another can't forgive the paltry arts

By which he makes his way to shallow hearts ;

Mere pieces of finesse, traps for applause—

“ Avaunt, unnat'ral start, affected pause.”

For me, by nature form'd to judge with
phlegm,

I can't acquit by wholesale, nor condemn.

The best things carried to excess are wrong :

The start may be too frequent, pause too long ;

But only us'd in proper time and place,

Severest judgment must allow them grace.

If bunglers, form'd on imitation's plan,
Just in the way that monkies mimic man,
Their copied scene with mangled arts disgrace,
And pause and start with the same vacant face ;
We join the critic laugh, those tricks we scorn,
Which spoil the scenes they mean them to adorn,
But when, from nature's pure and genuine source,

These strokes of acting flow with gen'rous force,
When in the features all the soul's pourtray'd,
And passions, such as Garrick's, are display'd,
To me they seem from quickest feelings caught :
Each start is nature ; and each pause is thought.

When reason yields to passion's wild alarms,
And the whole state of man is up in arms ;
What but a critic could condemn the play'r,
For pausing here, when cool sense pauses there ?
Whilst, working from the heart, the fire I trace,
And mark it strongly flaming to the face ;
Whilst, in each sound, I hear the very man ;
I can't catch words, and pity those who can.

Let wits, like spiders, from the tortur'd brain
Fine-draw the critic-web with curious pain ;
The gods,—a kindness I with thanks must pay,—
Have form'd me of a coarser kind of clay ;
Not stung with envy nor with spleen diseas'd,
A poor dull creature, still with nature pleas'd ;
Hence to thy praises, Garrick, I agree,
And, pleas'd with nature, must be pleas'd with
thee.

Now might I tell, how silence reign'd throughout,

And deep attention hush'd the rabble rout !
How ev'ry claimant, tortur'd with desire,
Was pale as ashes, or as red as fire :
But loose to fame, the Muse more simply acts,
Rejects all flourish, and relates mere facts.

The judges, as the several parties came,
With temper heard, with judgment weigh'd each
claim,

And, in their sentence happily agreed,
In name of both, great Shakspeare thus decreed.

"If manly sense; if nature link'd with art;
 If thorough knowledge of the human heart;
 If pow'rs of acting vast and unconfin'd;
 If fewest faults with greatest beauties join'd;
 If strong expression, and strange pow'rs which lie
 Within the magic circle of the eye;
 If feelings which few hearts, like his, can know,
 And which no face so well as his can show;
 Deserve the preference; — Garrick, take the chair;
 Nor quit it—till thou place an equal there."

WILLIAM AND MARGARET.

'Twas at the silent, solemn hour,
 When night and morning meet;
 In glided Margaret's grimly ghost,
 And stood at William's feet.

Her face was like an April-morn,
 Clad in a wintry cloud;
 And clay-cold was her lily hand,
 That held her sable shroud.

So shall the fairest face appear,
 When youth and years are flown:
 Such is the robe that kings must wear,
 When death has reft their crown.

Her bloom was like the springing flower,
 That sips the silver dew;
 The rose was budded in her cheek,
 Just opening to the view.

But love had, like the canker-worm,
 Consum'd her early prime;
 The rose grew pale, and left her cheek;
 She died before her time.

Awake! she cried, thy true-love calls,
 Come from her midnight-grave,
 Now let thy pity hear the maid,
 Thy love refus'd to save.

This is the dumb and dreary hour,
 When injur'd ghosts complain;
 When yawning graves give up their dead,
 To haunt the faithless swain.

Bethink thee, William, of thy fault,
 Thy pledge and broken oath!
 And give me back my maiden-vow,
 And give me back my troth.

Why did you promise love to me,
 And not that promise keep?
 Why did you swear my eyes were bright,
 Yet leave those eyes to weep?

How could you say my face was fair,
 And yet that face forsake?
 How could you win my virgin-heart,
 Yet leave that heart to break?

Why did you say my lip was sweet,
 And made the scarlet pale?
 And why did I, young witless maid!
 Believe the flattering tale?

That face, alas! no more is fair,
 Those lips no longer red:
 Dark are my eyes now clos'd in death,
 And every charm is fled.

The hungry worm my sister is,
 This winding sheet I wear:
 And cold and weary lasts our night,
 Till that last morn appear.

But, hark! the cock has warn'd me hence;
 A long and late adieu!
 Come, see, false man, how low she lies,
 Who died for love of you.

The lark sung loud; the morning smil'd,
 With beams of rosy red:
 Pale William quak'd in every limb,
 And raving left his bed.

He hied him to the fatal place
 Where Margaret's body lay;
 And stretch'd him on the green-grass turf,
 That wrapp'd her breathless clay.

And thrice he call'd on Margaret's name,
 And thrice he wept full sore;
 Then laid his cheek to her cold grave,
 And word spoke never more!

NIGHT-THOUGHTS.

NIGHT THE FIRST.

Life, Death, and Immortality.

Tu'n Nature's sweet restorer, balmy Sleep!
 He, like the world, his ready visit pays
 Where fortune smiles; the wretched he forsakes;
 Swift on his downy pinion flies from woe,
 And lights on lids unsullied with a tear.
 From short (as usual) and disturb'd repose,
 I wake: how happy they, who wake no more!
 Yet that were vain, if dreams infest the grave.
 I wake, emerging from a sea of dreams
 Tumultuous; where my wreck'd desponding
 thought

From wave to wave of fancied misery,
At random drove, her helm of reason lost.
Though now restor'd, 'tis only change of pain,
(A bitter change!) severer for severe.
The day too short for my distress; and night,
E'en in the zenith of her dark domain,
Is sun-shine to the colour of my fate.

Night, sable goddess! from her ebon throne,
In rayless majesty, now stretches forth
Her leaden sceptre o'er a slumbering world.
Silence, how dead! and darkness, how profound!
Nor eye, nor listening ear, an object finds;
Creation sleeps. 'Tis, as the general pulse
Of life stood still, and nature made a pause;
An awful pause! prophetic of her end.
And let her prophecy be soon fulfill'd;
Fate! drop the curtain; I can lose no more.
Silence and Darkness! solemn sisters! twins
From ancient Night, whose nurse the tender thought
To reason, and on reason build resolve,
(That column of true majesty in man,)
Assist me: I will thank you in the grave;
The grave, your kingdom: there this frame shall fall

A victim sacred to your dreary shrine.
But what are ye?—

Thou, who didst put to flight
Primeval silence, when the morning stars,
Exulting, shouted o'er the rising ball!
O thou, whose word from solid darkness struck
That spark, the sun; strike wisdom from my soul;
My soul, which flies to thee, her trust, her treasure,

As misers to their gold, while others rest.

Through this opaque of nature, and of soul,
This double night, transmit one pitying ray,
To lighten, and to cheer. O lead my mind,
(A mind that fain would wander from its woe,)
Lead it through various scenes of life and death,
And from each scene, the noblest truths inspire.
Nor less inspire my conduct, than my song;
Teach my best reason, reason; my best will Teach rectitude; and fix my firm resolve
Wisdom to wed, and pay her long arrears:
Nor let the phial of thy vengeance, pour'd
On this devoted head, be pour'd in vain.

The bell strikes one. We take no note of time
But from its loss. To give it then a tongue,
Is wise in man. As if an angel spoke,
I feel the solemn sound. If heard aright,
It is the knell of my departed hours:
Where are they? With the years beyond the flood.
It is the signal that demands dispatch;
How much is to be done? My hopes and fears
Start up alarm'd, and o'er life's narrow verge
Look down—On what? a fathomless abyss!
A dread eternity! how surely mine!
And can eternity belong to me,
Poor pensioner on the bounties of an hour?

How poor, how rich, how abject, how august,
How complicate, how wonderful, is man!
How passing wonder He, who made him such!
Who center'd in our make such strange extremes!

From different natures marvellously mixt,
Connexion exquisite of distant worlds!
Distinguish'd link in being's endless chain!
Midway from nothing to the Deity!
A beam ethereal, sullied and absorpt!
Though sullied and dishonor'd, still divine!
Dim miniature of greatness absolute!
An heir of glory! a frail child of dust!
Helpless immortal! insect infinite!
A worm! a god!—I tremble at myself,
And in myself am lost! at home a stranger,
Thought wanders up and down, surpris'd, aghast,
And wondering at her own: How reason reels!
O what a miracle to man is man!
Triumphantly distress'd! what joy, what dread!
Alternately transported, and alarm'd!
What can preserve my life? or what destroy?
An angel's arm can't snatch me from the grave;
Legions of angels can't confine me there.
'Tis past conjecture; all things rise in proof:
While o'er my limbs sleep's soft dominion spread,
What though my soul fantastic measures trod
O'er fairy fields; or mourn'd along the gloom
Of pathless woods; or, down the craggy steep
Hurl'd headlong, swam with pain the mantled pool;

Or scal'd the cliff; or danc'd on hollow winds,
With antic shapes, wild natives of the brain?
Her ceaseless flight, though devious, speaks her nature

Of subtler essence than the trodden clod;
Active, aerial, towering, unconfin'd,
Unfetter'd with her gross companion's fall.
E'en silent night proclaims my soul immortal:
E'en silent night proclaims eternal day.
For human weal, Heaven husbands all events;
Dull sleep instructs, nor sport vain dreams in vain.

Why then their loss deplore, that are not lost?
Why wanders wretched thought their tombs
around

In infidel distress? Are angels there?
Slumbers, rak'd up in dust, ethereal fire?

They live! they greatly live a life on earth
Unkindled, unconceiv'd; and from an eye
Of tenderness let heavenly pity fall
On me, more justly number'd with the dead.
This is the desert, this the solitude:
How populous, how vital, is the grave!
This is creation's melancholy vault,
The vale funereal, the sad cypress gloom;
The land of apparitions, empty shades!
All, all on earth, is shadow, all beyond
Is substance; the reverse is folly's creed:
How solid all, where change shall be no more!

This is the bud of being, the dim dawn,
The twilight of our day, the vestibule:
Life's theatre as yet is shut, and death,
Strong death, alone can heave the massy bar,
This gross impediment of clay remove,
And make us embryos of existence free
From real life, but little more remote
Is he, not yet a candidate for light,
The future embryo, slumbering in his sire.
Embryos we must be till we burst the shell

Yon ambient azure shell, and spring to life,
The life of gods, O transport ! and of man.

Yet man, fool man ! here buries all his
thoughts ;
Inters celestial hopes without one sigh.
Prisoner of earth, and pent beneath the moon,
Here pinions all his wishes ; wing'd by Heaven
To fly at infinite ; and reach it there,
Where seraphs gather immortality,
On life's fair tree, fast by the throne of God.
What golden joys ambrosial clustering glow,
In his full beam, and ripen for the just,
Where momentary ages are no more !
Where time, and pain, and chance, and death expire !

And is it in the flight of threescore years,
To push eternity from human thought,
And smother souls immortal in the dust ?
A soul immortal, spending all her fires,
Wasting her strength in strenuous idleness,
Thrown into tumult, raptur'd or alarm'd,
At aught this scene can threaten or indulge,
Resembles ocean into tempest wrought,
To waft a feather, or to drown a fly.

Where falls this censure ? It o'erwhelms myself ;

How was my heart incrust'd by the world !
O how self-fetter'd was my grovelling soul !
How, like a worm, was I wrapt round and round
In silken thought, which reptile fancy spun,
Till darken'd reason lay quite clouded o'er
With soft conceit of endless comfort here,
Nor yet put forth her wings to reach the skies !
Night-visions may befriend : (as sung above)

Our waking dreams are fatal. How I dreamt
Of things impossible ! (Could sleep do more ?)
Of joys perpetual in perpetual change !
Of stable pleasures on the tossing wave !
Eternal sun-shine in the storms of life !
How richly were my noon-tide trances hung
With gorgeous tapestries of pictur'd joys !
Joy behind joy, in endless perspective !
Till at death's toll, whose restless iron tongue
Calls daily for his millions at a meal,
Starting I woke, and found myself undone.
Where now my frenzy's pompous furniture ?
The cobwebb'd cottage, with its ragged wall
Of mouldering mud, is royalty to me !
The spider's most attenuated thread
Is cord, is cable, to man's tender tie
On earthly bliss ! it breaks at every breeze.

O ye blest scenes of permanent delight !
Full, above measure ! lasting, beyond bound !
A perpetuity of bliss is bliss.

Could you, so rich in rapture, fear an end,
That ghastly thought would drink up all your
joy,

And quite unparadise the realms of light.
Safe are you lodg'd above these rolling spheres ;
The baleful influence of whose giddy dance
Sheds sad vicissitude on all beneath.
Here teems with revolutions every hour,
And rarely for the better ; or the best,
More mortal than the common births of fate.

Each moment has its sickle, emulous
Of Time's enormous scythe, whose ample sweep
Strikes empires from the root ; each moment
plays

His little weapon in the narrower sphere
Of sweet domestic comfort, and cuts down
The fairest bloom of sublunary bliss.

Bliss ! sublunary bliss !—proud words, and
vain !

Implicit treason to divine decree !
A bold invasion of the rights of Heaven !
I clasp'd the phantoms, and I found them air.
O had I weigh'd it ere my fond embrace !
What darts of agony had miss'd my heart !

Death ! great proprietor of all ! tis thine
To tread out empire, and to quench the stars.
The sun himself by thy permission shines ;
And, one day, thou shalt pluck him from his sphere.

Amid such mighty plunder, why exhaust
Thy partial quiver on a mark so mean ?
Why thy peculiar rancour wreak'd on me ?
Insatiate archer ! could not one suffice ?
Thy shaft flew thrice ; and thrice my peace was slain.

And thrice, ere thrice yon moon had fill'd her horn.

O Cynthia ! why so pale ? Dost thou lament
Thy wretched neighbour ? Grieve to see thy wheel
Of ceaseless change outwhirl'd in human life ?
How wanes my borrow'd bliss ! from fortune's
smile,

Precarious courtesy ! not virtue's sure,
Self-given, solar ray of sound delight.

In every varied posture, place, and hour,
How widow'd every thought of every joy !
Thought, busy thought ! too busy for my peace !
Through the dark postern of time long elaps'd,
Led softly, by the stillness of the night,
Led, like a murderer, (and such it proves !)
Strays (wretched rover !) o'er the pleasing past ;
In quest of wretchedness perversely strays,
And finds all desert now ; and meets the ghosts
Of my departed joys ; a numerous train !

I rue the riches of my former fate ;
Sweet comfort's blasted clusters I lament :
I tremble at the blessings once so dear ;
And every pleasure pains me to the heart.

Yet why complain ? or why complain for one ?
Hangs out the sun his lustre but for me,
The single man ? Are angels all beside ?
I mourn for millions : 'tis the common lot ;
In this shape, or in that, has fate entail'd
The mother's throes on all of woman born,
Not more the children, than sure heirs, of pain.

War, famine, pest, volcano, storm, and fire,
Intestine broils, oppression, with her heart
Wrapt up in triple brass, besiege mankind.
God's image disinherited of day,
Here plung'd in mines, forgets a sun was made.
There, beings deathless as their haughty lord,
Are hammer'd to the galling oar for life ;
And plough the winter's wave, and reap despair.
Some, for hard masters, broken under arms

In battle lopt away, with half their limbs,
Beg bitter bread through realms their valour
sav'd,

If so the tyrant, or his minion, doom.

Want, and incurable disease, (fell pair !)

On hopeless multitudes remorseless seize

At once ; and make a refuge of the grave.

How groaning hospitals eject their dead !

What numbers groan for sad admission there !

What numbers, once in fortune's lap high-fed,

Solicit the cold hand of charity !

To shock us more, solicit it in vain !

Ye silken sons of pleasure ! since in pains

You rue more modish visits, visit here,

And breathe from your debauch : give, and reduce

Surfeit's dominion over you : but so great

Your impudence, you blush at what is right.

Happy ! did sorrow seize on such alone.

Not prudence can defend, or virtue save ;

Disease invades the chastest temperance ;

And punishment the guiltless ; and alarm,

Through thickest shades, pursues the fond of peace.

Man's caution often into danger turns ;

And his guard, falling, crushes him to death.

Not happiness itself makes good her name ;

Our very wishes give us not our wish.

How distant oft the thing we dote on most,

From that for which we dote, felicity !

The smoothest course of nature has its pains !

And truest friends, through error, wound our rest.

Without misfortune, what calamities !

And what hostilities, without a foe !

Nor are foes wanting to the best on earth.

But endless is the list of human ills,

And sighs might sooner fail, than cause to sigh.

A part how small of the terraqueous globe

Is tenanted by man ! the rest a waste,

Rocks, deserts, frozen seas, and burning sands ;

Wild haunts of monsters, poisons, stings, and
death.

Such is earth's melancholy map ! but, far

More sad ! this earth is a true map of man.

So bounded are its haughty lord's delights

To woe's wide empire ; where deep troubles toss,

Loud sorrows howl, envenom'd passions bite,

Ravenous calamities our vitals seize,

And threatening fate wide opens to devour.

What then am I, who sorrow for myself !

In age, in infancy, from other's aid

Is all our hope, to teach us to be kind.

That, nature's first, last lesson to mankind :

The selfish heart deserves the pain it feels.

More generous sorrow, while it sinks, exalts ;

And conscious virtue mitigates the pang.

Nor virtue, more than prudence, bids me give

Sworn thought a second channel ; who divide,

They weaken too, the torrent of their grief.

Take, then, O world ! thy much-indebted tear :

How sad a sight is human happiness,

To those whose thought can pierce beyond an hour !

O thou ! whate'er thou art, whose heart exults !

Wouldst thou I should congratulate thy fate ?

I know thou wouldst ; thy pride demands it from
me.

Let thy pride pardon, what thy nature needs,

The salutary censure of a friend.

'Thou happy wretch ! by blindness thou art blest ;

By dotage dandled to perpetual smiles.

Know, smiler ! at thy peril thou art pleas'd !

Thy pleasure is the promise of thy pain.

Misfortune, like a creditor severe,

But rises in demand for her delay ;

She makes a scourge of past prosperity,

To sting thee more, and double thy distress.

Lorenzo, fortune makes her court to thee,

Thy fond heart dances, while the Syren sings,

Dear is thy welfare ; think me not unkind ;

I would not damp, but to secure thy joys.

Think not that fear is sacred to the storm :

Stand on thy guard against the smiles of fate.

Is Heaven tremendous in its frowns ? Most sure ;

And in its favours formidable too :

Its favours here are trials, not rewards ;

A call to duty, not discharge from care ;

And should alarm us, full as much as woes ;

Awake us to their cause and consequence ;

And make us tremble, weigh'd with our desert ;

Awe nature's tumult, and chastise her joys,

Lest, while we clasp, we kill them ; nay, invert

To worse than simple misery, their charms,

Revolted joys, like foes in civil war,

Like bosom friendships to resentment sour'd,

With rage envenom'd rise against our peace.

Beware what earth calls happiness ; beware

All joys, but joys that never can expire.

Who builds on less than an immortal base,

Fond as he seems, condemns his joys to death.

Mine died with thee, Philander ! thy last sigh

Dissolv'd the charm ; the disenchanted earth

Lost all her lustre. Where her glittering towers ?

Her golden mountains, where ? all darken'd down

To naked waste ; a dreary vale of tears ;

The great magician's dead ! Thou poor, pale piece

Of outcast earth, in darkness ! what a change

From yesterday ! Thy darling hope so near,

(Long-labour'd prize !) O how ambition flush'd

Thy glowing cheek ! Ambition truly great,

Of virtuous praise. Death's subtle seed within

(Sly, treacherous miner !) working in the dark,

Smil'd at thy well-concerted scheme, and beckon'd

The worm to riot on that rose so red,

Unfaded ere it fell ; one moment's prey !

Man's foresight is conditionally wise ;

Lorenzo ! wisdom into folly turns

Oft, the first instant, its idea fair

To labouring thought is born. How dim our eye !

The present moment terminates our sight ;

Clouds, thick as those on doomsday, drown the
next ;

We penetrate, we prophesy in vain.

Time is dealt out by particles ; and each,

Ere mingled with the streaming sands of life,
By fate's inviolable oath is sworn
Deep silence, "Where eternity begins."

By nature's law, what may be, may be now ;
There's no prerogative in human hours.
In human hearts what bolder thought can rise
Than man's presumption on to-morrow's dawn !
Where is to-morrow ? in another world.
For numbers this is certain ; the reverse
Is sure to none ; and yet on this perhaps,
This peradventure, infamous for lies,
As on a rock of adamant, we build
Our mountain-hopes, spin out eternal schemes,
As we the fatal sisters could out-spin,
And, big with life's futurities, expire.

Not e'en Philander had bespoke his shroud :
Nor had he cause ; a warning was denied :
How many fall as sudden, not as safe !
As sudden, though for years admonish'd home.
Of human ills the last extreme beware,
Beware, Lorenzo ! a slow sudden death.
How dreadful that deliberate surprize !
Be wise to-day ; 'tis madness to defer ;
Next day the fatal precedent will plead ;
Thus on, till wisdom is push'd out of life.
Procrastination is the thief of time ;
Year after year it steals, till all are fled,
And to the mercies of a moment leaves
The vast concerns of an eternal scene.
If not so frequent, would not this be strange ?
That 'tis so frequent, this is stranger still.

Of man's miraculous mistakes, this bears
The palm, "That all men are about to live,"
For ever on the brink of being born.
All pay themselves the compliment to think
They one day shall not drivel : and their pride
On this reversion takes up ready praise ;
At least, their own ; their future selves applaud ;
How excellent that life they ne'er will lead !
Time lodg'd in their own hands is folly's vails ;
That lodg'd in fate's, to wisdom they consign ;
The thing they can't but purpose, they postpone ;
'Tis not in folly, not to scorn a fool ;
And scarce in human wisdom, to do more.
All promise is poor dilatory man, [deed,
And that through every stage : when young, in-
In full content we, sometimes, nobly rest,
Unanxious for ourselves ; and only wish,
As duteous sons, our fathers were more wise.
At thirty man suspects himself a fool ;
Knows it at forty, and reforms his plan ;
At fifty chides his infamous delay,
Pushes his prudent purpose to resolve ;
In all the magnanimity of thought
Resolves ; and re-resolves ; then dies the same.

And why ? Because he thinks himself immortal.

All men think all men mortal, but themselves ;
Themselves, when some alarming shock of fate
Strikes through their wounded hearts the sudden dread ;

But their hearts wounded, like the wounded air,
Soon close ; where, past the shaft, no trace is
found.

As from the wing, no scar the sky retains ;
The parted wave no furrow from the keel :
So dies in human hearts the thoughts of death ;
E'en with the tender tear which nature sheds
O'er those we love, we drop it in their grave.
Can I forget Philander ? That were strange !
O my full heart !—But should I give it vent,
The longest night, though longer far, would fail,
And the lark listen to my midnight song,

The sprightly lark's shrill matin wakes the
morn ;
Grief's sharpest thorn hard pressing on my
breast,

I strive, with wakeful melody, to cheer
The sullen gloom, sweet Philomel ! like thee,
And call the stars to listen : every star
Is deaf to mine, enamour'd of thy lay.
Yet he not vain ; there are, who thine excel,
And charm through distant ages : wrapt in shade,
Prisoner of darkness ! to the silent hours,
How often I repeat their rage divine,
To lull my griefs, and steal my heart from woe !
I roll their raptures, but not catch their fire.
Dark, though not blind, like thee, Mæonides !
Or, Milton ! thee ; ah, could I reach your strain !
Or his, who made Mæonides our own.
Man too he sung : immortal man I sing ;
Oft bursts my song beyond the bounds of life ;
What, now, but immortality can please ?
O had he press'd his theme, pursued the track,
Which opens out of darkness into day !
O had he, mounted on his wing of fire,
Soar'd where I sink, and sung immortal man !
How had it blest mankind, and rescued me !

SELECT PASSAGES FROM THE SATIRES ENTITLED "LOVE OF PRAISE."

LOVE OF PRAISE.

THE love of praise, howe'er conceal'd by art,
Reigns, more or less, and glows in ev'ry heart :
The proud, to gain it, toils on toils endure ;
The modest shun it, but to make it sure.
O erglobes and sceptres, now on thrones it swells,
Now trims the midnight lamp in college cells :
'Tis Tory, Whig ; it plots, prays, preaches, pleads,
Harangues in senates, squeaks in masquerades :
Here to S——e's humor makes a bold pretence,
There bolder aims at P——y's eloquence :
It aids the dancer's heel, the writer's head,
And heaps the plain with mountains of the dead
Nor ends with life, but nods in sable plumes,
Adorns our hearse, and flatters on our tombs.

OSTENTATIOUS PIETY.

SOME go to church, proud humbly to repent,
And come back much more guilty than they went :
One way they look, another way they steer,
Pray to the gods, but would have mortals hear ;
And when their sins they set sincerely down,
They'll find that their religion has been one.

FLATTERY.

OF folly, vice, disease, men proud we see ;
And (stranger still !) of blockheads' flattery ;
Whose praise defames ; as if a fool should mean,
By spitting on your face to make it clean.

PRIDE OF ANCESTRY.

My Lord comes forward ; forward let him come !
Ye vulgar ! at your peril give him room :
He stands for fame on his forefathers' feet,
By heraldry prov'd valiant or discreet.
With what a decent pride he throws his eyes
Above the man by three descents less wise ?
If virtues at his noble hands you crave,
You bid him raise his fathers from the grave.
Men should press forward in Fame's glorious
chase ;

Nobles look backward, and so lose the race.

Let high birth triumph ! what can be more great ?

Nothing—but merit in a low estate.
To Virtue's humblest son let none prefer
Vice, though descended from the Conqueror.
Shall men, like figures, pass for high or base,
Slight or important, only by their place ?
Titles are marks of honest men, and wise ;
The fool or knave that wears a title lies.

They that on glorious ancestors enlarge,
Produce their debt instead of their discharge.

RAGE FOR BUILDING.

Brutus with solid glory will be crown'd ;
He buys no phantom, no vain empty sound ;
But builds himself a name : and, to be great,
Sinks in a quarry an immense estate !
In cost and grandeur Chandos he'll outdo :
And, Burlington, thy taste is not so true,
The pile is finish'd, ev'ry toil is past,
And full perfection is arriv'd at last ;
When, lo ! my Lord to some small corner runs,
And leaves state-rooms to strangers and to duns.

The man who builds, and wants wherewith to
Provides a home from which to run away. [pay,
In Britain, what is many a lordly seat,
But a discharge in full for an estate ?

WIT.

WHAT though wit tickles, tickling is unsafe,
If still 'tis painful while it makes us laugh.
Who, for the poor renown of being smart,
Would leave a sting within a brother's heart ?

Parts may be prais'd, good nature is ador'd ;
Then draw your wit as seldom as your sword,
And never on the weak, or you'll appear
As there no hero, no great genius here.
As in smooth oil the razor best is whet,
So wit is by politeness sharpest set :
Their want of edge from their offence is seen ;
Both pain us least when exquisitely keen.
The fame men give us for the joy they find ;
Dull is the jester when the joke's unkind.

PARENTAL PREJUDICE AGAINST GENIUS.

LAMPRIIDIUS, from the bottom of his breast,
Sighs o'er one child, but triumphs in the rest.
How just his grief ! one carries in his head
A less proportion of the father's lead,

And is in danger, without special grace,
To rise above a Justice of the Peace.
The dunghill-breed of men a diamond scorn,
And feel a passion for a grain of corn ;
Some stupid, plodding, money-loving wight,
Who wins their hearts by knowing black from
white,

Who with much pains exerting all his sense,
Can range aright his shillings, pounds, and pence.

BOASTING.

OF boasting more than of a bomb afraid,
A soldier should be modest as a maid.
Fame is a bubble the reserv'd enjoy ;
Who strive to grasp it, as they touch, destroy ;
'Tis the world's debt to deeds of high degree,
But if you pay yourself the world is free.

A LOVELY PATRONESS OF LEARNING.

ON the belles-lettres lovely Daphne reigns ;
Again the god Apollo wears her chains :
With legs toss'd high, on her sophee she sits,
Vouchsafing audience to contending wits :
Of each performance she's the final test ;
One act read o'er, she prophesies the rest ;
And then, pronouncing with decisive air,
Fully convinces all the town—she's fair.
Had lovely Daphne Hecate's face,
How would her elegance of taste decrease !
Some ladies' judgment in their features lies,
And all their genius sparkles from their eyes.

But hold, she cries, Lampooner ! have a care ;
Must I want common sense because I'm fair !
O no ; see Stella : her eyes shine as bright
As if her tongue was never in the right :
And yet what real learning, judgment, fire !
She seems inspir'd and can herself inspire :
How then (if malice rul'd not all the fair)
Could Daphne publish, and could she forbear ?
We grant that beauty is no bar to sense,
Nor is't a sanction for impertinence.

THE LAQUID LADY.

THE languid lady next appears in state,
Who was not born to carry her own weight ;
She lolls, reels, staggers, till some foreign aid
To her own stature lifts the feeble maid ;
Then, if ordain'd to so severe a doom,
She, by just stages, journeys round the room ;
But, knowing her own weakness, she despairs
To scale the Alps—that is, to ascend the stairs.
My fan ! let others say, who laugh at toil ;
Fan ! hood ! glove ! scarf ! is her laconic style,
And that is spoke with such a dying fall,
That Betty rather sees than hears the call :
The motion of her lips, and meaning eye,
Piece out th' idea her faint words deny.
O listen with attention most profound !
Her voice is but the shadow of a sound.
And help ! oh, help ! her spirits are so dead,
One hand scarce lifts the other to her head ;
If there a stubborn pin it triumphs o'er,
She pants ! she sinks away ! and is no more.
Let the robust, and the gigantic, carve,
Life is not worth so much, she'd rather starve ;
But chew she must herself : ah, cruel fate !
That Rosalinda can't by proxy eat.

FASHIONABLE RELIGION.

LAVINIA is polite, but not profane,
 To church as constant as to Drury-lane :
 She decently, in form, pays heav'n its due,
 And makes a civil visit to her pew.
 Her lifted fan, to give a solemn air,
 Conceals her face, which passes for a pray'r :
 Curt'sies to curt'sies, then, with grace succeed ;
 Not one the fair omits, but at the Creed :
 Or if she joins the service, 'tis to speak ;
 Through dreadful silence the pent heart might
 break ;
 Untaught to bear it, women talk away
 To God himself, and fondly think they pray :
 But sweet their accent ; and their air refin'd ;
 For they're before their Maker—and mankind.
 When ladies once are proud of praying well,
 Satan himself will toll the parish bell.

TRUE BEAUTY.

How would Melania be surpris'd to hear
 She's quite deform'd ! and yet the case is clear.
 What's female beauty but an air divine,
 Through which the mind's all gentle graces
 shine ?
 They, like the sun, irradiate all between :
 The body charms, because the soul is seen :
 Hence men are often captives of a face,
 They know not why, of no peculiar grace.
 Some forms, though bright, no mortal man can bear ;
 Some none resist, though not exceeding fair.

TRIFLES.

BRUNETTA's wise in actions great and rare,
 But scorns on trifles to bestow her care ;
 Thus ev'ry hour Brunetta is to blame,
 Because th' occasion is beneath her aim.
 Think nought a trifle, though it small appear ;
 Small sands the mountain, moments make the
 year,
 And trifles life. Your care to trifles give,
 Or you may die before you truly live.

LOVE OF FAME.

THE love of Fame in its effects survey'd,
 The Muse has sung, be now the cause display'd :
 Since so diffusive, and so wide its sway,
 What is this pow'r whom all mankind obey ?
 Shot from above, by heav'n's indulgence
 came
 This gen'rous ardour, this unconquer'd flame,
 To warm, to raise, to deify mankind,
 Still burning brightest in the noblest mind.
 By large-soul'd men, for thirst of fame re-
 nown'd,
 Wise laws were fram'd, and sacred arts were
 found ;
 Desire of praise first broke the patriot's rest,
 And made a bulwark of the warrior's breast ;
 It bids Argyle in fields and senates shine :
 What more can prove its origin divine ?
 But, oh ! this passion planted in the soul,
 On eagle's wings to mount her to the pole,
 The flaming minister of virtue meant,
 Set up false gods, and wrong'd her high descent.

THE PLEASURES OF THE IMAGINATION.

[Conclusion of Book III.]

SOME heavenly genius, whose unclouded thoughts
 Attain that secret harmony which blends
 The ethereal spirit with its mould of clay ;
 O ! teach me to reveal the graceful charm
 That searchless nature o'er the sense of man
 Diffuses, to behold, in lifeless things,
 The inexpressive semblance of himself,
 Of thought and passion. Mark the sable woods
 That shade sublime yon mountain's nodding
 brow ;
 With what religious awe the solemn scene
 Commands your steps ! as if the reverend form
 Of Minos or of Numa should forsake
 The Elysian seats, and down the embowering
 glade
 Move to your pausing eye ! Behold the expanse
 Of yon gay landscape, where the silver clouds
 Flit o'er the heavens before the sprightly breeze :
 Now their gray cincture skirts the doubtful sun ;
 Now streams of splendour, through their opening veil
 Effulgent, sweep from off the gilded lawn
 The aerial shadows ; on the curling brook,
 And on the shady margin's quivering leaves
 With quickest lustre glancing ; while you view
 The prospect, say, within your cheerful breast
 Plays not the lively sense of winning mirth
 With clouds and sun-shine checquer'd, while the round
 Of social converse, to the inspiring tongue
 Of some gay nymph amid her subject train,
 Moves all obsequious ? Whence is this effect,
 This kindred power of such discordant things ?
 Or flows their semblance from that mystic tone
 To which the new-born mind's harmonious powers
 At first were strung ? Or rather from the links
 Which artful custom twines around her frame ?
 For when the different images of things
 By chance combin'd, have struck the attentive
 soul
 With deeper impulse, or, connected long,
 Have drawn her frequent eye ; how'er distinct
 The external scenes, yet oft the ideas gain
 From that conjunction an eternal tie,
 And sympathy unbroken. Let the mind
 Recall one partner of the various league,
 Immediate, lo ! the firm confederates rise,
 And each his former station straight resumes :
 One movement governs the consenting throng,
 And all at once with rosy pleasure shine,
 Or all are sudden'd with the glooms of care.
 'Twas thus, if ancient fame the truth unfold,
 Two faithful needles from the informing touch
 Of the same parent-stone, together drew
 Its mystic virtue, and at first conspir'd

With fatal impulse quivering to the Pole :
Then though disjoin'd by kingdoms, though the main

Roll'd its broad surge betwixt, and different stars
Beheld their wakeful motions, yet preserv'd
The former friendship, and remember'd still
The alliance of their birth : whate'er the line
Which once possess'd, nor pause, nor quiet
knew

The sure associate, ere with trembling speed
He found its path, and fix'd unerring there.
Such is the secret union, when we feel
A song, a flower, a name, at once restore Those long-connected scenes where first they mov'd

The attention : backward through her mazy
walks

Guiding the wanton fancy to her scope,
To temples, courts, or fields ; with all the band
Of painted forms, of passions and designs
Attendant : whence, if pleasing in itself,
The prospect from that sweet accession gains
Redoubled influence o'er the listening mind.

By these mysterious ties the busy power
Of memory her ideal train preserves
Entire ; or when they would elude her watch,
Reclaims their fleeting footsteps from the waste
Of dark oblivion ; thus collecting all
The various forms of being to present,
Before the curious aim of mimic art,
Their largest choice : like spring's unfolded blooms

Exhaling sweetness, that the skilful bee
May taste at will, from their selected spoils
To work her dulcet food. For not the expanse
Of living lakes in summer's noontide calm,
Reflects the bordering shade, and sun-bright
heavens

With fairer semblance ; not the sculptur'd gold
More faithful keeps the graver's lively trace,
Than he whose birth the sister powers of art
Propitious view'd, and from his genial star
Shed influence to the seeds of fancy kind ;
Than his attemper'd bosom must preserve
The seal of nature. There alone unchang'd,
Her form remains. The balmy walks of May
There breathe perennial sweets : the trembling chord

Resounds for ever in the abstracted ear,
Melodious ; and the virgin's radiant eye.
Superior to disease, to grief, and time,
Shines with unbating lustre. Thus at length
Endow'd with all that nature can bestow,
The child of fancy oft in silence bends
O'er these mixt treasures of his pregnant breast,
With conscious pride. From them he oft resolves

To frame he knows not what excelling things ;
And win he knows not what sublime reward
Of praise and wonder. By degrees, the mind Feels her young nerves dilate ; the plastic powers

Labour for action : blind emotions heave
His bosom, and with loveliest phrenzy caught,

From earth to heaven he rolls his daring eye,
From heaven to earth. Anon ten thousand shapes,

Like spectres trooping to the wizard's call,
Flit swift before him. From the womb of earth,
From ocean's bed they come : the eternal heavens

Disclose their splendours, and the dark abyss
Pours out her births unknown. With fixed gaze

He marks the rising phantoms. Now compares Their different forms ; now blends them, now divides,

Enlarges and extenuates by turns ;
Opposes, ranges in fantastic bands,
And infinitely varies. Hither now,
Now thither fluctuates his inconstant aim,
With endless choice perplex'd. At length his plan

Begins to open. Lucid order dawns ;
And as from Chaos old the jarring seeds
Of nature at the voice divine repair'd
Each to its place, till rosy earth unveil'd
Her fragrant bosom, and the joyful sun
Sprung up the blue serene ; by swift degrees
Thus disentangled, his entire design
Emerges. Colours mingle, features join,
And lines converge : the fainter parts retire ;
The fairer eminent in light advance ;
And every image on its neighbour smiles.
Awhile he stands, and with a father's joy
Contemplates. Then with Promethean art,
Into its proper vehicle he breathes
The fair conception ; which, embodied thus,
And permanent becomes to eyes or ears
An object ascertain'd : while thus inform'd,
The various organs of his mimic skill,
The consonance of sounds, the featur'd rock,
The shadowy picture and impassion'd verse,
Beyond their proper powers attract the soul
By that expressive semblance, while in sight
Of nature's great original we scan
The lively child of art ; while line by line
And feature after feature we refer
To that sublime exemplar whence it stole
Those animating charms. Thus beauty's palm
Betwixt them wavering hangs : applauding love
Doubts where to choose ; and mortal man aspires
To tempt creative praise. As when a cloud
Of gathering hail with limpid crusts of ice
Enclos'd and obvious to the beaming sun,
Collects his large effulgence ; strait the heavens
With equal flames present on either hand
The radiant visage : Persia stands at gaze,
Appall'd ; and on the brink of Ganges doubts
The snowy-vested seer, in Mithra's name,
To which the fragrance of the south shall burn,
To which his warbled orisons ascend.

Such various bliss the well-tun'd heart enjoys,
Favour'd of heaven ! while, plung'd in sordid
cares,

The unfeeling vulgar mocks the boon divine :
And harsh austerity, from whose rebuke
Young love and smiling wonder shrink away

Abash'd and chill of heart, with sager frowns
 Condemns the fair enchantment. On my strain,
 Perhaps even now, some cold, fastidious judge
 Casts a disdainful eye; and calls my toil,
 And calls the love and beauty which I sing,
 The dream of folly. Thou, grave censor! say,
 Is beauty then a dream, because the glooms
 Of dullness hang too heavy on thy sense,
 To let her shine upon thee? So the man
 Whose eye ne'er open'd on the light of heaven,
 Might smile with scorn while raptur'd vision tells

Of the gay colour'd radiance flushing bright
 O'er all creation. From the wise be far
 Such gross unhallow'd pride; nor needs my song
 Descend so low; but rather now unfold,
 If human thought could reach, or words unfold,
 By what mysterious fabric of the mind,
 The deep-felt joys and harmony of sound
 Result from airy motion; and from shape
 The lovely phantoms of sublime and fair.
 By what fine ties hath God connected things
 When present in the mind, which in themselves
 Have no connection? Sure the rising sun
 O'er the cerulean convex of the sea,
 With equal brightness and with equal warmth
 Might roll his fiery orb; nor yet the soul
 Thus feel her frame expanded, and her powers
 Exulting in the splendour she beholds;
 Like a young conqueror moving through the pomp

Of some triumphal day. When join'd at eve,
 Soft-murmuring streams and gales of gentlest
 Melodious Philomela's wakeful strain [breath
 Attemper, could not man's discerning ear
 Through all its tones the sympathy pursue;
 Nor yet this breath divine of nameless joy
 Steal through his veins and fan the awaken'd
 heart,

Mild as the breeze, yet rapturous as the song?

But were not nature still endow'd at large
 With all which life requires, though unadorn'd
 With such enchantment: wherefore then her form

So exquisitely fair? her breath perfum'd
 With such ethereal sweetness? whence her voice
 Inform'd at will to raise or to repress
 The passion'd soul? and whence the robes of
 light

Which thus invest her with more lovely pomp
 Than rancy can describe? Whence but from thee
 O source divine of ever-flowing love,
 And thy unmeasur'd goodness? Not content
 With every food of life to nourish man,
 By kind illusions of the wondering sense
 Thou mak'st all nature beauty to his eye,
 Or music to his ear: well pleas'd he scans
 The goodly prospect; and with inward smiles
 Treads the gay verdure of the painted plain;
 Beholds the azure canopy of heaven,
 And living lamps that over-arch his head
 With more than regal splendour! beads his ears
 To the full choir of water, air, and earth;
 Nor heeds the pleasing error of his thought,

Nor doubts the painted green or azure arch,
 Nor questions more the music's mingling sounds
 Than space, or motion, or eternal time;
 So sweet he feels their influence to attract
 The fixed soul; to brighten the dull glooms
 Of care, and make the destin'd road of life
 Delightful to his feet. So fables tell,
 The adventurous hero, bound on hard exploits,
 Beholds with glad surprise, by secret spells
 Of some kind sage, the patron of his toils,
 A visionary paradise disclos'd
 Amid the dubious wild: with streams, and shades,

And airy songs, the enchanted landscape smiles,
 Cheers his long labours and renews his frame.

What then is taste, but these internal powers
 Active, and strong, and feelingly alive
 To each fine impulse? a discerning sense
 Of decent and sublime, with quick disgust
 From things deform'd, or disarrang'd, or gross
 In species? This, nor gems, nor stores of gold,
 Nor purple state, nor culture can bestow;
 But God alone when first his active hand
 Imprints the secret bias of the soul.
 He, mighty parent! wise and just in all,
 Free as the vital breeze or light of heaven,
 Reveals the charms of nature. Ask the swain
 Who journeys homeward from a summer day's Long labour, why forgetful of his toils
 And due repose, he loiters to behold
 The sun-shine gleaming, as through amber
 clouds,

O'er all the western sky; full soon, I ween,
 His rude expression and untutor'd airs,
 Beyond the power of language, will unfold
 The form of beauty smiling at his heart,
 How lovely! how commanding! but though
 heaven

In every breast hath sown these early seeds
 Of love and admiration, yet in vain,
 Without fair culture's kind parental aid,
 Without enlivening suns, and genial showers,
 And shelter from the blast, in vain we hope
 The tender plant should rear its blooming head,
 Or yield the harvest promis'd in its spring.
 Nor yet will every soil with equal stores
 Repay the tiller's labour; or attend
 His will, obsequious, whether to produce
 The olive or the laurel. Different minds
 Incline to different objects: one pursues
 The vast alone, the wonderful, the wild;
 Another sighs for harmony, and grace,
 And gentlest beauty. Hence when lightning fires
 The arch of heaven, and thunders rock the
 ground,

When furious whirlwinds rend the howling air,
 And ocean, groaning from its lowest bed,
 Heaves his tempestuous billows to the sky;
 Amid the mighty uproar, while below
 The nations tremble, Shakspeare looks abroad
 From some high cliff, superior, and enjoys
 The elemental war. But Waller longs,
 All on the margin of some flowery stream,
 To spread his careless limbs amid the cool

Of plantane shades, and to the listening deer
The tale of alighted vows and love's disdain
Resound soft-warbling all the live-long day:
Consenting zephyr sighs; the weeping rill
Joins in his plaint, melodious; mute the groves;
And hill and dale with all their echoes mourn.
Such and so various are the tastes of men.

Oh! blest of heaven, whom not the languid songs

Of luxury, the syren! not the bribes
Of sordid wealth, nor all the gaudy spoils
Of pageant honour can seduce to leave
Those ever-blooming sweets, which from the store

Of nature fair imagination culls
To charm the enliven'd soul! What though not
all

Of mortal offspring can attain the heights
Of envied life; though only few possess
Patrician treasures or imperial state;
Yet nature's care, to all her children just,
With richer treasures and an ampler state,
Endows at large whatever happy man
Will deign to use them. His the city's pomp,
The rural honours his. Whate'er adorns
The princely dome, the column and the arch,
The breathing marbles and the sculptur'd gold,
Beyond the proud possessor's narrow claim
His tuneful breast enjoys. For him, the spring
Distils her dews, and from the silken gem
Its lucid leaves unfolds: for him, the hand
Of autumn tinges every fertile branch
With blooming gold and blushes like the morn.
Each passing hour sheds tribute from her wings;
And still new beauties meet his lonely walk,
And loves unfelt attract him. Not a breeze
Flies o'er the meadow, not a cloud imbibes
The setting sun's effulgence, not a strain
From all the tenants of the warbling shade
Ascends, but whence his bosom can partake
Fresh pleasure, unprov'd. Nor thence partakes
Fresh pleasure only: for the attentive mind,
By this harmonious action on her powers
Becomes herself harmonious: wont so oft
In outward things to meditate the charm
Of sacred order, soon she seeks at home
To find a kindred order, to exert
Within herself this elegance of love,
This fair inspir'd delight: her temper'd powers
Refine at length, and every passion wears
A chaster, milder, more attractive mien.
But if to ampler prospects, if to gaze
On nature's form, where negligent of all
These lesser graces, she assumes the port
Of that eternal majesty that weigh'd
The world's foundations, if to these the mind
Exalts her daring eye; then mightier far Will be the change, and nobler. Would the forms

Of servile custom cramp her generous power?
Would sordid policies, the barbarous growth
Of ignorance and rapine, bow her down
To tame pursuits, to indolence and fear?

3 P

Lo! she appeals to nature, to the winds
And rolling waves, the sun's unwearied course,
The elements and seasons: all declare
For what the eternal maker has ordain'd
The powers of man: we feel within ourselves
His energy divine: he tells the heart,
He meant, he made us to behold and love
What he beholds and loves, the general orb
Of life and being; to be great like him,
Beneficent and active. Thus the men Whom nature's works can charm, with God himself

Hold converse; grow familiar, day by day,
With his conceptions act upon his plan;
And form to his, the relish of their souls.

AN EPISTLE TO CURIO.

THrice has the spring beheld thy faded fame,
And the fourth winter rises on thy shame,
Since I exulting grasp'd the votive shell,
In sounds of triumph all thy praise to tell;
Blest could my skill through ages make thee
shine,

And proud to mix my memory with thine.
But now the cause that wak'd my song before,
With praise, with triumph, crowns the toil no
more.

If to the glorious man, whose faithful cares,
Nor quell'd by malice, nor relax'd by years,
Had aw'd ambition's wild audacious hate,
And dragg'd at length corruption to her fate;
If every tongue its large applauses ow'd,
And well-earn'd laurels every muse bestow'd;
If public justice urg'd the high reward,
And freedom smil'd on the devoted bard:
Say then, to him whose levity or lust
Laid all a people's generous hopes in dust;
Who taught ambition firmer heights of power,
And sav'd corruption at her hopeless hour;
Does not each tongue its execrations owe?
Shall not each muse a wreath of shame bestow?
And public justice-sanctify the award?
And freedom's hand protect the impartial bard?

Yet long reluctant I forbore thy name,
Long watch'd thy virtue like a dying flame;
Hung o'er each glimmering spark with anxious
eyes,

And wish'd and hop'd the light again would rise.
But since thy guilt still more entire appears,
Since no art hides, no supposition clears;
Since vengeful slander now too sinks her blast,
And the first rage of party-hate is past;
Calm as the judge of truth, at length I come
To weigh thy merits, and pronounce thy doom:
So may my trust from all reproach be free,
And earth and time confirm the fair decree.

There are who say they view'd without amaze
Thy sad reverse of all thy former praise;
That through the pageants of a patriot's name,
They pierc'd the foulness of thy secret aim;
Or deem'd thy arm exalted but to throw
The public thunder on a private foe.
But I, whose soul consented to thy cause,

Who felt thy genius stamp its own applause,
 Who saw the spirits of each glorious age
 Move in thy bosom, and direct thy rage ;
 I scorn'd the ungenerous gloss of slavish minds,
 The owl-ey'd race, whom virtue's lustre-blinds.
 Spite of the learned in the ways of vice,
 And all who prove that each man has his price,
 I still believ'd thy end was just and free ;
 And yet, even yet believe it—spite of thee.
 Even though thy mouth impure has dar'd dis-
 claim,

Urg'd by the wretched impotence of shame,
 Whatever filial cares thy zeal had paid
 To laws infirm, and liberty decay'd ;
 Has begg'd ambition to forgive the show ;
 Has told corruption thou wert ne'er her foe ;
 Has boasted in thy country's awful ear,
 Her gross delusion when she held thee dear ;
 How tame she follow'd thy tempestuous call,
 And heard thy pompous tales, and trusted all—
 Rise from your sad abodes, ye curst of old
 For laws subverted, and for cities sold !
 Paint all the noblest trophies of your guilt,
 The oaths you perjur'd, and the blood you spilt ;
 Yet must you one untampt vileness own,
 One dreadful palm reserv'd for him alone :
 With studied arts his country's praise to spurn,
 To beg the infamy he did not earn,
 To challenge hate when honour was his due,
 And plead his crimes where all his virtue knew.
 Do robes of state the guarded heart enclose
 From each fair feeling human nature knows ?
 Can pompous titles stun the enchanted ear
 To all that reason, all that sense, would hear ?
 Else could'st thou e'er desert thy sacred post,
 In such unthankful baseness to be lost ?
 Else could'st thou wed the emptiness of vice,
 And yield thy glories at an idiot's price ?

When they who, loud for liberty and laws,
 In doubtful times had fought their country's cause.

When now of conquest and dominion sure,
 They sought alone to hold their fruits secure ;
 When taught by these, oppression hid the face
 To leave corruption stronger in her place,
 By silent spells to work the public fate,
 And taint the vitals of the passive state,
 Till healing wisdom should avail no more,
 And freedom loath to tread the poison'd shore ;
 Then, like some gaurdian god that flies to save
 The weary pilgrim from an instant grave.
 Whom, sleeping and secure, the guileful snake
 Steals near and nearer through the peaceful brake ;

Then Curio rose to ward the public woe,
 To wake the heedless, and incite the slow,
 Against corruption liberty to arm,
 And quell the enchantress by a mightier charm.

Swift o'er the land the fair contagion flew,
 And with thy country's hopes thy honours grew.
 Thee, patriot, the patrician roof confess'd :
 Thy powerful voice the rescued merchant bless'd ;
 Of thee with awe the rural hearth resounds ;
 The bowl to thee the grateful sailor crowns :

Touch'd in the sighing shade with manlier fires,
 To trace thy steps the love-sick youth aspires ;
 The learn'd recluse, who oft amaz'd had read
 Of Grecian heroes, Roman patriots dead,
 With new amazement hears a living name
 Pretend to share in such forgotten fame ;
 And he who, scorning courts and courtly ways,
 Left the tame tract of these dejected days,
 The life of nobler ages to renew
 In virtues sacred from a monarch's view,
 Rous'd by thy labours from the blest retreat,
 Where social ease and public passions meet,
 Again ascending treads the civil scene,
 To act and be a man, as thou hadst been.

Thus by degrees thy cause superior grew,
 And the great end appear'd at last in view :
 We heard the people in thy hopes rejoice ;
 We saw the senate bending to thy voice ;
 The friends of freedom hail'd the approaching reign

Of laws for which our fathers bled in vain ;
 While venal faction, struck with new dismay,
 Shrunk at the frown, and self-abandon'd lay.
 Wak'd in the shock, the public genius rose,
 Abash'd and keener from his long repose ;
 Sublime in ancient pride, he rais'd the spear
 Which slaves and tyrants long were wont to fear.
 The city felt his call : from man to man,
 From street to street, the glorious horror ran ;
 Each crowded haunt was stir'd beneath his power,

And, murmuring, challeng'd the deciding hour.

Lo ! the deciding hour at last appears ;
 The hour of every freeman's hopes and fears !
 Thou, genius ! guardian of the Roman name,
 O ever prompt tyrannic rage to tame !
 Instruct the mighty moments as they roll,
 And guide each movement steady to the goal.
 Ye spirits, by whose providential art
 Succeeding motives turn the changeful heart,
 Keep, keep the best in view to Curio's mind,
 And watch his fancy, and his passions bind !
 Ye shades immortal, who, by freedom led,
 Or in the field, or on the scaffold bled,
 Bend from your radiant seats a joyful eye,
 And view the crown of all your labours nigh.
 See freedom mounting her eternal throne !
 The sword submitted, and the laws her own :
 See ! public power chastis'd beneath her stands,
 With eyes intent, and uncorrupted hands !
 See private life by wisest arts reclaim'd !
 See ardent youth to noblest manners fram'd !
 See us acquire whate'er was sought by you,
 If Curio, only Curio will be true.

'Twas then—O shame ! O trust how ill repaid !
 O Latium, oft by faithless sons betray'd !—

'Twas then—What frenzy on thy reason stole ?
 What spells unsinew'd thy determin'd soul ?

—Is this the man in freedom's cause approv'd ?
 The man so great, so honour'd, so belov'd ?

This patient slave by tinsel chains allur'd ?
 This wretched suitor for a boon abjur'd ?

This Curio, hated and despis'd by all ?
 Who fell himself to work his country's fall ?

O lost, alike to action and repose !
 Unknown, unpitied in the worst of woes !
 With all that conscious, undissembled pride,
 Sold to the insults of a foe defy'd !
 With all that habit of familiar fame,
 Doom'd to exhaust the dregs of life in shame !
 The sole sad refuge of thy baffled art,
 To act a statesman's dull, exploded part,
 Renounce the praise no longer in thy power,
 Display thy virtue, though without a dower,
 Contemn the giddy crowd, the vulgar wind,
 And shut thy eyes that others may be blind.
 —Forgive me, Romans, that I bear to smile,
 When shameless mouths your majesty defile,
 Paint you a thoughtless, frantic, headlong crew,
 And cast their own impieties on you.
 For witness, freedom, to whose sacred power
 My soul was vow'd from reason's earliest hour,
 How have I stood exulting, to survey
 My country's virtues opening in thy ray !
 How, with the sons of every foreign shore
 The more I match'd them, honour'd hers the more.

O race erect ! whose native strength of soul,
 Which kings, nor priests, nor sordid laws control,

Bursts the tame round of animal affairs,
 And seeks a nobler centre for its cares ;
 Intent the laws of life to comprehend,
 And fix dominion's limits by its end.
 Who, bold and equal in their love or hate,
 By conscious reason judging every state,
 The man forget not, though in rags he lies,
 And know the mortal through a crown's disguise :
 Thence prompt alike with witty scorn to view
 Fastidious grandeur lift his solemn brow,
 Or, all awake at pity's soft command,
 Bend the mild ear, and stretch the gracious hand :

Thence large of heart, from envy far remov'd,
 When public toils to virtue stand approv'd,
 Not the young lover fonder to admire,
 Nor more indulgent the delighted sire ;
 Yet high and jealous of their free-born name
 Fierce as the flight of Jove's destroying flame,
 Where'er oppression works her wanton sway,
 Proud to confront, and dreadful to repay.
 But if, to purchase Curio's sage applause,
 My country must with him renounce her cause,
 Quit with a slave the path a patriot trod,
 Bow the meek knee, and kiss the regal rod ;
 Then still, ye powers, instruct his tongue to rail,
 Nor let his zeal, nor let his subject fail :
 Else, ere he change the style, bear me away
 To where the Gracchi*, where the Bruti stay !

O long rever'd, and late resign'd to shame !
 If this uncourtly page thy notice claim
 When the loud cares of business are withdrawn,
 Nor well-drest beggars round thy footsteps fawn ;

* The two brothers, Tiberius and Caius Gracchus, lost their lives in attempting to introduce the only regulation that could give stability to the Roman Government. L. Junius Brutus founded the commonwealth and died in its defence.—Akenside.

In that still, thoughtful, solitary hour,
 When truth exerts her unresisted power,
 Breaks the false optics ting'd with fortune's glare,

Unlocks the breast, and lays the passions bare :
 Then turn thy eyes on that important scene,
 And ask thyself—if all be well within.

Where is the heart-felt worth and weight of soul,

Which labour could not stop, nor fear control ?
 Where the known dignity, the stamp of awe,
 Which, half abash'd, the proud and venal saw ?
 Where the calm triumphs of an honest cause ?
 Where the delightful taste of just applause ?
 Where the strong reason, the commanding tongue,

On which the senate fir'd or trembling hung !
 All vanish'd, all are sold—and in their room
 Couch'd in thy bosom's deep, distracted gloom,
 See the pale form of barbarous grandeur dwell,
 Like some grim idol in a sorcerer's cell !

To her in chains thy dignity was led ;
 At her polluted shrine thy honour bled ;
 With blasted weeds thy awful brow she crown'd,
 Thy powerful tongue with poison'd philters bound,

That baffled reason straight indignant flew,
 And fair persuasion from her seat withdrew :
 For now no longer truth supports thy cause ;
 No longer glory prompts thee to applause ;
 No longer virtue breathing in thy breast,
 With all her conscious majesty confest,
 Still bright and brighter wakes the almighty flame,

To rouse the feeble, and the wilful tame,
 And where she sees the catching glimpses roll,
 Spreads the strong blaze, and all involves the soul ;
 But cold restraints thy conscious fancy chill,
 And formal passions mock thy struggling will ;
 Or, if thy genius e'er forget his chain,
 And reach impatient at a nobler strain,
 Soon the sad bodings of contemptuous mirth
 Shoot through thy breast, and stab the generous birth,

Till, blind with smart, from truth to frenzy tost,
 And all the tenor of thy reason lost,
 Perhaps thy anguish drains a real tear ;
 While some with pity, some with laughter hear.
 —Can art, alas ! or genius, guide the head,
 Where truth or freedom from the heart are fled ?
 Can lesser wheels repeat their native stroke,
 When the prime function of the soul is broke ?

But come, unhappy man ! thy fates impend ;
 Come, quit thy friends, if yet thou hast a friend ;
 Turn from the poor rewards of guilt like thine,
 Renounce thy titles, and thy robes resign ;
 For see the hand of destiny display'd
 To shut thee from the joys thou hast betray'd !
 See the dire fane of infamy arise !
 Dark as the grave, and spacious as the skies ;
 Where, from the first of time, thy kindred train,
 The chiefs and princes of the unjust remain.
 Eternal barriers guard the pathless road
 To warn the wanderer of the curst abode ;

But prone as whirlwinds scour the passive sky,
The heights surmounted, down the steep they fly.
There, black with frowns, relentless time awaits,
And goads their footsteps to the guilty gates :
And still he asks them of their unknown aims,
Evolves their secrets, and their guilt proclaims ;
And still his hands despoil them on the road
Of each vain wreath, by lying bards bestow'd,
Break their proud marbles, crush their festal cars
And rend the lawless trophies of their wars.
At last the gates his potent voice obey ;
Fierce to their dark abode he drives his prey,
Where, ever arm'd with adamant chains,
The watchful demon o'er her vassals reigns,
O'er mighty names and giant-powers of lust,
The great, the sage, the happy, and august.
No gleam of hope their baleful mansion cheers,
No sound of honour hails their unblest ears ;
But dire reproaches from the friend betray'd,
The childless sire and violated maid ;
But vengeful vows for guardian laws effac'd,
From towns enslav'd and continents laid waste ;
But long posterity's united groan,
And the sad charge of horrors not their own,
For ever through the trembling space resound,
And sink each impious forehead to the ground.

Ye mighty foes of liberty and rest,
Give way, do homage to a mightier guest !
Ye daring spirits of the Roman race,
See Curio's toil your proudest claims efface !
—Aw'd at the name, fierce Appius* rising bends,
And hardy Cinna from his throne attends :
“ He comes, they cry, to whom the fates assign'd
With surer arts to work what we design'd,
From year to year the stubborn herd to sway,
Mouth all their wrongs, and all their rage obey ;
Till, own'd their guide and trusted with their
power,

He mock'd their hopes in one decisive hour :
Then, tir'd and yielding, led them to the chain,
And quench the spirit we provok'd in vain.”
But thou, Supreme, by whose eternal hands
Fair liberty's heroic empire stands ;
Whose thunders the rebellious deep control,
And quell the triumphs of the traitor's soul,
O turn this dreadful omen far away !
On freedom's foes their own attempts repay .
Relume her sacred fire so near suppress,
And fix her shrine in every Roman breast :
Though bold corruption boast around the land,
“ Let virtue, if she can, my baits withstand !”
Though bolder now she urge the accursed claim,
Gay with her trophies rais'd on Curio's shame ;
Yet some there are who scorn her impious mirth,
Who know what conscience and a heart are worth.
—O friend and father of the human mind,
Whose art for noblest ends our frame design'd !
If I, though fated to the studious shade
Which party-strife nor anxious power invade,
If I aspire in public virtue's cause,
To guide the muses by sublimer laws,

Do thou her own authority impart,
And give my numbers entrance to the heart.
Perhaps the verse might rouse her smother'd
flame,
And snatch the fainting patriot back to fame ;
Perhaps by worthy thoughts of human kind,
To worthy deeds exalt the conscious mind ;
Or dash corruption in her proud career,
And teach her slaves that vice was born to fear.

INSCRIPTIONS.

FOR A GROTTO.

To me, whom in their lays the shepherds call
Actæa, daughter of the neighbouring stream,
This cave belongs. The fig-tree and the vine,
Which o'er the rocky entrance downward shoot,
Were plac'd by Glycon. He with cowslips pale,
Primrose, and purple lychnis, deck'd the green
Before thy threshold, and my shelving walls
With honeysuckle cover'd. Here at noon,
Lull'd by the murmur of my rising fount,
I slumber : here my clustering fruits I tend :
Or from the humid flowers, at break of day
Fresh garlands weave, and chase from all my bounds
Each thing impure or noxious. Enter in,
O stranger, undismay'd. Nor bat, nor toad
Here lurks : and if thy breast of blameless
thoughts
Approve thee, not unwelcome shalt thou tread
My quiet mansion : chiefly, if thy name
Wise Pallas and the immortal muses own.

FOR A STATUE OF CHAUCER AT WOODSTOCK.

SUCH was old CHAUCER. Such the placid mien
Of him who first with harmony inform'd
The language of our fathers. Here he dwelt
For many a cheerful day. These ancient walls
Have often heard him, while his legends blithe
He sang ; of love, or knighthood, or the wiles
Of homely life ; through each estate and age,
The fashions and the follies of the world
With cunning hand portraying. Though perchance
From Blenheim's towers, O stranger, thou art
come
Glowing with Churchill's trophies ; yet in vain
Dost thou applaud them if thy breast be cold
To him, this other hero ; who, in times
Dark and untaught, began with charming verse
To tame the rudeness of his native land.

WHOE'ER thou art whose path in summer lies
Through yonder village, turn thee where the grove
Of branching oaks a rural palace old
Imbosoms. There dwells Albert, generous lord
Of all the harvest round. And onward thence
A low plain chapel fronts the morning light
Fast by a silent rivulet. Humbly walk,
O stranger, o'er the consecrated ground ;
And on that verdant hillock, which thou see'st
Beset with osiers, let thy pious hand

* Appius Claudius the decemvir, and L. Cornelius Cinna, both attempted to establish a tyrannical dominion in Rome, and both perished by the treason.—Akenside.

Sprinkle fresh water from the brook, and strew
Sweet-smelling flowers. For there doth Edmund
rest,

The learned shepherd ; for each rural art
Fam'd, and for songs harmonious, and the woes
Of ill-requited love. The faithless pride
Of fair Matilda sank him to the grave
In manhood's prime. But soon did righteous
Heaven

With tears, with sharp remorse, and pining care,
Avenge her falsehood. Nor could all the gold,
And nuptial pomp, which lur'd her plighted faith
From Edmund to a loftier husband's home,
Relieve her breaking heart, or turn aside
The strokes of death. Go, traveller ; relate
The mournful story. Haply some fair maid
May hold it in remembrance, and be taught
That riches cannot pay for truth or love.

O YOUTHS and virgins : O declining eld :
O pale misfortune's slaves : O ye who dwell
Unknown with humble quiet ; ye who wait
In courts, or fill the golden seat of kings :
O sons of sport and pleasure : O thou wretch
That weep'st for jealous love, or the sore wounds
Of conscious guilt, or death's rapacious hand
Which left thee void of hope : O ye who roam
In exile ; ye who through the embattled field
Seek bright renown ; or who for nobler palms
Contend, the leaders of a public cause ;
Approach : behold this marble. Know ye not
The features ? Hath not oft his faithful tongue
Told you the fashion of your own estate,
The secrets of your bosom ? Here then, round
His monument with reverence while ye stand,
Say to each other : " This was SHAKESPEARE'S
form ;

Who walk'd in every path of human life,
Felt every passion ; and to all mankind
Doth now, will ever, that experience yield
Which his own genius only could acquire."

FOR A COLUMN AT RUNNYMEDE.

THOU, who the verdant plain dost traverse here,
While Thames among his willows from thy view
Retires ; O stranger, stay thee, and the scene
Around contemplate well. ' This is the place
Where England's ancient barons, clad in arms
And stern with conquest, from their tyrant king
(Then render'd tame) did challenge and secure
The charter of thy freedom. Pass not on Till thou hast blest their memory, and paid
Those thanks which God appointed the reward
Of public virtue. And if chance thy home
Salute thee with a father's honour'd name,
Go, call thy sons : instruct them what a debt
They owe their ancestors ; and make them swear
To pay it, by transmitting down entire Those sacred rights to which themselves were born.

THE WOOD-NYMPH.

APPROACH in silence. 'Tis no vulgar tale
Which I, the Dryad of this hoary oak,

Pronounce to mortal ears. The second age
Now hasteneth to its period, since I rose
On this fair lawn. The groves of yonder vale
Are all my offspring : and each nymph, who guards

The copses and the furrow'd fields beyond,
Obeys me. Many changes have I seen
In human things, and many awful deeds
Of justice, when the ruling hand of Jove
Against the tyrants of the land, against
The unhallow'd sons of luxury and guile,
Was arm'd for retribution. Thus at length
Expert in laws divine, I know the paths
Of wisdom, and erroneous folly's end
Have oft presag'd : and now well-pleas'd I wait
Each evening till a noble youth, who loves
My shade, awhile releas'd from public cares,
Yon peaceful gate shall enter, and sit down
Beneath my branches. Then his musing mind
I prompt, unseen ; and place before his view
Sincerest forms of good ; and move his heart
With the dread bounties of the Sire Supreme
Of gods and men, with freedom's generous deeds,
The lofty voice of glory and the faith
Of sacred friendship. Stranger, I have told
My function. If within thy bosom dwell Aught which may challenge praise, thou wilt not leave

Unhonour'd my abode, nor shall I hear
A sparing benediction from thy tongue.

Ye powers unseen, to whom the bards of Greece
Erected altars ; ye who to the mind
More lofty views unfold, and prompt the heart
With more divine emotions ; if erewhile
Not quite displeasing have my votive rites
Of you been deem'd, when oft this lonely seat
To you I consecrated ; then vouchsafe
Here with your instant energy to crown
My happy solitude. It is the hour
When most I love to invoke you, and have felt
Most frequent your glad ministry divine.
The air is calm : the sun's unveiled orb
Shines in the middle heaven. The harvest round
Stands quiet, and among the golden sheaves
The reapers lie reclin'd. The neighbouring groves

Are mute ; nor even a linnet's random strain
Echoeth amid the silence. Let me feel
Your influence, ye kind powers. Aloft in heaven
Abide ye ? or on those transparent clouds
Pass ye from hill to hill ? or on the shades
Which yonder elms cast o'er the lake below
Do you converse retir'd ? From what lov'd haunt Shall I expect you ? Let me once more feel
Your influence, O ye kind inspiring powers,
And I will guard it well, nor shall a thought
Rise in my mind, nor shall a passion move
Across my bosom unobserv'd, unstor'd
By faithful memory. And then at some
More active moment, will I call them forth
Anew ; and join them in majestic forms,
And give them utterance in harmonious strains ;
That all mankind shall wonder at your sway.

CHATTERTON.

Born 1752.—Died 1770.

BRISTOWE TRAGEDIE ;

OR, THE DETHE OF SYR CHARLES BAWDIN.

THE featherd songster chaunticleer
 Han wounde hys bugle horne,
 And tolde the earlie villager
 The commynge of the morne :

Kynge Edward sawe the ruddie streakes
 Of lyghte eclipse the greie ;
 And herde the raven's crokyng throte
 Proclayme the fated daie.

"Thou 'rt ryghte," quoth he, "for, by the Godde
 That syttes enthron'd on hyghe !
 Charles Bawdin, and hys fellowes twaine,
 To daie shall surelie die."

Thenne wythe a jugge of nappy ale
 Hys knyghtes dydd onne hymm waite ;
 "Goe tell the traytour, thatt to-daie
 Hee leaves thys mortall state."

Syr Canterlone thenne bendedd lowe,
 Wythe harte brymm-fulle of woe ;
 Hee journey'd to the castle-gate,
 And to Syr Charles dydd goe.

But whenne he came, hys children twaine,
 And eke hys lovyng wife,
 Wythe brinie tears dydd wett the floore,
 For goode Syr Charleses lyfe.

"O goode Syr Charles !" sayd Canterlone,
 "Badde tydyngs I doe brynge."
 "Speke boldlie, manne," sayd brave Syr Charles,
 "Whatte says the traytour kynge ?"

"I greeve to telle : before yonne sonne
 Does fromme the welkinn flye,
 Hee hath uppone hys honour sworne,
 Thatt thou shalt surelie die."

"We all must die," quod brave Syr Charles ;
 "Of thatte I'm not affearde ;
 Whatte bootes to lyve a little space ?
 Thanke Jesu, I'm prepar'd :

"Butt telle thye kynge, for mÿne hee's not,
 I'de sooner die to-daye,
 Thanne lyve hys slave, as manie are,
 Though I shoulde lyve for aie."

Then Canterlone hee dydd goe out,
 To telle the maior straites
 To gett all thynges ynn reddyness
 For goode Syr Charleses fate.

Thenne Maister Canynge saughte the kynge,
 And felle down onne hys knee ;
 "I'm come," quod hee, "unto your grace
 To move your clemencye."

"Thenne," quod the kynge, "Yours tale speke
 You have been much oure friende ; [out,
 Whatever youre request may bee,
 We wylle to ytte attende."

"My nobile leige ! alle my request
 Ys for a nobile knyghte,
 Who, though may hap hee has donne wronge,
 He thoughte ytte styлле was ryghte :

"He has a sponse and children twaine ;
 Alle rewyn'd are for aie,
 Yff that you are resolv'd to lett
 Charles Bawdin die to-daie."

"Speke not of such a traytour vile,"
 The kynge ynn furie sayde ;
 "Before the evening starre doth sheene,
 Bawdin shall loose hys hedde :

"Justice does loudlie for hym calle,
 And hee shalle have hys meede :
 Speke, Maister Canynge ! whatte thyng else
 Att present doe you neede ?"

"My nobile leige !" goode Canynge sayde,
 "Leave justice to our Godde,
 And lay the yronne rule asyde ;
 Be thyne the olyve rodde.

"Was Godde to serche our hertes and reines,
 The best were synners grete ;
 Christ's vycarr only knowes us synne,
 Ynne all thys mortal state.

"Lett mercie rule thyne infante reigne,
 'Twylle faste thy crowne full sure ;
 From race to race thye familie
 Alle sov'reigns shall endure :

"But yff wythe bloode and slaughter thou
 Beginne thy infante reigne,
 Thy crowne upponne thy childrennes brows
 Wylle never long remayne."

"Canynge, awaie ! thys traytour vile
 Has scorn'd my power and mee ;
 Howe canst thou then for such a manne
 Entreate my clemencye ?"

"Mie nobile leige ! the trulie brave
 Wylle val'rous actions prize,
 Respect a brave and nobile mynde,
 Although ynne enemies."

"Canynge, awaie ! By Godde ynne Heav'n,
 Thatt dydd mee beinge gyve,
 I wylle nott taste a bitt of breade
 Whilst thys Syr Charles dothe lyve.

"By Marie and alle Seinctes ynne Heav'n, Thys sunne shall be hys laste."
Thenne Canynge dropt a brinie teare
And from the presence paste.

Wyth herte brymm-fulle of gnawyng grief,
Hee to Syr Charles dydd goe,
And sat hymm downe uponne a stoole,
And teares beganne to flowe.

"We all must die," quod brave Syr Charles ;
"Whatte bootes ytte howe or whenne ;
Dethe ys the sure, the certaine fate
Of all wee mortall menne.

"Say why, my friende, thie honest soul
Runns over att thynne eye ;
Is ytte for my most welcome doome
Thatt thou dost child-lyke crye ?"

Quod godlie Canynge, "I doe weepe,
Thatt thou so soone must dye,
And leave thy sonnes and helpless wyfe ;
"Tys thys thatt wettes myne eye."

"Thenne drie the tears thatt out thynne eye
From godlie fountaines sprynge ;
Dethe I despise, and alle the power
Of Edward, traytour kynge.

"Whan through the tyrant's welcom means
I shall resigne my lyfe,
The Godde I serve wylle soone provyde
For bothe mye sonnes and wyfe.

"Before I sawe the lyghtsome sunne,
Thys was appointed mee ;
Shall mortall manne repyne or grudge
Wha Godde ordeynes to bee ?

"Howe oft ynne battaile have I stooode,
Whan thousands dy'd arounde ;
Whan smokyng streemes of crimson bloode
Imbrew'd the fatten'd grounde :

"Howe dydd I knowe thatt ev'ry darte,
Thatt cutte the airie waie,
Myghte nott finde passage toe my harte,
And close myne eyes for aie ?

"And shall I nowe forr feere of dethe,
Look wanne and be dysmayde ?
Ne ! fromm my herte fie childyshe feere ;
Bee alle the manne display'd.

"Ah, godde-lyke Henrie ; Godde forefend,
And garde thee and thye sonne,
Yff 'tis hys wylle ; but yff 'tis nott,
Why thenne hys wylle bee donne.

"My honest friende, my faulte has beene
To serve Godde and mye prynce ;
And thatt I no tyme-server am,
My dethe wylle soone convynce.

"Ynne Londonne citey was I borne,
Of parents of grete note ;
My fadre dydd a nobile armes
Emblazon onne hys cote :

"I make ne doubtte butt hee ys gone,
Where soone I hope to goe ;
Where wee for ever shall bee blest,
From oute the reech of woe.

"Hee taughte mee justice and the laws
Wyth pitie to unite ;
And eke hee taughte mee howe to knowe
The wronge cause from the ryghte :

"Hee taughte mee wyth a prudent hande
To feede the hungrie poore,
Ne lett mye sarvants dryve awaie
The hungrie fromm my doore :

"And none can saye but alle my lyfe
I have hys wordyes kept ;
And summ'd the actyonns of the daie
Eche nyghte before I slept.

"I have a spouse, goe ask of her
Yff I defyl'd her bedde ?
I have a kynge, and none can laie
Black treason onne my hedde.

"Ynne Lent, and onne the holie eve,
Fromm fleshe I dydd refrayne ;
Whie should I thenne appeare dismay'd
To leave thys worlde of payne ?

"Ne, hapless Henrie ! I rejoyce
I shall ne see thy dethe ;
Most willynglie ynne thye just cause
Doe I resign my brethe.

"Oh, fickle people ! rewyn'd londe !
Thou wylt kenne peyne ne moe :
Whyle Richard's sonnes exalt themselves,
Thye brookes wythe bloude wyll flowe.

"Saie, were ye tyr'd of godlie peace,
And godlie Henrie's reigne,
Thatt you dydd choppe your easie daies
For those of bloude and peyne ?

"Whatte though I onne a sledde be drawne,
And mangled by a hynde,
I doe defye the traytour's pow'r,
Hee can ne harm my mynde ;

"Whatte though, uphoisted onne a pole,
Mye lymbes shall rotte ynne ayre,
And ne ryche monument of brasse
Charles Bawdin's name shall bear ;

"Yett ynne the holie book above,
Whyche tyme can't eate awaie,
There wythe the sarvants of the Lord
Mye name shall lyve for aie.

"Thenne welcome dethe! for lyfe eterne
I leave thys mortall lyfe:
Farewell vayne worlde, and all that's deare,
Mye sonnes and lovyng wyfe!

"Nowe dethe as welcom to mee comes
As e'er the moneth of Maie:
Nor woulde I even wyshe to lyve,
Wyth my dere wyfe to staie."

Quod Canynge, "'Tys a goodlie thyng
To bee prepar'd to die;
And from thys worlde of payne and greife
To Godde ynne Heav'n to fle."

And nowe the belle began to tolle,
And claryonnes to sound;
Syr Charles hee herd the horses feete
A prauncyng onne the grounde:

And just before the officers
His lovyne wyfe came ynne,
Weepyng unfeigned teers of woe.
Wyth loude and dysmalle dynne.

"Sweet Florence! nowe I praie forbere,
Ynn quiet lett mee die;
Praie Godde that ev'ry Christian soule
Maye looke onne dethe as I.

"Sweet Florence! why these brinie teers?
Theye washe my soule awaie,
And almost make mee wyshe for lyfe,
With thee, sweete dame, to staie.

"'Tys butt a journie I shall goe
Untoe the lande of blysse;
Nowe, as a prooffe of husbände's love,
Receive thys holie kysse."

Thenne Florence, fault'ring ynne her saie,
Tremblyng these wordyes spoke,
Ah, cruele Edward! bloudie kyng!
Mye herte ys welle nyghe broke:

"Ah, sweete Syr Charles! why wyll thou goe
Wythoute thy lovyng wyfe?
The cruelle axe that cuttes thye necke,
Ytte eke shall ende mye lyfe."

And nowe the officers came ynne
To brynge Syr Charles awaie,
Whoe turnedd toe hys lovyng wyfe,
And thus to her dydd saie:

"I goe to lyfe, and nott to dethe:
Truste thou ynne Godde above,
And teache thy sonnes to fear the Lorde,
And ynne theyre hertes hym love:

"Teache them to runne the nobile race
Thatt I theyre fader runne;
Florence! shou'd dethe thee take—adieu!
Yee officers leade onne."

Thenne Florence rav'd as anie madde,
And dydd her tresses tere;
"Oh staie my husbände, lorde, and lyfe!"—
Syr Charles thenne dropt a teare.

"Tyll tyredd oute wythe ravyng loude,
Shee fellen onne the flore;
Syr Charles exerted alle hys myghte,
And march'd fromm oute the dore.

Uponne a sledde hee mounted thenne,
Wythe lookes fulle brave and swete;
Lookes thatt enshone ne moe concern
Thanne anie ynne the strete.

Before hym went the council-menne,
Ynne scarlett robes and golde,
And tassils spanglyng ynne the sunne,
Muche glorious to beholde:

The Freers of Seincte Augustyne next
Appere'd to the syghte,
Alle cladd ynne homelie russett weedes,
Of godlie monkysh plyghte:

Ynne diffraunt partes a godlie psaume
Moste sweetlie theye dyd chaunt;
Behynde theyre backes syx mynstrelles came,
Who tun'd the strunge bataunt.

Thenne fyve-and-twenty archers came;
Echone the bowe dydd hende,
From rescue of Kyng Henries friends,
Syr Charles forr to defend.

Bolde as a lyon came Syr Charles,
Drawne onne a clothe-layde sledde,
Bye two blacke stedes ynne trappyns white,
Wythe plumes uponne theyre hedde:

Behynde hym fyve-and-twenty moe
Of archers stronge and stoute,
Wyth bended bowe echone ynne hande
Marched ynne goodlie route:

Seincte Jameses Freers marched next,
Echone hys parte dydd chaunt:
Behynde theyre backes syx mynstrelles came,
Who tun'd the strunge bataunt:

Thenne came the maior and eldermenne,
Ynne clothe of scarlett deck't;
And theyre attendyng menne echone,
Lyke easterne princes trick't:

And after them a multitude
Of citizenns dydd thronge;
The wyndowes were alle fulle of heddes,
As hee dydd passe alonge.

And whenne hee came to the hyghe crosse,
Syr Charles dydd turne and saie,
"O thou thatt savest manne fromme synne,
Washye mye soule clean thys daie!"

Att the grete mynster wyndowe sat
The kynge ynne myckle state,
To see Charles Bawdin goe alonge
To hys most welcom fate.

Soone as the sledde drewe nyghe enowe,
Thatt Edwarde hee myghte heare,
The brave Syr Charles hee dydd stande uppe,
And thus hys wordes declare :

"Thou seest me, Edwarde! traytour vile!
Expos'd to infamie;
Butt bee assur'd, disloyall manne!
I'm greaterr nowe thanne thee.

"Bye foule procedyngs, murdre, bloude,
Thou wearest nowe a crowne;
And hast appoynted mee to die,
By power nott thyne owne.

"Thou thynkest I shall die to-daie;
I have beene dede till nowe,
And soone shall lyve to wear a crowne
For sie uponne my browe:

"Whylst thou, perhapps, for som few yeares,
Shalt rule thys fickle lande,
To lett them knowe howe wyde the rule
Twixt kynge and tyrant hande:

"Thye pow'r unjust, thou traytour slave!
Shall falle onne thye owne hedde"—
Fromm out of hearyng of the kynge
Departed thenne the sledde.

Kynge Edwarde's soule rush'd to hys face,
He turn'd his hedde awaie,
And to hys broder Gloucester
Hee thus dydd speke and saie:

"To hym that soe-much-dreaded dethe
Ne ghastlie terrors brynge,
Beholde the manne! hee spake the truthe,
Hee's greater thanne a kynge!"

"Soe lett hym die!" Duke Richarde sayde;
"And maye echone oure foes
Bende downe theyre neckes to bloudie axe,
And feede the carryon crows."

And nowe the horses gentlie drewe
Syr Charles uppe the hyghe hylle:
The axe dydd glysterr ynne the sunne,
His pretious bloude to spylle.

Syr Charles dydd uppe the scaffold goe.
As uppe a gilded carre
Of victorye, bye val'rous chiefs
Gayn'd yune the bloudie warre:

And to the people hee dyd saie:
"Beholde you see mee dye,
For servynge loyally mye kynge,
Mye kynge most rightfullie.

"As longe as Edwarde rules thys lande,
Ne quiet you wylle knowe:
Your sonnes and husbandes shalle hee slayne,
And brookes wythe bloude shalle flowe.

"You leave your goode and lawfulle kynge,
Whenne yune adversytye;
Lyke mee, untoe the true cause stycke,
And for the true cause dye."

Thenne hee, with preestes, uponne hys knees,
A pray'r to Godde dyd make.
Beseechynge hym unto hymselfe
Hys partynge soule to take.

Thenne, kneelynge downe, hee layd hys hedde
Most seemlie onne the blocke;
Whyche fromme hys bodie fayre at once
The able heddies-manne stroke:

And oute the bloude beganne to flowe,
And rounde the scaffold twyne;
And teares, enow to washe't awaie,
Dydd flowe fromme each mann's eyne.

The bloudie axe his bodie fayre
Ynnto foure partes cutte;
And ev'rye parte, and eke hys hedde,
Uponne a pole was putte.

One parte dyd rotte onne Kynwulph-hylle,
One onne the mynster-tower,
And one from off the castle-gate
The crowen dydd devoure:

The other onne Seyncte Powle's goodo gate,
A dreery spectacle;
Hys hedde was plac'd onne the hyghe crosse,
Yune hyghe-streete most nobile.

Thus was the ende of Bawdin's fate:
Godde prosper longe oure kynge,
And grante hee maye, wyth Bawdin's soule,
Yune Heav'n Godde's mercie synge!

THOMAS GRAY.

Born 1716.—Died 1771.

ODE ON A DISTANT PROSPECT OF ETON COLLEGE.

YE distant spires, ye antique towers,
That crown the wat'ry glade,
Where grateful science still adores
Her Henry's * holy shade;
And ye, that from the stately brow
Of Windsor's heights th' expanse below
Of grove, of lawn, of mead survey,
Whose turf, whose shade, whose flowers among Wanders the hoary Thames along
His silver-winding way:

* King Henry the Sixth, founder of the College.

Ah, happy hills! ah, pleasing shade!
 Ah, fields belov'd in vain!
 Where once my careless childhood stray'd,
 A stranger yet to pain!
 I feel the gales that from yè blow
 A momentary bliss bestow,
 As waving fresh their gladsome wing,
 My weary soul they seem to sooth,
 And, redolent of joy and youth,
 To breathe a second spring.

Say, father Thames, for thou hast seen
 Full many a sprightly race
 Disporting on thy margent green,
 The paths of pleasure trace;
 Who foremost now delight to cleave
 With pliant arm, thy glassy wave?
 The captive lianet which enthrall?
 What idle progeny succeed
 To chase the rolling circle's speed,
 Or urge the flying ball?

While some on earnest business bent,
 Their murmuring labours ply
 'Gainst graver hours that bring constraint
 To sweeten liberty:
 Some bold adventurers disdain
 The limits of their little reign,
 And unknown regions dare descry:
 Still as they run they look behind,
 They hear a voice in every wind,
 And snatch a fearful joy.

Gay hope is theirs by fancy fed,
 Less pleasing when possess'd;
 The tear forgot as soon as shed,
 The sunshine of the breast:
 Theirs buxom health, of rosy hue,
 Wild wit, invention ever new,
 And lively cheer, of vigour born;
 The thoughtless day, the easy night,
 The spirits pure, the slumbers light,
 That fly th' approach of morn.

Alas! regardless of their doom,
 The little victims play;
 No sense have they of ills to come,
 Nor care beyond to-day:
 Yet see, how all around'em wait
 The ministers of human fate,
 And black misfortune's baleful train!
 Ah, show them where in ambush stand,
 To seize their prey, the murderous band!
 Ah, tell them they are men!

These shall the fury passions tear,
 The vultures of the mind,
 Disdainful anger, pallid fear,
 And shame that skulks behind;
 Or pining love shall waste their youth,
 Or jealousy, with rankling tooth,
 That inly gnaws the secret heart;
 And envy wait, and faded care,
 Grim-~~stare~~ tag'd comfortless despair,
 And sorrow's piercing dart.

Ambition this shall tempt to rise,
 Then whirl the wretch from high,
 To bitter scorn a sacrifice,
 And grinning infamy.
 The stings of falsehood those shall try
 And hard unkindness' alter'd eye,
 That mocks the tear it forc'd to flow;
 And keen remorse, with blood defil'd,
 And moody madness laughing wild
 Amid severest woe.

Lo! in the vale of years beneath,
 A grisly troop are seen,
 The painful family of death,
 More hideous than their queen:
 This racks the joints, this fires the veins,
 That every labouring sinew strains,
 Those in the deeper vitals rage.
 Lo! Poverty, to fill the band,
 That numbs the soul with icy hand,
 And slow-consuming age.

To each his sufferings: all are men,
 Condemn'd alike to groan;
 The tender for another's pain,
 Th' unfeeling for his own.
 Yet, ah! why should they know their fate,
 Since sorrow never comes too late,
 And happiness too swiftly flies?
 Thought would destroy their paradise.
 No more;—where ignorance is bliss,
 'Tis folly to be wise.

ODE TO ADVERSITY.

DAUGHTER of Jove, relentless power,
 Thou tamer of the human breast,
 Whose iron scourge and tort'ring hour
 The bad affright, afflict the best!
 Bound in thy adamant chain,
 The proud are taught to taste of pain,
 And purple tyrants vainly groan
 With pangs unfelt before, unpitied and alone.

When first thy sire to send on earth
 Virtue, his darling child, design'd,
 To thee he gave the heav'nly birth,
 And bade to form her infant mind.
 Stern rugged nurse! thy rigid lore
 With patience many a year she bore:
 What sorrow was, thou bad'st her know,
 And from her own she learn'd to melt at other's woe.

Scar'd at thy frown terrific, fly
 Self-pleasing folly's idle troop,
 Wild laughter, noise, and thoughtless joy,
 And leave us leisure to be good.
 Light they disperse, and with them go
 The summer friend, the flatt'ring foe;
 By vain prosperity receiv'd,
 To her they vow their truth, and are again be-liev'd.

Wisdom in sable garb array'd,
 Immers'd in rapt'rous thought profound,
 And melancholy, silent maid,
 With leaden eye that loves the ground,
 Still on thy solemn steps attend :
 Warm charity, the gen'ral friend,
 With justice, to herself severe,
 And pity, dropping soft the sadly-pleasing tear.

Oh ! gently on thy suppliant's head,
 Dread goddess, lay thy chast'ning hand !
 Not in thy Gorgon terrors clad,
 Not circled with the vengeful band
 (As by the impious thou art seen)
 With thund'ring voice, and threat'ning mien,
 With screaming horror's fun'ral cry,
 Despair, and fell disease, and ghastly poverty :

Thy form benign, oh goddess, wear,
 Thy milder influence impart,
 Thy philosophic train be there
 To soften, not to wound my heart.
 The gen'rous spark extinct revive,
 Teach me to love, and to forgive,
 Exact my own defects to scan,
 What others are to feel, and know myself a man.

THE PROGRESS OF POESY.

A Pindaric Ode.

I. 1.

AWAKE, Æolian lyre, awake,
 And give to rapture all thy trembling strings.
 From Helicon's harmonious springs

A thousand rills their mazy progress take :
 The laughing flow'rs that round them blow,
 Drink life and fragrance as they flow.
 Now the rich stream of music winds along,
 Deep, majestic, smooth and strong,
 Through verdant vales, and Ceres' golden
 reign :

Now rolling down the steep amain,
 Headlong, impetuous, see it pour :
 The rocks and nodding groves re-bellow to the roar.

I. 2.

Oh ! Sov'reign of the willing soul,
 Parent of sweet and solemn-breathing airs,
 Enchanting shell ! the sullen cares
 And frantic passions hear thy soft control,
 On Thracia's hills the Lord of War
 Has curb'd the fury of his car,
 And dropp'd his thirsty lance at thy command.
 Perching on the sceptred hand
 Of Jove, thy magic lulls the feather'd king
 With ruffled plumes and flagging wing :
 Quench'd in dark clouds of slumber lie
 The terror of his beak, and light'nings of his eye.

I. 3.

Thee the voice, the dance, obey,
 Temper'd to thy warbled lay.
 O'er Idalia's velvet green
 The rosy-crowned loves are seen
 On Cytherea's day
 With antic sport, and blue-eyed pleasures,
 Frisking light in frolic measures ;
 Now pursuing, now retreating,
 Now in circling troops they meet :
 To brisk notes in cadence beating,
 Glance their many-twinkling feet.
 Slow melting strains their queen's approach declare :
 Where'er she turns, the graces homage pay.
 With arms sublime, that float upon the air,
 In gliding state she wins her easy way :
 O'er her warm cheek, and rising bosom, move
 The bloom of young desire and purple light
 of love.

II. 1.

Man's feeble race what ills await !
 Labour, and penury, the racks of pain,
 Disease, and sorrow's weeping train,
 And death, sad refuge from the storms of
 fate !

The fond complaint, my song, disprove,
 And justify the laws of Jove.
 Say, has he giv'n in vain the heav'nly Muse ?
 Night and all her sickly dews,
 Her spectres wan, and birds of boding cry,
 He gives to range the dreary sky ;
 Till down the eastern cliffs afar
 Hyperion's march they spy, and glitt'ring shafts of war.

II. 2.

In climes beyond the solar road,
 Where shaggy forms o'er ice-built mountains
 roam,
 The Muse has broke the twilight gloom
 To cheer the shiv'ring native's dull abode.
 And oft, beneath the od'rous shade
 Of Chili's boundless forests laid,
 Shedeigns to hear the savage youth repeat,
 In loose numbers wildly sweet,
 Their feather-cinctur'd chiefs, and dusky loves.
 Her track, where'er the goddess roves,
 Glory pursue, and gen'rous shame,
 Th' unconquerable mind, and freedom's holy flame.

II. 3.

Woods, that wave o'er Delphi's steep,
 Isles that crown th' Ægean deep,
 Fields, that cool Ilissus laves
 Or where Mæander's amber waves
 In lingering lab'rins creep,
 How do your tuneful echoes languish,
 Mute, but to the voice of anguish !
 Where each old poetic mountain
 Inspiration breath'd around ;
 Ev'ry shade and hallow'd fountain
 Murmur'd deep a solemn sound :
 Till the sad Nine, in Greece's evil hour,
 Left their Parnassus for the Latian plains,

Alike they scorn the pomp of tyrant power,
And coward vice, that revels in her chains.
When Latium had her lofty spirit lost,
They sought, oh Albion! next thy sea-encircled coast.

III. 1.

Far from the sun and summer gale,
In thy green lap was Nature's darling laid,
What time, where lucid Avon stray'd,
To him the mighty mother did unveil
Her awful face: the dauntless child
Stretch'd forth his little arms and smil'd.
"This pencil take (she said), whose colours
clear
Richly paint the vernal year:
Thine too these golden keys, immortal boy!
This can unlock the gates of joy;
Of horror that, and thrilling fears,
Or ope the sacred source of sympathetic tears."

III. 2.

Nor second He, that rode sublime
Upon the seraph wings of ecstasy,
The secrets of th' abyss to spy,
He pass'd the flaming bounds of place and
time:
The living throne, the sapphire blaze,
Where angels tremble while they gaze,
He saw; but, blasted with excess of light,
Clos'd his eyes in endless night.
Behold, where Dryden's less presumptuous car
Wide o'er the fields of glory bear
Two coursers of ethereal race,
With necks in thunder cloth'd and long-resounding pace.

III. 3.

Hark, his hands the lyre explore!
Bright-eyed fancy, hov'ring o'er,
Scatters from her pictur'd urn
Thoughts that breathe, and words that burn.
But ah! 'tis heard no more—
Oh! lyre divine, what daring spirit
Wakes thee now? Though he inherit
Nor the pride, nor ample punion,
That the Theban eagle bear,
Sailing with supreme dominion
Through the azure deep of air:
Yet oft before his infant eyes would run
Such forms as glitter in the Muse's ray,
With orient hues, unborrow'd of the sun:
Yet shall he mount, and keep his distant
way
Beyond the limits of a vulgar fate,
Beneath the good how far—but far above the great.

Ver. 95. Nor second He, that rode sublime] MILTON.
Ver. 96. The living throne, the sapphire blaze] "For the spirit of the living creature was in the wheels. And above the firmament, that was over their heads, was the likeness of a throne, as the appearance of a sapphire stone. This was the appearance of the glory of the Lord." ESK. i. 20, 26, 28.

THE BARD.

A Pindaric Ode.

This Ode is founded on a tradition current in Wales, that Edward the First, when he completed the conquest of that country, ordered all the Bards that fell into his hands to be put to death.

I. 1.

"Ruin seize thee, ruthless King!
Confusion on thy banners wait;
Though fann'd by conquest's crimson wing,
They mock the air with idle state.
Helm, nor hauberk's twisted mail
Nor e'en thy virtues, tyrant, shall avail
To save thy secret soul from nightly fears,
From Cambria's curse, from Cambria's tears!"
Such were the sounds that o'er the crested
pride

Of the first Edward scatter'd wild dismay,
As down the steep of Snowdon's shaggy side
He wound with toilsome march his long array.

Stout Glo'ster stood aghast in speechless trance:

"To arms!" cried Mortimer, and couch'd his quiv'ring lance.

I. 2.

On a rock, whose haughty brow
Frowns o'er old Conway's foaming flood,
Robed in the sable garb of woe,
With haggard eyes the poet stood;
(Loose his beard, and hoary hair,
Stream'd, like a meteor, to the troubled air)
And with a master's hand, and prophet's fire,
Struck the deep sorrows of his lyre.
"Hark, how each giant-oak, and desert cave,
Sighs to the torrent's awful voice beneath!
O'er thee, oh king! their hundred arms they wave,

Revenge on thee in hoarser murmurs
breathe;

Vocal no more, since Cambria's fatal day,
To high-born Hoel's harp, or soft Llewellyn's lay.

I. 3.

"Cold is Cadwallo's tongue,
That hush'd the stormy main:
Brave Urien sleeps upon his craggy bed:
Mountains, ye mourn in vain
Modred, whose magic song
Made huge Plinlimmon bow his cloud-topt
head.

Ver. 5. Helm, nor hauberk's twisted mail] The hauberk was a texture of steel ringlets, or rings interwoven, forming a coat of mail that sat close to the body, and adapted itself to every motion.

Ver. 11. — of Snowdon's shaggy side] Snowdon was a name given by the Saxons to that mountainous tract: it included all the highlands of Caernarvonshire and Merionethshire, as far east as the river Conway.

Ver. 13. Stout Glo'ster] Gilbert de Clare, surnamed the Red, Earl of Gloucester and Hertford; married at Westminster, May 2, 1290, to Joan de Acres or Acom (so called from having been born at Acom in the Holy Land) second daughter of King Edward. He died 1295.

Ver. 14. "To arms!" cried Mortimer] Edmond de Mortimer, Lord of Wigmore.

"They both were Lords-Marchers, whose lands lay on the borders of Wales, and probably accompanied the king in this expedition.

On dreary Arvon's shore they lie,
 Smear'd with gore, and ghastly pale :
 Far, far aloof th' affrighted ravens sail ;
 The famish'd eagle screams, and passes by.
 Dear lost companions of my tuneful art,
 Dear as the light that visits these sad eyes,
 Dear as the ruddy drops that warm my heart,
 Ye died amidst your dying country's cries—
 No more I weep. They do not sleep.
 On yonder cliffs, a grisly band,
 I see them sit, they linger yet,
 Avengers of their native land :
 With me in dreadful harmony they join,
 And weave with bloody hands the tissue of thy line.

II. 1.

" Weave the warp, and weave the woof,
 The winding-sheet of Edward's race.
 Give ample room, and verge enough
 The characters of hell to trace.
 Mark the year, and mark the night,
 When Severn shall re-echo with affright
 The shrieks of death, through Berkley's roof that ring,
 Shrieks of an agonizing king !
 She-wolf of France, with unrelenting fangs,
 That tearst the bowels of thy mangled mate,
 From thee be born, who o'er thy country hangs
 The scourge of Heav'n. What terrors round him wait !
 Amazement in his van, with flight combin'd,
 And sorrow's faded form, and solitude behind.

II. 2.

" Mighty victor, mighty lord !
 Low on his funeral couch he lies !
 No pitying heart, no eye, afford
 A tear to grace his obsequies.
 Is the sable warrior fled ?
 Thy son is gone. He rests among the dead.
 The swarm, that in thy noontide beam were
 born ?
 Gone to salute the rising morn.
 Fair laughs the morn, and soft the zephyr
 blows,
 While proudly riding o'er the azure realm
 In gallant trim the gilded vessel goes ;
 Youth on the prow, and pleasure at the helm ;
 Regardless of the sweeping whirlwind's sway,
 That, hush'd in grim repose, expects his ev'ning prey.

Ver. 35. On dreary Arvon's shore they lie] The shores of Caernarvonshire opposite to the isle of Anglesey.

Ver. 55. The shrieks of death, through Berkley's roof that ring] Edward the Second, cruelly butchered in Berkley Castle.

Ver. 57. She-wolf of France] Isabel of France, Edward the Second's adulterous queen.

Ver. 60. The scourge of Heav'n] Triumphs of Edward the Third in France.

Ver. 64. Low on his funeral couch he lies] Death of that king, abandoned by his children, and even robbed in his last moments by his courtiers and his mistress.

Ver. 67. Is the sable warrior fled] Edward the Black Prince dead some time before his father.

Ver. 71. Fair laughs the morn, and soft the zephyr blows] Magnificence of Richard the second's reign. See Froussat, and other contemporary writers.

II. 3.

" Fill high the sparkling bowl,
 The rich repast prepare,
 Reft of a crown, he yet may share the feast :
 Close by the regal chair
 Fell thirst and famine scowl
 A baleful smile upon their baffled guest.
 Heard ye the din of battle bray,
 Lance to lance, and horse to horse ?
 Long years of havoc urge their destin'd
 course,
 And through the kindred squadrons mow their
 way.
 Ye towers of Julius, London's lasting shame,
 With many a foul and midnight murder fed,
 Revere his consort's faith, his father's fame,
 And spare the meek usurper's holy head.
 Above, below, the rose of snow,
 Twin'd with her blushing foe, we spread :
 The bristled boar in infant-gore
 Wallows beneath the thorny shade.
 Now, brothers, bending o'er th' accursed loom,
 Stamp we our vengeance deep, and ratify his doom.

III. 1.

" Edward, lo ! to sudden fate
 (Weave we the woof. The thread is spun)
 Half of thy heart we consecrate.
 (The web is wove. The work is done.)
 Stay, oh stay ! nor thus forlorn
 Leave me unblest'd, unpitied, here to mourn :
 In yon bright track, that fires the western
 skies,
 They melt, they vanish from my eyes.
 But oh ! what solemn scenes on Snowdon's
 height
 Descending slow their glittering skirts un-roll ?
 Visions of glory, spare my aching sight !
 Ye unborn ages, crowd not on my soul !

Ver. 77. Fill high the sparkling bowl] Richard the Second, as we are told by Archbishop Scroop and the confederate Lords in their manifesto, by Thomas of Walsingham, and all the older writers, was starved to death. The story of his assassination, by Sir Piers of Exon, is of much later date.

Ver. 83. Heard ye the din of battle bray] Ruinous wars of York and Lancaster.

Ver. 87. Ye towers of Julius, London's lasting shame,
With many a foul and midnight murder fed

Henry the Sixth, George Duke of Clarence, Edward the Fifth, Richard Duke of York, &c. believed to be murdered secretly in the Tower of London. The oldest part of that structure is vulgarly attributed to Julius Caesar.

Ver. 89. Revere his consort's faith] Margaret of Anjou, a woman of heroic spirit, who struggled hard to save her husband and her crown.

Ibid.—his father's fame] Henry the Fifth.

Ver. 90. And spare the meek usurper's holy head] Henry the Sixth, very near being canonized. The line of Lancaster had no right of inheritance to the crown.

Ver. 91. Above, below, the rose of snow] The white and red roses, devices of York and Lancaster.

Ver. 93. The bristled boar in infant-gore] The silver boar was the badge of Richard the Third; whence he was usually known in his own time by the name of the Boar.

Ver. 99. Half of thy heart we consecrate] Eleanor of Castile died a few years after the conquest of Wales. The heroic proof she gave of her affection for her lord is well-known. The monuments of his regret and sorrow for the loss of her, are still to be seen at Northampton, Gaddington, Waltham, and other places.

No more our long-lost Arthur we bewail.
All hail, ye genuine kings, Britannia's issue,
hail!

III. 2.

"Girt with many a baron bold
Sublime their starry fronts thy rear :
And gorgeous dames, and statesmen old
In bearded majesty, appear.
In the midst a form divine !
Her eye proclaims her of the Briton-line !
Her lion-port, her awe-commanding face,
Attemper'd sweet to virgin-grace.
What strings symphonious tremble in the air,
What strain of vocal transport round her
play !
Hear from the grave, great Taliessin, hear !
They breathe a soul to animate thy clay
Bright rapture calls, and, soaring as she sings,
Waves in the eye of heav'n her many-colour'd
wings.

III. 3.

"The verse adorn again
"Fierce war, and faithful love,
And truth severe, by fairy fiction drest.
In buskin'd measures move
Pale grief, and pleasing pain,
With horror, tyrant of the throbbing breast.
A voice, as of the cherub-choir,
Gales from blooming Eden bear ;
And distant warblings lesson on my ear,
That lost in long futurity expire.
Fond impious man, think'st thou yon sanguine
cloud,
Rais'd by thy breath, has quench'd the orb
of day ?
To-morrow he repairs the golden flood,
And warms the nations with redoubled ray.
Enough for me : with joy I see
The different doom our fates assign.
Be thine despair, and sceptred care,
To triumph, and to die, are mine."
He spoke, and headlong from the mountain's
height
Deep in the roaring tide he plung'd to endless
night."

Ver. 109. No more our long-lost Arthur we bewail] It was the common belief of the Welsh nation, that King Arthur was still alive in Fairyland and would return again to reign over Britain.

Ver. 110. All hail, ye genuine kings, Britannia's issue, hail] Both Merlin and Taliessin had prophesied, that the Welsh should regain their sovereignty over this island, which seemed to be accomplished in the house of Tudor.

Ver. 117. Her lion-port, her awe-commanding face] Speed, relating an audience given by Queen Elizabeth to Paul Dzialinski, ambassador of Poland, says, "And thus she, lion-like young, daunted the malapert orator no less with her stately port and majestic deporture, than with the tartness of her princely cheekes."

Ver. 121. Hear from the grave, great Taliessin, hear] Taliessin, chief of the bards, flourished in the sixth century. His works are still preserved, and his memory held in high veneration among his countrymen.

Ver. 133. And distant warblings lesson on my ear] The succession of poets after Milton's time.

THE DESCENT OF ODIN.

[From the Norse tongue.]

UPROSE the king of men with speed,
And saddled straight his coal-black steed :
Down the yawning steep he rode,
That leads to Hela's drear abode.
Him the dog of darkness spied ;
His shaggy throat he open'd wide,
While from his jaws, with carnage fill'd,
Foam and human gore distill'd :
Hoarse he bays with hideous din,
Eyes that glow, and fangs that grin ;
And long pursues, with fruitless yell,
The father of the powerful spell.
Onward still his way he takes,
(The groaning earth beneath him shakes,)
Till full before his fearless eyes
The portals nine of hell arise.

Right against the eastern gate,
By the moss-grown pile he sate ;
Where long of yore to sleep was laid
The dust of the prophetic maid.
Facing to the northern clime,
Thrice he trac'd the Runic rhyme ;
Thrice pronounc'd, in accents dread,
The thrilling verse that wakes the dead ;
Till from out the hollow ground
Slowly breath'd a sullen sound.

Prophetess.

What call unknown, what charms presume
To break the quiet of the tomb ?
Who thus afflicts my troubled sprite,
And drags me from the realms of night ?
Long on these mould'ring bones have beat
The winter's snow, the summer's heat,
The drenching dews, and driving rain !
Let me, let me sleep again.
Who is he, with voice unblest,
That calls me from the bed of rest ?

Odin.

A traveller, to thee unknown,
Is he that calls, a warrior's son.
Thou the deeds of light shalt know ;
Tell me what is done below,
For whom yon glitt'ring board is spread,
Drest for whom yon golden bed ?

Prophetess.

Mantling in the goblet see
The pure bev'rage of the bee :
O'er it hangs the shield of gold ;
'Tis the drink of Balder bold :

Ver. 4. That leads to Hela's drear abode] Nifheljar, the hell of the Gothic nations, consisted of nine worlds, to which were devoted all such as died of sickness, old age, or by any other means than in battle. Over it presided Hela, the goddess of death. MASON.

Ver. 5. Him the dog of darkness spied] The Edda gives this dog the name of Managarmr. He fed upon the lives of those that were to die. MASON.

Ver. 40. Tell me what is done below] Odin was anxious about the fate of his son Balder, who had dreamed he was soon to die. He was killed by Odin's other son, Hodur, who was himself slain by Váli, the son of Odin and Rinda, consort with his prophecy. See the Edda.

Balder's head to death is giv'n,
Pain can reach the sons of heav'n !
Unwilling I my lips unclose :
Leave me, leave me to repose.

Odin.

Once again my call obey,
Prophetess, arise, and say,
What dangers Odin's child await,
Who the author of his fate?

Prophetess.

In Hoder's hand the hero's doom ;
His brother sends him to the tomb.
Now my weary lips I close ;
Leave me, leave me to repose.

Odin.

Prophetess, my spell obey,
Once again arise, and say,
Who th' avenger of his guilt.
By whom shall Hoder's blood be spilt?

Prophetess.

In the caverns of the west,
By Odin's fierce embrace compress'd,
A wondrous boy shall Rinda bear,
Who ne'er shall comb his raven-hair,
Nor wash his visage in the stream,
Nor see the sun's departing beam.
'Till he on Hoder's corse shall smile
Flaming on the fun'ral pile.
Now my weary lips I close :
Leave me, leave me to repose.

Odin.

Yet a while my call obey ;
Prophetess, awake, and say,
What virgins these, in speechless woe.
That bend to earth their solemn brow,
That their flaxen tresses tear,
And snowy veils that float in air?
Tell me whence their sorrows rise ;
Then I leave thee to repose.

Prophetess.

Ha ! no traveller art thou,
King of men I know thee now ; *
Mightiest of a mighty line—

VER. 51. Once again my call obey] Women were looked upon by the Gothic nations as having a peculiar insight into futurity ; and some there were that made profession of magic arts and divination. These travelled round the country, and were received in every house with great respect and honour. Such a woman bore the name of Volva Seidkona or Spakona. The dress of Thorborga, one of these prophetesses, is described at large in Eirik's Rauda Soga, (apud Bartholin. lib. 1. cap. iv. p. 686.) "She had on a blue vest spangled all over with stones, a necklace of glass beads, and a cap made of the skin of a black lamb lined with white cat-skin. She leaned on a staff adorned with brass, with a round head set with stones ; and was girt with an Hunlandish belt, at which hung her pouch full of magical instruments. Her buskins were of rough calf-skin, bound on with thongs studded with knobs of brass, and her gloves of white cat-skin, the fur turned inwards," &c. They were also called Fiolkyngi, or Fulkyngug, i. e. Multi-scia ; and Vindakona, i. e. Oracularum Mulier ; Nornir, i. e. Paræ. GRAY. VER. 66. Who ne'er shall comb his raven-hair] King Harold made (according to the singular custom of his time) a solemn vow never to clip or comb his hair, till he should have extended his way over the whole country. Herbert's Iceland. Translat. p. 39.

VER. 75. What virgins these, in speechless woe] "It is not certain," says Mr. Herbert. "what Odin means by the question concerning the weeping virgins ; but it has been supposed that it alludes to the embassy afterwards sent by Frigga to try to redeem Balder from the infernal regions, and that Odin betrays his divinity by mentioning what had not yet happened." Iceland. Translat. p. 41.

VER. 86. But mother of the giant brood] In the Latin, "mater

Odin.

No boding maid of skill divine
Art thou, nor prophetess of good ;
But mother of the giant brood !

Prophetess.

Hie thee hence, and boast at home,
That never shall inquirer come
To break my iron-sleep again ;
Till Lok has burst his tenfold chain ;
Never, till substantial night
Has reassum'd her ancient right ;
Till wrapp'd in flames, in ruin hurl'd,
Sinks the fabric of the world.

ELEGY, WRITTEN IN A COUNTRY CHURCH-YARD.

THE curfew tolls the knell of parting day,
The lowing herd wind slowly o'er the lea,
The ploughman homeward plods his weary way,
And leaves the world to darkness and to me.

Now fades the glimmering landscape on the sight,
And all the air a solemn stillness holds,
Save where the beetle wheels his droning flight,
And drowsy tinklings lull the distant folds :

Save that from yonder ivy-mantled tow'r,
The moping owl does to the moon complain
Of such as, wand'ring near her secret bow'r,
Molest her ancient solitary reign.

Hark ! how the sacred calm that breathes around,
Bids every fierce tumultuous passion cease ;
In still small accents whispering from the ground,
A grateful earnest of eternal peace.

Beneath those rugged elms, that yew tree's shade,
Where heaves the turf in many a mould'ring
Each in his narrow cell for ever laid, [heap,
The rude forefathers of the hamlet sleep.

The breezy call of incense-breathing morn,
The swallow twitt'ring from the straw-built shed,
The cock's shrill clarion, or the echoing horn,
No more shall rouse them from their lowly bed.

From them no more the blazing hearth shall burn,
Or busy housewife ply her evening care ;
No children run to lisp their sire's return,
Or climb his knees the envied kiss to share.

trium gigantum : " probably Angerbode, who from her name seems to be "no prophetess of good ;" and who bore to Lok, as the Edda says, three children, the wolf Fenris, the great serpent of Midgard, and Heia, all of them called giants in that system of mythology. MASON.

VER. 90. Till Lok has burst his tenfold chain] Lok is the evil being, who continues in chains till the twilight of the gods approaches ; when he shall break his bonds, the human race, the stars, and sun, shall disappear ; the earth sink in the seas, and fire consume the skies : even Odin himself and his kindred deities shall perish. MASON.

Oft did the harvest to their sickle yield,
 Their furrow oft the stubborn glebe has broke :
 How jocund did they drive their team afield !
 How bow'd the woods beneath their sturdy stroke !

Let not ambition mock their useful toil,
 Their homely joys, and destiny obscure ;
 Nor grandeur hear with a disdainful smile
 The short and simple annals of the poor.

The boast of heraldry, the pomp of pow'r,
 And all that beauty, all that wealth e'er gave,
 Await alike th' inevitable hour :
 The paths of glory lead but to the grave.

Nor you, ye proud, impute to these the fault,
 If memory o'er their tomb no trophies raise
 Where through the long-drawn aisle and fretted vault
 The pealing anthems swells the note of praise.

Can storied urn, or animated bust,
 Back to its mansion call the fleeting breath ?
 Can honour's voice provoke the silent dust,
 Or flattery sooth the dull cold ear of death ?

Perhaps in this neglected spot is laid
 Some heart once pregnant with celestial fire ;
 Hands, that the rod of empire might have sway'd,
 Or wak'd to ecstasy the living lyre :

But knowledge to their eyes her ample page
 Rich with the spoils of time did ne'er unroll ;
 Chill penury repress'd their noble rage,
 And froze the genial current of the soul.

Full many a gem of purest ray serene
 The dark unfathom'd caves of ocean bear :
 Full many a flower is born to blush unseen,
 And waste its sweetness on the desert air.

Some village-Hampden, that, with dauntless
 breast,
 The little tyrant of his fields withstood,
 Some mute inglorious Milton here may rest,
 Some Cromwell guiltless of his country's blood.

Th' applause of list'ning senates to command,
 The threats of pain and ruin to despise,
 To scatter plenty o'er a smiling land,
 And read their history in a nation's eyes,

Their lot forbade : nor circumscrib'd alone
 Their growing virtues, but their crimes con-
 fin'd ;

Forbade to wade through slaughter to a
 throne,
 And shut the gates of mercy on mankind.

The struggling pangs of conscious truth to hide,
 To quench the blushes of ingenuous shame,
 Or heap the shrine of luxury and pride
 With incense kindled at the Muse's flame.

Far from the madding crowd's ignoble strife,
 Their sober wishes never learn'd to stray ;
 Along the cool sequester'd vale of life
 They kept the noiseless tenour of their way.

Yet ev'n these bones from insult to protect,
 Some frail memorial still erected nigh,
 With uncouth rhymes and shapeless sculpture
 deck'd,
 Implores the passing tribute of a sigh.

Their name, their years, spelt by th' unletter'd
 muse,
 The place of fame and elegy supply :
 And many a holy text around she strews,
 That teach the rustic moralist to die.

For who, to dumb forgetfulness a prey,
 This pleasing anxious being e'er resign'd,
 Left the warm precincts of the cheerful day,
 Nor cast one longing lingering look behind ?

On some fond breast the parting soul relies,
 Some pious drops the closing eye requires ;
 Ev'n from the tomb the voice of nature cries,
 Ev'n in our ashes live their wonted fires.

For thee, who, mindful of the unhonour'd dead,
 Dost in these lines their artless tale relate ;
 If chance, by lonely contemplation led,
 Some kindred spirit shall inquire thy fate,—

Haply some hoary-headed swain may say,
 " Oft have we seen him at the peep of dawn
 Brushing with hasty steps the dew away
 To meet the sun upon the upland lawn,

" There at the foot of yonder nodding beech,
 That wreathes its old fantastic roots so
 high,
 His listless length at noontide would he stretch,
 And pore upon the brook that babbles by.

" Him have we seen the greenwood side along,
 While o'er the heath we hied, our labour
 done,
 Oft as the woodlark pip'd her farewell song,
 With wistful eyes pursue the setting sun*.

" Hard by yon wood, now smiling as in scorn, Muttering his wayward fancies he would
 rove ;
 Now drooping, woeful-wan, like one forlorn,
 Or craz'd with care, or cross'd in hopeless
 love.

" One morn I miss'd him on the custom'd hill,
 Along the heath, and near his favourite
 tree ;

Another came ; nor yet beside the rill,
 Nor up the lawn, nor at the wood was he :

* This stanza, which completes the account of the Poet's day, although in the author's MS. has hitherto appeared but in the form of a note ; but as Mr. Mason observes, " without it, we have only his morning walk and his noon-tide repose."

"The next, with dirges due in sad array Slow through the church-way path we saw him borne,—
Approach and read (for thou can'st read) the lay Grav'd on the stone beneath yon aged thorn."

THE EPITAPH*.

HERE rests his head upon the lap of earth
A youth, to fortune and to fame unknown:
Fair science frown'd not on his humble birth,
And melancholy mark'd him for her own.

Large was his bounty, and his soul sincere,
Heav'n did a recompense as largely send:
He gave to mis'ry (all he had) a tear,
He gain'd from heav'n ('twas all he wish'd) a friend.

No further seek his merits to disclose,
Or draw his frailties from their dread abode,
(There they alike in trembling hope repose,)
The bosom of his Father and his God.

THE ALLIANCE OF EDUCATION AND GOVERNMENT.

A Fragment†.

As sickly plants betray a niggard earth,
Whose barren bosom starves her generous birth,
Nor genial warmth, nor genial juice retains,
Their roots to feed, and fill their verdant veins:
And as in climes, where winter holds his reign,
The soil, though fertile, will not teem in vain,
Forbids her gems to swell, her shades to rise,
Nor trusts her blossoms to the churlish skies,
So draw mankind in vain the vital airs,
Uniform'd, unfriended, by those kindly cares,
That health and vigour to the soul impart,
Spread the young thought, and warm the opening heart:

So fond instruction on the growing powers
Of nature idly lavishes her stores,
If equal justice with unclouded face
Smile not indulgent on the rising race,
And scatter with a free, though frugal hand,
Light golden showers of plenty o'er the land:
But tyranny has fix'd her empire there,

* "Before the Epitaph, Mr. Gray originally inserted a very beautiful stanza, which was printed in some of the first editions, but afterwards omitted, because he thought that it was too long a parenthesis in this place. The lines however are, in themselves, exquisitely fine, and demand preservation:

" 'There scatter'd oft, the earliest of the year,
By hands unseen are showers of violets found;
The reddest loves to build and warble there,
And little footsteps lightly print the ground.' "

† "Instead of compiling tables of chronology and natural history, why did not Mr. Gray apply the powers of his genius to finish the philosophic poem of which he has left such an exquisite specimen?"—GIBSON.

To check their tender hopes with chilling fear,
And blast the blooming promise of the year.

This spacious animated scene survey,
From where the rolling orb, that gives the day,
His sable sons with nearer course surrounds
To either pole, and life's remotest bounds,
How rude soe'er th' exterior form we find,
Howe'er opinion tinge the varied mind,
Alike to all, the kind, impartial heav'n
The sparks of truth and happiness has giv'n:
With sense to feel, with memory to retain,
They follow pleasure, and they fly from pain;
Their judgment mends the plan their fancy draws,

Th' event presages, and explores the cause;
The soft returns of gratitude they know,
By fraud elude, by force repel the foe;
While mutual wishes, mutual woes endear
The social smile and sympathetic tear.

Say, then, through ages by what fate confin'd
To different climes seem different souls assign'd?
Here measur'd laws and philosophic ease
Fix, and improve the polish'd arts of peace;
There industry and gain their vigils keep.
Command the winds, and tame th' unwilling
deep:

Here force and hardy deeds of blood prevail;
There languid pleasure sighs in every gale.
Oft o'er the trembling nations from afar
Has Scythia breath'd the living cloud of war;
And, where the deluge burst, with sweepy sway
Their arms, their kings, their gods were roll'd
away.

As oft have issued, host impelling host,
The blue-ey'd myriads from the Baltic coast.
The prostrate south to the destroyer yields
Her boasted titles, and her golden fields.
With grim delight the brood of winter view
A brighter day, and heav'n's of azure hue;
Scent the new fragrance of the breathing rose,
And quaff the pendant vintage as 't grows.
Proud of the yoke, and pliant to the rod,
Why yet does Asia dread a monarch's nod,
While European freedom still withstands
Th' encroaching tide that drowns her lessening lands;

And sees far off, with an indignant groan,
Her native plains, and empires once her own?
Can opener skies and suns of fiercer flame
O'erpower the fire that animates our frame;
As lamps, that shed at eve a cheerful ray,
Fade and expire beneath the eye of day?
Need we the influence of the northern star
To string our nerves, and steel our hearts to war?
And, where the face of nature laughs around,
Must sick'ning virtue fly the tainted ground?
Unmanly thought! what seasons can control,
What fancied zone can circumscribe the soul,
Who, conscious of the source from whence she
springs,

By reason's light, on resolution's wings,
Spite of her frail companion, dauntless goes O'er Libya's deserts and through Zembla's snows?

She bids each slumb'ring energy awake,
 Another touch, another temper take,
 Suspends th' inferior laws that rule our clay :
 The stubborn elements confess her sway :
 Their little wants, their low desires, refine,
 And raise the mortal to a height divine.

Not but the human fabric from the birth
 Imbibes a flavour of its parent earth :
 As various tracts enforce a various toil,
 The manners speak the idiom of their soil.
 An iron race the mountain cliffs maintain,
 Foes to the gentler genius of the plain :
 For where unwearied sinews must be found
 With side-long plough to quell the flinty
 ground,
 To turn the torrent's swift-descending flood,
 To brave the savage rushing from the wood,
 What wonder, if, to patient valour train'd,
 They guard with spirit, what by strength they gain'd ?

And while their rocky ramparts round they see,
 The rough abode of want and liberty,
 (As lawless force from confidence will grow)
 Insult the plenty of the vales below ?
 What wonder, in the sultry climes, that spread
 Where Nile redundant o'er his summer-bed
 From his broad bosom life and verdure flings,
 And broods o'er Egypt with his wat'ry wings,
 If with advent'rous oar and ready sail,
 The dusky people drive before the gale ;
 Or on frail floats to neighb'ring cities ride,
 That rise and glitter o'er the ambient tide

[The following couplet, which was intended to have been introduced in the poem on the Alliance of Education and Government, is much too beautiful to be lost.—MASON.]

When love could teach a monarch to be wise,
 And gospel-light first dawn'd from Bullen's eyes.

ODE TO EVENING.

By William Collins.*

[By an inadvertency, that was not discovered until we had got thus far in the Selections, the Ode to Evening, one of the most beautiful and characteristic of Collins' poems, was passed over. Rather than omit it altogether we insert it here, where it will not seem quite so much out of its right place as if it had followed the works of any other poet than Gray. The poems of Collins and Gray have often been published of late in conjunction, in one volume.—COMPILER.]

If aught of oaten stop, or pastoral song,
 May hope, chaste Eve, to soothe thy modest ear,
 Like thy own solemn springs,
 Thy springs, and dying gales ;

O nymph reserv'd, while now the bright-hair'd
 sun

Sits in yon western tent, whose cloudy skirts,
 With brede ethereal wove,
 O'erhang his wavy bed :

* For the rest of the selections from Collins turn back to column 884.

Now air is hush'd, save where the weak-ey'd
 bat,
 With short shrill shriek flits by on leathern
 wing,
 Or where the beetle winds
 His small but sullen horn,

As oft he rises 'midst the twilight path,
 Against the pilgrim horne in heedless hum :
 Now teach me, maid compos'd,
 To breathe some soften'd strain,

Whose numbers stealing through thy darkening
 vale,
 May not unseemly with its stillness suit,
 As, musing slow, I hail
 Thy genial lov'd return !

For when thy folding-star arising shows
 His paly circlet, at his warning lamp
 The fragrant hours, and elves
 Who slept in buds the day,

And many a nymph who wreathes her brows
 with sedge,
 And sheds the freshening dew, and, lovelier still,
 The pensive pleasures sweet
 Prepare thy shadowy car.

Then let me rove some wild and heathy scene,
 Or find some ruin 'midst its dreary dells,
 Whose walls more awful nod
 By thy religious gleams.

Or if chill blustering winds, or driving rain,
 Prevent my willing feet, be mine the hut,
 That from the mountain's side,
 Views wilds, and swelling floods,

And hamlets brown, and dim-discover'd spires,
 And hears their simple bell, and marks o'er
 all
 Thy dewy fingers draw
 The gradual dusky veil.

While spring shall pour his showers, as oft he wont,
 And bathe thy breathing tresses, meekest Eve !
 While summer loves to sport
 Beneath thy lingering light :

While fallow autumn fills thy lap with leaves,
 Or winter, yelling through the troublous air,
 Affrights thy shrinking train,
 And rudely rends thy robes :—

So long, regardful of thy quiet rule,
 Shall fancy, friendship, science, smiling peace,
 Thy gentlest influence own,
 And love thy favourite name !

TEARS OF SCOTLAND.

Written in the year 1746.

MOURN, hapless Caledonia, mourn
Thy banish'd peace, thy laurels torn !
Thy sons, for valour long renown'd,
Lie slaughter'd on their native ground ;
Thy hospitable roofs no more,
Invite the stranger to the door :
In smoky ruins sunk they lie,
The monuments of cruelty.

The wretched owner sees afar
His all become the prey of war ;
Bethinks him of his babes and wife,
Then smites his breast, and curses life.
Thy swains are famish'd on the rocks,
Where once they fed their wanton flocks :
Thy ravish'd virgins shriek in vain ;
Thy infants perish on the plain.

What boots it then, in every clime,
Through the wide-spreading waste of time,
Thy martial glory, crown'd with praise,
Still shone with undiminish'd blaze ?
Thy tow'ring spirit now is broke,
Thy neck 's bended to the yoke.
What foreign arms could never quell,
By civil rage and rancour fell.

The rural pipe and merry lay
No more shall cheer the happy day :
No social scenes of gay delight
Beguile the dreary winter night :
No strains but those of sorrow flow,
And nought be heard but sounds of woe,
While the pale phantoms of the slain
Glide nightly o'er the silent plain.

O baneful cause, oh ! fatal morn,
Accurs'd to ages yet unborn !
The sons against their fathers stood,
The parent shed his children's blood ;
Yet, when the rage of battle ceas'd,
The victor's soul was not appeas'd :
The naked and forlorn must feel
Devouring flames, and murd'ring steel !

The pious mother doom'd to death,
Forsaken wanders o'er the heath,
The bleak wind whistles round her head,
Her helpless orphans cry for bread ;
Bereft of shelter, food, and friend,
She views the shades of night descend,
And, stretch'd beneath th' inclement skies,
Weeps o'er her tender babes, and dies.

While the warm blood bedews my veins,
And unimpair'd remembrance reigns,
Resentment of my country's fate
Within my filial breast shall beat ;
And, spite of her insulting foe,
My sympathizing verse shall flow :
" Mourn, hapless Caledonia, mourn
Thy banish'd peace, thy laurels torn !"

ODE TO LEVEN-WATER.

ON Leven's banks, while free to rove,
And tune the rural pipe to love ;
I envied not the happiest swain
That ever trod the Arcadian plain.
Pure stream ! in whose transparent wave
My youthful limbs I wont to lave ;
No torrents stain thy limpid source ;
No rocks impede thy dimpling course,
That sweetly warbles o'er its bed,
With white, round, polish'd pebbles spread ;
While, lightly pois'd, the scaly brood
In myriads cleave thy crystal flood ;
The springing trout in speckled pride ;
The salmon, monarch of the tide ;
The ruthless pike, intent on war ;
The silver eel, and mottled par.
Devolving from thy parent lake,
A charming maze thy waters make,
By bowers of birch, and groves of pine,
And hedges flower'd with eglantine.

Still on thy banks so gaily green,
May num'rous herds and flocks be seen,
And lasses chaunting o'er the pail,
And shepherds piping in the dale,
And ancient Faith that knows no guile,
And industry embrown'd with toil.
And hearts resolv'd and hands prepar'd,
The blessings they enjoy to guard.

THE TRAVELLER.

OR, A PROSPECT OF SOCIETY.

REMOTE, unfriended, melancholy, slow,
Or by the lazy Scheld, or wandering Po ;
Or onward, where the rude Carinthian boor
Against the houseless stranger shuts the door ;
Or where Campania's plain forsaken lies,
A weary waste expanding to the skies ;
Where'er I roam, whatever realms to see,
My heart, untravell'd, fondly turns to thee :
Still to my brother turns with ceaseless pain,
And drags at each remove a length'ning chain.
Eternal blessings crown my earliest friend,
And round his dwelling guardian saints attend ;
Blest be that spot, where cheerful guests retire
To pause from toil, and trim their ev'ning fire ;
Blest that abode, where want and pain repair,
And ev'ry stranger finds a ready chair :

Blest be those feasts with simple plenty crown'd,
Where all the ruddy family around
Laugh at the jests or pranks that never fail,
Or sigh with pity at some mournful tale ;
Or press the bashful stranger to his food,
And learn the luxury of doing good.

But me, not destin'd such delights to share—
My prime of life in wand'ring spent and care :
Impell'd with steps unceasing to pursue
Some fleeting good, that mocks me with the view ;
That, like the circle bounding earth and skies,
Allures from far, yet, as I follow flies ;
My fortune leads to traverse realms alone,
And find no spot of all the world my own.

Ev'n now where Alpine solitudes ascend,
I sit me down a pensive hour to spend ;
And, plac'd on high above the storm's career,
Look downward where a hundred realms appear :
Lakes, forests, cities, plains extending wide,
The pomp of kings, the shepherd's humbler
pride

When thus creation's charms around combine,
Amidst the store, should thanks—spride repine ?
Say, should the philosophic mind disdain
That good which makes each humbler bosom
vain ?

Let school-taught pride dissemble all it can,
These little things are great to little man ;
And wiser he, whose sympathetic mind
Exults in all the good of all mankind.
Ye glittering towns, with wealth and splendour
crown'd ;

Ye fields, where summer spreads profusion round ;
Ye lakes whose vessels catch the busy gale ;
Ye bending swains, that dress the flow'ry vale ;
For me your tributary stores combine :
Creation's heir, the world, the world is mine !

As some lone miser, visiting his store,
Bends at his treasure, counts, recounts it o'er,
Hoards after hoards his rising raptures fill,
Yet still he sighs, for hoards are wanting still ;
Thus to my breast alternate passions rise,
Pleas'd with each good that heav'n to man supplies ;

Yet oft a sigh prevails, and sorrows fall,
To see the hoard of human bliss so small ;
And oft I wish, amidst the scene to find
Some spot to real happiness consign'd, [rest,
Where my worn soul, each wand'ring hope at
May gather bliss, to see my fellows blest.

But where to find that happiest spot below,
Who can direct, when all pretend to know
The shudd'ring tenant of the frigid zone ?
Boldly proclaims that happiest spot his own ;
Extols the treasures of his stormy seas,
And his long nights of revelry and ease.
The naked negro, panting at the line,
Boasts of his golden sands, and palmy wine,
Basks in the glare or stems the tepid wave,
And thanks his gods for all the good they gave.
Such is the patriot's boast, where'er we roam,
His first, best country, ever is at home.
And yet, perhaps, if countries we compare,
And estimate the blessings which they share,

Though patriots flatter, still shall wisdom find
An equal portion dealt to all mankind :
As diff'rent good, by art or nature giv'n
To diff'rent nations, makes their blessings ev'n.

Nature, a mother kind alike to all,
Still grants her bliss at labour's earnest call ;
With food as well the peasant is supplied
On Idra's cliffs as Arno's shelvy side ;
And though the rocky-crested summits frown,
These rocks, by custom, turn to beds of down.
From art more various are the blessings sent ;
Wealth, commerce, honour, liberty, content :
Yet these each other's power so strong contest,
That either seems destructive of the rest.
Where wealth and freedom reign, contentment fails ;

And honor sinks where commerce long prevails.
Hence every state, to one lov'd blessing prone,
Conforms and models life to that alone :
Each to the favorite happiness attends,
And spurns the plan that aims at other ends ;
Till, carried to excess in each domain,
This fav'rite good begets peculiar pain.

But let us try these truths with closer eyes,
And trace them through the prospect as it lies :
Here, for awhile my proper cares resign'd,
Here let me sit in sorrow for mankind ;
Like yon neglected shrub, at random cast,
That shades the steep, and sighs at ev'ry blast.

Far to the right, where Apennine ascends,
Bright as the summer, Italy extends ;
Its uplands sloping deck the mountain's side,
Woods over woods in gay theatric pride ;
While oft some temple's mould'ring tops between
With memorable grandeur mark the scene.

Could nature's bounty satisfy the breast,
The sons of Italy were surely blest.

Whatever fruits in diff'rent climes are found,
That proudly rise or humbly court the ground ;
Whatever blooms in torrid tracts appear,
Whose bright succession decks the varied year ;
Whatever sweets salute the northern sky
With vernal lives, that blossom but to die ;
These here disporting own the kindred soil,
Nor ask luxuriance from the planter's toil ;
While sea-born gales their gelid wings expand
To winnow fragrance round the smiling land.

But small the bliss that sense alone bestows,
And sensual bliss is all the nation knows.
In florid beauty groves and fields appear,
Man seems the only growth that dwindles here.
Contrasted faults through all his manners reign :
Though poor, luxurious ; though submissive,
vain ;

Though grave, yet trifling ; zealous yet untrue ;
And ev'n in penance planning sins anew.
All evils here contaminate the mind,
That opulence departed leaves behind ;
For wealth was theirs ; not far remov'd the date,
When commerce proudly flourish'd thro' the state ;
At her command the palace learnt to rise ;
Again the long-fall'n column sought the skies ;
The canvas glow'd, beyond e'en nature warm,
The pregnant quarry teem'd with human form :

Till, more unsteady than the southern gale,
Commerce on other shores display'd her sail ;
While nought remain'd of all that riches gave,
But towns unmann'd, and lords without a slave :
And late the nation found, with fruitless skill,
Its former strength was but plethoric ill.

Yet still the loss of wealth is here supplied
By arts, the splendid wrecks of former pride ;
From this the feeble heart and long-fall'n mind
An easy compensation seem to find.
Here may be seen, in bloodless pomp array'd,
The pasteboard triumph and the cavalcade :
Processions form'd for piety and love,
A mistress or a saint in ev'ry grove.
By sports like these are all their cares beguil'd,
The sports of children satisfy the child :
Each nobler aim, repress'd by long control,
Now sinks at last, or feebly mans the soul.
While low delights, succeeding fast behind,
In happier meanness occupy the mind :
As in those domes, where Cæsars once bore
sway,

Defac'd by time, and tott'ring in decay,
There in the ruin, heedless of the dead,
The shelter-seeking peasant builds his shed ;
And, wondering man could want the larger pile,
Exults, and owns his cottage with a smile.

My soul, turn from them, turn me to survey
Where rougher climes a nobler race display,
Where the bleak Swiss their stormy mansions
tread,

And force a churlish soil for scanty bread :
No product here the barren hills afford
But man and steel, the soldier and his sword :
No vernal blooms their torpid rocks array,
But winter ling'ring chills the lap of May :
No zephyr fondly sues the mountain's breast,
But meteors glare, and stormy glooms invest.

Yet still, e'en here, content can spread a charm,
Redress the clime, and all its rage disarm.
Though poor the peasant's hut, his feasts tho'
small,

He sees his little lot the lot of all ;
Sees no contiguous palace rear its head,
To shame the meanness of his humble shed ;
No costly lord the sumptuous banquet deal,
To make him loathe his vegetable meal ;
But calm, and bred in ignorance and toil,
Each wish contracting, fits him to the soil.
Cheerful, at morn, he wakes from short repose,
Breathes the keen air, and carols as he goes ;
With patient angle trolls the finny deep,
Or drives his vent'rous plowshare to the steep ;
Or seeks the den where snow-tracks mark the
way,

And drags the struggling savage into day.
At night returning, ev'ry labour sped,
He sits him down the monarch of a shed ;
Smiles by his cheerful fire, and round surveys
His children's looks, that brighten at the blaze ;
While his lov'd partner, boastful of her hoard,
Displays her cleanly platter on the board :
And haply too some pilgrim, thither led,
With many a tale repays the nightly bed.

Thus ev'ry good his native wilds impart
Imprints the patriot passion on his heart ;
And e'en those hills, that round his mansion rise,
Enhance the bliss his scanty fund supplies :
Dear is that shed to which his soul conforms,
And dear that hill which lifts him to the storms ;
And as a child, when scaring sounds molest,
Clings close and closer to the mother's breast,
So the loud torrent, and the whirlwind's roar,
But bind him to his native mountains more.

Such are the charms to barren states assign'd :
Their wants but few, their wishes all confin'd :
Yet let them only share the praises due,
If few their wants, their pleasure are but few ;
For ev'ry want that stimulates the breast
Becomes a source of pleasure when redrest :
Whence from such lands each pleasing science
flies,

That first excites desire, and then supplies ;
Unknown to them, when sensual pleasures cloy,
To fill the languid pause with finer joy ;
Unknown those pow'rs that raise the soul to flame,
Catch ev'ry nerve, and vibrate through the frame ;
Their level life is but a smould'ring fire,
Unquench'd by want, unfann'd by strong desire ;
Unfit for raptures, or, if raptures cheer
On some high festival of once a year,
In wild excess the vulgar breast takes fire,
Till, buried in debauch, the bliss expire.

But not their joys alone thus coarsely flow ;
Their morals, like their pleasures, are but low ;
For, as refinement stops, from sire to son
Unalter'd, unimprov'd, the manners run ;
And love's and friendship's finely-pointed dart
Falls blunted from each indurated heart.
Some sterner virtues o'er the mountain's breast
May sit, like falcons cowering on the nest :
But all the gentler morals, such as play
Thro' life's more cultur'd walks, and charm the
way,

These, far dispers'd, on timorous pinions fly,
To sport and flutter in a kinder sky.

To kinder skies, where gentler manners reign,
I turn ; and France displays her bright domain :
Gay sprightly land of mirth and social ease,
Pleas'd with thyself, whom all the world can
please,

How often have I led thy sportive choir,
With tuneless pipe, beside the murmur'ing Loire !
Where shading elms along the margin grew,
And freshen'd from the wave the zephyr flew :
And haply, though my harsh touch, falt'ring
still, [skill ;

But mock'd all tune, and marr'd the dancer's
Yet would the village praise my wond'rous pow'r,
And dance, forgetful of the noontide hour.
Alike all ages. Dames of ancient days
Have led their children thro' the mirthful maze ;
And the gay grandsire, skill'd in gestic lore,
Has frisk'd beneath the burden of threescore.

So blest a life these thoughtless realms display,
Thus idly busy rolls their world away :
Theirs are those arts that mind to mind endear,
For honour forms the social temper here

Honour, that praise which real merit gains,
Or even imaginary worth obtains,
Here passes current; paid from hand to hand,
It shifts, in splendid traffic round the land:
From courts to camps, to cottages it strays,
And all are taught an avarice of praise;
They please, are pleas'd, they give to get esteem,
Till, seeming blest, they grow to what they seem.

But while this softer art their bliss supplies,
It gives their follies also room to rise;
For praise too dearly lov'd or warmly sought,
Enfeebles all internal strength of thought:
And the weak soul, within itself unblest,
Leans for all pleasure on another's breast.
Hence ostentation here, with tawdry art,
Pants for the vulgar praise which fools impart;
Here Vanity assumes her pert grimace,
And trims her robe of frieze with copper lace;
Here beggar pride defrauds her daily cheer,
To boast one splendid banquet once a year:
The mind still turns where shifting fashion draws,
Nor weighs the solid worth of self-applause.

To men of other minds my fancy flies,
Embosom'd in the deep where Holland lies.
Methinks her patient sons before me stand,
Where the broad ocean leans against the land,
And, sedulous to stop the coming tide,
Lift the tall rampire's artificial pride.
Onward, methinks, and diligently slow,
The firm connected bulwark seems to grow;
Spreads its long arms amidst the wat'ry roar,
Scoops out an empire, and usurps the shore:
While the pent ocean, rising o'er the pile,
Sees an amphibious world beneath him smile:
The slow canal, the yellow-blossom'd vale,
The willow-tufted bank, the gliding sail,
The crowded mart, the cultivated plain,
A new creation rescu'd from his reign.

Thus, while around the wave-subjected soil
Impels the native to repeated toil
Industrious habits in each bosom reign,
And industry begets a love of gain.
Hence all the good from opulence that springs,
With all those ills superfluous treasure brings,
Are here display'd. There much-lov'd wealth
Imparts

Convenience, plenty, elegance, and arts;
But view them closer, craft and fraud appear,
E'en liberty itself is barter'd here.
At gold's superior charms all freedom flies,
The needy sell it, and the rich man buys;
A land of tyrants, and a den of slaves,
Here wretches seek dishonorable graves,
And, calmly bent, to servitude conform,
Dull as their lakes that slumber in the storm.

Heavens! how unlike their Belgic sires of old!
Rough, poor, content, ungovernably bold;
War in each breast, and freedom on each brow:
How much unlike the sons of Britain now!

Fir'd at the sound, my genius spreads her wing,
And flies where Britain courts the western
spring;

Where lawns extend that scorn Arcadian pride
And brighter streams than fam'd Hydaspis glide;

There all around the gentlest breezes stray,
There gentle music melts on every spray;
Creation's mildest charms are there combin'd,
Extremes are only in the master's mind;
Stern o'er each bosom reason holds her state,
With daring aims irregularly great;
Pride in their port, defiance in their eye,
I see the lords of human-kind pass by:
Intent on high designs, a thoughtful band,
By forms unfashion'd, fresh from nature's hand,
Fierce in their native hardness of soul,
True to imagin'd right, above control;
While e'en the peasant boasts these rights to scan,
And learns to venerate himself as man. [here,

Thine, Freedom, thine the blessings pictur'd
Thine are those charms that dazzle and eudear;
Too blest indeed were such without alloy;
But foster'd e'en by freedom, ills annoy;
That independence Britons prize too high,
Keeps man from man, and breaks the social tie;
The self-dependent lordling stands alone,
All claims that bind and sweeten life unknown;
Here, by the bonds of nature feebly held,
Minds combat minds, repelling and repell'd;
Ferments arise, imprison'd factions roar,
Repress ambition struggles round her shore:
Till over-wrought, the general system feels
Its motion stop, or frenzy fire the wheels.

Nor this the worst. As nature's ties decay,
As duty, love, and honour, fail to sway,
Fictitious bonds, the bonds of wealth and law,
Still gather strength, and force unwilling awe.
Hence all obedience bows to these alone,
And talent sinks, and merit weeps unknown;
Till time may come, when, stript of all her
charms,

The land of scholars, and the nurse of arms,
Where noble stems transmit the patriot flame,
Where kings have toil'd, and poets wrote for
fame,

One sink of level avarice shall lie,
And scholars, soldiers, kings, unhonour'd die.

Yet think not, thus when freedom's ills I state,
I mean to flatter kings, or court the great:
Ye pow'rs of truth, that bid my soul aspire,
Far from my bosom drive the low desire!
And thou, fair Freedom, taught alike to feel
The rabble's rage, and tyrant's angry steel;
Thou transitory flow'r, alike undone
By proud contempt, or favour's fostering sun;
Still may thy blooms the changeful clime endure!
I only would repress them to secure;
For just experience tells, in ev'ry soil,
That those who think must govern those that toil;
And all that freedom's highest aims can reach
Is but to lay proportion'd loads on each.
Hence, should one order disproportion'd grow,
Its double weight must ruin all below.

O then how blind to all that truth requires,
Who think it freedom when a part aspires!
Calm is my soul, nor apt to rise in arms,
Except when fast-approaching danger warns:
But when contending chiefs blockade the throne,
Contracting regal pow'r to stretch their own;

When I behold a factious band agree⁶
To call it freedom when themselves are free;
Each wanton judge new penal statutes draw,
Laws grind the poor, and rich men rule the
law:

The wealth of climes, where savage nations
roam,

Pillag'd from slaves to purchase slaves at home;
Fear, pity, justice, indignation, start,
Tear off reserve, and bare my swelling heart;
Till, half a patriot, half a coward grown,
I fly from petty tyrants to the throne.

Yes, brother, curse with me that baleful hour,
When first ambition struck at regal power;
And thus, polluting honour in its source,
Gave wealth to sway the mind with double
force.

Have we not seen, round Britain's peopled shore,
Her useful sons exchange'd for useless ore?
Seen all her triumphs end in destruction haste,
Like flaring tapers bright'ning as they waste?
Seen Opulence, her grandeur to maintain,
Lead stern Depopulation in her train.

And over fields where scatter'd hamlets rose,
In barren solitary pomp repose?

Have we not seen, at pleasure's lordly call,
The smiling long-frequented village fall?
Beheld the duteous son, the sire decay'd,
The modest matron, and the blushing maid,
Forc'd from their homes, a melancholy train,
To traverse climes beyond the western main,
Where wild Oswego spreads her swamps around,
And Niagara stuns with thund'ring sound?

E'en now, perhaps, as there some pilgrim strays

Thro' tangled forests, and thro' dangerous ways:
Where beasts with man divided empire claim,
And the brown Indian marks with murderous aim;

There, while above the giddy tempest flies,
And all around distressful yells arise,
The pensive exile, bending with his woe,
To stop too fearful, and too faint to go,
Casts a long look where England's glories
shine,

And bids his bosom sympathize with mine.

Vain, very vain, my weary search to find
That bliss which only centres in the mind.
Why have I stray'd from pleasure and repose,
To seek a good each government bestows?
In ev'ry government, though terrors reign,
Though tyrant kings or tyrant laws restrain,
How small, of all that human hearts endure,
That part which laws or kings can cause or cure!

Still to ourselves in every place consign'd,
Our own felicity we make or find:
With secret course, which no loud storms annoy,
Glides the smooth current of domestic joy.
The lifted axe, the agonizing wheel,
Luke's iron crown, and Damien's bed of steel,
To men remote from pow'r but rarely known,
Leave reason, faith and conscience, all our own.

THE DESERTED VILLAGE.

SWEET Auburn! loveliest village of the plain,
Where health and plenty cheer'd the lab'ring
swain,

Where smiling spring its earliest visit paid,
And parting summer's ling'ring blooms delay'd:
Dear lovely bow'rs of innocence and ease,
Seats of my youth, when ev'ry sport could please:
How often have I loiter'd o'er thy green,
Where humble happiness endear'd each scene!
How often have I paus'd on ev'ry charm,
The shelter'd cot, the cultivated farm,
The never-failing brook, the busy mill,
The decent church that topt the neighb'ring hill,
The hawthorn bush, with seats beneath the shade,
For talking age and whispering lovers made!
How often have I bless'd the coming day,
When toil remitting lent its turn to play,
And all the village train, from labor free,
Led up their sports beneath the spreading tree:
While many a pastime circled in the shade,
The young contending as the old survey'd;
And many a gambol frolick'd o'er the ground,
And sleights of art and feats of strength went
round;

And still, as each repeated pleasure I'd,
Succeeding sports the mirthful train inspir'd.
The dancing pair that simply sought renown,
By holding out to tire each other down;
The swain mistrustless of his smutted face,
While secret laughter titter'd round the place;
The bashful virgin's sidelong looks of love,
The matron's glance that would those looks reprove;

These were thy charms, sweet village! sports like these

With sweet succession, taught e'en toil to please;
These round thy bow'rs their cheerful influence shed, [fled.

These were thy charms—but all these charms are Sweet smiling village, loveliest of the lawn,
Thy sports are fled, and all thy charms withdrawn;

Amidst thy bow'rs the tyrant's hand is seen,
And desolation saddens all thy green:
One only master grasps the whole domain,
And half a tillage stints thy smiling plain:
No more thy glassy brook reflects the day,
But chok'd with sedges works its weedy way;
Along thy glades, a solitary guest,
The hollow-sounding bittern guards its nest;
Amidst thy desert walks the lapwing flies,
And tires their echoes with unvaried cries.
Sunk are thy bow'rs in shapeless ruin all,
And the long grass o'ertops the mould'ring wall;
And, trembling, shrinking from the spoiler's
hand,

Far, far away thy children leave the land.

Ill fares the land, to hast'ning ills a prey,
Where wealth accumulates, and men decay;
Princes and lords may flourish, or may fade;
A breath can make them, as a breath has made:
But a bold peasantry, their country's pride,
When once destroy'd, can never be supplied.

A time there was, ere England's griefs began,
When ev'ry rood of ground maintain'd its man :
For him light labour spread her wholesome store,
Just gave what life requir'd, but gave no more :
His best companions, innocence and health ;
And his best riches, ignorance of wealth.

But times are alter'd ; trade's unfeeling train
Usurp the land, and dispossess the swain ;
Along the lawn, where scatter'd hamlets rose,
Unwieldy wealth and cumbrous pomp repose ;
And ev'ry want to luxury allied,
And every pang that folly pays to pride,
Those gentle hours that plenty bade to bloom,
Those calm desires that ask'd but little room,
Those healthful sports that grac'd the peaceful scene,

Liv'd in each look, and brighten'd all the green ;
These, far departing, seek a kinder shore,
And rural mirth and manners are no more.

Sweet Auburn ! parent of the blissful hour,
Thy glades forlorn confess the tyrant's pow'r.
Here, as I take my solitary rounds,
Amidst thy tangling walks and ruin'd grounds,
And, many a year elaps'd, return to view
Where once the cottage stood, the hawthorn grew,
Remembrance wakes with all her busy train,
Swells at my breast, and turns the past to pain.

In all my wand'rings round this world of care,
In all my griefs—and God has giv'n my share—
I still had hopes my latest hours to crown,
Amidst these humble bow'rs to lay me down ;
To husband out life's taper at the close,
And keep the flame from wasting, by repose :
I still had hopes, for pride attends us still,
Amidst the swains to show my book-learn'd skill,
Around my fire an ev'ning group to draw,
And tell of all I felt, and all I saw ;
And, as a hare, whom hounds and horns pursue
Pants to the place from whence at first she flew,
I still had hopes, my long vexations past,
Here to return—and die at home at last.

O blest retirement, friend to life's decline,
Retreats from care that never must be mine,
How blest is he who crowns, in shades like these,
A youth of labour with an age of ease ;
Who quits a world where strong temptations try,
And, since 'tis hard to combat, learns to fly !
For him no wretches, born to work and weep,
Explore the mine, or tempt the dang'rous deep ;
No surly porter stands, in guilty state,
To spurn imploring famine from the gate ;
But on he moves to meet his latter end,
Angels around befriending virtue's friend ;
Sinks to the grave with unperceiv'd decay,
While resignation gently slopes the way ;
And, all his prospects bright'ning to the last,
His heav'n commences ere the world be past.

Sweet was the sound, when oft at ev'ning's close,

Up yonder hill the village murmur rose ;
There, as I pass'd with careless steps and slow,
The mingling notes came soften'd from below ;
The swain responsive as the milk-maid sung,
The sober herd that low'd to meet their young ;

The noisy geese that gabbled o'er the pool,
The playful children just let loose from school :
The watch-dog's voice that bay'd the whisp'ring
wind,

And the loud laugh that spoke the vacant mind ;
These all in sweet confusion sought the shade,
And fill'd each pause the nightingale had made.
But now the sounds of population fail,
No cheerful murmurs fluctuate in the gale,
No busy steps the grass-grown footway tread,
But all the blooming flush of life is fled :

All but yon widow'd, solitary thing,
That feebly bends beside the plashy spring ;
She, wretched matron, forc'd in age, for bread,
To strip the brook with mantling cresses spread,
To pick her wintry faggot from the thorn,
To seek her nightly shed, and weep till morn :
She only left of all the harmless train,
The sad historian of the pensive plain.

Near yonder copse, where once the garden
smil'd,

And still where many a garden-flow'r grows wild,
There, where a few torn shrubs the place disclose,
The village preacher's modest mansion rose.

A man he was to all the country dear,
And passing rich with forty pounds a year ;
Remote from towns he ran his godly race,
Nor e'er had chang'd, nor wish'd to change, his
place ;

Unskilful he to fawn, or seek for pow'r,
By doctrines fashion'd to the varying hour ;
Far other aims his heart had learn'd to prize,
More bent to raise the wretched than to rise.
His house was known to all the vagrant train,
He chid their wand'rings, but reliev'd their pain ;
The long-remember'd beggar was his guest,
Whose beard descending swept his aged breast ;
The ruin'd spendthrift, now no longer proud,
Claim'd kindred there, and had his claims allow'd ;
The broken soldier kindly bid to stay,
Sat by his fire, and talk'd the night away ;
Wept o'er his wounds or, tales of sorrow done, Shoulder'd his crutch, and show'd how fields were won.

Pleas'd with his guests, the good man learn'd to glow,

And quite forgot their vices in their woe ;
Careless their merits or their faults to scan,
His pity gave ere charity began.

Thus to relieve the wretched was his pride,
And ev'n his failings lean'd to virtue's side ;
But in his duty prompt, at ev'ry call,
He watch'd and wept, he pray'd and felt, for all :
And, as a bird each fond endearment tries
To tempt its new-fledg'd offspring to the skies,
He tried each art, reprov'd each dull delay,
Allur'd to brighter worlds, and led the way.

Beside the bed where parting life was laid,
And sorrow, guilt, and pain, by turns dismay'd,
The rev'rend champion stood. At his control,
Despair and anguish fled the struggling soul ;
Comfort came down the trembling wretch to
raise,
And his last falt'ring accents whisper'd praise.

At church, with meek and unaffected grace,
His looks adorn'd the venerable place;
Truth from his lips prevail'd with double sway,
And fools, who came to scoff, remain'd to pray.
The service past, around the pious man,
With steady zeal, each honest rustic ran:
Ev'n children follow'd, with endearing wile,
And pluck'd his gown, to share the good man's smile;

His ready smile a parent's warmth exprest,
Their welfare pleas'd him, and their cares distress:

To them his heart, his love, his griefs, were giv'n,
But all his serious thoughts had rest in Heav'n.
As some tall cliff, that lifts its awful form,
Swells from the vale, and midway leaves the storm.

Though round its breast the rolling clouds are spread,
Eternal sun-shine settles on its head.

Beside yon straggling fence that skirts the way
With blossom'd furze, unprofitably gay,
There, in his noisy mansion, skill'd to rule,
The village master taught his little school:
A man severe he was, and stern to view,
I knew him well, and every truant knew;
Well had the boding tremblers learn'd to trace
The day's disasters in his morning face;
Full well they laugh'd with counterfeited glee

At all his jokes, for many a joke had he;
Full well the busy whisper, circling round,
Convey'd the dismal tidings when he frown'd:
Yet he was kind, or if severe in aught,
The love bore to learning was in fault;
The village all declar'd how much he knew;
'Twas certain he could write and cipher too;
Lands he could measure, terms and tides presage,
And ev'n the story ran that he could gauge.
In arguing, too, the parson own'd his skill,
For ev'n though vanquish'd he could argue still;
While words of learned length, and thund'ring sound,

Amaz'd the gazing rustics rang'd around;
And still they gaz'd, and still the wonder grew
That one small head could carry all he knew.
But past is all his fame. The very spot,
Where many a time he triumph'd, is forgot.

Near yonder thorn, that lifts its head on high,
Where once the sign-post caught the passing eye,
Low lies that house where nut-brown draughts inspir'd,

Where grey-beard mirth and smiling toil retir'd,
Where village statesmen talk'd with looks profound,

And news much older than their ale went round.
Imagination fondly stoops to trace
The parlour splendours of that festive place;
The white-wash'd wall, the nicely-sanded floor,
The varnish'd clock that click'd behind the door;
The chest, contriv'd a double debt to pay,
A bed by night, a chest of drawers by day;
The pictures plac'd for ornament and use,
The twelve good rules, the royal game of goose;

The hearth, except when winter chill'd the day,
With aspen boughs, and flowers, and fennel, gay;
While broken tea-cups, wisely kept for show,
Rang'd o'er the chimney, glisten'd in a row.

Vain transitory splendours! could not all
Reprieve the tottering mansion from its fall!
Obscure it sinks, nor shall it more impart
An hour's importance to the poor man's heart;
Thither no more the peasant shall repair
To sweet oblivion of his daily care;
No more the farmer's news, the barber's tale,
No more the woodman's ballad shall prevail;
No more the smith his dusky brow shall clear,
Relax his pond'rous strength, and lean to hear;
The host himself no longer shall be found
Careful to see the mantling bliss go round;
Nor the coy maid, half willing to be prest,
Shall kiss the cup to pass it to the rest.

Yes! let the rich deride, the proud disdain,
These simple blessings of the lowly train;
To me more dear, congenial to my heart,
One native charm, than all the gloss of art;
Spontaneous joys, where nature has its play,
The soul adopts, and owns their first-born sway;
Lightly they frolic o'er the vacant mind,
Unenvied, unmolested, unconfin'd.
But the long pomp, the midnight masquerade,
With all the freaks of wanton wealth array'd,
In these, ere triflers half their wish obtain,
The toiling pleasure sickens into pain;
And, e'en while fashion's brightest arts decoy,
The heart distrusting asks, if this be joy?

Ye friends to truth, ye statesmen, who survey
The rich man's joys increase, the poor's decay,
'Tis yours to judge how wide the limits stand
Between a splendid and a happy land.
Proud swells the tide with loads of freighted ore,
And shouting Folly hails them from her shore;
Hoards, e'en beyond the miser's wish, abound,
And rich men flock from all the world around.
Yet count our gains. This wealth is but a name
That leaves our useful product still the same.
Not so the loss. The man of wealth and pride
Takes up a space that many poor supplied;
Space for his lake, his park's extended bounds,
Space for his horses, equipage, and hounds;
The robe that wraps his limbs in silken sloth
Has robb'd the neighbouring fields of half their growth;

His seat, where solitary sports are seen,
Indignant spurns the cottage from the green;
Around the world each needful product flies:
For all the luxuries the world supplies:
While thus the land, adorn'd for pleasure all,
In barren splendour feebly waits the fall.

As some fair female, unadorn'd and plain,
Secure to please while youth confirms her reign,
Slight's ev'ry borrow'd charm that dress supplies,
Nor shares with art the triumph of her eyes;
But when those charms are past, for charms are frail

When time advances, and when lovers fail,
She then shines forth, solicitous to bless,
In all the gluring impotence of dress:

Thus fares the land, by luxury betray'd,
In nature's simplest charms at first array'd ;
But verging to decline, its splendours rise,
Its vistas strike, its palaces surprise ;
While, scourg'd by famine, from the smiling land
The mournful peasant leads his humble band ;
And while he sinks, without one arm to save,
The country blooms—a garden and a grave !

Where, then, ah ! where shall poverty reside,
To scape the pressure of contiguous pride ?
If to some common's fenceless limits stray'd,
He drives his flock to pick the scanty blade.
Those fenceless fields the sons of wealth divide,
And e'en the bare-worn common is denied.

If to the city sped—What waits him there ?
To see profusion that he must not share ;
To see ten thousand baneful arts combin'd
To pamper luxury, and thin mankind ;
To see each joy the sons of pleasure know,
Extorted from his fellow-creature's woe.
Here, while the courtier glitters in brocade,
There the pale artist plies the sickly trade ;
Here, while the proud their long-drawn pomp display,
There the black gibbet glooms beside the way ;
The dome where pleasure holds her midnight
reign,

Here, richly deck'd, admits the gorgeous train ;
Tumultuous grandeur crowds the blazing square,
The rattling chariots clash, the torches glare.
Sure scenes like these no troubles e'er annoy !
Sure these denote one universal joy !
Are these thy serious thoughts ?—Ah, turn thine
eyes,

Where the poor houseless shivering female lies :
She, once perhaps, in village plenty blest,
Has wept at tales of innocence distress ;
Her modest looks the cottage might adorn,
Sweet as the primrose peeps beneath the thorn ;
Now lost to all ; her friends, her virtue, fled,
Near her betrayer's door she lays her head,
And, pinch'd with cold, and shrinking from the show'r,

With heavy heart deplores that luckless hour,
When idly first, ambitious of the town,
She left her wheel and robes of country brown.

Do thine, sweet Auburn, thine the loveliest
train,

Do thy fair tribes participate her pain ?
E'en now, perhaps, by cold and hunger led,
At proud men's doors they ask a little bread !

Ah, no. To distant climes, a dreary scene,
Where half the convex world intrudes between,
Through torrid tracts with fainting steps they go,
Where wild Altama murmurs to their woe.
Far diff'rent there from all that charm'd before,
The various terrors of that horrid shore ;
Those blazing suns that dart a downward ray,
And fiercely shed intolerable day ;
Those matted woods where birds forget to sing,
But silent bats in drowsy clusters cling ;
Those poisonous fields with rank luxuriance
crown'd,

Where the dark scorpion gathers death around :

Where at each step the stranger fears to wake
The rattling terrors of the vengeful snake ;
Where crouching tigers wait their hapless prey,
And savage men more murd'rous still than they ;
While oft in whirls the mad tornado flies,
Mingling the ravag'd landscape with the skies.
Far diff'rent these from ev'ry former scene,
The cooling brook, the grassy-vested green,
The breezy covert of the warbling grove,
That only shelter'd thefts of harmless love.

Good Heav'n ! what sorrows gloom'd that parting day,

That call'd them from their native walks away ;
When the poor exiles, ev'ry pleasure past,
Hung round the bow'rs, and fondly look'd their
last,

And took a long farewell, and wish'd in vain
For seats like these beyond the western main :
And shudd'ring still to face the distant deep,
Return'd and wept, and still return'd to weep.
The good old sire the first prepar'd to go
To new-found worlds, and wept for others' woe ;
But for himself, in conscious virtue brave,
He only wish'd for worlds beyond the grave.
His lovely daughter, lovelier in her tears,
The fond companion of his helpless years,
Silent went next, neglectful of her charms,
And left a lover's for a father's arms.
With louder plaints the mother spoke her woes,
And bless'd the cot where ev'ry pleasure rose ;
And kiss'd her thoughtless babes with many a
tear,

And clasp'd them close, in sorrow doubly dear ;
Whilst her fond husband strove to lend relief
In all the silent manliness of grief.
O luxury ! thou curs'd by heaven's decree,
How ill exchang'd are things like these for thee !
How do thy potions, with insidious joy,
Diffuse their pleasures only to destroy !
Kingdoms, by thee, to sickly greatness grown,
Boast of a florid vigour not their own :
At ev'ry draught more large and large they grow,
A bloated mass of rank unwieldy woe ;
Till, sapp'd their strength, and ev'ry part un-
sound,

Down, down they sink, and spread a ruin round.

E'en now the devastation is begun,
And half the bus'ness of destruction done ;
E'en now, methinks, as pond'ring here I stand,
I see the rural virtues leave the land. [sail,
Down where yon anch'ring vessel spreads the
That idly waiting flaps with ev'ry gale,
Downward they move, a melancholy band,
Pass from the shore, and darken all the strand.
Contented toil, and hospitable care,
And kind connubial tenderness, are there ;
And piety with wishes plac'd above,
And steady loyalty, and faithful love.

And thou, sweet Poetry, thou loveliest maid,
Still first to fly where sensual joys invade !
Unfit, in these degenerate times of shame,
To catch the heart, or strike for honest fame ;
Dear charming nymph, neglected and decried
My shame in crowds, my solitary pride ;

Thou source of all my bliss, and all my woe,
 That found'st me poor at first, and keep'st me so,
 Thou guide, by which the nobler arts excel,
 Thou nurse of ev'ry virtue, fare thee well ;
 Farewell ! and O ! where'er thy voice be tried,
 On Torno's cliffs, or Pambamarca's side,
 Whether where equinoctial fervours glow,
 Or winter wraps the polar world in snow,
 Still let thy voice, prevailing over time,
 Redress the rigours of th' inclement clime ;
 Aid slighted truth with thy persuasive strain,
 Teach erring man to spurn the rage of gain ;
 Teach him that states, of native strength possest,
 Though very poor, may still be very blest ;
 That trade's proud empire hastes to swift decay,
 As ocean sweeps the labour'd mole away ;
 While self-dependent pow'r can time defy,
 As rocks resist the billows and the sky.

RETALIATION.

Of old, when Scarron his companions invited,
 Each guest brought his dish, and the feast was united.
 If our landlord supplies us with beef and with fish,
 Let each guest bring himself, and he brings the best dish :
 Our dean* shall be ven'son, just fresh from the plains† ;
 Our Burke shall be tongue, with the garnish of brains ;
 Our Will‡ shall be wild fowl, of excellent flavour ;
 And Dick with his pepper shall heighten their savour§ :
 Our Cumberland's sweet-bread its place shall obtain ;
 And Douglas|| is pudding, substantial and plain :
 Our Garrick's a salad ; for in him we see
 Oil, vinegar, sugar, and saltiness agree :
 To make out the dinner, full certain I am
 That Ridge¶ is anchovy, and Reynolds is lamb ;
 That Hickey's a capon : and, by the same rule,
 Magnanimous Goldsmith, a gooseberry fool.
 At a dinner so various, at such a repast,
 Who'd not be a glutton, and stick to the last ?
 Here, waiter, more wine, let me sit while I'm able,
 Till all my companions sink under the table ;
 Then, with chaos and blunders encircling my head,
 Let me ponder, and tell what I think of the dead.

* Edmund Burke.

† Doctor Barnard, dean of Derry, in Ireland.

‡ Mr. William Burke.

§ Mr. Richard Burke.

|| Dr. Douglas, who exposed Lauder's attempt to prove Milton a plagiarist.

¶ Counsellor John Ridge.

 An eminent attorney.

Here lies the good dean, reunited to earth,
 Who mix'd reason with pleasure, and wisdom with mirth ;

If he had any faults, he has left us in doubt,
 At least in six weeks I could not find 'em out ;
 Yet some have declar'd, and it can't be denied 'em,
 That sly-boots was cursedly cunning to hide 'em.

Here lies our good Edmund, whose genius was such,

We scarcely can praise it, or blame it too much ;
 Who, born for the universe, narrow'd his mind,
 And to party gave up what was meant for mankind ;

Though fraught with all learning, yet straining his throat [vote ;

To persuade Tommy Townshend* to lend him a Who, too deep for his hearers, still went on refining,

And thought of convincing, while they thought of dining ;

Though equal to all things, for all things unfit ;
 Too nice for a statesmen, too proud for a wit ;
 For a patriot too cool ; for a drudge disobedient ;
 And too fond of the right to pursue the expedient.
 In short, 'twas his fate, unemploy'd, or in place,

to eat mutton cold, and cut blocks with a razor.

Here lies honest William, whose heart was a mint,

While the owner ne'er knew half the good that was in't ;

The pupil of impulse, it forc'd him along,
 His conduct still right, with his argument wrong ;
 Still aiming at honor, yet fearing to roam,
 The coachman was tipsy, the chariot drove home ;
 Would you ask for his merits ? alas ! he had none ;
 What was good was spontaneous, his faults were his own.

Here lies honest Richard, whose fate I must sigh at ;

Alas ! that such frolic should now be so quiet :
 What spirits were his ! what wit and what whim,
 Now breaking a jest, and now breaking a limb† !
 Now wrangling and grumbling to keep up the ball !
 Now teasing and vexing, yet laughing at all !
 In short, so provoking a devil was Dick,
 That we wish'd him full ten times a day at old Nick ;

But, missing his mirth and agreeable vein,
 As often we wish'd to have Dick back again.

Here Cumberland lies, having acted his parts,
 The Terence of England, the mender of hearts ;
 A flattering painter, who made it his care
 To draw men as they ought to be, not as they are.
 His gallants are all faultless, his women divine,
 And comedy wonders at being so fine :
 Like a tragedy queen he has dizen'd her out,
 Or rather like Tragedy giving a rout.
 His fools have their follies so lost in a crowd
 Of virtues and feelings, that folly grows proud ;
 And coxcombs alike in their failings alone,
 Adopting his portraits, are pleas'd with their own.

* Member for Whitchurch.

† This gentleman had slightly fractured an arm and a leg.

Say, where has our poet this malady caught ?
Or wherefore his characters thus without fault ?
Say, was it that vainly directing his view
To find out men's virtues, and finding them few,
Quite sick of pursuing each troublesome elf,
He grew lazy at last, and drew from himself ?

Here Douglas retires from his toils to relax,
The scourge of impostors, the terror of quacks ;
Come, all ye quack bards, and ye quacking divines,
Come, and dance on the spot where your tyrant reclines :

When satire and censure encircled his throne ;
I fear'd for your safety, I fear'd for my own :
But now he is gone, and we want a detector,
Our Dods* shall be pious, our Kenrick† shall lecture ;

Macpherson‡ write bombast, and call it a style ;
Our Townshend make speeches, and I shall compile ; [over,
New Lauders and Bowers the Tweed shall cross
No countryman living their tricks to discover ;
Detection her taper shall quench to a spark,
And Scotchman meet Scotchman, and cheat in the dark.

Here lies David Garrick, describe me who can
An abridgment of all that was pleasant in man :
As an actor, confest without rival to shine ;
As a wit, if not first, in the very first line !
Yet, with talents like these, and an excellent
heart,

The man had his failings—a dupe to his art.
Like an ill-judging beauty, his colours he spread,
And beplaster'd with rouge his own natural red.
On the stage he was natural, simple, affecting ;
'Twas only that when he was off he was acting.
With no reason on earth to go out of his way,
He turn'd and he varied full ten times a day :
Though secure of our hearts, yet confoundedly sick
If they were not his own by finessing and trick :
He cast off his friends, as a huntsman his pack,
For he knew when he pleas'd he could whistle them back.

Of praise a mere glutton, he swallow'd what came,
And the puff of a dunce, he mistook it for fame ;
Till his relish grown callous, almost to disease,
Who pepper'd the highest was surest to please.
But let us be candid, and speak out our mind,
If dunces applauded, he paid them in kind.
Ye Kenricks, ye Kellys$, and Woodfalls|| so
grave,

What a commerce was yours, while you got and
you gave ! [rais'd,
How did Grub-street re-echo the shouts that you While he was be-Roscius'd, and you were be-prais'd !

But peace to his spirit, wherever it flies,
To act as an angel and mix with the skies :
Those poets who owe their best fame to his skill,
Shall still be his flatterers, go where he will :

* The Rev. Dr. Dodd.

† Dr. Kenrick, who read lectures under the title of " The School of Shakspeare."

‡ James Macpherson, author of a prose translation of Homer.

$ Mr. Hugh Kelly, the dramatist.

|| Mr. William Woodfall, the printer.

Old Shakspeare receive him with praise and with
love,

And Beaumonts and Bens be his Kellys above.

Here Hickey reclines, a most blunt pleasant creature,

And slander itself must allow him good-nature :
He cherish'd his friend, and he relish'd a bumper :
Yet one fault he had, and that one was a thumper.
Perhaps you may ask if the man was a miser ?

I answer, no, no, for he always was wiser :

Too courteous, perhaps, or obligingly flat ?

His very worst foe can't accuse him of that :

Perhaps he confided in men as they go,

And so was too foolishly honest ? Ah, no !

Then what was his failing ? come, tell it and burn
ye,—

He was, could he help it ? a special attorney.

Here Reynolds is laid, and, to tell you my mind,
He has not left a wiser or better behind :

His pencil was striking, resistless, and grand,
His manners were gentle, complying, and bland ;
Still born to improve us in every part,
His pencil our faces, his manners our heart :

To coxcombs averse, yet most civilly steering,
When they judg'd without skill he was still hard
of hearing ;

When they talk'd of their Raphaels, Correggios,
and stuff,

He shifted his trumpet, and only took snuff*.

THE ART OF PRESERVING HEALTH.

IN FOUR BOOKS.

[Conclusion of Book IV.]

Who pines with love, or in lascivious flames
Consumes, is with his own consent undone :
He chooses to be wretched, to be mad,
And warn'd proceeds and wilful to his fate.
But there's a passion whose tempestuous sway
Tears up each virtue planted in the breast,
And shakes to ruins proud philosophy :
For pale and trembling anger rushes in
With falt'ring speech, and eyes that wildly stare,
Fierce as the tiger, madder than the seas,
Desperate and arm'd with more than human strength.

How soon the calm, humane, and polish'd man
Forgets compunction, and starts up a fiend !
Who pines in love, or wastes with silent cares,
Envy or ignominy, or tender grief,
Slowly descends and ling'ring to the shades ;
But he whom anger stings, drops, if he dies,
At once, and rushes apoplectic down,

* These were the last lines Goldsmith ever wrote. He had written half a line more of this character, when he was seized with the fever which carried him off in a few days to the grave.
He intended to have concluded with his own character,— MALONE.

Or a fierce fever hurries him to hell :
 For as the body thro' unnumber'd strings
 Reverberates each vibration of the soul ;
 As is the passion such is still the pain
 The body feels, or chronic or acute ;
 And oft a sudden storm at once o'erpow'rs
 The life, or gives your reason to the winds.
 Such fates attend the rash alarm of fear
 And sudden grief, and rage and sudden joy.

There are mean-time to whom the boist'rous
 Is health, and only fills the sails of life : [fit
 For where the mind a torpid winter leads,
 Wrapt in a body corpulent and cold,
 And each clogg'd function lazily moves on,—
 A gen'rous sally spurns th' incumbent load,
 Unlocks the breast, and gives a cordial glow.
 But if your wrathful blood is apt to boil,
 Or are your nerves too irritably strung,
 Wave all dispute ; be cautious if you joke ;
 Keep Lent for ever, and forswear the bowl ;
 For one rash moment sends you to the shades,
 Or shatters ev'ry hopeful scheme of life,
 And gives to horror all your days to come.
 Fate arm'd with thunder, fire, and ev'ry plague
 That ruins, tortures, or distracts mankind,
 And makes the happy wretched in an hour,
 O'erwhelms you not with woes so horrible
 As your own wrath, nor gives more sudden blows.

While choler works, good friend ! you may be
 wrong ;

Distrust yourself, and sleep before you fight :
 Tis not too late to-morrow to be brave ;
 If honour bids, to-morrow kill or die.
 But calm advice against a raging fit
 Avails too little : and it braves the pow'r
 Of all that ever taught in prose or song
 To tame the fiend that sleeps a gentle lamb
 And wakes a lion. Unprovok'd and calm,
 You reason well, see as you ought to see,
 And wonder at the madness of mankind ;
 Seiz'd with the common rage you soon forget
 The speculations of your wiser hours :
 Beset with furies of all deadly shapes,
 Fierce and insidious, violent and slow,
 With all that urge or lure us on to fate,
 What refuge shall we seek, what arms prepare ?
 Where reason proves too weak, or void of wiles
 To cope with subtle or impetuous pow'rs,
 I would invoke new passions to your aid ;
 With indignation would extinguish fear,
 With fear or gen'rous pity vanquish rage
 And love with pride, and force to force oppose.

There is a charm, a pow'r that sways the
 breast,

Bids ev'ry passion revel or be still,
 Inspires with rage, or all your cares dissolves,
 Can sooth distraction, and almost despair :
 That pow'r is music ; far beyond the stretch
 Of those unmeaning warbles on our stage,
 Those clumsy heroes, those fat-headed gods,
 Who move no passion justly but contempt,
 Who like our dancers (light indeed and strong !)
 Do wondrous feats, but never heard of grace.
 The fault is ours ; we bear those monstrous arts,

! Good heaven ! we praise them ; we, with loudest peals,

Applaud the fool that highest lifts his heels,
 And, with insipid show of rapture, die
 Of idiot notes impertinently long.
 But he the Muse's laurel justly shares,
 A poet he, and touch'd with heaven's own fire,
 Who, with bold rage or solemn pomp of sounds,
 Inflames, exalts, and ravishes the soul ;
 Now tender, plaintive, sweet almost to pain,
 In loves dissolves you ; now, in sprightly strains,
 Breathes a gay rapture thro' your thrilling
 breast ;

Or melts the heart with airs divinely sad ;
 Or wakes to horror the tremendous strings.
 Such was the bard, whose heav'nly strains of old
 Appeas'd the fiend of melancholy Saul ;
 Such was, if old and heathen fame say true,
 The man who bade the Theban domes ascend,
 And tam'd the savage nations with his song ;
 And such the Thracian whose melodious lyre,
 Tun'd to soft wo, made all the mountains weep,
 Sooth'd ev'n th' inexorable pow'rs of hell,
 And half redeem'd his lost Eurydice.
 Music exalts each joy, allays each grief,
 Expels diseases, softens ev'ry pain,
 Subdues the rage of poison and the plague ;
 And hence the wise of ancient days ador'd
 One pow'r of physic, melody, and song.

SAMUEL JOHNSON.

 Born 1709.—Died 1784.

LONDON : A POEM.

In imitation of the third Satire of Juvenal.

THOUGH grief and fondness in my breast rebel,
 When injur'd Thales bids the town farewell,
 Yet still my calmer thoughts his choice com-
 mend,

I praise the hermit, but regret the friend,
 Resolv'd at length from vice and London far
 To breathe in distant fields a purer air,
 And, fix'd on Cambria's solitary shore,
 Give to St. David one true Briton more.

For who would leave, unbrib'd, Hibernia's
 land,

Or change the rocks of Scotland for the Strand ?
 There none are swept by sudden fate away,
 But all, whom hunger spares, with age decay :
 Here malice, rapine, accident, conspire,
 And now a rabble rages, now a fire ;
 Their ambush here relentless ruffians lay,
 And here the fell attorney prowls for prey ;
 Here falling houses thunder on your head,
 And here a female atheist talks you dead.

While Thales waits the wherry that contains
 Of dissipated wealth the small remains,
 On Thames's banks, in silent thought, we stood
 Where Greenwich smiles upon the silver flood ;

Struck with the seat that gave Eliza* birth,
We kneel, and kiss the consecrated earth ;
In pleasing dreams the blissful age renew,
And call Britannia's glories back to view ;
Behold her cross triumphant on the main,
The guard of commerce, and the dread of Spain,
Ere masquerades debauch'd, excise oppress'd,
Or English honour grew a standing jest.

A transient calm the happy scenes bestow,
And for a moment lull the sense of woe.
At length awaking, with contemptuous frown,
Indignant Thales eyes the neighb'ring town.

Since worth, he cries, in these degenerate days
Wants even the cheap reward of empty praise ;
In those curs'd walls, devote to vice and gain,
Since unrewarded science toils in vain ;
Since hope but soothes to double my distress,
And every moment leaves my little less ;
While yet my steady steps no staff sustains,
And life still vigorous revels in my veins ;
Grant me, kind Heaven, to find some happier
place,

Where honesty and sense are no disgrace ;
Some pleasing bank where verdant osiers play,
Some peaceful vale with nature's paintings gay ;
Where once the harass'd Briton found repose,
And safe in poverty defied his foes ;
Some secret cell, ye power's, indulgent give,
Let — live here, for — has learn'd to live.
Here let those reign, whom pensions can incite
To vote a patriot black, a courtier white ;
Explain their country's dear-bought rights away,
And plead for pirates in the face of day ;
With slavish tenets taint our poison'd youth.
And lend a lie the confidence of truth.

Let such raise palaces, and manors buy,
Collect a tax, or form a lottery ;
With warbling eunuchs fill our silenc'd stage,
And lull to servitude a thoughtless age.

Heroes, proceed ! what bounds your pride shall hold ?
What check restrain your thirst of pow'r and
gold ?

Behold rebellious virtue quite o'erthrown,
Behold our fame, our wealth, our lives your own.

To such, the plunder of a land is giv'n,
When public crimes inflame the wrath of Heaven :

But what, my friend, what hope remains for me,
Who start at theft, and blush at perjury ?
Who scarce forbear, though Britain's court he
sing,

To pluck a titled poet's borrow'd wing ;
A statesman's logic unconvinc'd can hear,
And dare to slumber o'er the Gazetteer ;
Despise a fool in half his pension dress'd,
And strive in vain to laugh at Clodio's jest.

Others with softer smiles, and subtler art,
Can sap the principles, or taint the heart ;
With more address a lover's note convey.
Or bribe a virgin's innocence away :
Well may they rise, while I, whose rustic tongue
Ne'er knew to puzzle right or varnish wrong,

* Queen Elizabeth, born at Greenwich.

Spurn'd as a beggar, dreaded as a spy,
Live unregarded, unlamented die.

For what but social guilt the friend endears ?
Who shares Orgilio's crimes, his fortune shares.
But thou, should tempting villany present
All Marlborough hoarded, or all Villiers spent,
Turn from the glittering bribe thy scornful eye,
Nor sell for gold, what gold could never buy,
The peaceful slumber, self-approving day,
Unstained fame, and conscience ever gay.

The cheated nation's happy fav'rites, see !
Mark whom the great caress, who frown on me !
London ! the needy villain's gen'ral home,
The common-sewer of Paris and of Rome ;
With eager thirst, by folly or by fate,
Sucks in the dregs of each corrupted state.
Forgive my transports on a theme like this,
I cannot bear a French metropolis.

Illustrious Edward ! from the realms of day,
The land of heroes and of saints survey ;
Nor hope the British lineaments to trace,
The rustic grandeur, or the surly grace ;
But, lost in thoughtless ease and empty show,
Behold the warrior dwindled to a beau ;
Sense, freedom, piety, refin'd away,
Of France the mimic, and of Spain the prey.

All that at home no more can beg or steal,
Or like a gibbet better than a wheel :
Hiss'd from the stage or hooted from the court,
Their air, their dress, their politics, import ;
Obsequious, artful, voluble, and gay.
On Britain's fond credulity they prey.
No gainful trade their industry can scape,
They sing, they dance, clean shoes, or cure a clap :

All sciences a fasting Monsieur knows,
And, bid him go to hell, to hell he goes.

Ah ! what avails it, that, from slavery far,
I drew the breath of life in English air ;
Was early taught a Briton's right to prize,
And lisp the tale of Henry's victories ;
If the gull'd conqueror receives the chain,
And flattery prevails when arms are vain ?
Studious to please, and ready to submit ;
The supple Gaul was born a parasite :

Still to his int'rest true, where'er he goes,
Wit, brav'ry, worth, his lavish tongue bestows :
In ev'ry face a thousand graces shine,
From ev'ry tongue flows harmony divine.
These arts in vain our rugged natives try,
Strain out with falt'ring diffidence a lie,
And get a kick for awkward flattery.

Besides, with justice, this discerning age
Admires their wondrous talents for the stage :

Well may they venture on the mimic's art,
Who play from morn to night a borrow'd part ;
Practis'd their master's notions to embrace,
Repeat his maxims, and reflect his face ;
With ev'ry wild absurdity comply,
And view each object with another's eye ;
To shake with laughter ere the jest they hear,
To pour at will the counterfeited tear ;
And, as their patron hints the cold or heat,
To shake in dog-days, in December sweat.

How, when competitors like these contend,
Can surly virtue hope to fix a friend ;
Slaves that with serious impudence beguile,
And lie without a blush, without a smile :
Exalt each trifle, ev'ry vice adore,
Your taste in snuff, your judgment in a whore :
Can Balbo's eloquence applaud, and swear,
He gropes his breeches with a monarch's air.

Forarts like these preferr'd, admir'd, caress'd,
They first invade your table, then your breast ;
Explore your secrets with insidious art,
Watch the weak hour, and ransack all the heart ;

Then soon your ill-plac'd confidence repay,
Commence your lords, and govern or betray.

By numbers here from shame or censure free,
All crimes are safe but hated poverty.
This, only this, the rigid law pursues,
This, only this, provokes the snarling muse.
The sober trader at a tatter'd cloak
Wakes from his dream, and labours for a joke ;
With brisker air the silken courtiers gaze,
And turn the varied taunt a thousand ways.
O fall the griefs that harass the distress'd,
Sure the most bitter is a scornful jest ;
Fate never wounds more deep the gen'rous heart,

Than when a blockhead's insult points the dart.

Has Heaven reserv'd, in pity to the poor,
No pathless waste, or undiscover'd shore ?
No secret islands in the boundless main ?
No peaceful desert yet unclaim'd by Spain ?
Quick let us rise, the happy seats explore,
And bear oppression's insolence no more.
'This mournful truth is every where confess'd,
Slow rises worth by poverty depress'd :
But here more slow, where all are slaves to gold,
Where looks are merchandise, and smiles are sold :

Where won by bribes, by flatteries implor'd,
The groom retails the favours of his lord.

But hark ! th' affrighted crowd's tumultuous cries

Roll through the streets, and thunder to the skies :

Rais'd from some pleasing dream of wealth and pow'r,

Some pompous palace or some blissful bower,
Aghast you start, and scarce with aching sight
Sustain th' approaching fire's tremendous light ;
Swift from pursuing horrors take your way,
And leave your little all to flames a prey ;
'Then through the world a wretched vagrant roam,

For where can starving merit find a home ?
In vain your mournful narrative disclose,
While all neglect, and most insult your woes.
Should Heaven's just bolts Orgilio's wealth con- found,

And spread his flaming palace on the ground,
Swift o'er the land the dismal rumour flies,
And public mournings pacify the skies ;
The laureate tribe in venal verse relate,
How virtue wars with persecuting fate ;

With well-feign'd gratitude the pension'd band
Refund the plunder of the beggar'd land.

See ! while he builds, the gaudy vassals come,
And crowd with sudden wealth the rising dome ;
The price of boroughs and of souls restore ;
And raise his treasures higher than before :
Now bless'd with all the baubles of the great,
The polish'd marble and the shining plate,
Orgilio sees the golden pile aspire,
And hopes from angry Heav'n another fire.

Couldst thou resign the park and play content,
For the fair banks of Severn or of Trent ;
There might'st thou find some elegant retreat,
Some hireling senator's deserted seat ;
And stretch thy prospects o'er the smiling land,
For less than rent the dungeons of the Strand ;
There prune thy walk, support thy drooping flowers,

Direct thy rivulets, and twine thy bowers :
And, while thy grounds a cheap repast afford,
Despise the dainties of a venal lord :
There ev'ry bush with nature's music rings,
There ev'ry breeze bears health upon its wings ;
On all thy hours security shall smile,
And bless thine evening walk and morning toil.
Prepare for death if here at night you roam,
And sign your will before you sup from home.
Some fiery fop, with new commission vain,
Who sleeps on brambles till he kills his man ;
Some frolic drunkard, reeling from a feast,
Provokes a broil, and stabs you for a jest.
Yet ev'n these heroes, mischievously gay ;
Lords of the street and terrors of the way ;
Flush'd as they are with folly, youth, and wine,

Their prudent insults to the poor confine ;
Afar they mark the flambeau's bright approach,
And shun the shining train, and golden coach.

In vain, these dangers past, your doors you close,

And hope the balmy blessings of repose ;
Cruel with guilt, and daring with despair,
The midnight murd'rer bursts the faithless bar ;
Invades the sacred hour of silent rest,
And leaves, unseen, a dagger in your breast.

Scarce can our fields, such crowds at Tyburn die,

With hemp the gallows and the fleet supply.
Propose your schemes, ye senatorian band,
Whose ways and means support the sinking land,
Lest ropes be wanting in the tempting spring,
To rig another convoy for the king.

A single jail, in ALFRED's golden reign,
Could half the nation's criminals contain ;
Fair Justice, then, without constraint ador'd,
Held high the steady scale, but sheath'd the sword ;

No spies were paid, no special juries known,
Blest age ! but ah ! how diff'rent from our own !

Much could I add,—but see the boat at hand,
The tide retiring calls me from the land :
Farewell !—When youth, and health, and for- tune spent,
Thou fly'st for refuge to the wilds of Kent ;

And, tir'd like me with follies and with crimes,
In angry numbers warn'st succeeding times ;
Then shall thy friend, nor thou refuse his aid,
Still sue to vice, forsake his Cambrian shade ;
In virtue's cause once more exert his rage.
Thy satire point, and animate thy page.

VANITY OF HUMAN WISHES.

In imitation of the tenth Satire of Juvenal.

LET observation, with extensive view,
Survey mankind from China to Peru ;
Remark each anxious toil, each eager strife
And watch the busy scenes of crowded life ;
Then say how hope and fear, desire and hate,
O'erspread with snares the clouded maze of fate,
Where wav'ring man, betray'd by vent'rous
pride

To chase the dreary paths without a guide,
As treach'rous phantoms in the mist delude,
Shuns fancied ills, or chases airy good ;
How rarely reason guides the stubborn choice,
Rules the bold hand, or prompts the suppliant
voice ;

How nations sink by darling schemes oppress'd,
When vengeance listens to the fool's request.
Fate wings with ev'ry wish th' afflictive dart,
Each gift of nature and each grace of art ;
With fatal heat impetuous courage glows,
With fatal sweetness elocution flows,
Impeachment stops the speaker's pow'rful breath,
And restless fire precipitates on death.

But, scarce observ'd, the knowing and the Fall in the gen'ral massacre of gold ; [bold
Wide-wasting pest ! that rages unconfin'd,
And crowds with crimes the records of mankind.
For gold his sword the hireling ruffian draws,
For gold the hireling judge distorts the laws ;
Wealth heap'd on wealth, nor truth nor safety
buys,

The dangers gather as the treasures rise.

Let hist'ry tell where rival kings command,
And dubious title shakes the madd'd land,
When statutes glean the refuse of the sword,
How much more safe the vassal than the lord ;
Low skulks the hind beneath the rage of power,
And leaves the wealthy traitor in the Tower,
Untouch'd his cottage, and his slumbers sound,
Though confiscation's vultures hover round.

The needy traveller, serape and gay,
Walks the wild heath and sings his toil away.
Does envy seize thee ? crush th' upbraiding joy,
Increase his riches, and his peace destroy ;
Now fears in dire vicissitude invade,
The rustling brake alarms, and quiv'ring shade,
Nor light nor darkness bring his pain relief,
One shows the plunder, and one hides the thief.

Yet still one gen'ral cry the skies assails,
And gain and grandeur load the tainted gales ;
Few know the toiling statesman's fear or care,
Th' insidious rival and the gaping heir.
Once more, Democritus, arise on earth,
With cheerful wisdom and instructive mirth,

See motley life in modern trappings dress'd,
And feed with varied fools th' eternal jest :
Thou who couldst laugh, where want enchain'd caprice,

Toil crush'd conceit, and man was of a piece ;
Where wealth unlov'd without a mourner died ;
And scarce a sycophant was fed by pride ;
Where ne'er was known the form of mock debate,

Or seen a new-made mayor's unwieldy state ;
Where change of fav'rites made no change of
laws,

And senates heard before they judg'd a cause ;
How wouldst thou shake at Britain's modish tribe [gibe ?

Dart the quick taunt, and edge the piercing
Attentive truth and nature to descry,
And pierce each scene with philosophic eye,
To thee were solemn toys, or empty show,
The robes of pleasure, and the veils of woe ;
All aid the farce, and all thy mirth maintain,
Whose joys are causeless, or whose griefs are
vain,

Such was the scorn that fill'd the sage's mind,
Renew'd at ev'ry glance on human-kind ;
How just that scorn ere yet thy voice declare,
Search ev'ry state, and canvass ev'ry pray'r.

Unnumber'd suppliants crowd preferment's
gate,

Athirst for wealth, and burning to be great :
Delusive fortune hears th' incessant call,
They mount, they shine, evaporate, and fall,
On ev'ry stage the foes of peace attend.
Hate dogs their flight, and insult mocks their
end.

Love ends with hope, the sinking statesman's
door

Pours in the morning worshipper no more ;
For growing names the weekly scribbler lies,
To growing wealth the dedicat'or flies ;
From ev'ry room descends the painted face,
That hung the bright palladium of the place ;
And, smok'd in kitchens, or in auctions sold,
To better features yields the frame of gold ;
For now no more we trace in ev'ry line,
Heroic worth, benevolence divine :
The form distorted justifies the fall,
And detestation rids th' indignant wall.

But will not Britain hear the last appeal,
Sign her foes' doom, or guard her fav'rites zeal ?
Through freedom's sons no more remonstrance
rings,

Degrading nobles and controlling kings
Our supple tribes repress their patriot throats,
And ask no questions but the price of votes ;
With weekly libels and septennial ale,
Their wish is full to riot and to rail.

In full-blown dignity, see Wolsey stand,
Law in his voice, and fortune in his hand :
To him the church, the realm, their pow'r's con-
sign,

Through him the rays of regal bounty shine ;
Turn'd by his nod the stream of honour flows,
His smile alone security bestows :

Still to new heights his restless wishes tow'r,
 Claim leads to claim, and pow'r advances pow'r ;
 Till conquest unresisted ceas'd to please,
 And rights submitted, left him none to seize :
 At length his sov'reign frowns—the train of state [hate.

Mark the keen glance, and watch the sign to Where'er he turns, he meets a stranger's eye.
 His suplicants scorn him, and his followers fly ;
 Now drops at once the pride of awful state,
 The golden canopy, the glitt'ring plate,
 The regal palace, the luxurious board,
 The liv'ried army, and the menial lord.

With age, with cares, with maladies oppress'd,
 He seeks the refuge of monastic rest.

Grief aids disease, remember'd folly stings,
 And his last sighs reproach the faith of kings.

Speak thou whose thoughts at humble peace
 repine, [thine ?

Shall Wolsey's wealth with Wolsey's end be
 Or liv' st thou now, with safer pride content,
 The wisest justice on the banks of Trent ?
 For, why did Wolsey, near the steep's of fate,
 On weak foundations raise th' enormous weight ?
 Why but to sink beneath misfortune's blow,
 With louder ruin to the gulfs below ?

What gave great Villiers to th' assassin's
 knife,

And fix'd disease on Harley's closing life ?
 What murder'd Wentworth, and what exil'd
 Hyde,

By kings protected, and to kings allied ?
 What but their wish indulg'd in courts to shine,
 And pow'r too great to keep, or to resign ?

When first the college rolls receive his name,
 The young enthusiast quits his ease for fame ;
 Resistless burns the fever of renown,
 Caught from the strong contagion of the gown :
 O'er Bodley's dome his future labors spread,
 And Bacon's* mansion trembles o'er his head.
 Are these thy views ? Proceed, illustrious youth,
 And virtue guard thee to the throne of truth !
 Yet should thy soul indulge the gen'rous heat,
 Till captive science yields her last retreat ;
 Should reason guide thee with her brightest ray,
 And pour on misty doubt resistless day ;
 Should no false kindness lure to loose delight,
 Nor praise relax, nor difficulty fright ;
 Should tempting novelty thy cell refrain,
 And sloth effuse her opiate fumes in vain ;
 Should beauty blunt on fops her fatal dart,
 Nor claim the triumph of a letter'd heart ;
 Should no disease thy torpid veins invade,
 Nor melancholy's phantoms haunt thy shade ;
 Yet hope not life from grief or danger free,
 Nor think the doom of man revers'd for thee :
 Deign on the passing world to turn thine eyes,
 And pause awhile from learning to be wise ;
 There mark what ills the scholar's life assail,
 Toil, envy, want, the patron, and the jail.

* There is a tradition, that the study of friar Bacon, built on an arch over the bridge, will fall when a greater man than Bacon shall pass under it.

See nations slowly wise and meanly just,
 To buried merit raise the tardy bust.
 If dreams yet flatter, once again attend,
 Hear Lydiat's life, and Galileo's end.

Nor deem, when learning her last price bestows,

The glittering eminence exempt from foes ;
 See when the vulgar 'scape, despis'd or aw'd,
 Rebellion's vengeful talons seize on Laud.
 From meaner minds, though smaller fines content,
 The plunder'd palace, or sequester'd rent :
 Mark'd out by dang'rous parts, he meets the shock,

And fatal learning leads him to the block :

Around his tomb let art and genius weep,
 But hear his death, ye blockheads hear and sleep.

The festal blazes, the triumphal show,

The ravish'd standard, and the captive foe,
 The senate's thanks, the gazette's pompous tale,
 With force resistless o'er the brave prevail.
 Such bribes the rapid Greek o'er Asia whirl'd,
 For such the steady Roman shook the world ;
 For such in distant lands the Britons shine,
 And stain with blood the Danube or the Rhine ;
 This pow'r has praise, that virtue scarce can warm,

Till fame supplies the universal charm.

Yet reason frowns on war's unequal game,

Where wasted nations raise a single name ;

And mortgag'd states their grandsires' wreaths regret,

From age to age in everlasting debt ;

Wreaths which at last the dear-bought right convey

To rust on medals, or on stones decay.

On what foundation stands the warrior's
 pride,

How just his hopes, let Swedish Charles decide ;

A frame of adamant, a soul of fire,

No dangers fright him, and no labors tire,

O'er love, o'er fear, extends his wide domain,

Unconquer'd lord of pleasure and of pain ;

No joys to him pacific sceptres yield,

War sounds the trump, he rushes to the field ;

Behold surrounding kings their pow'r combine,

And one capitulate, and one resign :

Peace courts his hand, but spreads her charms in
 vain ;

" Think nothing gain'd," he cries, " till nought remain,

On Moscow's walls till Gothic standards fly,

And all be mine beneath the polar sky."

The march begins in military state,

And nations on his eye suspended wait ;

Stern famine guards the solitary coast,

And winter barricades the realms of frost ;

He comes, nor want nor cold his course delay ;—

Hide, blushing glory, hide Pultowa's day :

The vanquish'd hero leaves his broken bands,

And shows his miseries in distant lands ;

Condemn'd a needy supplicant to wait,

While ladies interpose, and slaves debate.

But did not chance at length her error mend ?

Did no subverted empire mark his end ?

Did rival monarchs give the fatal wound ?
Or hostile millions press him to the ground ?
His fall was destined to a barren strand,
A petty fortress, and a dubious hand ;
He left the name, at which the world grew pale,
To point a moral, or adorn a tale.

All times their scenes of pompous woes afford,
From Persia's tyrant to Bavaria's lord.
In gay hostility and barb'rous pride,
With half mankind embattled at his side,
Great Xerxes comes to seize the certain prey,
And starves exhausted regions in his way ;
Attendant flatt'ry counts his myriads o'er,
Till counted myriads soothe his pride no more :
Fresh praise is tried till madness fires his mind,
The waves he lashes, and enchains the wind ;
New pow'rs are claim'd, new pow'rs are still be-
stow'd,

Till rude resistance lops the spreading god ;
The daring Greeks deride the martial show,
And heap their valleys with the gaudy foe ;
Th' insulted sea with humbler thoughts he gains,
A single skiff to speed his flight remains ; [coast
Th' encumber'd oar scarce leaves the dreaded
Through purple billows and a floating host.

The bold Bavarian, in a luckless hour,
Tries the dread summits of Cæsarean pow'r,
With unexpected legions bursts away,
And sees defenceless realms receive his sway :
Short sway ! fair Austria spreads her mournful
charms,

The queen, the beauty, sets the world in arms ;
From hill to hill the beacon's rousing blaze
Spreads wide the hope of plunder and of praise ;
The fierce Croation, and the wild Hussar,
With all the sons of ravage crowd the war ;
The baffled prince, in honour's flatt'ring bloom
Of hasty greatness, finds the fatal doom ;
His foes' derision, and his subjects' blame,
And steals to death from anguish and from shame.

"Enlarge my life with multitude of days."

In health, in sickness, thus the suppliant prays
Hides from himself his state, and shuns to know,
That life protracted is protracted woe.
Time hovers o'er, impatient to destroy,
And shuts up all the passages of joy :
In vain their gifts the bounteous seasons pour,
The fruit autumnal, and the vernal flow'r ;
With listless eyes the dotard views the store,
He views, and wonders that they please no more ;
Now pall the tasteless meats, and joyless wines,
And luxury with sighs her slave resigns.
Approach, ye minstrels, try the soothing strain,
Diffuse the tuneful lenitives of pain :
No sounds, alas ! would touch th' impervious ear,
Though dancing mountains witness'd Orpheus
near ;

Nor lute nor lyre his feeble pow'rs attend,
Nor sweeter music of a virtuous friend ;
But everlasting dictates crowd his tongue,
Perversely grave, or positively wrong.
The still returning tale, and ling'ring jest,
Perplex the fawning niece, and pamper'd guest,

While growing hopes scarce awe the gath'ring
sneer,

And scarce a legacy can bribe to hear :
The watchful guests still hint the last offence ;
The daughter's petulance, the son's expense,
Improve his heady rage with treach'rous skill,
And mould his passions till they make his will.

Unnumber'd maladies his joints invade,
Lay siege to life, and press the dire blockade ;
But unextinguish'd av'rice still remains,
And dreaded losses aggravate his pains ;
He turns, with anxious heart and crippled hands,
His bonds of debt, and mortgages of lands ;
Or views his coffers with suspicious eyes,
Unlocks his gold, and counts it till he dies.

But grant, the virtues of a temp'rate prime
Bless with an age exempt from scorn or crime :
An age that melts with unperceiv'd decay,
And glides in modest innocence away ;
Whose peaceful day benevolence endears,
Whose night congratulating conscience cheers ;
The gen'ral fav'rite as the gen'ral friend :
Such age there is, and who shall wish its end ?

Yet ev'n on this her load misfortune flings,
To press the weary minutes' flagging wings ;
New sorrow rises as the day returns,
A sister sickens, or a daughter mourns.
Now kindred merit fills the sable bier,
Now lacerated friendship claims a tear ;
Year chases year, decay pursues decay,
Still drops some joy from with'ring life away ;
New forms arise, and diff'rent views engage,
Superfluous lags the vet'ran on the stage,
Till pitying nature signs the last release.
And bids afflicted worth retire to peace.

But few there are whom hours like these await,

Who set unclouded in the gulfs of fate.
From Lydia's monarch should the search descend,

By Solon caution'd to regard his end,
In life's last scene what prodigies surprise,
Fears of the brave, and follies of the wise !
From Marlborough's eyes the streams of dotage
flow.

And Swift expires a driv'ler and a show.

The teeming mother, anxious for her race,
Begs for each birth the fortune of a face ;
Yet Vane could tell what ills from beauty spring ;
And Sedley curs'd the form that pleas'd a king.
Ye nymphs of rosy lips and radiant eyes,
Whom pleasure keeps too busy to be wise ;
Whom joys with soft varieties invite,
By day the frolic, and the dance by night ;
Who frown with vanity, who smile with art,
And ask the latest fashion of the heart ;
What care, what rules, your heedless charms shall save, [slave?

Each nymph your rival, and each youth your
Against your fame with fondness hate combines,
The rival batters, and the lover mines.
With distant voice neglected virtue calls,
Less heard and less, the faint remonstrance falls ;

Tir'd with contempt, she quits the slipp'ry rein,
And pride and prudence take her seat in vain.
In crowd at once, where none the pass defend,
The harmless freedom, and the private friend.
The guardians yield, by force superior plied :
To int'rest, prudence ; and to flatt'ry, pride.
Here beauty falls betray'd, despis'd, distress'd,
And hissing infamy proclaims the rest.

Where then shall hope and fear their objects find ?

Must dull suspense corrupt the stagnant mind ?
Must helpless man, in ignorance sedate,
Roll darkling down the torrent of his fate ?
Must no dislike alarm, no wishes rise,
No cries invoke the mercies of the skies ?
Inquirer, cease ; petitions yet remain
Which Heav'n may hear, nor deem religion vain.
Still raise for good the supplicating voice,
But leave to Heav'n the measure and the choice :
Safe in his pow'r, whose eyes discern afar
The secret ambush of a specious pray'r ;
Implore his aid, in his decision, rest,
Secure, whate'er he gives, he gives the best.
Yet, when the sense of sacred presence fires,
And strong devotion to the skies aspires,
Pour forth thy fervours for a healthful mind,
Obedient passions, and a will resign'd ;
For love, which scarce collective man can fill ;
For patience, sov'reign o'er transmuted ill ;
For faith, that panting for a happier seat
Counts death kind nature's signal of retreat :
These goods for man the laws of Heav'n ordain,
These goods he grants, who grants the pow'r to gain ;

With these celestial wisdom calms the mind,
And makes the happiness she does not find.

LEONIDAS,

A POEM, IN TWELVE BOOKS.

[From the opening of Book I.]

THE virtuous Spartan, who resign'd his life
To save his country at th' Oetæan straits,
Thermopylæ, when all the peopled east
In arms with Xerxes fill'd the Grecian plains,
O Muse, record ! The Hellespont they pass'd, O'erpow'ring Thrace. The dreadful tidings swift

To Corinth flew. Her Isthmus was the seat
Of Grecian council. Alpheus thence returns
To Lacedæmon. In assembly full
He finds the Spartan people with their kings ;
Their kings, who boast an origin divine,
From Hercules descended. They, the sons
Of Lacedæmon had conven'd, to learn

3 T 2

The sacred mandates of th' immortal gods,
That morn expected from the Delphian dome.
But Alpheus sudden their attention drew,
And thus address'd them : For immediate war,
My countrymen, prepare. Barbarian tents
Already fill the trembling bounds of Thrace.
The Isthmian council hath decreed to guard
Thermopylæ, the Locrian gate of Greece.

Here Alpheus paus'd. Leutyichides, who shar'd

With great Leonidas the sway, uprose
And spake. Ye citizens of Sparta, hear.
Why from her bosom should Laconia send
Her valiant race to wage a distant war Beyond the Isthmus ? There the gods have plac'd

Our native barrier. In this favour'd land,
Which Pelops govern'd, us of Doric blood
That Isthmus inaccessible secures.
There let our standards rest. Your solid
strength,

If once you scatter in defence of states
Remote and feeble, you betray your own,
And merit Jove's derision. With assent
The Spartans heard. Leonidas reply'd :

O most ungen'rous counsel ! Most unwise !
Shall we, confining to that Isthmian fence
Our efforts, leave beyond it ev'ry state
Disown'd, expos'd ? Shall Athens, while her fleets
Unceasing watch th' innumerable foes,
And trust th' impending dangers of the field
To Sparta's well-known valour, shall she hear,
That to barbarian violence we leave
Her unprotected walls ? Her hoary sires,
Her helpless matrons, and their infant race,
To servitude and shame ? Her guardian gods
Will yet preserve them. Neptune o'er his main,
With Pallas, pow'r of wisdom, at their helms,
Will soon transport them to a happier clime,
Safe from insulting foes, from false allies,
And eleutherian Jove will bless their flight.
Then shall we feel the unresisted force
Of Persia's navy, deluging our plains
With inexhausted numbers. Half the Greeks,
By us betray'd to bondage, will support
A Persian lord, and lift th' avenging spear
For our destruction. But, my friends, reject Such mean, such dang'rous counsels, which would blast

Your long-establish'd honours, and assist
The proud invader. O eternal king
Of gods and mortals, elevate our minds !
Each low and partial passion thence expel !
Greece is our gen'ral mother. All must join
In her defence, or, sep'rate each must fall.

This said, authority and shame control'd
The mute assembly. Agis too appear'd.
He from the Delphian cavern was return'd,
Where, taught by Phœbus on Parnassian cliffs,
The Pythian maid unfolded Heav'n's decrees.
He came ; but discontent and grief o'ercast
His anxious brow. Reluctant was his tongue, Yet seem'd full charg'd to speak. Religious dread

Each heart relax'd. On ev'ry visage hung
Sad expectation. Not a whisper told
The silent fear. Intensely all were fix'd,
All still as death, to hear the solemn tale.
As o'er the western waves, when ev'ry storm
Is hush'd within its cavern, and a breeze,
Soft-breathing, lightly with its wings along
The slacken'd cordage glides, the sailor's ear
Perceives no sound throughout the vast expanse ;

None; but the murmurs of the sliding prow,
Which slowly parts the smooth and yielding
main :

So through the wide and listening crowd no
sound,

No voice, but thine, O Agis, broke the air !
While thus the issue of thy awful charge
Thy lips deliver'd. Spartans, in your name
I went to Delphi. I inquir'd the doom
Of Lacedemon from th' impending war,
When in these words the deity reply'd :

" Inhabitations of Sparta. Persia's arms
Shall lay your proud and ancient seat in dust ;
Unless a king, from Hercules deriv'd,
Cause Lacedemon for his death to mourn."

As when the hand of Perseus had disclos'd
The snakes of dire Medusa, all who view'd
The Gorgon features, were congeal'd to stone,
With ghastly eyeballs on the hero bent,
And horror, living in their marble form ;
Thus with amazement rooted, where they stood,
In speechless terror frozen, on their kings
The Spartans gaz'd ; but soon their anxious looks
All on the great Leonidas unite,
Long known his country's refuge. He alone
Remains unshaken. Rising he displays
His godlike presence. Dignity and grace
Adorn his frame, where manly beauty joins
With strength Herculean. On his aspect shine
Sublimest virtue, and desire of fame,
Where justice gives the laurel, in his eye
The inextinguishable spark, which fires
The souls of patriots ; while his brow supports
Undaunted valour, and contempt of death.
Serene he cast his looks around, and spake :

Why this astonishment on ev'ry face,
Ye men of Sparta ? Does the name of death
Create this fear and wonder ? O my friends,
Why do we labour through the arduous paths,
Which lead to virtue ? Fruitless were the toil,
Above the reach of human feet were plac'd
The distant summit, if the fear of death
Could intercept our passage. But a frown
Of unavailing terror he assumes,
To shake the firmness of a mind, which knows
That, wanting virtue, life is pain and woe,
That, wanting liberty ev'n virtue mourns,
And looks around for happiness in vain.
Then speak, O Sparta, and demand my life !
My heart, exulting, answers to thy call,
And smiles on glorious fate. To live with fame,
The gods allow to many ? but to die
With equal lustre is a blessing, Jove
Among the choicest of his boons reserves,

Which but on few his sparing hand bestows.

Salvation thus to Sparta he proclaim'd.
Joy, wrapt awhile in admiration, paus'd
Suspending praise ; nor praise at last resounds
In high acclaim to rend the arch of heav'n :
A reverential murmur breathes applause.

ADMIRAL HOSIER'S GHOST.

As near Porto-Bello lying
On the gently-swelling flood,
At midnight with streamers flying
Our triumphant navy rode :
There while Vernon sat all-glorious
From the Spaniards' late defeat :
And his crews, with shouts victorious,
Drank success to England's fleet :

On a sudden, shrilly sounding,
Hideous yells and shrieks were heard ;
Then each heart with fear confounding,
A sad troop of ghosts appear'd,
All in dreary hammocks shrouded,
Which for winding-sheets they wore,
And with looks by sorrow clouded
Frowning on that hostile shore.

On them gleam'd the moon's wan lustre,
When the shade of Hosier brave
His pale hands was seen to muster,
Rising from their wat'ry grave :
O'er the glimmering wave he hied him ;
Where the Burford rear'd her sail,
With three thousand ghosts beside him,
And in groans did Vernon hail.

Heed, O heed, our fatal story,
I am Hosier's injur'd ghost,
You, who now have purchas'd glory
At this place where I was lost ;
Though in Porto-Bello's ruin
You now triumph free from fears,
When you think on our undoing,
You will mix your joy with tears.

See these mournful spectres sweeping
Ghastly o'er this hated wave,
Whose wan cheeks are stain'd with weeping ;
These were English captains brave :
Mark those numbers pale and horrid,
Those were once my sailors bold,
Lo, each hangs his drooping forehead,
While his dismal tale is told.

I, by twenty sail attended,
Did this Spanish town affright ;
Nothing then its wealth defended
But my orders not to fight ;
O ! that in this rolling ocean
I had cast them with disdain,
And obey'd my heart's warm motion,
To have quell'd the pride of Spain ;

For resistance I could fear none,
 But with twenty ships had done,
 What thou, brave and happy Vernon,
 Hast achiev'd with six alone.
 Then the Bastimentos never
 Had our foul dishonour seen,
 Nor the sea the sad receiver
 Of this gallant train had been.

Thus, like thee, proud Spain dismaying,
 And her galleons leading home,
 Though condemn'd for disobeying,
 I had met a traitor's doom.
 To have fallen, my country crying
 He has play'd an English part,
 Had been better far than dying
 Of a griev'd and broken heart.

Unrepining at thy glory,
 Thy successful arms we hail ;
 But remember our sad story,
 And let Flosier's wrongs prevail.
 Sent in this foul clime to languish,
 Think what thousands fell in vain,
 Wasted with disease and anguish,
 Not in glorious battle slain.

Hence with all my train attending
 From their oozy tombs below,
 Through the hoary foam ascending,
 Here I feed my constant woe :
 Here the Bastimentos viewing,
 We recal our shameful doom,
 And our plaintive cries renewing,
 Wander through the midnight gloom.

O'er these waves for ever mourning
 Shall we roam depriv'd of rest,
 If to Britain's shores returning
 You neglect my just request ;
 After this proud foe subduing,
 When your patriot friends you see,
 Think on vengeance for my ruin,
 And for England sham'd in me.

ODE TO THE CUCKOO.

HAIL, beauteous stranger of the grove !
 Thou messenger of spring !
 Now Heaven repairs thy rural seat,
 And woods thy welcome sing.

What time the daisy decks the green,
 Thy certain voice we hear ;
 Hast thou a star to guide thy path,
 Or mark the rolling year ?

Delightful visitant ! with thee
 I hail the time of flowers,
 And hear the sound of music sweet
 From birds among the bowers.

The school-boy, wandering through the wood
 To pull the primrose gay,
 Starts, the new voice of spring to hear,
 And imitates thy lay.

What time the pea puts on the bloom
 Thou fliest thy vocal vale,
 An annual guest in other lands,
 Another spring to hail.

Sweet bird ! thy bower is ever green,
 Thy sky is ever clear ;
 Thou hast no sorrow in thy song,
 No winter in thy year !

O could I fly ! I'd fly with thee !
 We'd make, with joyful wing,
 Our annual visit o'er the globe,
 Companions of the spring.

SONG.

THE BRAES OF YARROW.

“ Thy braes were bonny, Yarrow stream !
 When first on them I met my lover ;
 Thy braes how dreary, Yarrow stream !
 When now thy waves his body cover !
 For ever now, O Yarrow stream !
 Thou art to me a stream of sorrow ;
 For never on thy banks shall I
 Behold my love, the flower of Yarrow.

He promised me a milk-white steed,
 To bear me to his father's bowers ;
 He promised me a little page,
 To squire me to his father's towers ;
 He promised me a wedding-ring,—
 The wedding-day was fix'd to-morrow ;—
 Now he is wedded to his grave,
 Alas, his watery grave in Yarrow !

Sweet were his words when last we meet :
 My passion I as freely told him !
 Clasp'd in his arms, I little thought
 That I should never more behold him !
 Scarce was he gone, I saw his ghost ;
 It vanish'd with a shriek of sorrow ;
 Thrice did the water-wraith ascend,
 And gave a doleful groan through Yarrow

His mother from the window look'd,
 With all the longing of a mother !
 His little sister weeping walk'd
 The green-wood path to meet her brother :
 They sought him east, they sought him west,
 They sought him all the forest thorough ;
 They only saw the cloud of night,
 They only heard the roar of Yarrow.

No longer from thy window look,
 Thou hast no son, thou tender mother;
 No longer walk, thou lovely maid!
 Alas, thou hast no more a brother!
 No longer seek him east or west,
 And search no more the forest thorough;
 For, wandering in the night so dark,
 He fell a lifeless corse in Yarrow.

The tear shall never leave my cheek,
 No other youth shall be my marrow;
 I'll seek thy body in the stream,
 And then with thee I'll sleep in Yarrow."
 The tear did never leave her cheek.
 No other youth became her marrow;
 She found his body in the stream,
 And now with him she sleeps in Yarrow.

ON THE NEGLECT OF POETRY.

A FRAGMENT, IN THE MANNER OF SPENSER:

[From the Introduction to the English Lusiad*.]

HENCE, vagrant minstrel, from my thriving
 farm,
 Far hence, nor ween to shed thy poison here:
 My hinds despise thy lyre's ignoble charm;
 Seek in the sluggard's bowers thy ill-earn'd cheer: [ear,
 There, while thy idle chaunting soothes thine
 The noxious thistle chokes their sickly corn:
 Their apple boughs, ungraft'd, sour wildings
 bear,
 And o'er the ill-fenced dales with fleeces torn,
 Unguarded from the fox, their lambkins stray forlorn.

Such ruin withers the neglected soil,
 When to the song the ill-starr'd swain attends,
 And well thy meed repays thy worthless toil;
 Upon thy houseless head pale want descends
 In bitter shower: and taunting scorn still rends,
 And wakes thee trembling from thy golden
 dream:

In vetchy bed, or loathly dungeon ends
 Thy idled life—What fitter may beseem,
 Who poisons thus the fount, should drink the poison'd stream.

* "A work which claims poetical merit, while its reputation is unestablished, is beheld, by the great majority, with a cold and a jealous eye. The present age, indeed, is happily auspicious to science and the arts; but poetry is neither the general taste, nor the fashionable favourite of these times. Often, in the dispirited hour, have these views obtruded upon the translator. While he has left his author upon the table, and wandered in the fields, these views have clothed themselves almost imperceptibly in the stanza and allegory of Spenser. Thus connected with the Translation of Camdens, unfinished as they are they shall close the introduction to the English Lusiad."—MICKLE.

And is it thus, the heart-stung minstrel cried,
 While indignation shook his silver'd head;
 And is it thus, the gross-fed lordling's pride,
 And hind's base tongue the gentle bard upbraid!
 And must the holy song be thus repaid
 By sun-bask'd ignorance, and churlish scorn!
 While listless drooping in the languid shade
 Of cold neglect, the sacred bard must mourn,
 Though in his hallowed breast heaven's purest ardours burn!

Yet how sublime, O bard, the dread behest,
 The awful trust to thee by Heaven assigned!
 'Tis thine to humanise the savage breast,
 And form in virtue's mould the youthful mind;
 Where lurks the latent spark of generous kind,
 'Tis thine to bid the dormant ember blaze:
 Heroic rage with gentlest worth combin'd,
 Wide through the land thy forming power displays. [bus rays.
 So spread the olive boughs beneath Dan Phoe-

When Heaven decreed to soothe the feuds that tore
 The wolf-eyed barons, whose unletter'd rage
 Spurn'd the fair Muse; Heaven bade on Avon's shore
 A Shakspear rise, and soothe the barbarous age:
 A Shakspear rose; the barbarous heats assuage—
 At distance due how many bards attend!
 Enlarged and liberal from the narrow cage
 Of blinded zeal, new manners wide extend,
 And o'er the generous breast the dews of heaven
 descend.

And fits it you, ye sons of hallowed power,
 To hear, unmov'd, the tongue of scorn upbraid
 The Muse, neglected, in her wintery bower;
 While proudly flourishing in princely shade
 Her younger sisters lift the laurel'd head.—
 And shall the pencil's boldest mimic rage,
 Of softest charms, foredoom'd in time to fade,
 Shall these be vaunted o'er th' immortal page,
 Where passion's living fires burn unimpair'd
 by age!

And shall the warbled strain, or sweetest lyre,
 Thrilling the palace roof at night's deep hour;
 And shall the nightingales in woodland choir
 The voice of heaven in sweeter raptures pour!
 Ah no! their song is transient as the flower
 Of April morn: In vain the shepherd boy
 Sits listening in the silent autumn bower;
 The year no more restores the short lived joy;
 And never more his harp shall Orpheus' hands employ.

Eternal silence in her cold deaf ear
 Has closed his strain; and deep eternal night
 Has o'er Apelles' tints, so bright whileere,
 Drawn her blank curtains—never to the sight
 More to be given—But clothed in heaven's own light,

Homer's bold painting shall immortal shine ;
Wide o'er the world shall ever sound the might,
The raptured music of each deathless line :
For death nor time may touch their living soul
divine.

And what the strain, though Perez swell the note,
High though its rapture, to the muse of fire !
Ah ! what the transient sounds, devoid of thought
To Shakspeare's flame of ever-burning ire,
Or Milton's flood of mind, till time expire
Foredoom'd to flow ; as heaven's dread energy
Unconscious of the bounds of place——

SONG*.

THERE'S NAE LUCK ABOUT THE HOUSE.

AND are ye sure the news is true ?
And are ye sure he's weel ?
Is this a time to talk o' wark ?
Ye jades, fling by your wheel !
Is this a time to think of wark,
When Colin's at the door ?
Gie me my cloak ! I'll to the quay,
And see him come ashore.—
For there's nae luck about the house,
There's nae luck ava ;
There's little pleasure in the house,
When our gudeman's awa'.

Rise up, and mak a clean fire-side,
Put on the muckle pot ;
Gie little Kate her cotton gown,
And Jock his Sunday coat ;
And mak their shoon as black as slaes.
Their hose as white as snaw ;
It's a' to please my ain gudeman,
He likes to see them braw.
For there's nae luck, &c. &c.

There's twa hens upon the bauk,
Been fed this month and mair,
Mak haste and thra their necks about.
That Colin weel may fare ;
And spread the table neat and clean,
Gar ilka thing look braw ;
It's a' for love of my gudeman,
For he's been lang awa'.
For there's nae luck, &c. &c.

* For a while this song had no author's name ; at last, it passed for the production of an enthusiastic old woman of the west of Scotland, called Jean Adam, who kept a school and wrote verses, and claimed this song as her own composition. It happened, however, during the period that Mr. Cronk was editing his collection of Scottish Songs, that Dr. Sim discovered among the manuscripts of Mickie, the translator of the Luslad, an imperfect, altered, and corrected copy of the song, with all the marks of authorship about it. The changes which the poet had made were many and curious, and were conclusive of his claim to the honour of the song : his widow added decisive testimony to this, and said that her husband wrote her a copy—said it was his own, and explained the Scottish words. Mickie, too, was a maker of songs in the manner of our early lyrics, and his genius supports his title to this truly Scottish song. But I have not sought to deprive the old school-mistress of the honour of the song, without feeling some conscientious qualms. Many lyric poets have taken pleasure in secretly eking out the ancient songs of their country ; and, after all, Mickie may have done no more for this than to improve the language, and new-model the narrative.—Allen Cunningham's Songs of Scotland.

The last verse but one is said to have been inserted by Doctor Beattie.

O gie me down my bigonets,
My bishop-sattin gown :
And rin an' tell the Baillie's wife
That Colin's come to town :
My Sunday shoon they maun gae on,
My hose o' pearly blue ;
It's a' to please my ain gudeman,
For he's baith leal and true.
For there's nae luck, &c. &c.

Sae true his words, sae smooth his speech,
His breath like caller air !
His very foot has music in't
When he comes up the stair :
And will I see his face again ?
And will I hear him speak ?
I'm downright dizzy with the thought,
In troth I'm like to greet.
For there's nae luck, &c. &c.

The cauld blasts of the winter wind,
That thrilled through my heart,
They're a' blawn by ; I hae him safe,
'Till death we'll never part :
But what puts parting in my head,
It may be far awa' ;
The present moment is our ain,
The neist we never saw !
For there's nae luck, &c. &c.

Since Colin's well, I'm well content,
I hae nae mair to crave ;
Could I but live to mak him blest,
I'm blest aboon the lave.
And will I see his face again ?
And will I hear him speak ?
I'm downright dizzy with the thought,
In troth I'm like to greet.
For there's nae luck, &c. &c.

VERSES

ON SIR JOSHUA REYNOLD'S PAINTED WINDOW AT NEW-COLLEGE, OXFORD.

Ah, stay thy treacherous hand, forbear to trace
Those faultless forms of elegance and grace !
Ah, cease to spread the bright transparent mass,
With Titian's pencil, o'er the speaking glass !
Nor steal, by strokes of art with truth combin'd,
The fond illusions of my wayward mind !
For long, enamour'd of a barbarous age,
A faithless truant to the classic page ;
Long have I lov'd to catch the simple chime
Of minstrel-harps, and spell the fabling rime ;
To view the festive rites, the knightly play,
That deck'd heroic Albion's elder day ;
To mark the mould'ring halls of barons bold,
And the rough castle, cast in giant mould ;

With Gothic manners Gothic arts explore,
And muse on the magnificence of yore.

But chief, enraptur'd have I lov'd to roam,
A lingering votary, the vaulted dome,
Where the tall shafts, that mount in massy pride,
Their mingling branches shoot from side to side :

Where elfin sculptors, with fantastic clew,
O'er the long roof their wild embroidery drew ;
Where superstition, with capricious hand
In many a maze the wreathed window plann'd,
With hues romantic ting'd the gorgeous pane,
To fill with holy light the wondrous fane ;
To aid the builder's model, richly rude,
By no Vitruvian symmetry subdu'd ;
To suit the genius of the mystic pile :
Whilst as around the far retiring isle,
And fretted shrines, with hoary trophies hung,
Her dark illumination wide she flung,
With new solemnity, the nooks profound,
The caves of death, and the dim arches frown'd.
From bliss long felt unwillingly we part :
Ah spare the weakness of a lover's heart !
Chase not the phantoms of my fairy dream,
Phantoms that shrink at reason's painful gleam !
That softer touch, insidious artist stay,
Nor to new joys my struggling breast betray !

Such was a pensive bard's mistaken strain.—
But, oh of ravish'd pleasures why complain ?
No more the matchless skill I call unkind
That strives to disenchant my cheated mind.
For when again I view thy chaste design,
The just proportion, and the genuine line ;
Those native portraitures of Attic art,
That from the lucid surface seem to start
Those tints, that steal no glories from the day ;
Nor ask the sun to lend his streaming ray :
The doubtful radiance of contending dyes,
That faintly mingle yet distinctly rise ;
Twixt light and shade the transitory strife ;
The feature blooming with immortal life :
The stole in casual foldings taught to flow,
Not with ambitious ornaments to glow ;
The tread majestic, and the beaming eye
That lifted speaks its commerce with the sky ;
Heaven's golden emanation, gleaming mild
O'er the mean cradle of the virgin's child :
Sudden, the sombrous imagery is fled,
Which late my visionary rapture fed :
Thy powerful hand has broke the Gothic chain,
And brought my bosom back to truth again :
To truth by no peculiar taste confin'd,
Whose universal pattern strikes mankind ;
To truth, whose bold and unresisted aim
Checks frail caprice, and fashion's fickle claim ;
To truth, whose charms deception's magic quell,

And bind coy fancy in a stronger spell.

Ye brawny prophets, that in robes so rich,
At distance due, possess the crisped nich ;
Ye rows of patriarchs, that sublimely rear'd
Diffuse a proud primeval length of beard :
Ye saints who clad in crimson's bright array,
More pride than humble poverty display :

Ye virgins meek, that wear the palmy crown
Of patient faith, and yet so fiercely frown :
Ye angels, that from clouds of gold recline,
But boast no semblance to a race divine :
Ye tragic tales of legendary lore,
That draw devotion's ready tear no more ;
Ye martyrdoms of unenlighten'd days,
Ye miracles, that now no wonder raise :
Shapes, that with one broad glare the gazer strike,

Kings, bishops, nuns, apostles, all alike !
Ye colours, that th' unwary sight amaze,
And only dazzle in the noontide blaze !
No more the sacred windows round disgrace,
But yield to Grecian groupes the shining space.
Lo, from the canvas beauty shifts her throne,
Lo, picture's powers a new formation own !
Behold, she prints upon the crystal plain,
With her own energy, th' expressive stain !
The mighty master spreads his mimic toil
More wide, nor only blends the breathing oil :
But calls the lineaments of life complete
From genial alchymy's creative heat ;
Obedient forms to the bright fusion gives,
While in the warm enamel nature lives,
Reynolds, 'tis thine, from the broad window's
height,

To add new lustre to religious light :
Not of its pomp to strip this ancient shrine,
But bid that pomp with purer radiance shine :
With arts unknown before ; to reconcile
The willing graces to the Gothic pile.

INSCRIPTION IN A HERMITAGE

At Anseley-hall, in Warwickshire.

BENEATH this stony roof reclin'd,
I soothe to peace my pensive mind :
And while, to shade my lowly cave,
Embowering elms their umbrage wave :
And while the maple dish is mine,
The beechen cup, unstain'd with wine :
I scorn the gay licentious crowd,
Nor heed the toys that deck the proud.

Within my limits lone and still,
The blackbird pipes in artless trill ;
Fast by my couch, congenial guest,
The wren has wove her mossy nest ;
From busy scenes and brighter skies,
To lurk with innocence, she flies ;
Here hopes in safe repose to dwell,
Nor aught suspects the sylvan cell.

At morn I take my custom'd round,
To mark how buds yon shrubby mound ;
And every opening primrose count,
That truly paints my blooming mount :
Or o'er the sculptures, quaint and rude,
That grace my gloomy solitude,
I teach in winding wreaths to stray
Fantastic ivy's gadding spray.

At eve, within yon studious nook,
I ope my brass-embossed book,
Pourtray'd with many a holy deed
Of martyrs, crown'd with heavenly meed ;
Then, as my taper waxes dim,
Chant, ere I sleep, my measur'd hymn ;
And, at the close, the gleams behold
Of parting wings bedropt with gold.

While such pure joys my bliss create,
Who but would smile at guilty state ?
Who but would wish his holy lot
In calm oblivion's humble grot ?
Who but would cast his pomp away,
To take my staff, and amice gray ;
And to the world's tumultuous stage
Prefer the blameless hermitage ?

THE HAMLET.

Written in Whitechapel Forest.

THE hinds how blest, who ne'er beguill'd
To quit their hamlet's hawthorn-wild ;
Nor haunt the crowd, nor tempt the main,
For splendid care, and guilty gain !

When morning's twilight-tinctur'd beam
Strikes their low thatch with slanting gleam,
They rove abroad in ether blue,
To dip the scythe in fragrant dew ;
The sheaf to bind, the beech to fell
That nodding shades a craggy dell.

Midst gloomy glades, in warbles clear,
Wild nature's sweetest notes they hear :
On green untrodden banks they view
The hyacinth's neglected hue :
In their lone haunts, and woodland rounds,
They spy the squirrel's airy bounds :
And startle from her ashen spray,
Across the glen, the screaming jay :
Each native charm their steps explore
Of solitude's sequester'd store.

For them the moon with cloudless ray
Mounts, to illumine their homeward way :
Their weary spirits to relieve,
The meadows incense breathe at eve.
No riot mars the simple fare
That o'er a glimmering hearth they share :
But when the curfew's measur'd roar
Duly, the darkening vallies o'er,
Has echoed from the distant town ;
They wish no beds of cygnet-down,
No trophied canopies, to close
Their drooping eyes in quick repose.

Their little sons, who spread the bloom
Of health around the clay-built room,
Or through the primros'd coppice stray,
Or gambol in the new-mown hay ;
Or quaintly braid the cow-slip twine,
Or drive afield the tardy kine ;
Or hasten from the sultry hill
To loiter at the shady rill ;
Or climb the tall pine's gloomy crest
To rob the raven's ancient nest.

3 u

Their humble porch with honied flowers
The curling woodbine's shade embowers :
From the small garden's thymy mound
Their bees in busy swarms resound :
Nor fell disease, before his time,
Hastes to consume life's golden prime :
But when their temples long have wore
The silver crown of tresses hoar ;
As studious still calm peace to keep,
Beneath a flowery turf they sleep.

ODE

SENT TO A FRIEND, ON HIS LEAVING A FAVORITE VILLAGE IN HAMPSHIRE.

AH mourn, thou lov'd retreat ! no more
Shall classic steps thy scenes explore !
When morn's pale rays but faintly peep
O'er yonder oak-crown'd airy steep,
Who now shall climb its brows to view
The length of landscape, ever new,
Where summer flings, in careless pride,
Her varied vesture far and wide !
Who mark, beneath each village-charm,
Or grange, or elm-encircled farm :
The flinty dove-cote's crowded roof,
Watch'd by the kite that sails aloof :
The tufted pines, whose umbrage tall
Darkens the long-deserted hall :
The veteran beech, that on the plain
Collects at eve the playful train ;
The cot that smokes with early fire,
The low-roof'd fane's embosom'd spire !

Who now shall indolently stray
Through the deep forest's tangled way ;
Pleas'd at his custom'd task to find
The well known hoary-tressed hind,
That toils with feeble hands to glean
Of wither'd boughs his pittance mean !
Who mid thy nooks of hazle sit,
Lost in some melancholy fit ;
And listening to the raven's croak,
The distant fall, the falling oak !
Who, through the sunshine and the shower,
Descry the rainbow-painted tower ?
Who wandering at return of May,
Catch the first cuckoo's vernal lay ?
Who, musing waste the summer hour,
Where high o'er-arching trees embow'r
The grassy lane, so rarely pac'd,
With azure flowerets idly grac'd !
Unnotic'd now, at twilight's dawn
Returning reapers cross the lawn ;
Nor foud attention loves to note
The wether's bell from folds remote :
While, own'd by no poetic eye,
Thy pensive evenings shade the sky !

For lo ! the bard who rapture found
In every rural sight or sound ;
Whose genius warm, and judgment chaste
No charm of genuine nature past ;
Who felt the Muse's purest fires,
Far from thy favour'd haunt retires :
Who peopled all thy vocal bowers
With shadowy shapes, and airy powers.

Behold, a dread repose resumes,
 As erst, thy sad, sequester'd glooms !
 From the deep dell, where shaggy roots
 Fringe the rough brink with wreathed shoots,
 Th' unwilling genius flies forlorn,
 His primrose chaplet rudely torn.
 With hollow shriek the nymphs forsake
 The pathless copse, and hedge-row brake :
 Where the delv'd mountains's headlong side
 Its chalky entrails opens wide,
 On the green summit, ambush'd high,
 No longer echo loves to lie.
 No pearl-crown'd maids, with wily look,
 Rise beckoning from the reedy brook.
 Around the glowworm's glimmering bank,
 No fairies run in fiery rank ;
 Nor brush, half-seen, in airy tread,
 The violet's unprinted head.
 But Fancy, from the thickets brown,
 The glades that wear a conscious frown,
 The forest-oaks, that pale and lone,
 Nod to the blast with hoarser tone,
 Rough glens, and sullen waterfalls,
 Her bright ideal offspring calls.

So by some sage enchanter's spell,
 (As old Arabian fablers tell)
 Amid the solitary wild,
 Luxuriant gardens gaily smil'd :
 From sapphire rocks the fountains stream'd,
 With golden fruit the branches beam'd ;
 Fair forms, in every wonderous wood,
 Or lightly tripp'd, or solemn stood ;
 And oft, retreating from the view,
 Betray'd, at distance, beauties new :
 While gleaming o'er the crisped bowers.
 Rich spires arose, and sparkling towers.
 If bound on service new to go,
 The master of the magic show,
 His transitory charm withdrew,
 Away th' illusive landscape flew :
 Dun clouds obscur'd the groves of gold,
 Blue lightning smote the blooming mould ;
 In visionary glory rear'd,
 The gorgeous castle disappear'd :
 And a bare heath's unfruitful plain
 Usurp'd the wizard's proud domain.

SONNET

WRITTEN AT WINSLADE, IN HAMPSHIRE.

WINSLADE, thy beech-capt hills, with waving grain
 Mantled, thy chequer'd views, of wood and lawn
 Whilom could charm, or when the gradual dawn
 Gan the gray mist with orient purple stain,
 Or evening glimmer'd o'er the folded train :
 Her fairest landscapes whence my muse has
 drawn,
 Too free with servile courtly phrase to fawn,
 Too weak to try the buskin's stately strain :
 Yet now no more thy slopes of beech and corn,
 Nor views invite, since he far distant strays,

With whom I trac'd their sweets at eve and
 morn,
 From Albion far, to cull Hesperian bays ;
 In this alone they please, howe'er forlorn,
 'That still they can recal those happier days.

SONNET

ON BATHING.

WHEN late the trees were stript by winter pale,
 Young health, a dryad-maid in vesture green,
 Or like the forest's silver-quiver'd queen,
 On airy uplands met the piercing gale ;
 And, ere its earliest echo shook the vale,
 Watching the hunter's joyous horn was seen.
 But since, gay-thron'd in fiery chariot sheen,
 Summer has smote each daisy-dappled dale ;
 She to the cave retires, high-arch'd beneath
 The fount that laves proud Isis' towery brim :
 And now, all glad the temperate air to breathe,
 While cooling drops distil from arches dim,
 Binding her dewy locks with sedgy wreath,
 She sits amid the choir of naiads trim.

SONNET

WRITTEN IN A BLANK LEAF OF DUGDALE'S MONASTICON.

DEEM not devoid of elegance the sage,
 By fancy's genuine feelings unbeguil'd,
 Of painful pedantry the poring child,
 Who turns, of these proud domes, th' historic page,
 Now sunk by Time, and Henry's fiercer rage.
 Think'st thou the warbling Muses never smil'd
 On his lone hours ? Ingenuous views engage
 His thoughts, on themes unclassic falsely styl'd,
 Intent. While cloister'd piety displays
 Her mouldering roll, the piercing eye explores
 New manners, and the pomp of elder days,
 Whence culls the pensive bard his pictur'd stores.
 Nor rough, nor barren, are the winding ways
 Of hoar antiquity, but strewn with flowers.

SONNET

WRITTEN AFTER SEEING WILTON-HOUSE.

FROM Pembroke's princely dome, where mimic
 art
 Decks with a magic hand the dazzling bow'rs,
 Its living hues where the warm pencil pours,
 And breathing forms from the rude marble start,
 How to life's humbler scene can I depart ?
 My breast all glowing from those gorgeous tow'rs,
 In my low cell how cheat the sullen hours !
 Vain, the complaint : for fancy can impart
 (To fate superior, and to fortune's doom)
 Whate'er adorns the stately-storied hall :
 She, mid the dungeon's solitary gloom,
 Can dress the graces in their Attic pall :
 Bid the green landskip's vernal beauty bloom :
 And in bright trophies clothe the twilight wall.

SONNET

TO THE RIVER LODON.

Ah ! what a weary race my feet have run,
 Since first I trod thy banks with alders crown'd,
 And thought my way was all through fairy
 ground,
 Beneath thy azure sky and golden sun :
 Where first my Muse to lisp her notes begun !
 While pensive memory traces back the round,
 Which fills the varied interval between ;
 Much pleasure, more of sorrow, marks the scene,
 Sweet native stream ! those skies and suns so
 pure
 No more return, to cheer my evening road !
 Yet still one joy remains, that not obscure,
 Nor useless, all my vacant days have shew'd,
 From youth's gay dawn to manhood's prime mature ;
 Nor with the Muse's laurel unbestow'd,

 THOMAS BLACKLOCK.*

Born 1721.—Died 1791.

LINES ON THE AUTHOR'S PICTURE.

WHILE in my matchless graces wrapt I stand,
 And touch each feature with a trembling hand ;
 Deign, lovely Self ! with art and nature's pride,
 To mix the colours, and the pencil guide.

Self is the grand pursuit of half mankind :
 How vast a crowd by Self, like me, are blind !
 By Self, the fop, in magic colours, shown,
 Tho' scorn'd by ev'ry eye, delights his own :
 When age and wrinkles seize the conqu'ring
 maid,

Self, not the glass, reflects the flatt'ring shade.
 Then, wonder-working Self ! begin the lay :
 Thy charms to others, as to me, display.

Straight is my person, but of little size ;
 Lean are my cheeks, and hollow are my eyes :
 My youthful down is, like my talents, rare ;
 Politely distant stands each single hair.
 My voice too rough to charm a lady's ear ;
 So smooth, a child may listen without fear ;
 Nor form'd in cadence soft and warbling lays,
 To sooth the fair thro' pleasure's wanton ways.
 My form so fine, so regular, so new ;
 My port so manly, and so fresh my hue ;
 Oft, as I meet the crowd, they laughing say,
 " See, see Memento mori cross the way."
 The ravish'd Proserpine at last, we know,
 Grew fondly jealous of her sable beau ;
 But, thanks to nature ! none from me need fly ;
 One heart the devil could wound—so cannot I.

* Before he was six months old, Blacklock was deprived of sight by the small-pox.

Yet, tho' my person fearless may be seen,
 There is some danger in my graceful mien :
 For, as some vessel, toss'd by wind and tide,
 Bounds o'er the waves, and rocks from side to
 side ;

In just vibration thus I always move :
 This who can view, and not be forc'd to love ?

Hail ! charming Self ! by whose propitious aid
 My form in all its glory stands display'd :
 Be present still ; with inspiration kind,
 Let the same faithful colours paint the mind.

Like all mankind, with vanity I'm bless'd :
 Conscious of wit I never yet possess'd.

To strong desires my heart an easy prey,
 Oft feels their force, but never owns their sway.
 This hour, perhaps, as death I hate my foe ;
 The next I wonder why I should do so.

Tho' poor, the rich I view with careless eye ;
 Scorn a vain oath, and hate a serious lie.
 I ne'er, for satire, torture common sense ;
 Nor show my wit at God's, nor man's expense.
 Harmless I live, unknowing and unknown ;
 Wish well to all, and yet do good to none.

Unmerited contempt I hate to bear ;
 Yet on my faults, like others, am severe.
 Dishonest flames my bosom never fire ;
 The bad I pity, and the good admire :
 Fond of the Muse, to her devote my days,
 And scribble—not for pudding, but for praise.

These careless lines if any virgin hears,
 Perhaps, in pity to my joyless years,
 She may consent a gen'rous flame to own ;
 And I no longer sigh the nights alone.
 But, should the fair, affected, vain or nice,
 Scream with the fears inspir'd by frogs or mice ;
 Cry, " Save us, Heav'n ! a spectre, not a man !"
 Her hartshorn snatch or interpose her fan :
 If I my tender overture repeat ;
 O ! may my vows her kind reception meet !
 May she new graces on my form bestow,
 And, with tall honours, dignify my brow !

 SIR WILLIAM JONES.

Born 1746.—Died 1794.

ORIGIN OF THE GAME OF CHESS.

[From Caissa or the Game of Chess.]

" A LOVELY Dryad rang'd the Thracian wild.
 Her air enchanting and her aspect mild ;
 To chase the bounding hart was all her joy,
 Averse from Hymen, and the Cyprian boy ;
 O'er hills and valleys was her beauty fam'd,
 And fair Caissa was the damsel nam'd.
 Mars saw the maid ; with deep surprise he gaz'd,
 Admir'd her shape, and every gesture prais'd :
 His golden bow the child of Venus bent,
 And through his breast a piercing arrow sent :
 The reed was hope ; the feathers, keen desire ;
 The point, her eyes ; the barbs, ethereal fire.

Soon to the nymph he pour'd his tender strain ;
The haughty Dryad scorn'd his amorous pain :
He told his woes, where'er the maid he found,
And till he press'd, yet still Caissa frown'd ;
But ev'n her frowns (ah, what might smiles have done !)

Fir'd all his soul, and all his senses won.
He left his car, by raging tigers drawn,
And lonely wander'd o'er the dusky lawn ;
Then lay desponding near a murmuring stream,
And fair Caissa was his plaintive theme.
A Naiad heard him from her mossy bed,
And through the crystal rais'd her placid head ;
Then mildly spake : ' O thou, whom love inspires,
Thy tears will nourish, not allay thy fires.
The smiling blossoms drink the pearly dew ;
And ripening fruit the feather'd race pursue ;
The scaly shoals devour the silken weeds ;
Love on our sighs, and on our sorrow feeds.
Then weep no more ; but, ere thou canst obtain
Balm to thy wounds, and solace to thy pain,
With gentle art thy martial look beguile ;
Be mild, and teach thy rugged brow to smile.
Canst thou no play, no soothing game devise,
To make thee lovely in the damsel's eyes ?
So may thy prayers assuage the scornful dame,
And ev'n Caissa own a mutual flame.'
' Kind nymph,' said Mars, ' thy counsel I approve :
Art, one art, her ruthless breast can move.
But when ? or how ? Thy dark discourse explain :
So may thy stream ne'er swell with gushing rain :
So may thy waves in one pure current flow,
And flowers eternal on thy border blow !'

" To whom the maid replied with smiling mien :
' Above the palace of the Paphian queen
Love's brother dwells, a boy of graceful port,
By gods nam'd Euphron, and by mortals Sport :
Seek him ; to faithful ears unfold thy grief,
And hope, ere morn return, a sweet relief.
His temple hangs below the azure skies ;
See'st thou yon argent cloud ? 'Tis there it lies.'
This said, she sunk beneath the liquid plain,
And sought the mansion of her blue-hair'd train.

" Meantime the god, elate with heart-felt
joy,

Had reach'd the temple of the sportful boy ;
He told Caissa's charms, his kindled fire.
The Naiad's counsel, and his warm desire.
' Be swift,' he added, ' give my passion aid ;
A god requests.'—He spake, and Sport obey'd.
He fram'd a tablet of celestial mould,
Inlaid with squares of silver and of gold ;
Then of two metals form'd the warlike band,
That here, compact, in show of battle stand ;
He taught the rules that guide the pensive game,

And call'd it Caissa from the Dryad's name : (Whence Albion's sons, who most its praise confess,

Approv'd the play, and nam'd it thoughtful Chess.)

The god delighted thank'd indulgent Sport ;
Then grasp'd the board, and left his airy
court.

With radiant feet he pierc'd the clouds ; nor stay'd,

Till in the woods he saw the beauteous maid :
Tir'd with the chase the damsel sat reclin'd,
Her girdle loose, her bosom unconfin'd.

He took the figure of a wanton fawn,
And stood before her on the flowery lawn ;
Then show'd his tablet : pleas'd, the nymph
survey'd

The lifeless troops, in glittering ranks display'd ;
She ask'd the wily sylvan to explain

The various motions of the splendid train :
With eager heart she caught the winning lore,
And thought ev'n Mars less hateful than before :
' What spell,' said she, ' deceiv'd my careless
mind ?

The god was fair, and I was most unkind.'
She spoke, and saw the changing fawn assume
A milder aspect, and a fairer bloom ;
His wreathing horns, that from his temples
grew,

Flow'd down in curls of bright celestial hue :
The dappled hairs, that veil'd his loveless face,
Blaz'd into beams, and show'd a heavenly grace ;
The shaggy hide, that mantled o'er his breast,
Was soften'd to a smooth transparent vest,
That through its folds his vigorous bosom show'd,
And nervous limbs, where youthful ardour
glow'd ;

(Had Venus view'd him in those blooming
charms,

Not Vulcan's net had forc'd her from his arms.)
With goatlike feet no more he mark'd the
ground,

But braided flowers his silken sandals bound.
The Dryad blush'd : and, as he press'd her,
smil'd,

Whilst all his cares one tender glance beguil'd."

AN ODE IN IMITATION OF ALCÆUS.

WHAT constitutes a state ?
Not high rais'd battlement or labor'd mound,
Thick wall or moated gate ;
Not cities proud with spires and turrets crown'd :
Not bays and broad-arm'd ports,
Where, laughing at the storm, rich navies ride ;
Not starr'd and spangled courts,
Where low-brow'd baseness wafts perfume to
pride.

No :—MEN, high-minded MEN,
With pow'rs as far above dull brutes endued
In forest, brake, or den,
As beasts excel cold rocks and brambles rude ;
Men, who their duties know,
But know their rights, and knowing, dare maintain,

Prevent the long-aim'd blow,
And crush the tyrant while they rend the chain.
These constitute a state,
And sov'reign Law, that state's collected will,
O'er thrones and globes elate

Sits empress, crowning good, repressing ill ;
 Smit by her sacred frown
 The fiend, Discretion*, like a vapour sinks,
 And e'en th' all-dazzling crown
 Hides his faint rays, and at her bidding shrinks.
 Such was this Heav'n lov'd isle,
 Than Lesbos fairer and the Cretan shore !
 No more shall Freedom smile ?
 Shall Britons languish, and be men no more ?
 Since all must life resign,
 Those sweet rewards, which decorate the brave,
 'Tis folly to decline,
 And steal inglorious to the silent grave.

A PERSIAN SONG OF HAFIZ.

SWEET maid, if thou wouldst charm my sight ;
 And bid these arms thy neck infold ;
 That rosy cheek, that lily hand,
 Would give thy poet more delight
 Than all Bocara's vaunted gold,
 Than all the gems of Samarcand.

Boy ! let yon liquid ruby flow,
 And bid thy pensive heart be glad,
 Whate'er the frowning zealots say ;—
 Tell them their Eden cannot show
 A stream so clear as Rocnabad,
 A bower so sweet as Mosellay.

Oh ! when these fair, perfidious maids,
 Whose eyes our secret haunts infest,
 Their dear destructive charms display ;—
 Each glance my tender breast invades,
 And robs my wounded soul of rest ;
 As Tartars seize their destin'd prey.

In vain with love our bosoms glow :
 Can all our tears, can all our sighs,
 New lustre to those charms impart ?
 Can cheeks, where living roses blow,
 Where nature spreads her richest dyes,
 Require the borrow'd gloss of art ?

Speak not of fate :—ah ! change the theme,
 And talk of odours, talk of wine,
 Talk of the flow'rs that round us bloom :—
 'Tis all a cloud, 'tis all a dream :
 To love and joy the thoughts confine,
 Nor hope to pierce the sacred gloom.

Beauty has such resistless power,
 That even the chaste Egyptian dame
 Sigh'd for the blooming Hebrew boy :
 For her how fatal was the hour,
 When to the banks of Nilus came
 A youth so lovely and so coy !

But ah ! sweet maid ! my counsel hear,— (Youth should attend when those advise Whom long experience renders sage,)
 While music charms the ravish'd ear ;
 While sparkling cups delight our eyes,
 Begay ; and scorn the frowns of age.

* Arbitrary Power.

What cruel answer have I heard !
 And yet, by Heaven, I love thee still :
 Can aught be cruel from thy lip ?
 Yet say, how fell that bitter word
 From lips, which streams of sweetness fill,
 Which nought but drops of honey sip ?

Go boldly forth, my simple lay,
 Whose accents flow with artless ease,
 Like orient pearls at random strung :
 Thy notes are sweet, the damsels say ;
 But O ! far sweeter, if they please
 The nymph for whom these notes are sung.

THE CONCLUDING SENTENCE OF BERKELEY'S SIRIS, Imitated.

BEFORE thy mystic altar, heav'nly Truth,
 I kneel in manhood, as I knelt in youth :
 Thus let me kneel, till this dull form decay,
 And life's last shade be brighten'd by thy ray :
 Then shall my soul, now lost in clouds below,
 Soar without bound, without consuming glow*.

ROBERT BURNS.

Born 1758.—Died 1796.

THE COTTER'S SATURDAY NIGHT.

I.

My lov'd, my honoured, much respected friend !
 No mercenary bard his homage pays ;
 With honest pride I scorn each selfish end ;
 My dearest meed, a friend's esteem and
 praise :
 To you I sing, in simple Scottish lays,
 The lowly train in life's sequester'd scene,
 The native feelings strong, the guileless
 ways,
 What A* in a cottage would have been ;
 Ah ! though his worth unknown, far happier
 there, I ween.

II.

November chill blows loud wi' angry sigh ;
 The short'ning winter-day is near a close ;
 The miry beasts retreating frae the plough ;
 The black'ning trains o' craws to their re-
 pose :
 The toil-worn Cotter frae his labour goes,
 This night his weekly toil is at end.
 Collects his spades, his mattocks, and his hoes,

* These lines were written by Sir William Jones in Berkeley's Siris; they are, in fact, a beautiful version of the last sentence of the Siris, amplified and adapted to himself: "He that would make a real progress in knowledge, must dedicate his age as well as youth, the latter growth as well as the best fruits, at the altar of Truth."

Hoping the morn in ease and rest to spend,
And weary, o'er the moor, his course does hameward bend.

III.

At length his lonely cot appears in view,
Beneath the shelter of an aged tree ;
Th' expectant wee-things, toddlin' stacher thro'
To meet their Dad, wi' flichterin' noise an'
glee.
His wee bit ingle, blinkin' bonnily,
His clean hearth-stane, his thriftie wifie's
smile,
The lispin' infant prattling on his knee,
Does a' his weary, carking cares beguile,
An' makes him quite forget his labour an' his toil.

IV.

Belyve the elder bairns come drapping in,
At service out, amang the farmers roun' ;
Some ca' the pleugh, some herd, some tentie
rin
A cannie errand to a neebor town :
Their eldest hope, their Jenny, woman grown,
In youthfu' bloom, love sparkling in her e'e,
Comes hame, perhaps, to show a braw new gown,
Or deposit her sair-won penny-fee,
To help her parents dear, if they in hardship be.

V.

Wi' joy unfeign'd brothers and sisters meet,
An' each for other's weelfare kindly spiers :
The social hours, swift-wing'd unnotic'd fleet ;
Each tells the uncos that he sees or hears ;
The parents, partial, eye their hopeful years ;
Anticipation forward points the view.
The mother, wi' her needle an' her sheers, Gars auld claes look amaist as weel's the
new ;
The father mixes a' wi' admonition due.

VI.

Their master's an' their mistress's command,
The youngers a' are warned to obey ;
" An' mind their labours wi' an eydent hand,
An' ne'er, though out o' sight, to jauk or
play :
An' O ! be sure to fear the Lord alway !
An' mind your duty, duly, morn an' night !
Lest in temptation's path ye gang astray,
Implore his counsel and assisting might :
They never sought in vain that sought the Lord aright !"

VII.

But hark ! a rap comes gently to the door,
Jenny, wha kens the meaning o' the same,
Tells how a neebor lad cam o'er the moor,
To do some errands, and convoy her hame.
The wily mother sees the conscious flame
Sparkle in Jenny's e'e, and flush her cheek ;
With heart-struck, anxious, care, inquires
his name,
While Jenny haffins is afraid to speak ;
Weel pleas'd the mother hears its nae wild,
worthless rake.

VIII.

Wi' kindly welcome Jenny brings him ben ;
A strappan youth ; he taks the mother's
eye !
Blythe Jenny sees the visits no ill ta'en ;
The father cracks of horses, pleughs, and kye.
The youngster's artless heart o'erflows wi'
joy.
But blait and laithfu', scarce can weel behave ;
The mother, wi' a woman's wiles, can spy
What makes the youth sae bashful an' sae
grave :
Weel pleas'd to think her bairn's respected like the lave.

IX.

O happy love ! where love like this is found !
O heart-felt raptures ! bliss beyond compare !
I've paced much this weary mortal round,
And sage experience bids me this declare—
" If Heaven a draught of heavenly pleasure
spare,
One cordial in this melancholy vale,
Tis when a youthful, loving, modest pair,
In others arms breathe out the tender tale,
Beneath the milk-white thorn that scents the ev'ning gale."

X.

Is there, in human form, that bears a heart—
A wretch ! a villain ! lost to love and truth
That can, with studied, sly, ensnaring art ;
Betray sweet Jenny's unsuspecting youth !
Curse on his perjur'd arts ! dissembling smooth !
Are honour, virtue, conscience, all exil'd ?
Is there no pity, no relenting ruth,
Points to the parents fondling o'er their child ?
Then paints the ruin'd maid, and their distraction wild ?

XI.

But now the supper crowns their simple board,
The halesome parritch, chief o' Scotia's food :
The soupe their only Hawkie does afford,
That 'yont the hallan snugly chows her
cood :
The dame brings forth in complimentary mood,
To grace the lad, her weel-hain'd kebbuck,
fell,
An' aft he's prest, an' aft he ca's it guid ;
The frugal wifie, garrulous, will tell,
How 'twas a towmond auld, sin' lint was i' the bell.

XII.

The cheerfu' supper done, wi' serious face,
They, round the ingle, form a circle wide ;
The sire turns o'er, wi' patriarchal grace,
The big ha'-Bible, ance his father's pride :
His bonnet rev'rently is laid aside,

His lyart haffets wearing thin an' bare ;
 Those strains that once did sweet in Zion glide,
 He wales a portion with judicious care ;
 And " Let us worship God ! " he says, with solemn air.

XIII.

They chant their artless notes in simple guise ;
 They tune their hearts, by far the noblest
 aim.

Perhaps Dundee's wild warbling measures rise,
 Or plaintive Martyrs, worthy of the name,
 Or noble Elgin beats the heav'nward flame,
 The sweetest far of Scotia's holy lays !
 Compar'd with these, Italian trills are tame,
 The tickl'd ears no heart-felt raptures raise,
 Nae unison hae they with our Creator's praise.

XIV.

The priest-like father reads the sacred page,
 How Abram was the friend of God on high ;
 Or, Moses bade eternal warfare wage
 With Amalek's ungracious progeny ;
 Or how the royal bard did groaning lie
 Beneath the stroke of Heaven's avenging ire ;
 Or, Job's pathetic plaint, and wailing cry ;
 Or rapt Isaiah's wild, seraphic fire ;
 Or other holy seers that tune the sacred lyre.

XV.

Perhaps the Christian volume is the theme,
 How guiltless blood for guilty man was
 shed :
 How He, who bore in Heaven the second
 name ;
 Had not on earth whereon to lay his head :
 How his first followers and servants sped ;
 The precepts sage they wrote to many a
 land :
 How he, who lone in Patmos banished,
 Saw in the sun a mighty angel stand ;
 And heard great Bab'lon's doom pronounc'd by Heaven's command.

XVI.

Then kneeling down, to Heav'n's Eternal King,
 The saint, the father, and the husband prays :
 Hope " springs exulting on triumphant
 wings,"
 That thus they all shall meet in future days ;
 There ever bask in uncreated rays,
 No more to sigh, or shed the bitter tear,
 Together hymning their Creator's praise,
 In such society, yet still more dear :
 While circling time moves round in an eternal sphere.

XVII.

Compared with this, how poor religion's pride,
 In all the pomp of method, and of art,
 When men display to congregations wide,
 Devotion's ev'ry grace, except the heart !
 The Pow'r, incens'd, the pageant will desert,
 The pompous strain, the sacerdotal stole ;
 But haply, in some cottage far apart,
 May hear, well pleas'd, the language of the
 soul ;
 And in his book of life the inmates poor enrol.

XVIII.

Then homeward all take off their sev'ral way ;
 The youngling cottagers retire to rest
 The parent-pair their secret homage pay,
 And proffer up to Heaven the warm request
 That He, who stills the raven's clam'rous nest,
 And decks the lily fair in flow'ry pride,
 Would, in the way his wisdom sees the best,
 For them and for their little ones provide ;
 But chiefly, in their hearts with grace divine preside.

XIX.

From scenes like these old Scotia's grandeur
 springs,
 That makes her lov'd at home, rever'd
 abroad :
 Princes and lords are but the breath of kings,
 " An honest man's the noblest work of God : "
 And certes, in fair virtue's heavenly road,
 The cottage leaves the palace far behind ;
 What is a lordling's pomp ! a cumbrous load.
 Disguising oft the wretch of human kind,
 Studied in arts of hell, in wickedness refin'd !

XX.

O Scotia ! my dear, my native soil !
 For whom my warmest wish to Heaven is
 sent !
 Long may thy hardy sons of rustic toil,
 Be bless'd with health, and peace, and sweet content !
 And, O ! may Heaven their simple lives prevent
 From luxury's contagion, weak and vile !
 Then, howe'er crowns and coronets be rent,
 A virtuous populace may rise the while,
 And stand a wall of fire around their muchlov'd Isle.

XXI.

O Thou ! who pour'd the patriotic tide
 That stream'd thro' Wallace's undaunted
 heart,
 Who dar'd to nobly stem tyrannic pride,
 Or nobly die, the second glorious part,
 (The patriot's God, peculiarly thou art,
 His friend, inspirer, guardian, and reward !)
 O never, never, Scotia's realm desert :
 But still the patriot and the patriot bard,
 In bright succession raise, her ornament and guard !

TO A MOUNTAIN DAISY.

On turning it down with the plough.

WEE, modest, crimson-tipped flow'r
 Thou's met me in an evil hour ;
 For I maun crush amang the stoure
 Thy slender stem ;
 To spare thee now is past my pow'r,
 Thou bonnie gem.

Alas ! it's no thy neebor sweet,
 The bonnie Lark, companion meet !
 Bending thee 'mang the dewy weat
 Wi' spreckled breast,
 When upward-springing, blythe to greet
 The purpling east.

Cauld blew the bitter-biting north
 Upon thy early, humble birth ;
 Yet cheerfully thou glinted forth
 Amid the storm,
 Scarce rear'd above the parent earth
 Thy tender form.

The flaunting flow'rs our gardens yield
 High shelt'ring woods and wa's maun shield,
 But thou beneath the random bield
 O' clod or stane,
 Adorns the histie stibble-field,
 Unseen, alane.

There in thy scanty mantle clad,
 Thy snawy bosom sun-ward spread,
 Thou lifts thy unassuming head
 In humble guise :
 But now the share uptears thy bed,
 And low thou lies !

Such is the fate of artless Maid !
 Sweet flow'ret of the rural shade,
 By love's simplicity betray'd,
 And guileless trust,
 Till she, like thee, all soil'd is laid
 Low i' the dust.

Such is the fate of simple Bard,
 On life's rough ocean luckless starr'd !
 Unskilful he to note the card
 Of prudent lore,
 Till billows rage, and gales blow hard,
 And whelm him o'er !

Such fate to suffering worth is giv'n,
 Who long with wants and woes has striv'n,
 By human pride or cunning driv'n,
 To mis'ry's brink,
 Till wrench'd of ev'ry stay but Heav'n,
 He, ruin'd, sink !

Ev'n thou who mourn'st the daisy's fate,
 That fate is thine—no distant date ;
 Stern ruin's plough-share drives, elate,
 Full on thy bloom,
 Till crush'd beneath the furrow's weight,
 Shall be thy doom !

TO A MOUSE.

On turning her up in her nest with the plough, November 1785.

Wae, sleekit, cow'rin', tim'rous beastie,
 O, wha's a panic's in thy breastie !
 Thou need na start awa sae hasty,
 Wi' bickering brattle !
 I wad be laith to rin an' chase thee,
 Wi' murdering pattle !

I'm truly sorry man's dominion
 Has broken nature's social union,
 An' justifies that ill opinion,
 Which makes thee startle

At me, thy poor earth-born companion,
 An' fellow-mortal !

I doubt na, whyles, but thou may thieve ;
 What then ? poor beastie, thou maun live
 A daimen-icker in a thrave
 'S a sma'request :
 I'll get a blessin' wi' the lave,
 And never miss't !

Thy wee bit housie, too, in ruin !
 Its silly wa's the win's are strew'in !
 An' naething, now, to big a new ane,
 O' foggage green !
 An' bleak December's winds ensuin',
 Baith snell and keen !

Thou saw the fields laid bare an' waste,
 An' weary winter comin' fast,
 An' cozie here, beneath the blast,
 Thou thought to dwell,
 Till crush ! the cruel coulter past
 Out through thy cell.

That wee bit heap o' leaves an' stibble,
 Has cost thee monie a weary nibble !
 Now thou's turn'd out, for a' thy trouble,
 But house, or hald,
 To thole the winter's sleety dribble,
 An' cranreuch cauld ;

But, mousie, thou art no thy lane,
 In proving foresight may be vain :
 The best laid schemes o' nice an' men,
 Gang aft a-gley,
 An' leave us nought but grief and pain,
 For promis'd joy.

Still thou art blest, compar'd wi' me !
 The present only toucheth thee ;
 But, Och ! I backward cast my e'e,
 On prospects drear !
 An' forward, though I canna see,
 I guess an' fear.

FOR A' THAT AND A' THAT.

Is there, for honesty poverty,
 That hangs his head, and a' that ;
 The coward-slave, we pass him by,
 We dare be poor for a' that !
 For a' that, and a' that,
 Our toil's obscure, and a' that,
 The rank is but the guinea's stamp,
 The man's the gowd for a' that.

What though on hamely fair we dine,
 Wear hoddin' gray, and a' that ;
 We fools their silks, and knaves their wine,
 A man's a man for a' that ;
 For a' that, and a' that,
 Their tinsel show, and a' that ;
 The honest man, though e'er sae poor,
 Is king o' men for a' that.

Ye see yon birkie, ca'd a lord,
 Wha struts, and stares, and a' that;
 Though hundreds worship at his word,
 He's but a coof for a' that:
 For a' that, and a' that.
 His riband, star, and a' that,
 The man of independant mind,
 He looks and laughs at a' that.

A prince can mak a belted knight,
 A marquis, duke, and a' that;
 But an honest man's aboon his might,
 Guid faith he mauna fa' that!
 For a' that, and a' that,
 Their dignities, and a' that,
 The pith o' sense, and pride o' worth,
 Are higher ranks than a' that.

Then let us pray that come it may,
 As come it will for a' that,
 That sense and worth, o'er a' the earth,
 May bear the gree, and a' that.
 For a' that, and a' that,
 It's coming yet, for a' that,
 That man to man, the world o'er,
 Shall brothers be for a' that.

BANNOCK-BURN.

Robert Bruce's Address to his Army.

Scots, wha hae wi' Wallace bled,
 Scots, wham Bruce has aften led,
 Welcome to your gory bed,
 Or to glorious victory!

Now's the day, and now's the hour;
 See the front o' battle lower;
 See approach proud Edward's power—
 Edward! chains and slavery!

Wha will be a traitor knave?
 Wha can fill a coward's grave?
 Wha sae base as be a slave?
 Traitor! coward! turn and flee!

Wha for Scotland's king and law
 Freedom's sword will strongly draw,
 Free-man stand, or free-man fa',
 Caledonian! on wi' me!

By oppression's woes and pains!
 By your sons in servile chains!
 We will drain our dearest veins,
 But they shall be—shall be free!

Lay the proud usurpers low
 Tyrants fall in every foe!
 Liberty's in every blow!
 Forward! let us do, or die!

TO EVENING.

WHAT numerous votaries 'neath thy shadowy
 wing,

O mild and modest Evening, find delight!
 First, to the grove his lingering fair to bring,
 The warm and youthful lover, hating light,
 Sighs oft for thee—And next the boisterous
 string

Of school-imps, freed from Dame's all dreaded sight,

Round Village-Cross, in many a warren ring,
 Wishes thy stay—Then too with vasty might,
 From steeple's side to urge the bounding ball,
 The lusty hinds await thy fragrant call:
 I, friend to all by turns, am join'd with all,
 Lover, and elfin gay, and harmless hind;
 Nor heed the proud to real wisdom blind,
 So as my heart be pure, and free my mind.

ON A WET SUMMER.

ALL ye who far from town, in rural hall,
 Like me, were wont to dwell near pleasant field,
 Enjoying all the sunny-day did yield,
 With me the change lament, in irksome
 thrall,

By rains incessant held; for now no call
 From early swain invites my hand to wield,
 The scythe; in parlour dim I sit conceal'd,
 And mark the lessening sand from hour-glass
 fall;

Or 'neath my window view the wistful train
 Of dripping poultry, whom the vine's broad leaves

Shelter no more.—Mute is the mournful
 Silent the swallow sits beneath the thatch,
 And vacant hind hangs pensive o'er his hatch,

Counting the frequent drop from reeded leaves.

ELEGY ON THE DEATH OF A LADY.

Written in 1760.

THE midnight clock has toll'd; and hark, the
 bell

Of death beats slow! heard ye the note profound?

It pauses now; and now, with rising knell,
 Flings to the hollow gale its sullen sound.
 Yes, * * * is dead. Attend the strain,
 Daughters of Albion! Ye that, light as air,
 So oft have tript in her fantastic train,
 With hearts as gay, and faces half as fair;

For she was fair beyond your brightest bloom ;
 (This envy owns, since now her bloom is fled)
 Fair as the forms, that, wove in fancy's loom,
 Float in light vision round the poet's head.
 Whene'er with soft serenity she smil'd,
 Or caught the orient blush of quick surprise,
 How sweetly mutable, how brightly wild,
 The liquid lustre darted from her eyes !
 Each look, each motion, wak'd a new-born
 grace,
 That o'er her form its transient glory cast ;
 Some lovelier wonder soon usurp'd the place,
 Chas'd by a charm still lovelier than the last.
 That bell again ! it tells us what she is :
 On what she was, no more the strain prolong :
 Luxuriant fancy, pause : an hour like this
 Demands the tribute of a serious song.
 Maria claims it from that sable bier,
 Where cold and wan the slumberer rests her
 head ;
 In still small whispers to reflection's ear,
 She breathes the solemn dictates of the dead.
 Oh catch the awful notes, and lift them loud ;
 Proclaim the theme, by sage, by fool rever'd :
 Hear it, ye young, ye vain, ye great, ye proud !
 'Tis Nature speaks, and Nature will be heard.
 Yes, ye shall hear, and tremble as ye hear,
 While high with health, your hearts exulting leap ;
 Ev'n in the midst of pleasure's mad career,
 The mental monitor shall wake and weep.
 For say, than * * * 's propitious star.
 What brighter planet on your births arose :
 Or gave of Fortune's gifts an ampler share,
 In life to lavish, or by death to lose !
 Early to lose ; while, borne on busy wing,
 Ye sip the nectar of each varying bloom :
 Nor fear, while basking in the beams of spring,
 The wintry storm that sweeps you to the tomb.
 Think of her fate ! revere the heav'nly hand
 That led her hence, though soon, by steps so
 slow :
 Long at her couch Death took his patient
 stand,
 And menac'd oft, and oft withheld the blow :
 To give reflection time, with lenient art,
 Each fond delusion from her soul to steal ;
 Teach her from folly peaceably to part,
 And wean her from a world she lov'd so well.
 Say, are ye sure his mercy shall extend
 To you so long a span ? Alas, ye sigh :
 Make then, while yet ye may, your God, your
 friend,
 And learn with equal ease to sleep or die !
 Nor think the Muse, whose sober voice ye hear,
 Contracts with bigot frown her sullen brow ;
 Casts round Religion's orb the mists of fear,
 Or shades with horrors, what with smiles should glow.
 No ; she would warm you with seraphic fire,
 Heirs as ye are of Heav'n's eternal day ;
 Would bid you boldly to that Heav'n aspire,
 Not sink and slumber in your cells of clay.

Know, ye were form'd to range yon azure field,
 In yon ethereal founts of bliss to lave ;
 Force then, secure in Faith's protecting shield,
 The sting from Death, the vict'ry from the Grave.
 Is this the bigot's rant ? Away, ye vain,
 Your hopes, your fears, in doubt, in dulness steep.
 Go, soothe your souls in sickness, grief, or pain,
 With the sad solace of eternal sleep.
 Yet will I praise you, triflers, as ye are,
 More than those preachers of your fav'rite
 creed,
 Who proudly swell the brazen throat of war,
 Who form the phalanx, bid the battle bleed ;
 Nor wish for more : who conquer, but to die.
 Hear, Folly, hear, and triumph in the tale :
 Like you, they reason ; not, like you, enjoy
 The breeze of bliss, that fills your silken sail :
 On pleasure's glitt'ring stream ye gaily steer
 Your little course to cold oblivion's shore :
 They dare the storm, and, through th' inclement year, [roar.
 Stem the rough surge, and brave the torrent's
 Is it for glory ? that just Fate denies.
 Long must the warrior moulder in his shroud,
 Ere from her trump the heav'n-breath'd accents
 rise,
 That lift the hero from the fighting crowd.
 Is it his grasp of empire to extend ?
 To curb the fury of insulting foes ?
 Ambition, cease : the idle contest end :
 'Tis but a kingdom thou canst win or lose.
 And why must murder'd myriads lose their all,
 (If life be all,) why desolation lower,
 With famish'd frown, on this affrighted ball,
 That thou may'st flame the meteor of an hour ?
 Go wiser ye, that flutter life away,
 Crown with the mantling juice the goblet
 high ; [gay,
 Weave the light dance, with festive freedom
 And live your moment, since the next ye die.
 Yet know, vain sceptics, know, th' Almighty
 mind,
 Who breath'd on man a portion of his fire,
 Bade his free soul, by earth nor time confin'd
 To Heav'n, to immortality aspire.
 Nor shall the pile of hope, his mercy rear'd,
 By vain philosophy be e'er destroy'd :
 Eternity, by all or wish'd or fear'd,
 Shall be by all or suffer'd or enjoy'd.

EPITAPH ON MRS. MASON.

In the Cathedral of Bristol.

TAKE, holy earth ! all that my soul holds dear :
 Take that best gift which Heav'n so lately
 gave :
 To Bristol's fount I bore with trembling care
 Her faded form ; she bow'd to taste the wave,
 And died. Does youth, does beauty, read the line ?

Does sympathetic fear their breasts alarm?
 Speak, dead Maria! breathe a strain divine:
 Ev'n from the grave thou shalt have power to charm.

Bid them be chaste, be innocent, like thee;
 Bid them in duty's sphere as meekly move;
 And if so fair, from vanity as free;
 As firm in friendship, and as fond in love.
 Tell them, though 'tis an awful thing to die,
 ("Twas ev'n to thee) yet the dread path once
 trod,
 Heav'n lifts its everlasting portals high,
 And bids "the pure in heart behold their God."

EPITAPH ON THOMAS FOUNTAYNE, ESQ.

Only Son of the Dean of York, in Melton Church, Yorkshire.

O HERE, if ever, holy Patience, bend
 Thy duteous knee! the hand of Heaven revere!

Here bid the father, mother, sister, friend,
 In mute submission, drop the Christian tear!
 Nor blame that in the vernal noon of youth
 The buds of manly worth, whose opening bloom

Had glowed with honour, fortitude, and truth,
 'Sunk in th' eternal winter of the tomb:
 That he whose form with health, with beauty
 charm'd,

For whom fair Fortune's liberal feast was spread,

Whom science nurtur'd, bright example warm'd,
 Was torn by lingering torture, to the dead.

"Hark!" cries a voice that awes the silenced
 air,

"The doom of man in my dread bosom lies;
 Be yours awhile to pace this vale of care,
 Be his to soar with seraphs in the skies!"

ODE TO FANCY.

O PARENT of each lovely Muse,
 Thy spirit o'er my soul diffuse,
 O'er all my artless songs preside,
 My footsteps to thy temple guide,
 To offer at thy turf-built shrine,
 In golden cups no costly wine,
 No murder'd fatling of the flock,
 But flowers and honey from the rock.
 O nymph with loosely-flowing hair,
 With buskin'd leg, and bosom bare,
 Thy waist with myrtle-girdle bound
 Thy brows with Indian feathers crown'd,
 Waving in thy snowy hand
 An all-commanding magic wand,

Of pow'r to bid fresh gardens blow,
 'Mid cheerless Lapland's barren snow,
 Whose rapid wings thy flight convey
 Through air, and over earth and sea,
 While the vast various landscape lies
 Conspicuous to thy piercing eyes.
 O lover of the desert, hail!
 Say, in what deep and pathless vale,
 Or on what hoary mountain's side,
 'Mid fall of waters, you reside,
 'Mid broken rocks, a rugged scene,
 With green and grassy dales between,
 'Mid forests dark of aged oak,
 Ne'er echoing with the woodman's stroke,
 Where never human art appear'd,
 Nor ev'n one straw-roof'd cot was rear'd,
 Where nature seems to sit alone,
 Majestic on a craggy throne;
 Tell me the path, sweet wand'rer, tell,
 To thy unknown sequester'd cell,
 Where woodbines cluster round the door,
 Where shells and moss o'erlay the floor,
 And on whose top an hawthorn blows,
 Amid whose thickly-woven boughs
 Some nightingale still builds her nest,
 Each evening warbling thee to rest:
 Then lay me by the haunted stream,
 Rapt in some wild, poetic dream,
 In converse while methinks I rove
 With Spenser through a fairy grove;
 Till, suddenly awak'd, I hear
 Strange whisper'd music in my ear,
 And my glad soul in bliss is drown'd
 By the sweetly-soothing sound!
 Me, goddess, by the right hand lead
 Sometimes through the yellow mead,
 Where joy and white-robd peace resort,
 And Venus keeps her festive court,
 Where mirth and youth each evening meet,
 And lightly trip with numble feet,
 Nodding their lily-crown'd heads,
 Where laughter rose-lipp'd Hebe leads,
 Where echo walks steep hills among.
 List'ning to the shepherd's song:
 Yet not these flowery fields of joy
 Can long my pensive mind employ.
 Haste, fancy, from the scenes of folly,
 To meet the matron melancholy,
 Goddess of the tearful eye,
 That loves to fold her arms, and sigh;
 Let us with silent footsteps go
 To charnels and the house of woe,
 To Gothic churches, vaults, and tombs,
 Where each sad night some virgin comes,
 With throbbing breast, and faded cheek,
 Her promis'd bridegroom's urn to seek;
 Or to some abbey's mould'ring tow'rs,
 Where, to avoid cold wintry show'rs,
 The naked beggar shivering lies,
 While whistling tempests round her rise,
 And trembles lest the tottering wall
 Should on her sleeping infants fall.
 Now let us louder strike the lyre,
 For my heart glows with martial fire

I feel, I feel, with sudden heat,
 My big tumultuous bosom beat;
 The trumpet's clangors pierce my ear,
 A thousand widows' shrieks I hear:
 Give me another horse, I cry,
 Lo! the base Gallic squadrons fly!
 Whence is this rage?—what spirit, say
 To battle hurries me away?
 'Tis fancy, in her fiery car,
 Transports me to the thickest war,
 There whirls me o'er the hills of slain,
 Where tumult and destruction reign;
 Where, mad with pain, the wounded steed
 Tramples the dying and the dead;
 Where giant terror stalks around,
 With sullen joy surveys the ground,
 And, pointing to th' ensanguin'd field,
 Shakes his dreadful gorgon shield!
 O guide me from this horrid scene,
 To high-arch'd walks and alleys green,
 Which lovely Laura seeks, to shun
 The fervors of the mid-day sun;
 The pangs of absence, O remove!
 For thou canst place me near my love,
 Canst fold in visionary bliss,
 And let me think I steal a kiss,
 While her ruby lips dispense
 Luscious nectar's quintessence!
 When young-eyed spring profusely throws
 From her green lap the pink and rose,
 When the soft turtle of the dale
 To summer tells her tender tale,
 When autumn cooling caverns seek,
 And stains with wine his jolly cheeks;
 When winter, like poor pilgrim old,
 Shakes his silver beard with cold;
 At every season let my ear
 Thy solemn whispers, fancy, hear.
 O warm, enthusiastic maid,
 Without thy powerful, vital aid,
 That breathes an energy divine,
 That gives a soul to every line,
 Ne'er may I strive with lips profane
 To utter an unhallow'd strain,
 Nor dare to touch the sacred string,
 Save when with smiles thou bidd'st me sing.
 O hear our prayer, O hither come
 From thy lamented Shakspeare's tomb,
 On which thou lov'st to sit at eve,
 Musing o'er thy darling's grave;
 O queen of numbers, once again
 Animate some chosen swain,
 Who, fill'd with unexhausted fire,
 May boldly smite the sounding lyre,
 Who with some new unequal'd song,
 May rise above the rhyming throng,
 O'er all our list'ning passions reign,
 O'erwhelm our souls with joy and pain,
 With terror shake, and pity move,
 Rouse with revenge, or melt with love;
 O deign t' attend his evening walk,
 With him in groves and grottos talk;
 Teach him to scorn with frigid art
 Feebly to touch th' unraptur'd heart;

Like lightning, let his mighty verse
 The bosom's inmost foldings pierce;
 With native beauties win applause
 Beyond cold critics' studied laws;
 O let each muse's fame increase,
 O bid Britannia rival Greece!

Extracts from "THE TASK."

RURAL SIGHTS AND SOUNDS.

O, MAY I live exempted (while I live Guiltless of pamper'd appetite obscene)
 From pangs arthritic, that infest the toe
 Of libertine excess. The sofa suits
 The gouty limb, 'tis true; but gouty limb,
 Though on a sofa, may I never feel:
 For I have lov'd the rural walk through lanes
 Of grassy swarth, close-cropp'd by nibbling sheep,
 And skirted thick with intertexture firm
 Of thorny boughs; have lov'd the rural walk
 O'er hills, through valleys, and by rivers' brink,
 E'er since a truant boy I pass'd my bounds,
 I' enjoy a ramble on the banks of Thames;
 And still remember, nor without regret,
 Of hours, that sorrow since has much endear'd,
 How oft, my slice of pocket-store consum'd,
 Still hung'ring, penniless, and far from home,
 I fed on scarlet hips and stony haws,
 Or blushing crabs, or berries, that emboss
 The bramble, black as jet, or sloes austere.
 Hard fare! but such as boyish appetite
 Disdains not; nor the palate, undeprav'd
 By culinary arts, unsav'ry deems.
 No sofa then awaited my return!
 Nor sofa then I needed. Youth repairs
 His wasted spirits quickly, by long toil
 Incurring short fatigue; and, though our years,
 As life declines, speed rapidly away,
 And not a year but pilfers as he goes
 Some youthful grace, that age would gladly
 keep;
 A tooth, or auburn lock, and by degrees
 Their length and color from the locks they spare;
 Th' elastic spring of an unwearied foot,
 That mounts the stile with ease, or leaps the
 fence,
 That play of lungs, inhaling and again
 Respiring freely the fresh air, that makes
 Swift pace of steep ascent no toil to me,
 Mine have not pilfer'd yet; nor yet impair'd
 My relish of fair prospect: scenes that sooth'd

Or charm'd me young, no longer young, I find Still soothing, and of pow'r to charm me still.
 And witness, dear companion of my walks,
 Whose arm this twentieth winter I perceive
 Fast lock'd in mine, with pleasure such as love,
 Confirm'd by long experience of thy worth
 And well-tried virtues, could alone inspire—
 Witness a joy that thou hast doubled long.
 Thou know'st my praise of nature most sincere,
 And that my raptures are not conjur'd up
 To serve occasions of poetic pomp,
 But genuine, and art partner of them all.
 How oft upon yon eminence our pace
 Has slacken'd to a pause, and we have borne
 The ruffling wind, scarce conscious that it blew,
 While admiration, feeding at the eye,
 And still unsated, dwelt upon the scene.
 Thence with what pleasure have we just discern'd

The distant plow slow-moving, and beside
 His lab'ring team, that swerv'd not from the track,

The sturdy swain diminish'd to a boy!
 Here Ouse, slow winding through a level plain
 Of spacious meads with cattle sprinkled o'er,
 Conducts the eye, along his sinuous course
 Delighted. There, fast rooted in their bank,
 Stand, never overlook'd, our fav'rite elms,
 That screen the herdsman's solitary hut;
 While far beyond, and overthwart the stream,
 That, as with molten glass, inlays the vale,
 The sloping land recedes into the clouds;
 Displaying on its varied side the grace
 Of ledge- and bow-beauties numberless. Square tow'r,
 Tall spire, from which the sound of cheerful bells

Just undulates upon the list'ning ear,
 Groves, Leaths, and smoking villages, remote.
 Scenes must be beautiful, which daily view'd
 Please daily, and whose novelty survives
 Long knowledge and the scrutiny of years;
 Praise justly due to those that I describe.

Nor rural sights alone, but rural sounds,
 Exhilarate the spirit, and restore
 The tone of languid nature. Mighty winds,
 That sweep the skirt of some far-spreading wood
 Of ancient growth, make music not unlike
 The dash of Ocean on his winding shore,
 And lull the spirit while they fill the mind;
 Unnumber'd branches waving in the blast,
 And all their leaves fast flutt'ring, all at once.
 Nor less composure waits upon the roar
 Of distant floods, or on the softer voice
 Of neighb'ring fountain, or of rills that slip
 Through the cleft rock, and chiming as they fall
 Upon loose pebbles, lose themselves at length
 In matted grass, that with a livelier green
 Betrays the secret of their silent course.
 Nature inanimate employs sweet sounds,
 But animated nature sweeter still,
 To soothe and satisfy the human ear.
 Ten thousand warblers cheer the day, and one
 The livelong night: nor these alone, whose notes

Nice-finger'd art must emulate in vain,
 But cawing rooks, and kites that swim sublime
 In still repeated circles, screaming loud,
 The jay, the pie, and ev'n the boding owl,
 That hails the rising moon, have charms for me.
 Sounds inharmonious in themselves and harsh,
 Yet heard in scenes where peace for ever reigns,
 And only there, please highly for their sake.

WAR AND SLAVERY.

O FOR a lodge in some vast wilderness,
 Some boundless contiguity of shade,
 Where rumour of oppression and deceit,
 Of unsuccessful or successful war,
 Might never reach me more. My ear is pain'd,
 My soul is sick, with ev'ry day's report
 Of wrong and outrage, with which Earth is fill'd.
 There is no flesh in man's obdurate heart;
 It does not feel for man; the nat'ral bond
 Of brotherhood is sever'd, as the flax
 That falls asunder at the touch of fire.
 He finds his fellow guilty of a skin
 Not colour'd like his own; and, having pow'r
 T' enforce the wrong, for such a worthy cause
 Dooms and devotes him as a lawful prey.
 Lands intersected by a narrow frith
 Abhor each other. Mountains interpos'd
 Make enemies of nations, who had else
 Like kindred drops been mingled into one.
 Thus man devotes his brother and destroys;
 And, worse than all, and most to be deplor'd
 As human nature's broadest, foulest blot,
 Chains him, and tasks him and exacts his sweat,
 With stripes, that Mercy with a bleeding heart
 Weeps, when she sees inflicted on a beast.
 Then what is man? And what man, seeing this,
 And having human feelings, does not blush,
 And hang his head, to think himself a man?
 I would not have a slave to till my ground,
 To carry me, to fan me while I sleep,
 And tremble when I wake, for all the wealth
 That sinews bought and sold have ever earn'd.
 No; dear as freedom is, and in my heart's
 Just estimation priz'd above all price,
 I had much rather be myself the slave,
 And wear the bonds, than fasten them on him.
 We have no slaves at home—Then why abroad?
 And they themselves, once ferried o'er the wave
 That parts us, are emancipate and loos'd.
 Slaves cannot breathe in England; if their lungs
 Receive our air, that moment they are free;
 They touch our country, and their shackles fall.
 That's noble and bespeaks a nation proud
 And jealous of the blessing. Spread it then,
 And let it circulate through ev'ry vein
 Of all your empire; that where Britain's pow'r
 Is felt, mankind may feel her mercy too.

ADDRESS TO ENGLAND.

ENGLAND, with all thy faults, I love thee still—
 My country! and, while yet a nook is left,
 Where English minds and manners may be found, [clime
 Shall be constrain'd to owe thee. Though thy

Be fickle, and thy year most part deform'd
 With dripping rains, or wither'd by a frost,
 I would not yet exchange thy sullen skies,
 And fields without a flow'r, for warmer France
 With all her wines; nor for Ausonia's groves
 Of golden fruitage, and her myrtle bow'rs.
 To shake thy senate, and from heights sublime
 Of patriot eloquence to flash down fire
 Upon thy foes, was never meant my task:
 But I can feel thy fortunes, and partake
 Thy joys and sorrows, with as true a heart
 As any thund'rer there. And I can feel
 Thy follies too, and with a just disdain
 Frown at effeminate, whose very looks
 Reflect dishonour on the land I love.
 Flow, in the name of soldiership and sense,
 Should England prosper, when such things, as smooth

And tender as a girl, all essenc'd o'er
 With odours, and as profligate as sweet;
 Who sell their laurel for a myrtle wreath,
 And love when they should fight; when such as these

Presume to lay their hand upon the ark
 Of her magnificent and awful cause?
 Time was when it was praise and boast enough
 In ev'ry clime, and travel where we might,
 That we were born her children. Praise enough
 To fill th' ambition of a private man,
 That Chatham's language was his mother tongue, [own.

And Wolfe's great name compatriot with his Farewell those honours, and farewell with them
 The hope of such hereafter: they have fall'n,
 Each in his field of glory; one in arms,
 And one in council—Wolfe upon the lap
 Of smiling Victory that moment won,
 And Chatham heart-sick of his country's shame
 They made us many soldiers. Chatham, still Consulting England's happiness at home,
 Secur'd it by an unforgiving frown,
 If any wrong'd her. Wolfe, where'er he fought,
 Put so much of his heart into his act,
 That his example had a magnet's force,
 And all were swift to follow whom all lov'd.
 Those suns are set. O rise some other such
 Or all that we have left is empty talk
 Of old achievements, and despair of new.

A WINTER MORNING.

'Tis morning; and the sun, with ruddy orb
 Ascending, fires th' horizon; while the clouds
 That crowd away before the driving wind,
 More ardent as the disk emerges more,
 Resemble most some city in a blaze,
 Seen through the leafless wood. His slanting ray
 Slides ineffectual down the snowy vale,
 And, tinging all with his own rosy hue,
 From ev'ry herb and ev'ry spiry blade
 Stretches a length of shadow o'er the field.
 Mine, spindling into longitude immense,
 In spite of gravity, and sage remark
 That I myself am but a fleeting shade,
 Provokes me to a smile. With eye askance

I view the muscular proportion'd limb Transform'd to a lean shank. The shapeless
 pair,

As they design'd to mock me, at my side
 Take step for step; and, as I near approach
 The cottage, walk along the plaster'd wall,
 Preposterous sight! the legs without the man.
 The verdure of the plain lies buried deep
 Beneath the dazzling deluge; and the bents,
 And coarser grass, upspearing o'er the rest,
 Of late unsightly and unseen, now shine
 Conspicuous, and in bright apparel clad,
 And, fledg'd with icy feathers, nod superb.
 The cattle mourn in corners, where the fence
 Screens them, and seem half petrified to sleep
 In unrecumbent sadness. There they wait
 Their wonted fodder; not like hung'ring man,
 Fretful if unsupplied; but silent, meek,
 And patient of the slow-pac'd swain's delay.
 He from the stack carves out th' accustomed lead,

Deep plunging, and again deep plunging oft,
 His broad keen knife into the solid mass:
 Smooth as a wall the upright remnant stands,
 With such undeviating and even force
 He severs it away: no needless care,
 Lest storms should overset the leaning pile
 Deciduous, or its own unbalanc'd weight.
 Forth goes the woodman, leaving unconcern'd
 The cheerful haunts of man; to wield the axe,
 And drive the wedge, in yonder forest drear,
 From morn to eve his solitary task.
 Shaggy, and lean, and shrewd, with pointed ears,
 And tail cropp'd short, half lurcher and half cur,
 His dog attends him. Close behind his heel
 Now creeps he slow; and now, with many a frisk

Wide-scamp'ring, snatches up the drifted snow
 With iv'ry teeth, or plows it with his snout;
 Then shakes his powder'd coat, and barks for
 joy.

Heedless of all his pranks, the sturdy churl Moves right toward the mark; nor stops for aught,

But now and then with pressure of his thumb
 T' adjust the fragrant charge of a short tube,
 That fumes beneath his nose; the trailing cloud
 Streams far behind him, scenting all the air.

EFFECTS OF MUSIC.

THERE is in souls a sympathy with sounds,
 And as the mind is pitch'd the ear is pleas'd
 With melting airs or martial, brisk or grave;
 Some chord in unison with what we hear
 Is touch'd within us, and the heart replies.
 How soft the music of those village bells,
 Falling at intervals upon the ear
 In cadence sweet, now dying all away,
 Now pealing loud again, and louder still,
 Clear and sonorous, as the gale comes on!
 With easy force it opens all the cells
 Where Mem'ry slept. Wherever I have heard
 A kindred melody, the scene recurs,
 And with it all its pleasures and its pains.

Such comprehensive views the spirit takes,
 That in a few short moments I retrace
 (As in a map the voyager his course)
 The windings of my way through many years.
 Short as in retrospect the journey seems,
 It seem'd not always short; the rugged path,
 And prospect oft so dreary and forlorn,
 Mov'd many a sigh at its disheart'ning length.
 Yet feeling present evils, while the past
 Faintly impress the mind, or not at all,
 How readily we wish time spent revok'd,
 That we might try the ground again, where once
 (Through inexperience, as we now perceive)
 We miss'd that happiness we might have found!
 Some friend is gone, perhaps his son's best
 friend,
 A father, whose authority, in show
 When most severe, and must'ring all its force,
 Was but the graver countenance of love;
 Whose favour, like the clouds of Spring, might lower,
 And utter now and then an awful voice,
 But had a blessing in its darkest frown,
 Threat'ning at once and nourishing the plant.
 We lov'd, but not enough, the gentle hand,
 That rear'd us. At a thoughtless age, allur'd
 By ev'ry gilded folly, we renounc'd
 His shelt'ring side, and wilfully forewent
 That converse, which we now in vain regret.
 How gladly would the man recal to life
 The boy's neglected sire! a mother too,
 That softer friend, perhaps more gladly sti',
 Might he demand them at the gates of death.
 Sorrow has, since they went, subdu'd and tam'd
 The playful humour; he could now endure,
 (Himself grown sober in the vale of tears,)
 And feel a parent's presence no restraint.
 But not to understand a treasure's worth,
 Till time has stolen away the slighted good,
 Is cause of half the poverty we feel,
 And makes the world the wilderness it is.
 The few that pray at all pray oft amiss,
 And, seeking grace t' improve the prize they
 hold,
 Would urge a wiser suit than asking more.

WINTER NIGHT.

THE night was Winter in his roughest mood;
 The morning sharp and clear. But now at noon
 Upon the southern side of the slant hills,
 And where the woods fence off the northern blast.
 The season smiles, resigning all its rage,
 And has the warmth of May. The vault is blue
 Without a cloud, and white without a speck
 The dazzling splendour of the scene below.
 Again the harmony comes o'er the vale;
 And through the trees I view th' embattled
 tow'r,
 Whence all the music. I again perceive
 The soothing influence of the wafted strains,
 And settle in soft musings as I tread
 The walk, still verdant, under oaks and elms,
 Whose out spread branches over-arch the glade.
 The roof, though movable through all its length

As the wind sways it, has yet well suffic'd,
 And, intercepting in their silent fall
 The frequent flakes, has kept a path for me.
 No noise is here, or none that hinders thought.
 The red-breast warbles still, but is content
 With slender notes, and more than half sup-
 press'd:
 Pleas'd with his solitude, and fitting light
 From spray to spray, where'er he rests he shakes
 From many a twig the pendent drops of ice,
 That tinkle in the wither'd leaves below.
 Stillness, accompanied with sounds so soft,
 Charms more than silence. Meditation here May think down hours to moments. Here the
 heart
 May give a useful lesson to the head,
 And Learning wiser grow without his books.

KNOWLEDGE AND WISDOM.

KNOWLEDGE and Wisdom, far from being one,
 Have oft-times no connexion. Knowledge
 dwells
 In heads replete with thoughts of other men;
 Wisdom in minds attentive to their own.
 Knowledge, a rude unprofitable mass,
 The mere materials with which Wisdom builds,
 Till smooth'd, and squar'd, and fitted to its
 place,
 Does but encumber whom it seems t' enrich.
 Knowledge is proud that he has learn'd so much;
 Wisdom is humble that he knows no more.
 Books are not seldom talismans and spells,
 By which the magic art of shrewder wits
 Holds an unthinking multitude enthral'd.
 Some to the fascination of a name Surrender judgment hoodwink'd. Some the style
 Infatuates, and through labyrinths and wilds
 Of error leads them, by a tune entranc'd.
 While sloth seduces more, too weak to bear
 The insupportable fatigue of thought;
 And swallowing therefore without pause or choice
 The total grist unsifted, husks and all.
 But trees and rivulets, whose rapid course
 Defies the check of winter, haunts of deer,
 And sheep-walks populous with bleating lambs,
 And lanes, in which the primrose ere her time
 Peeps through the moss, that clothes the hawthorn root,
 Deceive no student. Wisdom there, and truth,
 Not shy, as in the world, and to be won
 By slow solicitation, seize at once
 The roving thought, and fix it on themselves.

Extracts from "CONVERSATION."

Ye powers who rule the tongue, if such there are,
 And make colloquial happiness your care,
 Preserve me from the thing I dread and hate,
 A duel in the form of a debate.
 The clash of arguments and jar of words,
 Worse than the mortal brunt of rival swords,

Decide no question with their tedious length,
 For opposition gives opinion strength,
 Divert the champions prodigal of breath,
 And put the peaceably disposed to death.
 O, thwart me not, sir Soph, at every turn,
 Nor carp at every flaw you may discern ;
 Though syllogisms hang not on my tongue,
 I am not surely always in the wrong ;
 'Tis hard if all is false that I advance,
 A fool must now and then be right by chance.
 Not that all freedom of dissent I blame ;
 No—there I grant the privilege I claim.
 A disputable point is no man's ground ;
 Rove where you please, 'tis common all around ;
 Discourse may want an animated—No,
 To brush the surface, and to make it flow ;
 But still remember, if you mean to please,
 To press your point with modesty and ease.
 The mark, at which my juster aim I take,
 Is contradiction for its own dear sake.
 Set your opinion at whatever pitch,
 Knots and impediments make something hitch :
 Adopt his own, 'tis equally in vain,
 Your thread of argument is snapp'd again ;
 The wrangler, rather than accord with you,
 Will judge himself deceived, and prove it too.
 Vociferated logic kills me quite,
 A noisy man is always in the right—
 I twirl my thumbs, fall back into my chair,
 Fix on the wainscot a distressful stare,
 And, when I hope his blunders are all out,
 Reply discreetly—'To be sure—no doubt !

Dubius is such a scrupulous good man—
 Yes—you may catch him tripping, if you can.
 He would not, with a peremptory tone,
 Assert the nose upon his face his own ;
 With hesitation admirably slow,
 He humbly hopes—presumes—it may be so.
 His evidence, if he were call'd by law
 To swear to some enormity he saw,
 For want of prominence and just relief,
 Would hang an honest man, and save a thief.
 Through constant dread of giving truth offence,
 He ties up all his hearers in suspense :
 Knows what he knows, as if he knew it not,
 What he remembers seems to have forgot ;
 His sole opinion, what-soe'er befall,
 Centring at last in having none at all.
 Yet, though he tease and baulk your list'ning
 ear,

He makes one useful point exceeding clear ;
 Howe'er ingenious on his darling theme
 A sceptic in philosophy may seem,
 Reduced to practice, his beloved rule
 Would only prove him a consummate fool ;
 Useless in him alike both brain and speech.
 Fate having placed all truth above his reach,
 His ambiguities his total sum,
 He might as well be blind, and deaf, and dumb.

Where men of judgment creep and feel their
 way,

The positive pronounce without dismay ;
 Their want of light and intellect supplied
 By sparks, absurdity strikes out of pride :

Without the means of knowing right from
 wrong,

They always are decisive, clear, and strong ;
 Where others toil with philosophic force,
 Their nimble nonsense takes a shorter course ;
 Flings at your head conviction in the lump,
 And gains remote conclusions at the jump :
 Their own defect, invisible to them,
 Seen in another, they at once condemn ;
 And though, self-idolized in every case,
 Hate their own likeness in a brother's face.
 The cause is plain, and not to be denied,
 The proud are always most provoked by pride.
 Few competitions but engender spite ;
 And those the most, where neither has a right.

The point of honour has been deem'd of use,
 To teach good manners, and to curb abuse ;
 Admit it true, the consequence is clear,
 Our polish'd manners are a mask we wear,
 And at the bottom barbarous still and rude,
 We are restrain'd indeed, but not subdued.
 The very remedy, however sure,
 Springs from the mischief it intends to cure,
 And savage in its principle appears,
 Tried, as it should be, by the fruit it bears.
 'Tis hard indeed if nothing will defend
 Mankind from quarrels but their fatal end ;
 That now and then a hero must de cease,
 That the surviving world may live in peace,
 Perhaps at last close scrutiny may show
 The practice dastardly, and mean, and low ;
 That men engage in it compell'd by force,
 And fear, not courage, is its proper source.
 The fear of tyrant custom, and the fear,
 Lest fops should censure us, and fools should sneer.

At least to trample on our Maker's laws,
 And hazard life for any or no cause,
 To rush into a fix'd eternal state,
 Out of the very flames of rage and hate,
 Or send another shivering to the bar
 With all the guilt of such unnatural war,
 Whatever Use may urge or Honour plead,
 On Reason's verdict is a madman's deed.
 Am I to set my life upon a throw,
 Because a bear is rude and surly? No—
 A moral, sensible, and wellbred man
 Will not affront me, and no other can.
 Were I empower'd to regulate the lists,
 They should encounter with well-loaded fists ;
 A Trojan combat would be something new ;
 Let Dares beat Entellus black and blue ;
 Then each might show, to his admiring friends
 In honourable bumps his rich amends,
 And carry, in contusions of his skull,
 A satisfactory receipt in full.

A story, in which native humour reigns,
 Is often useful, always entertains :

A graver fact, enlisted on your side,
 May furnish illustration, well applied ;
 But sedentary weavers of long tales
 Give me the fidgets, and my patience fails.
 'Tis the most asinine employ one arth,
 To hear them tell of parentage and birth,

And echo conversations, dull and dry,
 Embellish'd with—He said, and so said I.
 At every interview their route the same,
 The repetition makes attention lame;
 We bustle up with unsuccessful speed,
 And in the saddest part cry—Droll indeed!
 The path of narrative with care pursue,
 Still making probability your clew;
 On all the vestiges of truth attend,
 And let them guide you to a decent end.
 Of all ambitions man may entertain,
 The worst, that can invade a sickly brain,
 Is that which angles hourly for surprise,
 And baits its hook with prodigies and lies.
 Credulous infancy, or age as weak,
 Are fittest auditors for such to seek,
 Who to please others will themselves disgrace,
 Yet please not, but affront you to your face.
 A great retailer of this curious ware
 Having unloaded and made many stare,
 Can this be true?—an arch observer cries.
 Yes (rather moved), I saw it with these eyes.
 Sir! I believe it on that ground alone;
 I could not, had I seen it with my own.

A tale should be judicious, clear, succinct;
 The language plain, and incidents well link'd;
 Tell not as new what every body knows,
 And, new or old, still hasten to a close;
 There, centring in a focus round and neat,
 Let all your rays of information meet.
 What neither yields us profit nor delight
 Is like a nurse's lullaby at night;
 Guy Earl of Warwick and fair Eleanore,
 Or giant-killing Jack, would please me more.

The pipe, with solemn interposing puff,
 Makes half a sentence at a time enough;
 The dozing sages drop the drowsy strain,
 Then pause, and puff—and speak, and pause
 again.

Such often, like the tube they so admire,
 Important triflers! have more smoke than fire.
 Pernicious weed! whose scent the fair annoys,
 Unfriendly to society's chief joys,
 Thy worst effect is banishing for hours
 The sex, whose presence civilizes ours:
 Thou art, indeed, the drug a gard'ner wants,
 To poison vermin that infest his plants;
 But are we so to wit and beauty blind,
 As to despise the glory of our kind,
 And show the softest minds and fairest forms
 As little mercy, as he grubs and worms?
 They dare not wait the riotous abuse,
 Thy thirst-creating steams at length produce,
 When wine has giv'n indecent language birth,
 And forc'd the flood-gates of licentious mirth;
 For sea-born Venus her attachment shows
 Still to that element from which she rose,
 And with a quiet, which no fumes disturb,
 Sips meek infusions of a milder herb.

Th' emphatic speaker dearly loves t' oppose,
 In contact inconvenient, nose to nose.
 As if the gnomon on his neighbour's phiz,
 Touch'd with the magnet, had attracted his.

His whisper'd theme, dilated and at large,
 Proves after all a wind-gun's airy charge,
 An extract of his diary—no more,
 A tasteless journal of the day before.
 He walk'd abroad, o'taken in the rain,
 Call'd on a friend, drank tea, stepp'd home
 again.

Resum'd his purpose, had a world of talk
 With one he stumbled on, and lost his walk.
 I interrupt him with a sudden bow—
 "Adieu, dear sir! lest you should lose it now."

I cannot talk with civet in the room,
 A fine puss-gentleman that's all perfume;
 The sight's enough—no need to smell a beau—
 Who thrusts his nose into a raree-show?
 His odoriferous attempts to please
 Perhaps might prosper with a swarm of bees;
 But we that make no honey, though we sting,
 Poets, are sometimes apt to maul the thing.
 'Tis wrong to bring into a mix'd resort,
 What makes some sick, and others à-la-mort:
 An argument of cogence, we may say,
 Why such a one should keep himself away.

A graver coxcomb we may sometimes see,
 Quite as absurd, though not so light as he:
 A shallow brain behind a serious mask,
 An oracle within an empty cask,
 The solemn fop, significant and budge,
 A fool with judges, amongst fools a judge;
 He says but little, and that little said
 Owes all its weight, like loaded dice, to lead.
 His wit invites you by his looks to come,
 But when you knock it never is at home;
 'Tis like a parcel sent you by the stage,
 Some handsome present, as your hopes presage,
 'Tis heavy, bulky, and bids fair to prove
 An absent friend's fidelity and love;
 But when unpack'd, your disappointment groans
 To find it stuff'd with brickbats, earth, and stones.

Some men employ their health, an ugly trick,
 In making known how oft they have been sick,
 And give us in recitals of disease
 A doctor's trouble, but without the fees;
 Relate how many weeks they kept their bed,
 How an emetic and cathartic sped;
 Nothing is slightly touch'd, much less forgot,
 Nose, ears, and eyes, seem present on the spot.
 Now the distemper, spite of draught or pill,
 Victorious seem'd, and now the doctor's skill;
 And now—alas, for unforeseen mishaps!
 They put on a damp night-cap, and relapse;
 They thought they must have died, they were so bad;

Their peevish hearers almost wish they had.
 Some fretful tempers wince at ev'ry touch,
 You always do too little, or too much:
 You speak with life, in hopes to entertain,
 Your elevated voice goes through the brain;
 You fall at once into a lower key,
 That's worse—the drone-pipe of an humble bee.

The southern sash admits too strong a light,
 You rise and drop the curtain—now 'tis night.

He shakes with cold—you stir the fire and strive

To make a blaze—that's roasting him alive.
Serve him with venison, and he chooses fish;
With soal—that's just the sort he would not wish.

He takes what ne at first profess'd to loathe,
And in due time feeds heartily on both;
Yet still, o'erclouded with a constant frown,
He does not swallow, but he gulps it down.
Your hope to please him vain on ev'ry plan,
Himself should work that wonder, if he can—
Alas! his efforts double his distress,
He likes yours little, and his own still less.
Thus always teasing others, always teas'd,
His only pleasure is—to be displeas'd.

I pity bashful men, who feel the pain
Of fancied scorn and undeserv'd disdain,
And bear the marks upon a blushing face
Of needless shame, and self-impos'd disgrace.
Our sensibilities are so acute,
The fear of being silent makes us mute.
We sometimes think we could a speech produce
Much to the purpose, if our tongues were loose;
But being tried, it dies upon the lip,
Faint as a chicken's note that has the pip;
Our wasted oil unprofitably burns,
Like hidden lamps in old sepulchral urns.
Few Frenchmen of this evil have complain'd;
It seems as if we Britons were ordain'd,
By way of wholesome curb upon our pride,
To fear each other, fearing none beside.
The cause, perhaps, inquiry may descry,
Self-searching with an introverted eye,
Conceal'd within an unsuspected part,
The vainest corner of our own vain heart:
For ever aiming at the world's esteem,
Our self-importance ruins its own scheme;
In other eyes our talents rarely shown,
Become at length so splendid in our own,
We dare not risk them into public view,
Lest they miscarry of what seems their due.
True modesty is a discerning grace.
And only blushes in the proper place;
But counterfeited is blind, and skulks through fear,

Where 'tis a shame to be asham'd t' appear:
Humility the parent of the first,
The last by Vanity produc'd and nurs'd.
'The circle form'd, we sit in silent state,
Like figures drawn upon a dial-plate;
"Yes ma'am," and "No, ma'am," utter'd softly, show

Ev'ry five minutes how the minutes go;
Each individual suffering a constraint
Poetry may, but colours cannot, paint,
As if in close committee on the sky,
Reports it hot or cold, or wet or dry;
And finds a changing clime a happy source
Of wise reflection, and well tim'd discourse.
We next inquire, but softly and by stealth,
Like conservators of the public health,
Of epidemic throats, if such there are,
And coughs, rheums, and phthisic, and catarrh.

That theme exhausted, a wide chasm ensues,
Fill'd up at last with interesting news,
Who danc'd with whom, and who are like to wed,

And who is hang'd, and who is brought to bed:
But fear to call a more important cause,
As if 'twere treason against English laws.
The visit paid, with ecstasy we come,
As from a seven years' transportation home,
And there resume an unembarrass'd brow,
Recovering what we lost we know not how
The faculties, that seemed reduced to nought,
Expression and the privilege of thought.

ON THE RECEIPT OF MY MOTHER'S PICTURE OUT OF NORFOLK.

O THAT those lips had language! Life has pass'd
With me but roughly since I heard thee last.
Those lips are thine—thy own sweet smile I see,
The same, that oft in childhood solac'd me;
Voice only fails, else how distinct they say,
"Grieve not, my child, chase all thy fears
away!"

The meek intelligence of those dear eyes
(Blest be the art that can immortalize,
The art that baffles Time's tyrannic claim
To quench it,) here shines on me still the same.

Faithful remembrancer of one so dear,
O welcome guest, though unexpected here!
Who bidd'st me honour with an artless song,
Affectionate, a mother lost so long.
I will obey, not willingly alone,
But gladly, as the precept were her own:
And, while that face renews my filial grief,
Fancy shall weave a charm for my relief,
Shall steep me in Elysian reverie,
A momentary dream that thou art she.

My mother! when I learn'd that thou wast
dead,

Say, wast thou conscious of the tears I shed?
Hover'd thy spirit o'er thy sorrowing son,
Wretch even then, life's journey just begun?
Perhaps thou gav'st me, though unfelt, a kiss;
Perhaps a tear, if souls can weep in bliss—
Ah, that maternal smile! it answers—Yes.
I heard the bell toll'd on thy burial day,
I saw the hearse, that bore thee slow away,
And, turning from my nurs'ry window, drew
A long, long sigh, and wept a last adieu!
But was it such?—It was—Where thou art
gone,

Adieus and farewells are a sound unknown.
May I but meet thee on that peaceful shore,
The parting word shall pass my lips no more!
Thy maidens, griev'd themselves at my concern,

Oft gave me promise of thy quick return.
What ardently I wish'd, I long believ'd,
And, disappointed still, was still deceiv'd.
By expectation ev'ry day beguild,
Dupe of to-morrow even from a child

Thus many a sad to-morrow came and went,
Till, all my stock of infant-sorrow spent,
I learn'd at last submission to my lot,
But, though I less deplored thee, ne'er forgot.

Where once we dwelt our name is heard no more,

Children not thine have trod my nursery floor ;
And where the gardener Robin, day by day,
Drew me to school along the public way,
Delighted with my bauble coach, and wrapp'd
In scarlet mantle warm, and velvet cap,
'Tis now become a hist'ry little known,
That once we call'd the past'ral house our own
Short-liv'd possession ! but the record fair,
That mem'ry keeps of all thy kindness there,
Still outlives many a storm, that has effac'd
A thousand other themes less deeply trac'd.
Thy nightly visits to my chamber made,
That thou might'st know me safe and warmly
laid ;

Thy morning bounties ere I left my home,
The biscuit, or confectionery plum ;
The fragrant waters on my cheeks bestow'd
By thy own hand, till fresh they shone and glow'd !

All this, and more endearing still than all,
Thy constant flow of love, that knew no fall,
Ne'er roughen'd by those cataracts and breaks,
That humour interpos'd too often makes ;
All this still legible in mem'ry's page,
And still to be so to my latest age,
Adds joy to duty, makes me glad to pay
Such honors to thee as my numbers may ;
Perhaps a trail memorial, but sincere,
Not scorn'd in Heav'n, though little notic'd here.

Could Time, his flight revers'd, restore the hours

When, playing with thy vesture's tissued flow'rs,
The violet, the pink, and jessamine,
I prick'd them into paper with a pin,
(And thou wast happier than myself the while,
Wouldst softly speak, and stroke my head, and smile ;)

Could those few pleasant days again appear.
Might one wish bring them, would I wish them
here ;

I would not trust my heart—the dear delight
Seems so to be desir'd, perhaps I might.—
But no—what here we call our life is such,
So little to be lov'd, and thou so much,
That I should ill requite thee to constrain
Thy unbound spirit into bonds again.

Thou, as a gallant bark from Albion's coast
(The storms all weather'd and the ocean cross'd)
Shoots into port at some well-havened isle,
Where spices breathe, and brighter seasons smile,
There sits quiescent on the floods, that show
Her beauteous form collected clear below,
While airs impregnated with incense play
Around her, fanning light her streamers gay :
So thou, with sails how swift ! hast reach'd the
shore,

“Where tempests never beat, nor billows roar*”

* Garth.

And thy lov'd consort on the dang'rous tide
Of life long since has anchor'd by thy side.
But me, scarce hoping to attain that rest,
Always from port withheld, always distress'd—
Me howling blasts drive devious, tempest-toss'd,
Sails ripp'd, seams op'ning wide, and compass
lost,

And day by day some current's thwarting force
Sets me more distant from a prosp'rous course.
Yet O the thought, that thou art safe, and he !
The thought is joy, arrive what may to me.
My boast is not, that I deduce my birth
From loins enthron'd, and rulers of the earth ;
But higher far my proud pretensions rise—
The son of parents pass'd into the skies.
And now, farewell—Time unrevok'd has run
His wonted course, yet what I wish'd is done.
By contemplation's help, not sought in vain,
I seem t' have liv'd my childhood o'er again ;
To have renew'd the joys that once were mine,
Without the sin of violating thine ;
And, while the wings of Fancy still are free,
And I can view this mimic show of thee,
Time has but half succeeded in his theft—
Thyself remov'd, thy pow'r to soothe me left.

A COMPARISON.

THE lapse of time and rivers is the same,
Both speed their journey with a restless stream ;
The silent pace, with which they steal away,
No wealth can bribe, no prayers persuade to
stay ;

Alike irrevocable both when pass'd,
And a wide ocean swallows both at last.
Though each resemble each in every part,
A difference strikes at length the musing heart ;
Streams never flow in vain ; where streams
abound

How laughs the land with various plenty crown'd !
But time, that should enrich the nobler mind,
Neglected leaves a dreary waste behind.

THE DIVERTING HISTORY OF JOHN GILPIN.

Showing how he went farther than he intended, and came safe home again.

JOHN GILPIN was a citizen
Of credit and renown,
A train-band captain eke was he
Of famous London town.

John Gilpin's spouse said to her dear,
“I though wedded we have been These twice ten tedious years, yet we
No holiday have seen.

“To-morrow is our wedding-day,
And we will then repair
Unto the Bell at Edmonton
All in a chaise and pair.

"My sister, and my sister's child,
Myself, and children three,
Will fill the chaise ; so you must ride
On horseback after we."

He soon replied, " I do admire
Of woman-kind but one,
And you are she, my dearest dear,
Therefore it shall be done.

" I am a linen-draper bold,
As all the world doth know,
And my good friend the calender
Will lend his horse to go."

Quoth Mrs. Gilpin, " That's well said ;
And, for that wine is dear,
We will be furnish'd with our own,
Which is both bright and clear."

John Gilpin kiss'd his loving wife ;
O'erjoy'd was he to find,
That, though on pleasure she was bent,
She had a frugal mind.

The morning came, the chaise was brought,
But yet was not allow'd
To drive up to the door, lest all
Should say that she was proud.

So three doors off the chaise was stay'd
Where they did all get in ;
Six precious souls, and all agog
To dash through thick and thin.

Smack went the whip, round went the wheels,
Were never folk so glad,
The stones did rattle underneath,
As if Cheapside were mad.

John Gilpin at his horse's side
Seiz'd fast the flowing mane,
And up he got, in haste to ride,
But soon came down again ;

For saddle-tree scarce reach'd had he,
His journey to begin,
When, turning round his head, he saw
Three customers come in.

So down he came ; for loss of time,
Although it griev'd him sore ;
Yet loss of pence, full well he knew,
Would trouble him much more.

'Twas long before the customers
Were suited to their mind,
When Betty screaming came down stairs,
" The wine is left behind !"

Good luck ! quoth he—yet bring it me,
My leathern belt likewise,
In which I bear my trusty sword
When I do exercise.

Now mistress Gilpin (careful soul !)
Had two stone bottles found,
To hold the liquor that she loved,
And keep it safe and sound.

Each bottle had a curling ear,
Through which the belt he threw,
And hung a bottle on each side,
To make his balance true.

Then over all, that he might be Equipped from top to toe,
His long red cloak, well brushed and neat,
He manfully did throw.

Now see him mounted once again
Upon his nimble steed,
Full slowly pacing o'er the stones,
With caution and good heed.

But finding soon a smoother road
Beneath his well-shod feet,
The snorting beast began to trot,
Which gall'd him in his seat.

So, " Fair and softly," John he cried,
But John he cried in vain ;
That trot became a gallop soon,
In spite of curb and rein.

So stooping down, as needs he must
Who cannot sit upright,
He grasp'd the mane with both his hands,
And eke with all his might.

His horse, who never in that sort
Had handled been before,
What thing upon his back had got
Did wonder more and more.

Away went Gilpin, neck or nought ;
Away went hat and wig ;
He little dreamt, when he set out,
Of running such a rig.

*
The wind did blow, the cloak did fly,
Like streamer long and gay,
Till, loop and button failing both,
At last it flew away.

Then might all people well discern
The bottles he had slung ;
A bottle swinging at each side,
As hath been said or sung.

The dogs did bark, the children scream'd,
Up flew the windows all ;
And ev'ry soul cried out, " Well done !"
As loud as he could bawl.

Away went Gilpin—who but he ?
His fame soon spread around,
" He carries weight ! he rides a race !
"Tis for a thousand pound !"

And still as fast as he drew near,
 'Twas wonderful to view,
 How in a trice the turnpike men
 Their gates wide open threw.

And now, as he went bowing down
 His reeking head full low,
 The bottles twain behind his back
 Were shatter'd at a blow.

Down ran the wine into the road,
 Most piteous to be seen,
 Which made his horse's flanks to smoke,
 As they had basted been.

But still he seem'd to carry weight,
 With leathern girdle brac'd ;
 For all might see the bottle-necks
 Still dangling at his waist.

Thus all through merry Islington
 These gambols he did play,
 Until he came unto the Wash
 Of Edmonton so gay ;

And there he threw the wash about
 On both sides of the way,
 Just like unto a trundling mop,
 Or a wild goose at play.

At Edmonton his loving wife
 From the balcony spied
 Her tender husband, wond'ring much
 To see how he did ride.

"Stop, stop, John Gilpin :—Here's the house—"
 They all aloud did cry ;
 "The dinner waits, and we are tir'd :"
 Said Gilpin—"So am I !"

But yet his horse was not a whit
 Inclined to tarry there ;
 For why?—his owner had a house
 Full ten miles off, at Ware.

So like an arrow swift he flew,
 Shot by an archer strong ;
 So he did fly—which brings me to
 The middle of my song.

Away went Gilpin out of breath,
 And sore against his will,
 Till at his friend the calender's
 His horse at last stood still.

The calender, amaz'd to see
 His neighbour in such trim,
 Laid down his pipe, flew to the gate,
 And thus accosted him :

"What news ? what news ? your tidings tell ;
 Tell me you must and shall—
 Say why bareheaded you are come
 Or why you come at all?"

Now Gilpin had a pleasant wit,
 And lov'd a timely joke ;
 And thus unto the calender
 In merry guise he spoke :

"I come because your horse would come ;
 And, if I well forbode,
 My hat and wig will soon be here,
 They are upon the road."

The calender, right glad to find
 His friend in merry pin,
 Return'd him not a single word,
 But to the house went in :

Whence straight he came with hat and wig ;
 A wig that flow'd behind,
 A hat not much the worse for wear,
 Each comely in its kind.

He held them up, and in his turn
 Thus show'd his ready wit,
 "My head is twice as big as yours,
 They therefore needs must fit.

"But let me scrape the dirt away,
 That hangs upon your face ;
 And stop and eat, for well you may
 Be in a hungry case."

Said John, "It is my wedding-day
 And all the world would stare,
 If wife should dine at Edmonton,
 And I should dine at Ware."

So turning to his horse, he said,
 "I am in haste to dine ;
 'Twas for your pleasure you came here,
 You shall go back for mine."

Ah luckless speech, and bootless boast !
 For which he paid full dear ;
 For, while he spake, a braying ass
 Did sing most loud and clear ;

Whereat his horse did snort, as he
 Had heard a lion roar,
 And gallop'd off with all his might,
 As he had done before.

Away went Gilpin, and away
 Went Gilpin's hat and wig ;
 He lost them sooner than at first,
 For why?—they were too big.

Now Mistress Gilpin, when she saw
 Her husband posting down
 Into the country far away,
 She pull'd out half-a-crown ;

And thus unto the youth she said,
 That drove them to the Bell,
 "This shall be yours, when you bring back
 My husband safe and well."

The youth did ride, and soon did meet
 John coming back again ;
 Whom in a trice he tried to stop,
 By catching at his rein ;

But not performing what he meant,
 And gladly would have done,
 The frighted steed he frighted more,
 And made him faster run.

Away went Gilpin, and away .
 Went postboy at his heels,
 The postboy's horse right glad to miss
 The lumb'ring of the wheels.

Six gentlemen upon the road,
 Thus seeing Gilpin fly,
 With postboy scamp'ring in the rear,
 They rais'd the hue and cry :—

“ Stop thief ! stop thief !—a highwayman !”
 Not one of them was mute ;
 And all and each that pass'd that way
 Did join in the pursuit.

And now the turnpike gates again
 Flew open in short space ;
 The toll-men thinking, as before,
 That Gilpin rode a race.

And so he did, and won it too,
 For he got first to town ;
 Nor stopp'd till where he had got up
 He did again get down.

Now let us sing, Long live the King,
 And Gilpin long live he ;
 And, when he next doth ride abroad,
 May I be there to see !

VERSES SUPPOSED TO BE WRITTEN BY ALEXANDER SELKIRK, DURING HIS SOLITARY ABODE IN THE ISLAND OF JUAN FERNANDEZ.

I AM monarch of all I survey,
 My right there is none to dispute ;
 From the centre all round to the sea,
 I am lord of the fowl and the brute.
 O Solitude ! where are the charms
 That sages have seen in thy face ?
 Better dwell in the midst of alarms,
 Than reign in this horrible place.

I am out of humanity's reach,
 I must finish my journey alone,
 Never hear the sweet music of speech,
 I start at the sound of my own.
 The beasts, that roam over the plain,
 My form with indifference see ;
 They are so unacquainted with man,
 Their tameness is shocking to me.

Society, friendship and love,
 Divinely bestow'd upon man,
 O, had I the wings of a dove,
 How soon would I taste you again !
 My sorrows I then might assuage
 In the ways of religion and truth,
 Might learn from the wisdom of age,
 And be cheer'd by the sallies of youth.

Religion ! what treasure untold
 Resides in that heavenly word !
 More precious than silver and gold,
 Or all that this earth can afford.
 But the sound of the church-going bell
 These valleys and rocks never heard,
 Never sigh'd at the sound of a knell,
 Or smil'd when a sabbath appear'd.

Ye winds, that have made me your sport,
 Convey to this desolate shore
 Some cordial endearing report
 Of a land, I shall visit no more.
 My friends do they now and then send
 A wish or a thought after me ?
 O tell me I yet have a friend,
 Though a friend I am never to see.

How fleet is a glance of the mind !
 Compar'd with the speed of its flight,
 The tempest itself lags behind,
 And the swift-winged arrows of light.
 When I think of my own native land,
 In a moment I seem to be there ;
 But alas ! recollection at hand
 Soon hurries me back to despair.

But the sea-fowl is gone to her nest,
 The beast is laid down in his lair ;
 Even here is a season of rest,
 And I to my cabin repair.
 There's mercy in every place,
 And mercy, encouraging thought !
 Gives even affliction a grace,
 And reconciles man to his lot.

THE HEROIC ATTACHMENT OF THE YOUTH IN HOL-LAND, WHO ATTENDED HIS MISTRESS IN THE PLAGUE.

[From Canto IV. of the Botanic Garden.]

THUS when the Plague*, upborne on Belgian air, Look'd through the mist and shook his clotted
 hair ;
 O'er shrinking nations steer'd malignant clouds,
 And rain'd destruction on the gasping crowds ;
 The beauteous Ægle felt the venom'd dart,
 Slow roll'd her eye, and feebly throbb'd her heart ;

* In Holland in 1636.

Each fervid sigh seem'd shorter than the last,
And starting Friendship shunn'd her, as she pass'd.

—With weak unsteady step the fainting maid
Seeks the cold garden's solitary shade
Sinks on the pillow moss her drooping head,
And prints with lifeless limbs her leafy bed.

—On wings of love her plighted swain pursues,
Shades her from winds, and shelters her from dews,

Extends on tapering poles the canvas roof,
Spreads o'er the straw-wove mat the flaxen
woof,

Sweet buds and blossoms on her bolster strows,
And binds his kerchief round her aching brows ;
Soothes with soft kiss, with tender accents
charms,

And clasps the bright infection in his arms.—
With pale and languid smiles the grateful fair
Applauds his virtues, and rewards his care ;
Mourns with wet cheek her fair companions fled
On timorous step, or number'd with the dead ;
Calls to her bosom all its scatter'd rays,
And pours on Thyrsis the collected blaze ;
Braves the chill night, caressing and caress'd,
And folds her hero-lover to her breast.—
Less bold, Leander at the dusky hour
Eyed, as he swam, the far love-lighted tower ;
Bicasted with struggling arms the tossing
wave,

And sunk beighted in the watery grave.
Less bold, Tobias claim'd the nuptial bed
Were seven fond lovers by a fiend had bled ;
And drove, instructed by his angel-guide,
The enamour'd demon from the fatal bride.—
—Sylphs ! while your winnowing pinions fann'd
the air,

And shed gay visions o'er the sleeping pair ;
Love round their couch effused his rosy breath,
And with his keener arrows conquer'd Death.

BOOK I.

AH ! who can tell how hard it is to climb
The steep where Fame's proud temple shines
afar ;

Ah ! who can tell how many a soul sublime
Has felt the influence of malignant star.
And wage'd with fortune an eternal war ;
Check'd by the scoff of Pride, by Envy's frown,
And Poverty's unconquerable bar,
In life's low vale remote has pined alone,
Then dropt into the grave, unpitied and unknown !

And yet the languor of inglorious days,
Not equally oppressive is to all ;
Him, who ne'er listen'd to the voice of praise,
The silence of neglect can ne'er appal.

There are, who, deaf to mad Ambition's call,
Would shrink to hear th' obstreperous tramp of Fame ;

Supremely blest, if to their portion fall
Health, competence, and peace. No higher aim
Had he, whose simple tale these artless lines proclaim.

The rolls of fame I will not now explore ;
Nor need I here describe, in learned lay,
How forth the minstrel far'd in days of yore,
Right glad of heart, though homely in array ;
His waving locks and beard all hoary grey :
While from his bending shoulder, decent hung
His harp, the sole companion of his way,
Which to the whistling wind responsive rung :
And ever as he went some merry lay he sung.

Fret not thyself, thou glittering child of pride,
That a poor villager inspires my strain ;
With thee let pageantry and power abide :
The gentle Muses haunt the sylvan reign ;
Where through wild groves at eve the lonely
swain
Enraptur'd roams, to gaze on Nature's charms.
They hate the sensual, and scorn the vain,
The parasite their influence never warms,
Nor him whose sordid soul the love of gold alarms.

Though richest hues the peacock's plumes adorn,
Yet horror screams from his discordant throat.
Rise, sons of harmony, and hail the morn,
While warbling larks on russet pinions float :
Or seek at noon the woodland scene remote,
Where the grey linnets carol from the hill,
O let them ne'er, with artificial note,
To please a tyrant, strain the little bill,
But sing what Heaven inspires, and wander where they will.

Liberal, not lavish, is kind Nature's hand ;
Nor was perfection made for man below.
Yet all her schemes with nicest art are plann'd,
Good counteracting ill, and gladness woe.
With gold and gems if Chilian mountains glow ;
If bleak and barren Scotia's hills arise ;
There plague and poison, lust and rapine grow ;
Here peaceful are the vales, and pure the skies,
And freedom fires the soul, and sparkles in the
eyes.

Then grieve not, thou, to whom th' indulgent
Muse
Vouchsafes a portion of celestial fire :
Nor blame the partial Fates, if they refuse
Th' imperial banquet, and the rich attire.
Know thine own worth, and reverence the lyre.

Wilt thou debase the heart which God refin'd ;
No: let thy heaven-taught soul to Heaven aspire,
To fancy, freedom, harmony, resign'd ;
Ambition's grovelling crew for ever left behind.

Canst thou forego the pure ethereal soul
In each fine sense so exquisitely keen,
On the dull couch of luxury to loll,
Stung with disease, and stupified with spleen ;
Fain to implore the aid of flattery's screen,
Even from thyself thy loathsome heart to hide,
(The mansion then no more of joy serene,)
Where fear, distrust, malevolence, abide,
And impotent desire, and disappointed pride ?

O how canst thou renounce the boundless
store
Of charms which Nature to her votary yields !
The warbling woodland, the resounding shore,
The pomp of groves, and garniture of fields ;
All that the genial ray of morning gilds,
And all that echoes to the song of even,
All that the mountain's sheltering bosom shields,
And all the dread magnificence of Heaven,
O how canst thou renounce, and hope to be forgiven ?

These charms shall work thy soul's eternal health,
And love, and gentleness, and joy, impart.
But these thou must renounce, if lust of wealth
E'er win its way to thy corrupted heart :
For ah ! it poisons like a scorpion's dart ;
Prompting th' ungenerous wish, the selfish scheme,
The stern resolve unmov'd by pity's smart,
The troublous day, and long distressful dream.
Return, my roving Muse, resume thy purpos'd
theme.

There lived in Gothic days, as legends tell,
A shepherd-swain, a man of low degree ;
Whose sires, perchance, in fairy-land might
dwell,
Sicilian groves, or vales of Arcady ;
But he, I ween, was of the north countrie ;
A nation fam'd for song, and beauty's charms ;
Zealous, yet modest ; innocent, though free ;
Patient of toil ; serene amidst alarms ;
Inflexible in faith ; invincible in arms.

The shepherd-swain of whom I mention made,
On Scotia's mountains fed his little flock ;
The sickle, scythe, or plough, he never sway'd
An honest heart was almost all his stock ;
His drink the living water from the rock :
The milky dams supplied his board, and lent
Their kindly fleece to baffle winter's shock ;
And he, though oft with dust and sweat besprent,
Did guide and guard their wanderings, whereso'er they went.

From about health, from health contentment
springs :
Contentment opes the source of every joy.
He envied not, he never thought of kings ;
Nor from those appetites sustain'd annoy,
That chance may frustrate, or indulgence cloy ;

Nor fate his calm and humble hopes beguiled ;
He mourn'd no recreant friend, 'nor mistress coy,
For on his vows the blameless Phœbe smil'd,
And her alone he lov'd, and lov'd her from a child.

No jealousy their dawn of love o'ercast,
Nor blasted were their wedded days with strife :
Each season look'd delightful as it past.
To the fond husband and the faithful wife
Beyond the lowly vale of shepherd-life
They never roam'd ; secure beneath the storm
Which in Ambition's lofty land is rife.
Where peace and love are canker'd by the worm
Of pride, each bud of joy industrious to deform.

The wight, whose tale these artless lines unfold,
Was all the offspring of this humble pair :
His birth no oracle or seer foretold ;
No prodigy appear'd in earth or air,
Nor aught that might a strange event declare.
You guess each circumstance of Edwin's birth ;
The parent's transport, and the parent's care ;
The gossip's prayer for wealth, and wit, and
worth ;
And one long summer-day of indolence and mirth.

And yet poor Edwin was no vulgar boy,
Deep thought oft seem'd to fix his infant eye ;
Dainties he heeded not, nor gaude, nor toy,
Save one short pipe of rudest minstrelsy ;
Silent when glad ; affectionate, though shy ;
And now his look was most demurely sad ;
And now he laugh'd aloud, yet none knew why,
The neighbours star'd and sigh'd, yet bless'd
the lad :
Some deem'd him wondrous wise, and some be-liev'd him mad.

But why should I his childish feats display ?
Concourse, and noise, and toil, he ever fled ;
Nor cared to mingle, in the clamorous fray
Of squabbling imps ; but to the forest sped,
Or roam'd at large the lonely mountain's head,
Or, where the maze of some bewilder'd stream
To deep untrodden groves his footsteps led,
There would he wander wild, till Phœbus'
beam,
Shot from the western cliff, releas'd the weary team.

Th' exploit of strength, dexterity, or speed,
To him nor vanity nor joy could bring.
His heart, from cruel sport estranged, would bleed
To work the woe of any living thing,
By trap, or net ; by arrow, or by sling ;
These he detested ; those he scorn'd to wield.
He wish'd to be the guardian not the king,
Tyrant far less, or traitor of the field.
And sure the sylvan reign unbloody joy might yield.

Lo! where the stripling, wrapt in wonder, roves
 Beneath the precipice o'erhung with pine;
 And sees, on high, amidst th' encircling groves,
 From cliff to cliff the foaming torrents shine:
 While waters, woods, and winds, in concert join,
 And echo swells the chorus to the skies.
 Would Edwin this majestic scene resign
 For aught the huntsman's puny craft supplies?
 Ah! no: he better knows great nature's charms to prize.

And oft he traced the uplands, to survey,
 When o'er the sky advanc'd the kindling dawn,
 The crimson cloud, blue main, and mountain
 grey,
 And lake, dim-gleaming on the smoky lawn:
 Far to the west the long, long vale withdrawn,
 Where twilight loves to linger for awhile;
 And now he faintly kens th' bounding fawn,
 And villager abroad at early toil.
 But lo! the sun appears! and heaven, earth,
 ocean, smile.

And oft the craggy cliff he lov'd to climb,
 When all in mist the world below was lost:
 What dreadful pleasure! there to stand sublime,
 Like shipwreck'd mariner on desert coast,
 And view th' enormous waste of vapour, tost
 In billows, lengthning to the horizon round.
 Now scoop'd in gulfs, with mountains now emboss'd!
 And hear the voice of mirth and song rebound,
 Flocks, herds, and waterfalls, along the hoar precipice?

In truth he was a strange and wayward wight,
 Fond of each gentle and each dreadful scene.
 In darkness, and in storm, he found delight:
 Nor less, than when on ocean-wave serene
 The southern sun diffus'd his dazzling sheen.
 Even sad vicissitude amus'd his soul:
 And if a sigh would sometimes intervene,
 And down his cheek a tear of pity roll,
 A sigh, a tear, so sweet, he wish'd not to control.

"O ye wild groves, O where is now your bloom!
 (The Muse interprets thus his tender thought,)
 "Your flowers, your verdure, and your balmy
 gloom,
 Of late so grateful in the hour of drought!
 Why do the birds, that song and rapture brought
 To all your bowers, their mansions now for-ake?
 Ah! why has fickle chance this ruin wrought?
 For now the storm howls mournful through the brake, [flake,
 And the dead foliage flies in many a shapeless

"Where now the rill, melodious, pure, and cool,
 And meads, with life, and mirth, and beauty
 crown'd?

Ah! see, th' unsightly slime, and sluggish pool,
 Have all the solitary vale embrown'd;
 Fled each fair form, and mute each melting
 sound,

The raven croaks forlorn on naked spray:
 And hark! the river, bursting every mound,
 Down the vale thunders, and with wasteful sway
 Uproots the grove, and rolls the shatter'd rocks
 away.

"Yet such the destiny of all on earth:
 So flourishes and fades majestic man.
 Fair is the bud his vernal morn brings forth,
 And fostering gales awhile the nursling fan.
 O smile, ye heavens, serene; ye mildews wan,
 Ye blighting whirlwinds, spare his balmy prime,
 Nor lessen of his life the little span.
 Borne on the swift, though silent, wings of time,
 Old age comes on apace, to ravage all the clime.

"And be it so. Let those deplore their doom,
 Whose hope still grovels in this dark sojourn:
 But lofty souls, who look beyond the tomb,
 Can smile at fate, and wonder how they mourn.
 Shall spring to these sad scenes no more return?
 Is yonder wave the sun's eternal bed?
 Soon shall the orient with new lustre burn,
 And spring shall soon her vital influence shed,
 Again attune the grove, again adorn the mead.

"Shall I be left forgotten in the dust,
 When fate, relenting, lets the flower revive?
 Shall nature's voice, to man alone unjust,
 Bid him, though doom'd to perish, hope to live?
 Is it for this fair virtue oft must strive
 With disappointment, penury, and pain?
 No: heaven's immortal spring shall yet arrive,
 And man's majestic beauty bloom again,
 Bright through th' eternal year of love's triumphant reign."

This truth sublime his simple sire had taught;
 In sooth, 'twas almost all the shepherd knew.
 No subtle nor superfluous lore he sought,
 Nor ever wish'd his Edwin to pursue.

"Let man's own sphere," said he, "confine his
 view,

Be man's peculiar work his sole delight."
 And much, and oft, he warn'd him to eschew
 Falsehood and guile, and aye maintain the right,
 By pleasure uneduc'd, unaw'd by lawless night.

"And from the prayer of want, and plaint of
 woe,

O never, never turn away thine ear!
 Forlorn, in this bleak wilderness below, [hear?
 Ah! what were man, should heaven refuse to
 To others do (the law is not severe)
 What to thyself thou wishest to be done.
 Forgive thy foes; and love thy parents dear,
 And friends, and native land; nor those alone:
 All human weal and woe learn thou to make thine own."

See, in the rear of the warm sunny shower
 The visionary boy from shelter fly;
 For now the storm of summer-rain is o'er,
 And cool, and fresh, and fragrant is the sky.

And, lo ! in the dark east, expanded high,
The rainbow brightens to the setting sun !
Fond fool, that deem's the streaming glory nigh,
How vain the chase thine ardour has begun !
'Tis fled afar, ere half thy purpos'd race be run.

Yet couldst thou learn, that thus it fares with
age,
When pleasure, wealth, or power, the bosom
warm,
This baffled hope might tame thy manhood's rage,
And disappointment of her sting disarm.
But why should foresight thy fond heart alarm ?
Perish the lore that deadens young desire :
Pursue, poor imp, th' imaginary charm,
Indulge gay hope, and fancy's pleasing fire :
Fancy and hope too soon shall of themselves expire.

When the long-sounding curfew from afar
Loaded with loud lament the lonely gale,
Young Edwin, lighted by the evening star,
Lingering and listening, wander'd down the vale.
There would he dream of graves, and corpses
pale ;
And ghosts that to the charnel-dungeon throng,
And drag a length of clanking chain, and wail,
Till silenc'd by the owl's terrific song,
Or blast that shrieks by fits the shuddering ailes
along.

Or, when the setting moon, in crimson dyed,
Hung o'er the dark and melancholy deep,
To haunted stream, remote from man, he hied,
Where fays of yore their revels wont to keep ;
And there let fancy rove at large, till sleep
A vision brought to his entranced sight.
And first, a wildly-murmuring wind 'gan creep
Shrill to his ringing ear ; then tapers bright,
With instantaneous gleam, illum'd the vault of
night.

Anon in view a portal's blazon'd arch
Arose ; the trumpet bids the valves unfold :
And forth an host of little warriors march,
Grasping the diamond-lance, and targe of gold.
Their look was gentle, their demeanour bold,
And green their helms, and green their silk attire :

And here and there, right venerably old,
The long-rob'd minstrels wake the warbling
wire,
And some with mellow breath the martial pipe inspire.

With merriment, and song, and timbrels clear,
A troop of dames from myrtle bowers advance ;
The little warriors doff the targe and spear,
And loud enlivening strains provoke the dance.
They meet, they dart away, they wheel askance ;
To right, to left, they thrud the flying maze ;
Now bound aloft with vigorous spring, then glance

Rapid along : with many-color'd rays
Of tapers, gems, and gold, the echoing forests
blaze.

The dream is fled. Proud harbinger of day,
Who scar'd'st the vision with thy clarion shrill,
Fell chanticleer ! who oft hath reft away
My fancied good, and brought substantial ill !
O to thy cursed scream, discordant still,
Let harmony aye shut her gentle ear :
Thy boastful mirth let jealous rivals spill,
Insult thy crest, and glossy pinions tear,
And ever in thy dreams the ruthless fox appear.

Forbear, my Muse. Let love attune thy line.
Revoke the spell. Thine Edwin frets not so.
For how should he at wicked chance repine.
Who feels from every change amusement flow !
Even now his eyes with smiles of rapture glow,
As on he wanders through the scenes of morn,
Where the fresh flowers in living lustre blow,
Where thousand pearls the dewy lawns adorn,
A thousand notes of joy in every breeze are borne.

But who the melodies of morn can tell ?
The wild brook babbling down the mountain-
side ;
The lowing herd ; the sheep-fold's simple bell ;
The pipe of early shepherd dim descried
In the lone valley ; echoing far and wide
The clamorous horn along the cliffs above ;
The hollow murmur of the ocean-tide ;
The hum of bees, the linnet's lay of love,
And the full choir that wakes the universal
grove.

The cottage-curs at early pilgrim bark ;
Crown'd with her pail, the tripping milk-maid sings ;
The whistling plowman stalks afield : and, hark !
Down the rough slope the ponderous waggon
rings ; [springs ;
Through rustling corn the hare astonish'd
Slow tolls the village-clock the drowsy hour ;
The partridge bursts away on whirring wings ;
Deep mourns the turtle in sequester'd bower,
And shrill lark carols clear from her aerial tower.

O Nature, how in every charm supreme !
Whose votaries feast on raptures ever new !
O for the voice and fire of seraphim,
To sing thy glories with devotion due !
Blest be the day I 'scaped the wrangling crew,
From Pyrrho's maze, and Epicurus' sty ;
And held high converse with the godlike few,
Who to th' enraptur'd heart, and ear, and eye,
Teach beauty, virtue, truth, and love, and melody.

Hence ! ye who snare and stupefy the mind,
Sophists, of beauty, virtue, joy, the bane !
Greedy and fell, though impotent and blind,
Who spread your filthy nets in truth's fair fane,

And ever ply your venom'd fangs amain !
Hence to dark error's den, whose rankling slime
First gave you form ! Hence ! lest the Muse should deign, [rhyme,) (Though loth on theme so mean to waste a
With vengeance to pursue your sacrilegious crime.

But hail, ye mighty masters of the lay,
Nature's true sons, the friends of man and truth !
Whose song, sublimely sweet, serenely gay,
Amus'd my childhood, and inform'd my youth.
O let your spirit still my bosom soothe,
Inspire my dreams, and my wild wanderings
guide !
Your voice each rugged path of life can smooth :
For well I know, wherever ye reside,
There harmony, and peace, and innocence abide.

Ah me ! neglected on the lonesome plain,
As yet poor Edwin never knew your lore,
Save when against the winter's drenching rain,
And driving snow, the cottage shut the door.
Then, as instructed by tradition hoar,
Her legend when the beldame 'gan impart,
Or chant the old heroic ditty o'er,
Wonder and joy ran thrilling to his heart ;
Much he the tale admir'd, but more the tuneful
art.

Various and strange was the long-winded tale ;
And balls, and knights, and feats of arms, dis-
play'd ;
Or merry swains, who quaff the nut-brown ale,
And sing enamour'd of the nut-brown maid :
The moonlight revel of the fairy glade ;
Or hags, that suckle an infernal brood,
And ply in caves th' unutterable trade,
'Midst fiends and spectres, quench the moon in blood, [ate flood,
Yell in the midnight storm, or ride th' infuri-

But when to horror his amazement rose,
A gentler strain the beldame would rehearse,
A tale of rural life, a tale of woes,
The orphan-babes, and guardian uncle fierce ;
O cruel ! will no pang of pity pierce
That heart, by lust of lucre sear'd to stone !
For sure, if aught of virtue last, or verse,
To latest time shall tender souls bemoan
Those hopeless orphan-babes by thy fell arts undone.

Behold, with berries smear'd, with brambles torn,
The babes now famish'd, lay them down to die :
Amidst the howl of darksome woods forlorn,
Folded in one another's arms they lie ;
Nor friend, nor stranger, hears their dying cry :
" For from the town the man returns no more."
But thou, who Heaven's just vengeance dar'st defy,
This deed with fruitless tears shalt soon deplore,
When Death lays waste thy house, and flames consume thy store.

A stifled smile of stern vindictive joy
Brighten'd one moment Edwin's starting tear,
But why should gold man's feeble mind decoy,
And innocence thus die by doom severe ?
O Edwin ! while thy heart is yet sincere,
Th' assaults of discontent and doubt repel :
Dark even at noontide is our mortal sphere ;
But let us hope ; to doubt is to rebel ;
Let us exult in hope, that all shall yet be well.

Nor be thy generous indignation check'd,
Nor check'd the tender tear to misery given ;
From guilt's contagious power shall that protect,
This soften and refine the soul for Heaven.
But dreadful is their doom, whom doubt has driven

To censure fate, and pious hope forego :
Like yonder blasted boughs by lightning riven,
Perfection, beauty, life, they never know,
But frown on all that pass, a monument of woe.

Shall he, whose birth, maturity, and age,
Scarce fill the circle of one summer day,
Shall the poor gnat, with discontent and rage,
Exclaim that nature hastens to decay,
If but a cloud obstruct the solar ray,
If but a momentary shower descend ?
Or shall frail man heaven's dread decree gain-
say,
Which bade the series of events extend Wide through unnumber'd worlds, and ages without end ?

One part, one little part, we dimly scan
Through the dark medium of life's feverish
dream ;
Yet dare arraign the whole stupendous plan,
If but that little part incongruous seem.
Nor is that part, perhaps, what mortals deem ;
Oft from apparent ill our blessings rise.
O then renounce that impious self-esteem,
That aims to trace the secrets of the skies :
For thou art but of dust ; be humble, and be wise.

Thus heaven enlarg'd his soul in riper years.
For nature gave him strength, and fire, to soar
On fancy's wing above this vale of tears ;
Where dark cold-hearted sceptics, creeping, pore
Through microscope of metaphysic lore :
And much they grope for truth, but never hit.
For why ? Their powers, inadequate before,
This idle art makes more and more unfit ;
Yet deem they darkness light, and their vain
blunders wit.

Nor was this ancient dame a foe to mirth :
Her ballad, jest, and riddle's quaint device
Oft cheer'd the shepherds round their social hearth ;
Whom levity or spleen could ne'er entice
To purchase chat, or laughter, at the price.

Of decency. Nor let it faith exceed,
That nature forms a rustic taste so nice.
Ah ! had they been of court or city breed,
Such delicacy were right marvellous indeed.

Of when the winter storm had ceas'd to rave,
He roam'd the snowy waste at even, to view
The cloud stupendous, from th' Atlantic wave
High-towering, sail along th' horizon blue :
Where, 'midst the changeful scenery, ever new,
Fancy a thousand wondrous forms describes,
More wildly great than ever pencil drew,
Rocks, torrents, gulfs, and shapes of giant size,
And glitt'ring cliffs on cliffs, and fiery ramparts
rise.

Thence musing onward to the sounding shore,
The lone enthusiast oft would take his way.
Listening, with pleasing dread, to the deep roar
Of the wide-weltering waves. In black array,
When sulphurous clouds roll'd on the autumnal
day,
Ev'n then he hasten'd from the haunt of man,
Along the trembling wilderness to stray,
What time the lightning's fierce career began,
And o'er heav'n's rending arch the rattling thunder ran.

Responsive to the sprightly pipe, when all
In sprightly dance the village youth were join'd,
Edwin, of melody aye held in thrall,
From the rude gambol far remote reclin'd,
Sooth'd with the soft notes warbling in the wind.
Ah then, all jollity seem'd noise and folly,
To the pure soul by fancy's fire refin'd,
Ah, what is mirth but turbulence unholy,
When with the charm compar'd of heavenly melancholy !

Is there a heart that music cannot melt ?
Alas ! how is that rugged heart forlorn ;
Is there, who ne'er those mystic transports felt
Of solitude and melancholy born ?
He needs not woo the Muse ; he is her scorn.
The sophist's rope of cobweb he shall twine ;
Mope o'er the schoolman's peevish page ; or mourn,
And delve for life in mammon's dirty mine ;
Sneak with the scoundrel fox, or grunt with glutton swine.

For Edwin, fate a nobler doom had plann'd ;
Song was his favorite and first pursuit.
The wild harp rang to his advent'rous hand,
And languish'd to his breath the plaintive flute.
His infant muse, though artless, was not mute :
Of elegance as yet he took no care ;
For this of time and culture is the fruit :
And Edwin gain'd at last this fruit so rare ;
As in some future verse I purpose to declare.

Meanwhile, whate'er of beautiful, or new,
Sublime, or dreadful, in earth, sea, or sky,
By chance, or search, was offer'd to his view,

He scann'd with curious and romantic eye.
Whate'er of lore Tradition could supply
From Gothic tale, or song, or fable old,
Rous'd him, still keen to listen and to pry.
At last, though long by penury controll'd,
And solitude, her soul his graces 'gan unfold,

Thus on the chill Lapponian's dreary land,
For many a long month lost in snow profound,
When Sol from Cancer sends the season bland,
And in their northern cave the storms are bound ;
From silent mountains, straight, with startling
sound,
Torrents are hurl'd ; green hills emerge ; and lo,
The trees with foliage, cliffs with flowers are
crown'd ;
Pure rills through vales of verdure warbling go ;
And wonder, love, and joy, the peasant's heart
o'erflow.

Here pause, my Gothic lyre, a little while,
The leisure hour is all that thou canst claim.
But on this verse if Montague should smile,
New strains ere-long shall animate thy frame.
And her applause to me is more than fame ;
For still with truth accords her taste refin'd.
At lucre or renown let others aim,
I only wish to please the gentle mind,
Whom nature's charms inspire, and love of humankind.

THE HERMIT.

At the close of the day, when the hamlet is still,
And mortals the sweets of forgetfulness prove,
When nought but the torrent is heard on the hill, [grove :
And nought but the nightingale's song in the
'Twas thus, by the cave of the mountain afar,
While his harp rung symphonious, a hermit began ;
No more with himself or with nature at war,
He thought as a sage, though he felt as a man.

' Ah why, all abandon'd to darkness, and woe,
Why, lone Philomela, that languishing fall ?
For spring shall return, and a lover bestow,
And sorrow no longer thy bosom enthrall.
But, if pity inspire thee, renew the sad lay,
Mourn, sweetest complainer, man calls thee to mourn ;
O soothe him, whose pleasures like thine pass
away.
Full quickly they pass—but they never return.

' Now gliding remote, on the verge of the sky,
The moon half extinguish'd her crescent displays :
But lately I mark'd, when majestic on high
She shone, and the planets were lost in her blaze.
Roll on, thou fair orb, and with gladness pursue
The path that conducts thee to splendour again :
But man's faded glory what change shall renew ?
Ah fool ! to exalt in a glory so vain !

'Tis night, and the landscape is lovely no more ;
I mourn, but, ye woodlands, I mourn not for
you ;

For morn is approaching, your charms to restore,

Perfum'd with fresh fragrance, and glittering with dew.

Nor yet for the ravage of winter I mourn ;
Kind nature the embryo blossom will save ;
But when shall spring visit the mouldering urn ?
O when shall it dawn on the night of the grave ?

'Twas thus, by the glare of false science
betray'd,

That leads, to bewilder ; and dazzles, to blind ;
My thoughts wont to roam, from shade onward
to shade,

Destruction before me, and sorrow behind.

'O pity, great Father of light,' then I cry'd,

'Thy creature who fain would not wander from
thee !

Lo, humbled in dust, I relinquish my pride :
From doubt and from darkness thou only canst
free.'

And darkness and doubt are now flying away ;
No longer I roam in conjecture forlorn :
So breaks on the traveller, faint and astray,
The bright and the balmy effulgence of morn :
See truth, love, and mercy, in triumph descending,

And nature all glowing in Eden's first bloom !
On the cold cheek of death smiles and roses are blead'g,

And Beauty Immortal awakes from the tomb.'

WRITTEN AT BUXTON, IN A RAINY SEASON.

From these wild heights, where oft the mists
descend

In rains that shroud the sun and chill the gale,

Each transient gleaming interval we hail,
And rove the naked vallies, and extend

Our gaze around where yon vast mountains
blend

With billowy clouds that o'er their summits
sail,

Pondering how little nature's charms befriend
The barren scene, monotonous and pale.

Yet solemn, when the darkening shadows fleet
Successive o'er the wide and silent hills,

Gilded by wat'ry sun-beams :—then we meet
Peculiar pomp of vision. Fancy thrills,

And owns there is no scene so rude and bare
But nature sheds or grace or grandeur there.

EARLY FONDNESS FOR THE BEAUTIES OF NATURE
HOW FORMED.

By Derwent's rapid stream as oft I stray'd
With infancy's light step and glances wild,
And saw vast rocks on steepy mountains pil'd,
Frown o'er the umbrageous glen ; or pleas'd
survey'd

The cloudy moon-shine in the shadowy glade,
Romantic nature to the enthusiast child

Grew dearer, far, than when serene she smil'd
In uncontrasted loveliness array'd.

But O, in every scene with sacred sway
Her graces fire me: from the bloom that spreads

Resplendent in the lucid morn of May,

To the green light the little glow-worm sheds
On mossy banks, when mid-night glooms prevail
And softest silence broods o'er all the dale.

POWER OF A SEA-PROSPECT TO EXCITE SUBLIME PLEASURE.

On the damp margin of the sea-beat shore
Lonely at eve to wander ; or reclin'd

Beneath a rock, what time the rising wind
Mourns o'er the waters, and with solemn roar

Vast billows into caverns surging pour,
And back recede alternate, while combin'd

Loud shriek the sea-fowls, harbingers as-
sign'd,

Clamorous and fearful, of the stormy hour ;
To listen with deep thought those awful sounds,

Gaze on the boiling, the tumultuous waste,
Or promontory rude, or craggy mounds

Staying the furious main, delight has cast
O'er my rapt spirit and my thrilling heart,
Dear as the softer joys green vales impart.

LORD BYRON.

Born 1788.—Died 1824.

CHILDE HAROLD'S PILGRIMAGE.

CANTO III.

I.

Is thy face like thy mother's, my fair child !
Ada ! sole daughter of my house and heart ?

When last I saw thy young blue eyes they smiled,

And then we parted,—not as now we part,
But with a hope.—

Awaking with a start,
The waters heave around me ; and on high
The winds lift up their voices : I depart,
Whither I know not ; but the hour's gone by,
When Albion's lessening shores could grieve or glad mine eye.

II.

Once more upon the waters ! yet once more !
 And the waves bound beneath me as a steed
 That knows his rider. Welcome, to their
 roar !
 Swift be their guidance, wheresoe'er it lead !
 Though the strain'd mast should quiver as a reed,
 And the rent canvas fluttering strew the gale.
 Still must I on ; for I am as a weed,
 Flung from the rock, on ocean's foam, to sail
 Where'er the surge may sweep, the tempest's breath prevail.

III.

In my youth's summer I did sing of one,
 The wandering outlaw of his own dark mind ;
 Again I seize the theme then but begun,
 And bear it with me, as the rushing wind
 Bears the cloud onwards : in that tale I find
 The furrows of long thought, and dried-up
 tears,
 Which, ebbing, leave a sterile track behind,
 O'er which all heavily the journeying years
 Plod the last sands of life,—where not a flower appears.

IV.

Since my young days of passion—joy, or pain,
 Perchance my heart and harp have lost a
 string,
 And both may jar : it may be, that in vain
 I would essay as I have sung to sing.
 Yet, though a dreary strain, to this I cling ;
 So that it wean me from the weary dream
 Of selfish grief or gladness—so it fling
 Forgetfulness around me—it shall seem
 To me, though to none else, a not ungrateful
 theme.

V.

He, who grown aged in this world of woe,
 In deeds, not years, piercing the depths of
 life,
 So that no wonder waits him ; nor below
 Can love, or sorrow, fame, ambition, strife,
 Cut to his heart again with the keen knife
 Of silent, sharp endurance : he can tell
 Why thought seeks refuge in lone caves, yet
 rife
 With airy images, and shapes which dwell
 Still unimpaired, though old, in the soul's haunted cell.

VI.

'Tis to create, and in creating live
 A being more intense, that we endow
 With form our fancy, gaining as we give
 The life we image, e'en as I do now.
 What am I ? Nothing ; but not so art thou,
 Soul of my thought ! with whom I traverse
 earth,
 Invisible but gazing, as I glow
 Mix'd with thy spirit, blended with thy birth,
 And feeling still with thee in my crush'd feelings' dearth.

VII.

Yet must I think less wildly :—I have thought
 Too long and darkly, till my brain became,
 In its own eddy boiling and o'erwrought,
 A whirling gulf of phantasy and flame :
 And thus, untaught in youth my heart to
 tame,
 My springs of life were poison'd. 'Tis too late !
 Yet am I chang'd ; though still enough the same
 In strength to bear what time can not abate,
 And feed on bitter fruits without accusing Fate.

VIII.

Something too much of this :—but now 'tis past,
 And the spell closes with its silent seal.
 Long absent HAROLD re-appears at last ;
 He of the breast which fain no more would feel,
 Wrung with the wounds which kill not, but ne'er heal ;
 Yet Time, who changes all, had altered him
 In soul and aspect as in age : years steal
 Fire from the mind as vigour from the limb ;
 And life's enchanted cup but sparkles near the brim.

IX.

His had been quaff'd too quickly, and he found
 The dregs were wormwood ; but he fill'd
 again,
 And from a purer fount, on holier ground,
 And deem'd its spring perpetual ; but in vain !
 Still round him clung invisibly a chain
 Which gall'd for ever, fettering though unseen,
 And heavy though it clank'd not ; worn with
 pain,
 Which pined although it spoke not, and grew keen,
 Entering with every step, he took, through many a scene.

X.

Secure in guarded coldness, he had mix'd
 Again in fancied safety with his kind,
 And deem'd his spirit now so firmly fix'd
 And sheath'd with an invulnerable mind,
 That, if no joy, no sorrow lurk'd behind ;
 And he, as one, might midst the many stand Unheeded, searching through the crowd to
 find
 Fit speculation ! such as in strange land
 He found in wonder-works of God and Nature's hand.

XI.

But who can view the ripened rose, nor seek
 To wear it ? who can curiously behold
 The smoothness and the sheen of beauty's cheek,
 Nor feel the heart can never all grow old ?
 Who can contemplate Fame through clouds unfold
 The star which rises o'er her steep, nor climb ?
 Harold, once more within the vortex, roll'd

On with the giddy circle, chasing Time,
Yet with a nobler aim than in his youth's fond prime.

XII.

But soon he knew himself the most unfit
Of men to herd with man; with whom he held
Little in common; untaught to submit
His thoughts to others, though his soul was quell'd
In youth by his own thoughts; still uncom-
pell'd,
He would not yield dominion of his mind
To spirits against whom his own rebell'd;
Proud though in desolation; which could
find
A life within itself, to breathe without mankind.

XIII.

Where rose the mountains, there to him were
friends;
Where roll'd the ocean, thereon was his
home;
Where a blue sky, and glowing clime, extends,
He had the passion and the power to roam;
The desert, forest, cavern, breaker's foam,
Were unto him companionship; they spake
A mutual language, clearer than the tome
Of his land's tongue, which he would oft forsake
For Nature's pages glass'd by sunbeams on the lake.

XIV.

Like the Chaldean, he could watch the stars,
Till he had peopled them with beings bright
As their own beams; and earth, and earth-born jars,
And human frailties, were forgotten quite:
Could he have kept his spirit to that flight
He had been happy; but this clay will sink
Its spark immortal, envying it the light
To which it mounts, as if to break the link
That keeps us from yon heaven which woos us to its brink.

XV.

But in man's dwellings he became a thing
Restless and worn, and stern and wearisome,
Droop'd as a wild-born falcon with clipt wing
To whom the boundless air alone were home:
Then came his fit again, which to o'ercome,
As eagerly the barr'd-up bird will beat
His breast and beak against his wiry dome
Till the blood tinge his plumage, so the heat
Of his impeded soul would through his bosom eat.

XVI.

Self-exiled Harold wanders forth again,
With nought of hope left, but with less of
gloom;
The very knowledge that he lived in vain,
That all was over on this side the tomb,
Had made despair a smilingness assume,

Which, though 'twere wild,—as on the plundered wreck

When mariners would madly meet their doom
With draughts intemperate on the sinking deck,— [check.
Did yet inspire a cheer, which he forbore to

XVII.

Stop!—for thy tread is on an empire's dust!
An earthquake's spoil is sepulchred below!
Is the spot mark'd with no colossal bust?
Nor column trophied for triumphal show?
None; but the moral's truth tells simpler so,
As the ground was before, thus let it be;—
How that red rain hath made the harvest
grow!
And is this all the world has gained by thee,
Thou first and last of fields! king-making Victory?

XVIII.

And Harold stands upon this place of skulls,
The grave of France, the deadly Waterloo!
How in an hour the power which gave annals
Its gifts, transferring fame as fleeting too!
In "pride of place" here last the eagle flew,
Then tore with bloody talon the rent plain,
Pierced by the shaft of banded nations
through;
Ambition's life and labours all were vain;
He wears the shattered links of the world's broken chain.

XIX.

Fit retribution! Gaul may champ the bit
And foam in fetters;—but is earth more
free?
Did nations combat to make One submit;
Or league to teach all kings true sovereignty?
What! shall reviving Thralldom again be
The patched-up idol of enlightened days?
Shall we, who struck the Lion down, shall we Pay the Wolf homage? proffering lowly gaze
And servile knees to thrones; No; prove before ye praise!

XX.

If not, o'er one fallen despot boast no more!
In vain fair cheeks were furrowed with hot
tears
For Europe's flowers long rooted up before
The trampler of her vineyards; in vain years
Of death, depopulation, bondage, fears,
Have all been borne, and broken by the accord

Of roused-up millions: all that most endears
Glory, is when the myrtle wreathes a sword
Such as Harmodius* drew on Athens' tyrant lord.

XXI.

There was a sound of revelry by night,
And Belgium's capital had gathered then
Her beauty and her chivalry, and bright
The lamps shone o'er fair women and brave
men;

* See the famous Song on Harmodius and Aristogiton.—The best English translation is in Bland's Anthology, by Mr. Denman.

"With myrtle will I wreath," &c.

A thousand hearts beat happily ; and when
Music arose with its voluptuous swell,
Soft eyes look'd love to eyes which spake
again,
And* all went merry as a marriage-bell ;
But hush ! hark ! a deep sound strikes like a rising knell !

XXII.

Did ye not hear it ?—No ; 'twas but the
wind,
Or the car rattling o'er the stony street ;
On with the dance ! let joy be unconfined ;
No sleep till morn, when youth and pleasure meet
To chase the glowing hours with flying feet—
But hark !—that heavy sound breaks in once
more,
As if the clouds its echo would repeat :
And nearer, clearer, deadlier than before !
Arm ! Arm ! it is—it is—the cannon's opening roar !

XXIII.

Within a windowed niche of that high hall
Sate Brunswick's fated chieftain ; he did hear
That sound the first amidst the festival,
And caught its tone with Death's prophetic
ear :
And when they smiled because he deem'd it
near,
His heart more truly knew that peal too well
Which stretch'd his father on a bloody bier,
And roused the vengeance blood alone could quell :
He rush'd into the field, and, foremost fighting,
fell.

XXIV.

Ah ; then and there was hurrying to and fro,
And gathering tears, and tremblings of distress,
And cheeks all pale, which but an hour ago
Blush'd at the praise of their own loveliness ;
And there were sudden partings, such as press [sighs
The life from out young hearts, and choking
Which ne'er might be repeated ; who could guess
If ever more should meet those mutual eyes,
Since upon nights so sweet such awful morn could rise ?

XXV.

And there was mounting in hot haste : the steed,
The mustering squadron, and the clattering car,
Went pouring forward with impetuous speed,
And swiftly forming in the ranks of war ;
And the deep thunder, peal on peal afar ;
And near, the beat of the alarming drum
Roused up the soldier ere the morning star :
While throng'd the citizens with terror dumb,
Or whispering, with white lips—"The foe !
They come ! they come !"

* On the night previous to the action, it is said that a ball was given at Brussels.

XXVI.

And wild and high the "Cameron's gathering" rose !
The war-note of Lochiel, which Albyn's hills
Have heard, and heard, too, have her Saxon
foes :—
How in the noon of night that pibroch thrills, Savage and shrill ! But with the breath which fills
Their mountain-pipe, so fill the mountaineers
With the fierce native daring which instils
The stirring memory of a thousand years,
And *Evan's, Donald's fame rings in each clansman's ears !

XXVII.

And Ardennes waves above them her green
leaves,
Dewy with nature's tear-drops, as they pass,
Grieving, if aught inanimate e'er grieves,
Over the unreturning brave,—alas !
Ere evening to be trodden like the grass
Which now beneath them, but above shall grow
In its next verdure, when this fiery mass
Of living valour, rolling on the foe [and low.
And burning with high hope, shall moulder cold
XXVIII.

Last noon beheld them full of lusty life,
Last eve in Beauty's circle proudly gay,
The midnight brought the signal-sound of strife.
The morn the marshalling in arms,—the day
Battle's magnificently-sterne array !
The thunder-clouds close o'er it which when rent
The earth is covered thick with other clay,
Which her own clay shall cover, heaped and
pent,
Rider and horse,—friend, foe,—in one red burial blent !

XXIX.

Their praise is hymn'd by loftier harps than mine ; [throng,
Yet one I would select from that proud
Partly because they blend me with his line,
And partly that I did his sire some wrong,
And partly that bright names will hallow
song ;
And his was of the bravest, and when shower'd
The death-bolts deadliest the thinn'd files
along, [lower'd,
Even where the thickest of war's tempest
They reach'd no nobler breast than thine, young, gallant Howard !

XXX.

There have been tears and breaking hearts
for thee,
And mine were nothing, had I such to give ;
But when I stood beneath the fresh green
tree,
Which living waves where thou didst cease
to live,

* Sir Evan Cameron, and his descendant Donald, the "gentle Lochiel" of the "forty-five."

And saw around me the wide field revive
 With fruits and fertile promise, and th
 Spring
 Come forth her work of gladness to contrive
 With all her reckless birds upon the wing,
 I turn'd from all she brought to those she could not bring.

XXXI.

I turn'd to thee, to thousands, of whom each
 And one as all a ghastly gap did make
 In his own kind and kindred, whom to teach
 Forgetfulness were mercy for their sake ;
 The Archangel's trump, not Glory's, must awake
 Those whom they thirst for ; though the sound of Fame
 May for a moment soothe, it cannot slake
 The fever of vain longing, and the name
 So honoured but assumes a stronger, bitterer claim.

XXXII.

They mourn, but smile at length ; and, smiling, mourn :
 The tree will wither long before it fall ;
 The hull drives on, though mast and sail be torn ;
 The roof-tree sinks, but moulders on the hall
 In massy hoariness ; the ruined wall Stands when its wind-worn battlements are
 gone ;
 The bars survive the captive they enthrall ;
 The day drags through though storms keep out the sun ;
 And thus the heart will break, yet brokenly live on :

XXXIII.

Even as a broken mirror, which the glass
 In every fragment multiplies ; and makes
 A thousand images of one that was,
 The same, and still the more, the more it breaks ;
 And thus the heart will do which not forsakes,
 Living in shattered guise, and still, and cold,
 And bloodless, with its sleepless sorrow
 aches,
 Yet withers on till all without is old,
 Shewing no visible sign, for such things are untold.

XXXIV.

There is a very life in our despair,
 Vitality of poison,—a quick root
 Which feeds these deadly branches : for it were
 As nothing did we die ; but life will suit
 Itself to sorrow's most detested fruit,
 Like to the apples on the* Dead Sea's shore,
 All ashes to the taste. Did man compute
 Existence by enjoyment, and count o'er Such hours 'gainst years of life,—say, would he name threescore ?

* The (fabled) apples on the brink of the lake Asphaltos were said to be fair without, and within ashes.—Fide Tacitus.

XXXV.

The Psalmist numbered out the years of man :
 They are enough ; and if thy tale be true,
 Thou, who didst grudge him even that fleeting span,
 More than enough, thou fatal Waterloo !
 Millions of tongues record thee, and anew
 Their children's lips shall echo them, and say—
 " Here, where the sword united nations drew,
 " Our countrymen were warring on that day !"
 And this is much, and all which will not pass away.

XXXVI.

There sunk the greatest, nor the worst of
 men,
 Whose spirit antithetically mixt
 One moment of the mightiest, and again
 On little objects with like firmness fixt, Extreme in all things ! hadst thou been betwixt,
 Thy throne had still been thine, or never
 been ;
 For daring made thy rise as fall : thou seek'st
 Even now to re-assume the imperial mien,
 And shake again the world, the Thunderer of the scene !

XXXVII.

Conqueror and captive of the earth art thou !
 She trembles at thee still, and thy wild name
 Was ne'er more bruited in men's minds than
 now
 That thou art nothing, save the jest of Fame,
 Who wooed thee once, thy vassal, and became
 The flatterer of thy fierceness, till thou wert
 A god unto thyself ; nor less the same
 To the astounded kingdoms all inert,
 Who deem'd thee for a time whate'er thou didst assert.

XXXVIII.

Oh, more or less than man—in high or low,
 Battling with nations, flying from the field ;
 Now making monarchs' necks thy footstool,
 now
 More than thy meanest soldier taught to
 yield ;
 An empire thou couldst crush, command, rebuild,
 But govern not thy pettiest passion, nor,
 However deeply in men's spirits skill'd,
 Look through thine own, nor curb the lust of
 war,
 Nor learn that tempted Fate will leave the lof-tiest star.

XXXIX.

Yet well thy soul hath brook'd the turning
 tide
 With that untaught innate philosophy,
 Which, be it wisdom, coldness or deep pride,
 Is gall and wormwood to an enemy.
 When the whole host of hatred stood hard by
 To watch and mock thee shrinking, thou hast
 smiled

With a sedate and all-enduring eye ;—
 When Fortune fled her spoil'd and favourite child, [piled.
 He stood unbowed beneath the ills upon him

XL.

Sager than in thy fortunes ; for in them
 Ambition steel'd thee on too far to show
 That just habitual scorn which could contemn
 Men and their thoughts ; 'twas wise to feel,
 not so
 To wear it ever on thy lip and brow,
 And spurn the instruments thou wert to use
 Till they were turn'd unto thine overthrow :
 'Tis but a worthless world to win or lose ;
 So hath it proved to thee, and all such lot who choose.

XLI.

If, like a tower upon a headlong rock,
 Thou hadst been made to stand or fall alone,
 Such scorn of man had help'd to brave the
 shock ;
 But men's thoughts were the steps which paved thy throne,
 Their admiration thy best weapon shone ;
 The part of Philip's son was thine, not then (Unless aside thy purple had been thrown)
 Like stern Diogenes to mock at men ;
 For sceptred cynics earth were far too wide a den.

XLII.

But quiet to quick bosoms is a hell,
 And there hath been thy bane ; there is a fire
 And motion of the soul which will not dwell
 In its own narrow being, but aspire
 Beyond the fitting medium of desire ;
 And, but once kindled, quenchless evermore
 Preys upon high adventure, nor can tire
 Of aught but rest ; a fever at the core,
 Fatal to him who bears, to all who ever bore.

XLIII.

This makes the madmen who have made men
 mad
 By their contagion ; conquerors and kings,
 Founders of sects and systems, to whom add
 Sophists, bards, statesmen, all unquiet things
 Which stir too strongly the soul's secret
 springs,
 And are themselves the fools to those they fool,
 Envied, yet how unenviable ! what stings
 Are theirs ! One breast laid open were a school
 Which would unteach mankind the lust to shine or rule ;

XLIV.

Their breath is agitation, and their life
 A storm whereon they ride. to sink at last,
 And yet so nurs'd and bigotted to strife,
 That should their days, surviving perils past,
 Melt to calm twilight, they feel overcast
 With sorrow and supineness, and so die ;
 Even as a flame unfed, which runs to waste
 With its own flickering, or a sword laid by
 . Which eats into itself, and rusts ingloriously.

XLV.

He who ascends to mountain-tops shall find
 The loftiest peaks most wrapt in clouds and
 snow ;
 He who surpasses or subdues mankind,
 Must look down on the hate of those below.
 Though high above the sun of glory glow,
 And far beneath the earth and ocean spread,
 Round him are icy rocks, and loudly blow
 Contending tempests on his naked head,
 And thus reward the toils which to those summits led.

XLVI.

Away with these ! true Wisdom's world will be
 Within its own creation, or in thine,
 Maternal Nature ! for who teems like thee,
 Thus on the banks of thy majestic Rhine ?
 There Harold gazes on a work divine,
 A blending of all beauties ; streams and dells
 Fruit, foliage, crag, wood, cornfield, mountain, vine,
 And chiefless castles breathing stern farewells
 From gray but leafy walls, where ruin greenly dwells.

XLVII.

And there they stand, as stands a lofty mind,
 Worn, but unstooping to the baser crowd,
 All tenantless, save to the crannying wind,
 Or holding dark communion with the cloud.
 There was a day when they were young and proud,
 Banners on high, and battles pass'd below ;
 But they who fought are in a bloody shroud,
 And those which waved are shredless dust
 ere now,
 And the bleak battlements shall bear no future
 blow.

XLVIII.

Beneath these battlements, within those walls,
 Power dwelt amidst her passions ; in proud
 state
 Each robber chief upheld his armed halls,
 Doing his evil will, nor less elate
 Than mightier heroes of a longer date.
 What want these outlaws conquerors should have ?
 But history's purchased page to call them
 great ?
 A wider space, an ornamented grave ?
 Their hopes were not less warm, their souls were full as brave.

XLIX.

In their baronial feuds and single fields,
 What deeds of prowess unrecorded died !
 And Love, which lent a blazon to their shields,
 With emblems well devised by amorous pride,
 Through all the mail of iron hearts would glide ; [on
 But still their flame was fierceness, and drew
 Keen contest and destruction near allied,
 And many a tower for some fair mischief won,
 Saw the discoloured Rhine beneath its ruin run.

L.

But thou, exulting and abounding river !
Making thy waves a blessing as they flow
Through banks whose beauty would endure
for ever

Could man but leave thy bright creation so,
Nor its fair promise from the surface mow
With the sharp scythe of conflict,—then to see
Thy valley of sweet waters, were to know
Earth paved like heaven ; and to seem such
to me

Even now what wants thy stream?—that it should Lethe be.

LI.

A thousand battles have assail'd thy banks,
But these and half their fame have pass'd
away,
And Slaughter heap'd on high his weltering ranks ;

Their very graves are gone, and what are they ?

Thy tide wash'd down the blood of yesterday,
And all was stainless, and on thy clear stream
Glass'd with its dancing light the sunny ray ;
But o'er the blackened memory's blighting
dream

Thy waves would vainly roll, all sweeping as they seem.

LII.

Thus Harold inly said, and pass'd along,
Yet not insensibly to all which here
Awoke the jocund birds to early song
In glens which might have made even exile
dear :

Though on his brow were graven lines austere,
And tranquil sternness which had ta'en the
place

Of feelings fierier far but less severe,
Joy was not always absent from his face,

But o'er it in such scenes would steal with transient trace.

LIII.

Nor was all love shut from him, though his days

Of passion had consumed themselves to dust.
It is in vain that we would coldly gaze
On such a smile upon us ; the heart must
Leap kindly back to kindness, though disgust Hath wean'd it from all worldlings : thus he felt,

For there was soft remembrance, and sweet
trust

In one fond breast, to which his own would melt,

And in its tenderer hour on that his bosom dwelt.

LIV.

And he had learn'd to love,—I know not why,
For this in such as him seems strange of mood,—

The helpless looks of blooming infancy,
Even in its earliest nurture ; what subdued,

To change like this, a mind so far imbued
With scorn of man, it little boots to know ;
But thus it was ; and though in solitude
Small power the nipp'd affections have to grow,
In him this glowed when all beside had ceased to glow,

LV.

And there was one soft breast, as hath been
said,

Which unto his was bound by stronger ties
Than the church links withal ; and, though unwed,

That love was pure, and, far above disguise,
Had stood the test of mortal enmities
Still undivided, and cemented more
By peril, dreaded most in female eyes :

But this was firm, and from a foreign shore
Well to that heart might his these absent greetings pour !

1.

The castled crag of Drachenfels*
Frowns o'er the wide and winding Rhine,
Whose breast of waters broadly swells
Between the banks which bear the vine,
And hills all rich with blossomed trees,
And fields which promise corn and wine,
And scattered cities crowning these,
Whose far white walls along them shine,
Have strewed a scene, which I should see
With double joy wert thou with me !

2.

And peasant girls, with deep blue eyes,
And hands which offer early flowers,
Walk smiling o'er this paradise ;
Above, the frequent feudal towers
Through green leaves lift their walls of grey,
And many a rock which steeply lours,
And noble arch in proud decay,
Look o'er this vale of vintage-bowers ;
But one thing want these banks of Rhine,—
Thy gentle hand to clasp in mine !

3.

I send the lilies given to me ;
Though long before thy hand they touch,
I know that they must withered be,
But yet reject them not as such ;
For I have cherish'd them as dear,
Because they yet may meet thine eye,
And guide thy soul to mine even here,
When thou behold'st them drooping nigh,
And know'st them gathered by the Rhine,
And offered from my heart to thine !

4.

The river nobly foams and flows,
The charm of this enchanted ground,
And all its thousand turns disclose
Some fresher beauty varying round ;

* The castle of Drachenfels stands on the highest summit of "the Seven Mountains," over the Rhine banks ; it is in ruins, and connected with some singular traditions ; it is the first in view on the road from Bonn, but on the opposite side of the river ; on this bank, nearly facing it, are the remains of another called the Jew's castle, and a large cross commemorative of the murder of a chief by his brother : the number of castles and cities along the course of the Rhine on both sides is very great, and their situations remarkably beautiful.

The haughtiest breast its wish might bound
Through life to dwell delighted here ;
Nor could on earth a spot be found
To nature and to me so dear,
Could thy dear eyes in following mine
Still sweeten more these banks of Rhine !

LVI.

By Coblantz, on a rise of gentle ground,
There is a small and simple pyramid,
Crowning the summit of the verdant mound ;
Beneath its base are heroes' ashes hid,
Our enemy's,—but let not that forbid
Honour to Marceau ! o'er whose early tomb
Tears, big tears, gush'd from the rough soldier's lid,
Lamenting and yet envying such a doom,
Falling for France, whose rights he battled to resume.

LVII.

Brief, brave, and glorious was his young career,—
His mourners were two hosts, his friends and foes ;
And fitly may the stranger lingering here
Pray for his gallant spirit's bright repose ;
For he was Freedom's champion, one of those,
The few in number, who had not o'erstept
The charter to chastise which she bestows
On such as wield her weapons ; he had kept
The whiteness of his soul, and thus men o'er him wept*.

LVIII.

Here Ehrenbreitstein†, with her shattered wall
Black with the miner's blast, upon her height
Yet shows of what she was, when shell and ball
Rebounding idly on her strength did light ;
A tower of victory ! from whence the flight
Of baffled foes was watch'd along the plain :
But Peace destroy'd what War could never blight,
And laid those proud roofs bare to summer's rain—
On which the iron shower for years had pour'd in vain.

LIX.

Adieu to thee, fair Rhine ! How long delighted
The stranger fain would linger on his way !
Thine is a scene alike where souls united
Or lonely Contemplation thus might stray ;
And could the ceaseless vultures cease to prey
On self-condemning bosoms, it were here,
Where Nature, nor too sombre nor too gay,
Wild but not rude, awful yet not austere,
Is to the mellow earth as autumn to the year.

* The monument of the young and lamented General Marceau (killed by a rifle-ball at Alterkirchen on the last day of the fourth year of the French republic) still remains as described.

† The inscriptions on his monument are rather too long, and not required ; his name was enough : France adored, and her enemies admired ; both wept over him. His funeral was attended by the generals and detachments from both armies.

† Ehrenbreitstein, i. e. "the broad Stone of Honour," one of the strongest fortresses in Europe, was dismantled and blown up by the French at the truce of Leoben.—It had been and could only be reduced by famine or treachery. It yielded to the former aided by surprise.

LX.

Adieu to thee again ! a vain adieu !
There can be no farewell to scene like thine ;
The mind is coloured by thy every hue ;
And if reluctantly the eyes resign
Their cherish'd gaze upon thee, lovely Rhine !
'Tis with the thankful glance of parting praise ;
More mighty spots may rise—more glaring shine,
But none unite in one attaching maze
The brilliant, fair, and soft,—the glories of old days.

LXI.

The negligently grand, the fruitful bloom
Of coming ripeness, the white city's sheen,
The rolling stream, the precipice's gloom,
The forest's growth, and Gothic walls between,
The wild rocks shaped as they had turrets been
In mockery of man's art ; and these withal
A race of faces happy as the scene,
Whose fertile bounties here extend to all,
Still springing o'er thy banks, though empires near them fall.

LXII.

But these recede. Above me are the Alps,
The palaces of nature, whose vast walls
Have pinnacled in clouds their snowy scalps,
And throned eternity in icy halls
Of cold sublimity, where forms and falls
The avalanche—the thunderbolt of snow !
All that expands the spirit, yet appals,
Gather around these summits, as to show
How earth may pierce to heaven, yet leave vain man below.

LXIII.

But ere these matchless heights I dare to scan,
There is a spot should not be pass'd in vain,—
Morat ! the proud, the patriot field ! where man
May gaze on ghastly trophies of the slain,
Nor blush for those who conquered on that plain ;
Here Burgundy bequeath'd his tombless host
A bony heap, through ages to remain,
Themselves their monument ;—the Stygian coast
Unsepulchred they roam'd, and shriek'd each wandering ghost.

LXIV.

While Waterloo with Cannæ's carnage vies,
Morat and Marathon twin names shall stand,
They were true glory's stainless victories,
Won by the unambitious heart and hand
Of a proud, brotherly, and civic band,
All unbought champions in no princely cause
Of vice-entail'd corruption ; they no land
Doom'd to bewail the blasphemy of laws
Making kings' rights divine, by some Draconic clause.

LXV.

By a lone wall a lonelier column rears
 A gray and grief-worn aspect of old days,
 'Tis the last remnant of the wreck of years,
 And looks as with the wild, bewildered gaze
 Of one to stone converted by amaze,
 Yet still with consciousness; and there it stands
 Making a marvel that it not decays,
 When the coeval pride of human hands,
 Levell'd* Aventicum, hath strewed her subject lands.

LXVI.

And there—oh! sweet and sacred be the
 name!—
 Julia—the daughter, the devoted—gave Her youth to heaven; her heart, beneath a
 claim
 Nearest to heaven's broke o'er a father's grave.
 Justice is sworn 'gainst tears, and her's would crave
 The life she lived in; but the judge was just,
 And then she died on him she could not save.
 Their tomb was simple, and without a bust,
 And held within their urn one mind, one heart,
 one dust†.

LXVII.

But these are deeds which should not pass
 away,
 And names that must not wither, though the
 earth
 Forgets her empires with a just decay,
 The enslavers and the enslaved, their death
 and birth;
 The high, the mountain-majesty of worth
 Should be, and shall, survivor of its woe,
 And from its immortality look forth
 In the sun's face, like yonder Alpine snow,
 Imperishably pure beyond all things below.

• LXVIII.

Lake Lemman woos me with its crystal face,
 The mirror where the stars and mountains
 view
 The stillness of their aspect in each trace
 Its clear depth yields of their far height and hue:

* Aventicum (near Morat) was the Roman capital of Helvetia where Avenches now stands.

† Julia Alpinula, a young Aventian priestess, died soon after a vain endeavour to save her father, condemned to death as a traitor by Aulus Cæcina. Her epitaph was discovered many years ago—it is thus—

Julia Alpinula
 Hic jaceo
 Infelicia patris, infelix proles
 Dese Aventie Sacerdos;
 Exorare patris necem non potui
 Male mori in fati ille erat.

Vixi annos XXIII.

I know of no human composition so affecting as this, nor a history of deeper interest. These are the names and actions which ought not to perish, and to which we turn with a true and healthy tenderness, from the wretched and glittering detail of a confused mass of conquests and battles, with which the mind is roused for a time to a false and feverish sympathy, from whence it recurs at length with all the nausea consequent on such intoxication.

There is too much of man here, to look through
 With a fit mind the might which I behold;
 But soon in me shall loneliness renew
 Thoughts hid, but not less cherish'd than of old, Ere mingling with the herd had penn'd me in their fold.

LXIX.

To fly from, need not be to hate, mankind;
 All are not fit with them to stir and toil,
 Nor is it discontent to keep the mind
 Deep in its fountain, lest it overboil
 In the hot throng, where we become the spoil
 Of our infection, till too late and long
 We may deplore and struggle with the coil,
 In wretched interchange of wrong for wrong
 'Midst a contentious world, striving where none are strong.

LXX.

There, in a moment, we may plunge our years
 In fatal penitence, and in the blight
 Of our own soul, turn all our blood to tears,
 And colour things to come with hues of night
 The race of life becomes a hopeless flight
 To those that walk in darkness: on the sea,
 The boldest steer but where their ports invite,
 But there are wanderers o'er eternity
 Whose bark drives on and on, and anchored ne'er shall be.

LXXI.

Is it not better, then, to be alone,
 And love earth only for its earthly sake?
 By the blue rushing of the arrowy Rhone,
 Or the pure bosom of its nursing lake,
 Which feeds it as a mother who doth make
 A fair but froward infant her own care,
 Kissing its cries away as these awake;—
 Is it not better thus our lives to wear,
 Than join the crushing crowd, doom'd to inflict or bear?

LXXII.

I live not in myself, but I become Portion of that around me; and to me,
 High mountains are a feeling, but the hum
 Of human cities torture: I can see Nothing to loathe in nature, save to be
 A link reluctant in a fleshly chain,
 Class'd among creatures, when the soul can,
 flee,
 And with the sky, the peak, the heaving
 plain

Of ocean, or the stars, mingle, and not in vain.

LXXIII.

And thus I am absorb'd, and this is life:
 I look upon the peopled desert past,
 As on a place of agony and strife,
 Where, for some sin, to sorrow I was cast,
 To act and suffer, but remount at last
 With a fresh pinion which I feel to spring, Though young, yet waxing vigorous, as the blast
 Which it would cope with, on delighted wing, Spurning the clay-cold bonds which round our being cling.

LXXIV.

And when, at length, the mind shall be all
free
From what it hates in this degraded form,
Reft of its carnal life, save what shall be Existent happier in the fly and worm,—
When elements to elements conform.
And dust is as it should be, shall I not Feel all I see, less dazzling, but more warm?
The bodiless thought? the Spirit of each spot?
Of which, even now, I share at times the immortal lot?

LXXV.

Are not the mountains, waves, and skies, a part
Of me and of my soul, as I of them?
Is not the love of these deep in my heart
With a pure passion? should I not condemn
All objects, if compared with these? and stem
A tide of suffering, rather than forego
Such feelings for the hard and worldly phlegm
Of those whose eyes are only turn'd below,
Gazing upon the ground, with thoughts which dare not glow?

LXXVI.

But this is not my theme; and I return
To that which is immediate, and require
Those who find contemplation in the urn,
To look on one, whose dust was once all fire,
A native of the land where I respire
The clear air for awhile—a passing guest,
Where he became a being,—whose desire
Was to be glorious; 'twas a foolish quest,
The which to gain and keep, he sacrificed all rest.

LXXVII.

Here the self-torturing sophist, wild Rousseau,
The apostle of affliction, he who threw
Enchantment over passion, and from woe
Wrung overwhelming eloquence, first drew
The breath which made him wretched; yet he knew
How to make madness beautiful, and cast
O'er erring deeds and thoughts, a heavenly hue
Of words, like sunbeams, dazzling as they
past
The eyes, which o'er them shed tears feelingly and fast.

LXXVIII.

His love was passion's essence—as a tree
On fire by lightning; with ethereal flame
Kindled he was, and blasted; for to be
Thus, and enamoured, were in him the same.
But his was not the love of living dame,
Nor of the dead who rise upon our dreams,
But of ideal beauty, which became
In him existence, and o'erflowing teems
Along his burning page, distempered though it seems.

LXXIX.

This breathed itself to life in Julie, this Invested her with all that's wild and sweet;
This hallowed, too, the memorable kiss
Which every morn his fevered lip would greet,
From her's, who but with friendship his would
meet;
But to that gentle touch, through brain and
breast
Flash'd the thrill'd spirit's love-devouring
heat;
In that absorbing sigh perchance more blest,
Than vulgar minds may be with all they seek possest*.

LXXX.

His life was one long war with self-sought
foes,
Or friends by him self-banish'd; for his mind
Had grown suspicion's sanctuary, and chose
For its own cruel sacrifice, the kind,
'Gainst whom he raged with fury strange and blind.
But he was phrenzied,—wherefore, who may
know?
Since cause might be which skill could never
find:
But he was phrenzied by disease or woe,
To that worst pitch of all, which wears a reasoning show.

LXXXI.

For then he was inspired, and from him came,
As from the Pythian's mystic cave of yore,
Those oracles which set the world in flame,
Nor ceased to burn till kingdoms were no
more:
Did he not this for France? which lay before
Bowed to the inborn tyranny of years?
Broken and trembling, to the yoke she bore,
Till by the voice of him and his compeers,
Roused up to too much wrath which follows
o'ergrown fears?

LXXXII.

They made themselves a fearful monument!
The wreck of old opinions—things which grew
Breathed from the birth of time: the veil
they rent,
And what behind it lay, all earth shall view.
But good with ill they also overthrew,
Leaving but ruins, wherewith to rebuild
Upon the same foundation, and renew Dungeons and thrones, which the same hour
re-fill'd,

As heretofore, because ambition was self-will'd,

LXXXIII.

But this will not endure, nor be endured!
Mankind have felt their strength, and made it felt.
They might have used it better, but, allured
By their new vigour, sternly have they dealt

* This refers to the account in his "Confessions" of his passion for the Comtesse d'Houdetot (the mistress of St. Lambert) and his long walk every morning for the sake of the single kiss which was the common salutation of French acquaintances.

On one another ; pity ceased to melt
With her once natural charities. But they,
Who in oppression's darkness caved had dwelt.

They were not eagles, nourish'd with the day ;
What marvel then, at times, if they mistook their prey !

LXXXIV.

What deep wounds ever closed without a scar ?
The heart's bleed longest, and but heal to wear

That which disfigures it ; and they who war
With their own hopes, and have been vanquish'd bear

Silence, but not submission : in his lair
Fix'd passion holds his breath, until the hour
Which shall atone for years ; none need despair :

It came, it cometh, and will come,—the power

To punish or forgive—in one we shall be slower,

LXXXV.

Clear, placid Leman ! thy contrasted lake,
With the wild world I dwelt in, is a thing
Which warns me, with its stillness, to forsake

Earth's troubled waters for a purer spring.

This quiet sail is as a noiseless wing

To waft me from destruction ; once I loved

Torn ocean's roar, but thy soft murmuring

Sounds sweet as if a sister's voice reproved,

That I with stern delights should e'er have been so moved.

LXXXVI.

It is the hush of night, and all between Thy margin and the mountains, dusk, yet
clear,

Mellowed and mingling, yet distinctly seen,
Save darken'd Jura, whose cap heights appear

Precipitously steep ; and drawing near,

There breathes a living fragrance from the shore,

Of flowers yet fresh with childhood ; on the
ear,

Drops the light drip of the suspended oar,

Or chirps the grasshopper one good-night carol
more ;

LXXXVII.

He is an evening reveller, who makes

His life an infancy, and sings his fill ;

At intervals, some bird from out the brakes,
Starts into voice a moment, then is still.

There seems a floating whisper on the hill,

But that is fancy, for the starlight dews

All silently their tears of love instil,

Weeping themselves away, till they infuse

Deep into nature's breast the spirit of her hues.

LXXXVIII.

Ye stars ! which are the poetry of heaven !

If in your bright leaves we would read the fate

Of men and empires,—'tis to be forgiven,

That in our aspirations to be great,
Our destinies o'erleap their mortal state,
And claim a kindred with you ; for ye are
A beauty and a mystery, and create
In us such love and reverence from afar,
That fortune, fame, power, life, have named themselves a star.

LXXXIX.

All heaven and earth are still—though not in sleep,

But breathless, as we grow when feeling most ;
And silent, as we stand in thoughts too
deep :—

All heaven and earth are still : From the high host

Of stars, to the lull'd lake and mountain-coast,

All is centered in a life intense,
Where not a beam, nor air, nor leaf is lost,

But hath a part of being, and a sense

Of that which is of all Creator and defence.

XC.

Then stirs the feeling infinite, so felt

In solitude, where we are least alone ;

A truth, which through our being then doth
melt

And purifies from self : it is a tone,

The soul and source of music, which makes known

Eternal harmony, and sheds a charm,

Like to the fabled Cytherea's zone,

Binding all things with beauty ;—'twould disarm

The spectre Death, had he substantial power to harm.

XCI.

Not vainly did the early Persian make

His altar the high places and the peak

Of earth—o'ergazing mountains, and thus take

A fit and unwall'd temple, there to seek

The Spirit, in whose honour shrines are weak Uprear'd of human hands. Come, and compare

Columns and idol-dwellings, Goth or Greek,

With nature's realms of worship, earth and
air,

Nor fix on fond abodes to circumscribe thy prayer !

XCII.

The sky is changed !—and such a change !

Oh night,

And storm, and darkness, ye are wondrous strong,

Yet lovely in your strength, as is the light

Of a dark eye in woman ! Far along,

From peak to peak, the rattling crags among Leaps the live thunder ! Not from one lone cloud,

But every mountain now hath found a tongue,

And Jura answers, through her misty shroud,
Black to the joyous Alps, who call to her aloud !

XCIII.

And this is in the night:—most glorious night!

Thou wert not sent for slumber! let me be
A sharer in thy fierce and far delight,—
A portion of the tempest and of thee!

How the lit lake shines, a phosphoric sea,
And the big rain comes dancing to the earth!
And now again 'tis black,—and now, the glee
Of the loud hills shakes with its mountain-mirth, [birth.

As if they did rejoice o'er a young earthquake's XCIV.

Now, where the swift Rhone cleaves his way between [parted
Heights which appear as lovers who have
In hate, whose mining depths so intervene,
That they can meet no more, though broken-hearted

Though in their souls, which thus each other thwarted,

Love was the very root of the fond rage
Which blighted their life's bloom, and then departed:—

Itself expired, but leaving them an age
Of years all winters,—war within themselves to wage.

XCV.

Now, where the quick Rhone thus hath cleft
his way [stand:
The mightiest of the storms hath ta'en his
For here, not one, but many, make their play,
And fling their thunder-bolts from hand to
hand,

Flashing and cast around: of all the band,
The brightest through these parted hills hath fork'd

His lightnings,—as if he did understand,
That in such gaps as desolation work'd,
There the hot shaft should blast whatever therein lurk'd.

XCVI.

Sky, mountains, river, winds, lake, lightnings! ye! [soul

With night, and clouds, and thunder, and a
To make these felt and feeling, well may be Things that have made me watchful; the far roll

Of your departing voices, is the knoll
Of what in me is sleepless,—if I rest.

But where of ye, oh tempests! is the goal?
Are ye like those within the human breast?

Or do ye find, at length, like eagles, some high nest?

XCVII.

Could I embody and unbosom now
That which is most within me,—could I wreak

My thoughts upon expression, and thus throw Soul, heart, mind, passions, feelings, strong or weak,

All that I would have sought, and all I seek,
Bear, know, feel, and yet breathe—into one
word,

And that one word were lightning, I would
speak;

But as it is, I live and die unheard,
With a most voiceless thought, sheathing it as a sword.

XCVIII.

The morn is up again, the dewy morn,
With breath all incense, and with cheek all
bloom,

Laughing the clouds away with playful scorn,
And living as if earth contain'd no tomb,—

And glowing into day: we may resume
The march of our existence: and thus I,
Still on thy shores, fair Lemn! may find
room

And food for meditation, nor pass by Much, that may give us pause, if pondered fittingly.

XCIX.

Clarens! sweet Clarens, birth-place of deep
love!

Thine air is the young breath of passionate
thought;

Thy trees take root in love; the snows above
The very Glaciers have his colours caught,
And sun-set into rose-hues sees them wrought
By rays which sleep there lovingly: the rocks,

The permanent crags, tell here of love, who sought

In them a refuge from the worldly shocks,
Which stir and sting the soul with hope that woos, then mocks.

C.

Clarens! by heavenly feet thy paths are trod,—

Undying Love's who here ascends a throne
To which the steps are mountains; where the god

Is a pervading life and light,—so shown
Not on those summits solely, nor alone

In the still cave and forest; o'er the flower
His eye is sparkling, and his breath hath blown,

His soft and summer breath, whose tender
power,

Passes the strength of storms in their most desolate hour.

CI.

All things are here of him; from the black pines,

Which are his shade on high, and the loud
roar

Of torrents, where he listeneth, to the vines
Which slope his green path downward to the shore,

Where the bowed waters meet him, and adore,
Kissing his feet with murmurs, and the wood,
The covert of old trees, with trunks all hoar,
But light leaves, young as joy, stands where it stood

Offering to him, and his, a populous solitude.

CII.

A populous solitude of bees and birds;
And fairy-form'd and many-coloured things,
Who worship him with notes more sweet than
words,

And innocently open their glad wings,
Fearless and full of life: the gush of springs,
And fall of lofty fountains, and the bend
Of stirring branches, and the bud which brings

The swiftest thought of beauty, here extend,
Mingling, and made by love, unto one mighty end.

CIII.

He who hath loved not, here would learn that lore,

And make his heart a spirit; he who knows
That tender mystery, will love the more,
For this is Love's recess, where vain men's
woes,

And the world's waste, have driven him far from those,

For 'tis his nature to advance or die;
He stands not still, but or decays, or grows
Into a boundless blessing, which may vie
With the immortal lights, in its eternity!

CIV.

'Twas not for fiction chose Rousseau this spot,
Peopling it with affections; but he found
It was the scene which passion must allot
To the mind's purified beings; 'twas the
ground

Where early Love his Psyche's zone unbound,
And hallowed it with loveliness: 'tis lone,
And wonderful, and deep, and hath a sound,
And sense, and sight of sweetness; here the Rhône

Hath spread himself a couch, the Alps have rear'd a throne.

CV.

Lausanne! and Ferney! ye have been the abodes*

Of names which unto you bequeath'd a name;
Mortals, who sought and found, by dangerous roads,

A path to perpetuity of fame:
They were gigantic minds, and their steep
aim,

Was, Titan-like, on daring doubts to pile
Thoughts which should call down thunder, and the flame

Of Heaven, again assail'd, if Heaven the while

On man and man's research could deign no more than smile.

CVI.

The one was fire and fickleness, a child,
Most mutable in wishes, but in mind,
A wit as various,—gay, grave, sage, or wild,—
Historian, bard, philosopher, combined;
He multiplied himself among mankind,

* Voltaire and Gibbon.

The Proteus of their talents. But his own Breathed most in ridicule,—which, as the
wind,
Blew where it listed, laying all things prone,—
Now to o'erthrow a fool, and now to shake a throne.

CVII.

The other, deep and slow, exhausting thought,
And hiving wisdom with each studious year,
In meditation dwelt, with learning wrought,
And shaped his weapon with an edge severe,
Sapping a solemn creed with solemn sneer;
The lord of irony,—that master-spell,
Which stung his foes to wrath, which grew from fear,

And doom'd him to the zealot's ready hell,
Which answers to all doubts so eloquently well.

CVIII.

Yet, peace be with their ashes,—for by them,
If merited, the penalty is paid;

It is not ours to judge,—far less condemn;
The hour must come when such things shall be made

Known unto all,—or hope and dread alloy'd
By slumber, on one pillow,—in the dust,
Which, thus much we are sure, must lie decay'd;

And when it shall revive, as is our trust,
'Twill be to be forgiven, or suffer what is just.

CIX.

But let me quit man's works, again to read
His Maker's, spread around me, and suspend
This page, which from my reveries I feed,
Until it seems prolonging without end.
The clouds above me to the white Alps tend,
And I must pierce them, and survey what-e'er

May be permitted, as my steps I bend
To their most great and growing region, where

The earth to her embrace compels the powers of air.

CX.

Italia! too, Italia! looking on thee,
Full flashes on the soul the light of ages,
Since the fierce Carthaginian almost won thee,
To the last halo of the chiefs and sages,
Who glorify thy consecrated pages;
Thou wert the throne and grave of empires;
still,

The fount at which the panting mind assuages

Her thirst of knowledge, quaffing there her
fill,

Flows from the eternal source of Rome's imperial hill.

CXI.

Thus far I have proceeded in a theme
Renewed with no kind auspices:—to feel
We are not what we have been, and to deem
We are not what we should be,—and to steel
The heart against itself; and to conceal,
With a proud caution, love; or hate; or ought,—

Passion or feeling, purpose, grief or zeal,—
Which is the tyrant spirit of our thought,
Is a stern task of soul:—No matter,—it is taught.

CXII.

And for these words, thus woven into song,
It may be that they are a harmless wile,—
The colouring of the scenes which fleet along,
Which I would seize, in passing, to beguile
My breast, or that of others, for a while.
Fame is the thirst of youth,—but I am not
So young as to regard men's frown or smile,
As loss or guerdon of a glorious lot;
I stood and stand alone,—remembered or forgot.

CXIII.

I have not loved the world, nor the world me;
I have not flattered it's rank breath, nor bow'd
To its idolatries a patient knee,—
Nor coin'd my cheek to smiles,—nor cried
aloud
In worship of an echo; in the crowd
They could not deem me one of such: I stood
Among them, but not of them; in a shroud
Of thoughts which were not their thoughts,
and still could,
Had I not filed* my mind, which thus itself subdued.

CXIV.

I have not loved the world, nor the world
me,—
But let us part fair foes; I do believe,
Though I have found them not, that there may be
Words which are things,—hopes which will not deceive,
And virtues which are merciful, nor weave Snares for the falling: I would also deem O'er others' griefs that some sincerely grieve;
That two, or one, are almost what they seem,—
That goodness is no name, and happiness no dream.

CXV.

My daughter! with thy name this song begun—
My daughter! with thy name thus much shall end—
I see thee not,—I hear thee not,—but none
Can be so wrapt in thee; thou art the friend
To whom the shadows of far years extend:
Albeit my brow thou never should'st behold,
My voice shall with thy future visions blend,
And reach into thy heart,—when mine is
cold,—
A token and a tone, even from thy father's mould.

CXVI.

To aid thy mind's development,—to watch
Thy dawn of little joys,—to sit and see
Almost thy very growth,—to view thee catch
Knowledge of objects,—wonders yet to thee!

* ————— "If it be thus,

For Banquet's issue have I filed my mind."—Macbeth.

To hold thee lightly on a gentle knee,
And print on thy soft cheek a parent's kiss,—
This, it should seem, was not reserv'd for
me;
Yet this was in my nature:—as it is,
I know not what is there, yet something like to this.

CXVII.

Yet, though dull hate as duty should be taught,
I know that thou wilt love me; though my name
Should be shut from thee, as a spell still fraught
With desolation,—and a broken claim:
Though the grave closed between us,—'twere
the same,
I know that thou wilt love me; though to drain
My blood from out thy being, were an aim,
And an attainment,—all would be in vain,— Still thou would'st love me, still that more than life retain.

CXVIII.

The child of love—though born in bitterness,
And nurtured in convulsion. Of thy sire
These were the elements,—and thine no less.
As yet such are around thee,—but thy fire
Shall be more tempered, and thy hope far higher.
Sweet be thy cradled slumbers! O'er the sea,
And from the mountains where I now respire,
Fain would I waft such blessing upon thee,
As, with a sigh, I deem thou might'st have been
to me!

CANTO IV.

I.

I stood in Venice, on the Bridge of Sighs;
A palace and a prison on each hand:
I saw from out the wave her structures rise
As from the stroke of the enchanter's wand:
A thousand years their cloudy wings expand
Around me, and a dying glory smiles
O'er the far times, when many a subject land
Look'd to the winged lion's marble piles,
Where Venice sate in state, throned on her hundred isles!

II.

She looks a sea Cybele, fresh from ocean,
Rising with her tiara of proud towers
At airy distance, with majestic motion,
A ruler of the waters and their powers:
And such she was;—her daughters had their dowers
From spoils of nations, and the exhaustless
East
Pour'd in her lap all gems in sparkling showers.
In purple was she robed, and of her feast
Monarchs partook, and deem'd their dignity increased.

III.

In Venice Tasso's echoes are no more*,
 And silent rows the songless gondolier ;
 Her palaces are crumbling to the shore,
 And music meets not always now the ear :
 Those days are gone—but Beauty still is here.
 States fall, arts fade—but Nature doth not
 die,
 Nor yet forget how Venice once was dear,
 The pleasant place of all festivity,
 The revel of the earth, the masque of Italy !

IV.

But unto us she hath a spell beyond
 Her name in story, and her long array
 Of mighty shadows, whose dim forms despond
 Above the dogeless city's vanish'd sway ;
 Ours is a trophy which will not decay
 With the Rialto ; Shylock and the Moor,
 And Pierre, cannot be swept or worn away—
 The keystones of the arch ! though all were o'er,

For us repeopled were the solitary shore.

V.

The beings of the mind are not of clay ;
 Essentially immortal, they create
 And multiply in us a brighter ray
 And more beloved existence : that which Fate
 Prohibits to dull life, in this our state
 Of mortal bondage, by these spirits supplied
 First smiles, then replaces what we hate ;
 Watering the heart whose early flowers have died,

And with a fresher growth replenishing the void.

VI.

Such is the refuge of our youth and age,
 The first from hope, the last from vacancy ;
 And this worn feeling peoples many a page,
 And, may be, that which grows beneath mine
 eye :
 Yet there are things whose strong reality
 Outshines our fairy-land ; in shape and hues
 More beautiful than our fantastic sky,
 And the strange constellations which the
 Muse

O'er her wild universe is skilful to diffuse :

VII.

I saw or dream'd of such,—but let them go—
 They came like truth, and disappear'd like
 dreams ;
 And whatso'er they were—are now but so :
 I could replace them if I would, still seems
 My mind with many a form which aptly seems
 Such as I sought for, and at moments found ;
 Let these too go—for waking reason deems
 Such over-weening phantasies unsound,
 And other voices speak, and other sights surround.

* The well known song of the gondoliers, of alternate stanzas from Tasso's Jerusalem, has died with the independence of Venice. Editions of the poem, with the original on one column, and the Venetian variations on the other, as sung by the boatmen, were once common, and are still to be found.

VIII.

I've taught me other tongues—and in strange
 eyes
 Have made me not a stranger ; to the mind ;
 Which is itself, no changes bring surprise
 Nor is it harsh to make, nor hard to find
 A country with—ay, or without mankind ;
 Yet was I born where men are proud to be,
 Not without cause ; and should I leave behind
 The inviolate island of the sage and free,
 And seek me out a home by a remoter sea,

IX.

Perhaps I loved it well : and should I lay
 My ashes in a soil which is not mine,
 My spirit shall resume it—if we may Unbodied choose a sanctuary. I twine
 My hopes of being remember'd in my line
 With my land's language ; if too fond and
 far
 These aspirations in their scope incline,—
 If my fame should be, as my fortunes are,
 Of hasty growth and blight, and dull Oblivion bar

X.

My name from out the temple where the dead
 Are honour'd by the nations—let it be—
 And light the laurels on a loftier head !
 And be the Spartan's epitaph on me—
 “ Sparta hath many a worthier son than he*.”
 Meantime I seek no sympathies, nor need ;
 The thorns which I have reap'd are of the tree
 I planted,—they have torn me,—and I bleed ;
 I should have known what fruit would spring
 from such a seed.

XI.

The spouseless Adriatic mourns her lord ;
 And, annual marriage now no more renew'd,
 The Bucentaur lies rotting unrestored,
 Neglected garment of her widowhood !
 St. Mark yet sees his lion where he stood
 Stand, but in mockery of his wither'd power,
 Over the proud place where an Emperor sued,
 And monarchs gazed and envied in the hour
 When Venice was a queen with an unequall'd dower.

XII.

The Suabian sued, and now the Austrian reigns—*
 An Emperor tramples where an Emperor knelt ;
 Kingdoms are shrunk to provinces, and chains
 Clank over sceptred cities ; nations melt
 From power's high pinnacle, when they have felt

* The answer of the mother of Brasidas to the strangers who praised the memory of her son.

* After many vain efforts on the part of the Italians entirely to throw off the yoke of Frederic Barbarossa, and as fruitless attempts of the Emperor to make himself absolute master throughout the whole of his Cisalpine dominions, the bloody struggles of four and twenty years were happily brought to a close in the city of Venice.

The sunshine for a while, and downward go
Like lauwine loosen'd from the mountain's belt ;
Oh for one hour of blind old Dandolo* !
Th' octogenarian chief, Byzantium's conquering foe.

XIII.

Before St. Mark still glow his steeds of brass,
Their gilded collars glittering in the sun ;
But is not Doria's menace come to pass ?
Are they not bridled ;—Venice, lost and won,
Her thirteen hundred years of freedom done,
Sinks, like a sea-weed, into whence she rose !
Better be whelm'd beneath the waves, and shun,
Even in destruction's depth, her foreign foes,
From whom submission wrings an infamous repose.

XIV.

In youth she was all glory,—a new Tyre,—
Her very by-word sprung from victory,
The " Planter of the Lion†," which through
fire
And blood she bore o'er subject earth and sea ;
Though making many slaves, herself still free,
And Europe's bulwark 'gainst the Ottomite ;
Witness Troy's rival, Candia ! Vouch it, ye
Immortal waves that saw Lepanto's fight !
For ye are names no time nor tyranny can blight.

XV.

Statues of glass—all shiver'd—the long file
Of her dead Doges are declined to dust ;
But where they dwelt, the vast and sumptuous pile
Bespeaks the pageant of their splendid trust ;
Their sceptre broken, and their sword in rust,
Have yielded to the stranger : empty halls,
Thin streets, and foreign aspects, such as must
Too oft remind her who and what enthral,
Have flung a desolate cloud o'er Venice' lovely walls.

* The reader will recollect the exclamation of the highlander.
Oh for one hour of Dundee ! Henry Dandolo, when elected Doge, in 1192, was eighty-five years of age. When he commanded the Venetians at the taking of Constantinople, he was consequently ninety-seven years old.

† After the loss of the battle of Pola, and the taking of Chioza on the 16th of August, 1379, by the united armament of the Genoese and Francesco da Carrara, Signor of Padua, the Venetians were reduced to the utmost despair. An embassy was sent to the conquerors with a blank sheet of paper, praying them to prescribe what terms they pleased, and leave to Venice only her independence. The Prince of Padua was inclined to listen to these proposals, but the Genoeze, who, after the victory at Pola, had shouted, " to Venice, to Venice, and long live St. George," determined to annihilate their rival, and Peter Doria, their commander-in-chief, returned this answer to the suppliants : " On God's faith, gentlemen of Venice, ye shall have no peace from the Signor of Padua, nor from our commune of Genoa, until we have first put a rein upon those unbridled horses of yours, that are upon the Porch of your evangelist St. Mark. When we have bridled them, we shall keep you quiet. And this is the pleasure of us and of our commune. As for these my brothers of Genoa, that you have brought with you to give up to us, I will not have them : take them back ; for, in a few days hence, I shall come and let them out of prison myself, both these and all the others."

‡ Plant the Lion—that is, the Lion of St. Mark, the standard of the republic, which is the origin of the word Pantaloon—Pantaleone, Pantaleon, Pantaloon.

XVI.

When Athens' armies fell at Syracuse,
And fetter'd thousands bore the yoke of war,
Redemption rose up in the Attic Muse*,
Her voice their only ransom from afar :
See ! as they chant the tragic hymn, the car
Of the o'er-master'd victor stops, the reins
Fall from his hands—his idle scimitar Starts from its belt—he rends his captive's
chains,
And bids him thank the bard for freedom and his strains.

XVII.

Thus, Venice, if no stronger claim were thine,
Were all thy proud historic deeds forgot,
Thy choral memory of the Bard divine,
Thy love of Tasso, should have cut the knot
Which ties thee to thy tyrants ; and thy lot
Is shameful to the nations,—most of all.
Albion ! to thee : the Ocean queen should not Abandon Ocean's children ; in the fall
Of Venice think of thine, despite thy watery wall.

XVIII.

I loved her from my boyhood—she to me
Was as a fairy city of the heart,
Rising like water-columns from the sea,
Of joy the sojourn, and of wealth the mart ;
And Otway, Radcliffe, Schiller, Shakspeare's
art†,
Had stamp'd her image in me, and even so
Although I found her thus, we did not part,
Perchance even dearer in her day of woe,
Than when she was a boast, a marvel, and a show.

XIX.

I can repeople with the past—and of
The present there is still for eye and thought,
And meditation chasten'd down, enough ;
And more, it may be, than I hoped or sought ;
And of the happiest moments which were
wrought
Within the web of my existence, some
From thee, fair Venice ! have their colours caught :
There are some feelings Time can not be-numb,
Nor Torture shake, or mine would now be cold and dumb.

XX.

But from their nature will the tannen grow‡
Loftiest on loftiest and least shelter'd rocks,
Rooted in barrenness, where nought below
Of soil supports them 'gainst the Alpine shocks
Of eddy storms ; yet springs the trunk, and mocks
The howling tempest, till its height and frame

* The story is told in Plutarch's life of Nicias.

† Venice Preserved ; Mysteries of Udolpho ; the Ghost-seer, or Armenian ; the Merchant of Venice ; Othello.

‡ Tannen is the plural of tanne, a species of fir peculiar to the Alps, which only thrives in very rocky parts, where scarcely soil sufficient for its nourishment can be found. On these spots it grows to a greater height than any other mountain tree.

Are worthy of the mountains from whose blocks
Of bleak, gray, granite, into life it came,
And grew a giant tree ;—the mind may grow
the same.

XXI.

Existence may be borne, and the deep root
Of life and sufferance make its firm abode
In bare and desolated bosoms : mute
The camel labours with the heaviest load,
And the wolf dies in silence,—not bestow'd
In vain should such example be ; if they,
Things of ignoble or of savage mood,
Endure and shrink not, we of nobler clay
May temper it to bear,—it is but for a day.

XXII.

All suffering doth destroy, or is destroy'd,
Even by the sufferer ; and, in each event
Ends.—Some, with hope replenish'd and rebuoy'd,
Return to whence they came—with like intent,
And weave their web again ; some, bow'd and bent,
Wax gray and ghastly, withering ere their
time,
And perish with the reed on which they leant ;
Some seek devotion, toil, war, good or crime,
According as their souls were form'd to sink or climb.

XXIII.

But ever and anon of griefs subdued
There comes a token like a scorpion's sting,
Scarce seen, but with fresh bitterness imbued ;
And slight withal may be the things which bring
Black on the heart the weight which it would fling
Aside for ever : it may be a sound—
A tone of music,—summer's eve—or spring,
A flower—the wind—the ocean—which shall
wound,
Striking the electric chain wherewith we are darkly bound ;

XXIV.

And how and why we know not, nor can trace
Home to its cloud this lightning of the mind,
But feel the shock renew'd, nor can efface
The blight and blackening which it leaves behind,
Which out of things familiar, undesign'd,
When least we deem of such, calls up to view
The spectres whom no exorcism can bind,
The cold—the changed—perchance the dead
—anew,
The mourn'd, the loved, the lost—too many !— yet how few !

XXV.

But my soul wanders ; I demand it back
To meditate amongst decay ; and stand
A ruin amidst ruins : there to track
Fall'n states and buried greatness, o'er a land
Which was the mightiest in its old command,

And is the loveliest, and must ever be
The master-mould of Nature's heavenly hand,
Wherein were cast the heroic and the free,
The beautiful, the brave—the lords of earth and sea,

XXVI.

The commonwealth of kings, the men of Rome !
And even since, and now, fair Italy !
Thou art the garden of the world, the home
Of all Art yields, and Nature can decree :
Even in thy desert, what is like to thee ;
Thy very weeds are beautiful, thy waste
More rich than other climes' fertility ;
Thy wreck a glory, and thy ruin graced
With an immaculate charm which can not be defaced.

XXVII.

The moon is up, and yet it is not night—
Sunset divides the sky with her—a sea
Of glory streams along the Alpine height
Of blue Friuli's mountains ; Heaven is free
From clouds, but of all colours seems to be Melted to one vast Iris of the West,
Where the day joins the past eternity ;
While, on the other hand meek Dian's crest Floats through the azure air—an island of the blest !

XXVIII.

A single star is at her side, and reigns
With her o'er half the lovely heaven ; but still
Yon sunny sea heaves brightly, and remains
Roll'd o'er the peak of the far Rætian hill,
As day and night contending were, until
Nature reclaim'd her order :—gently flows
The deep-dyed Brenta, where their hues instil
The odorous purple of a new-born rose,
Which streams upon her stream, and glass'd within it glows,

XXIX.

Fill'd with the face of heaven, which, from
afar,
Comes down upon the waters ; all its hues,
From the rich sunset to the rising star,
Their magical variety diffuse :
And now they change ; a paler shadow strews
Its mantle o'er the mountains : parting day
Dies like the dolphin, whom each pang imbues
With a new colour as it gasps away,
The last still loveliest till—'tis gone—and all is gray.

XXX.

There is a tomb in Arqua ;—rear'd in air,
Pillar'd in their sarcophagus, repose
The bones of Laura's lover ; here repair
Many familiar with his well-sung woes,
The pilgrims of his genius. He arose
To raise a language, and his land reclaim
From the dull yoke of her barbaric foes :
Watering the tree which bears his lady's name
With his melodious tears, he gave himself to fame.

XXXI.

They keep his dust in Arqua, where he died;
The mountain-village where his latter days
Went down the vale of years: and 'tis their pride—

An honest pride—and let it be their praise,
To offer to the passing stranger's gaze
His mansion and his sepulchre; both plain
And venerably simple, such as raise
A feeling more accordant with his strain
Than if a pyramid form'd his monumental fane.

XXXII.

And the soft quiet hamlet where he dwelt
Is one of that complexion which seems made
For those who their mortality have felt,
And sought a refuge from their hopes decay'd
In the deep umbrage of a green hill's shade,
Which shows a distant prospect far away
Of busy cities, now in vain display'd,
For they can lure no further; and the ray
Of a bright sun can make sufficient holiday,

XXXIII.

Developing the mountains, leaves, and flowers,
And shining in the brawling brook, where-by,
Clear as its current, glide the sauntering
hours
With a calm languor, which, though to the eye
Idlesse it seem, hath its morality.
If from society we learn to live,
'Tis solitude should teach us how to die;
It hath no flatterers: vanity can give No hollow aid; alone—man with his God must strive:

XXXIV.

Or, it may be, with demons, who impair
The strength of better thoughts, and seek their prey
In melancholy bosoms, such as were
Of moody texture from their earliest day,
And loved to dwell in darkness and dismay,
Deeming themselves predestin'd to a doom
Which is not of the pangs that pass away;
Making the sun like blood, the earth a tomb,
The tomb a hell, and hell itself a murkier gloom

XXXV.

Ferrara! in thy wide and grass-grown streets,
Whose symmetry was not for solitude,
There seems as 'twere a curse upon the seat
Of former sovereigns, and the antique brood
Of Este, which for many an age made good
Its strength within thy walls, and was of yore
Patron or tyrant, as the changing mood
Of petty power impell'd, of those who wore
The wreath which Dante's brow alone had worn before.

XXXVI.

And Tasso is their glory and their shame.
Hark to his strain! and then survey his cell
And see how dearly earn'd Torquato's fame
And where Alfonso bade his poet dwell:
The miserable despot could not quell
The insulted mind he sought to quench, and blend

With the surrounding maniacs, in the hell
Where he had plung'd it. Glory without end catter'd the clouds away—and on that name attend

XXXVII.

The tears and praises of all time; while thine
Would rot in its oblivion—in the sink
Of worthless dust, which from thy boasted line
Is shaken into nothing; but the link
Thou formest in his fortunes bids us think
Of thy poor malice, naming thee with scorn—

Alfonso! how thy ducal pageants shrink
From thee! if in another station born, Scarce fit to be the slave of him thou mad'st to mourn:

XXXVIII.

Thou! form'd to eat, and be despis'd, and die,
Even as the beasts that perish, save that thou
Hast a more splendid trough and wider sty:
He! with a glory round his furrow'd brow,
Which emanated then, and dazzles now
In face of all his foes, the Cruscan quire,
And Boileau, whose rash envy could allow
No strain which shamed his country's creaking lyre,
That whetstone of the teeth—monotony in wire!

XXXIX.

Peace to Torquato's injur'd shade! 'twas his
In life and death to be the mark where
Wrong
Aim'd with her poison'd arrows; but to miss.
Oh, victor unsurpass'd in modern song!
Each year brings forth its millions; but how long
The tide of generations shall roll on,
And not the whole combin'd and countless throng
Compose a mind like thine? though all in one Condens'd their scatter'd rays, they would not form a sun.

XL.

Great as thou art, yet parallel'd by those,
Thy countrymen, before thee born to shine,
The Bards of Hell and Chivalry; first rose
The Tuscan father's comedy divine;
Then, not unequal to the Florentine,
The southern Scott, the minstrel who call'd
forth
A new creation with his magic line,
And, like the Ariosto of the north,
Sang lady-love and war, romance and knightly worth.

XLI.

The lightning rent from Ariosto's bust*
The iron crown of laurel's mimic'd leaves;
Nor was the ominous element unjust,
For the true laurel-wreath which Glory weaves
Is of the tree no bolt of thunder cleaves,

* Before the remains of Ariosto were removed from the Benedictine church to the library of Ferrara, his bust, which surmounted the tomb, was struck by lightning, and a crown of iron laurels melted away. The event has been recorded by a writer of the last century.

And the false semblance but disgraced his brow :
Yet still, if fondly superstition grieves,
Know that the lightning sanctifies below*
Whate'er it strikes ;—yon head is doubly sacred now.

XLII.

Italia ! oh Italia ! thou who hast
The fatal gift of beauty, which became
A funeral dower of present woes and past,
On thy sweet brow is sorrow plough'd by shame,
And annals graved in characters of flame.
Oh God ! that thou wert in thy nakedness
Less lovely or more powerful, and could'st claim
Thy right, and awe the robbers back, who press
To shed thy blood, and drink the tears of thy distress ;

XLIII.

Then might'st thou more appal ; or, less desired,
Be homely and be peaceful, undeplord
For thy destructive charms ; then, still untired,
Would not be seen the armed torrents pour'd
Down the deep Alps ; nor would the hostile hordes
Of many-nation'd spoilers from the Po
Quaff blood and water ; nor the stranger's sword
Be thy sad weapon of defence, and so,
Victor or vanquish'd, thou the slave of friend or foe.

XLIV.

Wandering in youth, I traced the path of him†,
The Roman friend of Rome's least-mortal mind,
The friend of Tully : as my bark did skim
The bright blue waters with a fanning wind,
Came Megara before me, and behind
Ægina lay, Piræus on the right,
And Corinth on the left ; I lay reclined
Along the prow, and saw all these unite
In ruin, even as he had seen the desolate sight ;

* The Curtian lake and the Ruminal fig-tree in the Forum, having been touched by lightning, were held sacred, and the memory of the accident was preserved by a puteol, or altar, resembling the mouth of a well, with a little chapel covering the cavity supposed to be made by the thunderbolt. Bodies scathed and persons struck dead were thought to be incorruptible ; and a stroke not fatal conferred perpetual dignity upon the man so distinguished by heaven.

† The two stanzas, XLII. and XLIII. are, with the exception of a line or two, a translation of the famous sonnet of Filicaja :
" Italia, Italia, O tu cui feo la sorte."

‡ The celebrated letter of Servius Sulpicius to Cicero on the death of his daughter, describes as it then was, and now is, a path which I often traced in Greece, both by sea and land, in different journeys and voyages.

" On my return from Asia, as I was sailing from Ægina towards Megara, I began to contemplate the prospect of the countries around me : Ægina was behind, Megara before me ; Piræus on the right, Corinth on the left ; all which towns, once famous and flourishing, now lie overturned and buried in their ruins. Upon this sight, I could not but think presently within myself, Alas ! how do we poor mortals fret and vex ourselves if any of our friends happen to die or be killed, whose life is yet so short when the carcasses of so many noble cities lie here exposed before me in one view."

XLV.

For Time hath not rebuilt them, but uprear'd
Barbaric dwellings on their shatter'd site,
Which only make more mourn'd and more endear'd
The few last rays of their far-scatter'd light,
And the crush'd relics of their vanish'd might,
The Roman saw these tombs in his own age,
These sepulchres of cities, which excite
Sad wonder, and his yet surviving page
The moral lesson bears, drawn from such pilgrim-grimage.

XLVI.

That page is now before me, and on mine
His country's ruin added to the mass
Of perish'd states he mourn'd in their decline,
And I in desolation : all that was
Of then destruction is ; and now alas !
Rome—Rome imperial, bows her to the storm,
In the same dust and blackness, and we pass
The skeleton of her Titanic from,
Wrecks of another world, whose ashes still are warm.

XLVII.

Yet, Italy ! through every other land
Thy wrongs should ring, and shall, from side to side ;
Mother of Arts ! as once of arms ; thy hand
Was then our guardiau, and is still our guide ;
Parent of our Religion ! whom the wide
Nations have knelt to for the keys of heaven !
Europe, repentant of her parricide,
Shall yet redeem thee, and, all backward driven,
Roll the barbarian tide, and sue to be forgiven.

XLVIII.

But Arno wins us to the fair white walls,
Where the Etrurian Athens claims and keeps
A softer feeling for her fairy halls.
Girt by her theatre of hills, she reaps
Her corn, and wine, and oil, and Plenty leaps
To laughing life, with her redundant horn
Along the banks where smiling Arno sweeps
Was modern Luxury of Commerce born,
And buried Learning rose, redeem'd to a new morn.

XLIX.

There, too, the Goddess loves in stone, and fills
The air around with beauty ; we inhale
The ambrosial aspect, which, beheld, instills
Part of its immortality ; the veil
Of heaven is half undrawn ; within the pale
We stand, and in that form and face behold
What mind can make, when Nature's self would fail ;
And to the fond idolaters of old
Envy the innate flash which such a soul could mould :

L.

We gaze and turn away, and know not where,
Dazzled and drunk with beauty, till the heart
Reels with its fulness ; there—for ever there—

Chain'd to the chariot of triumphal Art,
 We stand as captives, and would not depart.
 Away!—there need no words, nor terms precise,
 The paltry jargon of the marble mart,
 Where Pedantry gulls folly—we have eyes;
 Blood—pulse—and breast, confirm the Dardan
 Shepherd's prize.

LI.

Appear'dst thou not to Paris in this guise?
 Or to more deeply blest Anchises? or,
 In all thy perfect goddess-ship, when lies Before thee thy own vanquish'd Lord of War?
 And gazing in thy face as toward a star,
 Laid on thy lap, his eyes to thee upturn, Feeding on thy sweet cheek! while thy lips are
 With lava kisses melting while they burn, Shower'd on his eyelids, brow, and mouth, as from an urn!

LII.

Glowing, and circumfused in speechless love,
 Their full divinity inadequate
 That feeling to express, or to improve.
 The gods become as mortals, and man's fate
 Has moments like their brightest; but the weight
 Of earth recoils upon us;—let it go!
 We can recal such visions, and create,
 From what has been, or might be, things which grow
 Into thy statue's form, and look like gods below.

LIII.

I leave to learned fingers, and wise hands,
 The artist and his ape, to teach and tell
 How well his connoisseurship understands
 The graceful bend, and the voluptuous swell:
 Let these describe the undescribable:
 I would not their vile breath should crisp the
 stream
 Wherein that image shall for ever dwell;
 The unruffled mirror of the loveliest dream
 That ever left the sky on the deep soul to beam.

LIV.

In Santa Croce's holy precincts lie
 Ashes which make it holier, dust which is Even in itself an immortality,
 Though there were nothing save the past, and
 this,
 The particle of those sublimities
 Which have relaps'd to chaos:—here repose
 Angelo's, Alfieri's bones, and his,
 The starry Galileo, with his woes;
 Here Machiavelli's earth, return'd to whence it rose.

LV.

These are four minds, which, like the elements,
 Might furnish forth creation:—Italy!
 Time, which, hath wrong'd thee with ten thousand rents
 Of thine imperial garment, shall deny,

And hath denied, to every other sky,
 Spirits which soar from ruin:—thy decay
 Is still impregnate with divinity,
 Which gilds it with revivifying ray;
 Such as the great of yore, Canova is to-day.

LVI.

But where repose the all Etruscan three—Dante, and Petrarch, and, scarce less than
 they,
 The Bard of Prose, creative spirit! he
 Of the Hundred Tales of love—where did they lay
 Their bones, distinguish'd from our common clay
 In death as life? Are they resolv'd to dust
 And have their country's marbles nought to
 say?
 Could not her quarries furnish forth one bust?
 Did they not to her breast their filial earth entrust?

LVII.

Ungrateful Florence! Dante sleeps afar,
 Like Scipio, buried by the upbraiding shore;
 Thy factions, in their worse than civil war,
 Proscribed the bard whose name for evermore
 Their children's children would in vain adore
 With the remorse of ages; and the crown
 Which Petrarch's laureate brow supremely wore,
 Upon a far and foreign soil had grown,
 His life, his fame, his grave, though rifled—not thine own.

LVIII.

Boccaccio to his parent earth bequeath'd
 His dust,—and lies it not her great among,
 With many a sweet and solemn requiem
 breath'd
 O'er him who form'd the Tuscan's siren
 tongue?
 That music in itself, whose sounds are song,
 The poetry of speech? No;—even his tomb
 Uptorn, must bear the hyæna bigot's wrong,
 No more amidst the meaner dead find room,
 Nor claim a passing sigh, because it told for whom!

LIX.

And Santa Croce wants their mighty dust;
 Yet for this want more noted, as of yore
 The Cæsar's pageant, shorn of Brutus' bust,
 Did but of Rome's best son remind her more:
 Happier Ravenna! on thy hoary shore,
 Fortress of falling empire! honour'd sleeps
 The immortal exile;—Arqua, too, her store
 Of tuneful relics proudly claims and keeps,
 While Florence vainly begs her banish'd dead and weeps.

LX.

What is her pyramid of precious stones?
 Of porphyry, jasper, agate, and all hues
 Of gem and marble, to encrust the bones
 Of merchant-dukes? the momentary dews
 Which, sparkling to the twilight stars, infuse

Freshness in the green turf that wraps the
dead,
Whose names are mausoleums of the Muse,
Are gently prest with far more reverent
tread
Than ever paced the slab which paves the princely head.

LXI.

There be more things to greet the heart and
eyes
In Arno's dome of Art's most princely shrine,
Where Sculpture with her rainbow sister vies ;
There be more marvels yet—but not for mine ;
For I have been accustom'd to entwine
My thoughts with Nature rather in the fields,
Than Art in galleries: though a work divine
Calls for my spirit's homage, yet it yields Less than it feels, because the weapon which it wields

LXII.

Is of another temper, and I roam
By Thrasimene's lake, in the defiles
Fatal to Roman rashness, more at home ;
For there the Carthaginian's warlike wiles
Come back before me, as his skill beguiles
The host between the mountains and the
shore,
Where Courage falls in her despairing files,
And torrents, swoln to rivers with their gore,
Reek through the sultry plain, with legions
scatter'd o'er,

LXIII.

Like to a forest fell'd by mountain winds ;
And such the storm of battle on this day,
And such the phrensy, whose convulsion blinds
To all save carnage, that, beneath the fray,
An earthquake reel'd unheededly away* !
None felt stern Nature rocking at his feet,
And yawning forth a grave for those who lay
Upon their bucklers for a winding sheet ;
Such is the absorbing hate when warring nations meet !

LXIV.

The earth to them was as a rolling bark
Which bore them to eternity ; they saw
The ocean round, but had no time to mark
The motions of their vessel ; Nature's law,
In them suspended, reck'd not of the awe
Which reigns when mountains tremble, and the birds
Plunge in the clouds for refuge and withdraw
From their down-toppling nests ; and bel-lowing herds
Stumble o'er heaving plains, and man's dread hath no words.

* " And such was their mutual animosity, so intent were they upon the battle, that the earthquake, which overthrew in great part many of the cities of Italy, which turned the course of rapid streams, poured back the sea upon the rivers, and tore down the very mountains, was not felt by one of the combatants." Such is the description of Livy. It may be doubted whether modern tactics would admit of such an abstraction.

LXV.

Far other scene is Thrasimene now ;
Her lake a sheet of silver, and her plain
Rent by no ravage save the gentle plough ;
Her aged trees rise thick as once the slain
Lay where their roots are ; but a brook hath ta'en—
A little rill of scanty stream and bed—
A name of blood from that day's sanguine rain ;
And Sanguinetto tells ye where the dead
Made the earth wet, and turn'd the unwilling waters red.

LXVI.

But thou, Clitumnus ! in thy sweetest wave
Of the most living crystal that was e'er
The haunt of river nymph, to gaze and lave
Her limbs were nothing hid them, thou dost rear [steer
Thy grassy banks whereon the milk-white
Grazes ; the purest god of gentle waters !
And most serene of aspect, and most clear ;
Surely that stream was unprofaned by slaugh-
ters—
A mirror and a bath for Beauty's youngest daughters !

LXVII.

And on thy happy shore a temple still,
Of small and delicate proportion, keeps,
Upon a mild declivity of hill,
Its memory of thee ; beneath it sweeps
Thy current's calmness ; oft from out it leaps
The finny darter with the glittering scales,
Who dwells and revels in thy glassy deeps ;
While, chance, some scatter'd water-lily sails Down where the shallower wave still tells its bubbling tales.

LXVIII.

Pass not unblest the Genius of the place !
If through the air a zephyr more serene
Win to the brow, 'tis his ; and if ye trace
Along his margin a more eloquent green,
If on the heart the freshness of the scene
Sprinkle its coolness, and from the dry dust
Of weary life a moment lave it clean
With Nature's baptism,—'tis to him ye must Pay orisons for this suspension of disgust.

LXIX.

The roar of waters !—from the headlong
height
Velino cleaves the wave-worn precipice ;
The fall of waters ! rapid as the light
The flashing mass foams shaking the abyss ;
The hell of waters ! where they howl and hiss,
And boil in endless torture ; while the sweat
Of their great agony, wrung out from this Their Phlegethon, curls round the rocks of jet

That gird the gulf around, in pitiless horror set,
LXX.

And mounts in spray the skies, and thence
again
Returns in an unceasing shower, which round,
With its unemptied cloud of gentle rain

Is an eternal April to the ground,
 Making it all one emerald:—how profound
 The gulf! and how the giant element
 From rock to rock leaps with delirious bound,
 Crushing the cliffs, which, downward worn
 And rent
 With his fierce footsteps, yield in chasms a fearful vent

LXXI.

To the broad column which rolls on, and shows
 More like the fountain of an infant sea
 Torn from the womb of mountains by the throes
 Of a new world, than only thus to be
 Parent of rivers, which flow gushingly,
 With many windings, through the vale:—
 Look back!
 Lo! where it comes like an eternity,
 As if to sweep down all things in its track,
 Charming the eye with dread,—a matchless cataract,

LXXII.

Horribly beautiful! but on the verge,
 From side to side, beneath the glittering
 morn,
 An Iris sits, amidst the infernal surge,
 Like Hope upon a death-bed, and, unworn
 Its steady dyes, while all around is torn
 By the distracted waters, bears serene
 Its brilliant hues with all their beams un-
 shorn:
 Resembling, 'mid the torture of the scene,
 Love watching Madness with unalterable mien.

LXXIII.

Once more upon the woody Apennine,
 The infant Alps, which—had I not before Gazed on their mightier parents, where the pine
 Sits on more shaggy summits, and where roar
 The thundering lawine—might be worshipp'd
 more*;
 But I have seen the soaring Jungfrau rear
 Her never-trodden snow, and seen the hoar Glaciers of bleak Mont-Blanc both far and
 near,
 And in Chimari heard the thunder-hills of fear,

LXXIV.

Th' Acroceraunian mountains of old name;
 And on Parnassus seen the eagles fly
 Like spirits of the spot, as 'twere for fame
 For still they soar'd unutterably high:
 I've look'd on Ida with a Trojan's eye;
 Athos, Olympus, Ætna, Atlas, made
 These hills seem things of lesser dignity,
 All, save the lone Soracte's height; display'd
 Not now in snow, which asks the lyric Roman's aid

* In the greater part of Switzerland the avalanches are known by the name of lawine.

LXXV.

For our remembrance, and from out the plain Heaves like a long-swept wave about to break,
 And on the curl hangs pausing: not in vain
 May he, who will, his recollections rake
 And quote in classic raptures, and awake
 The hills with Latian echoes; I abhor'd
 Too much to conquer, for the poet's sake,
 The drill'd dull lesson, forced down word
 by word
 In my repugnant youth, with pleasure to record

LXXVI.

Aught that recalls the daily drug which turn'd
 My sickening memory; and, though time hath taught
 My mind to meditate what then it learn'd,
 Yet such the fix'd inveteracy wrought
 By the impatience of my early thought,
 That, with the freshness wearing out before
 My mind could relish what it might have sought,
 If free to choose, I cannot now restore
 Its health; but what it then detested, still abhor.

LXXVII.

Then farewell, Horace; whom I hated so,
 Not for thy faults, but mine; it is a curse
 To understand, not feel thy lyric flow
 To comprehend, but never love thy verse,
 Although no deeper moralist rehearse
 Our little life, nor bard prescribe his art,
 Nor livelier satirist the conscience pierce,
 Awakening without wounding the touch'd
 heart,
 Yet fare thee well—upon Soracte's ridge we part.

LXXVIII.

Oh Rome! my country! city of the soul!
 The orphans of the heart must turn to thee,
 Lone mother of dead empires! and control
 In their shut breasts their petty misery.
 What are our woes and sufferance? Come and see
 The cypress, hear the owl, and plod your
 way
 O'er steps of broken thrones and temples,
 Ye!
 Whose agonies are evils of a day—
 A world is at our feet as fragile as our clay.

LXXIX.

The Niobe of nations! there she stands,
 Childless and crownless, in her voiceless woe;
 An empty urn within her wither'd hands,
 Whose holy dust was scatter'd long ago;
 The Scipio's tomb contains no ashes now;
 The very sepulchres lie tenantless
 Of their heroic dwellers: dost thou flow,
 Old Tiber! through a marble wilderness?
 Rise, with thy yellow waves, and mantle her distress.

LXXX.

The Goth, the Christian, time, war, flood,
and fire,
Have dealt upon the seven-hill'd city's pride ;
She saw her glories star by star expire,
And up the steep barbarian monarchs ride,
Where the car climb'd the capitol : far and wide
Temple and tower went down, nor left a site :—
Chaos of ruins ! who shall trace the void,
O'er the dim fragments cast a lunar light,
And say, " here was, or is," where all is doubly
night ?

LXXXI.

The double night of ages, and of her,
Night's daughter, Ignorance, hath wrapt and wrap
All round us ; we but feel our way to err :
The ocean hath his chart, the stars their map,
And Knowledge spreads them on her ample lap ;
But Rome is as the desert, where we steer
Stumbling o'er recollections ; now we clap
Our hands, and cry " Eureka ! " it is clear—
When but some false mirage of ruin rises near.

LXXXII.

Alas ! the lofty city ! and alas !
The trebly hundred triumphs ! and the day
When Brutus made the dagger's edge surpass
The conqueror's sword in bearing fame away !
Alas, for Tully's voice, and Virgil's lay,
And Livy's pictured page !—but these shall be
Her resurrection ; all beside—decay.
Alas, for Earth, for never shall we see
